8. William Wordsworth (1770–1850; see pp. 763–805).

9. Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1772–1834; see pp. 805–31).

95

Sometimes he turned to gaze upon his book,
Boscan, or Garcilasso;[1]—by the wind
755 Even as the page is rustled while we look,
So by the poesy of his own mind
Over the mystic leaf his soul was shook,
As if 'twere one whereon magicians bind
Their spells, and give them to the passing gale,
760 According to some good old woman's tale.

96

Thus would he while his lonely hours away
Dissatisfied, not knowing what he wanted;
Nor glowing reverie, nor poet's lay,
Could yield his spirit that for which it panted,
765 A bosom whereon he his head might lay,
And hear the heart beat with the love it granted,
With—several other things, which I forget,
Or which, at least, I need not mention yet.

97

Those lonely walks, and lengthening reveries,
770 Could not escape the gentle Julia's eyes;
She saw that Juan was not at his ease;
But that which chiefly may, and must surprise,
Is, that the Donna Inez did not tease
Her only son with question or surmise;
775 Whether it was she did not see, or would not,
Or, like all very clever people, could not.

98

This may seem strange, but yet 'tis very common;
For instance—gentlemen, whose ladies take
Leave to o'erstep the written rights of Woman,
780 And break the—Which commandment is't they break?
(I have forgot the number, and think no man Should rashly quote, for fear of a mistake;)
I say, when these same gentlemen are jealous,
They make some blunder, which their ladies tell us.

99

785 A real husband always is suspicious,
But still no less suspects in the wrong place,
Jealous of some one who had no such wishes,
Or pandering blindly to his own disgrace,
By harboring some dear friend extremely vicious;
790 The last indeed's infallibly the case:
And when the spouse and friend are gone off wholly,
He wonders at their vice, and not his folly.

1. Spanish poets of the early sixteenth century.

100

Thus parents also are at times short-sighted:
  Though watchful as the lynx, they ne'er discover,
795 The while the wicked world beholds delighted,
  Young Hopeful's mistress, or Miss Fanny's lover,
Till some confounded escapade has blighted
  The plan of twenty years, and all is over;
And then the mother cries, the father swears,
800 And wonders why the devil he got heirs.

101

But Inez was so anxious, and so clear
  Of sight, that I must think, on this occasion,
She had some other motive much more near
  For leaving Juan to this new temptation,
805 But what that motive was, I shan't say here;
  Perhaps to finish Juan's education,
Perhaps to open Don Alfonso's eyes,
In case he thought his wife too great a prize.

102

It was upon a day, a summer's day—
810 Summer's indeed a very dangerous season,
And so is spring about the end of May;
  The sun, no doubt, is the prevailing reason;
But whatsoe'er the cause is, one may say,
  And stand convicted of more truth than treason,
815 That there are months which nature grows more merry in,— March has its hares, and May must have its heroine.

103

'Twas on a summer's day—the sixth of June:
  I like to be particular in dates,
Not only of the age, and year, but moon;
820 They are a sort of post-house, where the Fates
Change horses, making History change its tune,
  Then spur away o'er empires and o'er states,
Leaving at last not much besides chronology,
Excepting the post-obits[2] of theology.

104

825 'Twas on the sixth of June, about the hour
  Of half-past six—perhaps still nearer seven—
When Julia sate within as pretty a bower
  As e'er held houri[3] in that heathenish heaven
Described by Mahomet, and Anacreon Moore,[4]
830 To whom the lyre and laurels have been given,

2. Postobit bonds: loans repaid from the estate of a person after his or her death; probably referring to rewards or punishments in the afterlife.
3. A beautiful maiden said to entertain faithful Muslims in paradise.
4. Byron's friend, Thomas Moore, author of Oriental tales in his long poem Lalla Rookh and translator of love poems by the ancient Greek poet Anacreon.

With all the trophies of triumphant song—
He won them well, and may he wear them long!

105

She sate, but not alone; I know not well
  How this same interview had taken place,
835 And even if I knew, I should not tell—
  People should hold their tongues in any case;
No matter how or why the thing befell,
  But there were she and Juan, face to face—
When two such faces are so, 'twould be wise,
840 But very difficult, to shut their eyes.

106

How beautiful she looked! her conscious heart[5]
  Glowed in her cheek, and yet she felt no wrong:
Oh Love! how perfect is thy mystic art,
  Strengthening the weak, and trampling on the strong!
845 How self-deceitful is the sagest part
  Of mortals whom thy lure hath led along!
The precipice she stood on was immense,
So was her creed° in her own innocence. trust

107

She thought of her own strength, and Juan's youth, 850 And of the folly of all prudish fears,
Victorious Virtue, and domestic Truth,
  And then of Don Alfonso's fifty years:
I wish these last had not occurred, in sooth,
  Because that number rarely much endears,
855 And through all climes, the snowy and the sunny,
Sounds ill in love, whate'er it may in money.

108

When people say, "I've told you fifty times,"
  They mean to scold, and very often do;
When poets say, "I've written fifty rhymes,"
860 They make you dread that they'll recite them too;
In gangs of fifty, thieves commit their crimes;
  At fifty love for love is rare, 'tis true,
But then, no doubt, it equally as true is,
A good deal may be bought for fifty Louis.[6]

109

865 Julia had honor, virtue, truth, and love
  For Don Alfonso; and she inly swore,
By all the vows below to Powers above,
  She never would disgrace the ring she wore,
Nor leave a wish which wisdom might reprove;
870 And while she pondered this, besides much more,

5. Her deep emotion.

6. French gold coins.

One hand on Juan's carelessly was thrown,
Quite by mistake—she thought it was her own;

110

Unconsciously she leaned upon the other,
Which played within the tangles of her hair;
875 And to contend with thoughts she could not smother
She seemed by the distraction of her air.
'Twas surely very wrong in Juan's mother
To leave together this imprudent pair,
She who for many years had watched her son so—
880 I'm very certain mine would not have done so.

111

The hand which still held Juan's, by degrees
Gently, but palpably confirmed its grasp,
As if it said, "Detain me, if you please";
Yet there's no doubt she only meant to clasp
885 His fingers with a pure Platonic squeeze;
She would have shrunk as from a toad, or asp,
Had she imagined such a thing could rouse
A feeling dangerous to a prudent spouse.

112

I cannot know what Juan thought of this,
890 But what he did, is much what you would do;
His young lip thanked it with a grateful kiss,
And then, abashed at its own joy, withdrew
In deep despair, lest he had done amiss—
Love is so very timid when 'tis new:
895 She blushed, and frowned not, but she strove to speak,
And held her tongue, her voice was grown so weak.

113

The sun set, and up rose the yellow moon:
The Devil's in the moon for mischief; they
Who called her CHASTE, methinks, began too soon
900 Their nomenclature; there is not a day,
The longest, not the twenty-first of June,
Sees half the business in a wicked way,
On which three single hours of moonshine smile—
And then she looks so modest all the while!

114

905 There is a dangerous silence in that hour,
A stillness, which leaves room for the full soul
To open all itself, without the power
Of calling wholly back its self-control;
The silver light which, hallowing tree and tower,
910 Sheds beauty and deep softness o'er the whole,

Breathes also to the heart, and o'er it throws
A loving languor, which is not repose.

115

And Julia sate with Juan, half embraced
  And half retiring from the glowing arm,
915 Which trembled like the bosom where 'twas placed;
  Yet still she must have thought there was no harm,
Or else 'twere easy to withdraw her waist;
  But then the situation had its charm,
And then—God knows what next—I can't go on;
920 I'm almost sorry that I e'er begun.

116

Oh Plato! Plato! you have paved the way,
  With your confounded fantasies, to more
Immoral conduct by the fancied sway
  Your system feigns o'er the controlless core
925 Of human hearts, than all the long array
  Of poets and romancers:—You're a bore,
A charlatan, a coxcomb—and have been,
At best, no better than a go-between.

117

And Julia's voice was lost, except in sighs,
930   Until too late for useful conversation;
The tears were gushing from her gentle eyes,
  I wish, indeed, they had not had occasion;
But who, alas! can love, and then be wise?
  Not that Remorse did not oppose Temptation;
935 A little still she strove, and much repented,
And whispering "I will ne'er consent"—consented.

118

'Tis said that Xerxes[7] offered a reward
  To those who could invent him a new pleasure:
Methinks the requisition's rather hard,
940   And must have cost his Majesty a treasure:
For my part, I'm a moderate-minded bard,
  Fond of a little love (which I call leisure);
I care not for new pleasures, as the old
Are quite enough for me, so they but hold.

119

945 Oh Pleasure! you're indeed a pleasant thing,
  Although one must be damned for you, no doubt:
I make a resolution every spring
  Of reformation, ere the year run out,
But somehow, this my vestal vow takes wing,
950   Yet still, I trust, it may be kept throughout:

7. King of Persia, fifth century B.C.E.

I'm very sorry, very much ashamed,
And mean, next winter, to be quite reclaimed.

1818 1819

Stanzas

When a Man Hath No Freedom to Fight for at Home

When a man hath no freedom to fight for at home,
Let him combat for that of his neighbors;
Let him think of the glories of Greece and of Rome,
And get knocked on his head for his labors.

5 To do good to mankind is the chivalrous plan,
And is always as nobly requited;
Then battle for freedom wherever you can,
And, if not shot or hanged, you'll get knighted.

1820 1830

On This Day I Complete My Thirty-sixth Year

Missolonghi,[8] January 22, 1824

'Tis time this heart should be unmoved,
Since others it hath ceased to move:
Yet, though I cannot be beloved,
Still let me love!

5 My days are in the yellow leaf;
The flowers and fruits of love are gone;
The worm, the canker,° and the grief — deep infection
Are mine alone!

The fire that on my bosom preys
10 Is lone as some volcanic isle;
No torch is kindled at its blaze—
A funeral pile.

The hope, the fear, the jealous care,
The exalted portion of the pain
15 And power of love, I cannot share,
But wear the chain.

But 'tis not thus—and 'tis not here—
Such thoughts should shake my soul, nor now,

8. A town in Greece, where Byron had gone to support the Greek war for independence from Turkey, and where he died, April 19, 1824.

Where glory decks the hero's bier,
20 Or binds his brow.

The sword, the banner, and the field,
Glory and Greece, around me see!
The Spartan, borne upon his shield,
Was not more free.

25 Awake! (not Greece—she is awake!)
Awake, my spirit! Think through whom
Thy life-blood tracks its parent lake,
And then strike home!

Tread those reviving passions down,
30 Unworthy manhood!—unto thee
Indifferent should the smile or frown
Of beauty be.

If thou regrett'st thy youth, why live?
The land of honorable death
35 Is here:—up to the field, and give Away thy breath!

Seek out—less often sought than found—
A soldier's grave, for thee the best;
Then look around, and choose thy ground,
40 And take thy rest.

1824 1824

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY
1792–1822

To Wordsworth[1]

Poet of Nature, thou hast wept to know
That things depart which never may return;
Childhood and youth, friendship and love's first glow,
Have fled like sweet dreams, leaving thee to mourn.
5 These common woes I feel. One loss is mine,
Which thou too feel'st, yet I alone deplore;
Thou wert as a lone star whose light did shine
On some frail bark in winter's midnight roar;
Thou hast like to a rock-built refuge stood
10 Above the blind and battling multitude;
In honored poverty thy voice did weave
Songs consecrate to truth and liberty;—

1. William Wordsworth (1770–1850; see pp. 763–805), who had ceased to champion the liberal and revolutionary ideas of his youth and, in Shelley's view, had compromised himself.

Deserting these, thou leavest me to grieve,
Thus having been, that thou shouldst cease to be.

1814–15 1816

Mutability

1

The flower that smiles today
Tomorrow dies;
All that we wish to stay,
Tempts and then flies.
5 What is this world's delight?
Lightning that mocks the night,
Brief even as bright.

2

Virtue, how frail it is!
Friendship how rare!
10 Love, how it sells poor bliss
For proud despair!
But we, though soon they fall,
Survive their joy and all
Which ours we call.

3

15 Whilst skies are blue and bright,
Whilst flowers are gay,
Whilst eyes that change ere night
Make glad the day,
Whilst yet the calm hours creep,
20 Dream thou—and from thy sleep
Then wake to weep.

1815–16 1824

Hymn to Intellectual Beauty[2]

1

The awful shadow of some unseen Power
Floats though unseen among us—visiting
This various world with as inconstant wing
As summer winds that creep from flower to flower—
5 Like moonbeams that behind some piny mountain shower,[3]
It visits with inconstant glance
Each human heart and countenance;
Like hues and harmonies of evening—

2. Beauty perceived not by the senses but by spiritual illumination.

3. Used as a verb.

Like clouds in starlight widely spread—
10 Like memory of music fled—
Like aught that for its grace may be
Dear, and yet dearer for its mystery.

2

Spirit of BEAUTY, that dost consecrate
With thine own hues all thou dost shine upon 15 Of human thought or form—where art thou gone?
Why dost thou pass away and leave our state,
This dim vast vale of tears, vacant and desolate?
Ask why the sunlight not forever
Weaves rainbows o'er yon mountain river,
20 Why aught should fail and fade that once is shown,
Why fear and dream and death and birth
Cast on the daylight of this earth
Such gloom—why man has such a scope
For love and hate, despondency and hope?

3

25 No voice from some sublimer world hath ever
To sage or poet these responses given—
Therefore the names of Daemon, Ghost, and Heaven,
Remain the records of their vain endeavor,
Frail spells—whose uttered charm might not avail to sever,
30 From all we hear and all we see,
Doubt, chance, and mutability.
Thy light alone—like mist o'er mountains driven,
Or music by the night wind sent Through strings of some still instrument,° wind harp
35 Or moonlight on a midnight stream,
Gives grace and truth to life's unquiet dream.

4

Love, Hope, and Self-esteem, like clouds depart
And come, for some uncertain moments lent.
Man were immortal, and omnipotent,
40 Didst thou, unknown and awful as thou art,
Keep with thy glorious train° firm state within his heart. company
Thou messenger of sympathies,
That wax and wane in lovers' eyes—
Thou—that to human thought art nourishment,
45 Like darkness to a dying flame!
Depart not as thy shadow came,
Depart not—lest the grave should be,
Like life and fear, a dark reality.

5

While yet a boy I sought for ghosts, and sped
50 Through many a listening chamber, cave and ruin,
And starlight wood, with fearful steps pursuing

Hopes of high talk with the departed dead.
I called on poisonous names[4] with which our youth is fed;
I was not heard—I saw them not—
55 When musing deeply on the lot
Of life, at that sweet time when winds are wooing
All vital things that wake to bring
News of birds and blossoming—
Sudden, thy shadow fell on me;
60 I shrieked, and clasped my hands in ecstasy!

6

I vowed that I would dedicate my powers
To thee and thine—have I not kept the vow?
With beating heart and streaming eyes, even now
I call the phantoms of a thousand hours
65 Each from his voiceless grave: they have in visioned bowers
Of studious zeal or love's delight
Outwatched with me the envious night—
They know that never joy illumed my brow
Unlinked with hope that thou wouldst free
70 This world from its dark slavery,
That thou—O awful LOVELINESS,
Wouldst give whate'er these words cannot express.

7

The day becomes more solemn and serene
When noon is past—there is a harmony
75 In autumn, and a luster in its sky,
Which through the summer is not heard or seen,
As if it could not be, as if it had not been!
Thus let thy power, which like the truth
Of nature on my passive youth
80 Descended, to my onward life supply
Its calm—to one who worships thee,
And every form containing thee,
Whom, SPIRIT fair, thy spells did bind
To fear[5] himself, and love all human kind.

1816 1817

Mont Blanc[6]

Lines Written in the Vale of Chamouni[7]

I

The everlasting universe of things
Flows through the mind, and rolls its rapid waves,

4. Possibly alluding to attempts to summon spirits of the dead by means of magic rites.
5. Perhaps in the old sense of "regard with reverence and awe."
6. The highest of the Alps.
7. Through the Chamouni valley flows the river Arve, which originates in a glacier on the mountain and empties into Lake Geneva, from which flows the Rhone, which reaches the Mediterranean.

Now dark—now glittering—now reflecting gloom—
Now lending splendor, where from secret springs
5 The source of human thought its tribute brings
Of waters,—with a sound but half its own,
Such as a feeble brook will oft assume
In the wild woods, among the mountains lone,
Where waterfalls around it leap for ever,
10 Where woods and winds contend, and a vast river
Over its rocks ceaselessly bursts and raves.

2

Thus thou, Ravine of Arve—dark, deep Ravine—
Thou many-colored, many voicèd vale,
Over whose pines, and crags, and caverns sail
15 Fast cloud-shadows and sunbeams: awful° scene, awesome
Where Power in likeness of the Arve comes down
From the ice-gulfs that gird his secret throne,
Bursting through these dark mountains like the flame
Of lightning through the tempest;—thou dost lie,
20 Thy giant brood of pines around thee clinging,
Children of elder time, in whose devotion
The chainless winds still come and ever came
To drink their odors, and their mighty swinging
To hear—an old and solemn harmony;
25 Thine earthly rainbows stretched across the sweep
Of the ethereal waterfall, whose veil
Robes some unsculptured image; the strange sleep
Which when the voices of the desert fail
Wraps all in its own deep eternity;—
30 Thy caverns echoing to the Arve's commotion,
A loud, lone sound no other sound can tame;
Thou art pervaded with that ceaseless motion,
Thou art the path of that unresting sound—
Dizzy Ravine! and when I gaze on thee
35 I seem as in a trance sublime and strange
To muse on my own separate fantasy,
My own, my human mind, which passively
Now renders and receives fast influencings,
Holding an unremitting interchange
40 With the clear universe of things around;
One legion of wild thoughts, whose wandering wings
Now float above thy darkness, and now rest
Where that or thou art no unbidden guest,
In the still cave of the witch Poesy,[8]
45 Seeking among the shadows that pass by Ghosts of all things that are, some shade of thee,
Some phantom, some faint image; till the breast
From which they fled recalls them, thou art there!

8. The power of the imagination.

3

Some say that gleams of a remoter world
50 Visit the soul in sleep,—that death is slumber,
And that its shapes the busy thoughts outnumber
Of those who wake and live.—I look on high;
Has some unknown omnipotence unfurled
The veil of life and death? or do I lie
55 In dream, and does the mightier world of sleep
Spread far around and inaccessibly
Its circles? For the very spirit fails,
Driven like a homeless cloud from steep to steep
That vanishes among the viewless° gales! invisible
60 Far, far above, piercing the infinite sky,
Mont Blanc appears,—still, snowy, and serene—
Its subject mountains their unearthly forms
Pile around it, ice and rock; broad vales° between valleys
Of frozen floods, unfathomable deeps,
65 Blue as the overhanging heaven, that spread
And wind among the accumulated steeps;
A desert peopled by the storms alone,
Save when the eagle brings some hunter's bone,
And the wolf tracks her there—how hideously
70 Its shapes are heaped around! rude, bare, and high,
Ghastly, and scarred, and riven.—Is this the scene
Where the old Earthquake-demon[9] taught her young Ruin? Were these their toys? or did a sea
Of fire envelop once this silent snow?
75 None can reply—all seems eternal now.
The wilderness has a mysterious tongue
Which teaches awful° doubt, or faith so mild, profoundly disturbing
So solemn, so serene, that man may be,
But for such faith, with nature reconciled;[1]
80 Thou hast a voice, great Mountain, to repeal
Large codes of fraud and woe; not understood
By all, but which the wise, and great, and good Interpret, or make felt, or deeply feel.

4

The fields, the lakes, the forests, and the streams,
85 Ocean, and all the living things that dwell
Within the daedal[2] earth; lightning, and rain, Earthquake, and fiery flood, and hurricane,
The torpor of the year when feeble dreams
Visit the hidden buds, or dreamless sleep
90 Holds every future leaf and flower;—the bound
With which from that detested trance they leap;
The works and ways of man, their death and birth,
And that of him and all that his may be;

9. Personification of geologic forces.
1. A debated passage; perhaps to be paraphrased as: the "tongue" may teach either that the cosmos and the human mind are deeply at odds, or that we may have "faith" that they are in harmony.
2. Intricately made, as by Daedalus, the legendary Greek craftsman.

All things that move and breathe with toil and sound
95 Are born and die; revolve, subside, and swell.
Power dwells apart in its tranquility,
Remote, serene, and inaccessible:
And this, the naked countenance of earth,
On which I gaze, even these primeval mountains
100 Teach the adverting mind. The glaciers creep
Like snakes that watch their prey, from their far fountains,
Slow rolling on; there, many a precipice,
Frost and the Sun in scorn of mortal power
Have piled: dome, pyramid, and pinnacle,
105 A city of death, distinct with many a tower
And wall impregnable of beaming ice.
Yet not a city, but a flood of ruin
Is there, that from the boundaries of the sky
Rolls its perpetual stream; vast pines are strewing
110 Its destined path, or in the mangled soil
Branchless and shattered stand; the rocks, drawn down
From yon remotest waste, have overthrown
The limits of the dead and living world,
Never to be reclaimed. The dwelling-place
115 Of insects, beasts, and birds, becomes its spoil
Their food and their retreat for ever gone,
So much of life and joy is lost. The race
Of man flies far in dread; his work and dwelling
Vanish, like smoke before the tempest's stream,
120 And their place is not known. Below, vast caves
Shine in the rushing torrents' restless gleam,
Which from those secret chasms in tumult welling
Meet in the vale, and one majestic River,
The breath and blood of distant lands, for ever
125 Rolls its loud waters to the ocean-waves,
Breathes its swift vapors to the circling air.[3]

5

Mont Blanc yet gleams on high:—the power is there,
The still and solemn power of many sights,
And many sounds, and much of life and death.
130 In the calm darkness of the moonless nights,
In the lone glare of day, the snows descend
Upon that Mountain; none beholds them there,
Nor when the flakes burn in the sinking sun,
Or the star-beams dart through them:—Winds contend
135 Silently there, and heap the snow with breath
Rapid and strong, but silently! Its home
The voiceless lightning in these solitudes
Keeps innocently, and like vapor broods
Over the snow. The secret Strength of things
140 Which governs thought, and to the infinite dome
Of Heaven is as a law, inhabits thee![4]

3. Cf. Coleridge, "Kubla Khan," lines 12–24 (p. 809).

4. I.e., Mont Blanc.

And what were thou, and earth, and stars, and sea,
If to the human mind's imaginings
Silence and solitude were vacancy?

July 23, 1816 1817

Ozymandias[5]

I met a traveler from an antique land
Who said: Two vast and trunkless legs of stone
Stand in the desert . . . Near them, on the sand,
Half sunk, a shattered visage lies, whose frown,
5 And wrinkled lip, and sneer of cold command,
Tell that its sculptor well those passions read
Which yet survive, stamped on these lifeless things,
The hand that mocked them, and the heart that fed:
And on the pedestal these words appear:
10 "My name is Ozymandias, king of kings:
Look on my works, ye Mighty, and despair!"
Nothing beside remains. Round the decay
Of that colossal wreck, boundless and bare
The lone and level sands stretch far away.

1817 1818

Stanzas Written in Dejection, Near Naples

1

The sun is warm, the sky is clear,
The waves are dancing fast and bright,
Blue isles and snowy mountains wear
The purple noon's transparent might,
5 The breath of the moist earth is light,
Around its unexpanded buds;
Like many a voice of one delight,
The winds, the birds, the ocean floods,
The City's voice itself is soft like Solitude's.

2

10 I see the Deep's untrampled floor
With green and purple seaweeds strown;
I see the waves upon the shore,
Like light dissolved in star-showers, thrown:
I sit upon the sands alone—
15 The lightning of the noontide ocean

5. Greek name for the Egyptian monarch Ramses II (thirteenth century B.C.E.), who is said to have erected a huge statue of himself.

Is flashing round me, and a tone
Arises from its measured motion;
How sweet! did any heart now share in my emotion.

3

Alas! I have nor hope nor health,
20 Nor peace within nor calm around,
Nor that content surpassing wealth
The sage in meditation found,
And walked with inward glory crowned—
Nor fame, nor power, nor love, nor leisure.
25 Others I see whom these surround—
Smiling they live, and call life pleasure;
To me that cup has been dealt in another measure.

4

Yet now despair itself is mild,
Even as the winds and waters are;
30 I could lie down like a tired child,
And weep away the life of care
Which I have borne and yet must bear,
Till death like sleep might steal on me,
And I might feel in the warm air
35 My cheek grow cold, and hear the sea
Breathe o'er my dying brain its last monotony.

5

Some might lament that I were cold,
As I, when this sweet day is gone,
Which my lost heart, too soon grown old,
40 Insults with this untimely moan;
They might lament—for I am one
Whom men love not—and yet regret,
Unlike this day, which, when the sun
Shall on its stainless glory set,
45 Will linger, though enjoyed, like joy in memory yet.

1818 1824

England in 1819

An old, mad, blind, despised, and dying king[6]—
Princes, the dregs of their dull race,[7] who flow
Through public scorn—mud from a muddy spring;
Rulers who neither see, nor feel, nor know,
5 But leechlike to their fainting country cling,
Till they drop, blind in blood, without a blow;

6. George III (1738–1820), who lived for years in a state of advanced senility. The "Princes" of line 2 are George III's sons, including the prince-regent, later George IV, whom Shelley detested.

7. The "Hanoverian" line of English monarchs, beginning in 1714 with George I.

A people starved and stabbed in the untilled field—
An army, which liberticide[8] and prey
Makes as a two-edged sword to all who wield;
10 Golden and sanguine laws[9] which tempt and slay;
Religion Christless, Godless—a book sealed;
A Senate—Time's worst statute[1] unrepealed—
Are graves, from which a glorious Phantom[2] may Burst, to illumine our tempestuous day.

1819 1839

Ode to the West Wind[3]

1

O wild West Wind, thou breath of Autumn's being,
Thou, from whose unseen presence the leaves dead
Are driven, like ghosts from an enchanter fleeing,

Yellow, and black, and pale, and hectic red,
5 Pestilence-stricken multitudes: O thou,
Who chariotest to their dark wintry bed

The wingèd seeds, where they lie cold and low,
Each like a corpse within its grave, until Thine azure sister of the Spring shall blow

10 Her clarion[4] o'er the dreaming earth, and fill (Driving sweet buds like flocks to feed in air)
With living hues and odors plain and hill:

Wild Spirit, which art moving everywhere;
Destroyer and preserver; hear, oh, hear!

2

15 Thou on whose stream, mid the steep sky's commotion,
Loose clouds like earth's decaying leaves are shed,
Shook from the tangled boughs of Heaven and Ocean,

Angels[5] of rain and lightning: there are spread
On the blue surface of thine aëry surge,
20 Like the bright hair uplifted from the head

8. Destruction of liberty. An allusion to the Peterloo Massacre. On August 16, 1819, a cavalry troop attacked a crowd at a peaceful political rally in St. Peter's Field, near Manchester. Peterloo ironically conflates St. Peter with the Battle of Waterloo.
9. Laws bought with gold and causing bloodshed.
1. Probably the Act of Union (1801), uniting Ireland to England and excluding Roman Catholics from exercising full citizenship.
2. I.e., the spirit of liberty.
3. "This poem was conceived and chiefly written in a wood that skirts the Arno, near Florence, and on a day when that tempestuous wind, whose temperature is at once mild and animating, was collecting the vapours which pour down the autumnal rains" [Shelley's note]. Florence was the home of Dante, the fourteenth-century poet whose masterpiece, The Divine Comedy, originated terza rima, the verse form of Shelley's poem (see "Versification," pp. 2040–41).
4. Trumpet-call.
5. In Greek derivation, messengers or divine messengers.

Of some fierce Maenad,[6] even from the dim verge
Of the horizon to the zenith's height,
The locks of the approaching storm. Thou dirge

Of the dying year, to which this closing night
25 Will be the dome of a vast sepulcher,
Vaulted with all thy congregated might

Of vapors,° from whose solid atmosphere clouds
Black rain, and fire, and hail will burst: oh, hear!

3

Thou who didst waken from his summer dreams
30 The blue Mediterranean, where he lay,
Lulled by the coil of his crystàlline streams,

Beside a pumice isle in Baiae's bay,[7]
And saw in sleep old palaces and towers
Quivering within the wave's intenser day,

35 All overgrown with azure moss and flowers
So sweet, the sense faints picturing them! Thou
For whose path the Atlantic's level powers

Cleave themselves into chasms, while far below
The sea-blooms and the oozy woods which wear
40 The sapless foliage of the ocean, know

Thy voice, and suddenly grow gray with fear,
And tremble and despoil themselves: oh, hear![8]

4

If I were a dead leaf thou mightest bear;
If I were a swift cloud to fly with thee;
45 A wave to pant beneath thy power, and share

The impulse of thy strength, only less free
Than thou, O uncontrollable! If even
I were as in my boyhood, and could be

The comrade of thy wanderings over Heaven,
50 As then, when to outstrip thy skyey speed
Scarce seemed a vision; I would ne'er have striven

As thus with thee in prayer in my sore need.
Oh, lift me as a wave, a leaf, a cloud!
I fall upon the thorns of life! I bleed!

6. Frenzied dancer, worshiper of Dionysus (Greek god of wine and fertility).
7. Near Naples, Italy.
8. "The vegetation at the bottom of the sea . . . sympathizes with that of the land in the change of seasons" [Shelley's note].

55 A heavy weight of hours has chained and bowed
One too like thee: tameless, and swift, and proud.

5

Make me thy lyre, even as the forest is:
What if my leaves are falling like its own!
The tumult of thy mighty harmonies

60 Will take from both a deep, autumnal tone,
Sweet though in sadness. Be thou, Spirit fierce,
My spirit! Be thou me, impetuous one!

Drive my dead thoughts over the universe
Like withered leaves to quicken a new birth!
65 And, by the incantation of this verse,

Scatter, as from an unextinguished hearth
Ashes and sparks, my words among mankind!
Be through my lips to unawakened earth

The trumpet of a prophecy! O Wind,
70 If Winter comes, can Spring be far behind?

1819 1820

The Cloud

I bring fresh showers for the thirsting flowers,
From the seas and the streams;
I bear light shade for the leaves when laid
In their noonday dreams.
5 From my wings are shaken the dews that waken
The sweet buds every one,
When rocked to rest on their mother's breast,
As she dances about the sun.
I wield the flail of the lashing hail,
10 And whiten the green plains under,
And then again I dissolve it in rain,
And laugh as I pass in thunder.

I sift the snow on the mountains below,
And their great pines groan aghast;
15 And all the night 'tis my pillow white,
While I sleep in the arms of the blast.
Sublime on the towers of my skyey bowers,
Lightning my pilot[9] sits;
In a cavern under is fettered the thunder,
20 It struggles and howls at fits;° intervals

9. Electrical energy, here represented as directing the cloud in response to the attraction of opposite charges ("genii," line 23) under the sea.

Over earth and ocean, with gentle motion,
    This pilot is guiding me,
Lured by the love of the genii that move
    In the depths of the purple sea;
25 Over the rills, and the crags, and the hills,
    Over the lakes and the plains,
Wherever he dream, under mountain or stream,
    The Spirit he loves remains;
And I all the while bask in Heaven's blue smile,
30 Whilst he is dissolving in rains.

The sanguine Sunrise, with his meteor eyes,
    And his burning plumes outspread,
Leaps on the back of my sailing rack,[1]
    When the morning star shines dead;
35 As on the jag of a mountain crag,
    Which an earthquake rocks and swings,
An eagle alit one moment may sit
    In the light of its golden wings.
And when Sunset may breathe, from the lit sea beneath,
40 Its ardors of rest and of love,
And the crimson pall of eve may fall
    From the depth of Heaven above,
With wings folded I rest, on mine aëry nest,
    As still as a brooding dove.

45 That orbèd maiden with white fire laden,
    Whom mortals call the Moon,
Glides glimmering o'er my fleecelike floor,
    By the midnight breezes strewn;
And wherever the beat of her unseen feet,
50 Which only the angels hear,
May have broken the woof° of my tent's thin roof, fabric
    The stars peep behind her and peer;
And I laugh to see them whirl and flee,
    Like a swarm of golden bees,
55 When I widen the rent in my wind-built tent,
    Till the calm rivers, lakes, and seas,
Like strips of the sky fallen through me on high,
    Are each paved with the moon and these.

I bind the Sun's throne with a burning zone,° belt
60 And the Moon's with a girdle of pearl;
The volcanoes are dim, and the stars reel and swim,
    When the whirlwinds my banner unfurl.
From cape to cape, with a bridgelike shape,
    Over a torrent sea,
65 Sunbeam-proof, I hang like a roof—
    The mountains its columns be.
The triumphal arch through which I march
    With hurricane, fire, and snow,

1. Wind-driven clouds.

When the Powers of the air are chained to my chair,
70 Is the million-colored bow;
The sphere-fire above its soft colors wove,
While the moist Earth was laughing below.

I am the daughter of Earth and Water,
And the nursling of the Sky;
75 I pass through the pores of the ocean and shores;
I change, but I cannot die.
For after the rain when with never a stain
The pavilion of Heaven is bare,
And the winds and sunbeams with their convex° gleams upward-arching
80 Build up the blue dome of air,
I silently laugh at my own cenotaph,[2]
And out of the caverns of rain,
Like a child from the womb, like a ghost from the tomb,
I arise and unbuild it again.

1820 1820

To a Skylark

Hail to thee, blithe Spirit!
Bird thou never wert,
That from Heaven, or near it,
Pourest thy full heart
5 In profuse strains of unpremeditated art.

Higher still and higher
From the earth thou springest
Like a cloud of fire;
The blue deep thou wingest,
10 And singing still dost soar, and soaring ever singest.

In the golden lightning
Of the sunken sun,
O'er which clouds are bright'ning,
Thou dost float and run;
15 Like an unbodied joy whose race is just begun.

The pale purple even Melts around thy flight;
Like a star of Heaven,
In the broad daylight
20 Thou art unseen, but yet I hear thy shrill delight,

Keen as are the arrows
Of that silver sphere,° star

2. Monument honoring a person who is buried elsewhere.

Whose intense lamp narrows
In the white dawn clear
25 Until we hardly see—we feel that it is there.

All the earth and air
With thy voice is loud,
As, when night is bare,
From one lonely cloud
30 The moon rains out her beams, and Heaven is overflowed.

What thou art we know not;
What is most like thee?
From rainbow clouds there flow not Drops so bright to see
35 As from thy presence showers a rain of melody.

Like a Poet hidden
In the light of thought,
Singing hymns unbidden,
Till the world is wrought
40 To sympathy with hopes and fears it heeded not:

Like a high-born maiden
In a palace tower,
Soothing her love-laden
Soul in secret hour
45 With music sweet as love, which overflows her bower:

Like a glowworm golden
In a dell of dew,
Scattering unbeholden
Its aërial hue
50 Among the flowers and grass, which screen it from the view!

Like a rose embowered
In its own green leaves,
By warm winds deflowered,
Till the scent it gives 55 Makes faint with too much sweet those heavy-wingèd thieves:

Sound of vernal showers
On the twinkling grass,
Rain-awakened flowers,
All that ever was 60 Joyous, and clear, and fresh, thy music doth surpass:

Teach us, Sprite° or Bird, spirit
What sweet thoughts are thine:
I have never heard
Praise of love or wine
65 That panted forth a flood of rapture so divine.

Chorus Hymeneal,[3]
Or triumphal chant,
Matched with thine would be all
But an empty vaunt,
70 A thing wherein we feel there is some hidden want.

What objects are the fountains
Of thy happy strain?
What fields, or waves, or mountains?
What shapes of sky or plain?
75 What love of thine own kind? what ignorance of pain?

With thy clear keen joyance
Languor cannot be:
Shadow of annoyance
Never came near thee:
80 Thou lovest—but ne'er knew love's sad satiety.

Waking or asleep,
Thou of death must deem Things more true and deep
Than we mortals dream,
85 Or how could thy notes flow in such a crystal stream?

We look before and after,
And pine for what is not:
Our sincerest laughter
With some pain is fraught;
90 Our sweetest songs are those that tell of saddest thought.

Yet if we could scorn
Hate, and pride, and fear;
If we were things born
Not to shed a tear,
95 I know not how thy joy we ever should come near.

Better than all measures
Of delightful sound,
Better than all treasures
That in books are found,
100 Thy skill to poet were, thou scorner of the ground!

Teach me half the gladness
That thy brain must know,
Such harmonious madness
From my lips would flow
105 The world should listen then—as I am listening now.

1820 1820

3. As for a wedding (from Hymen, Greek god of marriage).

Adonais[4]

An Elegy on the Death of John Keats, Author of Endymion, Hyperion, etc.[5]

ἀστὴρ πρὶν μὲν ἔλαμπες ἐνὶ ζωοῖσιν ἑῷος, νῦν δὲ θανὼν λάμπεις ἕσπερος ἐν φθιμένοις.[6]
—PLATO

1

I weep for Adonais—he is dead!
Oh, weep for Adonais! though our tears
Thaw not the frost which binds so dear a head!
And thou, sad Hour, selected from all years
5 To mourn our loss, rouse thy obscure compeers,° equals
And teach them thine own sorrow, say: with me
Died Adonais; till the Future dares
Forget the Past, his fate and fame shall be
An echo and a light unto eternity!

2

10 Where wert thou mighty Mother,[7] when he lay,
When thy Son lay, pierced by the shaft which flies
In darkness? where was lorn° Urania abandoned
When Adonais died? With veilèd eyes,
'Mid listening Echoes, in her Paradise
15 She sate, while one, with soft enamored breath,
Rekindled all the fading melodies,
With which, like flowers that mock the corse° beneath, corpse
He had adorned and hid the coming bulk of death.

3

Oh, weep for Adonais—he is dead!
20 Wake, melancholy Mother, wake and weep!
Yet wherefore? Quench within their burning bed
Thy fiery tears, and let thy loud heart keep
Like his, a mute and uncomplaining sleep;
For he is gone, where all things wise and fair
25 Descend:—oh, dream not that the amorous Deep
Will yet restore him to the vital air;
Death feeds on his mute voice, and laughs at our despair.

4. A name derived from Adonis, in Greek mythology a young hunter beloved of Aphrodite and killed by a wild boar. The root meaning of his name, Adon, is "the lord," and in the form Adonai appears in Hebrew scriptures as a synonym for God.
5. Keats died, in Rome, on February 23, 1821; for his poetry, see pp. 905–41.
6. "Thou wert the morning star among the living, / Ere thy fair light had fled— / Now, having died, thou art as Hesperus, giving / New splendor to the dead" [Shelley's translation]. Venus is both Hesperus (also Vesper), the evening star, and Lucifer, the morning star.
7. Urania, "heavenly one," Venus invoked as the Muse (divine inspirer) of noble poetry. Adonais is represented as her son.

4

Most musical of mourners, weep again!
Lament anew, Urania!—He[8] died,
30 Who was the Sire of an immortal strain,
Blind, old, and lonely, when his country's pride,
The priest, the slave, and the liberticide,° destroyer of liberty
Trampled and mocked with many a loathèd rite
Of lust and blood; he went, unterrified,
35 Into the gulf of death; but his clear Sprite° spirit
Yet reigns o'er earth; the third among the sons of light.[9]

5

Most musical of mourners, weep anew!
Not all to that bright station dared to climb;
And happier they their happiness who knew,
40 Whose tapers yet burn through that night of time
In which suns perished; others more sublime,
Struck by the envious wrath of man or God,
Have sunk, extinct in their refulgent° prime; shining
And some yet live, treading the thorny road,
45 Which leads, through toil and hate, to Fame's serene abode.

6

But now, thy youngest, dearest one, has perished,
The nursling of thy widowhood, who grew,
Like a pale flower by some sad maiden cherished,
And fed with true-love tears, instead of dew;
50 Most musical of mourners, weep anew!
Thy extreme° hope, the loveliest and the last, highest, latest
The bloom, whose petals nipped before they blew
Died on the promise of the fruit, is waste;
The broken lily lies—the storm is overpast.

7

55 To that high Capital,° where kingly Death Rome
Keeps his pale court in beauty and decay,
He came; and bought, with price of purest breath,
A grave among the eternal.—Come away!
Haste, while the vault of blue Italian day
60 Is yet his fitting charnel-roof! while still
He lies, as if in dewy sleep he lay;
Awake him not! surely he takes his fill
Of deep and liquid rest, forgetful of all ill.

8

He will awake no more, oh, never more!—
65 Within the twilight chamber spreads apace
The shadow of white Death, and at the door
Invisible Corruption waits to trace

8. Milton, who also invoked the aid of Urania (see Paradise Lost 1.6–16, p. 421 above).

9. Rivaled as a poet by only two predecessors, Homer and Dante.

His extreme way to her dim dwelling-place;
The eternal Hunger sits, but pity and awe
70 Soothe her pale rage, nor dares she to deface
So fair a prey, till darkness and the law
Of change, shall o'er his sleep the mortal curtain draw.

9

Oh, weep for Adonais!—The quick° Dreams, living
The passion-wingèd Ministers of thought,
75 Who were his flocks, whom near the living streams
Of his young spirit he fed, and whom he taught
The love which was its music, wander not—
Wander no more, from kindling brain to brain,
But droop there, whence they sprung; and mourn their lot
80 Round the cold heart, where, after their sweet pain,
They ne'er will gather strength, or find a home again.

10

And one with trembling hand clasps his cold head,
And fans him with her moonlight wings, and cries,
"Our love, our hope, our sorrow, is not dead;
85 See, on the silken fringe of his faint eyes,
Like dew upon a sleeping flower, there lies
A tear some Dream has loosened from his brain."
Lost Angel of a ruined Paradise!
She knew not 'twas her own; as with no stain
90 She faded, like a cloud which had outwept its rain.

11

One from a lucid° urn of starry dew luminous
Washed his light limbs as if embalming them;
Another clipped her profuse locks, and threw
The wreath upon him, like an anadem,° garland
95 Which frozen tears instead of pearls begem;
Another in her willful grief would break
Her bow and wingèd reeds, as if to stem
A greater loss with one which was more weak;
And dull the barbéd fire against his frozen cheek.

12

100 Another Splendor on his mouth alit,
That mouth, whence it was wont to draw the breath
Which gave it strength to pierce the guarded wit,[1]
And pass into the panting heart beneath
With lightning and with music: the damp death
105 Quenched its caress upon its icy lips;
And, as a dying meteor stains a wreath
Of moonlight vapor, which the cold night clips,° envelops
It flushed through his pale limbs, and passed to its eclipse.

1. The defensive analytical mind.

13

And others came . . . Desires and Adorations,
110 Wingèd Persuasions and veiled Destinies,
Splendors, and Glooms, and glimmering Incarnations
Of hopes and fears, and twilight Phantasies;
And Sorrow, with her family of Sighs,
And Pleasure, blind with tears, led by the gleam
115 Of her own dying smile instead of eyes,
Came in slow pomp;—the moving pomp might seem Like pageantry of mist on an autumnal stream.

14

All he had loved, and molded into thought
From shape, and hue, and odor, and sweet sound,
120 Lamented Adonais. Morning sought
Her eastern watch-tower, and her hair unbound,
Wet with the tears which should adorn the ground,
Dimmed the aërial eyes that kindle day;
Afar the melancholy thunder moaned,
125 Pale Ocean in unquiet slumber lay,
And the wild Winds flew round, sobbing in their dismay.

15

Lost Echo[2] sits amid the voiceless mountains,
And feeds her grief with his remembered lay,
And will no more reply to winds or fountains,
130 Or amorous birds perched on the young green spray,
Or herdsman's horn, or bell at closing day;
Since she can mimic not his lips, more dear
Than those for whose disdain she pined away
Into a shadow of all sounds:—a drear
135 Murmur, between their songs, is all the woodmen hear.

16

Grief made the young Spring wild, and she threw down
Her kindling buds, as if she Autumn were,
Or they dead leaves; since her delight is flown
For whom should she have waked the sullen year?
140 To Phoebus was not Hyacinth[3] so dear,
Nor to himself Narcissus, as to both
Thou, Adonais; wan they stand and sere° dry; withered
Amid the faint companions of their youth,
With dew all turned to tears; odor, to sighing ruth.° pity

17

145 Thy spirit's sister, the lorn° nightingale, lost, abandoned
Mourns not her mate with such melodious pain;

2. In Greek mythology, a nymph, or minor nature goddess, who loved Narcissus and who pined away into a mere voice when that youth fell in love with his own reflection in a pool.

3. Youth loved by Apollo ("Phoebus," Greek and Roman god of sunlight, prophecy, music, and poetry), who killed him by accident.

Not so the eagle, who like thee could scale
Heaven, and could nourish in the sun's domain
Her mighty youth,[4] with morning, doth complain,
150 Soaring and screaming round her empty nest,
As Albion° wails for thee: the curse of Cain[5] — England
Light on his head[6] who pierced thy innocent breast,
And scared the angel soul that was its earthly guest!

18

Ah, woe is me! Winter is come and gone,
155 But grief returns with the revolving year;
The airs and streams renew their joyous tone;
The ants, the bees, the swallows reappear;
Fresh leaves and flowers deck the dead Seasons' bier;
The amorous birds now pair in every brake,° — thicket
160 And build their mossy homes in field and brere;° — briar
And the green lizard, and the golden snake,
Like unimprisoned flames, out of their trance awake.

19

Through wood and stream and field and hill and Ocean,
A quickening life from the Earth's heart has burst
165 As it has ever done, with change and motion,
From the great morning of the world when first
God dawned on Chaos; in its stream immersed
The lamps of Heaven flash with a softer light;
All baser things pant with life's sacred thirst;
170 Diffuse themselves; and spend in love's delight,
The beauty and the joy of their renewèd might.

20

The leprous corpse touched by this spirit tender
Exhales itself in flowers of gentle breath;
Like incarnations of the stars, when splendor
175 Is changed to fragrance, they illumine death
And mock the merry worm that wakes beneath;
Nought we know, dies. Shall that alone which knows
Be as a sword consumed before the sheath
By sightless lightning?—the intense atom[7] glows
180 A moment, then is quenched in a most cold repose.

21

Alas! that all we loved of him should be,
But for our grief, as if it had not been.
And grief itself be mortal! Woe is me!
Whence are we, and why are we? of what scene

4. In folklore, an eagle could recapture its youth by soaring close to the sun.
5. God's curse upon Cain for having slain his brother Abel was that nothing should grow for him and that he should be homeless (Genesis 3.11–12).
6. The anonymous critic whose venomous review of Keats's "Endymion" had hastened, Shelley believed, Keats's death.
7. Indivisible and indestructible unit of anything that exists. Sightless: unseeing and unseen.

185 The actors or spectators? Great and mean
Meet massed in death, who lends what life must borrow.
As long as skies are blue, and fields are green,
Evening must usher night, night urge the morrow,
Month follow month with woe, and year wake year to sorrow.

22

190 He will awake no more, oh, never more!
"Wake thou," cried Misery, "childless Mother, rise
Out of thy sleep, and slake, in thy heart's core,
A wound more fierce than his with tears and sighs."
And all the Dreams that watched Urania's eyes,
195 And all the Echoes whom their sister's song[8]
Had held in holy silence, cried, "Arise!"
Swift as a Thought by the snake Memory stung,
From her ambrosial° rest the fading Splendor° sprung. immortal / Urania

23

She rose like an autumnal Night, that springs
200 Out of the East, and follows wild and drear
The golden Day, which, on eternal wings,
Even as a ghost abandoning a bier,
Has left the Earth a corpse. Sorrow and fear
So struck, so roused, so rapt Urania;
205 So saddened round her like an atmosphere
Of stormy mist; so swept her on her way
Even to the mournful place where Adonais lay.

24

Out of her secret Paradise she sped,
Through camps and cities rough with stone, and steel,
210 And human hearts, which to her aery tread
Yielding not, wounded the invisible
Palms of her tender feet where'er they fell:
And barbéd tongues, and thoughts more sharp than they,
Rent the soft Form they never could repel,
215 Whose sacred blood, like the young tears of May,
Paved with eternal flowers that undeserving way.

25

In the death-chamber for a moment Death,
Shamed by the presence of that living Might,
Blushed to annihilation, and the breath
220 Revisited those lips, and life's pale light
Flashed through those limbs, so late her dear delight.
"Leave me not wild and drear and comfortless,
As silent lightning leaves the starless night!
Leave me not!" cried Urania: her distress
225 Roused Death: Death rose and smiled, and met her vain caress.

8. The Echo in line 127.

26

"Stay yet awhile! speak to me once again;
Kiss me, so long but as a kiss may live;
And in my heartless breast and burning brain
That word, that kiss, shall all thoughts else survive,
230 With food of saddest memory kept alive,
Now thou art dead, as if it were a part
Of thee, my Adonais! I would give
All that I am to be as thou now art,
But I am chained to Time, and cannot thence depart!

27

235 "O gentle child, beautiful as thou wert,
Why didst thou leave the trodden paths of men
Too soon, and with weak hands though mighty heart
Dare the unpastured dragon in his den?
Defenseless as thou wert, oh! where was then
240 Wisdom the mirrored shield, or scorn the spear?[9]
Or hadst thou waited the full cycle, when
Thy spirit should have filled its crescent sphere,
The monsters of life's waste had fled from thee like deer.

28

"The herded wolves, bold only to pursue;
245 The obscene ravens, clamorous o'er the dead;
The vultures, to the conqueror's banner true,
Who feed where Desolation first has fed,
And whose wings rain contagion;—how they[1] fled,
When like Apollo, from his golden bow,
250 The Pythian of the age[2] one arrow sped
And smiled!—The spoilers tempt no second blow,
They fawn on the proud feet that spurn them lying low.

29

"The sun comes forth, and many reptiles spawn;
He sets, and each ephemeral insect then
255 Is gathered into death without a dawn,
And the immortal stars awake again;
So is it in the world of living men:
A godlike mind soars forth, in its delight
Making earth bare and veiling heaven, and when 260 It sinks, the swarms that dimmed or shared its light
Leave to its kindred lamps the spirit's awful night."

30

Thus ceased she: and the mountain shepherds came
Their garlands sere, their magic mantles rent;

9. An allusion to the Greek hero Perseus, who killed the monster Medusa, evading her gaze, which could turn him into stone, by using his shield as a mirror.
1. Critics, here characterized as beasts and birds of prey.
2. Byron (1788–1824; see pp. 833–63), Shelley's friend, who attacked the critics in English Bards and Scotch Reviewers (1809); here compared to Apollo the Pythian, who slew the monster Python near Delphi.

The Pilgrim of Eternity,[3] whose fame
265 Over his living head like Heaven is bent,
An early but enduring monument,
Came, veiling all the lightnings of his song
In sorrow; from her wilds Ierne° sent Ireland
The sweetest lyrist of her saddest wrong,[4]
270 And love taught grief to fall like music from his tongue.

31

Midst others of less note, came one frail Form,[5]
A phantom among men; companionless
As the last cloud of an expiring storm,
Whose thunder is its knell; he, as I guess,
275 Had gazed on Nature's naked loveliness,
Actaeon-like,[6] and now he fled astray
With feeble steps o'er the world's wilderness,
And his own thoughts, along that rugged way,
Pursued, like raging hounds, their father and their prey.

32

280 A pardlike[7] Spirit beautiful and swift—
A Love in desolation masked;—a Power
Girt round with weakness;—it can scarce uplift
The weight of the superincumbent° hour; heavily resting
It is a dying lamp, a falling shower,
285 A breaking billow;—even whilst we speak
Is it not broken? On the withering flower
The killing sun smiles brightly: on a cheek
The life can burn in blood, even while the heart may break.

33

His head was bound with pansies overblown,
290 And faded violets, white, and pied,° and blue; multicolored
And a light spear topped with a cypress cone,
Round whose rude shaft dark ivy-tresses grew
Yet dripping with the forest's noonday dew,
Vibrated, as the ever-beating heart
295 Shook the weak hand that grasped it; of that crew
He came the last, neglected and apart;
A herd-abandoned deer, struck by the hunter's dart.

34

All stood aloof, and at his partial moan[8]
Smiled through their tears; well knew that gentle band
300 Who in another's fate now wept his own;

3. Byron, as author of Childe Harold's Pilgrimage.
4. Thomas Moore (1779–1852), poet, author of Irish Melodies.
5. Shelley, as poet-mourner, here wearing emblems of Dionysus, Greek god of wine.
6. Actaeon, a young hunter, offended Diana, goddess of the forest, by discovering her while she was bathing. She transformed him into a stag, and he was torn to pieces by his hounds.
7. Leopardlike; the leopard was sacred to Dionysus.
8. Expressing a bond of sympathy (partiality) toward Adonais.

As in the accents of an unknown land,
He sung new sorrow; sad Urania scanned
The Stranger's mien,° and murmured: "Who art thou?" expressions
He answered not, but with a sudden hand
305 Made bare his branded and ensanguined brow,
Which was like Cain's or Christ's—oh! that it should be so!

35

What softer voice is hushed over the dead?
Athwart what brow is that dark mantle thrown?
What form leans sadly o'er the white death-bed,
310 In mockery° of monumental stone, imitation
The heavy heart heaving without a moan?
If it be He,[9] who, gentlest of the wise,
Taught, soothed, loved, honored the departed one;
Let me not vex, with inharmonious sighs,
315 The silence of that heart's accepted sacrifice.

36

Our Adonais has drunk poison—oh!
What deaf and viperous murderer could crown
Life's early cup with such a draught of woe?
The nameless worm[1] would now itself disown:
320 It felt, yet could escape the magic tone
Whose prelude held° all envy, hate and wrong, held off
But what was howling in one breast alone,
Silent with expectation of the song,
Whose master's hand is cold, whose silver lyre unstrung.

37

325 Live thou, whose infamy is not thy fame!
Live! fear no heavier chastisement from me,
Thou noteless blot on a remembered name!
But be thyself, and know thyself to be!
And ever at thy season be thou free
330 To spill the venom when thy fangs o'erflow:
Remorse and Self-contempt shall cling to thee;
Hot Shame shall burn upon thy secret brow,
And like a beaten hound tremble thou shalt—as now.

38

Nor let us weep that our delight is fled
335 Far from these carrion° kites° that scream below; scavenger / hawks
He wakes or sleeps with the enduring dead;
Thou canst not soar where he is sitting now.
Dust to the dust! but the pure spirit shall flow
Back to the burning fountain whence it came,

9. Leigh Hunt (1784–1859), poet and critic, friend of Keats and Shelley.

1. Serpent; the anonymous reviewer (see line 152).

340 A portion of the Eternal, which must glow
Through time and change, unquenchably the same,
Whilst thy[2] cold embers choke the sordid hearth of shame.

39

Peace, peace! he is not dead, he doth not sleep—
He hath awakened from the dream of life—
345 'Tis we, who lost in stormy visions, keep
With phantoms an unprofitable strife,
And in mad trance strike with our spirit's knife
Invulnerable nothings.—We decay
Like corpses in a charnel; fear and grief
350 Convulse us and consume us day by day,
And cold hopes swarm like worms within our living clay.

40

He has outsoared the shadow of our night;
Envy and calumny and hate and pain,
And that unrest which men miscall delight,
355 Can touch him not and torture not again;
From the contagion of the world's slow stain
He is secure, and now can never mourn
A heart grown cold, a head grown gray in vain;
Nor, when the spirit's self has ceased to burn,
360 With sparkless ashes load an unlamented urn.

41

He lives, he wakes—'tis Death is dead, not he;
Mourn not for Adonais.—Thou young Dawn,
Turn all thy dew to splendor, for from thee
The spirit thou lamentest is not gone;
365 Ye caverns and ye forests, cease to moan!
Cease ye faint flowers and fountains, and thou Air,
Which like a morning veil thy scarf hadst thrown O'er the abandoned Earth, now leave it bare
Even to the joyous stars which smile on its despair!

42

370 He is made one with Nature: there is heard
His voice in all her music, from the moan
Of thunder, to the song of night's sweet bird;[3]
He is a presence to be felt and known
In darkness and in light, from herb and stone,
375 Spreading itself where'er that Power may move
Which has withdrawn his being to its own;
Which wields the world with never wearied love,
Sustains it from beneath, and kindles it above.

2. The reviewer's.
3. Nightingale; an allusion to Keats's "Ode to a Nightingale" (see p. 935).

43

He is a portion of the loveliness
380 Which once he made more lovely: he doth bear
His part, while the one Spirit's plastic° stress — formative
Sweeps through the dull dense world, compelling there
All new successions to the forms they wear;
Torturing the unwilling dross° that checks its flight — coarse matter
385 To its own likeness, as each mass may bear;
And bursting in its beauty and its might
From trees and beasts and men into the Heaven's light.

44

The splendors of the firmament of time
May be eclipsed, but are extinguished not;
390 Like stars to their appointed height they climb,
And death is a low mist which cannot blot
The brightness it may veil. When lofty thought
Lifts a young heart above its mortal lair,
And love and life contend in it, for what 395 Shall be its earthly doom, the dead live there
And move like winds of light on dark and stormy air.

45

The inheritors of unfulfilled renown
Rose from their thrones, built beyond mortal thought,
Far in the Unapparent. Chatterton[4]
400 Rose pale, his solemn agony had not Yet faded from him; Sidney,[5] as he fought
And as he fell and as he lived and loved
Sublimely mild, a Spirit without spot,
Arose; and Lucan,[6] by his death approved:° — vindicated
405 Oblivion as they rose shrank like a thing reproved

46

And many more, whose names on Earth are dark
But whose transmitted effluence cannot die
So long as fire outlives the parent spark,
Rose, robed in dazzling immortality.
410 "Thou art become as one of us," they cry,
"It was for thee yon kingless sphere has long
Swung blind in unascended majesty,
Silent alone amid an Heaven of Song.
Assume thy wingéd throne, thou Vesper of our throng!"

4. Thomas Chatterton (1752–1770), a gifted young poet who committed suicide.
5. Sir Philip Sidney (1554–1586; see pp. 208–20), a poet, critic, courtier, and soldier, fatally wounded in battle.
6. A young Roman poet (39–65 C.E.), who took his own life rather than die under sentence of the notorious emperor Nero, against whom he had conspired.

47

415 Who mourns for Adonais? Oh, come forth,
Fond wretch! and know thyself and him aright.
Clasp with thy panting soul the pendulous[7] Earth;
As from a center, dart thy spirit's light
Beyond all worlds, until its spacious might 420 Satiate the void circumference: then shrink
Even to a point within our day and night;
And keep thy heart light lest it make thee sink
When hope has kindled hope, and lured thee to the brink.

48

Or go to Rome, which is the sepulcher,
425 Oh, not of him, but of our joy: 'tis nought
That ages, empires, and religions there
Lie buried in the ravage they have wrought;
For such as he can lend—they borrow not
Glory from those who made the world their prey;
430 And he is gathered to the kings of thought
Who waged contention with their time's decay,
And of the past are all that cannot pass away.

49

Go thou to Rome,—at once the Paradise,
The grave, the city, and the wilderness;
435 And where its wrecks like shattered mountains rise,
And flowering weeds, and fragrant copses° dress — small woods
The bones of Desolation's nakedness
Pass, till the Spirit of the spot shall lead
Thy footsteps to a slope of green access
440 Where, like an infant's smile, over the dead
A light of laughing flowers along the grass is spread,

50

And gray walls moulder round, on which dull Time
Feeds, like slow fire upon a hoary brand;° — burning log
And one keen pyramid[8] with wedge sublime,
445 Pavilioning the dust of him who planned
This refuge for his memory, doth stand
Like flame transformed to marble; and beneath,
A field is spread, on which a newer band
Have pitched in Heaven's smile their camp of death,
450 Welcoming him we lose with scarce extinguished breath.

51

Here pause: these graves are all too young as yet
To have outgrown the sorrow which consigned
Its charge to each; and if the seal is set,

7. Floating poised in space.
8. Tomb of Gaius Cestius, an officer of ancient Rome, beside the Protestant cemetery where Keats and Shelley are buried.

Here, on one fountain of a mourning mind,
455 Break it not thou! too surely shalt thou find
Thine own well full, if thou returnest home,
Of tears and gall. From the world's bitter wind
Seek shelter in the shadow of the tomb.
What Adonais is, why fear we to become?

52

460 The One remains, the many change and pass;
Heaven's light forever shines, Earth's shadows fly;
Life, like a dome of many-colored glass,
Stains the white radiance of Eternity,
Until Death tramples it to fragments.—Die,
465 If thou wouldst be with that which thou dost seek!
Follow where all is fled!—Rome's azure sky,
Flowers, ruins, statues, music, words, are weak
The glory they transfuse with fitting truth to speak.

53

Why linger, why turn back, why shrink, my Heart?
470 Thy hopes are gone before: from all things here
They have departed; thou shouldst now depart!
A light is past from the revolving year,
And man, and woman; and what still is dear
Attracts to crush, repels to make thee wither.
475 The soft sky smiles,—the low wind whispers near:
'Tis Adonais calls! oh, hasten thither,
No more let life divide what Death can join together.

54

That Light whose smile kindles the Universe,
That Beauty in which all things work and move,
480 That Benediction which the eclipsing Curse
Of birth can quench not, that sustaining Love
Which through the web of being blindly wove
By man and beast and earth and air and sea,
Burns bright or dim, as each are mirrors of 485 The fire for which all thirst; now beams on me,
Consuming the last clouds of cold mortality.

55

The breath whose might I have invoked in song
Descends on me; my spirit's bark° is driven, small ship
Far from the shore, far from the trembling throng
490 Whose sails were never to the tempest given;
The massy earth and spherèd skies are riven!
I am borne darkly, fearfully, afar;
Whilst burning through the inmost veil of Heaven,
The soul of Adonais, like a star,
495 Beacons from the abode where the Eternal are.

1821 1821

FROM HELLAS[9]

The World's Great Age

The world's great age begins anew,
  The golden years return,
The earth doth like a snake[1] renew
  Her winter weeds[2] outworn:
5 Heaven smiles, and faiths and empires gleam,
Like wrecks of a dissolving dream.

A brighter Hellas rears its mountains
  From waves serener far;
A new Peneus[3] rolls his fountains
10 Against the morning star.
Where fairer Tempes[4] bloom, there sleep
Young Cyclads[5] on a sunnier deep.

A loftier Argo[6] cleaves the main,
  Fraught with a later prize;
15 Another Orpheus[7] sings again,
  And loves, and weeps, and dies.
A new Ulysses leaves once more
Calypso[8] for his native shore.

Oh, write no more the tale of Troy,
20 If earth Death's scroll must be!
Nor mix with Laian rage[9] the joy
  Which dawns upon the free:
Although a subtler Sphinx renew
Riddles of death Thebes never knew.

25 Another Athens shall arise,
  And to remoter time
Bequeath, like sunset to the skies,
  The splendor of its prime;
And leave, if nought so bright may live,
30 All earth can take or Heaven can give.

Saturn and Love their long repose
  Shall burst, more bright and good

9. Hellas, an ancient name for Greece, is the title of a drama in which Shelley celebrates the contemporary Greek struggle for independence, which he saw as heralding the return of the legendary "Age of Saturn" or "Age of Gold," the first, best period of human history.
1. Shedding its skin after hibernation, a symbol of regeneration.
2. Clothes, especially mourning garments.
3. Greek river of legendary beauty.
4. Valley of the Peneus.
5. Or Cyclades, islands in the Aegean Sea.
6. In Greek mythology, the first seagoing vessel, on which Jason sailed to gain the "prize" (line 14) of the Golden Fleece.
7. Mythological Greek poet and musician of magical genius, whose playing on the lyre caused his wife, Eurydice, to be released from the realm of the dead on condition that he would not look at her until they had reached the upper world. Breaking his pledge at the last moment, he lost her forever.
8. Island nymph with whom Ulysses (Odysseus) lived for seven years during his return to Ithaca from the Trojan War.
9. Ignorant of his own identity, Oedipus in a rage killed King Laius of Thebes (in fact his father). Oedipus then delivered Thebes from the power of a sphinx by answering her riddles and won Jocasta (in fact his mother) as his wife and queen.

Than all who fell, than One who rose,
Than many unsubdued:[1]
35 Not gold, not blood, their altar dowers,
But votive tears and symbol flowers.

Oh, cease! must hate and death return?
Cease! must men kill and die?
Cease! drain not to its dregs the urn
40 Of bitter prophecy.
The world is weary of the past,
Oh, might it die or rest at last!

1821 1822

JOHN CLARE
1793–1864

Badger

When midnight comes a host of dogs and men
Go out and track the badger to his den,
And put a sack within the hole, and lie
Till the old grunting badger passes by.
5 He comes and hears—they let the strongest loose.
The old fox hears the noise and drops the goose.
The poacher shoots and hurries from the cry,
And the old hare half wounded buzzes by.
They get a forkéd stick to bear him down
10 And clap the dogs and take him to the town,
And bait him all the day with many dogs,
And laugh and shout and fright the scampering hogs.
He runs along and bites at all he meets:
They shout and hollo down the noisy streets.

15 He turns about to face the loud uproar
And drives the rebels to their very door.
The frequent stone is hurled where'er they go;
When badgers fight, then everyone's a foe.
The dogs are clapped and urged to join the fray;
20 The badger turns and drives them all away.
Though scarcely half as big, demure and small,
He fights with dogs for hours and beats them all.
The heavy mastiff, savage in the fray,
Lies down and licks his feet and turns away.
25 The bulldog knows his match and waxes cold,

1. Saturn and Love are the restored deities of the "world's great age"; "all who fell" are the deities who "fell" when Christ arose from the dead; the "many unsubdued" are idols still worshiped throughout the world.

The badger grins and never leaves his hold.
He drives the crowd and follows at their heels
And bites them through—the drunkard swears and reels.

The frighted women take the boys away,
30 The blackguard laughs and hurries on the fray.
He tries to reach the woods, an awkward race,
But sticks and cudgels quickly stop the chase.
He turns again and drives the noisy crowd
And beats the many dogs in noises loud.
35 He drives away and beats them every one,
And then they loose them all and set them on.
He falls as dead and kicked by boys and men,
Then starts and grins and drives the crowd again;
Till kicked and torn and beaten out he lies
40 And leaves his hold and crackles, groans, and dies.

1835–37 1920

Gypsies

The snow falls deep; the forest lies alone;
The boy goes hasty for his load of brakes,° brushwood
Then thinks upon the fire and hurries back;
The gypsy knocks his hands and tucks them up,
5 And seeks his squalid camp, half hid in snow,
Beneath the oak which breaks away the wind,
And bushes close in snow like hovel warm;
There tainted mutton wastes upon the coals,
And the half-wasted dog squats close and rubs,
10 Then feels the heat too strong, and goes aloof;
He watches well, but none a bit can spare,
And vainly waits the morsel thrown away.
'Tis thus they live—a picture to the place,
A quiet, pilfering, unprotected race.

1837–41 1920

Song: Love Lives beyond the Tomb

Love lives beyond
The tomb, the earth, which fades like dew—
I love the fond,
The faithful, and the true.

5 Love lives in sleep,
'Tis happiness of healthy dreams,
Eve's dews may weep,
But love delightful seems.

'Tis seen in flowers,
10 And in the even's pearly dew
On earth's green hours,
And in the heaven's eternal blue.

'Tis heard in spring
When light and sunbeams, warm and kind,
15 On angel's wing
Brings love and music to the wind.

And where's the voice
So young, so beautiful, and sweet
As nature's choice,
20 Where spring and lovers meet?

Love lives beyond
The tomb, the earth, the flowers, and dew.
I love the fond,
The faithful, young, and true.

1842–64 1873

First Love

I ne'er was struck before that hour
With love so sudden and so sweet,
Her face it bloomed like a sweet flower
And stole my heart away complete.
5 My face turned pale as deadly pale.
My legs refused to walk away,
And when she looked, what could I ail?
My life and all seemed turned to clay.

And then my blood rushed to my face
10 And took my eyesight quite away,
The trees and bushes round the place
Seemed midnight at noonday.
I could not see a single thing,
Words from my eyes did start—
15 They spoke as chords do from the string,
And blood burnt round my heart.

Are flowers the winter's choice?
Is love's bed always snow?
She seemed to hear my silent voice,
20 Not love's appeals to know.
I never saw so sweet a face
As that I stood before.
My heart has left its dwelling-place
And can return no more.

1842–64 1920

Farewell

Farewell to the bushy clump close to the river
And the flags where the butter-bump[1] hides in forever;
Farewell to the weedy nook, hemmed in by waters;
Farewell to the miller's brook and his three bonny daughters;
5 Farewell to them all while in prison I lie—
In the prison a thrall° sees naught but the sky. servant slave

Shut out are the green fields and birds in the bushes;
In the prison yard nothing builds, blackbirds or thrushes.
Farewell to the old mill and dash of the waters,
10 To the miller and, dearer still, to his three bonny daughters.

In the nook, the larger burdock[2] grows near the green willow;
In the flood, round the moor-cock dashes under the billow;[3]
To the old mill farewell, to the lock, pens, and waters,
To the miller himsel', and his three bonny daughters.

1842–64 1920

I Am

I am: yet what I am none cares or knows
My friends forsake me like a memory lost,
I am the self-consumer of my woes—
They rise and vanish in oblivious host,
5 Like shadows in love's frenzied, stifled throes—
And yet I am, and live—like vapors tossed

Into the nothingness of scorn and noise,
Into the living sea of waking dreams,
Where there is neither sense of life or joys,
10 But the vast shipwreck of my life's esteems;
Even the dearest, that I love the best,
Are strange—nay, rather stranger than the rest.

I long for scenes, where man hath never trod,
A place where woman never smiled or wept—
15 There to abide with my Creator, God,
And sleep as I in childhood sweetly slept,
Untroubling, and untroubled where I lie,
The grass below—above the vaulted sky.

1842–64 1865

1. Bittern, a marsh bird with a booming call. Flags: irises (tall plants).
2. Type of coarse weed.
3. Wave, water. Moor-cock: type of waterfowl.

FELICIA DOROTHEA HEMANS
1793–1835

England's Dead

Son of the ocean isle!
Where sleep your mighty dead?
Show me what high and stately pile
Is reared o'er Glory's bed.

5 Go, stranger! track the deep,
Free, free the white sail spread!
Wave may not foam, nor wild wind sweep,
Where rest not England's dead.

On Egypt's burning plains,
10 By the pyramid o'erswayed,
With fearful power the noonday reigns,
And the palm trees yield no shade.[1]

But let the angry sun
From heaven look fiercely red,
15 Unfelt by those whose task is done!—
There slumber England's dead.

The hurricane hath might
Along the Indian shore,
And far by Ganges' banks at night,
20 Is heard the tiger's roar.

But let the sound roll on!
It hath no tone of dread,
For those that from their toils are gone;—
There slumber England's dead.

25 Loud rush the torrent floods
The western wilds among,
And free, in green Columbia's woods,
The hunter's bow is strung.

But let the floods rush on!
30 Let the arrow's flight be sped!
Why should they reck° whose task is done?— care
There slumber England's dead!

The mountain storms rise high
In the snowy Pyrenees,

1. This specific reference—to the defeat of French forces by the British at Alexandria in the spring of 1801—is followed by more general military references: to eighteenth-century and early nineteenth-century battles in India (lines 17–24), America (lines 25–32), Spain (lines 33–40), and on the sea (lines 41–48).

35 And toss the pine boughs through the sky,
Like rose leaves on the breeze.

But let the storm rage on!
Let the fresh wreaths be shed!
For the Roncesvalles' field[2] is won,—
40 There slumber England's dead.

On the frozen deep's repose
'Tis a dark and dreadful hour,
When round the ship the ice-fields close,
And the northern night clouds lower.° look threatening

45 But let the ice drift on!
Let the cold-blue desert spread!
Their course with mast and flag is done,—
Even there sleep England's dead.

The warlike of the isles,
50 The men of field and wave!
Are not the rocks their funeral piles,
The seas and shores their grave?

Go, stranger! track the deep,
Free, free the white sail spread!
55 Wave may not foam, nor wild wind sweep,
Where rest not England's dead.

1822

The Landing of the Pilgrim Fathers in New England

Look now abroad—another race has fill'd
Those populous borders—wide the wood recedes,
And towns shoot up, and fertile realms are till'd;
The land is full of harvests and green meads.
—BRYANT[3]

The breaking waves dashed high
On a stern and rock-bound coast,
And the woods against a stormy sky
Their giant branches tossed;

5 And the heavy night hung dark,
The hills and waters o'er,
When a band of exiles moored their bark° ship
On the wild New England shore.

2. During the Peninsular War (1808–14) between France and Great Britain, fighting occurred in Roncesvalles, a pass in the Pyrenees (mountains separating France and Spain).
3. William Cullen Bryant (1794–1878; see pp. 902–05), The Ages, lines 280–83.

Not as the conqueror comes,
10 They, the true-hearted, came;
Not with the roll of the stirring drums,
And the trumpet that sings of fame;

Not as the flying come,
In silence and in fear;—
15 They shook the depths of the desert gloom
With their hymns of lofty cheer.

Amidst the storm they sang,
And the stars heard and the sea;
And the sounding aisles of the dim woods rang
20 To the anthem of the free!

The ocean eagle soared
From his nest by the white wave's foam;
And the rocking pines of the forest roared—
This was their welcome home!

25 There were men with hoary hair
Amidst that pilgrim band;—
Why had they come to wither there,
Away from their childhood's land?

There was woman's fearless eye,
30 Lit by her deep love's truth;
There was manhood's brow serenely high,
And the fiery heart of youth.

What sought they thus afar?
Bright jewels of the mine?
35 The wealth of seas, the spoils of war?—
They sought a faith's pure shrine!

Aye, call it holy ground,
The soil where first they trod.
They have left unstained what there they found—
40 Freedom to worship God.

1826

Casabianca[4]

The boy stood on the burning deck
Whence all but he had fled;

4. "Young Casabianca, a boy about thirteen years old, son to the Admiral of the Orient, remained at his post (in the Battle of the Nile) after the ship had taken fire, and all the guns had been abandoned; and perished in the explosion of the vessel, when the flames had reached the powder" [Hemans's note]. In the Battle of the Nile (August 1, 1798), British admiral Horatio Nelson captured and destroyed the French fleet in Aboukir Bay. Cf. Elizabeth Bishop, "Casabianca" (p. 1515).

The flame that lit the battle's wreck
  Shone round him o'er the dead.

5 Yet beautiful and bright he stood,
  As born to rule the storm;
A creature of heroic blood,
  A proud, though childlike form.

The flames roll'd on—he would not go
10 Without his father's word;
That father, faint in death below,
  His voice no longer heard.

He call'd aloud:—"Say, Father, say
  If yet my task is done?"
15 He knew not that the chieftain lay Unconscious of his son.

"Speak, Father!" once again he cried,
  "If I may yet be gone!"
And but the booming shots replied,
20 And fast the flames roll'd on.

Upon his brow he felt their breath,
  And in his waving hair,
And look'd from that lone post of death
  In still, yet brave despair.

25 And shouted but once more aloud,
  "My Father! must I stay?"
While o'er him fast, through sail and shroud,
  The wreathing fires made way.

They wrapt the ship in splendor wild,
30 They caught the flag on high,
And stream'd above the gallant child,
  Like banners in the sky.

There came a burst of thunder sound—
  The boy—oh! where was he?
35 Ask of the winds that far around
  With fragments strew'd the sea!—

With mast, and helm, and pennon° fair, long narrow flag
  That well had borne their part,
But the noblest thing which perish'd there
40 Was that young faithful heart!

1826

Indian Woman's Death-Song[5]

An Indian woman, driven to despair by her husband's desertion of her for another wife, entered a canoe with her children, and rowed it down the Mississippi towards a cataract.[6] Her voice was heard from the shore singing a mournful death-song, until overpowered by the sound of the waters in which she perished. The tale is related in Long's "Expedition to the Source of St. Peter's River."

"Non, je ne puis vivre avec un coeur brisé. Il faut que je retrouve la joie, et que je m'unisse aux esprits libres de l'air."
—Bride of Messina—Translated by MADAME DE STAEL[7]

"Let not my child be a girl, for very sad is the life of a woman."
The Prairie[8]

Down a broad river of the western wilds,
Piercing thick forest-glooms, a light canoe
Swept with the current: fearful was the speed
Of the frail bark, as by a tempest's wing
5 Borne leaf-like on to where the mist of spray
Rose with the cataract's thunder. Yet within,
Proudly, and dauntlessly, and all alone,
Save that a babe lay sleeping at her breast,
A woman stood! Upon her Indian brow
10 Sat a strange gladness, and her dark hair waved
As if triumphantly. She pressed her child,
In its bright slumber, to her beating heart,
And lifted her sweet voice, that rose awhile
Above the sound of waters, high and clear,
15 Wafting a wild proud strain—a song of death.

"Roll swiftly to the spirit's land, thou mighty stream and free!
Father of ancient waters, roll! and bear our lives with thee!
The weary bird that storms have tossed would seek the sunshine's calm,
And the deer that hath the arrow's hurt flies to the woods of balm.

20 "Roll on!—my warrior's eye hath looked upon another's face,
And mine hath faded from his soul, as fades a moonbeam's trace:
My shadow comes not o'er his path, my whisper to his dream,
He flings away the broken reed. Roll swifter yet, thou stream!

"The voice that spoke of other days is hushed within his breast, 25 But mine its lonely music haunts, and will not let me rest;
It sings a low and mournful song of gladness that is gone—
I cannot live without that light. Father of waves! roll on!

5. From Hemans's Records of Women (1828).
6. Waterfall.
7. No, I can't live with a broken heart. I must retrieve my happiness, and be reunited with the spirits of the air (French). From The Bride of Messina (1803), a play by the German poet and dramatist Friedrich von Schiller (1759–1805), translated by the French writer Madame Anne-Louise-Germaine de Staël (1766–1817).
8. An 1827 novel by the American writer James Fenimore Cooper (1789–1851).

"Will he not miss the bounding step that met him from the chase?
The heart of love that made his home an ever-sunny place?
30 The hand that spread the hunter's board, and decked his couch of yore?
He will not! Roll, dark foaming stream, on to the better shore!

"Some blessèd fount amidst the woods of that bright land must flow,
Whose waters from my soul may lave the memory of this woe;
Some gentle wind must whisper there, whose breath may waft away
35 The burden of the heavy night, the sadness of the day.

"And thou, my babe! though born, like me, for woman's weary lot,
Smile!—to that wasting of the heart, my own! I leave thee not;
Too bright a thing art thou to pine in aching love away—
Thy mother bears thee far, young fawn! from sorrow and decay.

40 "She bears thee to the glorious bowers where none are heard to weep,
And where the unkind one hath no power again to trouble sleep;
And where the soul shall find its youth, as wakening from a dream:
One moment, and that realm is ours. On, on, dark rolling stream!"

1828

WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT
1794–1878

To a Waterfowl

Whither, 'midst falling dew,
While glow the heavens with the last steps of day,
Far, through their rosy depths, dost thou pursue
Thy solitary way?

5 Vainly the fowler's° eye — bird hunter's
Might mark thy distant flight, to do thee wrong,
As, darkly seen against the crimson sky,
Thy figure floats along.

Seek'st thou the plashy° brink — splashy
10 Of weedy lake, or marge° of river wide, — margin, bank
Or where the rocking billows rise and sink
On the chaféd ocean side?

There is a Power, whose care
Teaches thy way along that pathless coast,— 15 The desert and illimitable air,
Lone wandering, but not lost,

All day thy wings have fanned,
At that far height, the cold thin atmosphere;
Yet stoop not, weary, to the welcome land,
20 Though the dark night is near.

And soon that toil shall end,
Soon shalt thou find a summer home, and rest,
And scream among thy fellows; reeds shall bend,
Soon, o'er thy sheltered nest.

25 Thou'rt gone, the abyss of heaven
Hath swallowed up thy form, yet, on my heart
Deeply hath sunk the lesson thou hast given,
And shall not soon depart.

He, who, from zone to zone,
30 Guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight,
In the long way that I must trace alone,
Will lead my steps aright.

1815 1818, 1821

Thanatopsis[1]

To him who in the love of Nature holds
Communion with her visible forms, she speaks
A various language; for his gayer hours
She has a voice of gladness, and a smile
5 And eloquence of beauty, and she glides
Into his darker musings, with a mild
And healing sympathy, that steals away
Their sharpness ere he is aware. When thoughts
Of the last bitter hour come like a blight
10 Over thy spirit, and sad images
Of the stern agony, and shroud, and pall,
And breathless darkness, and the narrow house,
Make thee to shudder, and grow sick at heart;—
Go forth, under the open sky, and list
15 To Nature's teachings, while from all around—
Earth and her waters, and the depths of air,—
Comes a still voice—Yet a few days, and thee
The all-beholding sun shall see no more
In all his course; nor yet in the cold ground,
20 Where thy pale form was laid, with many tears.
Nor in the embrace of ocean, shall exist
Thy image. Earth, that nourished thee, shall claim
Thy growth, to be resolved to earth again,
And, lost each human trace, surrendering up
25 Thine individual being, shalt thou go

1. Meditation on death (Greek).

To mix for ever with the elements,
To be a brother to the insensible rock
And to the sluggish clod,° which the rude swain° soil / farmer
Turns with his share,° and treads upon. The oak plowshare
30 Shall send his roots abroad, and pierce thy mold.

Yet not to thine eternal resting-place
Shall thou retire alone,—nor couldst thou wish Couch° more magnificent. Thou shalt lie down bed
With patriarchs of the infant° world—with kings, early 35 The powerful of the earth—the wise, the good,
Fair forms, and hoary seers of ages past,
All in one mighty sepulchre. The hills
Rock-ribbed and ancient as the sun; the vales° valleys
Stretching in pensive quietness between;
40 The venerable woods; rivers that move
In majesty, and the complaining brooks
That make the meadows green; and, poured round all,
Old ocean's gray and melancholy waste,—
Are but the solemn decorations all
45 Of the great tomb of man. The golden sun,
The planets, all the infinite host of heaven,
Are shining on the sad abodes of death,
Through the still lapse of ages. All that tread
The globe are but a handful to the tribes
50 That slumber in its bosom.—Take the wings
Of morning,[2] traverse Barca's[3] desert sands,
Or lose thyself in the continuous woods
Where rolls the Oregan,[4] and hears no sound,
Save his own dashings—yet—the dead are there:
55 And millions in those solitudes, since first
The flight of years began, have laid them down
In their last sleep—the dead reign there alone.
So shalt thou rest, and what if thou withdraw
In silence from the living, and no friend
60 Take note of thy departure? All that breathe
Will share thy destiny. The gay will laugh
When thou art gone, the solemn brood of care
Plod on, and each one as before will chase
His favorite phantom; yet all these shall leave 65 Their mirth and their employments, and shall come,
And make their bed with thee. As the long train
Of ages glide away, the sons of men,
The youth in life's green spring, and he who goes
In the full strength of years, matron, and maid,
70 And the sweet babe, and the gray-headed man,—
Shall one by one be gathered to thy side,
By those, who in their turn shall follow them.

2. Cf. Psalm 139.9–10: "If I take the wings of morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall thy hand lead me . . ."

3. Desert in northeast Libya.

4. Initial name of the Columbia River in Oregon.

So live, that when they summons comes to join
The innumerable caravan, which moves
75 To that mysterious realm, where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go not, like the quarry-slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon, but, sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
80 Like one who wraps the drapery of his couch[5]
About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams.

ca. 1814 1821

JOHN KEATS
1795–1821

On First Looking into Chapman's Homer[1]

Much have I traveled in the realms of gold,
And many goodly states and kingdoms seen;
Round many western islands have I been
Which bards in fealty° to Apollo[2] hold. allegiance
5 Oft of one wide expanse had I been told
That deep-browed Homer ruled as his demesne;° domain
Yet did I never breathe its pure serene° atmosphere
Till I heard Chapman speak out loud and bold:
Then felt I like some watcher of the skies
10 When a new planet swims into his ken;
Or like stout Cortez[3] when with eagle eyes
He stared at the Pacific—and all his men
Looked at each other with a wild surmise—
Silent, upon a peak in Darien.

1816 1816

On Sitting Down to Read King Lear Once Again

O golden-tongued Romance with serene lute!
Fair plumèd Siren!° Queen of far away! enchantress
Leave melodizing on this wintry day,
Shut up thine olden pages, and be mute:
5 Adieu! for once again the fierce dispute
Betwixt damnation and impassioned clay
Must I burn through; once more humbly assay° test
The bitter-sweet of this Shakespearean fruit.
Chief Poet! and ye clouds of Albion,[4]

5. I.e., wraps his bedclothes.
1. Translations from Homer's Odyssey, in particular book 5, by George Chapman, a contemporary of Shakespeare.
2. Greek and Roman god of poetic inspiration.
3. Spanish conqueror of Mexico; in fact, Balboa, not Cortez, was the first European to see the Pacific, from Darien, in Panama.
4. Ancient name for England, especially referring to pre-Roman Britain, the era of King Lear.

10 Begetters of our deep eternal theme,
When through the old oak forest I am gone,
Let me not wander in a barren dream,
But when I am consumèd in the fire,
Give me new Phoenix[5] wings to fly at my desire.

1818 1838

When I Have Fears

When I have fears that I may cease to be
Before my pen has gleaned my teeming brain,
Before high-pilèd books, in charact'ry,° written symbols
Hold like rich garners the full-ripened grain;
5 When I behold, upon the night's starred face,
Huge cloudy symbols of a high romance,
And think that I may never live to trace
Their shadows, with the magic hand of chance;
And when I feel, fair creature of an hour,
10 That I shall never look upon thee more,
Never have relish in the faery° power magical
Of unreflecting love!—then on the shore
Of the wide world I stand alone, and think
Till Love and Fame to nothingness do sink.

1818 1848

To Homer[6]

Standing aloof in giant ignorance,[7]
Of thee I hear and of the Cyclades,[8]
As one who sits ashore and longs perchance
To visit dolphin-coral in deep seas.
5 So thou wast blind!—but then the veil was rent;
For Jove[9] uncurtain'd Heaven to let thee live,
And Neptune made for thee a spumy tent,
And Pan made sing for thee his forest-hive;
Aye, on the shores of darkness there is light,
10 And precipices show untrodden green;
There is a budding morrow in midnight;
There is a triple sight in blindness keen;
Such seeing hadst thou, as it once befel
To Dian,[1] Queen of Earth, and Heaven, and Hell.

1818? 1848

5. Fabled Arabian bird that, after living for centuries, consumes itself in fire and is reborn.
6. By tradition, blind; here, a symbol of poetic illumination.
7. Keats could not read Homer's Greek.
8. Islands near the Greek coast.
9. Jove, Neptune (line 7), and Pan (line 8): Homer's gods of heaven, sea, and land.
1. The "three-formed" goddess presiding in the moon, forests, and the underworld.

The Eve of St. Agnes[2]

1

St. Agnes' Eve—Ah, bitter chill it was!
The owl, for all his feathers, was a-cold;
The hare limped trembling through the frozen grass,
And silent was the flock in woolly fold:
5 Numb were the Beadsman's fingers, while he told
His rosary,[3] and while his frosted breath,
Like pious incense from a censer old,
Seemed taking flight for heaven, without a death,
Past the sweet Virgin's picture, while his prayer he saith.

2

10 His prayer he saith, this patient, holy man;
Then takes his lamp, and riseth from his knees,
And back returneth, meager, barefoot, wan,
Along the chapel aisle by slow degrees:
The sculptured dead, on each side, seem to freeze,
15 Imprisoned in black, purgatorial rails:
Knights, ladies, praying in dumb° orat'ries,° silent / chapels
He passeth by; and his weak spirit fails
To think[4] how they may ache in icy hoods and mails.

3

Northward he turneth through a little door,
20 And scarce three steps, ere Music's golden tongue
Flattered° to tears this agèd man and poor; beguiled
But no—already had his deathbell rung:
The joys of all his life were said and sung:
His was harsh penance on St. Agnes' Eve:
25 Another way he went, and soon among Rough ashes sat he for his soul's reprieve,
And all night kept awake, for sinner's sake to grieve.

4

That ancient Beadsman heard the prelude soft;
And so it chanced, for many a door was wide,
30 From hurry to and fro. Soon, up aloft,
The silver, snarling trumpets 'gan to chide:
The level chambers, ready with their pride,° ostentation
Were glowing to receive a thousand guests:
The carvèd angels, ever eager-eyed,
35 Stared, where upon their heads the cornice rests,
With hair blown back, and wings put crosswise on their breasts.

2. January 20, proverbially the coldest winter night. St. Agnes, martyred in the fourth century at age thirteen, is patroness of virgins. Traditionally, a maiden who observes the ritual of St. Agnes's Eve will see a vision of her husband-to-be.

3. A string of beads on which a series of short prayers are counted ("told"). Beadsman: from Middle English bede, prayer; a needy dependent, paid a small stipend to pray regularly for his benefactor.

4. I.e., when he thinks.

5

At length burst in the argent° revelry,° brightly dressed / revelers
With plume, tiara, and all rich array,
Numerous as shadows haunting faerily
40 The brain, new stuffed, in youth, with triumphs gay
Of old romance. These let us wish away,
And turn, sole-thoughted, to one Lady there,
Whose heart had brooded, all that wintry day,
On love, and winged St. Agnes' saintly care,
45 As she had heard old dames full many times declare.

6

They told her how, upon St. Agnes' Eve,
Young virgins might have visions of delight,
And soft adorings from their loves receive
Upon the honeyed middle of the night,
50 If ceremonies due they did aright;
As, supperless to bed they must retire,
And couch supine their beauties, lily white;
Nor look behind, nor sideways, but require
Of Heaven with upward eyes for all that they desire.

7

55 Full of this whim was thoughtful Madeline:
The music, yearning like a God in pain,
She scarcely heard: her maiden eyes divine,
Fixed on the floor, saw many a sweeping train
Pass by—she heeded not at all: in vain
60 Came many a tiptoe, amorous cavalier,
And back retired; not cooled by high disdain;
But she saw not: her heart was otherwhere:
She sighed for Agnes' dreams, the sweetest of the year.

8

She danced along with vague, regardless eyes,
65 Anxious her lips, her breathing quick and short:
The hallowed hour was near at hand: she sighs
Amid the timbrels,° and the thronged resort hand drums
Of whisperers in anger, or in sport;
'Mid looks of love, defiance, hate, and scorn,
70 Hoodwinked with faery fancy; all amort,[5]
Save to St. Agnes and her lambs unshorn,[6]
And all the bliss to be before tomorrow morn.

9

So, purposing each moment to retire,
She lingered still. Meantime, across the moors,
75 Had come young Porphyro, with heart on fire

5. Dead; i.e., oblivious.
6. Symbolically associated with St. Agnes; new wool offered at the Mass commemorating the saint was later spun and woven by the nuns (lines 115–17).

For Madeline. Beside the portal doors,
Buttressed from moonlight,[7] stands he, and implores
All saints to give him sight of Madeline,
But for one moment in the tedious hours,
80 That he might gaze and worship all unseen; Perchance speak, kneel, touch, kiss—in sooth such things have been.

10

He ventures in: let no buzzed whisper tell:
All eyes be muffled, or a hundred swords
Will storm his heart, Love's fev'rous citadel:
85 For him, those chambers held barbarian hordes,
Hyena foemen, and hot-blooded lords,
Whose very dogs would execrations howl
Against his lineage: not one breast affords
Him any mercy, in that mansion foul,
90 Save one old beldame,° weak in body and in soul. old woman

11

Ah, happy chance! the agèd creature came,
Shuffling along with ivory-headed wand,
To where he stood, hid from the torch's flame,
Behind a broad hall-pillar, far beyond
95 The sound of merriment and chorus bland:° soft
He startled her; but soon she knew his face,
And grasped his fingers in her palsied hand,
Saying, "Mercy, Porphyro! hie thee from this place;
They are all here tonight, the whole bloodthirsty race!

12

100 "Get hence! get hence! there's dwarfish Hildebrand;
He had a fever late, and in the fit
He cursèd thee and thine, both house and land:
Then there's that old Lord Maurice, not a whit
More tame for his gray hairs—Alas me! flit!
105 Flit like a ghost away."—"Ah, Gossip[8] dear,
We're safe enough; here in this armchair sit,
And tell me how"—"Good Saints! not here, not here;
Follow me, child, or else these stones will be thy bier."

13

He followed through a lowly archèd way,
110 Brushing the cobwebs with his lofty plume,
And as she muttered "Well-a—well-a-day!"
He found him in a little moonlight room,
Pale, latticed, chill, and silent as a tomb.
"Now tell me where is Madeline," said he,
115 "O tell me, Angela, by the holy loom
Which none but secret sisterhood may see,
When they St. Agnes' wool are weaving piously."

7. I.e., concealed in dark shadows.

8. Old kinswoman or household retainer.

14

"St. Agnes! Ah! it is St. Agnes' Eve—
Yet men will murder upon holy days:
120 Thou must hold water in a witch's sieve,
And be liege lord of all the Elves and Fays,[9]
To venture so: it fills me with amaze
To see thee, Porphyro!—St. Agnes' Eve!
God's help! my lady fair the conjuror plays[1]
125 This very night: good angels her deceive!
But let me laugh awhile, I've mickle° time to grieve." much

15

Feebly she laugheth in the languid moon,
While Porphyro upon her face doth look,
Like puzzled urchin on an agèd crone
130 Who keepeth closed a wondrous riddle-book,
As spectacled she sits in chimney nook.
But soon his eyes grew brilliant, when she told
His lady's purpose; and he scarce could brook° check
Tears, at the thought of those enchantments cold,
135 And Madeline asleep in lap of legends old.

16

Sudden a thought came like a full-blown rose,
Flushing his brow, and in his painèd heart
Made purple riot: then doth he propose
A stratagem, that makes the beldame start:
140 "A cruel man and impious thou art:
Sweet lady, let her pray, and sleep, and dream
Alone with her good angels, far apart
From wicked men like thee. Go, go!—I deem Thou canst not surely be the same that thou didst seem."

17

145 "I will not harm her, by all saints I swear," Quoth Porphyro: "O may I ne'er find grace
When my weak voice shall whisper its last prayer,
If one of her soft ringlets I displace,
Or look with ruffian passion in her face:
150 Good Angela, believe me by these tears;
Or I will, even in a moment's space,
Awake, with horrid shout, my foemen's ears,
And beard° them, though they be more fanged than wolves and bears." confront

18

"Ah! why wilt thou affright a feeble soul?
155 A poor, weak, palsy-stricken, churchyard thing,[2]
Whose passing bell[3] may ere the midnight toll;

9. I.e., to hold water in a sieve and to command elves and fairies ("Fays"), Porphyro would have to be a magician.

1. I.e., is trying magic spells.

2. I.e., soon to die.

3. Tolled when a person died ("passed away").

Whose prayers for thee, each morn and evening,
Were never missed."—Thus plaining,° doth she bring — complaining
A gentler speech from burning Porphyro;
160 So woeful and of such deep sorrowing,
That Angela gives promise she will do
Whatever he shall wish, betide her weal or woe.

19

Which was, to lead him, in close secrecy,
Even to Madeline's chamber, and there hide
165 Him in a closet, of such privacy
That he might see her beauty unespied,
And win perhaps that night a peerless bride,
While legioned faeries paced the coverlet,
And pale enchantment held her sleepy-eyed.
170 Never on such a night have lovers met,
Since Merlin paid his Demon all the monstrous debt.[4]

20

"It shall be as thou wishest," said the Dame:
"All cates° and dainties shall be storèd there — delicacies
Quickly on this feast[5] night: by the tambour frame[6]
175 Her own lute thou wilt see: no time to spare,
For I am slow and feeble, and scarce dare
On such a catering trust my dizzy head.
Wait here, my child, with patience; kneel in prayer
The while: Ah! thou must needs the lady wed,
180 Or may I never leave my grave among the dead."

21

So saying, she hobbled off with busy fear.
The lover's endless minutes slowly passed:
The dame returned, and whispered in his ear
To follow her; with aged eyes aghast
185 From fright of dim espial. Safe at last,
Through many a dusky gallery, they gain
The maiden's chamber, silken, hushed, and chaste;
Where Porphyro took covert, pleased amain.° — greatly
His poor guide hurried back with agues° in her brain. — fevers

22

190 Her falt'ring hand upon the balustrade,
Old Angela was feeling for the stair,
When Madeline, St. Agnes' charmèd maid,
Rose, like a missioned spirit, unaware:
With silver taper's light, and pious care,
195 She turned, and down the agèd gossip led
To a safe level matting. Now prepare,

4. Possibly alluding to the tale in the Arthurian legends in which Merlin, a great wizard, lies bound for ages by a spell he gave to an evil woman to buy her love.
5. The festival, or Mass, honoring St. Agnes.
6. A circular embroidery frame.

Young Porphyro, for gazing on that bed;
She comes, she comes again, like ringdove frayed° and fled. frightened

23

Out went the taper as she hurried in;
200 Its little smoke, in pallid moonshine, died:
She closed the door, she panted, all akin
To spirits of the air, and visions wide:
No uttered syllable, or, woe betide!
But to her heart, her heart was voluble,
205 Paining with eloquence her balmy side;
As though a tongueless nightingale should swell
Her throat in vain, and die, heart-stifled, in her dell.

24

A casement high and triple-arched there was,
All garlanded with carven imag'ries
210 Of fruits, and flowers, and bunches of knot-grass,
And diamonded with panes of quaint device,
Innumerable of stains and splendid dyes,
As are the tiger-moth's deep-damasked wings;
And in the midst,'mong thousand heraldries,
215 And twilight saints, and dim emblazonings,
A shielded scutcheon blushed with blood of queens and kings.[7]

25

Full on this casement shone the wintry moon,
And threw warm gules[8] on Madeline's fair breast,
As down she knelt for heaven's grace and boon;° gift
220 Rose-bloom fell on her hands, together pressed,
And on her silver cross soft amethyst,
And on her hair a glory,° like a saint: halo
She seemed a splendid angel, newly dressed,
Save wings, for heaven—Porphyro grew faint:
225 She knelt, so pure a thing, so free from mortal taint.

26

Anon his heart revives: her vespers done,
Of all its wreathèd pearls her hair she frees;
Unclasps her warmèd jewels one by one;
Loosens her fragrant bodice; by degrees
230 Her rich attire creeps rustling to her knees:
Half-hidden, like a mermaid in sea-weed,
Pensive awhile she dreams awake, and sees,
In fancy, fair St. Agnes in her bed,
But dares not look behind, or all the charm is fled.

7. A shield representing a coat of arms ("scutcheon") showed the red pigments ("blushed") indicating royal ancestry.
8. Heraldic red; here, in stained glass.

27

235 Soon, trembling in her soft and chilly nest,
In sort of wakeful swoon, perplexed she lay,
Until the poppied warmth of sleep oppressed
Her soothèd limbs, and soul fatigued away;
Flown, like a thought, until the morrow-day;
240 Blissfully havened both from joy and pain;
Clasped like a missal where swart Paynims[9] pray;
Blinded alike from sunshine and from rain,
As though a rose should shut, and be a bud again.

28

Stol'n to this paradise, and so entranced,
245 Porphyro gazed upon her empty dress,
And listened to her breathing, if it chanced
To wake into a slumberous tenderness;
Which when he heard, that minute did he bless,
And breathed himself: then from the closet crept,
250 Noiseless as fear in a wide wilderness,
And over the hushed carpet, silent, stepped,
And 'tween the curtains peeped, where, lo!—how fast she slept.

29

Then by the bedside, where the faded moon
Made a dim, silver twilight, soft he set
255 A table, and, half anguished, threw thereon
A cloth of woven crimson, gold, and jet—
O for some drowsy Morphean amulet![1]
The boisterous, midnight, festive clarion,° high-pitched trumpet
The kettledrum, and far-heard clarinet,
260 Affray his ears, though but in dying tone—
The hall door shuts again, and all the noise is gone.

30

And still she slept an azure-lidded sleep,
In blanchèd linen, smooth, and lavendered,
While he from forth the closet brought a heap
265 Of candied apple, quince, and plum, and gourd;
With jellies soother than the creamy curd,
And lucent° syrups, tinct° with cinnamon; clear / tinctured
Manna and dates, in argosy transferred
From Fez;° and spicèd dainties, every one, Morocco
270 From silken Samarcand to cedared Lebanon.[2]

31

These delicates he heaped with glowing hand
On golden dishes and in baskets bright
Of wreathèd silver: sumptuous they stand

9. Dark pagans. Missal: Christian prayer book.
1. An object, such as an engraved stone, exerting the power of Morpheus, Greek god of dreams.
2. Places associated with ancient luxury and wealth.

In the retirèd quiet of the night,
275 Filling the chilly room with perfume light.—
"And now, my love, my seraph° fair, awake! angel
Thou art my heaven, and I thine eremite:° hermit; devotee
Open thine eyes, for meek St. Agnes' sake,
Or I shall drowse beside thee, so my soul doth ache."

32

280 Thus whispering, his warm, unnervèd arm
Sank in her pillow. Shaded was her dream
By the dusk curtains: 'twas a midnight charm
Impossible to melt as icèd stream:
The lustrous salvers° in the moonlight gleam; serving dishes
285 Broad golden fringe upon the carpet lies:
It seemed he never, never could redeem
From such a steadfast spell his lady's eyes;
So mused awhile, entoiled in woofèd° fantasies. enwoven

33

Awakening up, he took her hollow lute—
290 Tumultuous—and, in chords that tenderest be,
He played an ancient ditty, long since mute,
In Provence called "La belle dame sans merci"[3]
Close to her ear touching the melody;
Wherewith disturbed, she uttered a soft moan:
295 He ceased—she panted quick—and suddenly
Her blue affrayèd eyes wide open shone:
Upon his knees he sank, pale as smooth-sculptured stone.

34

Her eyes were open, but she still beheld,
Now wide awake, the vision of her sleep:
300 There was a painful change, that nigh expelled
The blisses of her dream so pure and deep,
At which fair Madeline began to weep,
And moan forth witless words with many a sigh;
While still her gaze on Porphyro would keep,
305 Who knelt, with joinèd hands and piteous eye,
Fearing to move or speak, she looked so dreamingly.

35

"Ah, Porphyro!" said she, "but even now
Thy voice was at sweet tremble in mine ear,
Made tunable with every sweetest vow;
310 And those sad eyes were spiritual and clear:
How changed thou art! how pallid, chill, and drear!
Give me that voice again, my Porphyro,
Those looks immortal, those complainings dear!
Oh leave me not in this eternal woe,
315 For if thou diest, my Love, I know not where to go."

3. The lovely but merciless lady (French). Keats adopted this title, of a poem by Alain Chartier (1380/90–ca. 1430), for one of his own (see p. 917).

36

Beyond a mortal man impassioned far
At these voluptuous accents, he arose,
Ethereal, flushed, and like a throbbing star
Seen mid the sapphire heaven's deep repose;
320 Into her dream he melted, as the rose
Blendeth its odor with the violet—
Solution sweet: meantime the frost-wind blows
Like Love's alarum° pattering the sharp sleet — signal, call to arms
Against the windowpanes; St. Agnes' moon hath set.

37

325 'Tis dark: quick pattereth the flaw-blown° sleet: — gust-blown
"This is no dream, my bride, my Madeline!"
'Tis dark: the icèd gusts still rave and beat:
"No dream, alas! alas! and woe is mine!
Porphyro will leave me here to fade and pine.—
330 Cruel! what traitor could thee hither bring?
I curse not, for my heart is lost in thine,
Though thou forsakest a deceivèd thing—
A dove forlorn and lost with sick unprunèd[4] wing."

38

"My Madeline! sweet dreamer! lovely bride!
335 Say, may I be for aye thy vassal blest?
Thy beauty's shield, heart-shaped and vermeil° dyed? — vermilion
Ah, silver shrine, here will I take my rest
After so many hours of toil and quest,
A famished pilgrim—saved by miracle.
340 Though I have found, I will not rob thy nest
Saving of thy sweet self; if thou think'st well
To trust, fair Madeline, to no rude infidel.

39

"Hark! 'tis an elfin-storm from faery land,
Of haggard° seeming, but a boon indeed: — wild, ugly
345 Arise—arise! the morning is at hand—
The bloated wassaillers° will never heed— — drunken revelers
Let us away, my love, with happy speed;
There are no ears to hear, or eyes to see—
Drowned all in Rhenish and the sleepy mead:[5]
350 Awake! arise! my love, and fearless be,
For o'er the southern moors I have a home for thee."

40

She hurried at his words, beset with fears,
For there were sleeping dragons all around,
At glaring watch, perhaps, with ready spears—
355 Down the wide stairs a darkling way[6] they found.—
In all the house was heard no human sound.

4. Unpreened; i.e., disarranged, rumpled.
5. Rhine wine and a sleep-inducing drink made of fermented honey and water.
6. A way in the dark.

A chain-dropped lamp was flickering by each door;
The arras, rich with horseman, hawk, and hound,
Fluttered in the besieging wind's uproar;
360 And the long carpets rose along the gusty floor.

41

They glide, like phantoms, into the wide hall;
Like phantoms, to the iron porch, they glide;
Where lay the Porter, in uneasy sprawl,
With a huge empty flagon by his side:
365 The wakeful bloodhound rose, and shook his hide,
But his sagacious eye an inmate owns:° recognizes
By one, and one, the bolts full easy slide:
The chains lie silent on the footworn stones;
The key turns, and the door upon its hinges groans.

42

370 And they are gone: aye, ages long ago
These lovers fled away into the storm.
That night the Baron dreamt of many a woe,
And all his warrior-guests, with shade and form
Of witch, and demon, and large coffin-worm,
375 Were long be-nightmared. Angela the old
Died palsy-twitched, with meager face deform;
The Beadsman, after thousand aves[7] told,
For aye° unsought for slept among his ashes cold. ever

1819 1820

On the Sonnet

If by dull rhymes our English must be chained,
And, like Andromeda,[8] the Sonnet sweet
Fettered, in spite of painèd loveliness;
Let us find out, if we must be constrained,
5 Sandals more interwoven and complete
To fit the naked foot of poesy;
Let us inspect the lyre, and weigh the stress
Of every chord, and see what may be gained
By ear industrious, and attention meet;
10 Misers of sound and syllable, no less Than Midas[9] of his coinage, let us be Jealous° of dead leaves in the bay-wreath crown;[1] intolerant

7. As in Ave Maria ("Hail Mary"), a salutation to the Virgin.
8. In Greek mythology, a beautiful princess chained naked to a rock as a sacrifice to a sea monster, but rescued by the hero Perseus.
9. According to legend, a fabulously wealthy king who wished to turn all that he touched into gold; granted his wish by the gods, he quickly repented it.
1. Awarded as prize to a true poet.

So, if we may not let the Muse[2] be free,
She will be bound with garlands of her own.

1819 1848

La Belle Dame sans Merci[3]

O what can ail thee, Knight at arms,
Alone and palely loitering?
The sedge has withered from the Lake
And no birds sing!

5 O what can ail thee, Knight at arms,
So haggard, and so woebegone?
The squirrel's granary is full
And the harvest's done.

I see a lily on thy brow
10 With anguish moist and fever dew,
And on thy cheeks a fading rose
Fast withereth too.

"I met a Lady in the Meads,° meadows
Full beautiful, a faery's child,
15 Her hair was long, her foot was light
And her eyes were wild.

"I made a Garland for her head,
And bracelets too, and fragrant Zone;° girdle
She looked at me as she did love
20 And made sweet moan.

"I set her on my pacing steed
And nothing else saw all day long,
For sidelong would she bend and sing
A faery's song.

25 "She found me roots of relish sweet,
And honey wild, and manna° dew, food (from heaven)
And sure in language strange she said
'I love thee true.'

"She took me to her elfin grot° grotto
30 And there she wept and sighed full sore,
And there I shut her wild wild eyes
With kisses four.

2. Source of poetic inspiration.
3. The lovely but merciless lady (French). This is an earlier (and widely preferred) version of a poem first published in 1820.

"And there she lullèd me asleep,
    And there I dreamed, Ah Woe betide!
35 The latest° dream I ever dreamt — last
    On the cold hill side.

"I saw pale Kings, and Princes too,
    Pale warriors, death-pale were they all;
They cried, 'La belle dame sans merci
40 Hath thee in thrall!'

"I saw their starved lips in the gloam
    With horrid warning gapèd wide,
And I awoke, and found me here
    On the cold hill's side.

45 "And this is why I sojourn here,
    Alone and palely loitering;
Though the sedge is withered from the Lake
    And no birds sing."

April 1819 — 1888

Lamia[4]

Part 1

Upon a time, before the faery broods
Drove Nymph and Satyr[5] from the prosperous woods,
Before King Oberon's bright diadem,[6]
Sceptre, and mantle, clasp'd with dewy gem,
5 Frighted away the Dryads and the Fauns
From rushes green, and brakes, and cowslip'd[7] lawns,
The ever-smitten Hermes[8] empty left
His golden throne, bent warm on amorous theft:
From high Olympus had he stolen light,
10 On this side of Jove's clouds, to escape the sight
Of his great summoner, and made retreat
Into a forest on the shores of Crete.
For somewhere in that sacred island dwelt
A nymph, to whom all hoofèd Satyrs knelt;
15 At whose white feet the languid Tritons[9] poured
Pearls, while on land they wither'd and adored.
Fast by the springs where she to bathe was wont,° — accustomed
And in those meads° where sometime she might haunt, — meadows
Were strewn rich gifts, unknown to any Muse,[1]

4. In Greek mythology, a female demon who preyed on humans.
5. Like dryads and fauns (line 5), nymphs and satyrs were minor classical deities.
6. Crown of Oberon, king of the fairies (post-classical supernatural beings).
7. Covered with cowslips (a species of wildflower). Brakes: thickets.
8. Or Mercury, the gods' messenger, especially at the service of Jove (or Jupiter, Zeus), the chief god.
9. Minor sea gods.
1. One of the nine sister goddesses who presided over song, poetry, and the arts and sciences.

20 Though Fancy's casket were unlock'd to choose.
Ah, what a world of love was at her feet!
So Hermes thought, and a celestial heat
Burnt from his wingèd heels to either ear,
That from a whiteness, as the lily clear,
25 Blush'd into roses 'mid his golden hair,
Fallen in jealous curls about his shoulders bare.

From vale° to vale, from wood to wood, he flew, valley
Breathing upon the flowers his passion new,
And wound with many a river to its head,
30 To find where this sweet nymph prepar'd her secret bed:
In vain; the sweet nymph might nowhere be found,
And so he rested on the lonely ground,
Pensive, and full of painful jealousies
Of the Wood-Gods, and even the very trees.
35 There as he stood, he heard a mournful voice,
Such as once heard, in gentle heart, destroys
All pain but pity: thus the lone voice spake:
"When from this wreathèd tomb shall I awake!
When move in a sweet body fit for life,
40 And love, and pleasure, and the ruddy strife
Of hearts and lips! Ah, miserable me!"
The God, dove-footed,[2] glided silently
Round bush and tree, soft-brushing, in his speed,
The taller grasses and full-flowering weed,
45 Until he found a palpitating snake,
Bright, and cirque-couchant[3] in a dusky brake.

She was a gordian[4] shape of dazzling hue,
Vermilion-spotted, golden, green, and blue;
Striped like a zebra, freckled like a pard,° leopard
50 Eyed like a peacock,[5] and all crimson barr'd;
And full of silver moons, that, as she breathed,
Dissolv'd, or brighter shone, or interwreathed,
Their lustres with the gloomier tapestries—
So rainbow-sided, touch'd with miseries,
55 She seem'd, at once, some penanced lady elf,
Some demon's mistress, or the demon's self.
Upon her crest she wore a wannish° fire dark
Sprinkled with stars, like Ariadne's tiar:[6]
Her head was serpent, but ah, bitter-sweet!
60 She had a woman's mouth with all its pearls[7] complete:
And for her eyes: what could such eyes do there
But weep, and weep, that they were born so fair?
As Proserpine still weeps for her Sicilian air.[8]

2. I.e., gently as a dove.
3. Lying in a circular coil.
4. Intricately twisted, seemingly impossible to undo, like the knot tied by Gordius, legendary Phrygian king.
5. With multicolored spots (like the "eyes" in a peacock's tail).
6. Tiara. In a painting by the Italian Renaissance artist Titian, Ariadne, a Greek mythological figure who was transformed into a constellation, wears a crown of stars.
7. A common Elizabethan metaphor for teeth.
8. The goddess Proserpina (Persephone) was taken from the field of Enna, in Sicily, to Hades by the god Pluto.

Her throat was serpent, but the words she spake
65 Came, as through bubbling honey, for Love's sake,
And thus; while Hermes on his pinions° lay, wings
Like a stoop'd° falcon ere he takes his prey. plunging

"Fair Hermes, crown'd with feathers, fluttering light,
I had a splendid dream of thee last night:
70 I saw thee sitting, on a throne of gold,
Among the Gods, upon Olympus old,
The only sad one; for thou didst not hear
The soft, lute-finger'd Muses chaunting clear,
Nor even Apollo[9] when he sang alone,
75 Deaf to his throbbing throat's long, long melodious moan.
I dreamt I saw thee, robed in purple flakes,
Break amorous through the clouds, as morning breaks,
And, swiftly as a bright Phœbean dart,° ray
Strike for the Cretan isle; and here thou art!
80 Too gentle Hermes, hast thou found the maid?"
Whereat the star of Lethe[1] not delay'd
His rosy eloquence, and thus inquired:
"Thou smooth-lipp'd serpent, surely high inspired!
Thou beauteous wreath, with melancholy eyes,
85 Possess whatever bliss thou canst devise,
Telling me only where my nymph is fled,—
Where she doth breathe!" "Bright planet, thou hast said," Return'd the snake, "but seal with oaths, fair God!"
"I swear," said Hermes, "by my serpent rod,
90 And by thine eyes, and by thy starry crown!"
Light flew his earnest words, among the blossoms blown.
Then thus again the brilliance feminine:
"Too frail of heart! for this lost nymph of thine,
Free as the air, invisibly, she strays
95 About these thornless wilds; her pleasant days
She tastes unseen; unseen her nimble feet
Leave traces in the grass and flowers sweet;
From weary tendrils, and bow'd branches green,
She plucks the fruit unseen, she bathes unseen:
100 And by my power is her beauty veil'd
To keep it unaffronted, unassail'd
By the love-glances of unlovely eyes,
Of Satyrs, Fauns, and blear'd Silenus'[2] sighs.
Pale grew her immortality, for woe
105 Of all these lovers, and she grievèd so
I took compassion on her, bade her steep
Her hair in weïrd° syrops,° that would keep magical / potions
Her loveliness invisible, yet free
To wander as she loves, in liberty.
110 Thou shalt behold her, Hermes, thou alone,
If thou wilt, as thou swearest, grant my boon!"

9. Phoebus Apollo, the sun god.
1. Hermes, who appeared like a star on the dark banks of the river Lethe, in Hades.
2. Satyr, tutor of Bacchus (Dionysus, god of wine). Blear'd: drunk.

Then, once-again, the charmèd God began
An oath, and through the serpent's ears it ran
Warm, tremulous, devout, psalterian.[3]
115 Ravish'd, she lifted her Circean head,
Blush'd a live damask,[4] and swift-lisping said,
"I was a woman, let me have once more
A woman's shape, and charming as before.
I love a youth of Corinth—O the bliss!
120 Give me my woman's form, and place me where he is.
Stoop, Hermes, let me breathe upon thy brow,
And thou shalt see thy sweet nymph even now."
The God on half-shut feathers sank serene,
She breath'd upon his eyes, and swift was seen
125 Of both the guarded nymph near-smiling on the green.
It was no dream; or say a dream it was,
Real are the dreams of Gods, and smoothly pass
Their pleasures in a long immortal dream.
One warm, flush'd moment, hovering, it might seem 130 Dash'd by the wood-nymph's beauty, so he burn'd;
Then, lighting on the printless verdure, turn'd
To the swoon'd serpent, and with languid arm,
Delicate, put to proof the lythe Caducean charm.[5]
So done, upon the nymph his eyes he bent
135 Full of adoring tears and blandishment,
And towards her stept: she, like a moon in wane,
Faded before him, cower'd, nor could restrain
Her fearful sobs, self-folding like a flower
That faints into itself at evening hour:
140 But the God fostering her chillèd hand,
She felt the warmth, her eyelids open'd bland,° softly
And, like new flowers at morning song of bees,
Bloom'd, and gave up her honey to the lees.° dregs
Into the green-recessed woods they flew;
145 Nor grew they pale, as mortal lovers do.

Left to herself, the serpent now began
To change; her elfin blood in madness ran,
Her mouth foam'd, and the grass, therewith besprent,° sprinkled
Wither'd at dew so sweet and virulent;
150 Her eyes in torture fix'd, and anguish drear,
Hot, glaz'd, and wide, with lid-lashes all sear,
Flash'd phosphor and sharp sparks, without one cooling tear.
The colors all inflam'd throughout her train,
She writh'd about, convuls'd with scarlet pain:
155 A deep volcanian yellow took the place
Of all her milder-moonèd body's grace;[6]
And, as the lava ravishes the mead,
Spoilt all her silver mail, and golden brede;° embroidery

3. Like a psalm or like the sound of a psaltery (an ancient stringed instrument).
4. Turned the pink color of a damask rose. Circean: resembling Circe, enchantress in the Odyssey.
5. I.e., tested the magic of Hermes' flexible staff (called Caduceus).
6. I.e., sulfurous yellow (as though from a volcanic eruption) replaced her silvery moon color.

Made gloom of all her frecklings, streaks and bars,
160 Eclips'd her crescents, and lick'd up her stars:
So that, in moments few, she was undrest
Of all her sapphires, greens, and amethyst,
And rubious-argent:° of all these bereft, silvery red
Nothing but pain and ugliness were left.
165 Still shone her crown; that vanish'd, also she Melted and disappear'd as suddenly;
And in the air, her new voice luting soft,
Cried, "Lycius! gentle Lycius!"—Borne aloft
With the bright mists about the mountains hoar° gray with age
170 These words dissolv'd: Crete's forests heard no more.

Whither fled Lamia, now a lady bright,
A full-born beauty new and exquisite?
She fled into that valley they pass o'er
Who go to Corinth from Cenchreas' shore;[7]
175 And rested at the foot of those wild hills,
The rugged founts of the Peæran rills,[8]
And of that other ridge whose barren back
Stretches, with all its mist and cloudy rack,
South-westward to Cleone. There she stood 180 About a young bird's flutter from a wood,
Fair, on a sloping green of mossy tread,
By a clear pool, wherein she passionèd[9]
To see herself escap'd from so sore ills,
While her robes flaunted with the daffodils.

185 Ah, happy Lycius!—for she was a maid
More beautiful than ever twisted braid,
Or sigh'd, or blush'd, or on spring-flowered lea° meadow
Spread a green kirtle° to the minstrelsy: gown
A virgin purest lipp'd yet in the lore
190 Of love deep learned to the red heart's core:
Not one hour old, yet of sciential° brain knowledgeable
To unperplex° bliss from its neighbor pain; disentangle
Define their pettish° limits, and estrange quarreled-over
Their points of contact, and swift counterchange;[1]
195 Intrigue with the specious chaos,[2] and dispart
Its most ambiguous atoms with sure art;
As though in Cupid's college she had spent
Sweet days a lovely graduate, still unshent,° unspoiled
And kept his rosy terms[3] in idle languishment.

200 Why this fair creature chose so fairily
By the wayside to linger, we shall see;
But first 'tis fit to tell how she could muse
And dream, when in the serpent prison-house,

7. I.e., Cenchrea, a Corinthian harbor, in southern Greece.
8. Streams flowing from the Pierian Spring (on Mt. Olympus, in Greece), sacred to the Muses.
9. Felt intense excitement.
1. Change of condition into its opposite. Estrange: separate out.
2. I.e., use the illusory ("specious") chaos.
3. Terms spent "in Cupid's college."

Of all she list,° strange or magnificent: wished 205 How, ever, where she will'd, her spirit went;
Whether to faint Elysium, or where
Down through tress-lifting waves the Nereids fair
Wind into Thetis'[4] bower by many a pearly stair;
Or where God Bacchus drains his cups divine,
210 Stretch'd out, at ease, beneath a glutinous° pine; gummy
Or where in Pluto's gardens palatine° palatial
Mulciber's columns gleam in far piazzian line.[5]
And sometimes into cities she would send
Her dream, with feast and rioting to blend;
215 And once, while among mortals dreaming thus,
She saw the young Corinthian Lycius
Charioting foremost in the envious race,
Like a young Jove with calm uneager face,
And fell into a swooning love of him.
220 Now on the moth-time of that evening dim
He would return that way, as well she knew,
To Corinth from the shore; for freshly blew
The eastern soft wind, and his galley now
Grated the quaystones with her brazen prow
225 In port Cenchreas, from Egina isle
Fresh anchor'd; whither he had been awhile
To sacrifice to Jove, whose temple there
Waits with high marble doors for blood and incense rare.
Jove heard his vows, and better'd his desire;
230 For by some freakful chance he made retire
From his companions, and set forth to walk,
Perhaps grown wearied of their Corinth talk:
Over the solitary hills he fared,
Thoughtless at first, but ere eve's star appeared 235 His phantasy was lost, where reason fades,
In the calm'd twilight of Platonic shades.[6]
Lamia beheld him coming, near, more near—
Close to her passing, in indifference drear,
His silent sandals swept the mossy green;
240 So neighbour'd to him, and yet so unseen
She stood: he pass'd, shut up in mysteries,
His mind wrapp'd like his mantle, while her eyes
Follow'd his steps, and her neck regal white
Turn'd—syllabling thus, "Ah, Lycius bright,
245 And will you leave me on the hills alone?
Lycius, look back! and be some pity shown."
He did; not with cold wonder fearingly,
But Orpheus-like at an Eurydice;[7]
For so delicious were the words she sung,
250 It seem'd he had lov'd them a whole summer long:
And soon his eyes had drunk her beauty up,

4. One of the Nereids, or sea nymphs.
5. In long lines around piazzas, or open courts. Mulciber: or Vulcan, god of fire and metalworking.
6. I.e., while he pondered difficult questions raised by Plato's philosophy.
7. Pluto allowed Orpheus to lead Eurydice, Orpheus's wife, back to Earth from Hades on the condition that Orpheus not look back at her. When he could not resist looking, he lost her.

Leaving no drop in the bewildering cup,
And still the cup was full,—while he, afraid
Lest she should vanish ere his lip had paid
255 Due adoration, thus began to adore;
Her soft look growing coy, she saw his chain so sure:
"Leave thee alone! Look back! Ah, Goddess, see Whether my eyes can ever turn from thee!
For pity do not this sad heart belie°— be false to 260 Even as thou vanishest so I shall die.
Stay! though a Naiad of the rivers, stay!
To thy far wishes will thy streams obey:
Stay! though the greenest woods be thy domain,
Alone they can drink up the morning rain:
265 Though a descended Pleiad,[8] will not one
Of thine harmonious sisters keep in tune
Thy spheres, and as thy silver proxy shine?
So sweetly to these ravish'd ears of mine
Came thy sweet greeting, that if thou shouldst fade
270 Thy memory will waste me to a shade:—
For pity do not melt!"—"If I should stay,"
Said Lamia, "here, upon this floor of clay,
And pain my steps upon these flowers too rough,
What canst thou say or do of charm enough
275 To dull the nice[9] remembrance of my home?
Thou canst not ask me with thee here too roam
Over these hills and vales, where no joy is,— Empty of immortality and bliss!
Thou art a scholar, Lycius, and must know
280 That finer spirits cannot breathe below
In human climes, and live: Alas! poor youth,
What taste of purer air hast thou to soothe
My essence? What serener palaces,
Where I may all my many senses please,
285 And by mysterious sleights a hundred thirsts appease?
It cannot be—Adieu!" So said, she rose
Tiptoe with white arms spread. He, sick to lose
The amorous promise of her lone complain,
Swoon'd, murmuring of love, and pale with pain.
290 The cruel lady, without any show
Of sorrow for her tender favorite's woe,
But rather, if her eyes could brighter be,
With brighter eyes and slow amenity,
Put her new lips to his, and gave afresh
295 The life she had so tangled in her mesh:
And as he from one trance was wakening
Into another, she began to sing,
Happy in beauty, life, and love, and every thing,
A song of love, too sweet for earthly lyres,
300 While, like held breath, the stars drew in their panting fires.
And then she whisper'd in such trembling tone,

8. One of the seven sisters that form the constellation Pleiades.

9. Detailed, minutely accurate.

As those who, safe together met alone
For the first time through many anguish'd days,
Use other speech than looks; bidding him raise 305 His drooping head, and clear his soul of doubt,
For that she was a woman, and without Any more subtle fluid in her veins
Than throbbing blood, and that the self-same pains
Inhabited her frail-strung heart as his.
310 And next she wonder'd how his eyes could miss
Her face so long in Corinth, where, she said,
She dwelt but half retir'd, and there had led Days happy as the gold coin could invent
Without the aid of love; yet in content
315 Till she saw him, as once she pass'd him by,
Where 'gainst a column he leant thoughtfully
At Venus' temple porch, 'mid baskets heap'd
Of amorous herbs and flowers, newly reap'd
Late on that eve, as 'twas the night before 320 The Adonian feast;[1] whereof she saw no more,
But wept alone those days, for why should she adore?
Lycius from death awoke into amaze,
To see her still, and singing so sweet lays;° songs
Then from amaze into delight he fell
325 To hear her whisper woman's lore so well;
And every word she spake entic'd him on
To unperplex'd delight[2] and pleasure known.
Let the mad poets say whate'er they please
Of the sweets of Fairies, Peris,[3] Goddesses, 330 There is not such a treat among them all,
Haunters of cavern, lake, and waterfall,
As a real woman, lineal indeed
From Pyrrha's pebbles[4] or old Adam's seed.
Thus gentle Lamia judg'd, and judg'd aright,
335 That Lycius could not love in half a fright,
So threw the goddess off, and won his heart
More pleasantly by playing woman's part,
With no more awe than what her beauty gave,
That, while it smote, still guaranteed to save.
340 Lycius to all made eloquent reply,
Marrying to every word a twinborn sigh;
And last, pointing to Corinth, ask'd her sweet,
If 'twas too far that night for her soft feet.
The way was short, for Lamia's eagerness
345 Made, by a spell, the triple league decrease
To a few paces; not at all surmised
By blinded Lycius, so in her comprized.° bound up, absorbed
They pass'd the city gates, he knew not how,
So noiseless, and he never thought to know.

1. Feast of Adonis, a youth loved by Venus (Aphrodite), goddess of love.
2. I.e., unmixed with its neighbor, pain; cf. line 192.
3. Fairylike creatures in Persian mythology.
4. Descended from the pebbles with which, in Greek mythology, Pyrrha and Deucalion repopulated Earth after a great flood.

350 As men talk in a dream, so Corinth all,
Throughout her palaces imperial,
And all her populous streets and temples lewd,[5]
Mutter'd, like tempest in the distance brew'd,
To the wide-spreaded night above her towers.
355 Men, women, rich and poor, in the cool hours,
Shuffled their sandals o'er the pavement white,
Companion'd or alone; while many a light
Flared, here and there, from wealthy festivals,
And threw their moving shadows on the walls,
360 Or found them cluster'd in the corniced shade
Of some arch'd temple door, or dusky colonnade.

Muffling his face, of greeting friends in fear,
Her fingers he press'd hard, as one came near
With curl'd gray beard, sharp eyes, and smooth bald crown, 365 Slow-stepp'd, and robed in philosophic gown:
Lycius shrank closer, as they met and past,
Into his mantle, adding wings to haste,
While hurried Lamia trembled: "Ah," said he,
"Why do you shudder, love, so ruefully?
370 Why does your tender palm dissolve in dew?"—
"I'm wearied," said fair Lamia: "tell me who
Is that old man? I cannot bring to mind
His features:—Lycius! wherefore did you blind Yourself from his quick eyes?" Lycius replied, 375 " 'Tis Apollonius sage, my trusty guide
And good instructor; but to-night he seems
The ghost of folly haunting my sweet dreams."

While yet he spake they had arrived before
A pillar'd porch, with lofty portal door,
380 Where hung a silver lamp, whose phosphor glow
Reflected in the slabbèd steps below,
Mild as a star in water; for so new,
And so unsullied was the marble hue,
So through the crystal polish, liquid fine,
385 Ran the dark veins, that none but feet divine
Could e'er have touch'd there. Sounds Æolian[6]
Breath'd from the hinges, as the ample span
Of the wide doors disclos'd a place unknown
Some time to any, but those two alone,
390 And a few Persian mutes, who that same year
Were seen about the markets: none knew where
They could inhabit; the most curious
Were foil'd, who watch'd to trace them to their house:
And but the flitter-wingèd verse must tell,
395 For truth's sake, what woe afterwards befel,

5. Temples of Venus, whose worship sometimes involved sexual activity.
6. Sounds like those of the wind harp (named after Aeolus, god of winds), a stringed instrument that responds to air currents.

'Twould humor many a heart to leave them thus,
Shut from the busy world of more incredulous.

Part 2

Love in a hut, with water and a crust,
Is—Love, forgive us!—cinders, ashes, dust;
Love in a palace is perhaps at last
More grievous torment than a hermit's fast:—
5 That is a doubtful tale from faery land,
Hard for the non-elect to understand.
Had Lycius liv'd to hand his story down,
He might have given the moral a fresh frown,
Or clench'd it quite: but too short was their bliss
10 To breed distrust and hate, that make the soft voice hiss.
Besides, there, nightly, with terrific glare,
Love, jealous grown of so complete a pair,
Hover'd and buzz'd his wings, with fearful roar,
Above the lintel of their chamber door,
15 And down the passage cast a glow upon the floor.

For all this came a ruin: side by side
They were enthroned, in the even tide,
Upon a couch, near to a curtaining
Whose airy texture, from a golden string,
20 Floated into the room, and let appear
Unveil'd the summer heaven, blue and clear,
Betwixt two marble shafts:—there they reposed,
Where use had made it sweet, with eyelids closed,
Saving a tythe[7] which love still open kept,
25 That they might see each other while they almost slept;
When from the slope side of a suburb hill,
Deafening the swallow's twitter, came a thrill
Of trumpets—Lycius started—the sounds fled,
But left a thought, a buzzing in his head.
30 For the first time, since first he harbor'd in
That purple-linèd palace of sweet sin,
His spirit pass'd beyond its golden bourn
Into the noisy world almost forsworn.
The lady, ever watchful, penetrant,
35 Saw this with pain, so arguing a want° lack
Of something more, more than her empery° empire
Of joys; and she began to moan and sigh
Because he mused beyond her, knowing well
That but a moment's thought is passion's passing° bell.° death / knell 40 "Why do you sigh, fair creature?" whisper'd he:
"Why do you think?" return'd she tenderly:
"You have deserted me;—where am I now?
Not in your heart while care weighs on your brow:
No, no, you have dismiss'd me; and I go

7. Except for a slit. Tythe (more commonly tithe): a small—literally, a tenth—part.

45 From your breast houseless: ay, it must be so."
He answer'd, bending to her open eyes,
Where he was mirror'd small in paradise,
"My silver planet, both of eve and morn![8]
Why will you plead yourself so sad forlorn,
50 While I am striving how to fill my heart
With deeper crimson, and a double smart?° — pain
How to entangle, trammel up[9] and snare
Your soul in mine, and labyrinth you there
Like the hid scent in an unbudded rose?
55 Ay, a sweet kiss—you see your mighty woes.[1]
My thoughts! shall I unveil them? Listen then!
What mortal hath a prize, that other men
May be confounded and abash'd withal,
But lets it sometimes pace abroad majestical,
60 And triumph, as in thee I should rejoice
Amid the hoarse alarm of Corinth's voice.
Let my foes choke, and my friends shout afar,
While through the thronged streets your bridal car° — chariot
Wheels round its dazzling spokes."—The lady's cheek
65 Trembled; she nothing said, but, pale and meek,
Arose and knelt before him, wept a rain
Of sorrows at his words; at last with pain
Beseeching him, the while his hand she wrung,
To change his purpose. He thereat was stung,
70 Perverse, with stronger fancy to reclaim
Her wild and timid nature to his aim:
Besides, for all his love, in self despite,
Against his better self, he took delight
Luxurious in her sorrows, soft and new.
75 His passion, cruel grown, took on a hue
Fierce and sanguineous° as 'twas possible — bloodred
In one whose brow had no dark veins to swell.
Fine was the mitigated fury, like
Apollo's presence when in act to strike
80 The serpent—Ha, the serpent! certes,° she — certainly
Was none. She burnt, she lov'd the tyranny,
And, all subdued, consented to the hour
When to the bridal he should lead his paramour.
Whispering in midnight silence, said the youth,
85 "Sure some sweet name thou hast, though, by my truth,
I have not ask'd it, ever thinking thee
Not mortal, but of heavenly progeny,
As still I do. Hast any mortal name,
Fit appellation for this dazzling frame?
90 Or friends or kinsfolk on the citied earth,
To share our marriage feast and nuptial mirth?
"I have no friends," said Lamia, "no, not one;
My presence in wide Corinth hardly known:

8. The planet Venus is both the morning star and the evening star.
9. Catch in a net.
1. I.e., she teases him about exaggerating his troubles.

My parents' bones are in their dusty urns
95 Sepulchred, where no kindled incense burns,
Seeing all their luckless race are dead, save me,
And I neglect the holy rite for thee.
Even as you list invite your many guests;
But if, as now it seems, your vision rests
100 With any pleasure on me, do not bid
Old Apollonius—from him keep me hid."
Lycius, perplex'd at words so blind and blank,
Made close inquiry; from whose touch she shrank,
Feigning a sleep; and he to the dull shade
105 Of deep sleep in a moment was betray'd.

It was the custom then to bring away,
The bride from home at blushing shut of day,
Veil'd, in a chariot, heralded along
By strewn flowers, torches, and a marriage song,
110 With other pageants: but this fair unknown
Had not a friend. So being left alone,
(Lycius was gone to summon all his kin)
And knowing surely she could never win
His foolish heart from its mad pompousness,
115 She set herself, high-thoughted, how to dress
The misery in fit magnificence.
She did so, but 'tis doubtful how and whence Came, and who were her subtle servitors.° male servants
About the halls, and to and from the doors,
120 There was a noise of wings, till in short space
The glowing banquet-room shone with wide-arched grace.
A haunting music, sole perhaps and lone
Supportress of the faery-roof, made moan
Throughout, as fearful the whole charm might fade.
125 Fresh carvèd cedar, mimicking a glade
Of palm and plantain, met from either side,
High in the midst, in honor of the bride:
Two palms and then two plantains, and so on,
From either side their stems branch'd one to one 130 All down the aislèd place; and beneath all
There ran a stream of lamps straight on from wall to wall.
So canopied, lay an untasted feast
Teeming with odors. Lamia, regal drest,
Silently paced about, and as she went,
135 In pale contented sort of discontent,
Mission'd her viewless servants to enrich
The fretted[2] splendor of each nook and niche.
Between the tree-stems, marbled plain at first,
Came jasper pannels; then, anon, there burst
140 Forth creeping imagery of slighter trees,
And with the larger wove in small intricacies.
Approving all, she faded at self-will,
And shut the chamber up, close, hush'd and still,

2. Decorated with fretwork.

Complete and ready for the revels rude,° uncouth
145 When dreadful° guests would come to spoil her solitude. terrifying

The day appear'd, and all the gossip rout.
O senseless Lycius! Madman! wherefore flout
The silent-blessing fate, warm cloister'd hours,
And show to common eyes these secret bowers?
150 The herd approach'd; each guest, with busy brain,
Arriving at the portal, gaz'd amain,° intently
And enter'd marveling: for they knew the street,
Remember'd it from childhood all complete Without a gap, yet ne'er before had seen
155 That royal porch, that high-built fair demesne;° estate
So in they hurried all, maz'd, curious and keen:
Save one, who look'd thereon with eye severe,
And with calm-planted steps walk'd in austere;
'Twas Apollonius: something too he laugh'd,
160 As though some knotty problem, that had daft° baffled
His patient thought, had now begun to thaw,
And solve and melt:—'twas just as he foresaw.

He met within the murmurous vestibule
His young disciple. " 'Tis no common rule,
165 Lycius," said he, "for uninvited guest
To force himself upon you, and infest
With an unbidden presence the bright throng
Of younger friends; yet must I do this wrong,
And you forgive me." Lycius blush'd, and led 170 The old man through the inner doors broad-spread;
With reconciling words and courteous mien° demeanor
Turning into sweet milk the sophist's spleen.[3]

Of wealthy lustre was the banquet-room,
Fill'd with pervading brilliance and perfume:
175 Before each lucid pannel fuming stood
A censer fed with myrrh and spicèd wood,
Each by a sacred tripod held aloft,
Whose slender feet wide-swerv'd upon the soft Wool-woofed° carpets: fifty wreaths of smoke -woven 180 From fifty censers their light voyage took
To the high roof, still mimick'd as they rose
Along the mirror'd walls by twin-clouds odorous.
Twelve sphered tables, by silk seats insphered,° encircled
High as the level of a man's breast rear'd
185 On libbard's° paws, upheld the heavy gold leopard's
Of cups and goblets, and the store° thrice told story
Of Ceres' horn,[4] and, in huge vessels, wine
Come from the gloomy tun° with merry shine. cask
Thus loaded with a feast the tables stood,
190 Each shrining in the midst the image of a God.

3. Here, the melancholy of one whose reasoning seems solid but is flawed.

4. Horn of plenty, filled with grain (Ceres is the goddess of grain).

When in an antichamber every guest
Had felt the cold full sponge to pleasure press'd,
By minist'ring slaves, upon his hands and feet,
And fragrant oils with ceremony meet
195 Pour'd on his hair, they all mov'd to the feast
In white robes, and themselves in order placed Around the silken couches, wondering
Whence all this mighty cost and blaze of wealth could spring.

Soft went the music the soft air along,
200 While fluent Greek a vowel'd undersong
Kept up among the guests, discoursing low
At first, for scarcely was the wine at flow;
But when the happy vintage touch'd their brains,
Louder they talk, and louder come the strains
205 Of powerful instruments:—the gorgeous dyes,
The space, the splendor of the draperies,
The roof of awful richness, nectarous cheer,
Beautiful slaves, and Lamia's self, appear,
Now, when the wine has done its rosy deed,
210 And every soul from human trammels freed,
No more so strange; for merry wine, sweet wine,
Will make Elysian shades[5] not too fair, too divine.

Soon was God Bacchus at meridian° height; full
Flush'd were their cheeks, and bright eyes double bright:
215 Garlands of every green, and every scent
From vales° deflower'd, or forest-trees branch-rent, valleys
In baskets of bright osier'd[6] gold were brought High as the handles heap'd, to suit the thought
Of every guest; that each, as he did please,
220 Might fancy-fit his brows, silk-pillow'd at his ease.

What wreath for Lamia? What for Lycius?
What for the sage, old Apollonius?
Upon her aching forehead be there hung
The leaves of willow and of adder's tongue;[7]
225 And for the youth, quick, let us strip for him
The thyrsus,[8] that his watching eyes may swim
Into forgetfulness; and, for the sage,
Let spear-grass and the spiteful thistle wage
War on his temples. Do not all charms fly
230 At the mere touch of cold philosophy?[9]
There was an awful° rainbow once in heaven: awe-inspiring
We know her woof, her texture; she is given
In the dull catalogue of common things.
Philosophy will clip an Angel's wings,
235 Conquer all mysteries by rule and line,

5. Spirits in Elysium, abode of the blessed after death.
6. Plaited, as with the strips of willow used to weave baskets.
7. Fern with spikes that resemble serpents' tongues.
8. Bacchus's vine-covered staff, used to signal drunkenness.
9. Natural philosophy, i.e., science.

Empty the haunted air, and gnomèd° mine— gnome-guarded
Unweave a rainbow, as it erewhile made
The tender-person'd Lamia melt into a shade.

By her glad Lycius sitting, in chief place,
240 Scarce saw in all the room another face,
Till, checking his love trance, a cup he took Full brimm'd, and opposite sent forth a look
'Cross the broad table, to beseech a glance
From his old teacher's wrinkled countenance, 245 And pledge° him. The bald-head philosopher drink a toast to
Had fix'd his eye, without a twinkle or stir
Full on the alarmèd beauty of the bride,
Brow-beating her fair form, and troubling her sweet pride.
Lycius then press'd her hand, with devout touch,
250 As pale it lay upon the rosy couch:
'Twas icy, and the cold ran through his veins;
Then sudden it grew hot, and all the pains
Of an unnatural heat shot to his heart.
"Lamia, what means this? Wherefore dost thou start?
255 Know'st thou that man?" Poor Lamia answer'd not.
He gaz'd into her eyes, and not a jot
Own'd° they the lovelorn piteous appeal: acknowledged
More, more he gaz'd: his human senses reel:
Some hungry spell that loveliness absorbs;
260 There was no recognition in those orbs.
"Lamia!" he cried—and no soft-toned reply.
The many heard, and the loud revelry
Grew hush; the stately music no more breathes;
The myrtle[1] sicken'd in a thousand wreaths.
265 By faint degrees, voice, lute, and pleasure ceased;
A deadly silence step by step increased,
Until it seem'd a horrid presence there,
And not a man but felt the terror in his hair.
"Lamia!" he shriek'd; and nothing but the shriek 270 With its sad echo did the silence break.
"Begone, foul dream!" he cried, gazing again
In the bride's face, where now no azure vein
Wander'd on fair-spaced temples; no soft bloom
Misted the cheek; no passion to illume
275 The deep-recessèd vision:—all was blight;
Lamia, no longer fair, there sat a deadly white.
"Shut, shut those juggling[2] eyes, thou ruthless man!
Turn them aside, wretch! or the righteous ban
Of all the Gods, whose dreadful images
280 Here represent their shadowy presences,
May pierce them on the sudden with the thorn
Of painful blindness; leaving thee forlorn,
In trembling dotage to the feeblest fright
Of conscience, for their long offended might,
285 For all thine impious proud-heart sophistries,

1. An emblem of love, because sacred to Venus. 2. Deceiving.

Unlawful magic, and enticing lies.
Corinthians! look upon that gray-beard wretch!
Mark how, possess'd, his lashless eyelids stretch
Around his demon eyes! Corinthians, see!
290 My sweet bride withers at their potency."
"Fool!" said the sophist, in an under-tone
Gruff with contempt; which a death-nighing moan
From Lycius answer'd, as heart-struck and lost,
He sank supine beside the aching ghost.
295 "Fool! Fool!" repeated he, while his eyes still Relented not, nor mov'd; "from every ill
Of life have I preserv'd thee to this day,
And shall I see thee made a serpent's prey?"
Then Lamia breath'd death breath; the sophist's eye,
300 Like a sharp spear, went through her utterly,
Keen, cruel, perceant,° stinging: she, as well piercing
As her weak hand could any meaning tell,
Motion'd him to be silent; vainly so,
He look'd and look'd again a level—No!
305 "A Serpent!" echoed he; no sooner said,
Than with a frightful scream she vanishèd:
And Lycius' arms were empty of delight,
As were his limbs of life, from that same night.
On the high couch he lay!—his friends came round—
310 Supported him—no pulse, or breath they found,
And, in its marriage robe, the heavy body wound.

July–August 1819 1820

Ode to Psyche[3]

O Goddess! hear these tuneless numbers,° wrung verses
By sweet enforcement and remembrance dear,
And pardon that thy secrets should be sung
Even into thine own soft-conchèd° ear; shell-like
5 Surely I dreamt today, or did I see
The wingèd Psyche with awakened eyes?
I wandered in a forest thoughtlessly,
And, on the sudden, fainting with surprise,
Saw two fair creatures, couchèd side by side
10 In deepest grass, beneath the whisp'ring roof
Of leaves and trembled blossoms, where there ran
A brooklet, scarce espied:
'Mid hushed, cool-rooted flowers, fragrant-eyed,
Blue, silver-white, and budded Tyrian,[4]
15 They lay calm-breathing on the bedded grass;
Their arms embracèd, and their pinions° too; wings

3. In Greek mythology, Psyche (a mortal woman, whose name means "soul") was loved in secret and in darkness by Cupid, the "wingèd" son of the goddess Venus. After many trials, Psyche was united with Cupid in immortality.
4. Purple or red, as in the "royal" dye made in ancient Tyre.

Their lips touched not, but had not bade adieu,
As if disjoinèd by soft-handed slumber,
And ready still past kisses to outnumber
20 At tender eye-dawn of aurorean° love: dawning
The wingèd boy I knew;
But who wast thou, O happy, happy dove?
His Psyche true!

O latest born and loveliest vision far
25 Of all Olympus' faded hierarchy![5]
Fairer than Phoebe's° sapphire-regioned star, the moon's
Or Vesper;° amorous glowworm[6] of the sky; the evening star
Fairer than these, though temple thou hast none,
Nor altar heaped with flowers;
30 Nor virgin choir to make delicious moan
Upon the midnight hours;
No voice, no lute, no pipe, no incense sweet
From chain-swung censer teeming;
No shrine, no grove, no oracle, no heat
35 Of pale-mouthed prophet dreaming.

O brightest! though too late for antique vows,
Too, too late for the fond believing lyre,
When holy were the haunted forest boughs,
Holy the air, the water, and the fire;
40 Yet even in these days so far retired
From happy pieties, thy lucent fans,° wings
Fluttering among the faint Olympians,
I see, and sing, by my own eyes inspired.
So let me be thy choir, and make a moan
45 Upon the midnight hours;
Thy voice, thy lute, thy pipe, thy incense sweet
From swingèd censer teeming;
Thy shrine, thy grove, thy oracle, thy heat
Of pale-mouthed prophet dreaming.

50 Yes, I will be thy priest, and build a fane° temple
In some untrodden region of my mind,
Where branchèd thoughts, new grown with pleasant pain,
Instead of pines shall murmur in the wind:
Far, far around shall those dark-clustered trees
55 Fledge the wild-ridgèd mountains steep by steep;
And there by zephyrs,° streams, and birds, and bees, breezes
The moss-lain Dryads° shall be lulled to sleep; tree nymphs
And in the midst of this wide quietness
A rosy sanctuary will I dress
60 With the wreathed trellis of a working brain,
With buds, and bells, and stars without a name,
With all the gardener Fancy e'er could feign,
Who breeding flowers, will never breed the same:

5. Lines 24–25: last of the deities to be added to the company of the Greek Olympian gods.

6. Wingless, female firefly that emits light from the abdomen.

And there shall be for thee all soft delight
65 That shadowy thought can win,
A bright torch, and a casement ope at night,
To let the warm Love[7] in!

1819 1820

Ode to a Nightingale

1

My heart aches, and a drowsy numbness pains
My sense, as though of hemlock[8] I had drunk,
Or emptied some dull opiate to the drains
One minute past, and Lethe-wards[9] had sunk:
5 'Tis not through envy of thy happy lot,
But being too happy in thine happiness—
That thou, light-wingèd Dryad° of the trees, nymph
In some melodious plot
Of beechen green, and shadows numberless,
10 Singest of summer in full-throated ease.

2

O, for a draught of vintage! that hath been Cooled a long age in the deep-delvèd earth,
Tasting of Flora[1] and the country green,
Dance, and Provençal song,[2] and sunburnt mirth!
15 O for a beaker full of the warm South,
Full of the true, the blushful Hippocrene,[3]
With beaded bubbles winking at the brim,
And purple-stainèd mouth;
That I might drink, and leave the world unseen,
20 And with thee fade away into the forest dim:

3

Fade far away, dissolve, and quite forget
What thou among the leaves hast never known,
The weariness, the fever, and the fret
Here, where men sit and hear each other groan;
25 Where palsy shakes a few, sad, last gray hairs,
Where youth grows pale, and specter-thin, and dies,
Where but to think is to be full of sorrow
And leaden-eyed despairs,
Where Beauty cannot keep her lustrous eyes,
30 Or new Love pine at them beyond tomorrow.

7. I.e., Cupid.
8. Opiate made from a poisonous herb.
9. Towards the river Lethe, whose waters in Hades bring the dead forgetfulness.
1. Roman goddess of springtime and flowers.
2. Of the late medieval troubadours of Provence, in southern France.
3. The fountain of the Muses (goddesses of poetry and the arts) on Mt. Helicon, in Greece; its waters induce poetic inspiration.

4

Away! away! for I will fly to thee,
  Not charioted by Bacchus and his pards,[4]
But on the viewless° wings of Poesy, invisible
  Though the dull brain perplexes and retards:
35 Already with thee! tender is the night,
  And haply the Queen-Moon is on her throne,
    Clustered around by all her starry Fays;° fairies
      But here there is no light,
  Save what from heaven is with the breezes blown 40 Through verdurous° glooms and winding mossy ways. green-leaved

5

I cannot see what flowers are at my feet,
  Nor what soft incense hangs upon the boughs,
But, in embalmèd° darkness, guess each sweet perfumed
  Wherewith the seasonable month endows
45 The grass, the thicket, and the fruit tree wild;
  White hawthorn, and the pastoral eglantine;[5]
    Fast fading violets covered up in leaves;
      And mid-May's eldest child,
  The coming musk-rose, full of dewy wine,
50 The murmurous haunt of flies on summer eves.

6

Darkling° I listen; and for many a time in darkness
  I have been half in love with easeful Death,
Called him soft names in many a musèd rhyme,
  To take into the air my quiet breath;
55 Now more than ever seems it rich to die,
  To cease upon the midnight with no pain,
    While thou art pouring forth thy soul abroad
      In such an ecstasy!
  Still wouldst thou sing, and I have ears in vain—
60 To thy high requiem become a sod.

7

Thou wast not born for death, immortal Bird!
  No hungry generations tread thee down;
The voice I hear this passing night was heard
  In ancient days by emperor and clown:
65 Perhaps the selfsame song that found a path
  Through the sad heart of Ruth,[6] when, sick for home,
    She stood in tears amid the alien corn;
      The same that ofttimes hath
  Charmed magic casements, opening on the foam
70 Of perilous seas, in faery lands forlorn.

4. Leopards, drawing the chariot of Bacchus, god of wine.
5. Sweetbrier; wood roses.
6. In the Hebrew Scriptures, a woman of great loyalty and modesty who, as a stranger in Judah, won a husband while gleaning in the barley fields ("the alien corn," line 67).

8

Forlorn! the very word is like a bell
To toll me back from thee to my sole self!
Adieu! the fancy cannot cheat so well
As she is famed to do, deceiving elf.
75 Adieu! adieu! thy plaintive anthem fades
Past the near meadows, over the still stream,
Up the hill side; and now 'tis buried deep
In the next valley-glades:
Was it a vision, or a waking dream?
80 Fled is that music:—Do I wake or sleep?

May 1819 1820

Ode on Melancholy

1

No, no, go not to Lethe,[7] neither twist
Wolfsbane, tight-rooted, for its poisonous wine;
Nor suffer thy pale forehead to be kissed
By nightshade, ruby grape of Proserpine;[8]
5 Make not your rosary of yew-berries,[9]
Nor let the beetle, nor the death-moth be
Your mournful Psyche, nor the downy owl[1]
A partner in your sorrow's mysteries;
For shade to shade will come too drowsily,
10 And drown the wakeful anguish of the soul.

2

But when the melancholy fit shall fall
Sudden from heaven like a weeping cloud,
That fosters the droop-headed flowers all,
And hides the green hill in an April shroud;
15 Then glut thy sorrow on a morning rose,
Or on the rainbow of the salt sand-wave,
Or on the wealth of globèd peonies;
Or if thy mistress some rich anger shows,
Imprison her soft hand, and let her rave,
20 And feed deep, deep upon her peerless eyes.

3

She[2] dwells with Beauty—Beauty that must die;
And Joy, whose hand is ever at his lips
Bidding adieu; and aching Pleasure nigh,

7. River in Hades, the waters of which bring forgetfulness to the dead.
8. Queen of Hades. "Nightshade" and "wolfsbane" (line 2) are poisonous herbs from which sedatives and opiates were extracted.
9. Symbols of mourning; often growing in cemeteries.
1. Beetles, moths, and owls traditionally have been associated with darkness, death, and burial; Psyche (the soul) sometimes has been symbolized by a moth that escapes the mouth in sleep or at death.
2. The goddess Melancholy.

Turning to Poison while the bee-mouth sips:
25 Aye, in the very temple of Delight
Veiled Melancholy has her sov'reign shrine,
Though seen of none save him whose strenuous tongue
Can burst Joy's grape against his palate fine;° sensitive
His soul shall taste the sadness of her might,
And be among her cloudy trophies[3] hung.

May 1819 1820

Ode on a Grecian Urn

1

Thou still unravished bride of quietness,
Thou foster child of silence and slow time,
Sylvan° historian, who canst thus express rustic
A flowery tale more sweetly than our rhyme:
5 What leaf-fringed legend haunts about thy shape
Of deities or mortals, or of both,
In Tempe or the dales of Arcady?[4]
What men or gods are these? What maidens loath?
What mad pursuit? What struggle to escape?
10 What pipes and timbrels? What wild ecstasy?

2

Heard melodies are sweet, but those unheard
Are sweeter; therefore, ye soft pipes, play on;
Not to the sensual ear, but, more endeared,
Pipe to the spirit ditties of no tone:
15 Fair youth, beneath the trees, thou canst not leave
Thy song, nor ever can those trees be bare;
Bold Lover, never, never canst thou kiss,
Though winning near the goal—yet, do not grieve;
She cannot fade, though thou hast not thy bliss,
20 Forever wilt thou love, and she be fair!

3

Ah, happy, happy boughs! that cannot shed
Your leaves, nor ever bid the Spring adieu;
And, happy melodist, unweariëd,
Forever piping songs forever new;
25 More happy love! more happy, happy love!
Forever warm and still to be enjoyed,
Forever panting, and forever young;
All breathing human passion far above,
That leaves a heart high-sorrowful and cloyed,
30 A burning forehead, and a parching tongue.

3. Symbols of victory, such as banners, hung in religious shrines.

4. Tempe and Arcady (or Arcadia), in Greece, are traditional symbols of perfect pastoral landscapes.

4

Who are these coming to the sacrifice?
  To what green altar, O mysterious priest,
Lead'st thou that heifer lowing at the skies,
  And all her silken flanks with garlands dressed?
35 What little town by river or sea shore,
  Or mountain-built with peaceful citadel,
    Is emptied of this folk, this pious morn?
And, little town, thy streets forevermore
  Will silent be; and not a soul to tell
40 Why thou art desolate, can e'er return.

5

O Attic[5] shape! Fair attitude! with brede° woven pattern
  Of marble men and maidens overwrought,
With forest branches and the trodden weed;
  Thou, silent form, dost tease us out of thought 45 As doth eternity: Cold Pastoral!
  When old age shall this generation waste,
    Thou shalt remain, in midst of other woe
  Than ours, a friend to man, to whom thou say'st,
"Beauty is truth, truth beauty,"[6]—that is all 50 Ye know on earth, and all ye need to know.

May 1819 1820

To Autumn

1

Season of mists and mellow fruitfulness,
  Close bosom-friend of the maturing sun;
Conspiring with him how to load and bless
  With fruit the vines that round the thatch-eaves run;
5 To bend with apples the mossed cottage-trees,
  And fill all fruit with ripeness to the core;
    To swell the gourd, and plump the hazel shells
  With a sweet kernel; to set budding more,
And still more, later flowers for the bees,
10 Until they think warm days will never cease,
    For Summer has o'er-brimmed their clammy cells.

2

Who hath not seen thee oft amid thy store?
  Sometimes whoever seeks abroad may find
Thee sitting careless on a granary floor,
15 Thy hair soft-lifted by the winnowing[7] wind;

5. Greek, especially Athenian.
6. The quotation marks around this phrase are absent from some other versions also having good authority. This discrepancy has led some readers to ascribe only this phrase to the voice of the urn; others ascribe to the urn the whole of the two concluding lines.
7. Blowing the grain clear of the lighter chaff.

Or on a half-reaped furrow sound asleep,
Drowsed with the fume of poppies, while thy hook[8]
Spares the next swath and all its twinèd flowers:
And sometimes like a gleaner[9] thou dost keep 20 Steady thy laden head across a brook;
Or by a cider-press, with patient look,
Thou watchest the last oozings hours by hours.

3

Where are the songs of Spring? Aye, where are they?
Think not of them, thou hast thy music too—
25 While barrèd clouds bloom the soft-dying day,
And touch the stubble-plains with rosy hue;
Then in a wailful choir the small gnats mourn
Among the river sallows,° borne aloft low-growing willows
Or sinking as the light wind lives or dies;
30 And full-grown lambs loud bleat from hilly bourn;° field
Hedge crickets sing; and now with treble soft
The redbreast whistles from a garden-croft;[1]
And gathering swallows twitter in the skies.

September 19, 1819 1820

Bright Star

Bright star, would I were steadfast as thou art—
Not in lone splendor hung aloft the night
And watching, with eternal lids apart,
Like nature's patient, sleepless Eremite,° hermit; devotee
5 The moving waters at their priestlike task
Of pure ablution[2] round earth's human shores,
Or gazing on the new soft fallen mask
Of snow upon the mountains and the moors—
No—yet still steadfast, still unchangeable,
10 Pillowed upon my fair love's ripening breast,
To feel forever its soft fall and swell,
Awake forever in a sweet unrest,
Still, still to hear her tender-taken breath,
And so live ever—or else swoon to death.

1819 1838

This Living Hand[3]

This living hand, now warm and capable
Of earnest grasping, would, if it were cold

8. Small, curved blade for cutting grain; sickle.
9. Someone who gathers up ears of corn after reapers have passed.
1. Small field, as for a vegetable garden, near a house.
2. Washing as part of a religious ritual.
3. Written on a manuscript page of Keats's unfinished poem, "The Cap and Bells."

And in the icy silence of the tomb,
So haunt thy days and chill thy dreaming nights
5 That thou wouldst wish thine own heart dry of blood
So in my veins red life might stream again,
And thou be conscience-calmed—see here it is—
I hold it towards you.

1819? 1898

RALPH WALDO EMERSON
1803–1882

Concord Hymn

Sung at the Completion of the Battle Monument,[1] July 4, 1837

By the rude° bridge that arched the flood, roughly made
Their flag to April's breeze unfurled,
Here once the embattled farmers stood
And fired the shot heard round the world.

5 The foe long since in silence slept;
Alike the conqueror silent sleeps;
And Time the ruined bridge has swept
Down the dark stream which seaward creeps.

On this green bank, by this soft stream,
10 We set to-day a votive° stone; offered in gratitude
That memory may their deed redeem,
When, like our sires, our sons are gone.

Spirit, that made those heroes dare
To die, and leave their children free,
15 Bid Time and Nature gently spare
The shaft we raise to them and thee.

1837, 1876

The Rhodora[2]

On Being Asked, Whence Is the Flower?

In May, when sea-winds pierced our solitudes,
I found the fresh Rhodora in the woods,
Spreading its leafless blooms in a damp nook,
To please the desert and the sluggish brook.
5 The purple petals, fallen in the pool,
Made the black water with their beauty gay;

1. Commemorating the battles of Lexington and Concord, April 19, 1775.

2. An azalea native to the northeastern United States.

Here might the red-bird come his plumes to cool,
And court the flower that cheapens his array.
Rhodora! if the sages ask thee why
10 This charm is wasted on the earth and sky,
Tell them, dear, that if eyes were made for seeing,
Then Beauty is its own excuse for being:
Why thou wert there, O rival of the rose!
I never thought to ask, I never knew;
15 But, in my simple ignorance, suppose
The self-same Power that brought me there brought you.

1834 1839, 1847

The Snow-Storm

Announced by all the trumpets of the sky,
Arrives the snow, and, driving o'er the fields,
Seems nowhere to alight: the whited air
Hides hills and woods, the river, and the heaven,
5 And veils the farmhouse at the garden's end.
The sled and traveler stopped, the courier's feet
Delayed, all friends shut out, the housemates sit Around the radiant fireplace, enclosed
In a tumultuous privacy of storm.

10 Come see the north wind's masonry.
Out of an unseen quarry evermore
Furnished with tile, the fierce artificer
Curves his white bastions with projected roof
Round every windward stake, or tree, or door.
15 Speeding, the myriad-handed, his wild work
So fanciful, so savage, nought cares he
For number or proportion. Mockingly,
On coop or kennel he hangs Parian[3] wreaths;
A swan-like form invests the hidden thorn;
20 Fills up the farmer's lane from wall to wall, Maugre° the farmer's sighs; and, at the gate, in spite of
A tapering turret overtops the work.
And when his hours are numbered, and the world
Is all his own, retiring, as he were not,
25 Leaves, when the sun appears, astonished Art
To mimic in slow structures, stone by stone,
Built in an age, the mad wind's night-work,
The frolic architecture of the snow.

1841, 1847

3. I.e., like the fine white marble from the Greek island of Paros.

Ode

Inscribed to W. H. Channing[4]

Though loath to grieve
The evil time's sole patriot,
I cannot leave
My honied thought
5 For the priest's cant,
Or statesman's rant.

If I refuse
My study for their politique,
Which at the best is trick,
10 The angry Muse° source of inspiration
Puts confusion in my brain.

But who is he that prates
Of the culture of mankind,
Of better arts and life?
15 Go, blindworm, go,
Behold the famous States
Harrying Mexico
With rifle and with knife![5]

Or who, with accent bolder,
20 Dare praise the freedom-loving mountaineer?
I found by thee, O rushing Contoocook![6]
And in thy valleys, Agiochook![7]
The jackals of the negro-holder.

The God who made New Hampshire
25 Taunted the lofty land
With little men;—
Small bat and wren
House in the oak:—
If earth-fire cleave
30 The upheaved land, and bury the folk,
The southern crocodile would grieve.
Virtue palters;° Right is hence; hesitates, equivocates
Freedom praised, but hid;
Funeral eloquence
35 Rattles the coffin-lid.

4. William Henry Channing (1810–1884), American clergyman and abolitionist, who urged Emerson to involve himself more actively in the antislavery movement.
5. A reference to the war between the United States and Mexico (1846–48), chiefly over the question of the boundaries of Texas. Emerson was among those Americans who believed the United States was engaged in an immoral, imperialist enterprise that would extend slaveholding territory.
6. Part of the Merrimack River in New Hampshire.
7. The White Mountains of New Hampshire.

What boots° thy zeal, profits
O glowing friend,
That would indignant rend
The northland from the south?
40 Wherefore? to what good end?
Boston Bay and Bunker Hill[8]
Would serve things still;—
Things are of the snake.

The horseman serves the horse,
45 The neatherd° serves the neat,° cowherd / cow
The merchant serves the purse,
The eater serves his meat;
'Tis the day of the chattel,
Web to weave, and corn to grind;
50 Things are in the saddle,
And ride mankind.

There are two laws discrete,
Not reconciled,—
Law for man, and law for things;
55 The last builds town and fleet,
But it runs wild,
And doth the man unking.

'Tis fit the forest fall,
The steep be graded,
60 The mountain tunnelled,
The sand shaded,
The orchard planted,
The glebe° tilled, plot of land
The prairie granted,
65 The steamer built.

Let man serve law for man;
Live for friendship, live for love,
For truth's and harmony's behoof;° benefit
The state may follow how it can,
70 As Olympus follows Jove.[9]

Yet do not I implore
The wrinkled shopman to my surrounding woods,
Nor bid the unwilling senator
Ask votes of thrushes in the solitudes.
75 Every one to his chosen work;—
Foolish hands may mix and mar;

8. Hill in Charlestown, Massachusetts, site of the first major battle of the American Revolutionary War, on June 17, 1775. Boston Bay: site of the Boston Tea Party, on December 16, 1773, an incident that helped provoke the Revolutionary War.
9. Or Jupiter, chief of the Roman gods (Greek Zeus), who lived on Mt. Olympus.

Wise and sure the issues are.
Round they roll till dark is light,
Sex to sex, and even to odd;—
80 The over-god
Who marries Right to Might,
Who peoples, unpeoples,—
He who exterminates
Races by stronger races,
85 Black by white faces,—
Knows to bring honey
Out of the lion;[1]
Grafts gentlest scion
On pirate and Turk.

90 The Cossack eats Poland,[2]
Like stolen fruit;
Her last noble is ruined,
Her last poet mute:
Straight, into double band
95 The victors divide;
Half for freedom strike and stand;—
The astonished Muse finds thousands at her side.

1847

Intellect[3]

Rule which by obeying grows
Knowledge not its fountain knows
Wave removing whom it bears
From the shores which he compares 5 Adding wings thro° things to range through
Makes him to his own blood strange

1851 1903

Brahma[4]

If the red slayer think he slays,
Or if the slain think he is slain,
They know not well the subtle ways
I keep, and pass, and turn again.

1. Lines 83–87 allude to Samson, who killed a lion and returned later to find the carcass filled with honey (Judges 14.5–10).
2. Russian military despotism, established in Poland after the popular insurrections of 1830–31, was challenged by a new Polish uprising (lines 94–96) in 1846.
3. An untitled notebook entry of Emerson's; the title was added posthumously in 1903.
4. The supreme god of Hindu mythology; in later theological developments, the divine reality, once thought to comprehend the entire universe.

5 Far or forgot to me is near;
Shadow and sunlight are the same;
The vanished gods to me appear;
And one to me are shame and fame.

They reckon ill who leave me out;
10 When me they fly, I am the wings;
I am the doubter and the doubt,
And I the hymn the Brahmin sings.

The strong gods pine for my abode,
And pine in vain the sacred Seven,[5]
15 But thou, meek lover of the good!
Find me, and turn thy back on heaven.

1856 1857, 1867

Days

Daughters of Time, the hypocritic Days,
Muffled and dumb like barefoot dervishes,° whirling dancers
And marching single in an endless file,
Bring diadems and fagots[6] in their hands.
5 To each they offer gifts after his will,
Bread, kingdom, stars, and sky that holds them all.
I, in my pleachéd[7] garden, watched the pomp,
Forgot my morning wishes, hastily
Took a few herbs and apples, and the Day
10 Turned and departed silent. I, too late,
Under her solemn fillet° saw the scorn. hair band

1857, 1867

Fate

Her planted eye to-day controls,
Is in the morrow most at home,
And sternly calls to being souls
That curse her when they come.

1867

5. Perhaps the seven saints high in the Brahman hierarchy but lesser than Brahma.
6. Bundles of sticks. Diadems: crowns.
7. Entwined or plaited.

ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING
1806–1861

From Sonnets from the Portuguese[1]

1

I thought once how Theocritus had sung[2]
  Of the sweet years, the dear and wished-for years,
  Who each one in a gracious hand appears
To bear a gift for mortals, old or young:
5 And, as I mused it in his antique tongue,
  I saw, in gradual vision through my tears,
  The sweet, sad years, the melancholy years,
Those of my own life, who by turns had flung
A shadow across me. Straightway I was 'ware,
10 So weeping, how a mystic Shape did move
Behind me, and drew me backward by the hair;[3]
  And a voice said in mastery, while I strove,—
"Guess now who holds thee?"—"Death," I said. But, there,
  The silver answer rang,—"Not Death, but Love."

43

How do I love thee? Let me count the ways.
I love thee to the depth and breadth and height
My soul can reach, when feeling out of sight
For the ends of Being and ideal Grace.
5 I love thee to the level of everyday's
Most quiet need, by sun and candle-light.
I love thee freely, as men strive for Right;
I love thee purely, as they turn from Praise.
I love thee with the passion put to use
10 In my old griefs, and with my childhood's faith.
I love thee with a love I seemed to lose
With my lost saints—I love thee with the breath,
Smiles, tears, of all my life!—and, if God choose,
I shall but love thee better after death.

1845–46 1850

1. The "Sonnets from the Portuguese" were written between 1845, when Elizabeth Barrett met Robert Browning (1812–1889; see pp. 1009–41), and 1846, when they were married. An earlier poem, "Catrina to Camoëns," in which Barrett had assumed the persona of the girl who was loved by the sixteenth-century Portuguese poet Camoëns, suggested the lightly disguising title when the sonnets were published in 1850.
2. In Idyll 15 of Theocritus, the Greek pastoral poet of the third century B.C.E., a singer describes the Hours, who have brought Adonis back from the underworld, as "the dear soft-footed Hours, slowest of all the Blessed Ones; but their coming is always longed for, and they bring something for all men."
3. In book 1 of the Iliad, just as Achilles is drawing his sword to raise it against his leader, Agamemnon, the goddess Athena, standing behind him and hence invisible to the others, catches him by his hair to warn him.

From Aurora Leigh

From Book 5

[POETS AND THE PRESENT AGE]

* * *

The critics say that epics have died out
140 With Agamemnon and the goat-nursed gods;[4]
I'll not believe it. I could never deem,
As Payne Knight[5] did (the mythic mountaineer
Who travelled higher than he was born to live,
And showed sometimes the goitre[6] in his throat
145 Discoursing of an image seen through fog),
That Homer's heroes measured twelve feet high.
They were but men:—his Helen's[7] hair turned gray
Like any plain Miss Smith's who wears a front;[8]
And Hector's infant whimpered at a plume[9]
150 As yours last Friday at a turkey-cock.
All actual heroes are essential men,
And all men possible heroes: every age,
Heroic in proportions, double-faced,
Looks backward and before, expects a morn
155 And claims an epos.° epic poem
Ay, but every age
Appears to souls who live in 't (ask Carlyle)[1]
Most unheroic. Ours, for instance, ours:
The thinkers scout it, and the poets abound
Who scorn to touch it with a finger-tip:
160 A pewter age,[2]—mixed metal, silver-washed;
An age of scum, spooned off the richer past,
An age of patches for old gabardines,[3]
An age of mere transition,[4] meaning nought
Except that what succeeds must shame it quite 165 If God please. That's wrong thinking, to my mind,
And wrong thoughts make poor poems.
Every age,
Through being beheld too close, is ill-discerned
By those who have not lived past it. We'll suppose

4. References to Greek mythological figures: Zeus, king of the gods, had been nursed by a goat; Agamemnon, a chieftain, returned from the Trojan War and was murdered by his wife, Clytemnestra.
5. Richard Payne Knight (1750–1824), a classical philologist, argued that not all of the Elgin Marbles—sculptures and architectural details brought to England from the Parthenon by Lord Elgin—were Greek.
6. An enlargement of the thyroid gland, symptomatic of a disease often caught in mountainous regions and due to a lack of iodine in the water supply.
7. Helen of Troy, the legendary beauty whose abduction led to the Trojan War.
8. A hairpiece worn by women over the forehead.
9. In book 6 of the Iliad, when the warrior Hector attempts to hold his infant son, the boy is so frightened by the crest on his father's helmet that he clings to his nurse and cries.
1. In On Heroes, Hero-Worship, and the Heroic in History (1841), the Scottish historian and essayist Thomas Carlyle (1795–1881) called for a renewed interest in heroism.
2. I.e., a debased time; refers to the practice, initiated by the Greek poet Hesiod (first century B.C.E.), of assigning the names of increasingly less valuable metals to increasingly less elevated periods in history, such as the Golden Age, the Silver Age, and the Bronze Age.
3. Coats or other garments made of gabardine; also, the smocks of English laborers.
4. "An age of transition" is a quotation from The Spirit of the Age (1831), by the English philosopher and economist John Stuart Mill (1806–1873).

Mount Athos carved, as Alexander schemed,
170 To some colossal statue of a man.[5]
The peasants, gathering brushwood in his ear,
Had guessed as little as the browsing goats
Of form or feature of humanity
Up there,—in fact, had traveled five miles off
175 Or ere the giant image broke on them,
Full human profile, nose and chin distinct,
Mouth, muttering rhythms of silence up the sky
And fed at evening with the blood of suns;
Grand torso,—hand, that flung perpetually
180 The largesse° of a silver river down bounty
To all the country pastures. 'Tis even thus
With times we live in,—evermore too great
To be apprehended near.
But poets should
Exert a double vision; should have eyes
185 To see near things as comprehensively
As if afar they took their point of sight,
And distant things as intimately deep
As if they touched them. Let us strive for this.
I do distrust the poet who discerns
190 No character or glory in his times,
And trundles back his soul five hundred years,
Past moat and drawbridge, into a castle-court,
To sing—oh, not of lizard or of toad
Alive i' the ditch there,—'twere excusable,
195 But of some black chief, half knight, half sheep-lifter,
Some beauteous dame, half chattel and half queen,
As dead as must be, for the greater part,
The poems made on their chivalric bones;
And that's no wonder: death inherits death.

200 Nay, if there's room for poets in this world
A little overgrown (I think there is),
Their sole work is to represent the age,
Their age, not Charlemagne's,[6]—this live, throbbing age,
That brawls, cheats, maddens, calculates, aspires,
205 And spends more passion, more heroic heat,
Betwixt the mirrors of its drawing-rooms,
Than Roland[7] with his knights at Roncesvalles.
To flinch from modern varnish, coat or flounce,
Cry out for togas and the picturesque,
210 Is fatal,—foolish too. King Arthur's self
Was commonplace to Lady Guenever;
And Camelot to minstrels seemed as flat
As Fleet Street[8] to our poets.

5. According to legend, Alexander the Great considered a proposal by the sculptor Dinocrates to carve Mt. Athos into the statue of a conqueror. In his left hand this massive figure would have held a city, while in his right hand he would have held a basin to catch the waters of the region and to irrigate the pastures below.

6. Charles the Great, or Charles I (742–814), a Frankish king and the ruler of a European empire.

7. Hero of the medieval French epic Chanson de Roland.

8. Street in London, center of the London newspaper- and book-publishing district.

Never flinch,
But still, unscrupulously epic, catch
215 Upon the burning lava of a song
The full-veined, heaving, double-breasted Age:
That, when the next shall come, the men of that May touch the impress with reverent hand, and say
"Behold,—behold the paps° we all have sucked! breasts
220 This bosom seems to beat still, or at least
It sets ours beating: this is living art,
Which thus presents and thus records true life."

* * *

1853–56 1857

A Musical Instrument

What was he doing, the great god Pan,[9]
Down in the reeds by the river?
Spreading ruin and scattering ban,° baleful influence
Splashing and paddling with hoofs of a goat,
5 And breaking the golden lilies afloat
With the dragonfly on the river.

He tore out a reed, the great god Pan,
From the deep cool bed of the river;
The limpid water turbidly ran,
10 And the broken lilies a-dying lay,
And the dragonfly had fled away,
Ere he brought it out of the river.

High on the shore sat the great god Pan
While turbidly flowed the river;
15 And hacked and hewed as a great god can,
With his hard bleak steel at the patient reed,
Till there was not a sign of the leaf indeed
To prove it fresh from the river.

He cut it short, did the great god Pan
20 (How tall it stood in the river!),
Then drew the pith, like the heart of a man,
Steadily from the outside ring,
And notched the poor dry empty thing
In holes, as he sat by the river.

9. In Greek mythology, god of pastures, flocks, and shepherds, in shape half goat and half human. He played the reed flute, and later pastoral poets made him the patron of their art. One of his loves was the nymph, or minor nature goddess, Syrinx, who tried to escape him and sought help from the river nymphs. They turned her into a reed bed, and from a reed Pan made his flute.

25 "This is the way," laughed the great god Pan (Laughed while he sat by the river),
"The only way, since gods began
To make sweet music, they could succeed."
Then, dropping his mouth to a hole in the reed,
30 He blew in power by the river.

Sweet, sweet, sweet, O Pan!
Piercing sweet by the river!
Blinding sweet, O great god Pan!
The sun on the hill forgot to die,
35 And the lilies revived, and the dragonfly
Came back to dream on the river.

Yet half a beast is the great god Pan,
To laugh as he sits by the river,
Making a poet out of a man;
40 The true gods sigh for the cost and pain—
For the reed which grows nevermore again
As a reed with the reeds in the river.

1860 1862

HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW
1807–1882

From Evangeline[1]

This is the forest primeval. The murmuring pines and the hemlocks,
Bearded with moss, and in garments green, indistinct in the twilight,
Stand like Druids of eld,[2] with voices sad and prophetic,
Stand like harpers hoar,[3] with beards that rest on their bosoms.
5 Loud from its rocky caverns, the deep-voiced neighbouring ocean
Speaks, and in accents disconsolate answers the wail of the forest.

This is the forest primeval; but where are the hearts that beneath it
Leaped like the roe, when he hears in the woodland the voice of the huntsman?
Where is the thatch-roofed village, the home of Acadian farmers,—
10 Men whose lives glided on like rivers that water the woodlands,

1. Some introductory verses to a long poem, a tale of divided lovers, based on a true story told to the American writer Nathaniel Hawthorne (1804–1864), and by him to Longfellow. The poem opens in Nova Scotia, Canada (where Longfellow never visited), a region often called Acadia or Acadie, which France ceded to Great Britain in 1713. When the French and Indian War broke out, the French inhabitants who refused to take an oath of allegiance were shipped off; about three thousand were deported in 1755, like those of the village of Grand Pré. The poem is credited with having provoked a wider interest in English hexameter.
2. Old. Druids: members of a prophetic priesthood in ancient Gaul, Britain, and Ireland.
3. Ancient harpists.

Darkened by shadows of earth, but reflecting an image of heaven?
Waste are those pleasant farms, and the farmers forever departed!
Scattered like dust and leaves, when the mighty blasts of October Seize them, and whirl them aloft, and sprinkle them far o'er the ocean.
15 Naught but tradition remains of the beautiful village of Grand-Pré.

1847

The Jewish Cemetery at Newport[4]

How strange it seems! These Hebrews in their graves,
  Close by the street of this fair seaport town,
Silent beside the never-silent waves,
  At rest in all this moving up and down!

5 The trees are white with dust, that o'er their sleep
  Wave their broad curtains in the southwind's breath,
While underneath these leafy tents they keep
  The long, mysterious Exodus[5] of Death.

And these sepulchral stones, so old and brown,
10 That pave with level flags their burial-place,
Seem like the tablets of the Law, thrown down
  And broken by Moses at the mountain's base.[6]

The very names recorded here are strange,
  Of foreign accent, and of different climes;
15 Alvares and Rivera[7] interchange
  With Abraham and Jacob of old times.

"Blessed be God! for he created Death!"
  The mourners said, "and Death is rest and peace;"
Then added, in the certainty of faith,
20 "And giveth Life that nevermore shall cease."

Closed are the portals of their Synagogue,
  No Psalms of David now the silence break,
No Rabbi reads the ancient Decalogue° Ten Commandments
  In the grand dialect the Prophets spake.

25 Gone are the living, but the dead remain,
  And not neglected; for a hand unseen,
Scattering its bounty, like a summer rain,
  Still keeps their graves and their remembrance green.

4. The oldest synagogue in the United States is in Newport, Rhode Island.
5. The flight of Moses and the Israelites from Egypt.
6. Moses, angered by the disobedience of the Israelites, broke the tablets of the law that God had given them (see Exodus 32.19).
7. Many of the early Jewish families in New England were from Spain and Portugal.

How came they here? What burst of Christian hate,
30 What persecution, merciless and blind,
Drove o'er the sea—that desert desolate—
These Ishmaels and Hagars of mankind?[8]

They lived in narrow streets and lanes obscure,
Ghetto and Judenstrass,[9] in mirk and mire;
35 Taught in the school of patience to endure
The life of anguish and the death of fire.

All their lives long, with the unleavened bread
And bitter herbs of exile and its fears,
The wasting famine of the heart they fed,
40 And slaked its thirst with marah[1] of their tears.

Anathema maranatha![2] was the cry
That rang from town to town, from street to street;
At every gate the accursed Mordecai[3]
Was mocked and jeered, and spurned by Christian feet.

45 Pride and humiliation hand in hand
Walked with them through the world where'er they went;
Trampled and beaten were they as the sand,
And yet unshaken as the continent.

For in the background figures vague and vast 50 Of patriarchs and of prophets rose sublime,
And all the great traditions of the Past
They saw reflected in the coming time.

And thus forever with reverted look
The mystic volume of the world they read,
55 Spelling it backward, like a Hebrew book,[4]
Till life became a Legend of the Dead.

But ah! what once has been shall be no more!
The groaning earth in travail and in pain
Brings forth its races, but does not restore,
60 And the dead nations never rise again.

1852 1854, 1858

8. Hagar, concubine of Abraham, wandered in the desert with Ishmael, her son by Abraham, after she was sent away by Abraham and Sarah (see Genesis 21.9–21). In many countries, Jews faced legal restrictions as well as prejudice.
9. Street of Jews (German). Ghetto: originally, the section of a city in which Jews were forced to live.
1. The Hebrew word for "bitter" or "bitterness," and the name of a bitter spring the fleeing Israelites found (Exodus 15.23). Salt water (symbolizing tears), unleavened bread, and bitter herbs are all part of the Passover meal, which commemorates the Exodus.
2. A Greek-Aramaic phrase signifying a terrible curse, applied to those who "love not the Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Corinthians 16.22), and later specifically to the Jews.
3. When Haman, the favored advisor of Ahasuerus (Xerxes), king of Persia, sought to destroy Mordecai and the rest of the Jews, Mordecai stood at the king's gate crying out against the persecution (see Esther 3–4).
4. Hebrew is read from right to left.

From The Song of Hiawatha[5]

From III. Hiawatha's Childhood

By the shores of Gitche Gumee,[6]
65 By the shining Big-Sea-Water,
Stood the wigwam of Nokomis,[7]
Daughter of the Moon, Nokomis.
Dark behind it rose the forest,
Rose the black and gloomy pine-trees,
70 Rose the firs with cones upon them;
Bright before it beat the water,
Beat the clear and sunny water,
Beat the shining Big-Sea-Water.
There the wrinkled old Nokomis
75 Nursed the little Hiawatha,
Rocked him in his linden cradle,
Bedded soft in moss and rushes,
Safely bound with reindeer sinews;
Stilled his fretful wail by saying,
80 "Hush! the Naked Bear[8] will hear thee!"
Lulled him into slumber, singing,
"Ewa-yea!° my little owlet! lullaby
Who is this, that lights the wigwam?
With his great eyes lights the wigwam?
85 Ewa-yea! my little owlet!"
Many things Nokomis taught him
Of the stars that shine in heaven;
Showed him Ishkoodah,° the comet, fire
Ishkoodah, with fiery tresses;
90 Showed the Death-Dance of the spirits,
Warriors with their plumes and war-clubs,
Flaring far away to northward
In the frosty nights of Winter;
Showed the broad white road in heaven,
95 Pathway of the ghosts, the shadows,
Running straight across the heavens,
Crowded with the ghosts, the shadows.
At the door on summer evenings
Sat the little Hiawatha;
100 Heard the whispering of the pine-trees,
Heard the lapping of the waters,
Sounds of music, words of wonder;
"Minne-wawa!" said the pine-trees,
"Mudway-aushka!" said the water.

5. He Makes Rivers (Ojibwa); a Native American cultural hero (fl. ca. 1440 or ca. 1550), perhaps a chief of the Mohawk tribe or the Onondaga tribe; he might also be a composite of several people. Longfellow added to the confusion about Hiawatha's identity by giving the name to the title character of this long poem, which actually recounts the legend of the Algonquian mythic hero Nanabozho. Phenomenally popular during Longfellow's lifetime, Hiawatha employs the trochaic tetrameter of the Finnish epic Kalevala.
6. Big Sea Water (Ojibwa); Lake Superior.
7. Hiawatha's grandmother, who raises him upon the death of his mother, Wenonah.
8. In Native American legend, equivalent to the bogeyman (or boogeyman).

105 Saw the fire-fly, Wah-wah-taysee,
Flitting through the dusk of evening,
With the twinkle of its candle
Lighting up the brakes and bushes,
And he sang the song of children,
110 Sang the song Nokomis taught him:
"Wah-wah-taysee, little fire-fly,
Little, flitting, white-fire insect,
Little, dancing, white-fire creature,
Light me with your little candle,
115 Ere upon my bed I lay me,
Ere in sleep I close my eyelids!"
Saw the moon rise from the water
Rippling, rounding from the water,
Saw the flecks and shadows on it,
120 Whispered, "What is that, Nokomis?"
And the good Nokomis answered:
"Once a warrior, very angry,
Seized his grandmother, and threw her
Up into the sky at midnight;
125 Right against the moon he threw her;
'Tis her body that you see there."
Saw the rainbow in the heaven,
In the eastern sky, the rainbow,
Whispered, "What is that, Nokomis?"
130 And the good Nokomis answered:
" 'T is the heaven of flowers you see there
All the wild-flowers of the forest,
All the lilies of the prairie,
When on earth they fade and perish,
135 Blossom in that heaven above us."
When he heard the owls at midnight,
Hooting, laughing in the forest,
"What is that?" he cried in terror,
"What is that," he said, "Nokomis?"
140 And the good Nokomis answered:
"That is but the owl and owlet,
Talking in their native language,
Talking, scolding at each other."
Then the little Hiawatha
145 Learned of every bird its language,
Learned their names and all their secrets
How they built their nests in Summer,
Where they hid themselves in Winter,
Talked with them whene'er he met them,
150 Called them "Hiawatha's Chickens."
Of all beasts he learned the language,
Learned their names and all their secrets,
How the beavers built their lodges,
Where the squirrels hid their acorns,
155 How the reindeer ran so swiftly,
Why the rabbit was so timid,

Talked with them whene'er he met them,
Called them "Hiawatha's Brothers."

* * *

1855

Snow-Flakes

Out of the bosom of the Air,
Out of the cloud-folds of her garments shaken,
Over the woodlands brown and bare,
Over the harvest-fields forsaken,
5 Silent, and soft, and slow
Descends the snow.

Even as our cloudy fancies take
Suddenly shape in some divine expression,
Even as the troubled heart doth make 10 In the white countenance confession,
The troubled sky reveals
The grief it feels.

This is the poem of the air,
Slowly in silent syllables recorded;
15 This is the secret of despair,
Long in its cloudy bosom hoarded,
Now whispered and revealed
To wood and field.

1863

The Cross of Snow[9]

In the long, sleepless watches of the night,
A gentle face—the face of one long dead—
Looks at me from the wall, where round its head
The night-lamp casts a halo of pale light.
5 Here in this room she died; and soul more white Never through martyrdom of fire was led
To its repose; nor can in books be read
The legend of a life more benedight.° blessed
There is a mountain in the distant West
10 That, sun-defying, in its deep ravines
Displays a cross of snow upon its side.
Such is the cross I wear upon my breast

9. Longfellow's second wife, Fanny, died in 1861 when her dress caught fire; he too was burned trying to save her. The poem was found in his portfolio after his death.

These eighteen years, through all the changing scenes
And seasons, changeless since the day she died.

1879 1886

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER
1807–1892

Telling the Bees[1]

Here is the place; right over the hill
  Runs the path I took;
You can see the gap in the old wall still,
  And the stepping-stones in the shallow brook.

5 There is the house, with the gate red-barred,
  And the poplars tall;
And the barn's brown length, and the cattle-yard,
  And the white horns tossing above the wall.

There are the beehives ranged in the sun;
10 And down by the brink
Of the brook are her poor flowers, weed-o'errun,
  Pansy and daffodil, rose and pink.

A year has gone, as the tortoise goes,
  Heavy and slow;
15 And the same rose blows, and the same sun glows,
  And the same brook sings of a year ago.

There's the same sweet clover-smell in the breeze;
  And the June sun warm
Tangles his wings of fire in the trees,
20 Setting, as then, over Fernside farm.

I mind me how with a lover's care
  From my Sunday coat
I brushed off the burrs, and smoothed my hair,
  And cooked at the brookside my brow and throat.

25 Since we parted, a month had passed,—
  To love, a year;
Down through the beeches I looked at last
  On the little red gate and the well-sweep near.

1. Whittier's note explains the former custom in rural New England of informing the bees of the death of a family member and dressing their hives in mourning to prevent them from leaving the hives for a new home.

I can see it all now,—the slantwise rain
30 Of light through the leaves,
The sundown's blaze on her window-pane,
The bloom of her roses under the eaves.

Just the same as a month before,—
The house and the trees,
35 The barn's brown gable, the vine by the door,—
Nothing changed but the hives of bees.

Before them, under the garden wall,
Forward and back,
Went drearily singing the chore-girl small,
40 Draping each hive with a shred of black.

Trembling, I listened: the summer sun
Had the chill of snow;
For I knew she was telling the bees of one
Gone on the journey we all must go!

45 Then I said to myself, "My Mary weeps
For the dead to-day:
Haply her blind old grandsire sleeps
The fret and the pain of his age away."

But her dog whined low; on the doorway sill,
50 With his cane to his chin,
The old man sat; and the chore-girl still Sang to the bees stealing out and in.

And the song she was singing ever since
In my ear sounds on:—
55 "Stay at home, pretty bees, fly not hence!
Mistress Mary is dead and gone!"

1858

From Snowbound: A Winter Idyl

155 Shut in from all the world without
We sat the clean-winged hearth about,
Content to let the north-wind roar
In baffled rage at pane and door,
While the red logs before us beat
160 The frost-line back with tropic heat;
And ever, when a louder blast
Shook beam and rafter as it passed,
The merrier up its roaring draught
The great throat of the chimney laughed,
165 The house-dog on his paws outspread

Laid to the fire his drowsy head,
The cat's dark silhouette on the wall
A couchant[2] tiger's seemed to fall;
And, for the winter fireside meet,
170 Between the andirons' straddling feet,
The mug of cider simmered slow,
The apples sputtered in a row,
And, close at hand, the basket stood
With nuts from brown October's wood.
175 What matter how the night behaved?
What matter how the north-wind raved?
Blow high, blow low, not all its snow
Could quench our hearth-fire's ruddy glow.
O Time and Change!—with hair as gray
180 As was my sire's that winter day,
How strange it seems, with so much gone
Of life and love, to still live on!
Ah, brother! only I and thou
Are left of all that circle now,—
185 The dear home faces whereupon
That fitful firelight paled and shone.
Henceforward, listen as we will,
The voices of that hearth are still;
Look where we may, the wide earth o'er,
190 Those lighted faces smile no more.
We tread the paths their feet have worn,
  We sit beneath their orchard trees,
  We hear, like them, the hum of bees
And rustle of the bladed corn;
195 We turn the pages that they read,
  Their written words we linger o'er,
But in the sun they cast no shade,
No voice is heard, no sign is made,
  No step is on the conscious floor!
200 Yet Love will dream, and faith will trust,
(Since He who knows our need is just,)
That somehow, somewhere, meet we must.
Alas for him who never sees
The stars shine through his cypress-trees!
205 Who, hopeless, lays his dead away,
Nor looks to see the breaking day
Across the mournful marbles° play! gravestones
Who hath not learned, in hours of faith,
  The truth to flesh and sense unknown,
210 That Life is ever lord of Death,
  And Love can never lose its own!
We sped the time with stories old,
Wrought puzzles out, and riddles told,
Or stammered from our school-book lore

2. Lying down (term from heraldry).

215 "The Chief of Gambia's golden shore."[3]
How often since, when all the land
Was clay in Slavery's shaping hand,
As if a trumpet called, I've heard
Dame Mercy Warren's rousing word:
220 "Does not the voice of reason cry,
Claim the first right which Nature gave,
From the red scourge of bondage fly,
Nor deign to live a burdened slave!"
Our father rode again his ride
225 On Memphremagog's[4] wooded side;
Sat down again to moose and samp° — mush
In trapper's hut and Indian camp;
Lived o'er the old idyllic ease
Beneath St. François'[5] hemlock-trees;
230 Again for him the moonlight shone
On Norman cap and bodiced zone;[6]
Again he heard the violin play
Which led the village dance away,
And mingled in its merry whirl
235 The grandam and the laughing girl.
Or, nearer home, our steps he led
Where Salisbury's[7] level marshes spread
Mile-wide as flies the laden bee;
Where merry mowers, hale and strong,
240 Swept, scythe on scythe, their swaths along
The low green prairies of the sea.
We shared the fishing off Boar's Head,
And round the rocky Isles of Shoals[8]
The hake-broil on the drift-wood coals;
245 The chowder on the sand-beach made,
Dipped by the hungry, steaming hot,
With spoons of clam-shell from the pot.
We heard the tales of witchcraft old,
And dream and sign and marvel told
250 To sleepy listeners as they lay
Stretched idly on the salted hay,
Adrift along the winding shores,
When favoring breezes deigned to blow
The square sail of the gundelow° — flat-bottomed boat
255 And idle lay the useless oars.

* * *

1866

3. From the poem "The African Chief," by the American abolitionist Sarah Wentworth Morton (1759–1846). Whittier mistakenly attributes the poem to the American historian Mercy Otis Warren (1728–1814).
4. Lake between Vermont and Quebec.
5. Rural municipality north of Lake Memphremagog.
6. I.e., the clothes of women in French Canadian settlements: caps like those worn in Normandy and bodices that draw in the waist, or "zone."
7. Town in northeastern Massachusetts.
8. Like Boar's Head, off the New Hampshire coast.

EDWARD FITZGERALD
1809–1883

The Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám of Naishápúr[1]

I

Wake! For the Sun, who scattered into flight
The Stars before him from the Field of Night,
  Drives Night along with them from Heav'n, and strikes
The Sultán's Turret with a Shaft of Light.

2

5 Before the phantom of False morning[2] died,
Methought a Voice within the Tavern cried,
  "When all the Temple is prepared within,
"Why nods the drowsy Worshipper outside?"

3

And, as the Cock crew, those who stood before 10 The Tavern shouted—"Open then the Door!
  "You know how little while we have to stay,
"And, once departed, may return no more."

4

Now the New Year[3] reviving old Desires,
The thoughtful Soul to Solitude retires,
15 Where the WHITE HAND OF MOSES on the Bough
Puts out, and Jesus from the Ground suspires.[4]

5

Irám[5] indeed is gone with all his Rose,
And Jamshýd's Sev'n-ringed Cup[6] where no one knows;
  But still a Ruby kindles in the Vine,
20 And many a Garden by the Water blows.

6

And David's lips are lockt; but in divine
High-piping Pehleví,[7] with "Wine! Wine! Wine!

1. Omar Khayyám (ca. 1050–1132?), Persian poet, mathematician, and astronomer, lived at Nishapur, in the province of Khurasan. FitzGerald translated his epigrammatic quatrains (Rubáiyát, plural of ruba'i, quatrain), which he first published in 1859; in three subsequent editions (the fourth edition is printed here), FitzGerald made many alterations of detail, arrangement, and number of stanzas.
2. "A transient Light on the Horizon about an hour before the . . . True Dawn" [FitzGerald's note].
3. "Beginning with the Vernal Equinox [i.e., spring], it must be remembered" [FitzGerald's note].
4. The blossoming of trees is compared to the whiteness of Moses' hand as it is described in Exodus 4.6, and the sweetness of flowers to the healing sweetness of Jesus' breath.
5. "A royal Garden now sunk somewhere in the Sands of Arabia" [FitzGerald's note].
6. In Persian mythology, Jamshýd was a king of the peris (celestial beings), who, because he had boasted of his immortality, was compelled to live on Earth in human form for seven hundred years, becoming one of the kings of Persia. His cup, the invention of Kai-Kosru (line 38), another Persian king, great-grandson of Kai-Kobad (line 36), was decorated with signs enabling its possessor to foretell the future.
7. The ancient literary language of Persia.

"Red Wine!"—the Nightingale cries to the Rose
That sallow cheek of hers to incarnadine.° redden

7

25 Come, fill the Cup, and in the fire of Spring
Your Winter-garment of Repentance fling:
The Bird of Time has but a little way
To flutter—and the Bird is on the Wing.

8

Whether at Naishápúr or Babylon,
30 Whether the Cup with sweet or bitter run,
The Wine of Life keeps oozing drop by drop,
The Leaves of Life keep falling one by one.

9

Each Morn a thousand Roses brings, you say;
Yes, but where leaves the Rose of Yesterday?
35 And this first Summer month that brings the Rose Shall take Jamshýd and Kaikobád away.

10

Well, let it take them! What have we to do
With Kaikobád the Great, or Kaikhosrú?
Let Zál and Rustum[8] bluster as they will,
40 Or Hátim[9] call to Supper—heed not you.

11

With me along the strip of Herbage strown
That just divides the desert from the sown,
Where name of Slave and Sultán is forgot—
And Peace to Mahmúd[1] on his golden Throne!

12

45 A Book of Verses underneath the Bough,
A Jug of Wine, a Loaf of Bread—and Thou
Beside me singing in the Wilderness—
Oh, Wilderness were Paradise enow!

13

Some for the Glories of This World; and some 50 Sigh for the Prophet's[2] Paradise to come;
Ah, take the Cash, and let the Credit go,
Nor heed the rumble of a distant Drum!

14

Look to the blowing Rose about us—"Lo,
"Laughing," she says, "into the world I blow,

8. "The 'Hercules' of Persia, and Zál his Father" [FitzGerald's note].
9. Hátim Tai: a Persian chieftain and an archetype of Eastern hospitality.
1. Sultan Máhmúd (971–1031) of Ghazni, in Afghanistan, renowned both as ruler and as the conqueror of India.
2. I.e., Mohammed's.

55 "At once the silken tassel of my Purse
"Tear, and its Treasure on the Garden throw."

15

And those who husbanded the Golden grain,
And those who flung it to the winds like Rain,
Alike to no such aureate° Earth are turned — brilliant
60 As, buried once, Men want dug up again.

16

The Worldly Hope men set their Hearts upon
Turns Ashes—or it prospers; and anon,
Like Snow upon the Desert's dusty Face,
Lighting a little hour or two—is gone.

17

65 Think, in this battered Caravanserai° — inn
Whose Portals are alternate Night and Day,
How Sultán after Sultán with his Pomp
Abode his destined Hour, and went his way.

18

They say the Lion and the Lizard keep 70 The Courts where Jamshýd gloried and drank deep:
And Bahrám,[3] that great Hunter—the Wild Ass
Stamps o'er his Head, but cannot break his Sleep.

19

I sometimes think that never blows so red
The Rose as where some buried Caesar bled;
75 That every Hyacinth the Garden wears
Dropt in her Lap from some once lovely Head.

20

And this reviving Herb whose tender Green
Fledges the river-lip on which we lean—
Ah, lean upon it lightly! for who knows
80 From what once lovely Lip it springs unseen!

21

Ah, my Belovèd, fill the Cup that clears
TODAY of past Regrets and future Fears:
Tomorrow!—Why, Tomorrow I may be Myself with Yesterday's Sev'n thousand Years.

22

85 For some we loved, the loveliest and the best
That from his Vintage rolling Time hath prest,
Have drunk their Cup a Round or two before,
And one by one crept silently to rest.

3. A Sassanian king who, according to legend, met his death while hunting a wild ass.

23

And we, that make merry in the Room
90 They left, and Summer dresses in new bloom,
  Ourselves must we beneath the Couch of Earth
Descend—ourselves to make a Couch—for whom?

24

Ah, make the most of what we yet may spend,
Before we too into the Dust descend;
95 Dust into Dust, and under Dust to lie,
Sans Wine, sans Song, sans Singer, and sans End!

25

Alike for those who for TODAY prepare,
And those that after some TOMORROW stare,
  A Muezzín[4] from the Tower of Darkness cries,
100 "Fools! your Reward is neither Here nor There."

26

Why, all the Saints and Sages who discussed
Of the Two Worlds so wisely—they are thrust
  Like foolish Prophets forth; their Words to Scorn
Are scattered, and their Mouths are stopt with Dust.

27

105 Myself when young did eagerly frequent
Doctor and Saint, and heard great argument
  About it and about: but evermore
Came out by the same door where in I went.

28

With them the seed of Wisdom did I sow,
110 And with mine own hand wrought to make it grow;
  And this was all the Harvest that I reaped—
"I came like Water, and like Wind I go."

29

Into this Universe, and Why not knowing
Nor Whence, like Water willy-nilly flowing;
115 And out of it, as Wind along the Waste,
I know not Whither, willy-nilly blowing.

30

What, without asking, hither hurried Whence?
And, without asking, Whither hurried hence!
  Oh, many a Cup of this forbidden Wine[5]
120 Must drown the memory of that insolence!

4. The crier who calls the hours of prayer from the tower of a mosque.

5. Alcohol is forbidden to strict Muslims.

31

Up from Earth's Center through the Seventh Gate
I rose, and on the Throne of Saturn[6] sate,
And many a Knot unraveled by the Road;
But not the Master-knot of Human Fate.

32

125 There was the Door to which I found no Key;
There was the Veil through which I might not see:
Some little talk awhile of ME and THEE
There was—and then no more of THEE and ME.

33

Earth could not answer; nor the Seas that mourn
130 In flowing Purple, of their Lord forlorn;
Nor rolling Heaven, with all his Signs revealed
And hidden by the sleeve of Night and Morn.

34

Then of the THEE IN ME who works behind
The Veil, I lifted up my hands to find
135 A lamp amid the Darkness; and I heard,
As from Without—"THE ME WITHIN THEE BLIND!"

35

Then to the Lip of this poor earthen Urn
I leaned, the Secret of my Life to learn:
And Lip to Lip it murmured—"While you live,
140 "Drink! for, once dead, you never shall return."

36

I think the Vessel, that with fugitive
Articulation answered, once did live,
And drink; and Ah! the passive Lip I kissed,
How many Kisses might it take—and give!

37

145 For I remember stopping by the way
To watch a Potter thumping his wet Clay:
And with its all-obliterated Tongue
It murmured—"Gently, Brother, gently, pray!"

38

And has not such a Story from of Old
150 Down Man's successive generations rolled
Of such a clod of saturated Earth
Cast by the Maker into Human mold?

6. "Lord of the Seventh Heaven" [FitzGerald's note]. In ancient astronomy, Saturn was the most remote of the seven known planets; hence Omar had reached the bounds of astronomical knowledge.

39

And not a drop that from our Cups we throw
For Earth to drink of, but may steal below
155 To quench the fire of Anguish in some Eye
There hidden—far beneath, and long ago.

40

As then the Tulip for her morning sup
Of Heav'nly Vintage from the soil looks up,
Do you devoutly do the like, till Heav'n
160 To Earth invert you—like an empty Cup.

41

Perplext no more with Human or Divine,
Tomorrow's tangle to the winds resign,
And lose your fingers in the tresses of
The Cypress-slender Minister of Wine.[7]

42

165 And if the Wine you drink, the Lip you press,
End in what All begins and ends in—Yes;
Think then you are TODAY what YESTERDAY
You were—TOMORROW you shall not be less.

43

So when that Angel of the darker Drink
170 At last shall find you by the river-brink,
And, offering his Cup, invite your Soul
Forth to your Lips to quaff—you shall not shrink.

44

Why, if the Soul can fling the Dust aside,
And naked on the Air of Heaven ride,
175 Were't not a Shame—were't not a Shame for him
In this clay carcase crippled to abide?

45

'Tis but a Tent where takes his one day's rest
A Sultán to the realm of Death addrest;
The Sultán rises, and the dark Ferrásh[8]
180 Strikes, and prepares it for another Guest.

46

And fear not lest Existence closing your Account, and mine, should know the like no more;
The Eternal Sákí° from that Bowl has poured — cupbearer
Millions of Bubbles like us, and will pour.

7. The maidservant who pours the wine.
8. The servant charged with setting up and striking the tent.

47

185 When You and I behind the Veil are past,
Oh, but the long, long while the World shall last,
Which of our Coming and Departure heeds
As the Sea's self should heed a pebble-cast.

48

A Moment's Halt—a momentary taste
190 Of BEING from the Well amid the Waste—
And Lo!—the phantom Caravan has reached
The NOTHING it set out from—Oh, make haste!

49

Would you that spangle of Existence spend
About THE SECRET—quick about it, Friend!
195 A Hair perhaps divides the False and True—
And upon what, prithee, may life depend?

50

A Hair perhaps divides the False and True;
Yes; and a single Alif[9] were the clue—
Could you but find it—to the Treasure-house,
200 And peradventure to THE MASTER too;

51

Whose secret Presence, through Creation's veins
Running Quicksilver-like eludes your pains;
Taking all shapes from Máh to Máhi;[1] and
They change and perish all—but He remains;

52

205 A moment guessed—then back behind the Fold
Immerst of Darkness round the Drama rolled
Which, for the Pastime of Eternity,
He doth Himself contrive, enact, behold.

53

But if in vain, down on the stubborn floor
210 Of Earth, and up to Heav'n's unopening Door,
You gaze TODAY, while You are You—how then
TOMORROW, You when shall be You no more?

54

Waste not your Hour, nor in the vain pursuit
Of This and That endeavor and dispute;
215 Better be jocund° with the fruitful Grape mirthful
Than sadden after none, or bitter, Fruit.

9. First letter of the Arabic alphabet, consisting of a single vertical stroke.

1. From lowest to highest.

55

You know, my Friends, with what a brave Carouse
I made a Second Marriage in my house;
Divorced old barren Reason from my Bed,
220 And took the Daughter of the Vine to Spouse.

56

For "Is" and "IS-NOT" though with Rule and Line
And "UP-AND-DOWN" by Logic I define,
Of all that one should care to fathom, I
Was never deep in anything but—Wine.

57

225 Ah, but my Computations, People say,
Reduced the Year to better reckoning?[2]—Nay,
'Twas only striking from the Calendar
Unborn Tomorrow, and dead Yesterday.

58

And lately, by the Tavern Door agape,
230 Came shining through the Dusk an Angel Shape Bearing a Vessel on his Shoulder; and
He bid me taste of it; and 'twas—the Grape!

59

The Grape that can with Logic absolute
The Two-and-Seventy jarring Sects[3] confute:
235 The sovereign Alchemist that in a trice
Life's leaden metal into Gold transmute:

60

The mighty Mahmúd, Allah-breathing Lord,[4]
That all the misbelieving and black Horde
Of Fears and Sorrows that infest the Soul
240 Scatters before him with his whirlwind Sword.

61

Why, be this Juice the growth of God, who dare
Blaspheme the twisted tendril as a Snare?
A Blessing, we should use it, should we not?
And if a Curse—why, then, Who set it there?

62

245 I must abjure the Balm of Life, I must,
Scared by some After-reckoning ta'en on trust,
Or lured with Hope of some Diviner Drink,
To fill the Cup—when crumbled into Dust!

2. Omar was one of the learned men who had been charged with reforming the calendar.
3. "The 72 sects into which Islamism so soon split" [FitzGerald's note].
4. "This alludes to Máhmúd's Conquest of India and its swarthy Idolators" [FitzGerald's note].

63

Oh threats of Hell and Hopes of Paradise!
250 One thing at least is certain—This Life flies;
One thing is certain and the rest is Lies;
The Flower that once has blown for ever dies.

64

Strange, is it not? that of the myriads who
Before us passed the door of Darkness through,
255 Not one returns to tell us of the Road,
Which to discover we must travel too.

65

The Revelations of Devout and Learned
Who rose before us, and as Prophets burned,[5]
Are all but Stories, which, awoke from Sleep
260 They told their comrades, and to Sleep returned.

66

I sent my Soul through the Invisible,
Some letter of that Afterlife to spell:
And by and by my Soul returned to me,
And answered "I Myself am Heav'n and Hell:"

67

265 Heav'n but the Vision of fulfilled Desire,
And Hell the Shadow from a Soul on fire,
Cast on the Darkness into which Ourselves,
So late emerged from, shall so soon expire.

68

We are no other than a moving row
270 Of Magic Shadow-shapes that come and go Round with the Sun-illumined Lantern held
In Midnight by the Master of the Show;

69

But helpless Pieces of the Game He plays
Upon his Checkerboard of Nights and Days;
275 Hither and thither moves, and checks, and slays,
And one by one back in the Closet lays.

70

The Ball no question makes of Ayes and Noes,
But Here or There as strikes the Player° goes; polo player
And He that tossed you down into the Field,
280 He knows about it all—HE knows—HE knows!

5. I.e., felt inspired to spread their prophecies.

71

The Moving Finger writes; and, having writ,
Moves on: nor all your Piety nor Wit
Shall lure it back to cancel half a Line,
Nor all your Tears wash out a Word of it.

72

285 And that inverted Bowl they call the Sky,
Whereunder crawling cooped we live and die,
Lift not your hands to It for help—for It
As impotently moves as you or I.

73

With Earth's first Clay They did the Last Man knead, 290 And there of the Last Harvest sowed the Seed:
And the first Morning of Creation wrote
What the Last Dawn of Reckoning shall read.

74

YESTERDAY This Day's Madness did prepare;
TOMORROW's Silence, Triumph, or Despair:
295 Drink! for you know not whence you came, nor why:
Drink! for you know not why you go, nor where.

75

I tell you this—When, started from the Goal,
Over the flaming shoulders of the Foal[6]
Of Heav'n, Parwín and Mushtarí they flung,
300 In my predestined Plot of Dust and Soul.[7]

76

The Vine had struck a fiber: which about
If clings my Being—let the Dervish[8] flout;
Of my Base metal may be filed a Key,
That shall unlock the Door he howls without.

77

305 And this I know: whether the one True Light
Kindle to Love, or Wrath consume me quite,
One Flash of It within the Tavern caught
Better than in the Temple lost outright.

78

What! out of senseless Nothing to provoke
310 A conscious Something to resent the yoke
Of unpermitted Pleasure, under pain
Of Everlasting Penalties, if broke!

6. The constellation known as the Colt (Equuleus) or Foal.
7. Omar ascribes his fate to the position of the stars and planets at the time of his birth. Parwín and Mushtarí: "The Pleiads and Jupiter" [FitzGerald's note].
8. Member of any of several Muslim orders taking vows of austerity and poverty.

79

What! from his helpless Creature be repaid
Pure Gold for what he lent him dross-allayed—
315 Sue for a Debt he never did contract,
And cannot answer—Oh the sorry trade!

80

Oh Thou, who didst with pitfall and with gin° trap
Beset the Road I was to wander in,
Thou wilt not with Predestined Evil round
320 Enmesh, and then impute my Fall to Sin!

81

Oh Thou, who Man of baser Earth didst make,
And ev'n with Paradise devise the Snake:
For all the Sin wherewith the Face of Man
Is blackened—Man's forgiveness give—and take!

82

325 As under cover of departing Day
Slunk hunger-stricken Ramazán[9] away,
Once more within the Potter's house alone
I stood, surrounded by the Shapes of Clay.

83

Shapes of all Sorts and Sizes, great and small,
330 That stood along the floor and by the wall;
And some loquacious Vessels were; and some Listened perhaps, but never talked at all.

84

Said one among them—"Surely not in vain
"My substance of the common Earth was ta'en 335 "And to this Figure molded, to be broke,
"Or trampled back to shapeless Earth again."

85

Then said a Second—"Ne'er a peevish Boy
"Would break the Bowl from which he drank in joy;
"And He that with his hand the Vessel made 340 "Will surely not in after Wrath destroy."

86

After a momentary silence spake
Some Vessel of a more ungainly Make;
"They sneer at me for leaning all awry:
"What! did the Hand then of the Potter shake?"

9. Muslims' annual thirty-day fast, during which no food is eaten from dawn to sunset.

87

345 Whereat some one of the loquacious Lot—
I think a Súfi° pipkin°—waxing hot— mystic / small pot
  "All this of Pot and Potter—Tell me then,
"Who is the Potter, pray, and who the Pot?"

88

"Why," said another, "Some there are who tell 350 "Of one who threatens he will toss to Hell
  "The luckless Pots he marred in making—Pish!
"He's a Good Fellow, and 'twill all be well."

89

"Well," murmured one, "Let whoso make or buy,
"My Clay with long Oblivion is gone dry:
355   "But fill me with the old familiar Juice,
"Methinks I might recover by and by."

90

So while the Vessels one by one were speaking,
The little Moon[1] looked in that all were seeking:
  And then they jogged each other, "Brother! Brother!
360 "Now for the Porter's shoulder-knot[2] a-creaking!"

91

Ah, with the Grape my fading Life provide,
And wash the Body whence the Life has died,
  And lay men shrouded in the living Leaf,
By some not unfrequented Garden-side.

92

365 That ev'n my buried Ashes such a snare
Of Vintage shall fling up into the Air
  As not a True-believer passing by
But shall be overtaken unaware.

93

Indeed the Idols I have loved so long
370 Have done my credit in this World much wrong:
  Have drowned my Glory in a shallow Cup,
And sold my Reputation for a Song.

94

Indeed, indeed, Repentance oft before
I swore—but was I sober when I swore?
375   And then and then came Spring, and Rose-in-hand
My threadbare Penitence apieces tore.

1. The new moon, which signaled the end of Ramazán.

2. The knot on the porter's shoulder strap from which the wine jars were hung.

95

And much as Wine has played the Infidel,
And robbed me of my Robe of Honor—Well,
  I wonder often what the Vintners buy
380 One half so precious as the stuff they sell.

96

Yet Ah, that Spring should vanish with the Rose!
That Youth's sweet-scented manuscript should close!
  The Nightingale that in the branches sang,
Ah whence, and whither flown again, who knows!

97

385 Would but the Desert of the Fountain yield
One glimpse—if dimly, yet indeed, revealed,
  To which the fainting Traveler might spring,
As springs the trampled herbage of the field!

98

Would but some wingèd Angel ere too late
390 Arrest the yet unfolded Roll of Fate,
  And make the stern Recorder otherwise
Enregister, or quite obliterate!

99

Ah Love! could you and I with Him conspire
To grasp this sorry Scheme of Things entire,
395   Would not we shatter it to bits—and then Remold it nearer to the Heart's Desire!

100

Yon rising Moon that looks for us again—
How oft hereafter will she wax and wane;
  How oft hereafter rising look for us
400 Through this same Garden—and for one in vain!

101

And when like her, oh Sákí, you shall pass
Among the Guests Star-scattered on the Grass,
  And in your joyous errand reach the spot
Where I made One—turn down an empty Glass!

TAMÁM[3]

1857 1859, 1879

3. It is ended (Persian).

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES
1809–1894

The Chambered Nautilus[1]

This is the ship of pearl, which, poets feign,
    Sails the unshadowed main,° sea
    The venturous bark that flings
On the sweet summer wind its purpled wings
5 In gulfs enchanted, where the Siren[2] sings,
    And coral reefs lie bare,
Where the cold sea-maids rise to sun their streaming hair.

Its webs of living gauze no more unfurl;
    Wrecked is the ship of pearl!
10 And every chambered cell,
Where its dim dreaming life was wont° to dwell, accustomed
As the frail tenant shaped his growing shell,
    Before thee lies revealed,
Its irised° ceiling rent, its sunless crypt unsealed! iridescent

15 Year after year beheld the silent toil
    That spread his lustrous coil;
    Still, as the spiral grew,
He left the past year's dwelling for the new,
Stole with soft step its shining archway through,
20 Built up its idle door,
Stretched in his last-found home, and knew the old no more.

Thanks for the heavenly message brought by thee,
    Child of the wandering sea,
    Cast from her lap, forlorn!
25 From thy dead lips a clearer note is born
Than ever Triton[3] blew from wreathéd horn!
    While on mine ear it rings,
Through the deep caves of thought I hear a voice that sings:

Build thee more stately mansions,[4] O my soul,
30 As the swift seasons roll!
    Leave thy low-vaulted past!
Let each new temple, nobler than the last,
Shut thee from heaven with a dome more vast,
    Till thou at length art free,
35 Leaving thine outgrown shell by life's unresting sea!

1858

1. A small mollusk with an external spiral shell, pearly on the inside (lines 1, 9), that grows as chambers are added; the webbed membranes on its back were once thought to function as sails.
2. In Greek mythology, a female creature whose magically sweet song drew sailors to their deaths on the reef of her island.
3. Greek demigod of the ocean, who blew on a sea conch. Cf. William Wordsworth, "The World Is Too Much with Us," line 14 (p. 802).
4. Cf. John 14.2: "In my Father's house are many mansions."

EDGAR ALLAN POE
1809–1849

Sonnet—To Science

Science! true daughter of Old Time thou art!
  Who alterest all things with thy peering eyes.
Why preyest thou thus upon the poet's heart,
  Vulture, whose wings are dull realities?
5 How should he love thee? or how deem thee wise?
  Who wouldst not leave him in his wandering
To seek for treasure in the jeweled skies,
  Albeit he soared with an undaunted wing?
Hast thou not dragged Diana[1] from her car?
10 And driven the Hamadryad[2] from the wood
To seek a shelter in some happier star?
  Hast thou not torn the Naiad° from her flood, nymph
The Elfin from the green grass, and from me
The summer dream beneath the tamarind tree?[3]

1829 1829, 1845

To Helen[4]

Helen, thy beauty is to me
  Like those Nicéan barks[5] of yore,
That gently, o'er a perfumed sea,
  The weary, way-worn wanderer bore
5 To his own native shore.

On desperate seas long wont° to roam, accustomed
  Thy hyacinth hair,[6] thy classic face,
Thy Naiad° airs have brought me home nymphlike
  To the glory that was Greece
10 And the grandeur that was Rome.

Lo! in yon brilliant window-niche
  How statue-like I see thee stand,
  The agate lamp within thy hand!

1. Roman goddess of the hunt, revered for her chastity; her "car" is the moon.
2. Wood nymph in Greek and Roman mythology, said to live and die with the tree she inhabits.
3. An Asian tree, the fruit of which is used for medicine and for food.
4. Helen of Troy, whose beauty was renowned and whose abduction led to the Trojan War.
5. Boats, perhaps from some Mediterranean location; variously interpreted by Poe scholars.
6. In his story "Ligeia" (1838), Poe calls "the raven-black, the glossy, the luxuriant and naturally curling tresses . . . 'hyacinthine.' " In Greek mythology, the blood of the slain youth Hyacinthus, whom the god Apollo loved, was changed into a purple flower.

Ah! Psyche,[7] from the regions which 15 Are Holy Land!

1823 1831, 1845

The City in the Sea

Lo! Death has reared himself a throne
In a strange city lying alone
Far down within the dim West,[8]
Where the good and the bad and the worst and the best
5 Have gone to their eternal rest.
There shrines and palaces and towers
(Time-eaten towers that tremble not!)
Resemble nothing that is ours.
Around, by lifting winds forgot,
10 Resignedly beneath the sky
The melancholy waters lie.

No rays from the holy heaven come down
On the long night-time of that town;
But light from out the lurid sea
15 Streams up the turrets silently—
Gleams up the pinnacles far and free—
Up domes—up spires—up kingly halls—
Up fanes°—up Babylon-like[9] walls— temples, churches
Up shadowy long-forgotten bowers
20 Of sculptured ivy and stone flowers—
Up many and many a marvelous shrine
Whose wreathéd friezes intertwine
The viol, the violet, and the vine.

Resignedly beneath the sky
25 The melancholy waters lie.
So blend the turrets and shadows there
That all seem pendulous in air,
While from a proud tower in the town
Death looks gigantically down.

30 There open fanes and gaping graves
Yawn level with the luminous waves;
But not the riches there that lie
In each idol's diamond eye—

7. In classical mythology, a beautiful princess, whose name means "soul" in Greek. Having lost her lover, Cupid, (Roman) god of erotic love, because she disobeyed his order not to look at him (he awakened when a drop of hot oil from her lamp fell on him), Psyche appealed for help to his mother, Venus, goddess of love and beauty. One punitive task set by Venus was that Psyche bring her a portion of the beauty of Proserpina, queen of the underworld.
8. To "go west" is to die.
9. Babylon traditionally symbolizes the wicked city doomed (see, e.g., Isaiah 14.4–23 and Revelation 16.18–19).

Not the gaily-jeweled dead
35 Tempt the waters from their bed;
For no ripples curl, alas!
Along that wilderness of glass—
No swellings tell that winds may be Upon some far-off happier sea—
40 No heavings hint that winds have been
On seas less hideously serene.

But lo, a stir is in the air!
The wave—there is a movement there!
As if the towers had thrust aside,
45 In slightly sinking, the dull tide—
As if their tops had feebly given
A void within the filmy Heaven.
The waves have now a redder glow—
The hours are breathing faint and low—
50 And when, amid no earthly moans,
Down, down that town shall settle hence,
Hell, rising from a thousand thrones,
Shall do it reverence.

1831, 1845

The Raven[1]

Once upon a midnight dreary, while I pondered, weak and weary,
Over many a quaint and curious volume of forgotten lore—
While I nodded, nearly napping, suddenly there came a tapping,
As of some one gently rapping, rapping at my chamber door.
5 " 'Tis some visiter," I muttered, "tapping at my chamber door—
Only this and nothing more."

Ah, distinctly I remember it was in the bleak December;
And each separate dying ember wrought its ghost upon the floor.
Eagerly I wished the morrow;—vainly I had sought to borrow
10 From my books surcease of sorrow—sorrow for the lost Lenore—
For the rare and radiant maiden whom the angels name Lenore—
Nameless here for evermore.

And the silken, sad, uncertain rustling of each purple curtain
Thrilled me—filled me with fantastic terrors never felt before;
15 So that now, to still the beating of my heart, I stood repeating
" 'Tis some visiter entreating entrance at my chamber door—
Some late visiter entreating entrance at my chamber door;—
This it is and nothing more."

1. Many slightly different texts of this poem exist; reprinted here is the version published in The Raven and Other Poems.

Presently my soul grew stronger; hesitating then no longer,
20 "Sir," said I, "or Madam, truly your forgiveness I implore;
But the fact is I was napping, and so gently you came rapping,
And so faintly you came tapping, tapping at my chamber door,
That I scarce was sure I heard you"—here I opened wide the door;—
Darkness there and nothing more.

25 Deep into that darkness peering, long I stood there wondering, fearing,
Doubting, dreaming dreams no mortal ever dared to dream before;
But the silence was unbroken, and the stillness gave no token,
And the only word there spoken was the whispered word, "Lenore?"
This I whispered, and an echo murmured back the word, "Lenore!"
30 Merely this and nothing more.

Back into the chamber turning, all my soul within me burning,
Soon again I heard a tapping somewhat louder than before.
"Surely," said I, "surely that is something at my window lattice;
Let me see, then, what thereat is, and this mystery explore—35 Let my heart be still a moment and this mystery explore;—
'Tis the wind and nothing more!"

Open here I flung the shutter, when, with many a flirt and flutter,
In there stepped a stately Raven of the saintly days of yore;
Not the least obeisance made he; not a minute stopped or stayed he;
40 But, with mien of lord or lady, perched above my chamber door—
Perched upon a bust of Pallas[2] just above my chamber door—
Perched, and sat, and nothing more.

Then this ebony bird beguiling my sad fancy into smiling,
By the grave and stern decorum of the countenance it wore,
45 "Though thy crest be shorn and shaven, thou," I said, "art sure no craven,
Ghastly grim and ancient Raven wandering from the Nightly shore—
Tell me what thy lordly name is on the Night's Plutonian[3] shore!"
Quoth the Raven "Nevermore."

Much I marvelled this ungainly fowl to hear discourse so plainly,
50 Though its answer little meaning—little relevancy bore;
For we cannot help agreeing that no living human being Ever yet was blessed with seeing bird above his chamber door—
Bird or beast upon the sculptured bust above his chamber door,
With such name as "Nevermore."

55 But the Raven, sitting lonely on the placid bust, spoke only
That one word, as if his soul in that one word he did outpour.
Nothing farther then he uttered—not a feather then he fluttered—
Till I scarcely more than muttered "Other friends have flown before—
On the morrow he will leave me, as my Hopes have flown before."
60 Then the bird said "Nevermore."

2. Athena, Greek goddess of wisdom and the arts.
3. Black; Pluto was the Greek god of the underworld.

Startled at the stillness broken by reply so aptly spoken,
"Doubtless," said I, "what it utters is its only stock and store
Caught from some unhappy master whom unmerciful Disaster
Followed fast and followed faster till his songs one burden bore—
65 Till the dirges of his Hope that melancholy burden bore
Of 'Never—nevermore.' "

But the Raven still beguiling my sad fancy into smiling,
Straight I wheeled a cushioned seat in front of bird, and bust and door;
Then, upon the velvet sinking, I betook myself to linking 70 Fancy unto fancy, thinking what this ominous bird of yore—
What this grim, ungainly, ghastly, gaunt, and ominous bird of yore
Meant in croaking "Nevermore."

This I sat engaged in guessing, but no syllable expressing
To the fowl whose fiery eyes now burned into my bosom's core;
75 This and more I sat divining, with my head at ease reclining
On the cushion's velvet lining that the lamp-light gloated o'er,
But whose velvet-violet lining with the lamp-light gloating o'er,
She shall press, ah, nevermore!

Then, methought, the air grew denser, perfumed from an unseen censer 80 Swung by seraphim[4] whose foot-falls tinkled on the tufted floor.
"Wretch," I cried, "thy God hath lent thee—by these angels he hath sent thee
Respite—respite and nepenthe[5] from thy memories of Lenore;
Quaff, oh quaff this kind nepenthe and forget this lost Lenore!"
Quoth the Raven "Nevermore."

85 "Prophet!" said I, "thing of evil!—prophet still, if bird or devil!—
Whether Tempter sent, or whether tempest tossed thee here ashore,
Desolate yet all undaunted, on this desert land enchanted—
On this home by Horror haunted—tell me truly, I implore—
Is there—is there balm in Gilead?[6]—tell me—tell me, I implore!"
90 Quoth the Raven "Nevermore."

"Prophet!" said I, "thing of evil!—prophet still, if bird or devil!
By that Heaven that bends above us—by that God we both adore—
Tell this soul with sorrow laden if, within the distant Aidenn,[7]
It shall clasp a sainted maiden whom the angels name Lenore—
95 Clasp a rare and radiant maiden whom the angels name Lenore."
Quoth the Raven "Nevermore."

4. Angels of the highest order.
5. Oblivion-inducing drug.
6. As in Jeremiah 8.22: "Is there no balm in Gilead; is there no physician there?" Evergreens growing in Gilead, a mountainous area east of the Jordan River, were tapped for medicinal resins.
7. Invented place-name, suggestive of Eden.

"Be that word our sign of parting, bird or fiend!" I shrieked, upstarting—
"Get thee back into the tempest and the Night's Plutonian shore!
Leave no black plume as a token of that lie thy soul hath spoken!
100 Leave my loneliness unbroken!—quit the bust above my door!
Take thy beak from out my heart, and take thy form from off my door!"
Quoth the Raven "Nevermore."

And the Raven, never flitting, still is sitting, still is sitting
On the pallid bust of Pallas just above my chamber door;
105 And his eyes have all the seeming of a demon's that is dreaming,
And the lamp-light o'er him streaming throws his shadow on the floor;
And my soul from out that shadow that lies floating on the floor
Shall be lifted—nevermore!

1845

Eldorado[8]

Gaily bedight,° equipped
A gallant knight,
In sunshine and in shadow,
Had journeyed long,
5 Singing a song,
In search of Eldorado.

But he grew old—
This knight so bold—
And o'er his heart a shadow
10 Fell as he found
No spot of ground
That looked like Eldorado.

And, as his strength
Failed him at length,
15 He met a pilgrim shadow—
"Shadow," said he,
"Where can it be—
This land of Eldorado?"

"Over the Mountains
20 Of the Moon,
Down the Valley of the Shadow,
Ride, boldly ride,"
The shade replied,—
"If you seek for Eldorado!"

1849

8. The gilded one (Spanish). The name of a mythical South American land of gold and vast wealth, sought by European explorers beginning in the sixteenth century; more generally, any such place.

Annabel Lee

It was many and many a year ago,
In a kingdom by the sea,
That a maiden there lived whom you may know
By the name of Annabel Lee;
5 And this maiden she lived with no other thought
Than to love and be loved by me.

She was a child and I was a child,
In this kingdom by the sea,
But we loved with a love that was more than love—
10 I and my Annabel Lee—
With a love that the wingéd seraphs[9] of Heaven
Coveted her and me.

And this was the reason that, long ago,
In this kingdom by the sea,
15 A wind blew out of a cloud by night
Chilling my Annabel Lee;
So that her highborn kinsmen came
And bore her away from me,
To shut her up in a sepulchre
20 In this kingdom by the sea.

The angels, not half so happy in Heaven,
Went envying her and me:
Yes! that was the reason (as all men know,
In this kingdom by the sea)
25 That the wind came out of the cloud, chilling
And killing my Annabel Lee.

But our love it was stronger by far than the love
Of those who were older than we—
Of many far wiser than we—
30 And neither the angels in Heaven above
Nor the demons down under the sea,
Can ever dissever my soul from the soul
Of the beautiful Annabel Lee:

For the moon never beams without bringing me dreams
35 Of the beautiful Annabel Lee;
And the stars never rise but I see the bright eyes
Of the beautiful Annabel Lee;
And so, all the night-tide, I lie down by the side
Of my darling, my darling, my life and my bride,
40 In her sepulchre there by the sea—
In her tomb by the side of the sea.

1849, 1850

9. Angels of the highest order.

ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON
1809–1892

Mariana

"Mariana in the moated grange."
—Measure for Measure[1]

With blackest moss the flower-plots
Were thickly crusted, one and all;
The rusted nails fell from the knots
That held the pear to the gable-wall.
5 The broken sheds looked sad and strange:
Unlifted was the clinking latch;
Weeded and worn the ancient thatch
Upon the lonely moated grange.
She only said, "My life is dreary,
10 He cometh not," she said;
She said, "I am aweary, aweary,
I would that I were dead!"

Her tears fell with the dews at even;
Her tears fell ere the dews were dried;
15 She could not look on the sweet heaven,
Either at morn or eventide.
After the flitting of the bats,
When thickest dark did trance the sky,
She drew her casement-curtain by,
20 And glanced athwart the glooming flats.
She only said, "The night is dreary,
He cometh not," she said;
She said, "I am aweary, aweary,
I would that I were dead!"

25 Upon the middle of the night,
Waking she heard the night-fowl crow;
The cock sung out an hour ere light;
From the dark fen the oxen's low
Came to her: without hope of change,
30 In sleep she seemed to walk forlorn,
Till cold winds woke the gray-eyed morn
About the lonely moated grange.
She only said, "The day is dreary,
He cometh not," she said;
35 She said, "I am aweary, aweary,
I would that I were dead!"

About a stone-cast from the wall
A sluice with blackened waters slept,

1. Cf. Shakespeare, Measure for Measure 3.1.254, where the duke notes that Mariana waits in a grange, or country house, for the lover who has rejected her.

And o'er it many, round and small,
40 The clustered marish°-mosses crept. marsh-
Hard by a poplar shook alway,
All silver-green with gnarlèd bark:
For leagues no other tree did mark
The level waste, the rounding gray.
45 She only said, "My life is dreary,
He cometh not," she said;
She said, "I am aweary, aweary,
I would that I were dead!"

And ever when the moon was low,
50 And the shrill winds were up and away,
In the white curtain, to and fro,
She saw the gusty shadow sway.
But when the moon was very low,
And wild winds bound within their cell,[2]
55 The shadow of the poplar fell
Upon her bed, across her brow.
She only said, "The night is dreary,
He cometh not," she said;
She said, "I am aweary, aweary,
60 I would that I were dead!"

All day within the dreamy house,
The doors upon their hinges creaked;
The blue fly sung in the pane; the mouse
Behind the moldering wainscot shrieked,
65 Or from the crevice peered about.
Old faces glimmered through the doors,
Old footsteps trod the upper floors,
Old voices called her from without.
She only said, "My life is dreary,
70 He cometh not," she said;
She said, "I am aweary, aweary,
I would that I were dead!"

The sparrow's chirrup on the roof,
The slow clock ticking, and the sound
75 Which to the wooing wind aloof
The poplar made, did all confound
Her sense; but most she loathed the hour
When the thick-moted sunbeam lay
Athwart the chambers, and the day
80 Was sloping toward his western bower.
Then, said she, "I am very dreary,
He will not come," she said;
She wept, "I am aweary, aweary,
Oh God, that I were dead!"

1830

2. Virgil relates that Aeolus, god of winds, kept them in a cave (Aeneid 1.50–59).

The Kraken[3]

Below the thunders of the upper deep;
Far, far beneath in the abysmal sea,
His ancient, dreamless, uninvaded sleep
The Kraken sleepeth: faintest sunlights flee
5 About his shadowy sides: above him swell
Huge sponges of millennial growth and height;
And far away into the sickly light,
From many a wondrous grot and secret cell
Unnumbered and enormous polypi[4]
10 Winnow with giant fins the slumbering green.
There hath he lain for ages and will lie
Battening upon huge seaworms in his sleep,
Until the latter fire shall heat the deep;[5]
Then once by men and angels to be seen,
15 In roaring he shall rise and on the surface die.

1830

The Lady of Shalott

Part I

On either side the river lie
Long fields of barley and of rye,
That clothe the wold° and meet the sky; — rolling plain
And through the field the road runs by 5 To many towered Camelot;[6]
And up and down the people go,
Gazing where the lilies blow° — bloom
Round an island there below,
The island of Shalott.

10 Willows whiten, aspens quiver,
Little breezes dusk and shiver
Through the wave that runs for ever
By the island in the river
Flowing down to Camelot.
15 Four gray walls, and four gray towers,
Overlook a space of flowers,
And the silent isle imbowers
The Lady of Shalott.

3. A mythical sea monster, called in an eighteenth-century Natural History of Norway "the largest and most surprising of all the animal creation" (O.E.D.).
4. Octopuslike creatures.
5. At the end of the world, "the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up" (2 Peter 3.10). See also Revelation 8.8–9: "And the second angel sounded, and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea: and the third part of the sea became blood; and there died the third part of the creatures which were in the sea."
6. The legendary King Arthur's castle.

By the margin, willow-veiled,
20 Slide the heavy barges trailed
By slow horses; and unhailed
The shallop° flitteth silken-sailed — light open boat
Skimming down to Camelot:
But who hath seen her wave her hand?
25 Or at the casement seen her stand?
Or is she known in all the land,
The Lady of Shalott?

Only reapers, reaping early
In among the bearded barley,
30 Hear a song that echoes cheerly
From the river winding clearly,
Down to towered Camelot:
And by the moon the reaper weary,
Piling sheaves in uplands airy,
35 Listening, whispers " 'Tis the fairy Lady of Shalott."

Part II

There she weaves by night and day
A magic web with colors gay.
She has heard a whisper say,
40 A curse is on her if she stay
To look down to Camelot.
She knows not what the curse may be,
And so she weaveth steadily,
And little other care hath she,
45 The Lady of Shalott.

And moving through a mirror clear[7]
That hangs before her all the year,
Shadows of the world appear.
There she sees the highway near 50 Winding down to Camelot:
There the river eddy whirls,
And there the surly village-churls,
And the red cloaks of market girls,
Pass onward from Shalott.

55 Sometimes a troop of damsels glad,
An abbot on an ambling pad,° — easy-paced horse
Sometimes a curly shepherd-lad,
Or long-haired page in crimson clad,
Goes by to towered Camelot;
60 And sometimes through the mirror blue
The knights come riding two and two:

7. Weavers placed mirrors facing their looms to see the progress of their work.

She hath no loyal knight and true,
    The Lady of Shalott.

But in her web she still delights
65 To weave the mirror's magic sights,
For often through the silent nights
A funeral, with plumes and lights
    And music, went to Camelot:
Or when the moon was overhead.
70 Came two young lovers lately wed;
"I am half sick of shadows," said
    The Lady of Shalott.

Part III

A bow-shot from her bower-eaves,
He rode between the barley-sheaves,
75 The sun came dazzling through the leaves,
And flamed upon the brazen greaves[8]
    Of bold Sir Lancelot.
A red-cross knight for ever kneeled[9]
To a lady in his shield,
80 That sparkled on the yellow field,
    Beside remote Shalott.

The gemmy bridle glittered free,
Like to some branch of stars we see
Hung in the golden Galaxy.
85 The bridle bells rang merrily
    As he rode down to Camelot:
And from his blazoned baldric° slung — shoulder belt
A mighty silver bugle hung,
And as he rode his armor rung,
90 Beside remote Shalott.

All in the blue unclouded weather
Thick-jewelled shone the saddle-leather,
The helmet and the helmet-feather
Burned like one burning flame together,
95 As he rode down to Camelot.
As often through the purple night,
Below the starry clusters bright,
Some bearded meteor, trailing light,
    Moves over still Shalott.

100 His broad clear brow in sunlight glowed;
On burnished hooves his war-horse trode;
From underneath his helmet flowed
His coal-black curls as on he rode,
    As he rode down to Camelot.

8. Armor for the shins.
9. Cf. Edmund Spenser, The Faerie Queene 1 and 3.2.17–25.

105 From the bank and from the river
He flashed into the crystal mirror,
"Tirra lirra," by the river
Sang Sir Lancelot.

She left the web, she left the loom,
110 She made three paces through the room,
She saw the water-lily bloom,
She saw the helmet and the plume,
She looked down to Camelot.
Out flew the web and floated wide;
115 The mirror cracked from side to side;
"The curse is come upon me," cried
The Lady of Shalott.

Part IV

In the stormy east-wind straining,
The pale yellow woods were waning,
120 The broad stream in his banks complaining.
Heavily the low sky raining
Over towered Camelot;
Down she came and found a boat
Beneath a willow left afloat,
125 And round about the prow she wrote
The Lady of Shalott.

And down the river's dim expanse
Like some bold seër in a trance,
Seeing all his own mischance—
130 With a glassy countenance
Did she look to Camelot.
And at the closing of the day
She loosed the chain, and down she lay;
The broad stream bore her far away,
135 The Lady of Shalott.

Lying, robed in snowy white
That loosely flew to left and right—
The leaves upon her falling light—
Through the noises of the night
140 She floated down to Camelot:
And as the boat-head wound along
The willowy hills and fields among,
They heard her singing her last song,
The Lady of Shalott.

145 Heard a carol, mournful, holy,
Chanted loudly, chanted lowly,
Till her blood was frozen slowly,
And her eyes were darkened wholly,
Turned to towered Camelot.

150 For ere she reached upon the tide
The first house by the water-side,
Singing in her song she died,
The Lady of Shalott.

Under tower and balcony,
155 By garden-wall and gallery,
A gleaming shape she floated by,
Dead-pale between the houses high,
Silent into Camelot.
Out upon the wharfs they came,
160 Knight and burgher, lord and dame,
And round the prow they read her name,
The Lady of Shalott.

Who is this? and what is here?
And in the lighted palace near 165 Died the sound of royal cheer;
And they crossed themselves for fear,
All the knights at Camelot:
But Lancelot mused a little space;
He said, "She has a lovely face;
170 God in his mercy lend her grace,
The Lady of Shalott."

1831–32 1832, 1842

The Lotos-Eaters[1]

"Courage!" he said, and pointed toward the land,
"This mounting wave will roll us shoreward soon."
In the afternoon they came unto a land
In which it seemèd always afternoon.
5 All round the coast the languid air did swoon,
Breathing like one that hath a weary dream.
Full-faced above the valley stood the moon;
And, like a downward smoke, the slender stream
Along the cliff to fall and pause and fall did seem.

10 A land of streams! some, like a downward smoke,
Slow-dropping veils of thinnest lawn,[2] did go;
And some through wavering lights and shadows broke,
Rolling a slumbrous sheet of foam below.
They saw the gleaming river seaward flow
15 From the inner land: far off three mountain-tops,
Three silent pinnacles of agèd snow,
Stood sunset-flushed; and, dewed with showery drops,
Up-clomb the shadowy pine above the woven copse.° forest

1. In Greek mythology, a people who ate the fruit of the lotos, the effect of which was to induce drowsy languor and forgetfulness. Homer describes the visit of Odysseus ("he," line 1) and his men to their island in the Odyssey 9.82–97.
2. Sheer cotton fabric.

The charmèd sunset lingered low adown
20 In the red West; through mountain clefts the dale
Was seen far inland, and the yellow down
Bordered with palm, and many a winding vale
And meadow, set with slender galingale;[3]
A land where all things always seemed the same!
25 And round about the keel with faces pale,
Dark faces pale against that rosy flame,
The mild-eyed melancholy Lotos-eaters came.

Branches they bore of that enchanted stem,
Laden with flower and fruit, whereof they gave 30 To each, but whoso did receive of them
And taste, to him the gushing of the wave
Far far away did seem to mourn and rave
On alien shores; and if his fellow spake,
His voice was thin, as voices from the grave;
35 And deep-asleep he seemed, yet all awake,
And music in his ears his beating heart did make.

They sat them down upon the yellow sand,
Between the sun and moon upon the shore;
And sweet it was to dream of Fatherland,
40 Of child, and wife, and slave; but evermore
Most weary seemed the sea, weary the oar,
Weary the wandering fields of barren foam.
Then some one said, "We will return no more;"
And all at once they sang, "Our island home
45 Is far beyond the wave; we will no longer roam."

Choric Song

1

There is sweet music here that softer falls
Than petals from blown roses on the grass,
Or night-dews on still waters between walls
Of shadowy granite, in a gleaming pass;
50 Music that gentlier on the spirit lies,
Than tired eyelids upon tired eyes;
Music that brings sweet sleep down from the blissful skies.
Here are cool mosses deep,
And through the moss the ivies creep,
55 And in the stream the long-leaved flowers weep,
And from the craggy ledge the poppy hangs in sleep.

2

Why are we weighed upon with heaviness,
And utterly consumed with sharp distress,
While all things else have rest from weariness?
60 All things have rest: why should we toil alone,
We only toil, who are the first of things,

3. A reedlike plant, a species of marsh grass.

And make perpetual moan,
Still from one sorrow to another thrown;
Nor ever fold our wings,
65 And cease from wanderings,
Nor steep our brows in slumber's holy balm;
Nor harken what the inner spirit sings,
"There is no joy but calm!"
Why should we only toil, the roof and crown of things?

3

70 Lo! in the middle of the wood,
The folded leaf is wooed from out the bud
With winds upon the branch, and there
Grows green and broad, and takes no care,
Sun-steeped at noon, and in the moon
75 Nightly dew-fed; and turning yellow
Falls, and floats adown the air.
Lo! sweetened with the summer light,
The full-juiced apple, waxing over-mellow,
Drops in a silent autumn night.
80 All its allotted length of days,
The flower ripens in its place,
Ripens and fades, and falls, and hath no toil,
Fast-rooted in the fruitful soil.

4

Hateful is the dark-blue sky,
85 Vaulted o'er the dark-blue sea.
Death is the end of life; ah, why Should life all labor be?
Let us alone. Time driveth onward fast
And in a little while our lips are dumb.
90 Let us alone. What is it that will last?
All things are taken from us, and become
Portions and parcels of the dreadful Past.
Let us alone. What pleasure can we have To war with evil? Is there any peace
95 In ever climbing up the climbing wave?
All things have rest, and ripen toward the grave
In silence; ripen, fall, and cease:
Give us long rest or death, dark death, or dreamful ease.

5

How sweet it were, hearing the downward stream, 100 With half-shut eyes ever to seem
Falling asleep in a half-dream!
To dream and dream, like yonder amber light,
Which will not leave the myrrh-bush on the height;
To hear each other's whispered speech;
105 Eating the Lotos day by day,
To watch the crisping° ripples on the beach, curling

And tender curving lines of creamy spray;
To lend our hearts and spirits wholly
To the influence of mild-minded melancholy;
110 To muse and brood and live again in memory,
With those old faces of our infancy
Heaped over with a mound of grass,
Two handfuls of white dust, shut in an urn of brass!

6

Dear is the memory of our wedded lives,
115 And dear the last embraces of our wives
And their warm tears: but all hath suffered change:
For surely now our household hearths are cold:
Our sons inherit us: our looks are strange:
And we should come like ghosts to trouble joy.
120 Or else the island princes[4] over-bold
Have eat our substance, and the minstrel sings
Before them of the ten years' war in Troy,
And our great deeds, as half-forgotten things.
Is there confusion in the little isle?
125 Let what is broken so remain.
The Gods are hard to reconcile:
'Tis hard to settle order once again.
There is confusion worse than death,
Trouble on trouble, pain on pain,
130 Long labor unto agèd breath,
Sore tasks to hearts worn out by many wars
And eyes grown dim with gazing on the pilot-stars.

7

But, propt on beds of amaranth and moly,[5]
How sweet (while warm airs lull us, blowing lowly) 135 With half-dropt eyelid still,
Beneath a heaven dark and holy,
To watch the long bright river drawing slowly
His waters from the purple hill—
To hear the dewy echoes calling 140 From cave to cave through the thick-twinèd vine—
To watch the emerald-colored water falling
Through many a woven acanthus-wreath divine!
Only to hear and see the far-off sparkling brine,
Only to hear were sweet, stretched out beneath the pine.

8

145 The Lotos blooms below the barren peak,
The Lotos blows by every winding creek;
All day the wind breathes low with mellower tone;
Through every hollow cave and alley lone
Round and round the spicy downs the yellow Lotos-dust is blown.

4. The princes who had remained behind in Ithaca ("the little isle," line 124) while Odysseus was at Troy.

5. An herb with magical properties. Amaranth: a legendary flower, reputed not to fade.

150 We have had enough of action, and of motion we,
Rolled to starboard, rolled to larboard, when the surge was seething free,
Where the wallowing monster spouted his foam-fountains in the sea.
Let us swear an oath, and keep it with an equal mind,
In the hollow Lotos-land to live and lie reclined
155 On the hills like Gods together, careless of mankind.
For they lie beside their nectar, and the bolts are hurled
Far below them in the valleys, and the clouds are lightly curled
Round their golden houses, girdled with the gleaming world:
Where they smile in secret, looking over wasted lands, 160 Blight and famine, plague and earthquake, roaring deeps and fiery sands,
Clanging fights, and flaming towns, and sinking ships, and praying hands.
But they smile, they find a music centered in a doleful song
Steaming up, a lamentation and an ancient tale of wrong,
Like a tale of little meaning though the words are strong;
165 Chanted from an ill-used race of men that cleave the soil,
Sow the seed, and reap the harvest with enduring toil,
Storing yearly little dues of wheat, and wine and oil;
Till they perish and they suffer—some,'tis whispered—down in hell
Suffer endless anguish, others in Elysian valleys dwell,
170 Resting weary limbs at last on beds of asphodel.[6]
Surely, surely, slumber is more sweet than toil, the shore
Than labor in the deep mid-ocean, wind and wave and oar;
O, rest ye, brother mariners, we will not wander more.

1832, 1842

Ulysses[7]

It little profits that an idle king,
By this still hearth, among these barren crags,
Matched with an agèd wife, I mete and dole
Unequal laws unto a savage race,
5 That hoard, and sleep, and feed, and know not me.

I cannot rest from travel: I will drink
Life to the lees: all times I have enjoyed Greatly, have suffered greatly, both with those
That loved me, and alone; on shore, and when 10 Through scudding drifts the rainy Hyades[8]
Vext the dim sea: I am become a name;
For always roaming with a hungry heart

6. A plant of the lily family supposed to grow in the Elysian valleys.
7. Tennyson's Ulysses (Odysseus), restless after his return to Ithaca, eager to renew the life of great deeds he had known during the Trojan War and the adventures of his ten-year journey home, resembles the figure of Ulysses presented by Dante (Inferno 26).
8. A group of stars in the constellation Taurus, believed to foretell the coming of rain when they rose with the sun.

Much have I seen and known; cities of men
And manners, climates, councils, governments,
15 Myself not least, but honored of them all;
And drunk delight of battle with my peers,
Far on the ringing plains of windy Troy.
I am a part of all that I have met;
Yet all experience is an arch wherethrough
20 Gleams that untraveled world whose margin fades
For ever and for ever when I move.
How dull it is to pause, to make an end,
To rust unburnished, not to shine in use!
As though to breathe were life! Life piled on life
25 Were all too little, and of one to me
Little remains: but every hour is saved
From that eternal silence, something more,
A bringer of new things; and vile it were
For some three suns to store and hoard myself,
30 And this gray spirit yearning in desire
To follow knowledge like a sinking star,
Beyond the utmost bound of human thought.

This is my son, mine own Telemachus,
To whom I leave the scepter and the isle—
35 Well-loved of me, discerning to fulfill
This labor, by slow prudence to make mild
A rugged people, and through soft degrees
Subdue them to the useful and the good.
Most blameless is he, centered in the sphere
40 Of common duties, decent not to fail
In offices of tenderness, and pay
Meet adoration to my household gods,
When I am gone. He works his work, I mine.

There lies the port; the vessel puffs her sail:
45 There gloom the dark, broad seas. My mariners,
Souls that have toiled, and wrought, and thought with me—
That ever with a frolic welcome took
The thunder and the sunshine, and opposed
Free hearts, free foreheads—you and I are old;
50 Old age hath yet his honor and his toil;
Death closes all: but something ere the end,
Some work of noble note, may yet be done,
Not unbecoming men that strove with Gods.
The lights begin to twinkle from the rocks:
55 The long day wanes: the slow moon climbs: the deep Moans round with many voices. Come, my friends,
'Tis not too late to seek a newer world.
Push off, and sitting well in order smite
The sounding furrows; for my purpose holds
60 To sail beyond the sunset, and the baths
Of all the western stars, until I die.
It may be that the gulfs will wash us down:

It may be we shall touch the Happy Isles,[9]
And see the great Achilles, whom we knew.
65 Though much is taken, much abides; and though
We are not now that strength which in old days
Moved earth and heaven; that which we are, we are,
One equal temper of heroic hearts,
Made weak by time and fate, but strong in will 70 To strive, to seek, to find, and not to yield.

1833 1842

Break, Break, Break

Break, break, break,
On thy cold gray stones, O Sea!
And I would that my tongue could utter
The thoughts that arise in me.

5 O well for the fisherman's boy,
That he shouts with his sister at play!
O well for the sailor lad,
That he sings in his boat on the bay!

And the stately ships go on 10 To their haven under the hill;
But O for the touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still!

Break, break, break,
At the foot of thy crags, O Sea!
15 But the tender grace of a day that is dead
Will never come back to me.

1834 1842

Songs from The Princess[1]

The Splendor Falls

The splendor falls on castle walls
And snowy summits old in story:
The long light shakes across the lakes,
And the wild cataract° leaps in glory. waterfall
5 Blow, bugle, blow, set the wild echoes flying,
Blow, bugle; answer, echoes, dying, dying, dying.

9. The Islands of the Blessed, or Elysium, the abode after death of those favored by the gods, especially heroes and patriots; supposed, in earlier myth, to be located beyond the western limits of the known world.

1. A long narrative poem in blank verse, except for songs such as those printed here.

O hark, O hear! how thin and clear,
 And thinner, clearer, farther going!
O sweet and far from cliff and scar[2]
10 The horns of Elfland faintly blowing!
Blow, let us hear the purple glens replying:
Blow, bugle; answer, echoes, dying, dying, dying.

O love, they die in yon rich sky,
 They faint on hill or field or river:
15 Our echoes roll from soul to soul,
 And grow for ever and for ever.
Blow, bugle, blow, set the wild echoes flying,
And answer, echoes, answer, dying, dying, dying.

1850

Tears, Idle Tears

Tears, idle tears, I know not what they mean,
Tears from the depth of some divine despair
Rise in the heart, and gather to the eyes,
In looking on the happy Autumn-fields,
5 And thinking of the days that are no more.

Fresh as the first beam glittering on a sail,
That brings our friends up from the underworld,
Sad as the last which reddens over one
That sinks with all we love below the verge;
10 So sad, so fresh, the days that are no more.

Ah, sad and strange as in dark summer dawns
The earliest pipe of half-awakened birds
To dying ears, when unto dying eyes
The casement slowly grows a glimmering square;
15 So sad, so strange, the days that are no more.

Dear as remembered kisses after death,
And sweet as those by hopeless fancy feigned
On lips that are for others; deep as love,
Deep as first love, and wild with all regret;
20 O Death in Life, the days that are no more!

1847

Now Sleeps the Crimson Petal

Now sleeps the crimson petal, now the white;
Nor waves the cypress in the palace walk;
Nor winks the gold fin in the porphyry font:[3]
The firefly wakens: waken thou with me.

2. Isolated rock, or rocky height.

3. Basin. Porphyry is a type of hard rock.

5 Now droops the milkwhite peacock like a ghost,
And like a ghost she glimmers on to me.

Now lies the Earth all Danaë[4] to the stars,
And all thy heart lies open unto me.

Now slides the silent meteor on, and leaves
10 A shining furrow, as thy thoughts in me.

Now folds the lily all her sweetness up,
And slips into the bosom of the lake:
So fold thyself, my dearest, thou, and slip
Into my bosom and be lost in me.

1847

From In Memoriam A.H.H.[5]

OBIIT. MDCCCXXXIII[6]

1

I held it truth, with him who sings
To one clear harp in divers tones,[7]
That men may rise on stepping-stones
Of their dead selves to higher things.

5 But who shall so forecast the years
And find in loss a gain to match?
Or reach a hand through time to catch
The far-off interest of tears?

Let Love clasp Grief lest both be drowned,
10 Let darkness keep her raven gloss:
Ah, sweeter to be drunk with loss,
To dance with death, to beat the ground,

Than that the victor Hours should scorn
The long result of love, and boast,
15 "Behold the man that loved and lost,
But all he was is overworn."

4. A princess in ancient Greece whose father, warned by an oracle that she would bear a son who would kill him, shut her up in a bronze chamber, where she was visited by Zeus, the supreme god, in a shower of gold.
5. Arthur Henry Hallam (1811–1833) had been Tennyson's close friend at Cambridge, they had traveled together in France and Germany, and Hallam had been engaged to the poet's sister. To his associates at Cambridge, Hallam had seemed to give the most brilliant promise of greatness. In the summer of 1833, when he had been traveling on the Continent with his father, Hallam died, of a stroke, in Vienna.
6. Died 1833.
7. According to Tennyson, the German poet Johann Wolfgang von Goethe (1749–1832).

2

Old Yew, which graspest at the stones
That name the under-lying dead,
Thy fibers net the dreamless head,
Thy roots are wrapt about the bones.

5 The seasons bring the flowers again,
And bring the firstling to the flock;
And in the dusk of thee, the clock
Beats out the little lives of men.

O not for thee the glow, the bloom,
10 Who changest not in any gale,
Nor branding summer suns avail
To touch thy thousand years of gloom:

And gazing on thee, sullen tree,
Sick for thy stubborn hardihood,
15 I seem to fail from out my blood
And grow incorporate into thee.

7

Dark house, by which once more I stand
Here in the long unlovely street,[8]
Doors, where my heart was used to beat
So quickly, waiting for a hand,

5 A hand that can be clasped no more—
Behold me, for I cannot sleep,
And like a guilty thing I creep
At earliest morning to the door.

He is not here; but far away
10 The noise of life begins again,
And ghastly through the drizzling rain
On the bald street breaks the blank day.

11

Calm is the morn without a sound,
Calm as to suit a calmer grief,
And only through the faded leaf
The chestnut pattering to the ground:

5 Calm and deep peace on this high wold,° upland plain
And on these dews that drench the furze,° a shrub
And all the silvery gossamers
That twinkle into green and gold:

8. I.e., Wimpole St., where Hallam had been living after he left Cambridge.

Calm and still light on yon great plain
10 That sweeps with all its autumn bowers,
And crowded farms and lessening towers,
To mingle with the bounding main:

Calm and deep peace in this wide air,
These leaves that redden to the fall;
15 And in my heart, if calm at all,
If any calm, a calm despair:

Calm on the seas, and silver sleep,
And waves that sway themselves in rest,
And dead calm in the noble breast
20 Which heaves but with the heaving deep.

19

The Danube to the Severn gave
The darkened heart that beat no more;[9]
They laid him by the pleasant shore,
And in the hearing of the wave.

5 There twice a day the Severn fills;
The salt sea-water passes by,
And hushes half the babbling Wye,[1]
And makes a silence in the hills.

The Wye is hushed nor moved along,
10 And hushed my deepest grief of all,
When filled with tears that cannot fall,
I brim with sorrow drowning song.

The tide flows down, the wave again
Is vocal in its wooded walls;
15 My deeper anguish also falls,
And I can speak a little then.

50

Be near me when my light is low,
When the blood creeps, and the nerves prick
And tingle; and the heart is sick,
And all the wheels of Being slow.

5 Be near me when the sensuous frame
Is racked with pangs that conquer trust;
And Time, a maniac scattering dust,
And Life, a Fury slinging flame.

9. Vienna, where Hallam died, is on the Danube; the Severn empties into the Bristol Channel near Clevedon, Somersetshire, Hallam's burial place.
1. The Wye, a tributary of the Severn, also runs into the Bristol Channel; the incoming tide deepens the river and makes it quiet, but as the tide ebbs the Wye once more becomes "vocal" (line 14).

Be near me when my faith is dry,
10 And men the flies of latter spring,
That lay their eggs, and sting and sing
And weave their petty cells and die.

Be near me when I fade away,
To point the term of human strife,
15 And on the low dark verge of life
The twilight of eternal day.

54

Oh yet we trust that somehow good
Will be the final goal of ill,
To pangs of nature, sins of will,
Defects of doubt, and taints of blood;

5 That nothing walks with aimless feet;
That not one life shall be destroyed,
Or cast as rubbish to the void,
When God hath made the pile complete;

That not a worm is cloven in vain;
10 That not a moth with vain desire
Is shriveled in a fruitless fire,
Or but subserves another's gain.

Behold, we know not anything;
I can but trust that good shall fall
15 At last—far off—at last, to all,
And every winter change to spring.

So runs my dream: but what am I?
An infant crying in the night:
An infant crying for the light:
20 And with no language but a cry.

55

The wish, that of the living whole
No life may fail beyond the grave,
Derives it not from what we have
The likest God within the soul?

5 Are God and Nature then at strife,
That Nature lends such evil dreams?
So careful of the type° she seems, species
So careless of the single life;

That I, considering everywhere
10 Her secret meaning in her deeds,

And finding that of fifty seeds
She often brings but one to bear,

I falter where I firmly trod,
And falling with my weight of cares
15 Upon the great world's altar-stairs
That slope through darkness up to God,

I stretch lame hands of faith, and grope,
And gather dust and chaff, and call
To what I feel is Lord of all,
20 And faintly trust the larger hope.

56

"So careful of the type?" but no.
From scarpèd[2] cliff and quarried stone
She[3] cries, "A thousand types are gone;
I care for nothing, all shall go.

5 "Thou makest thine appeal to me:
I bring to life, I bring to death:
The spirit does but mean the breath:
I know no more." And he, shall he,

Man, her last work, who seemed so fair,
10 Such splendid purpose in his eyes,
Who rolled the psalm to wintry skies,
Who built him fanes° of fruitless prayer, temples, churches

Who trusted God was love indeed
And love Creation's final law—
15 Though Nature, red in tooth and claw
With ravine,° shrieked against his creed— seizing prey

Who loved, who suffered countless ills,
Who battled for the True, the Just,
Be blown about the desert dust,
20 Or sealed within the iron hills?

No more? A monster then, a dream,
A discord. Dragons of the prime,
That tare° each other in their slime, tore (archaic)
Were mellow music matched with him.

25 O life as futile, then, as frail!
O for thy voice to soothe and bless!
What hope of answer, or redress?
Behind the veil, behind the veil.

2. Cut down vertically, thus displaying the strata of geologic growth and the fossils they contain.

3. I.e., Nature.

67

When on my bed the moonlight falls,
I know that in thy place of rest
By that broad water of the west
There comes a glory on the walls;[4]

5 Thy marble bright in dark appears,
As slowly steals a silver flame
Along the letters of thy name,
And o'er the number of thy years.

The mystic glory swims away;
10 From off my bed the moonlight dies;
And closing eaves of wearied eyes
I sleep till dusk is dipt in gray:

And then I know the mist is drawn
A lucid veil from coast to coast,
15 And in the dark church like a ghost
Thy tablet glimmers to the dawn.

88

Wild bird, whose warble, liquid sweet,
Rings Eden through the budded quicks,[5]
O tell me where the senses mix,
O tell me where the passions meet,

5 Whence radiate: fierce extremes employ
Thy spirits in the darkening leaf,
And in the midmost heart of grief
Thy passion clasps a secret joy:

And I—my harp would prelude woe—
10 I cannot all command the strings;
The glory of the sum of things
Will flash along the chords and go.

95

By night we lingered on the lawn,
For underfoot the herb was dry;
And genial warmth; and o'er the sky
The silvery haze of summer drawn;

5 And calm that let the tapers burn
Unwavering: not a cricket chirred;

4. Hallam's tomb is inside Clevedon Church, just south of Clevedon, Somersetshire, on a hill overlooking the Bristol Channel.
5. Hawthorn hedges.

The brook alone far-off was heard,
And on the board the fluttering urn:[6]

And bats went round in fragrant skies,
10 And wheeled or lit the filmy shapes[7]
That haunt the dusk, with ermine capes
And woolly breasts and beaded eyes;

While now we sang old songs that pealed
From knoll to knoll, where, couched at ease,
15 The white kine° glimmered, and the trees cattle
Laid their dark arms about the field.

But when those others, one by one,
Withdrew themselves from me and night,
And in the house light after light
20 Went out, and I was all alone,

A hunger seized my heart; I read
Of that glad year which once had been,
In those fallen leaves which kept their green,
The noble letters of the dead:

25 And strangely on the silence broke
The silent-speaking words, and strange
Was love's dumb cry defying change
To test his worth; and strangely spoke

The faith, the vigor, bold to dwell
30 On doubts that drive the coward back,
And keen through wordy snares to track
Suggestion to her inmost cell.

So word by word, and line by line,
The dead man touched me from the past,
35 And all at once it seemed at last
The living soul was flashed on mine,

And mine in this was wound, and whirled
About empyreal heights of thought,
And came on that which is, and caught
40 The deep pulsations of the world,

Æonian music[8] measuring out
The steps of Time—the shocks of Chance—
The blows of Death. At length my trance
Was cancelled, stricken through with doubt.

6. I.e., on the table an urn for making tea or coffee, heated by a fluttering flame beneath.
7. White-winged night moths called ermine moths.
8. I.e., the rhythm of the universe; it has persisted for eons.

45 Vague words! but ah, how hard to frame
In matter-molded forms of speech,
Or even for intellect to reach
Through memory that which I became:

Till now the doubtful dusk revealed
50 The knolls once more where, couched at ease,
The white kine glimmered, and the trees
Laid their dark arms about the field:

And sucked from out the distant gloom
A breeze began to tremble o'er
55 The large leaves of the sycamore,
And fluctuate all the still perfume,

And gathering freshlier overhead,
Rocked the full-foliaged elms, and swung
The heavy-folded rose, and flung
60 The lilies to and fro, and said

"The dawn, the dawn," and died away;
And East and West, without a breath,
Mixt their dim lights, like life and death,
To broaden into boundless day.

119

Doors, where my heart was used to beat
So quickly, not as one that weeps
I come once more; the city sleeps;
I smell the meadow in the street;

5 I hear a chirp of birds; I see
Betwixt the black fronts long-withdrawn
A light-blue lane of early dawn,
And think of early days and thee,

And bless thee, for thy lips are bland,
10 And bright the friendship of thine eye;
And in my thoughts with scarce a sigh
I take the pressure of thine hand.

121

Sad Hesper° o'er the buried sun — evening star
And ready, thou, to die with him,
Thou watchest all things ever dim
And dimmer, and a glory done:

5 The team is loosened from the wain,° — wagon
The boat is drawn upon the shore;

Thou listenest to the closing door,
And life is darkened in the brain.

Bright Phosphor,° fresher for the night, morning star
10 By thee the world's great work is heard
Beginning, and the wakeful bird;
Behind thee comes the greater light:

The market boat is on the stream,
And voices hail it from the brink;
15 Thou hear'st the village hammer clink,
And see'st the moving of the team.

Sweet Hesper-Phosphor, double name[9]
For what is one, the first, the last,
Thou, like my present and my past,
20 Thy place is changed; thou art the same.

130

Thy voice is on the rolling air;
I hear thee where the waters run;
Thou standest in the rising sun,
And in the setting thou art fair.

5 What are thou then? I cannot guess;
But though I seem in star and flower
To feel thee some diffusive power,
I do not therefore love thee less:

My love involves the love before;
10 My love is vaster passion now;
Though mixed with God and Nature thou,
I seem to love thee more and more.

Far off thou art, but ever nigh;
I have thee still, and I rejoice;
15 I prosper, circled with thy voice;
I shall not lose thee though I die.

1833–50 1850

The Eagle

Fragment

He clasps the crag with crooked hands;
Close to the sun in lonely lands,
Ringed with the azure world, he stands.

9. Hesper and Phosphor are both the planet Venus.

The wrinkled sea beneath him crawls;
5 He watches from his mountain walls,
And like a thunderbolt he falls.

1851

The Charge of the Light Brigade[1]

1

Half a league, half a league,
Half a league onward,
All in the valley of Death
Rode the six hundred.
5 "Forward, the Light Brigade!
Charge for the guns!" he said:
Into the valley of Death
Rode the six hundred.

2

"Forward, the Light Brigade!"
10 Was there a man dismayed?
Not though the soldier knew
Some one had blundered:
Theirs not to make reply,
Theirs not to reason why,
15 Theirs but to do and die:
Into the valley of Death
Rode the six hundred.

3

Cannon to right of them,
Cannon to left of them,
20 Cannon in front of them
Volleyed and thundered;
Stormed at with shot and shell,
Boldly they rode and well,
Into the jaws of Death,
25 Into the mouth of Hell
Rode the six hundred.

4

Flashed all their sabers° bare, curved swords
Flashed as they turned in air
Sabring the gunners there,
30 Charging an army, while
All the world wondered:
Plunged in the battery-smoke

1. Written after Tennyson had read an account in the London Times of an incident in the Crimean War when, due to confused orders, three-quarters of a British cavalry unit were cut down by a battery of Russian artillery they had charged with reckless courage.

Right through the line they broke;
Cossack and Russian
35 Reeled from the saber-stroke
Shattered and sundered.
Then they rode back, but not
Not the six hundred.

5

Cannon to right of them,
40 Cannon to left of them,
Cannon behind them
Volleyed and thundered;
Stormed at with shot and shell,
While horse and hero fell,
45 They that had fought so well
Came through the jaws of Death,
Back from the mouth of Hell,
All that was left of them,
Left of six hundred.

6

50 When can their glory fade?
O the wild charge they made!
All the world wondered.
Honor the charge they made!
Honor the Light Brigade,
55 Noble six hundred!

1854 1855

Tithonus[2]

The woods decay, the woods decay and fall,
The vapors weep their burthen to the ground,
Man comes and tills the field and lies beneath,
And after many a summer dies the swan.
5 Me only cruel immortality
Consumes: I wither slowly in thine arms,
Here at the quiet limit of the world,
A white-haired shadow roaming like a dream
The ever-silent spaces of the East,
10 Far-folded mists, and gleaming halls of morn.

Alas! for this gray shadow, once a man—
So glorious in his beauty and thy choice,
Who madest him thy chosen, that he seemed
To his great heart none other than a God!
15 I asked thee, "Give me immortality."
Then didst thou grant mine asking with a smile,

2. A Trojan prince beloved by Aurora, Roman goddess of the dawn, who took him as her spouse. She begged Jupiter, the supreme god, to grant him eternal life, but forgot to ask also for the gift of eternal youth.

Like wealthy men who care not how they give.
But thy strong Hours indignant worked their wills,
And beat me down and marred and wasted me,
20 And though they could not end me, left me maimed
To dwell in presence of immortal youth.
Immortal age beside immortal youth,
And all I was, in ashes. Can thy love,
Thy beauty, make amends, though even now,
25 Close over us, the silver star,[3] thy guide,
Shines in those tremulous eyes that fill with tears
To hear me? Let me go: take back thy gift:
Why should a man desire in any way
To vary from the kindly race of men,
30 Or pass beyond the goal of ordinance[4]
Where all should pause, as is most meet for all?

A soft air fans the cloud apart; there comes
A glimpse of that dark world where I was born.
Once more the old mysterious glimmer steals
35 From thy pure brows, and from thy shoulders pure,
And bosom beating with a heart renewed.
Thy cheek begins to redden through the gloom,
Thy sweet eyes brighten slowly close to mine,
Ere yet they blind the stars, and the wild team[5]
40 Which love thee, yearning for thy yoke, arise,
And shake the darkness from their loosened manes,
And beat the twilight into flakes of fire.
Lo! ever thus thou growest beautiful
In silence, then before thine answer given 45 Departest, and thy tears are on my cheek.

Why wilt thou ever scare me with thy tears,
And make me tremble lest a saying learnt,
In days far-off, on that dark earth, be true?
"The Gods themselves cannot recall their gifts."
50 Ay me! ay me! with what another heart
In days far-off, and with what other eyes
I used to watch—if I be he that watched—
The lucid outline forming round thee; saw
The dim curls kindle into sunny rings;
55 Changed with thy mystic change, and felt my blood
Glow with the glow that slowly crimsoned all
Thy presence and thy portals, while I lay,
Mouth, forehead, eyelids, growing dewy-warm
With kisses balmier than half-opening buds
60 Of April, and could hear the lips that kissed
Whispering I knew not what of wild and sweet,
Like that strange song I heard Apollo° sing, god of music
While Ilion like a mist rose into towers.[6]

3. I.e., the morning star.
4. What is ordained as human destiny.
5. The horses that draw Aurora's chariot into the sky at dawn.
6. According to legend, the walls and towers of Ilion (Troy) were raised by the sound of Apollo's song, as related by Ovid, Heroides 16.179.

Yet hold me not for ever in thine East:
65 How can my nature longer mix with thine?
Coldly thy rosy shadows bathe me, cold
Are all thy lights, and cold my wrinkled feet
Upon thy glimmering thresholds, when the steam
Floats up from those dim fields about the homes
70 Of happy men that have the power to die,
And grassy barrows° of the happier dead. grave mounds
Release me, and restore me to the ground;
Thou seëst all things, thou wilt see my grave:
Thou wilt renew thy beauty morn by morn;
75 I earth in earth forget these empty courts,
And thee returning on thy silver wheels.

1833, 1859 1860

"Frater Ave atque Vale"[7]

Row us out from Desenzano, to your Sirmione row!
So they rowed, and there we landed—"O venusta Sirmio!"[8]
There to me through all the groves of olive in the summer glow,
There beneath the Roman ruin where the purple flowers grow,
5 Came that "Ave atque Vale" of the Poet's hopeless woe,
Tenderest of Roman poets nineteen-hundred years ago,
"Frater Ave atque Vale"—as we wandered to and fro
Gazing at the Lydian laughter of the Garda Lake below[9]
Sweet Catullus's all-but-island, olive-silvery Sirmio!

1880 1885

Crossing the Bar

Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar,[1]
When I put out to sea,

5 But such a tide as moving seems asleep,
Too full for sound and foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep
Turns again home.

7. The title (Latin: "Brother, hail and farewell") is the concluding phrase of Catullus's poem number 101, in which the poet records the journey to visit his brother's tomb, in Asia Minor. Tennyson's poem, written on a visit to the little peninsula of Sirmio (on Lake Garda, in northern Italy), shortly after his own brother had died, echoes phrases from poem 31, in which Catullus describes his pleasure in returning to Sirmio after a long absence.
8. O lovely Sirmio (Latin).
9. Catullus's line "And rejoice, O Lydian waves of the lake" (31.13) alludes to the old belief that the Etruscans of the Garda region had originated in Lydia, in Asia Minor.
1. Mournful sound of waves beating on a sandbar.

Twilight and evening bell,
10 And after that the dark!
And may there be no sadness of farewell,
When I embark;

For though from out our bourne° of Time and Place — boundary
The flood may bear me far,
15 I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crost the bar.

1889 1889

ROBERT BROWNING
1812–1889

Porphyria's Lover[1]

The rain set early in tonight,
The sullen wind was soon awake,
It tore the elm-tops down for spite,
And did its worst to vex the lake:
5 I listened with heart fit to break.
When glided in Porphyria; straight
She shut the cold out and the storm,
And kneeled and made the cheerless grate
Blaze up, and all the cottage warm;
10 Which done, she rose, and from her form
Withdrew the dripping cloak and shawl,
And laid her soiled gloves by, untied
Her hat and let the damp hair fall,
And, last, she sat down by my side
15 And called me. When no voice replied,
She put my arm about her waist,
And made her smooth white shoulder bare,
And all her yellow hair displaced,
And, stooping, made my cheek lie there,
20 And spread, o'er all, her yellow hair,
Murmuring how she loved me—she
Too weak, for all her heart's endeavor,
To set its struggling passion free
From pride, and vainer ties dissever,
25 And give herself to me forever.
But passion sometimes would prevail,
Nor could tonight's gay feast restrain
A sudden thought of one so pale
For love of her, and all in vain:
30 So, she was come through wind and rain.

1. Originally published with another monologue under the title Madhouse Cells, which indicated the speaker's abnormal state of mind.

Be sure I looked up at her eyes
    Happy and proud; at last I knew
Porphyria worshiped me: surprise
    Made my heart swell, and still it grew 35   While I debated what to do.
That moment she was mine, mine, fair,
    Perfectly pure and good: I found
A thing to do, and all her hair
    In one long yellow string I wound
40   Three times her little throat around,
And strangled her. No pain felt she;
    I am quite sure she felt no pain.
As a shut bud that holds a bee,
    I warily oped her lids: again
45   Laughed the blue eyes without a stain.
And I untightened next the tress
    About her neck; her cheek once more
Blushed bright beneath my burning kiss:
    I propped her head up as before,
50   Only, this time my shoulder bore
Her head, which droops upon it still:
    The smiling rosy little head,
So glad it has its utmost will,
    That all it scorned at once is fled,
55   And I, its love, am gained instead!
Porphyria's love: she guessed not how
    Her darling one wish would be heard.
And thus we sit together now,
    And all night long we have not stirred,
60   And yet God has not said a word!

1834 1836, 1842

Soliloquy of the Spanish Cloister

1

Gr-r-r—there go, my heart's abhorrence!
  Water your damned flower-pots, do!
If hate killed men, Brother Lawrence,
  God's blood, would not mine kill you!
5 What? your myrtle-bush wants trimming?
  Oh, that rose has prior claims—
Needs its leaden vase filled brimming?
  Hell dry you up with its flames!

2

At the meal we sit together:
10 Salve tibi![2] I must hear
Wise talk of the kind of weather,
  Sort of season, time of year:

2. Hail to thee! (Latin).

Not a plenteous cork-crop: scarcely
Dare we hope oak-galls,[3] I doubt:
15 What's the Latin name for "parsley"?
What's the Greek name for Swine's Snout?[4]

3

Whew! We'll have our platter burnished,
Laid with care on our own shelf!
With a fire-new spoon we're furnished,
20 And a goblet for ourself,
Rinsed like something sacrificial
Ere 'tis fit to touch our chaps—
Marked with L for our initial!
(He-he! There his lily snaps!)

4

25 Saint, forsooth! While brown Dolores
Squats outside the Convent bank
With Sanchicha, telling stories,
Steeping tresses in the tank,
Blue-black, lustrous, thick like horsehairs,
30 —Can't I see his dead eye glow,
Bright as 'twere a Barbary corsair's?[5]
(That is, if he'd let it show!)

5

When he finishes refection,° dinner
Knife and fork he never lays 35 Cross-wise, to my recollection,
As do I, in Jesu's praise.
I the Trinity illustrate,
Drinking watered orange-pulp—
In three sips the Arian[6] frustrate;
40 While he drains his at one gulp.

6

Oh, those melons? If he's able
We're to have a feast! so nice!
One goes to the Abbot's table,
All of us get each a slice.
45 How go on your flowers? None double?
Not one fruit-sort can you spy?
Strange! And I, too, at such trouble,
Keep them close-nipped on the sly!

7

There's a great text in Galatians,[7]
50 Once you trip on it, entails

3. Growths produced on oak leaves by gallflies.
4. Nineteenth-century name for dandelion.
5. Barbary corsair: pirate from the Berber countries on the north coast of Africa.
6. Follower of Arius, a fourth-century Alexandrian heretic who denied the doctrine of the Trinity.
7. The line has sometimes been taken as referring to Galatians 3.10; but see Galatians 5.14–15, with its ironic applicability to the spirit of the monologue, and also 5.16–24.

Twenty-nine distinct damnations,
One sure, if another fails:
If I trip him just a-dying,
Sure of heaven as sure can be,
55 Spin him around and send him flying
Off to hell, a Manichee?[8]

8

Or, my scrofulous° French novel — morally corrupt
On gray paper with blunt type!
Simply glance at it, you grovel
60 Hand and foot in Belial's[9] gripe:
If I double down its pages
At the woeful sixteenth print,
When he gathers his greengages,° — greenish plums
Ope a sieve and slip it in't?

9

65 Or, there's Satan! one might venture
Pledge one's soul to him, yet leave
Such a flaw in the indenture
As he'd miss till, past retrieve,
Blasted lay that rose-acacia
70 We're so proud of![1] Hy, Zy, Hine[2] . . .
'St, there's vespers! Plena gratiâ
Ave, Virgo![3] Gr-r-r—you swine!

ca. 1839 — 1842

My Last Duchess[4]

Ferrara

That's my last duchess painted on the wall,
Looking as if she were alive. I call
That piece a wonder, now: Frà Pandolf's hands
Worked busily a day, and there she stands.
5 Will't please you sit and look at her? I said
"Frà Pandolf" by design, for never read

8. The Manichean heresy, which the speaker hopes to lure Brother Lawrence into accepting, claimed that the world was divided between forces of good and forces of evil.
9. Hebrew personification of lawlessness, hence one of the names for the Devil.
1. The speaker seems to say that, if all else fails, he might secure Brother Lawrence's damnation by pledging his own soul to the Devil in return—but being careful to leave a flaw in the contract that would invalidate it.
2. Possibly an incantation used in calling up the Devil.
3. Full of grace, Hail, Virgin! (Latin). The speaker mixes up the opening words of the Ave Maria: "Ave, Maria, gratia plena."
4. The events of Browning's poem parallel historical events, but its emphasis is rather on truth to Renaissance attitudes than on historic specificity. Alfonso II d'Este, duke of Ferrara (born 1533), in Northern Italy, had married his first wife, daughter of Cosimo I de' Medici, duke of Florence, in 1558, when she was fourteen; she died on April 21, 1561, under suspicious circumstances, and soon after he opened negotiations for the hand of the niece of the count of Tyrol, the seat of whose court was at Innsbruck, in Austria. "Frà Pandolf" and "Claus of Innsbruck" are types rather than specific artists.

Strangers like you that pictured countenance,
The depth and passion of its earnest glance,
But to myself they turned (since none puts by 10 The curtain I have drawn for you, but I)
And seemed as they would ask me, if they durst,
How such a glance came there; so, not the first
Are you to turn and ask thus. Sir, 'twas not
Her husband's presence only, called that spot
15 Of joy into the Duchess' cheek: perhaps Frà Pandolf chanced to say "Her mantle laps
Over my lady's wrist too much," or "Paint
Must never hope to reproduce the faint
Half-flush that dies along her throat": such stuff
20 Was courtesy, she thought, and cause enough
For calling up that spot of joy. She had
A heart—how shall I say?—too soon made glad,
Too easily impressed; she liked whate'er
She looked on, and her looks went everywhere.
25 Sir, 'twas all one! My favor at her breast,
The dropping of the daylight in the West,
The bough of cherries some officious fool
Broke in the orchard for her, the white mule
She rode with round the terrace—all and each 30 Would draw from her alike the approving speech,
Or blush, at least. She thanked men—good! but thanked Somehow—I know not how—as if she ranked
My gift of a nine-hundred-years-old name
With anybody's gift. Who'd stoop to blame
35 This sort of trifling? Even had you skill
In speech—which I have not—to make your will Quite clear to such an one, and say, "Just this
Or that in you disgusts me; here you miss,
Or there exceed the mark"—and if she let 40 Herself be lessoned so, nor plainly set
Her wits to yours, forsooth, and made excuse,
—E'en then would be some stooping; and I choose Never to stoop. Oh sir, she smiled, no doubt, Whene'er I passed her; but who passed without 45 Much the same smile? This grew; I gave commands;
Then all smiles stopped together. There she stands
As if alive. Will 't please you rise? We'll meet
The company below, then. I repeat,
The Count your master's known munificence
50 Is ample warrant that no just pretense
Of mine for dowry will be disallowed;
Though his fair daughter's self, as I avowed
At starting, is my object. Nay, we'll go Together down, sir. Notice Neptune, though,
55 Taming a sea-horse, thought a rarity,
Which Claus of Innsbruck cast in bronze for me!

1842 1842

The Bishop Orders His Tomb at Saint Praxed's Church[5]

Rome, 15—

Vanity, saith the preacher, vanity![6]
Draw round my bed: is Anselm keeping back?
Nephews—sons mine . . . ah God, I know not! Well—
She, men would have to be your mother once,
5 Old Gandolf envied me, so fair she was!
What's done is done, and she is dead beside,
Dead long ago, and I am Bishop since,
And as she died so must we die ourselves,
And thence ye may perceive the world's a dream.
10 Life, how and what is it? As here I lie
In this state-chamber, dying by degrees,
Hours and long hours in the dead night, I ask
"Do I live, am I dead?" Peace, peace seems all.
Saint Praxed's ever was the church for peace;
15 And so, about this tomb of mine. I fought
With tooth and nail to save my niche, ye know:
—Old Gandolf cozened° me, despite my care; cheated
Shrewd was that snatch from out the corner south
He graced his carrion with, God curse the same!
20 Yet still my niche is not so cramped but thence
One sees the pulpit o' the epistle-side,[7]
And somewhat of the choir, those silent seats,
And up into the aery dome where live
The angels, and a sunbeam's sure to lurk:
25 And I shall fill my slab of basalt there,
And 'neath my tabernacle[8] take my rest,
With those nine columns round me, two and two,
The odd one at my feet where Anselm stands:
Peach-blossom marble all, the rare, the ripe
30 As fresh-poured red wine of a mighty pulse.
—Old Gandolf with his paltry onion-stone,
Put me where I may look at him! True peach,
Rosy and flawless: how I earned the prize!
Draw close: that conflagration of my church
35 —What then? So much was saved if aught were missed!
My sons, ye would not be my death? Go dig
The white-grape vineyard where the oil-press stood,
Drop water gently till the surface sink,
And if ye find . . . Ah God, I know not, I! . . .
40 Bedded in store of rotten fig-leaves soft,
And corded up in a tight olive-frail,° olive basket

5. The church of Santa Prassede, in Rome, dedicated to a Roman virgin, dates from the fifth century but was rebuilt early in the ninth and restored at later times. The sixteenth-century bishop who speaks here is a fictional figure, as is his predecessor, Gandolf.

6. An echo of Ecclesiastes 1.2: "Vanity of vanities, saith the Preacher, vanity of vanities; all is vanity."

7. The right-hand side as one faces the altar, the side from which the Epistles of the New Testament were read.

8. Canopy over his tomb.

Some lump, ah God, of lapis lazuli,[9]
Big as a Jew's head cut off at the nape,
Blue as a vein o'er the Madonna's breast . . .
45 Sons, all have I bequeathed you, villas, all,
That brave Frascati[1] villa with its bath,
So, let the blue lump poise between my knees,
Like God the Father's globe on both his hands
Ye worship in the Jesu Church[2] so gay,
50 For Gandolf shall not choose but see and burst!
Swift as a weaver's shuttle fleet our years:[3]
Man goeth to the grave, and where is he?
Did I say basalt for my slab, sons? Black—
'Twas ever antique-black I meant! How else
55 Shall ye contrast my frieze to come beneath?
The bas-relief in bronze ye promised me,
Those Pans and Nymphs ye wot of, and perchance
Some tripod, thyrsus,[4] with a vase or so,
The Saviour at his sermon on the mount,
60 Saint Praxed in a glory,[5] and one Pan
Ready to twitch the Nymph's last garment off,
And Moses with the tables° . . . but I know tablets
Ye mark me not! What do they whisper thee,
Child of my bowels, Anselm? Ah, ye hope
65 To revel down my villas while I gasp
Bricked o'er with beggar's moldy travertine[6]
Which Gandolf from his tomb-top chuckles at!
Nay, boys, ye love me—all of jasper,[7] then!
'T is jasper ye stand pledged to, lest I grieve
70 My bath must needs be left behind, alas!
One block, pure green as a pistachio-nut,
There's plenty jasper somewhere in the world—
And have I not Saint Praxed's ear to pray
Horses for ye, and brown Greek manuscripts,
75 And mistresses with great smooth marbly limbs?
—That's if ye carve my epitaph aright,
Choice Latin, picked phrase, Tully's[8] every word,
No gaudy ware like Gandolf's second line—
Tully, my masters? Ulpian[9] serves his need!
80 And then how I shall lie through centuries,
And hear the blessed mutter of the mass,
And see God made and eaten all day long,[1]
And feel the steady candle-flame, and taste
Good strong thick stupefying incense-smoke!

9. A vivid blue stone, one of the so-called hard stones, used for ornament.
1. A resort town in the mountains.
2. The baroque Jesuit church Il Gesù, in Rome. The sculptured group of the Trinity includes a terrestrial globe carved from the largest known block of lapis lazuli.
3. See Job 7.6: "My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle, and are spent without hope."
4. A staff ornamented with ivy or vine leaves, carried by followers of Bacchus, Roman god of wine and revelry.
5. Rays of gold, signifying sanctity, around the head or body of the saint portrayed.
6. Ordinary limestone used in building.
7. A variety of quartz.
8. Familiar name for Cicero (Marcus Tullius Cicero).
9. His Latin would be stylistically inferior to that of Cicero.
1. Refers to the doctrine of transubstantiation.

85 For as I lie here, hours of the dead night,
Dying in state and by such slow degrees,
I fold my arms as if they clasped a crook,[2]
And stretch my feet forth straight as stone can point,
And let the bedclothes, for a mortcloth,[3] drop 90 Into great laps and folds of sculptor's-work:
And as yon tapers dwindle, and strange thoughts
Grow, with a certain humming in my ears,
About the life before I lived this life,
And this life too, popes, cardinals and priests,
95 Saint Praxed at his sermon on the mount,[4]
Your tall pale mother with her talking eyes,
And new-found agate urns as fresh as day,
And marble's language, Latin pure, discreet,
—Aha, ELUCESCEBAT[5] quoth our friend?
100 No Tully, said I, Ulpian at the best!
Evil and brief hath been my pilgrimage.
All lapis, all, son! Else I give the Pope
My villas! Will ye ever eat my heart?
Ever your eyes were as a lizard's quick,
105 They glitter like your mother's for my soul,
Or ye would heighten my impoverished frieze,
Piece out its starved design, and fill my vase
With grapes, and add a vizor and a Term,[6]
And to the tripod ye would tie a lynx
110 That in his struggle throws the thyrsus down,
To comfort me on my entablature
Whereon I am to lie till I must ask
"Do I live, am I dead?" There, leave me, there!
For ye have stabbed me with ingratitude
115 To death—ye wish it—God, ye wish it! Stone—
Gritstone, a-crumble! Clammy squares which sweat
As if the corpse they keep were oozing through—
And no more lapis to delight the world!
Well, go! I bless ye. Fewer tapers there,
120 But in a row: and, going, turn your backs
—Ay, like departing altar-ministrants,
And leave me in my church, the church for peace,
That I may watch at leisure if he leers—
Old Gandolf, at me, from his onion-stone, 125 As still he envied me, so fair she was!

1844 1845, 1849

2. I.e., the bishop's crozier, with its emblematic resemblance to a shepherd's crook.
3. The pall with which a coffin is draped.
4. As the bishop's mind wanders, he attributes Christ's Sermon on the Mount to Santa Prassede.
5. A word from Gandolf's epitaph (a form of the Latin verb meaning "to shine forth"); the bishop claims that this form is inferior to elucebat, which Cicero would have used.
6. A pillar adorned with a bust of Terminus, Roman god of boundaries. Vizor: face mask on a helmet. Both are motifs of classical sculpture imitated by the Renaissance.

Home-Thoughts, from Abroad

1

Oh, to be in England
Now that April's there,
And whoever wakes in England
Sees, some morning, unaware,
5 That the lowest boughs and the brushwood sheaf
Round the elm-tree bole are in tiny leaf,
While the chaffinch sings on the orchard bough
In England—now!

2

And after April, when May follows,
10 And the whitethroat builds, and all the swallows!
Hark, where my blossomed pear-tree in the hedge
Leans to the field and scatters on the clover
Blossoms and dewdrops—at the bent spray's edge—
That's the wise thrush; he sings each song twice over,
15 Lest you should think he never could recapture
The first fine careless rapture!
And though the fields look rough with hoary dew
All will be gay when noontide wakes anew
The buttercups, the little children's dower
20 —Far brighter than this gaudy melon-flower!

ca. 1845 1845

A Toccata of Galuppi's[7]

1

Oh Galuppi, Baldassare, this is very sad to find!
I can hardly misconceive you; it would prove me deaf and blind;
But although I take your meaning, 'tis with such a heavy mind!

2

Here you come with your old music, and here's all the good it brings.
5 What, they lived once thus at Venice where the merchants were the kings,
Where Saint Mark's is, where the Doges used to wed the sea with rings?[8]

7. This poem presents the reflections of a nineteenth-century Englishman as he plays a toccata by the eighteenth-century Venetian composer Baldassare Galuppi. (A toccata is a "touch-piece," the word derived from the Italian verb toccare, "to touch": "a composition intended to exhibit the touch and execution of the performer," and hence often having the character of "showy improvisation" [Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians].
8. Each year the doge, chief magistrate of the Venetian republic, threw a ring into the sea with the ceremonial words "We wed thee, O sea, in sign of true and everlasting dominion."

3

Ay, because the sea's the street there; and 'tis arched by . . . what you call
. . . Shylock's bridge[9] with houses on it, where they kept the carnival:
I was never out of England—it's as if I saw it all.

4

10 Did young people take their pleasure when the sea was warm in May?
Balls and masks[1] begun at midnight, burning ever to mid-day,
When they made up fresh adventures for the morrow, do you say?

5

Was a lady such a lady, cheeks so round and lips so red—
On her neck the small face buoyant, like a bellflower on its bed,
15 O'er the breast's superb abundance where a man might base his head?

6

Well, and it was graceful of them—they'd break talk off and afford
—She, to bite her mask's black velvet—he, to finger on his sword,
While you sat and played Toccatas, stately at the clavichord?[2]

7

What? Those lesser thirds so plaintive, sixths diminished, sigh on sigh, 20 Told them something? Those suspensions, those solutions—"Must we die?"
Those commiserating sevenths[3]—"Life might last! we can but try!"

8

"Were you happy?" "Yes." "And are you still as happy?" "Yes. And you?"
"Then, more kisses!" "Did I stop them, when a million seemed so few?"
Hark, the dominant's persistence till it must be answered to!

9

25 So, an octave struck the answer. Oh, they praised you, I dare say!
"Brave Galuppi! that was music! good alike at grave and gay!
"I can always leave off talking when I hear a master play!"

10

Then they left you for their pleasure: till in due time, one by one,
Some with lives that came to nothing, some with deeds as well undone,
30 Death stepped tacitly and took them where they never see the sun.

9. The Rialto, a bridge over the Grand Canal.
1. Masquerades.
2. A keyboard instrument, similar to a piano but sounding more like a harpsichord. In stanzas 7–9, the quoted words represent the thoughts, feelings, or casual remarks of Galuppi's Venetian audience, now dispersed by death.
3. This term and others in these lines refer to the technical devices Galuppi used to produce alternating moods in his music, conflict in each case being resolved into harmony. Thus the "dominant" (the fifth note of the scale), after being persistently sounded, is answered by a resolving chord (lines 24–25).

11

But when I sit down to reason, think to take my stand nor swerve,
While I triumph o'er a secret wrung from nature's close reserve,
In you come with your cold music[4] till I creep through every nerve.

12

Yes, you, like a ghostly cricket, creaking where a house was burned:
35 "Dust and ashes, dead and done with, Venice spent what Venice earned.
"The soul, doubtless, is immortal—where a soul can be discerned.

13

"Yours for instance: you know physics, something of geology,
"Mathematics are your pastime; souls shall rise in their degree;
"Butterflies may dread extinction—you'll not die, it cannot be!

14

40 "As for Venice and her people, merely born to bloom and drop,
"Here on earth they bore their fruitage, mirth and folly were the crop:
"What of soul was left, I wonder, when the kissing had to stop?

15

"Dust and ashes!" So you creak it, and I want° the heart to scold. lack
Dear dead women, with such hair, too—what's become of all the gold 45 Used to hang and brush their bosoms? I feel chilly and grown old.

ca. 1847 1855

Memorabilia[5]

1

Ah, did you once see Shelley plain,
And did he stop and speak to you
And did you speak to him again?
How strange it seems and new!

2

5 But you were living before that,
And also you are living after;
And the memory I started at—
My starting moves your laughter.

3

I crossed a moor, with a name of its own
10 And a certain use in the world no doubt,

4. In stanzas 12–15, the quoted words are what the speaker imagines Galuppi is saying to him.
5. Memorable things. Line 1 refers to the English poet Percy Bysshe Shelley (1792–1822; see pp. 863–93).

Yet a hand's-breadth of it shines alone
'Mid the blank miles round about:

4

For there I picked up on the heather
And there I put inside my breast
15 A moulted feather, an eagle-feather!
Well, I forget the rest.

ca. 1851 — 1855

"Childe Roland to the Dark Tower Came"

(See Edgar's Song in "Lear")[6]

1

My first thought was, he lied in every word,
That hoary cripple, with malicious eye
Askance° to watch the working of his lie — squinting sideways
On mine, and mouth scarce able to afford
5 Suppression of the glee, that pursed and scored
Its edge, at one more victim gained thereby.

2

What else should he be set for, with his staff?
What, save to waylay with his lies, ensnare
All travelers who might find him posted there,
10 And ask the road? I guessed what skull-like laugh
Would break, what crutch 'gin write my epitaph
For pastime in the dusty thoroughfare,

3

If at his counsel I should turn aside
Into that ominous tract which, all agree,
15 Hides the Dark Tower. Yet acquiescingly
I did turn as he pointed: neither pride
Nor hope rekindling at the end descried,
So much as gladness that some end might be.

4

For, what with my whole world-wide wandering,
20 What with my search drawn out through years, my hope
Dwindled into a ghost not fit to cope
With that obstreperous° joy success would bring,— — unruly
I hardly tried now to rebuke the spring
My heart made, finding failure in its scope.

6. In Shakespeare's King Lear 6.4, Edgar, Gloucester's son, disguised as a madman, meets Lear in the midst of a storm; at the end of the scene, Edgar sings: "Child Rowland to the dark tower came, / His word was still—Fie, foh, and fum, / I smell the blood of a British man.' " Childe: medieval title applied to a youth awaiting knighthood.

5

25 As when a sick man very near to death
Seems dead indeed, and feels begin and end
The tears, and takes the farewell of each friend,
And hears one bid the other go, draw breath
Freelier outside, ("since all is o'er," he saith,
30 "And the blow fallen no grieving can amend;")

6

While some discuss if near the other graves
Be room enough for this, and when a day
Suits best for carrying the corpse away,
With care about the banners, scarves and staves:
35 And still the man hears all, and only craves
He may not shame such tender love and stay.

7

Thus, I had so long suffered in this quest,
Heard failure prophesied so oft, been writ
So many times among "The Band"—to wit,
40 The knights who to the Dark Tower's search addressed
Their steps—that just to fail as they, seemed best,
And all the doubt was now—should I be fit?

8

So, quiet as despair, I turned from him,
That hateful cripple, out of his highway
45 Into the path he pointed. All the day
Had been a dreary one at best, and dim
Was settling to its close, yet shot one grim
Red leer to see the plain catch its estray.[7]

9

For mark! no sooner was I fairly found
50 Pledged to the plain, after a pace or two,
Than, pausing to throw backward a last view
O'er the safe road, 'twas gone; gray plain all round:
Nothing but plain to the horizon's bound.
I might go on; naught else remained to do.

10

55 So, on I went. I think I never saw
Such starved ignoble nature; nothing throve:
For flowers—as well expect a cedar grove!
But cockle, spurge,[8] according to their law
Might propagate their kind, with none to awe,
60 You'd think: a burr had been a treasure trove.

7. A stray or unclaimed domestic animal.
8. Cockle is a weed that bears burrs (line 60), prickly seed-heads; spurge, a bitter-tasting weed.

11

No! penury, inertness and grimace,
In some strange sort, were the land's portion. "See Or shut your eyes," said Nature peevishly,
"It nothing skills:[9] I cannot help my case:
65 'Tis the Last Judgment's fire must cure this place,
Calcine° its clods and set my prisoners free." burn to powder

12

If there pushed any ragged thistle-stalk
Above its mates, the head was chopped; the bents° reeds, rushes
Were jealous else. What made those holes and rents 70 In the dock's[1] harsh swarth° leaves, bruised as to balk dark
All hope of greenness? 'tis a brute must walk
Pashing° their life out, with a brute's intents. crushing

13

As for the grass, it grew as scant as hair
In leprosy; thin dry blades pricked the mud
75 Which underneath looked kneaded up with blood.
One stiff blind horse, his every bone a-stare,
Stood stupefied, however he came there:
Thrust out past service from the devil's stud!

14

Alive? he might be dead for aught I know, 80 With that red gaunt colloped° neck a-strain, chafed, ridged
And shut eyes underneath the rusty mane;
Seldom went such grotesqueness with such woe;
I never saw a brute I hated so;
He must be wicked to deserve such pain.

15

85 I shut my eyes and turned them on my heart.
As a man calls for wine before he fights,
I asked one draught of earlier, happier sights,
Ere fitly I could hope to play my part.
Think first, fight afterwards—the soldier's art:
90 One taste of the old time sets all to rights.

16

Not it! I fancied Cuthbert's reddening face
Beneath its garniture° of curly gold, trimming
Dear fellow, till I almost felt him fold
An arm in mine to fix me to the place,
95 That way he used. Alas, one night's disgrace!
Out went my heart's new fire and left it cold.

9. I.e., it is useless.

1. Coarse, weedy plant's.

17

Giles then, the soul of honor—there he stands
Frank as ten years ago when knighted first.
What honest man should dare (he said) he durst.
100 Good—but the scene shifts—faugh! what hangman hands
Pin to his breast a parchment? His own bands
Read it. Poor traitor, spit upon and curst!

18

Better this present than a past like that;
Back therefore to my darkening path again!
105 No sound, no sight as far as eye could strain.
Will the night send a howlet° or a bat? owl
I asked: when something on the dismal flat
Came to arrest my thoughts and change their train.

19

A sudden little river crossed my path
110 As unexpected as a serpent comes.
No sluggish tide congenial to the glooms;
This, as it frothed by, might have been a bath
For the fiend's glowing hoof—to see the wrath
Of its black eddy bespate° with flakes and spumes. spattered

20

115 So petty yet so spiteful! All along,
Low scrubby alders kneeled down over it;
Drenched willows flung them headlong in a fit
Of mute despair, a suicidal throng:
The river which had done them all the wrong,
120 Whate'er that was, rolled by, deterred no whit.

21

Which, while I forded,—good saints, how I feared
To set my foot upon a dead man's cheek,
Each step, or feel the spear I thrust to seek
For hollows, tangled in his hair or beard!
125 —It may have been a water-rat I speared,
But, ugh! it sounded like a baby's shriek.

22

Glad was I when I reached the other bank.
Now for a better country. Vain presage!
Who were the strugglers, what war did they wage,
130 Whose savage trample thus could pad the dank
Soil to a plash?° Toads in a poisoned tank, puddle
Or wild cats in a red-hot iron cage—

23

The fight must so have seemed in that fell cirque.[2]
What penned them there, with all the plain to choose?

2. Dreadful hollow encircled by heights.

135 No footprint leading to that horrid mews,° stabling area
None out of it. Mad brewage set to work
Their brains, no doubt, like galley-slaves the Turk
Pits for his pastime, Christians against Jews.

24

And more than that—a furlong on—why, there!
140 What bad use was that engine° for, that wheel, mechanism
Or brake,[3] not wheel—that harrow fit to reel
Men's bodies out like silk? with all the air
Of Tophet's° tool, on earth left unaware, Hell's
Or brought to sharpen its rusty teeth of steel.

25

145 Then came a bit of stubbed ground, once a wood,
Next a marsh, it would seem, and now mere earth
Desperate and done with; (so a fool finds mirth,
Makes a thing and then mars it, till his mood
Changes and off he goes!) within a rood[4]—
150 Bog, clay and rubble, sand and stark black dearth.

26

Now blotches rankling,° colored gay and grim, festering
Now patches where some leanness of the soil's
Broke into moss or substances like boils;
Then came some palsied oak, a cleft in him
155 Like a distorted mouth that splits its rim
Gaping at death, and dies while it recoils.

27

And just as far as ever from the end!
Nought in the distance but the evening, nought
To point my footstep further! At the thought,
160 A great black bird, Apollyon's[5] bosom-friend,
Sailed past, nor beat his wide wing dragon-penned[6]
That brushed my cap—perchance the guide I sought.

28

For, looking up, aware I somehow grew,
'Spite of the dusk, the plain had given place
165 All round to mountains—with such name to grace
Mere ugly heights and heaps now stolen in view.
How thus they had surprised me,—solve it, you!
How to get from them was no clearer case.

3. A toothed machine for breaking up flax or hemp, to separate the fiber; here, an instrument of torture.
4. Quarter acre of land.
5. "The angel of the bottomless pit, whose name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue . . . Apollyon" (Revelation 9.11).
6. With pinions, wings, like a dragon's.

29

Yet half I seemed to recognize some trick
170 Of mischief happened to me, God knows when—
In a bad dream perhaps. Here ended, then,
Progress this way. When, in the very nick
Of giving up, one time more, came a click
As when a trap shuts—you're inside the den!

30

175 Burningly it came on me all at once,
This was the place! those two hills on the right,
Crouched like two bulls locked horn in horn in fight;
While to the left, a tall scalped mountain . . . Dunce,
Dotard, a-dozing at the very nonce,° moment
180 After a life spent training for the sight!

31

What in the midst lay but the Tower itself?
The round squat turret, blind as the fool's heart,
Built of brown stone, without a counterpart
In the whole world. The tempest's mocking elf
185 Points to the shipman thus the unseen shelf
He strikes on, only when the timbers start.

32

Not see? because of night perhaps?—why, day
Came back again for that! before it left,
The dying sunset kindled through a cleft:
190 The hills, like giants at a hunting, lay,
Chin upon hand, to see the game at bay,—
"Now stab and end the creature—to the heft!"[7]

33

Not hear? when noise was everywhere! it tolled
Increasing like a bell. Names in my ears
195 Of all the lost adventurers my peers,—
How such a one was strong, and such was bold,
And such was fortunate, yet each of old
Lost, lost! one moment knelled the woe of years.

34

There they stood, ranged along the hillsides, met
200 To view the last of me, a living frame
For one more picture! in a sheet of flame
I saw them and I knew them all. And yet
Dauntless the slug-horn[8] to my lips I set,
And blew. "Childe Roland to the Dark Tower came."

1852 1855

7. Handle of a dagger or sword.
8. Here, a kind of trumpet. Literally, a Scottish term for a clan's war cry.

Fra Lippo Lippi[9]

I am poor brother Lippo, by your leave!
You need not clap your torches to my face.
Zooks,[1] what's to blame? you think you see a monk!
What, 'tis pas midnight, and you go the rounds,
5 And here you catch me at an alley's end
Where sportive ladies leave their doors ajar?
The Carmine's my cloister:[2] hunt it up,
Do—harry out, if you must show your zeal,
Whatever rat, there, haps on his wrong hole,
10 And nip each softling of a wee white mouse,
Weke, weke, that's crept to keep him company!
Aha, you know your betters! Then, you'll take
Your hand away that's fiddling on my throat,
And please to know me likewise. Who am I?
15 Why, one, sir, who is lodging with a friend
Three streets off—he's a certain . . . how d'ye call?
Master—a . . . Cosimo of the Medici,[3]
I' the house that caps the corner. Boh! you were best!
Remember and tell me, the day you're hanged,
20 How you affected such a gullet's-gripe![4]
But you, sir, it concerns you that your knaves
Pick up a manner nor discredit you:
Zooks, are we pilchards,° that they sweep the streets fish
And count fair prize what comes into their net?
25 He's Judas to a tittle, that man is![5]
Just such a face! Why, sir, you make amends.
Lord, I'm not angry! Bid your hangdogs go
Drink out this quarter-florin to the health
Of the munificent House that harbors me
30 (And many more beside, lads! more beside!)
And all's come square again. I'd like his face—
His, elbowing on his comrade in the door
With the pike and lantern—for the slave that holds
John Baptist's head a-dangle by the hair
35 With one hand ("Look you, now," as who should say)
And his weapon in the other, yet unwiped!
It's not your chance to have a bit of chalk,
A wood-coal or the like? or you should see!
Yes, I'm the painter, since you style me so.
40 What, brother Lippo's doings, up and down,
You know them and they take you? like enough!
I saw the proper twinkle in your eye—

9. Florentine painter (ca. 1406–1469), whose life Browning knew from Giorgio Vasari's Lives of the Most Eminent Painters, Sculptors, and Architects and from other sources, and whose paintings he had studied during his years in Florence.
1. Short for Gadzooks, a mild oath (perhaps originally God's truth).
2. Fra Lippo had entered the Carmelite cloister Santa Maria del Carmine while still a boy. He gave up monastic vows in 1421, but was clothed by the monastery until 1431 and was called "Fra Filippo" in documents until his death.
3. Cosimo de' Medici (1389–1464), Fra Lippo's wealthy patron and an important political power in Florence.
4. I.e., grip on my throat.
5. He says one of the watchmen who have arrested him looks exactly like Judas.

'Tell you, I liked your looks at very first.
Let's sit and set things straight now, hip to haunch.
45 Here's spring come, and the nights one makes up bands
To roam the town and sing out carnival,
And I've been three weeks shut within my mew,[6]
A-painting for the great man, saints and saints
And saints again. I could not paint all night—
50 Ouf! I leaned out of window for fresh air.
There came a hurry of feet and little feet,
A sweep of lute-strings, laughs, and whifts of song—
Flower o' the broom,
Take away love, and our earth is a tomb!
55 Flower o' the quince,
I let Lisa go, and what good in life since?
Flower o' the thyme—and so on. Round they went.
Scarce had they turned the corner when a titter
Like the skipping of rabbits by moonlight—three slim shapes,
60 And a face that looked up . . . zooks, sir, flesh and blood,
That's all I'm made of! Into shreds it went,
Curtain and counterpane and coverlet,
All the bed-furniture—a dozen knots,
There was a ladder! Down I let myself,
65 Hands and feet, scrambling somehow, and so dropped,
And after them. I came up with the fun
Hard by Saint Laurence,[7] hail fellow, well met—
Flower o' the rose,
If I've been merry, what matter who knows?
70 And so as I was stealing back again
To get to bed and have a bit of sleep
Ere I rise up to-morrow and go work
On Jerome knocking at his poor old breast[8]
With his great round stone to subdue the flesh, 75 You snap me of the sudden. Ah, I see!
Though your eye twinkles still, you shake your head—
Mine's shaved—a monk, you say—the sting's in that!
If Master Cosimo announced himself,
Mum's the word naturally; but a monk!
80 Come, what am I a beast for? tell us, now!
I was a baby when my mother died
And father died and left me in the street.
I starved there, God knows how, a year or two
On fig-skins, melon-parings, rinds and shucks,
85 Refuse and rubbish. One fine frosty day,
My stomach being empty as your hat,
The wind doubled me up and down I went.
Old Aunt Lapaccia trussed me with one hand,
(Its fellow was a stinger as I knew)
90 And so along the wall, over the bridge,
By the straight cut to the convent. Six words there,

6. I.e., within the confines of my quarters (in the Medici palace).
7. The church of San Lorenzo, not far from the Medici palace.
8. I.e., on a painting of St. Jerome in the Desert.

While I stood munching my first bread that month:
"So, boy, you're minded," quoth the good fat father Wiping his own mouth, 't was refection-time°— mealtime
95 "To quit this very miserable world?
"Will you renounce" . . . "the mouthful of bread?" thought I;
By no means! Brief, they made a monk of me;
I did renounce the world, its pride and greed,
Palace, farm, villa, shop and banking-house,
100 Trash, such as these poor devils of Medici
Have given their hearts to—all at eight years old.
Well, sir, I found in time, you may be sure,
'T was not for nothing—the good bellyful,
The warm serge and the rope that goes all round, 105 And day-long blessed idleness beside!
"Let's see what the urchin's fit for"—that came next.
Not overmuch their way, I must confess.
Such a to-do! They tried me with their books:
Lord, they'd have taught me Latin in pure waste!
110 Flower o' the clove,
All the Latin I construe is, "amo" I love!
But, mind you, when a boy starves in the streets
Eight years together, as my fortune was,
Watching folk's faces to know who will fling
115 The bit of half-stripped grape-bunch he desires,
And who will curse or kick him for his pains—
Which gentleman processional and fine,
Holding a candle to the Sacrament,
Will wink and let him lift a plate and catch
120 The droppings of the wax to sell again,
Or holla for the Eight[9] and have him whipped—
How say I? nay, which dog bites, which lets drop
His bone from the heap of offal in the street—
Why, soul and sense of him grow sharp alike,
125 He learns the look of things, and none the less
For admonition from the hunger-pinch.
I had a store of such remarks, be sure,
Which, after I found leisure, turned to use.
I drew men's faces on my copy-books,
130 Scrawled them within the antiphonary's[1] marge,
Joined legs and arms to the long music-notes,
Found eyes and nose and chin for A's and B's,
And made a string of pictures of the world
Betwixt the ins and outs of verb and noun, 135 On the wall, the bench, the door. The monks looked black.
"Nay," quoth the Prior, "turn him out, d'ye say?
"In no wise. Lose a crow and catch a lark.
"What if at last we get our man of parts,
"We Carmelites, like those Camaldolese
140 "And Preaching Friars,[2] to do our church up fine

9. The Florentine magistrates.
1. The book containing the antiphons, or responses chanted in the liturgy.
2. I.e., members of a Dominican religious order. Camaldolese: members of a Benedictine religious order at Camaldoli, in the Apennines.

"And put the front on it that ought to be!"
And hereupon he bade me daub away.
Thank you! my head being crammed, the walls a blank,
Never was such prompt disemburdening.
145 First, every sort of monk, the black and white,
I drew them, fat and lean: then, folk at church,
From good old gossips waiting to confess
Their cribs° of barrel-droppings, candle-ends— minor thefts
To the breathless fellow at the altar-foot,
150 Fresh from his murder, safe and sitting there
With the little children round him in a row
Of admiration, half for his beard and half
For that white anger of his victim's son
Shaking a fist at him with one fierce arm,
155 Signing[3] himself with the other because of Christ (Whose sad face on the cross sees only this After the passion° of a thousand years) suffering
Till some poor girl, her apron o'er her head,
(Which the intense eyes looked through) came at eve
160 On tiptoe, said a word, dropped in a loaf,
Her pair of earrings and a bunch of flowers
(The brute took growling), prayed, and so was gone.
I painted all, then cried " 'Tis ask and have;
"Choose, for more's ready!"—laid the ladder flat,
165 And showed my covered bit of cloister-wall.
The monks closed in a circle and praised loud
Till checked, taught what to see and not to see,
Being simple bodies—"That's the very man!
"Look at the boy who stoops to pat the dog!
170 "That woman's like the Prior's niece who comes "To care about his asthma: it's the life!"
But there my triumph's straw-fire flared and funked;[4]
Their betters took their turn to see and say:
The Prior and the learned pulled a face
175 And stopped all that in no time. "How? what's here?
"Quite from the mark of painting, bless us all!
"Faces, arms, legs and bodies like the true
"As much as pea and pea! it's devil's-game!
"Your business is not to catch men with show, 180 "With homage to the perishable clay,
"But lift them over it, ignore it all,
"Make them forget there's such a thing as flesh.
"Your business is to paint the souls of men—
"Man's soul, and it's a fire, smoke . . . no, it's not . . .
185 "It's vapor done up like a new-born babe—
"(In that shape when you die it leaves your mouth)
"It's . . . well, what matters talking, it's the soul!
"Give us no more of body than shows soul!
"Here's Giotto,[5] with his Saint a-praising God,

3. Making the sign of the cross with one hand, because of the image of Christ on the altar.
4. Expired in smoke.
5. The great Florentine painter Giotto di Bondone (1267–1337).

190 "That sets us praising—why not stop with him?
"Why put all thoughts of praise out of our head
"With wonder at lines, colors, and what not?
"Paint the soul, never mind the legs and arms!
"Rub all out, try at it a second time.
195 "Oh, that white smallish female with the breasts,
"She's just my niece . . . Herodias,[6] I would say—
"Who went and danced and got men's heads cut off!
"Have it all out!" Now, is this sense, I ask?
A fine way to paint soul, by painting body
200 So ill, the eye can't stop there, must go further
And can't fare worse! Thus, yellow does for white
When what you put for yellow's simply black,
And any sort of meaning looks intense
When all beside itself means and looks nought.
205 Why can't a painter lift each foot in turn,
Left foot and right foot, go a double step,
Make his flesh liker and his soul more like,
Both in their order? Take the prettiest face,
The Prior's niece . . . patron-saint—is it so pretty 210 You can't discover if it means hope, fear,
Sorrow or joy? won't beauty go with these?
Suppose I've made her eyes all right and blue,
Can't I take breath and try to add life's flash,
And then add soul and heighten them threefold?
215 Or say there's beauty with no soul at all—
(I never saw it—put the case the same—)
If you get simple beauty and nought else,
You get about the best thing God invents:
That's somewhat: and you'll find the soul you have missed,
220 Within yourself, when you return him thanks.
"Rub all out!" Well, well, there's my life, in short,
And so the thing has gone on ever since.
I'm grown a man no doubt, I've broken bounds:
You should not take a fellow eight years old
225 And make him swear to never kiss the girls.
I'm my own master, paint now as I please—
Having a friend, you see, in the Corner-house![7]
Lord, it's fast holding by the rings in front—
Those great rings serve more purposes than just 230 To plant a flag in, or tie up a horse!
And yet the old schooling sticks, the old grave eyes
Are peeping o'er my shoulder as I work,
The heads shake still—"It's art's decline, my son!
"You're not of the true painters, great and old; 235 "Brother Angelico's the man, you'll find;
"Brother Lorenzo[8] stands his single peer:

6. Also called Salomé; her mother (whose name was Herodias as well), sister-in-law of the tetrarch Herod, had demanded that John the Baptist be imprisoned. When Salomé so pleased the king with her dancing that he promised her anything she asked, Herodias instructed her to ask for the head of John the Baptist on a platter (Matthew 14.1–12).
7. I.e., the Medici palace.
8. Fra Angelico (1387–1455) and Fra Lorenzo Monaco (1370–1425).

"Fag° on at flesh, you'll never make the third!" toil
Flower o' the pine,
You keep your mistr . . . manners, and I'll stick to mine!
240 I'm not the third, then: bless us, they must know!
Don't you think they're the likeliest to know,
They with their Latin? So, I swallow my rage,
Clench my teeth, suck my lips in tight, and paint
To please them—sometimes do and sometimes don't;
245 For, doing most, there's pretty sure to come
A turn, some warm eve finds me at my saints—
A laugh, a cry, the business of the world—
(Flower o' the peach,
Death for us all, and his own life for each!)
250 And my whole soul revolves, the cup runs over,
The world and life's too big to pass for a dream,
And I do these wild things in sheer despite,
And play the fooleries you catch me at,
In pure rage! The old mill-horse, out at grass
255 After hard years, throws up his stiff heels so,
Although the miller does not preach to him
The only good of grass is to make chaff.
What would men have? Do they like grass or no—
May they or mayn't they? all I want's the thing 260 Settled for ever one way. As it is,
You tell too many lies and hurt yourself:
You don't like what you only like too much,
You do like what, if given you at your word,
You find abundantly detestable.
265 For me, I think I speak as I was taught;
I always see the garden and God there
A-making man's wife: and, my lesson learned,
The value and significance of flesh,
I can't unlearn ten minutes afterwards.

270 You understand me: I'm a beast, I know.
But see, now—why, I see as certainly
As that the morning-star's about to shine,
What will hap some day. We've a youngster here
Comes to our convent, studies what do,
275 Slouches and stares and lets no atom drop:
His name is Guidi—he'll not mind the monks—
They call him Hulking Tom,[9] he lets them talk—
He picks my practice up—he'll paint apace,
I hope so—though I never live so long,
280 I know what's sure to follow. You be judge!
You speak no Latin more than I, belike;
However, you're my man, you've seen the world
—The beauty and the wonder and the power,

9. The painter Tommaso Guidi (1401–1428), known as Masaccio (from Tomasaccio, meaning "Big Tom" or "Hulking Tom"). The series of frescoes that he painted in Santa Maria del Carmine, of key importance in the history of Florentine painting, was completed by Fra Lippo's son, Filippino Lippi, and it is in fact more likely that Fra Lippo learned from Masaccio than that he saw him as a promising newcomer.

The shapes of things, their colors, lights and shades,
285 Changes, surprises—and God made it all!
—For what? Do you feel thankful, ay or no,
For this fair town's face, yonder river's line,
The mountain round it and the sky above,
Much more the figures of man, woman, child,
290 These are the frame to? What's it all about?
To be passed over, despised? or dwelt upon,
Wondered at? oh, this last of course!—you say.
But why not do as well as say, paint these
Just as they are, careless what comes of it?
295 God's works—paint anyone, and count it crime
To let a truth slip. Don't object, "His works
"Are here already; nature is complete:
"Suppose you reproduce her (which you can't)
"There's no advantage! you must beat her, then."
300 For, don't you mark? we're made so that we love
First when we see them painted, things we have passed
Perhaps a hundred times nor cared to see;
And so they are better, painted—better to us,
Which is the same thing. Art was given for that;
305 God uses us to help each other so,
Lending our minds out. Have you noticed, now,
Your cullion's° hanging face? A bit of chalk, rascal's
And trust me but you should, though! How much more,
If I drew higher things with the same truth!
310 That were to take the Prior's pulpit-place,
Interpret God to all of you! Oh, oh,
It makes me mad to see what men shall do
And we in our graves! This world's no blot for us,
Nor blank; it means intensely, and means good:
315 To find its meaning is my meat and drink.
"Ay, but you don't so instigate to prayer!"
Strikes in the Prior: "when your meaning's plain
"It does not say to folk—remember matins,° morning prayers
"Or, mind you fast next Friday!" Why, for this 320 What need of art at all? A skull and bones,
Two bits of stick nailed crosswise, or, what's best,
A bell to chime the hour with, does as well.
I painted a Saint Laurence six months since
At Prato,[1] splashed the fresco in fine style:
325 "How looks my painting, now the scaffold's down?"
I ask a brother: "Hugely," he returns—
"Already not one phiz° of your three slaves face
"Who turn the Deacon off his toasted side,[2]
"But's scratched and prodded to our heart's content, 330 "The pious people have so eased their own
"With coming to say prayers there in a rage:
"We get on fast to see the bricks beneath.

1. Smaller town near Florence, where Fra Lippo painted some of his most important pictures.
2. Saint Lawrence was martyred by being roasted on a gridiron; according to legend, he urged his executioners to turn him over, saying that he was done on one side.

"Expect another job this time next year,
"For pity and religion grow i' the crowd—
335 "Your painting serves its purpose!" Hang the fools!

—That is—you'll not mistake an idle word
Spoke in a huff by a poor monk, God wot,° knows
Tasting the air this spicy night which turns
The unaccustomed head like Chianti wine!
340 Oh, the church knows! don't misreport me, now!
It's natural a poor monk out of bounds
Should have his apt word to excuse himself:
And hearken how I plot to make amends.
I have bethought me: I shall paint a piece
345 . . . There's for you! Give me six months, then go, see Something in Sant' Ambrogio's![3] Bless the nuns!
They want a cast° o' my office.° I shall paint sample / work
God in the midst, Madonna and her babe,
Ringed by a bowery flowery angel-brood,
350 Lilies and vestments and white faces, sweet
As puff on puff of grated orris-root[4]
When ladies crowd to Church at midsummer.
And then i' the front, of course a saint or two—
Saint John, because he saves the Florentines,[5]
355 Saint Ambrose, who puts down in black and white
The convent's friends and gives them a long day,
And Job, I must have him there past mistake,
The man of Uz (and Us without the z, Painters who need his patience). Well, all these 360 Secured at their devotion, up shall come
Out of a corner when you least expect,
As one by a dark stair into a great light,
Music and talking, who but Lippo! I!
Mazed, motionless and moonstruck—I'm the man!
365 Back I shrink—what is this I see and hear?
I, caught up with my monk's-things by mistake,
My old serge gown and rope that goes all round,
I, in this presence, this pure company!
Where's a hole, where's a corner for escape?
370 Then steps a sweet angelic slip of a thing Forward, puts out a soft palm—"Not so fast!"
—Addresses the celestial presence, "nay—
"He made you and devised you, after all,
"Though he's none of you! Could Saint John there draw—375 "His camel-hair[6] make up a painting-brush?
"We come to brother Lippo for all that,
"Iste perfecit opus!"[7] So, all smile—

3. Fra Lippo painted the Coronation of the Virgin, here described, for the high altar of Sant' Ambrogio in 1447.
4. Talcumlike powder made from flower roots.
5. San Giovanni is the patron saint of Florence.
6. John the Baptist is often portrayed wearing a rough robe of camel's hair, in accord with Mark 1.6.
7. This man made the work! (Latin); possibly a reference to the commissioning of the painting. The figure that Browning took to be that of the painter may be that of the patron, the Very Reverend Francesco Marenghi, who ordered the painting in 1441.

I shuffle sideways with my blushing face
Under the cover of a hundred wings
380 Thrown like a spread of kirtles[8] when you're gay° cheerful
And play hot cockles,[9] all the doors being shut,
Till, wholly unexpected, in there pops
The hothead husband! Thus I scuttle off
To some safe bench behind, not letting go
385 The palm of her, the little lily thing
That spoke the good word for me in the nick,
Like the Prior's niece . . . Saint Lucy, I would say.
And so all's saved for me, and for the church
A pretty picture gained. Go, six months hence!
390 Your hand, sir, and good-bye: no lights, no lights!
The street's hushed, and I know my own way back,
Don't fear me! there's the gray beginning. Zooks!

ca. 1853 1855

Andrea del Sarto[1]

Called "The Faultless Painter"

But do not let us quarrel any more,
No, my Lucrezia; bear with me for once:
Sit down and all shall happen as you wish.
You turn your face, but does it bring your heart?
5 I'll work then for your friend's friend, never fear,
Treat his own subject after his own way,
Fix his own time, accept too his own price,
And shut the money into this small hand
When next it takes mine. Will it? tenderly?
10 Oh, I'll content him—but tomorrow, Love!
I often am much wearier than you think,
This evening more than usual, and it seems
As if—forgive now—should you let me sit
Here by the window with your hand in mine
15 And look a half-hour forth on Fiesole,[2]
Both of one mind, as married people use,
Quietly, quietly the evening through
I might get up tomorrow to my work
Cheerful and fresh as ever. Let us try.
20 Tomorrow, how you shall be glad for this!
Your soft hand is a woman of itself,

8. Women's gowns or skirts.
9. A game in which a blindfolded player must guess who has struck him or her.
1. The Florentine painter Andrea del Sarto (1486–1530) spent his entire life in Florence except for a year's sojourn at the court of the French king, Francis I, at Fontainebleau, 1518–19. He had been married since 1517 to Lucrezia del Fede, a widow, and in response to her pleading he left Fontainebleau, with the understanding that he would soon return to complete work for which he had been paid. But he did not return, and he spent money that the king had given him to purchase works of art in Italy on a house in Florence for him and Lucrezia. These and other facts Browning derived from Giorgio Vasari's Lives of the Most Eminent Painters, Sculptors, and Architects. But the poem also depends on Browning's own response to Andrea's art.
2. A small town on the crown of a hill above Florence.

And mine the man's bared breast she curls inside.
Don't count the time lost, neither; you must serve
For each of the five pictures we require:
25 It saves a model. So! keep looking so—
My serpenting beauty, rounds on rounds![3]
—How could you ever prick those perfect ears,
Even to put the pearl there! oh, so sweet—
My face, my moon, my everybody's moon,
30 Which everybody looks on and calls his,
And, I suppose, is looked on by in turn,
While she looks—no one's: very dear, no less.[4]
You smile? why, there's my picture ready made,
There's what we painters call our harmony!
35 A common grayness silvers everything,
All in a twilight, you and I alike
—You, at the point of your first pride in me
(That's gone you know)—but I, at every point;
My youth, my hope, my art, being all toned down
40 To yonder sober pleasant Fiesole.
There's the bell clinking from the chapel-top;
That length of convent-wall across the way
Holds the trees safer, huddled more inside;
The last monk leaves the garden; days decrease,
45 And autumn grows, autumn in everything.
Eh? the whole seems to fall into a shape
As if I saw alike my work and self
And all that I was born to be and do,
A twilight-piece. Love, we are in God's hand.
50 How strange now, looks the life he makes us lead;
So free we seem, so fettered fast we are!
I feel he laid the fetter: let it lie!
This chamber for example—turn your head—
All that's behind us! You don't understand
55 Nor care to understand about my art,
But you can hear at least when people speak:
And that cartoon,[5] the second from the door
—It is the thing, Love! so such things should be—
Behold Madonna! I am bold to say.
60 I can do with my pencil what I know,
What I see, what at bottom of my heart
I wish for, if I ever wish so deep—
Do easily, too—when I say, perfectly,
I do not boast, perhaps: yourself are judge,
65 Who listened to the Legate's[6] talk last week,
And just as much they used to say in France.
At any rate 'tis easy, all of it!
No sketches first, no studies, that's long past:
I do what many dream of, all their lives,

3. Coils of hair like a serpent's coils.
4. Her affections are focused on no one person, not even on her husband, yet she is very dear to him.
5. A preparatory drawing, on heavy paper, of the same size as the painting to be executed from it in oil or fresco.
6. The pope's representative's.

70 —Dream? strive to do, and agonize to do,
And fail in doing. I could count twenty such
On twice your fingers, and not leave this town,
Who strive—you don't know how the others strive
To paint a little thing like that you smeared
75 Carelessly passing with your robes afloat—
Yet do much less, so much less, Someone says,
(I know his name, no matter)—so much less!
Well, less is more, Lucrezia: I am judged.
There burns a truer light of God in them,
80 In their vexed beating stuffed and stopped-up brain,
Heart, or whate'er else, than goes on to prompt
This low-pulsed forthright craftsman's hand of mine.
Their works drop groundward, but themselves, I know,
Reach many a time a heaven that's shut to me,
85 Enter and take their place there sure enough,
Though they come back and cannot tell the world.
My works are nearer heaven, but I sit here.
The sudden blood of these men! at a word—
Praise them, it boils, or blame them, it boils too.
90 I, painting from myself and to myself,
Know what I do, am unmoved by men's blame
Or their praise either. Somebody remarks
Morello's[7] outline there is wrongly traced,
His hue mistaken; what of that? or else,
95 Rightly traced and well ordered; what of that?
Speak as they please, what does the mountain care?
Ah, but a man's reach should exceed his grasp,
Or what's a heaven for? All is silver-gray
Placid and perfect with my art: the worse!
100 I know both what I want and what might gain,
And yet how profitless to know, to sigh
"Had I been two, another and myself,
Our head would have o'erlooked the world!" No doubt.
Yonder's a work now, of that famous youth
105 The Urbinate[8] who died five years ago.
('Tis copied, George Vasari[9] sent it me.)
Well, I can fancy how he did it all,
Pouring his soul, with kings and popes to see,
Reaching, that heaven might so replenish him,
110 Above and through his art—for it gives way;
That arm is wrongly put—and there again—
A fault to pardon in the drawing's lines,
Its body, so to speak: its soul is right,
He means right—that, a child may understand.
115 Still, what an arm! and I could alter it:
But all the play, the insight and the stretch—
Out of me, out of me! And wherefore out?
Had you enjoined them on me, given me soul,
We might have risen to Rafael, I and you!

7. Monte Morello is a mountain lying a little to the northwest of Florence in the Apennines.
8. The painter Raphael (1483–1520), so called because he was born at Urbino.
9. Giorgio Vasari, the biographer, was a painter and an architect and had been Andrea's pupil.

120 Nay, Love, you did give all I asked, I think—
More than I merit, yes, by many times.
But had you—oh, with the same perfect brow,
And perfect eyes, and more than perfect mouth,
And the low voice my soul hears, as a bird
125 The fowler's° pipe, and follows to the snare— bird-catcher's
Had you, with these the same, but brought a mind!
Some women do so. Had the mouth there urged
"God and the glory! never care for gain.
The present by the future, what is that?
130 Live for fame, side by side with Agnolo![1]
"Rafael is waiting: up to God, all three!"
I might have done it for you. So it seems:
Perhaps not. All is as God over-rules.
Beside, incentives come from the soul's self;
135 The rest avail not. Why do I need you?
What wife had Rafael, or has Agnolo?
In this world, who can do a thing, will not;
And who would do it, cannot, I perceive:
Yet the will's somewhat—somewhat, too, the power—
140 And thus we half-men struggle. At the end,
God, I conclude, compensates, punishes.
'Tis safer for me, if the award be strict,
That I am something underrated here,
Poor this long while, despised, to speak the truth.
145 I dared not, do you know, leave home all day,
For fear of chancing on the Paris lords.
The best is when they pass and look aside;
But they speak sometimes; I must bear it all.
Well may they speak! That Francis, that first time,
150 And that long festal year at Fontainebleau![2]
I surely then could sometimes leave the ground,
Put on the glory, Rafael's daily wear,
In that humane great monarch's golden look—
One finger in his beard or twisted curl
155 Over his mouth's good mark that made the smile,
One arm about my shoulder, round my neck,
The jingle of his gold chain in my ear,
I painting proudly with his breath on me,
All his court round him, seeing with his eyes,
160 Such frank French eyes, and such a fire of souls
Profuse, my hand kept plying by those hearts—
And, best of all, this, this, this face beyond,
This in the background, waiting on my work,
To crown the issue with a last reward!
165 A good time, was it not, my kingly days?
And had you not grown restless . . . but I know—
'Tis done and past; 'twas right, my instinct said;
Too live the life grew, golden and not gray,
And I'm the weak-eyed bat no sun should tempt

1. I.e., Michelangelo (1475–1564).
2. The village southwest of Paris where Francis I built the royal palace.

170 Out of the grange° whose four walls make his world. country house
How could it end in any other way?
You called me, and I came home to your heart.
The triumph was—to reach and stay there; since
I reached it ere the triumph, what is lost?
175 Let my hands frame your face in your hair's gold,
You beautiful Lucrezia that are mine!
"Rafael did this, Andrea painted that;
"The Roman's[3] is the better when you pray,
"But still the other's Virgin was his wife—"
180 Men will excuse me. I am glad to judge
Both pictures in your presence; clearer grows
My better fortune, I resolve to think.
For, do you know, Lucrezia, as God lives,
Said one day Agnolo, his very self,
185 To Rafael . . . I have known it all these years . . .
(When the young man was flaming out his thoughts
Upon a palace-wall for Rome to see,
Too lifted up in heart because of it)
"Friend, there's a certain sorry little scrub
190 Goes up and down our Florence, none cares how,
Who, were he set to plan and execute
As you are, pricked on by your popes and kings,
Would bring the sweat into that brow of yours!"
To Rafael's! And indeed the arm is wrong.
195 I hardly dare . . . yet, only you to see,
Give the chalk here—quick, thus the line should go!
Ay, but the soul! he's Rafael! rub it out!
Still, all I care for, if he spoke the truth,
(What he? why, who but Michel Agnolo?
200 Do you forget already words like those?)
If really there was such a chance, so lost,
Is, whether you're—not grateful—but more pleased.
Well, let me think so. And you smile indeed!
This hour has been an hour! Another smile?
205 If you would sit thus by me every night
I should work better, do you comprehend?
I mean that I should earn more, give you more.
See, it is settled dusk now; there's a star;
Morello's gone, the watch-lights show the wall,
210 The cue-owls[4] speak the name we call them by.
Come from the window, love—come in, at last,
Inside the melancholy little house
We built to be so gay with. God is just.
King Francis may forgive me: oft at nights
215 When I look up from painting, eyes tired out,
The walls become illumined, brick from brick
Distinct, instead of mortar, fierce bright gold,
That gold of his I did cement them with!
Let us but love each other. Must you go?
220 That Cousin here again? he waits outside?

3. Refers to Raphael, who worked in Rome for the last twelve years of his life.

4. A Mediterranean owl whose name derives from its cry, ki-ou.

Must see you—you, and not with me? Those loans?
More gaming debts to pay? you smiled for that?
Well, let smiles buy me! have you more to spend?
While hand and eye and something of a heart
225 Are left me, work's my ware, and what's it worth?
I'll pay my fancy. Only let me sit
The gray remainder of the evening out,
Idle, you call it, and muse perfectly
How I could paint, were I but back in France,
230 One picture, just one more—the Virgin's face,
Not yours this time! I want you at my side
To hear them—that is, Michel Agnolo—
Judge all I do and tell you of its worth.
Will you? Tomorrow, satisfy your friend.
235 I take the subjects for his corridor,
Finish the portrait out of hand—there, there,
And throw him in another thing or two
If he demurs; the whole should prove enough
To pay for this same Cousin's freak. Beside,
240 What's better and what's all I care about,
Get you the thirteen scudi[5] for the ruff!
Love, does that please you? Ah, but what does he,
The Cousin! what does he to please you more?

I am grown peaceful as old age tonight.
245 I regret little, I would change still less.
Since there my past life lies, why alter it?
The very wrong to Francis! it is true
I took his coin, was tempted and complied,
And built this house and sinned, and all is said.
250 My father and my mother died of want.
Well, had I riches of my own? you see
How one gets rich! Let each one bear his lot.
They were born poor, lived poor, and poor they died:
And I have labored somewhat in my time
255 And not been paid profusely. Some good son
Paint my two hundred pictures—let him try!
No doubt, there's something strikes a balance. Yes,
You loved me quite enough, it seems tonight.
This must suffice me here. What would one have?
260 In heaven, perhaps, new chances, one more chance—
Four great walls in the New Jerusalem,[6]
Meted on each side by the angel's reed,
For Leonard,[7] Rafael, Agnolo and me
To cover—the three first without a wife,
265 While I have mine! So—still they overcome
Because there's still Lucrezia—as I choose.

Again the Cousin's whistle! Go, my Love.

ca. 1853 1855

5. Shields (Italian); silver coins bearing a shield.
6. Cf. Revelation 21.10–21.
7. I.e., Leonardo da Vinci (1452–1519).

Two in the Campagna[8]

I

I wonder do you feel today
As I have felt since, hand in hand,
We sat down on the grass, to stray
In spirit better through the land,
5 This morn of Rome and May?

2

For me, I touched a thought, I know,
Has tantalized me many times,
(Like turns of thread the spiders throw Mocking across our path) for rhymes
10 To catch at and let go.

3

Help me to hold it! First it left
The yellowing fennel,[9] run to seed
There, branching from the brickwork's cleft,
Some old tomb's ruin: yonder weed
15 Took up the floating weft,° spider web

4

Where one small orange cup amassed
Five beetles—blind and green they grope
Among the honey-meal: and last,
Everywhere on the grassy slope
20 I traced it. Hold it fast!

5

The champaign[1] with its endless fleece
Of feathery grasses everywhere!
Silence and passion, joy and peace,
An everlasting wash of air—
25 Rome's ghost since her decease.

6

Such life here, through such lengths of hours,
Such miracles performed in play,
Such primal naked forms of flowers,
Such letting nature have her way
30 While heaven looks from its towers!

7

How say you? Let us, O my dove,
Let us be unashamed of soul,

8. The grassy, rolling countryside around Rome.
9. A yellow-flowered plant, whose aromatic seeds are used as a condiment.
1. I.e., grassland–here, the Campagna.

As earth lies bare to heaven above!
  How is it under our control
35 To love or not to love?

8

I would that you were all to me,
  You that are just so much, no more.
Nor yours nor mine, nor slave nor free!
  Where does the fault lie? What the core 40 O' the wound, since wound must be?

9

I would I could adopt your will,
  See with your eyes, and set my heart
Beating by yours, and drink my fill
  At your soul's springs—your part my part
45 In life, for good and ill.

10

No. I yearn upward, touch you close,
  Then stand away. I kiss your cheek,
Catch your soul's warmth—I pluck the rose
  And love it more than tongue can speak—
50 Then the good minute goes.

11

Already how am I so far
  Out of that minute? Must I go
Still like the thistle-ball, no bar,
  Onward, whenever light winds blow,
55 Fixed by no friendly star?

12

Just when I seemed about to learn!
  Where is the thread now? Off again!
The old trick! Only I discern—
  Infinite passion, and the pain
60 Of finite hearts that yearn.

1854 1855

EDWARD LEAR
1812–1888

There Was an Old Man with a Beard

There was an Old Man with a beard,
Who said, "It is just as I feared!—

Two Owls and a Hen, four Larks and a Wren,
Have all built their nests in my beard!"

1846

There Was an Old Man in a Tree

There was an Old Man in a tree,
Who was horribly bored by a Bee;
When they said, "Does it buzz?" he replied, "Yes, it does!"
"It's a regular brute of a Bee!"

1846

There Was an Old Man Who Supposed

There was an Old Man who supposed,
That the street door was partially closed;
But some very large rats, ate his coats and his hats,
While that futile old gentleman dozed.

1846

The Owl and the Pussy-Cat

I

The Owl and the Pussy-cat went to sea
In a beautiful pea-green boat,
They took some honey, and plenty of money,
Wrapped up in a five-pound note.
5 The Owl looked up to the stars above,
And sang to a small guitar,
"O lovely Pussy! O Pussy, my love,
What a beautiful Pussy you are,
You are,
10 You are!
What a beautiful Pussy you are!"

2

Pussy said to the Owl, "You elegant fowl!
How charmingly sweet you sing!
O let us be married! too long we have tarried:
15 But what shall we do for a ring?"
They sailed away, for a year and a day,
To the land where the Bong-tree grows
And there in a wood a Piggy-wig stood
With a ring at the end of his nose,

20 His nose,
His nose,
With a ring at the end of his nose.

3

"Dear Pig, are you willing to sell for one shilling Your ring?" Said the Piggy, "I will."
25 So they took it away, and were married next day
By the Turkey who lives on the hill.
They dined on mince, and slices of quince,
Which they ate with a runcible spoon;[1]
And hand in hand, on the edge of the sand,
30 They danced by the light of the moon,
The moon,
The moon,
They danced by the light of the moon.

1871

How Pleasant to Know Mr. Lear

How pleasant to know Mr. Lear!
Who has written such volumes of stuff!
Some think him ill-tempered and queer,
But a few think him pleasant enough.

5 His mind is concrete and fastidious,
His nose is remarkably big;
His visage is more or less hideous,
His beard it resembles a wig.

He has ears, and two eyes, and ten fingers,
10 Leastways if you reckon two thumbs;
Long ago he was one of the singers,
But now he is one of the dumbs.

He sits in a beautiful parlor,
With hundreds of books on the wall;
15 He drinks a great deal of Marsala,[2]
But never gets tipsy at all.

He has many friends, laymen and clerical;
Old Foss is the name of his cat;
His body is perfectly spherical,
20 He weareth a runcible hat.[3]

1. Fork with three broad, curved prongs and sharpened edge. Lear coined the word "runcible" and used it often in his nonsense verse.

2. A dark, sweet Spanish wine.

3. On "runcible," see note 1 above.

When he walks in a waterproof° white, raincoat
The children run after him so!
Calling out, "He's come out in his night-Gown, that crazy old Englishman, oh!"

25 He weeps by the side of the ocean,
He weeps on the top of the hill;
He purchases pancakes and lotion,
And chocolate shrimps from the mill.

He reads but he cannot speak Spanish,
30 He cannot abide ginger-beer:
Ere the days of his pilgrimage vanish,
How pleasant to know Mr. Lear!

1871

JONES VERY
1813–1880

The Dead[1]

I see them crowd on crowd they walk the earth
Dry, leafless trees no Autumn wind laid bare;
And in their nakedness find cause for mirth,
And all unclad would winter's rudeness° dare; harshness
5 No sap doth through their clattering branches flow,
Whence springing leaves and blossoms bright appear;
Their hearts the living God have ceased to know,
Who gives the spring time to th' expectant year;
They mimic life, as if from him to steal
10 His glow of health to paint the livid° cheek; pale
They borrow words for thoughts they cannot feel,
That with a seeming heart their tongue may speak;
And in their show of life more dead they live
Than those that to the earth with many tears they give.

1838 1839

The Lost

The fairest day that ever yet has shone,
Will be when thou the day within shalt see;
The fairest rose that ever yet has blown,

1. In September 1838, Very, a tutor of Greek at Harvard, had a mystical experience; he told his students that the Holy Spirit was speaking through him and that the end of the world was at hand. His employment at Harvard was terminated, and he was sent briefly to an asylum, though many considered him sane. Both of these poems date from his visionary period.

When thou the flower thou lookest on shalt be.
5 But thou art far away among Time's toys;
Thyself the day thou lookest for in them,
Thyself the flower that now thine eye enjoys,
But wilted now thou hang'st upon thy stem.
The bird thou hearest on the budding tree,
10 Thou hast made sing with thy forgotten voice;
But when it swells again to melody,
The song is thine in which thou wilt rejoice;
And thou new risen 'midst these wonders live,
That now to them dost all thy substance give.

1838–40 1883

HENRY DAVID THOREAU
1817–1862

I Am a Parcel of Vain Strivings Tied

I am a parcel of vain strivings tied
By a chance bond together,
Dangling this way and that, their links
Were made so loose and wide,
5 Methinks,
For milder weather.

A bunch of violets without their roots,
And sorrel intermixed,
Encircled by a wisp of straw
10 Once coiled about their shoots,
The law
By which I'm fixed.

A nosegay which Time clutched from out
Those fair Elysian fields,[1]
15 With weeds and broken stems, in haste,
Doth make the rabble rout
That waste
The day he yields.

And here I bloom for a short hour unseen,
20 Drinking my juices up,
With no root in the land
To keep my branches green,
But stand
In a bare cup.

1841

1. In Greek and Roman mythology, the home of the blessed in the afterlife.

Smoke

Light-winged Smoke, Icarian bird,[2]
Melting thy pinions in thy upward flight;
Lark without song, and messenger of dawn,
Circling above the hamlets as thy nest;
5 Or else, departing dream, and shadowy form
Of midnight vision, gathering up thy skirts;
By night star-veiling, and by day
Darkening the light and blotting out the sun;
Go thou my incense upward from this hearth,
10 And ask the gods to pardon this clear flame.

1843, 1854

EMILY BRONTË
1818–1848

[Long Neglect Has Worn Away]

Long neglect has worn away
Half the sweet enchanting smile;
Time has turned the bloom to gray;
Mold and damp the face defile.

5 But that lock of silky hair,
Still beneath the picture twined,
Tells what once those features were,
Paints their image on the mind.

Fair the hand that traced that line,
10 "Dearest, ever deem me true";
Swiftly flew the fingers fine
When the pen that motto drew.

1837 1923

Hope

Hope was but a timid friend—
She sat without° my grated den outside
Watching how my fate would tend
Even as selfish-hearted men.

2. According to Greek mythology, Icarus and his father, Daedalus, escaped from Crete by flying with wings of wax and feathers. When Icarus flew too near the sun, his wings melted.

5 She was cruel in her fear.
Through the bars, one dreary day,
I looked out to see her there
And she turned her face away!

Like a false guard false watch keeping
10 Still in strife she whispered peace;
She would sing while I was weeping,
If I listened, she would cease.

False she was, and unrelenting.
When my last joys strewed the ground
15 Even Sorrow saw repenting
Those sad relics scattered round;

Hope—whose whisper would have given
Balm to all that frenzied pain—
Stretched her wings and soared to heaven;
20 Went—and ne'er returned again!

1843 1843

Remembrance[1]

Cold in the earth—and the deep snow piled above thee,
Far, far removed, cold in the dreary grave!
Have I forgot, my only Love, to love thee,
Severed at last by Time's all-severing wave?

5 Now, when alone, do my thoughts no longer hover
Over the mountains, on that northern shore,
Resting their wings where heath and fern leaves cover
Thy noble heart forever, ever more?

Cold in the earth—and fifteen wild Decembers,
10 From those brown hills, have melted into spring;
Faithful, indeed, is the spirit that remembers
After such years of change and suffering!

Sweet Love of youth, forgive, if I forget thee,
While the world's tide is bearing me along;
15 Other desires and other hopes beset me,
Hopes which obscure, but cannot do thee wrong!

No later light has lightened up my heaven,
No second morn has ever shone for me;

1. One of the Gondal poems. As children, Emily and Anne Brontë had written poems and stories about the inhabitants of Gondal, an imaginary island in the North Pacific, and Emily, at least, continued to write Gondal poems throughout her life.

All my life's bliss from thy dear life was given,
20 All my life's bliss is in the grave with thee.

But, when the days of golden dreams had perished,
And even Despair was powerless to destroy,
Then did I learn how existence could be cherished,
Strengthened, and fed without the aid of joy.

25 Then did I check the tears of useless passion—
Weaned my young soul from yearning after thine;
Sternly denied its burning wish to hasten
Down to that tomb already more than mine.

And, even yet, I dare not let it languish,
30 Dare not indulge in memory's rapturous pain;
Once drinking deep of that divinest anguish,
How could I seek the empty world again?

1845 1846

The Prisoner. A Fragment[2]

In the dungeon-crypts, idly did I stray,
Reckless of the lives wasting there away;
"Draw the ponderous bars! open, Warder stern!"
He dared not say me nay—the hinges harshly turn.

5 "Our guests are darkly lodged," I whisper'd, gazing through
The vault, whose grated eye showed heaven more gray than blue;
(This was when glad spring laughed in awaking pride;)
"Aye, darkly lodged enough!" returned my sullen guide.

Then, God forgive my youth; forgive my careless tongue;
10 I scoffed, as the chill chains on the damp flag-stones rung:
"Confined in triple walls, art thou so much to fear,
That we must bind thee down and clench thy fetters here?"

The captive raised her face, it was as soft and mild
As sculptured marble saint, or slumbering unwean'd child;
15 It was so soft and mild, it was so sweet and fair,
Pain could not trace a line, nor grief a shadow there!

The captive raised her hand and pressed it to her brow;
"I have been struck," she said, "and I am suffering now;
Yet these are little worth, your bolts and irons strong,
20 And, were they forged in steel, they could not hold me long."

2. Taken from a poem in the Brontë sisters' Gondal manuscript (see note 1 above), Julian M. and A.G. Rochelle, this excerpt describes an episode not found in the story. The speaker is visiting a dungeon in his father's castle.

Hoarse laughed the jailor grim: "Shall I be won to hear;
Dost think, fond, dreaming wretch, that I shall grant thy prayer?
Or, better still, wilt melt my master's heart with groans?
Ah! sooner might the sun thaw down these granite stones.

25 "My master's voice is low, his aspect bland and kind,
But hard as hardest flint, the soul that lurks behind;
And I am rough and rude, yet not more rough to see
Than is the hidden ghost that has its home in me."

About her lips there played a smile of almost scorn,
30 "My friend," she gently said, "you have not heard me mourn;
When you my kindred's lives, my lost life, can restore,
Then may I weep and sue,—but never, friend, before!

Still, let my tyrants know, I am not doomed to wear
Year after year in gloom, and desolate despair;
35 A messenger of Hope, comes every night to me,
And offers for short life, eternal liberty.

He comes with western winds, with evening's wandering airs,
With that clear dusk of heaven that brings the thickest stars.
Winds take a pensive tone, and stars a tender fire,
40 And visions rise, and change, that kill me with desire.

Desire for nothing known in my maturer years,
When Joy grew mad with awe, at counting future tears.
When, if my spirit's sky was full of flashes warm,
I knew not whence they came, from sun, or thunder storm.

45 But, first, a hush of peace—a soundless calm descends;
The struggle of distress, and fierce impatience ends.
Mute music soothes my breast, unuttered harmony,
That I could never dream, till Earth was lost to me.

Then dawns the Invisible; the Unseen its truth reveals;
50 My outward sense is gone, my inward essence feels:
Its wings are almost free—its home, its harbor found,
Measuring the gulph, it stoops, and dares the final bound.

Oh, dreadful is the check—intense the agony—
When the ear begins to hear, and the eye begins to see;
55 When the pulse begins to throb, the brain to think again,
The soul to feel the flesh, and the flesh to feel the chain.

Yet I would lose no sting, would wish no torture less,
The more that anguish racks, the earlier it will bless;
And robed in fires of hell, or bright with heavenly shine,
60 If it but herald death, the vision is divine!"[3]

3. Cf. the dying words of Catherine in Emily's Wuthering Heights (1847): "The thing that irks me most is this shattered prison [my body]. . . . I'm tired, tired of being enclosed here. I'm wearying to escape into that glorious world, and to be always there. . . . I shall be incomparably beyond and above you all."

She ceased to speak, and we, unanswering, turned to go—
We had no further power to work the captive woe:
Her cheek, her gleaming eye, declared that man had given
A sentence, unapproved, and overruled by Heaven.

1845 1846

No Coward Soul Is Mine

No coward soul is mine,
No trembler in the world's storm-troubled sphere!
I see Heaven's glories shine,
And Faith shines equal, arming me from Fear.

5 O God within my breast,
Almighty ever-present Deity!
Life, that in me hast rest
As I, undying Life, have power in thee!

Vain are the thousand creeds
10 That move men's hearts, unutterably vain;
Worthless as withered weeds,
Or idlest froth, amid the boundless main

To waken doubt in one
Holding so fast by thy infinity,
15 So surely anchored on
The steadfast rock of Immortality.

With wide-embracing love
Thy spirit animates eternal years,
Pervades and broods above,
20 Changes, sustains, dissolves, creates and rears.

Though earth and moon were gone,
And suns and universes ceased to be,
And thou were left alone,
Every Existence would exist in thee.

25 There is not room for Death,
Nor atom that his might could render void
Since thou art Being and Breath,
And what thou art may never be destroyed.

1846 1850

ARTHUR HUGH CLOUGH
1819–1861

From Amours de Voyage

From Canto I

Over the great windy waters, and over the clear crested summits,
Unto the sun and the sky, and unto the perfecter earth,
Come, let us go,—to a land wherein gods of the old time wandered,
Where every breath even now changes to ether[1] divine.
5 Come, let us go; though withal a voice whisper, "The world that we live in,
Whithersoever we turn, still is the same narrow crib;
'Tis but to prove limitation, and measure a cord, that we travel;
Let who would 'scape and be free go to his chamber and think;
'Tis but to change idle fancies for memories wilfully falser;
10 'Tis but to go and have been."—Come, little bark!° let us go. — small boat

I. CLAUDE TO EUSTACE

Dear Eustatio, I write that you may write me an answer,
Or at the least to put us again en rapport[2] with each other.
Rome disappoints me much,—St. Peter's, perhaps, in especial;
Only the Arch of Titus and view from the Lateran please me:
15 This, however, perhaps, is the weather, which truly is horrid.
Greece must be better, surely; and yet I am feeling so spiteful,
That I could travel to Athens, to Delphi, and Troy, and Mount Sinai, Though but to see with my eyes that these are vanity also.
Rome disappoints me much; I hardly as yet understand, but 20 Rubbishy seems the word that most exactly would suit it.
All the foolish destructions, and all the sillier savings,
All the incongruous things of past incompatible ages,
Seem to be treasured up here to make fools of present and future.
Would to Heaven the old Goths[3] had made a cleaner sweep of it!
25 Would to Heaven some new ones would come and destroy these churches!
However, one can live in Rome as also in London.
Rome is better than London, because it is other than London.
It is a blessing, no doubt, to be rid, at least for a time, of
All one's friends and relations,—yourself (forgive me!) included,— 30 All the assujettissement[4] of having been what one has been,
What one thinks one is, or thinks that others suppose one;
Yet, in despite of all, we turn like fools to the English.
Vernon has been my fate; who is here the same that you knew him,—
Making the tour, it seems, with friends of the name of Trevellyn.

1. The clear upper air, or a heavenly material not matter.
2. In sympathy (French).
3. One of the barbarian tribes that sacked ancient Rome.
4. Constraint (French).

II. CLAUDE TO EUSTACE

35 Rome disappoints me still; but I shrink and adapt myself to it.
Somehow a tyrannous sense of a superincumbent° oppression overlying
Still, wherever I go, accompanies ever, and makes me Feel like a tree (shall I say?) buried under a ruin of brickwork.
Rome, believe me, my friend, is like its own Monte Testaceo,
40 Merely a marvellous mass of broken and castaway wine-pots.
Ye gods! what do I want with this rubbish of ages departed,
Things that Nature abhors, the experiments that she has failed in?
What do I find in the Forum? An archway and two or three pillars.
Well, but St. Peter's? Alas, Bernini[5] has filled it with sculpture!
45 No one can cavil, I grant, at the size of the great Coliseum.
Doubtless the notion of grand and capacious and massive amusement,
This the old Romans had; but tell me, is this an idea?
Yet of solidity much, but of splendor little is extant:
"Brickwork I found thee, and marble I left thee!" their Emperor vaunted;
50 "Marble I thought thee, and brickwork I find thee!" the Tourist may answer.

III. GEORGINA TREVELLYN TO LOUISA

At last, dearest Louisa, I take up my pen to address you.
Here we are, you see, with the seven-and-seventy boxes,
Courier, Papa and Mamma, the children, and Mary and Susan:
Here we all are at Rome, and delighted of course with St. Peter's, 55 And very pleasantly lodged in the famous Piazza di Spagna.
Rome is a wonderful place, but Mary shall tell you about it;
Not very gay, however; the English are mostly at Naples;
There are the A.s, we hear, and most of the W. party.
George, however, is come; did I tell you about his mustachios?
60 Dear, I must really stop, for the carriage, they tell me, is waiting.
Mary will finish; and Susan is writing, they say, to Sophia.
Adieu, dearest Louise,—evermore your faithful Georgina.
Who can a Mr. Claude be whom George has taken to be with?
Very stupid, I think, but George says so very clever.

* * *

1858

The Latest Decalogue[6]

Thou shalt have one God only; who
Would be at the expense of two?
No graven images may be
Worshipped, except the currency:

5. Giovanni Lorenzo Bernini (1598–1680), Italian sculptor.

6. The Latest Ten Commandments.

5 Swear not at all; for for thy curse
Thine enemy is none the worse:
At church on Sunday to attend
Will serve to keep the world thy friend:
Honor thy parents; that is, all
10 From whom advancement may befall:
Thou shalt not kill; but needst not strive Officiously to keep alive:
Do not adultery commit;
Advantage rarely comes of it:
15 Thou shalt not steal; an empty feat,
When it's so lucrative to cheat:
Bear not false witness; let the lie
Have time on its own wings to fly:
Thou shalt not covet; but tradition
20 Approves all forms of competition.

The sum of all is, thou shalt love,
If any body, God above:
At any rate shall never labor
More than thyself to love thy neighbor.

1862

Say Not the Struggle Nought Availeth

Say not the struggle nought availeth,
The labor and the wounds are vain,
The enemy faints not, nor faileth,
And as things have been, things remain.

5 If hopes were dupes, fears may be liars;
It may be, in yon smoke concealed,
Your comrades chase e'en now the fliers,
And, but for you, possess the field.

For while the tired waves, vainly breaking,
10 Seem here no painful inch to gain,
Far back through creeks and inlets making
Came, silent, flooding in, the main,° sea

And not by eastern windows only,
When daylight comes, comes in the light,
15 In front the sun climbs slow, how slowly,
But westward, look, the land is bright.

1849 1862

JULIA WARD HOWE
1819–1910

Battle-Hymn of the Republic[1]

Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord:
He is trampling out the vintage where the grapes of wrath are stored;
He hath loosed the fateful lightning of his terrible swift sword:
His truth is marching on.

5 I have seen Him in the watch-fires of a hundred circling camps;
They have builded Him an altar in the evening dews and damps;
I can read His righteous sentence by the dim and flaring lamps.
His day is marching on.

I have read a fiery gospel, writ in burnished rows of steel:
10 "As ye deal with my contemners, so with you my grace shall deal;
Let the Hero, born of woman, crush the serpent with his heel,
Since God is marching on."

He has sounded forth the trumpet that shall never call retreat;
He is sifting out the hearts of men before his judgment-seat:
15 Oh! be swift, my soul, to answer Him! be jubilant, my feet!
Our God is marching on.

In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in his bosom that transfigures you and me:
As he died to make men holy, let us die to make men free,
20 While God is marching on.

1861 1866

HERMAN MELVILLE
1819–1891

The Portent

Hanging from the beam,
Slowly swaying (such the law),
Gaunt the shadow on your green,
Shenandoah![1]
5 The cut is on the crown

1. When Howe saw Union troops camped along the roadside in Washington, D.C., she joined friends in singing the popular Civil War song that begins "John Brown's body lies a-mouldering in the grave." That night, she responded to someone's suggestion that she write new verses to the same tune. Howe here compares the reckoning that will come at the end of the war with the Day of Jehovah; see especially Isaiah 63.

1. Valley in northern Virginia; the scene of famous Civil War battles between 1862 and 1864.

(Lo, John Brown),[2]
And the stabs shall heal no more.

Hidden in the cap
Is the anguish none can draw;
10 So your future veils its face,
Shenandoah!
But the streaming beard is shown (Weird John Brown),
The meteor of the war.

1859 1866

Shiloh[3]

A Requiem (April 1862)

Skimming lightly, wheeling still,
The swallows fly low
Over the field in clouded days,
The forest-field of Shiloh—
5 Over the field where April rain
Solaced the parched one stretched in pain
Through the pause of night
That followed the Sunday fight
Around the church of Shiloh—
10 The church so lone, the log-built one,
That echoed to many a parting groan
And natural prayer
Of dying foemen mingled there—
Foemen at morn, but friends at eve—
15 Fame or country least their care:
(What like a bullet can undeceive!)
But now they lie low,
While over them the swallows skim,
And all is hushed at Shiloh.

1866

The Maldive[4] Shark

About the Shark, phlegmatical one,
Pale sot° of the Maldive sea, drinker
The sleek little pilot-fish, azure and slim,
How alert in attendance be.
5 From his saw-pit of mouth, from his charnel of maw,

2. American abolitionist (1800–1859), who was hanged for leading a raid on the United States armory at Harpers Ferry, West Virginia, near the Shenandoah Valley.
3. The battle at Shiloh Church, in Tennessee, on April 6 and 7, 1862, was one of the bloodiest of the Civil War; close to twenty-four thousand men died.
4. I.e., of the area around the Maldives, a group of islands in the Indian Ocean.

They have nothing of harm to dread,
But liquidly glide on his ghastly flank
Or before his Gorgonian[5] head;
Or lurk in the port of serrated teeth
10 In white triple tiers of glittering gates,
And there find a haven when peril's abroad,
An asylum in jaws of the Fates!

They are friends; and friendly they guide him to prey,
Yet never partake of the treat—
15 Eyes and brains to the dotard lethargic and dull,
Pale ravener of horrible meat.

1888

The Berg

A Dream

I saw a Ship of martial build (Her standards set, her brave apparel on)
Directed as by madness mere
Against a stolid iceberg steer,
5 Nor budge it, though the infatuate° Ship went down. foolish
The impact made huge ice-cubes fall
Sullen, in tons that crashed the deck;
But that one avalanche was all—
No other movement save the foundering wreck.

10 Along the spurs of ridges pale,
Not any slenderest shaft and frail,
A prism over glass-green gorges lone,
Toppled; nor lace of traceries fine,
Nor pendant drops in grot or mine
15 Were jarred, when the stunned Ship went down.

Nor sole the gulls in cloud that wheeled
Circling one snow-flanked peak afar,
But nearer fowl the floes that skimmed
And crystal beaches, felt no jar.
20 No thrill transmitted stirred the lock
Of jack-straw needle-ice at base;
Towers undermined by waves—the block
Atilt impending—kept their place.
Seals, dozing sleek on sliddery ledges
25 Slipt never, when by loftier edges,
Through very inertia overthrown,
The impetuous ship in bafflement went down.

5. In Greek mythology, the Gorgons were three sisters with terrifying faces and serpent hair; whoever looked at them turned to stone.

Hard Berg (methought), so cold, so vast,
With mortal damps self-overcast;
30 Exhaling still thy dankish breath—
Adrift dissolving, bound for death;
Though lumpish thou, a lumbering one—
A lumbering lubbard loitering slow,
Impingers rue thee and go down,
35 Sounding thy precipice below,
Nor stir the slimy slug that sprawls
Along thy dead indifference of walls.[6]

1888

Monody[7]

To have known him, to have loved him
After loneness long;
And then to be estranged in life,
And neither in the wrong;
5 And now for death to set his seal—
Ease me, a little ease, my song!

By wintry hills his hermit-mound
The sheeted snow-drifts drape,
And houseless there the snow-bird flits
10 Beneath the fir-trees' crape:
Glazed now with ice the cloistral vine
That hid the shyest grape.

1891

SPIRITUALS

Go Down, Moses[1]

Go down, Moses,
Way down in Egyptland
Tell old Pharaoh
To let my people go.

6. Manuscript version of Melville's final line. In his first published edition of the poem, the final line reads "Along thy dense stolidity of walls."
7. Lament; originally, a Greek ode sung by a single voice, as in a tragedy. Some critics have surmised that Melville may have been writing about a cooled friendship with the American writer Nathaniel Hawthorne (1804–1864).

1. Hebrew lawgiver; according to the Hebrew Scriptures, he led his people out of bondage in Egypt to the edge of Canaan. Cf. Exodus 5: "Afterward Moses . . . went to Pharaoh and said, 'Thus says the Lord, the God of Israel, "Let my people go, that they may hold a feast to me in the wilderness." ' "

5 When Israel was in Egyptland
Let my people go
Oppressed so hard they could not stand
Let my people go.

Go down, Moses,
10 Way down in Egyptland
Tell old Pharaoh
"Let my people go."

"Thus saith the Lord," bold Moses said,
"Let my people go;
15 If not I'll smite your first-born dead[2]
Let my people go.

"No more shall they in bondage toil,
Let my people go;
Let them come out with Egypt's spoil,
20 Let my people go."

The Lord told Moses what to do
Let my people go;
To lead the children of Israel through,
Let my people go.

25 Go down, Moses,
Way down in Egyptland,
Tell old Pharaoh,
"Let my people go!"

Steal Away to Jesus

Steal away, steal away, steal away to Jesus,
Steal away, steal away home,
I ain't got long to stay here.

My Lord, He calls me,
5 He calls me by the thunder,
The trumpet sounds within-a my soul,
I ain't got long to stay here.

Steal away, steal away, steal away to Jesus,
Steal away, steal away home,
10 I ain't got long to stay here.

Green trees a-bending,
Po' sinner stands a-trembling,

2. After Pharaoh refused to free the Israelites, God sent a series of miracles, plagues, and punishments. Cf. Exodus 11: "And Moses said, 'Thus says the Lord: About midnight I will go forth in the midst of Egypt; and all the first-born in the land of Egypt shall die.' "

The trumpet sounds within-a my soul,
I ain't got long to stay here.

15 Steal away, steal away, steal away to Jesus,
Steal away, steal away home,
I ain't got long to stay here.

Ezekiel Saw the Wheel[3]

Ezek'el saw the wheel
'Way up in the middle o' the air,
Ezek'el saw the wheel
'Way up in the middle o' the air.

5 The big wheel moved by Faith,
The little wheel moved by the Grace of God,
A wheel in a wheel,
'Way up in the middle o' the air.

Jes' let me tell you what a hypocrite'll do,
10 'Way up in the middle o' the air,
He'll talk about me an' he'll talk about you!
'Way up in the middle o' the air.

Ezek'el saw the wheel
'Way up in the middle o' the air,
15 Ezek'el saw the wheel
'Way up in the middle o' the air.

The big wheel moved by Faith,
The little wheel moved by the Grace of God,
A wheel in a wheel,
20 'Way up in the middle o' the air.

Watch out my sister how you walk on the cross,
'Way up in the middle o' the air,
Your foot might slip and your soul get lost!
'Way up in the middle o' the air.

25 Ezek'el saw the wheel
'Way up in the middle o' the air,
Ezek'el saw the wheel
'Way up in the middle o' the air.

3. Hebrew Scripture prophecy. Cf. Ezekiel 15: "Now as I looked at the living creatures, I saw a wheel upon the earth beside the living creatures, one for each of the four of them . . . their construction being as it were a wheel within a wheel. . . . And when the living creatures went, the wheels went beside them; and when the living creatures rose from the earth, the wheels rose. Wherever the spirit would go, they went, and the wheels rose along with them; for the spirit of the living creatures was in the wheels."

The big wheel moved by Faith,
30 The little wheel moved by the Grace of God,
A wheel in a wheel,
'Way up in the middle o' the air.

You say the Lord has set you free,
'Way up in the middle o' the air,
35 Why don't you let your neighbors be!
'Way up in the middle o' the air.

Ezek'el saw the wheel
'Way up in the middle o' the air,
Ezek'el saw the wheel
40 'Way up in the middle o' the air.

The big wheel moved by Faith,
The little wheel moved by the Grace of God,
A wheel in a wheel,
'Way up in the middle o' the air.

WALT WHITMAN
1819–1892

From Song of Myself[1]

1

I celebrate myself, and sing myself,
And what I assume you shall assume,
For every atom belonging to me as good belongs to you.

I loafe and invite my soul,
5 I lean and loafe at my ease observing a spear of summer grass.

My tongue, every atom of my blood, form'd from this soil, this air, Born here of parents born here from parents the same, and their parents the same,
I, now thirty-seven years old in perfect health begin,
Hoping to cease not till death.

10 Creeds and schools in abeyance,
Retiring back a while sufficed at what they are, but never forgotten,
I harbor for good or bad, I permit to speak at every hazard,
Nature without check with original energy.

1. The title Whitman gave in 1881 to the poem that constituted more than half of Leaves of Grass, originally published in 1855. The book, radical in both form and content (particularly in its explicit treatment of sexual themes), was years in the making and underwent many, though often slight, revisions. "Song of Myself" was both untitled and unsectioned in its first appearance. This version is based on the 2002 Norton Critical Edition by Michael Moon, itself based on the Blodgett and Bradley 1973 Norton Critical Edition of Leaves of Grass, which was based on Whitman's 1891–92 text.

5

I believe in you my soul, the other I am must not abase itself to you,
And you must not be abased to the other.

Loafe with me on the grass, loose the stop from your throat,
85 Not words, not music or rhyme I want, not custom or lecture, not even the best,
Only the lull I like, the hum of your valvèd voice.

I mind how once we lay such a transparent summer morning,
How you settled your head athwart my hips and gently turn'd over upon me,
And parted the shirt from my bosom-bone, and plunged your tongue to my bare-stript heart, 90 And reach'd till you felt my beard, and reach'd till you held my feet.
Swiftly arose and spread around me the peace and knowledge that pass all the argument of the earth,
And I know that the hand of God is the promise of my own,
And I know that the spirit of God is the brother of my own,
And that all the men ever born are also my brothers, and the women my sisters and lovers,
95 And that a kelson[2] of the creation is love,
And limitless are leaves stiff or drooping in the fields,
And brown ants in the little wells beneath them,
And mossy scabs of the worm fence, heap'd stones, elder, mullein and poke-weed.[3]

6

A child said What is the grass? fetching it to me with full hands;
100 How could I answer the child? I do not know what it is any more than he.

I guess it must be the flag of my disposition, out of hopeful green stuff woven.

Or I guess it is the handkerchief of the Lord,
A scented gift and remembrancer designedly dropt,
Bearing the owner's name someway in the corners, that we may see and remark, and say Whose?

105 Or I guess the grass is itself a child, the produced babe of the vegetation.

Or I guess it is a uniform hieroglyphic,
And it means, Sprouting alike in broad zones and narrow zones,
Growing among black folks as among white,
Kanuck, Tuckahoe, Congressman, Cuff,[4] I give them the same, I receive them the same.

2. Line of timber inside a ship that joins the bottom structure (keel) and the floorboards; i.e., a source of stability.
3. A shrub, an herb, and a weed, respectively.
4. Slang for an African American. Kanuck: a French Canadian. Tuckahoe: an inhabitant of the lowlands of Virginia.

110 And now it seems to me the beautiful uncut hair of graves.

Tenderly will I use you curling grass,
It may be you transpire from the breasts of young men,
It may be if I had known them I would have loved them,
It may be you are from old people, or from offspring taken soon out of their mothers' laps, 115 And here you are the mothers' laps.

This grass is very dark to be from the white heads of old mothers,
Darker than the colorless beards of old men,
Dark to come from under the faint red roofs of mouths.

O I perceive after all so many uttering tongues,
120 And I perceive they do not come from the roofs of mouths for nothing.

I wish I could translate the hints about the dead young men and women,
And the hints about old men and mothers, and the offspring taken soon out of their laps.

What do you think has become of the young and old men?
And what do you think has become of the women and children?

125 They are alive and well somewhere,
The smallest sprout shows there is really no death,
And if ever there was it led forward life, and does not wait at the end to arrest it,
And ceas'd the moment life appear'd.

All goes onward and outward, nothing collapses,
130 And to die is different from what any one supposed, and luckier.

11

Twenty-eight young men bathe by the shore,
200 Twenty-eight young men and all so friendly;
Twenty-eight years of womanly life and all so lonesome.

She owns the fine house by the rise of the bank,
She hides handsome and richly drest aft the blinds of the window.

Which of the young men does she like the best?
205 Ah the homeliest of them is beautiful to her.

Where are you off to, lady? for I see you,
You splash in the water there, yet stay stock still in your room.

Dancing and laughing along the beach came the twenty-ninth bather,
The rest did not see her, but she saw them and loved them.

210 The beards of the young men glisten'd with wet, it ran from their long hair,
Little streams, pass'd all over their bodies.

An unseen hand also pass'd over their bodies,
It descended tremblingly from their temples and ribs.

The young men float on their backs, their white bellies bulge to the sun, they do not ask who seizes fast to them,
215 They do not know who puffs and declines with pendant and bending arch,
They do not think whom they souse with spray.

13

225 The negro holds firmly the reins of his four horses, the block swags underneath on its tied-over chain,
The negro that drives the long dray of the stone-yard, steady and tall he stands pois'd on one leg on the string-piece,[5]
His blue shirt exposes his ample neck and breast and loosens over his hip-band,
His glance is calm and commanding, he tosses the slouch of his hat away from his forehead,
The sun falls on his crispy hair and mustache, falls on the black of his polish'd and perfect limbs.

230 I behold the picturesque giant and love him, and I do not stop there,
I go with the team also.

In me the caresser of life wherever moving, backward as well as forward sluing,° turning
To niches aside and junior° bending, not a person or object missing, smaller
Absorbing all to myself and for this song.

235 Oxen that rattle the yoke and chain or halt in the leafy shade, what is that you express in your eyes?
It seems to me more than all the print I have read in my life.

My tread scares the wood-drake and wood-duck on my distant and day-long ramble,
They rise together, they slowly circle around.
I believe in those wing'd purposes,
240 And acknowledge red, yellow, white, playing within me,
And consider green and violet and the tufted crown intentional,
And do not call the tortoise unworthy because she is not something else,
And the jay in the woods never studied the gamut,° yet trills pretty well to me, musical scale
And the look of the bay mare shames silliness out of me.

5. Long, heavy, squared timber used to secure a load, a pier, or some construction.

24

Walt Whitman, a kosmos, of Manhattan the son,
Turbulent, fleshy, sensual, eating, drinking and breeding,
No sentimentalist, no stander above men and women or apart from them,
500 No more modest than immodest.

Unscrew the locks from the doors!
Unscrew the doors themselves from their jambs!

Whoever degrades another degrades me,
And whatever is done or said returns at last to me.

505 Through me the afflatus° surging and surging, through me the current and index. inspiration

I speak the pass-word primeval, I give the sign of democracy,
By God! I will accept nothing which all cannot have their counterpart of on the same terms.

Through me many long dumb voices,
Voices of the interminable generations of prisoners and slaves,
510 Voices of the diseas'd and despairing and of thieves and dwarfs,
Voices of cycles of preparation and accretion,
And of the threads that connect the stars, and of wombs and of the father-stuff,
And of the rights of them the others are down upon,
Of the deform'd, trivial, flat, foolish, despised,
515 Fog in the air, beetles rolling balls of dung.

Through me forbidden voices,
Voices of sexes and lusts, voices veil'd and I remove the veil,
Voices indecent by me clarified and transfigur'd.

I do not press my fingers across my mouth,
520 I keep as delicate around the bowels as around the head and heart, Copulation is no more rank to me than death is.

I believe in the flesh and the appetites,
Seeing, hearing, feeling, are miracles, and each part and tag of me is a miracle.

Divine am I inside and out, and I make holy whatever I touch or am touch'd from,
525 The scent of these arm-pits aroma finer than prayer,
This head more than churches, bibles, and all the creeds.

If I worship one thing more than another it shall be the spread of my own body, or any part of it,
Translucent mould of me it shall be you!
Shaded ledges and rests it shall be you!

530 Firm masculine colter[6] it shall be you!
Whatever goes to the tilth[7] of me it shall be you!
You my rich blood! your milky stream pale strippings of my life!
Breast that presses against other breasts it shall be you!
My brain it shall be your occult convolutions!
535 Root of wash'd sweet-flag! timorous pond-snipe! nest of guarded duplicate eggs! it shall be you!
Mix'd tussled hay of head, beard, brawn, it shall be you!
Trickling sap of maple, fibre of manly wheat, it shall be you!
Sun so generous it shall be you!
Vapors lighting and shading my face it shall be you!
540 You sweaty brooks and dews it shall be you!
Winds whose soft-tickling genitals rub against me it shall be you!
Broad muscular fields, branches of live oak, loving lounger in my winding paths, it shall be you!
Hands I have taken, face I have kiss'd, mortal I have ever touch'd, it shall be you.

I dote on myself, there is that lot of me and all so luscious, 545 Each moment and whatever happens thrills me with joy,
I cannot tell how my ankles bend, nor whence the cause of my faintest wish,
Nor the cause of the friendship I emit, nor the cause of the friendship I take again.

That I walk up my stoop, I pause to consider if it really be,
A morning-glory at my window satisfies me more than the metaphysics of books.

550 To behold the day-break!
The little light fades the immense and diaphanous shadows,
The air tastes good to my palate.

Hefts of the moving world at innocent gambols silently rising, freshly exuding,
Scooting obliquely high and low.

555 Something I cannot see puts upward libidinous prongs,
Seas of bright juice suffuse heaven.

The earth by the sky staid with, the daily close of their junction,
The heav'd challenge from the east that moment over my head,
The mocking taunt, See then whether you shall be master!

52

The spotted hawk swoops by and accuses me, he complains of my gab and my loitering.

6. A cutting edge fastened to a plow ahead of the plowshare.

7. Land under cultivation; also, the act of cultivating soil.

I too am not a bit tamed, I too am untranslatable,
I sound my barbaric yawp over the roofs of the world.

The last scud[8] of day holds back for me,
1335 It flings my likeness after the rest and true as any on the shadow'd wilds,
It coaxes me to the vapor and the dusk.

I depart as air, I shake my white locks at the runaway sun,
I effuse my flesh in eddies, and drift it in lacy jags.

I bequeath myself to the dirt to grow from the grass I love,
1340 If you want me again look for me under your boot-soles.

You will hardly know who I am or what I mean,
But I shall be good health to you nevertheless,
And filter and fibre your blood.

Failing to fetch me at first keep encouraged,
1345 Missing me one place search another,
I stop somewhere waiting for you.

1855, 1881

Crossing Brooklyn Ferry

1

Flood-tide below me! I see you face to face!
Clouds of the west—sun there half an hour high—I see you also face to face.

Crowds of men and women attired in the usual costumes, how curious you are to me!
On the ferry-boats the hundreds and hundreds that cross, returning home, are more curious to me than you suppose,
5 And you that shall cross from shore to shore years hence are more to me, and more in my meditations, than you might suppose.

2

The impalpable sustenance of me from all things at all hours of the day,
The simple, compact, well-join'd scheme, myself disintegrated, every one disintegrated yet part of the scheme,
The similitudes of the past and those of the future,
The glories strung like beads on my smallest sights and hearings, on the walk in the street and the passage over the river,
10 The current rushing so swiftly and swimming with me far away,
The others that are to follow me, the ties between me and them,
The certainty of others, the life, love, sight, hearing of others.

8. Wind-driven clouds.

Others will enter the gates of the ferry and cross from shore to shore,
Others will watch the run of the flood-tide,
15 Others will see the shipping of Manhattan north and west, and the heights of Brooklyn to the south and east,
Others will see the islands large and small;
Fifty years hence, others will see them as they cross, the sun half an hour high,
A hundred years hence, or ever so many hundred years hence, others will see them,
Will enjoy the sunset, the pouring-in of the flood-tide, the falling-back to the sea of the ebb-tide.

3

20 It avails not, time nor place—distance avails not,
I am with you, you men and women of a generation, or ever so many generations hence,
Just as you feel when you look on the river and sky, so I felt,
Just as any of you is one of a living crowd, I was one of a crowd,
Just as you are refresh'd by the gladness of the river and the bright flow, I was refresh'd,
25 Just as you stand and lean on the rail, yet hurry with the swift current, I stood yet was hurried,
Just as you look on the numberless masts of ships and the thick-stemm'd pipes of steamboats, I look'd.

I too many and many a time cross'd the river of old,
Watched the Twelfth-month° sea-gulls, saw them high in the air floating with motionless wings, oscillating their bodies, December
Saw how the glistening yellow lit up parts of their bodies and left the rest in strong shadow, 30 Saw the slow-wheeling circles and the gradual edging toward the south,
Saw the reflection of the summer sky in the water,
Had my eyes dazzled by the shimmering track of beams,
Look'd at the fine centrifugal spokes of light round the shape of my head in the sunlit water,
Look'd on the haze on the hills southward and south-westward,
35 Look'd on the vapor as it flew in fleeces tinged with violet,
Look'd toward the lower bay to notice the vessels arriving,
Saw their approach, saw aboard those that were near me,
Saw the white sails of schooners and sloops, saw the ships at anchor,
The sailors at work in the rigging or out astride the spars,
40 The round masts, the swinging motion of the hulls, the slender serpentine pennants,
The large and small steamers in motion, the pilots in their pilot-houses,
The white wake left by the passage, the quick tremulous whirl of the wheels,
The flags of all nations, the falling of them at sunset,

The scallop-edged waves in the twilight, the ladled cups, the frolicsome crests and glistening, 45 The stretch afar growing dimmer and dimmer, the gray walls of the granite storehouses by the docks,
On the river the shadowy group, the big steam-tug closely flank'd on each side by the barges, the hay-boat, the belated lighter,[9]
On the neighboring shore the fires from the foundry chimneys burning high and glaringly into the night,
Casting their flicker of black contrasted with wild red and yellow light over the tops of houses, and down into the clefts of streets.

4

These and all else were to me the same as they are to you,
50 I loved well those cities, loved well the stately and rapid river,
The men and women I saw were all near to me,
Others the same—others who look back on me because I look'd forward to them,
(The time will come, though I stop° here to-day and to-night.) stay

5

What is it then between us?
55 What is the count of the scores or hundreds of years between us?

Whatever it is, it avails not—distance avails not, and place avails not,
I too lived, Brooklyn of ample hills was mine,
I too walk'd the streets of Manhattan island, and bathed in the waters around it,
I too felt the curious abrupt questionings stir within me,
60 In the day among crowds of people sometimes they came upon me,
In my walks home late at night or as I lay in my bed they came upon me,
I too had been struck from the float forever held in solution,
I too had receiv'd identity by my body,
That I was I knew was of my body, and what I should be I knew I should be of my body.

6

65 It is not upon you alone the dark patches fall,
The dark threw its patches down upon me also,
The best I had done seem'd to me blank and suspicious,
My great thoughts as I supposed them, were they not in reality meagre?
Nor is it you alone who know what it is to be evil,
70 I am he who knew what it was to be evil,
I too knitted the old knot of contrariety,

9. Barge used for loading and unloading ships.

Blabb'd, blush'd, resented, lied, stole, grudg'd,
Had guile, anger, lust, hot wishes I dared not speak,
Was wayward, vain, greedy, shallow, sly, cowardly, malignant,
75 The wolf, the snake, the hog, not wanting in me,
The cheating look, the frivolous word, the adulterous wish, not wanting,
Refusals, hates, postponements, meanness, laziness, none of these wanting,
Was one with the rest, the days and haps[1] of the rest,
Was call'd by my nighest name by clear loud voices of young men as they saw me approaching or passing,
80 Felt their arms on my neck as I stood, or the negligent leaning of their flesh against me as I sat,
Saw many I loved in the street or ferry-boat or public assembly, yet never told them a word,
Lived the same life with the rest, the same old laughing, gnawing, sleeping,
Play'd the part that still looks back on the actor or actress,
The same old role, the role that is what we make it, as great as we like,
85 Or as small as we like, or both great and small.

7

Closer yet I approach you,
What thought you have of me now, I had as much of you—I laid in my stores in advance,
I consider'd long and seriously of you before you were born.

Who was to know what should come home to me?
90 Who knows but I am enjoying this?
Who knows, for all the distance, but I am as good as looking at you now, for all you cannot see me?

8

Ah, what can ever be more stately and admirable to me than mast-hemm'd Manhattan?
River and sunset and scallop-edg'd waves of flood-tide?
The sea-gulls oscillating their bodies, the hay-boat in the twilight, and the belated lighter?
95 What gods can exceed these that clasp me by the hand, and with voices I love call me promptly and loudly by my nighest name as I approach?
What is more subtle than this which ties me to the woman or man that looks in my face?
Which fuses me into you now, and pours my meaning into you?

We understand then do we not?
What I promis'd without mentioning it, have you not accepted?

1. Chance occurrences.

100 What the study could not teach—what the preaching could not accomplish is accomplish'd, is it not?

9

Flow on, river! flow with the flood-tide, and ebb with the ebb-tide!
Frolic on, crested and scallop-edg'd waves!
Gorgeous clouds of the sunset! drench with your splendor me, or the men and women generations after me!
Cross from shore to shore, countless crowds of passengers!
105 Stand up, tall masts of Mannahatta![2] stand up, beautiful hills of Brooklyn!
Throb, baffled and curious brain! throw out questions and answers!
Suspend here and everywhere, eternal float of solution!
Gaze, loving and thirsting eyes, in the house or street or public assembly!
Sound out, voices of young men! loudly and musically call me by my nighest name!
110 Live, old life! play the part that looks back on the actor or actress!
Play the old role, the role that is great or small according as one makes it!
Consider, you who peruse me, whether I may not in unknown ways be looking upon you;
Be firm, rail over the river, to support those who lean idly, yet haste with the hasting current;
Fly on, sea birds! fly sideways, or wheel in large circles high in the air;
115 Receive the summer sky, you water, and faithfully hold it till all downcast eyes have time to take it from you!
Diverge, fine spokes of light, from the shape of my head, or any one's head, in the sunlit water!
Come on, ships from the lower bay! pass up or down, white-sail'd schooners, sloops, lighters!
Flaunt away, flags of all nations! be duly lower'd at sunset!
Burn high your fires, foundry chimneys! cast black shadows at nightfall! cast red and yellow light over the tops of the houses!
120 Appearances, now or henceforth, indicate what you are,
You necessary film, continue to envelop the soul,
About my body for me, and your body for you, be hung our divinest aromas,
Thrive, cities—bring your freight, bring your shows, ample and sufficient rivers,
Expand, being than which none else is perhaps more spiritual,
125 Keep your places, objects than which none else is more lasting.

You have waited, you always wait, you dumb, beautiful ministers,
We receive you with free sense at last, and are insatiate[3] henceforward,
Not you any more shall be able to foil us, or withhold yourselves from us,

2. Variant for the Native American word normally spelled Manhattan.
3. Insatiable.

We use you, and do not cast you aside—we plant you permanently within us, 130 We fathom you not—we love you—there is perfection in you also,
You furnish your parts toward eternity,
Great or small, you furnish your parts toward the soul.

1856 1881

When I Heard the Learn'd Astronomer

When I heard the learn'd astronomer,
When the proofs, the figures, were ranged in columns before me,
When I was shown the charts and diagrams, to add, divide, and measure them,
When I sitting heard the astronomer where he lectured with much applause in the lecture-room,
5 How soon unaccountable I became tired and sick,
Till rising and gliding out I wander'd off by myself,
In the mystical moist night-air, and from time to time,
Look'd up in perfect silence at the stars.

1865 1865

Vigil Strange I Kept on the Field One Night

Vigil strange I kept on the field one night;
When you my son and my comrade dropt at my side that day,
One look I but gave which your dear eyes return'd with a look I shall never forget,
One touch of your hand to mine O boy, reach'd up as you lay on the ground,
5 Then onward I sped in the battle, the even-contested battle,
Till late in the night reliev'd to the place at last again I made my way,
Found you in death so cold dear comrade, found your body son of responding kisses, (never again on earth responding,) Bared your face in the starlight, curious the scene, cool blew the moderate night-wind,
Long there and then in vigil I stood, dimly around me the battle-field spreading,
10 Vigil wondrous and vigil sweet there in the fragrant silent night,
But not a tear fell, not even a long-drawn sigh, long I gazed,
Then on the earth partially reclining sat by your side leaning my chin in my hands,
Passing sweet hours, immortal and mystic hours with you dearest comrade—not a tear, not a word,
Vigil of silence, love and death, vigil for you my son and my soldier, 15 As onward silently stars aloft, eastward new ones upward stole,

Vigil final for you brave boy, (I could not save you, swift was your death,
I faithfully loved you and cared for you living, I think we shall surely meet again,)
Till at latest lingering of the night, indeed just as the dawn appear'd,
My comrade I wrapt in his blanket, envelop'd well his form,
20 Folded the blanket well, tucking it carefully over head and carefully under feet,
And there and then and bathed by the rising sun, my son in his grave, in his rude-dug grave I deposited,
Ending my vigil strange with that, vigil of night and battle-field dim,
Vigil for boy of responding kisses, (never again on earth responding,) Vigil for comrade swiftly slain, vigil I never forget, how as day brighten'd,
25 I rose from the chill ground and folded my soldier well in his blanket,
And buried him where he fell.

1865 1867

Beat! Beat! Drums!

Beat! beat! drums!—blow! bugles! blow!
Through the windows—through doors—burst like a ruthless force,
Into the solemn church, and scatter the congregation,
Into the school where the scholar is studying;
5 Leave not the bridegroom quiet—no happiness must he have now with his bride,
Nor the peaceful farmer any peace, ploughing his field or gathering his grain,
So fierce you whirr and pound you drums—so shrill you bugles blow.

Beat! beat! drums!—blow! bugles! blow!
Over the traffic of cities—over the rumble of wheels in the streets;
10 Are beds prepared for sleepers at night in the houses? no sleepers must sleep in those beds,
No bargainers' bargains by day—no brokers or speculators—would they continue?
Would the talkers be talking? would the singer attempt to sing?
Would the lawyer rise in the court to state his case before the judge?
Then rattle quicker, heavier drums—you bugles wilder blow.

15 Beat! beat! drums!—blow! bugles! blow!
Make no parley[4]—stop for no expostulation,
Mind not the timid—mind not the weeper or prayer,
Mind not the old man beseeching the young man,
Let not the child's voice be heard, nor the mother's entreaties,

4. Conference with an enemy.

20 Make even the trestles to shake the dead where they lie awaiting the hearses,
So strong you thump O terrible drums—so loud you bugles blow.

1861 1867

Cavalry Crossing a Ford

A line in long array where they wind betwixt green islands,
They take a serpentine course, their arms flash in the sun—hark to the musical clank,
Behold the silvery river, in it the splashing horses loitering stop to drink,
Behold the brown-faced men, each group, each person a picture, the negligent rest on the saddles,
5 Some emerge on the opposite bank, others are just entering the ford—while,
Scarlet and blue and snowy white,
The guidon[5] flags flutter gayly in the wind.

1865 1871

Out of the Cradle Endlessly Rocking

Out of the cradle endlessly rocking,
Out of the mocking-bird's throat, the musical shuttle,
Out of the Ninth-month[6] midnight,
Over the sterile sands and the fields beyond, where the child leaving his bed wander'd alone, bareheaded, barefoot,
5 Down from the shower'd halo,
Up from the mystic play of shadows twining and twisting as if they were alive,
Out from the patches of briers and blackberries,
From the memories of the bird that chanted to me,
From your memories sad brother, from the fitful risings and fallings I heard,
10 From under that yellow half-moon late-risen and swollen as if with tears,
From those beginning notes of yearning and love there in the mist,
From the thousand responses of my heart never to cease,
From the myriad thence-arous'd words,
From the word stronger and more delicious than any,
15 From such as now they start the scene revisiting,
As a flock, twittering, rising, or overhead passing,
Borne hither, ere all eludes me, hurriedly,
A man, yet by these tears a little boy again,

5. Small flag or banner used by a military unit as a signal or guide.
6. The Quaker designation for September may here also suggest the human cycle of fertility and birth, in contrast with "sterile sands" in the next line.

Throwing myself on the sand, confronting the waves,
20 I, chanter of pains and joys, uniter of here and hereafter,
Taking all hints to use them, but swiftly leaping beyond them,
A reminiscence sing.

Once Paumanok,[7]
When the lilac-scent was in the air and Fifth-month grass was growing,
25 Up this seashore in some briers,
Two feather'd guests from Alabama, two together,
And their nest, and four light-green eggs spotted with brown,
And every day the he-bird to and fro near at hand,
And every day the she-bird crouch'd on her nest, silent, with bright eyes,
30 And every day I, a curious boy, never too close, never disturbing
them,
Cautiously peering, absorbing, translating.

Shine! shine! shine!
Pour down your warmth, great sun!
While we bask, we two together.

35 Two together!
Winds blow south, or winds blow north,
Day come white, or night come black,
Home, or rivers and mountains from home,
Singing all time, minding no time,
40 While we two keep together.

Till of a sudden,
May-be kill'd, unknown to her mate,
One forenoon the she-bird crouch'd not on the nest,
Nor return'd that afternoon, nor the next,
45 Nor ever appear'd again.

And thenceforward all summer in the sound of the sea,
And at night under the full of the moon in calmer weather,
Over the hoarse surging of the sea,
Or flitting from brier to brier by day,
50 I saw, I heard at intervals the remaining one, the he-bird,
The solitary guest from Alabama.

Blow! blow! blow!
Blow up sea-winds along Paumanok's shore;
I wait and I wait till you blow my mate to me.

55 Yes, when the stars glisten'd,
All night long on the prong of a moss-scallop'd stake,
Down almost amid the slapping waves,
Sat the lone singer wonderful causing tears.

7. The Native American name for Long Island.

He call'd on his mate,
60 He pour'd forth the meanings which I of all men know.

Yes my brother I know,
The rest might not, but I have treasur'd every note,
For more than once dimly down to the beach gliding,
Silent, avoiding the moonbeams, blending myself with the shadows, 65 Recalling now the obscure shapes, the echoes, the sounds and sights after their sorts,
The white arms out in the breakers tirelessly tossing,
I, with bare feet, a child, the wind wafting my hair,
Listen'd long and long.

Listen'd to keep, to sing, now translating the notes,
70 Following you my brother.

Soothe! soothe! soothe!
Close on its wave soothes the wave behind,
And again another behind embracing and lapping, every one close,
But my love soothes not me, not me.

75 Low hangs the moon, it rose late,
It is lagging—O I think it is heavy with love, with love.

O madly the sea pushes upon the land,
With love, with love.

O night! do I not see my love fluttering out among the breakers?
80 What is that little black thing I see there in the white?

Loud! loud! loud!
Loud I call to you, my love!
High and clear I shoot my voice over the waves,
Surely you must know who is here, is here,
85 You must know who I am, my love.

Low-hanging moon!
What is that dusky spot in your brown yellow?
O it is the shape, the shape of my mate!
O moon do not keep her from me any longer.

90 Land! land! O land!
Whichever way I turn, O I think you could give me my mate back again if you only would,
For I am almost sure I see her dimly whichever way I look.

O rising stars!
Perhaps the one I want so much will rise, will rise with some of you.

95 O throat! O trembling throat!
Sound clearer through the atmosphere!

Pierce the woods, the earth,
Somewhere listening to catch you must be the one I want.

Shake out carols!
100 Solitary here, the night's carols!
Carols of lonesome love! death's carols!
Carols under that lagging, yellow, waning moon!
O under that moon where she droops almost down into the sea!
O reckless despairing carols.

105 But soft! sink low!
Soft! let me just murmur,
And do you wait a moment you husky-nois'd sea,
For somewhere I believe I heard my mate responding to me,
So faint, I must be still, be still to listen,
110 But not altogether still, for then she might not come immediately to me.

Hither my love!
Here I am! here!
With this just-sustain'd note I announce myself to you,
This gentle call is for you my love, for you.

115 Do not be decoy'd elsewhere,
That is the whistle of the wind, it is not my voice,
That is the fluttering, the fluttering of the spray,
Those are the shadows of leaves.

O darkness! O in vain!
120 O I am very sick and sorrowful.

O brown halo in the sky near the moon, drooping upon the sea!
O troubled reflection in the sea!
O throat! O throbbing heart!
And I singing uselessly, uselessly all the night.

125 O past! O happy life! O songs of joy!
In the air, in the woods, over fields,
Loved! loved! loved! loved! loved!
But my mate no more, no more with me!
We two together no more.

130 The aria sinking,
All else continuing, the stars shining,
The winds blowing, the notes of the bird continuous echoing,
With angry moans the fierce old mother incessantly moaning,
On the sands of Paumanok's shore gray and rustling,
135 The yellow half-moon enlarged, sagging down, drooping, the face of the sea almost touching,
The boy ecstatic, with his bare feet the waves, with his hair the atmosphere dallying,

The love in the heart long pent, now loose, now at last tumultuously bursting,
The aria's meaning, the ears, the soul, swiftly depositing,
The strange tears down the cheeks coursing,
140 The colloquy° there, the trio, each uttering, conference
The undertone, the savage old mother incessantly crying,
To the boy's soul's questions sullenly timing, some drown'd secret hissing,
To the outsetting bard.

Demon or bird! (said the boy's soul,)
145 Is it indeed toward your mate you sing? or is it really to me?
For I, that was a child, my tongue's use sleeping, now I have heard you,
Now in a moment I know what I am for, I awake,
And already a thousand singers, a thousand songs, clearer, louder and more sorrowful than yours,
A thousand warbling echoes have started to life within me, never to die.

150 O you singer solitary, singing by yourself, projecting me,
O solitary me listening, never more shall I cease perpetuating you,
Never more shall I escape, never more the reverberations,
Never more the cries of unsatisfied love be absent from me, Never again leave me to be the peaceful child I was before what
there in the night,
155 By the sea under the yellow and sagging moon,
The messenger there arous'd, the fire, the sweet hell within,
The unknown want, the destiny of me.

O give me the clew! (it lurks in the night here somewhere,)
O if I am to have so much, let me have more!

160 A word then, (for I will conquer it,)
The word final, superior to all,
Subtle, sent up—what is it?—I listen;
Are you whispering it, and have been all the time, you sea-waves?
Is that it from your liquid rims and wet sands?

165 Whereto answering, the sea,
Delaying not, hurrying not,
Whisper'd me through the night, and very plainly before daybreak,
Lisp'd to me the low and delicious word death,
And again death, death, death, death,
170 Hissing melodious, neither like the bird nor like my arous'd child's heart,
But edging near as privately for me rustling at my feet,
Creeping thence steadily up to my ears and laving me softly all over,
Death, death, death, death, death.

Which I do not forget,
175 But fuse the song of my dusky demon and brother,

That he sang to me in the moonlight on Paumanok's gray beach,
With the thousand responsive songs at random,
My own songs awaked from that hour,
And with them the key, the word up from the waves,
180 The word of the sweetest song and all songs,
That strong and delicious word which, creeping to my feet,
(Or like some old crone rocking the cradle, swathed in sweet garments, bending aside,)
The sea whisper'd me.

1859 1881

The Dalliance of the Eagles

Skirting the river road, (my forenoon walk, my rest,)
Skyward in air a sudden muffled sound, the dalliance of the eagles,
The rushing amorous contact high in space together,
The clinching interlocking claws, a living, fierce, gyrating wheel,
5 Four beating wings, two beaks, a swirling mass tight grappling,
In tumbling turning clustering loops, straight downward falling,
Till o'er the river pois'd, the twain yet one, a moment's lull,
A motionless still balance in the air, then parting, talons loosing,
Upward again on slow-firm pinions slanting, their separate diverse flight, 10 She hers, he his, pursuing.

1880 1881

Reconciliation

Word over all, beautiful as the sky,
Beautiful that war and all its deeds of carnage must in time be utterly lost,
That the hands of the sisters Death and Night incessantly softly wash again, and ever again, this soil'd world;
For my enemy is dead, a man divine as myself is dead,
5 I look where he lies white-faced and still in the coffin—I draw near,
Bend down and touch lightly with my lips the white face in the coffin.

1865–66 1881

When Lilacs Last in the Dooryard Bloom'd[8]

1

When lilacs last in the dooryard bloom'd,
And the great star early droop'd in the western sky in the night,
I mourn'd, and yet shall mourn with ever-returning spring.

8. Composed immediately after the assassination of President Abraham Lincoln, April 14, 1865. Venus ("the great star," line 2), low in the western sky at this time, becomes associated with Lincoln.

Ever-returning spring, trinity sure to me you bring,
5 Lilac blooming perennial and drooping star in the west,
And thought of him I love.

2

O powerful western fallen star!
O shades of night—O moody, tearful night!
O great star disappear'd—O the black murk that hides the star!
10 O cruel hands that hold me powerless—O helpless soul of me!
O harsh surrounding cloud that will not free my soul.

3

In the dooryard fronting an old farm-house near the white-wash'd palings,
Stands the lilac-bush tall-growing with heart-shaped leaves of rich green,
With many a pointed blossom rising delicate, with the perfume strong
I love,
15 With every leaf a miracle—and from this bush in the dooryard,
With delicate-color'd blossoms and heart-shaped leaves of rich green,
A sprig with its flower I break.

4

In the swamp in secluded recesses,
A shy and hidden bird is warbling a song.

20 Solitary the thrush,
The hermit withdrawn to himself, avoiding the settlements,
Sings by himself a song.

Song of the bleeding throat,
Death's outlet song of life, (for well dear brother I know, 25 If thou wast not granted to sing thou would'st surely die.)

5

Over the breast of the spring, the land, amid cities,
Amid lanes and through old woods, where lately the violets peep'd from the ground, spotting the gray debris, Amid the grass in the fields each side of the lanes, passing the endless grass,
Passing the yellow-spear'd wheat, every grain from its shroud in the dark-brown fields uprisen,
30 Passing the apple-tree blows of white and pink in the orchards,
Carrying a corpse to where it shall rest in the grave,
Night and day journeys a coffin.

6

Coffin that passes through lanes and streets,[9]
Through day and night with the great cloud darkening the land, 35 With the pomp of the inloop'd flags with the cities draped in black,
With the show of the States themselves as of crape-veil'd women standing,
With processions long and winding and the flambeaus° of the night, torches
With the countless torches lit, with the silent sea of faces and the unbared heads,
With the waiting depot, the arriving coffin, and the sombre faces, 40 With dirges through the night, with the thousand voices rising strong and solemn,
With all the mournful voices of the dirges pour'd around the coffin,
The dim-lit churches and the shuddering organs—where amid these you journey,
With the tolling tolling bells' perpetual clang,
Here, coffin that slowly passes,
45 I give you my sprig of lilac.

7

(Nor for you, for one alone,
Blossoms and branches green to coffins all I bring,
For fresh as the morning, thus would I chant a song for you O sane and sacred death.

All over bouquets of roses,
50 O death, I cover you over with roses and early lilies,
But mostly and now the lilac that blooms the first,
Copious I break, I break the sprigs from the bushes,
With loaded arms I come, pouring for you,
For you and the coffins all of you O death.)

8

55 O western orb sailing the heaven,
Now I know what you must have meant as a month since I walk'd,
As I walk'd in silence the transparent shadowy night,
As I saw you had something to tell as you bent to me night after night,
As you droop'd from the sky low down as if to my side, (while the other stars all look'd on,) 60 As we wander'd together the solemn night, (for something I know not what kept me from sleep,)
As the night advanced, and I saw on the rim of the west how full you were of woe,
As I stood on the rising ground in the breeze in the cool transparent night,

9. Lincoln's funeral procession traveled from Washington, D.C., to Springfield, Illinois, stopping at cities and towns all along the way for the people to honor the murdered president.

As I watch'd where you pass'd and was lost in the netherward black of the night,
As my soul in its trouble dissatisfied sank, as where you sad orb,
65 Concluded, dropt in the night, and was gone.

9

Sing on there in the swamp,
O singer bashful and tender, I hear your notes, I hear your call,
I hear, I come presently, I understand you,
But a moment I linger, for the lustrous star has detain'd me,
70 The star my departing comrade holds and detains me.

10

O how shall I warble myself for the dead one there I loved?
And how shall I deck my song for the large sweet soul that has gone?
And what shall my perfume be for the grave of him I love?

Sea-winds blown from east and west,
75 Blown from the Eastern sea and blown from the Western sea, till there on the prairies meeting,
These and with these and the breath of my chant,
I'll perfume the grave of him I love.

11

O what shall I hang on the chamber walls?
And what shall the pictures be that I hang on the walls,
80 To adorn the burial-house of him I love?

Pictures of growing spring and farms and homes,
With the Fourth-month° eve at sundown, and the gray smoke April
lucid and bright,
With floods of the yellow gold of the gorgeous, indolent, sinking sun,
burning, expanding the air,
With the fresh sweet herbage under foot, and the pale green leaves of the trees prolific,
85 In the distance the flowing glaze, the breast of the river, with a wind-dapple here and there,
With ranging hills on the banks, with many a line against the sky, and shadows,
And the city at hand with dwellings so dense, and stacks of chimneys,
And all the scenes of life and the workshops, and the workmen homeward returning.

12

Lo, body and soul—this land,
90 My own Manhattan with spires, and the sparkling and hurrying tides,
and the ships,

The varied and ample land, the South and the North in the light,
Ohio's shores and flashing Missouri,
And ever the far-spreading prairies cover'd with grass and corn.

Lo, the most excellent sun so calm and haughty,
The violet and purple morn with just-felt breezes,
95 The gentle soft-born measureless light,
The miracle spreading bathing all, the fulfill'd noon,
The coming eve delicious, the welcome night and the stars,
Over my cities shining all, enveloping man and land.

13

Sing on, sing on you gray-brown bird,
100 Sing from the swamps, the recesses, pour your chant from the bushes,
Limitless out of the dusk, out of the cedars and pines.

Sing on dearest brother, warble your reedy song,
Loud human song, with voice of uttermost woe.

O liquid and free and tender!
105 O wild and loose to my soul—O wondrous singer!
You only I hear—yet the star holds me, (but will soon depart,)
Yet the lilac with mastering odor holds me.

14

Now while I sat in the day and look'd forth,
In the close of the day with its light and the fields of spring, and the farmers preparing their crops,
110 In the large unconscious scenery of my land with its lakes and forests,
In the heavenly aerial beauty, (after the perturb'd winds and the storms,)
Under the arching heavens of the afternoon swift passing, and the voices of children and women,
The many-moving sea-tides, and I saw the ships how they sail'd,
And the summer approaching with richness, and the fields all busy with labor, 115 And the infinite separate houses, how they all went on, each with its meals and minutia of daily usages,
And the streets how their throbbings throbb'd, and the cities pent—lo, then and there,
Falling upon them all and among them all, enveloping me with the rest,
Appear'd the cloud, appear'd the long black trail,
And I knew death, its thought, and the sacred knowledge of death.

120 Then with the knowledge of death as walking one side of me,
And the thought of death close-walking the other side of me,

And I in the middle as with companions, and as holding the hands of companions,
I fled forth to the hiding receiving night that talks not,
Down to the shores of the water, the path by the swamp in the dimness, 125 To the solemn shadowy cedars and ghostly pines so still.

And the singer so shy to the rest receiv'd me,
The gray-brown bird I know receiv'd us comrades three,
And he sang the carol of death, and a verse for him I love.

From deep secluded recesses,
130 From the fragrant cedars and the ghostly pines so still,
Came the carol of the bird.

And the charm of the carol rapt me,
As I held as if by their hands my comrades in the night,
And the voice of my spirit tallied the song of the bird.

135 Come lovely and soothing death,
Undulate round the world, serenely arriving, arriving,
In the day, in the night, to all, to each,
Sooner or later delicate death.

Prais'd be the fathomless universe,
140 For life and joy, and for objects and knowledge curious,
And for love, sweet love—but praise! praise! praise!
For the sure-enwinding arms of cool-enfolding death.

Dark mother always gliding near with soft feet,
Have none chanted for thee a chant of fullest welcome?
145 Then I chant it for thee, I glorify thee above all,
I bring thee a song that when thou must indeed come, come unfalteringly.

Approach strong deliveress,
When it is so, when thou hast taken them I joyously sing the dead,
Lost in the loving floating ocean of thee,
150 Laved in the flood of thy bliss O death.

From me to thee glad serenades,
Dances for thee I propose saluting thee, adornments and feastings for thee,
And the sights of the open landscape and the high-spread sky are fitting,
And life and the fields, and the huge and thoughtful night.

155 The night in silence under many a star,
The ocean shore and the husky whispering wave whose voice I know,
And the soul turning to thee O vast and well-veil'd death,
And the body gratefully nestling close to thee.

Over the tree-tops I float thee a song,
160 Over the rising and sinking waves, over the myriad fields and the prairies wide,
Over the dense-pack'd cities all and the teeming wharves and ways,
I float this carol with joy, with joy to thee O death.

15

To the tally of my soul,
Loud and strong kept up the gray-brown bird,
165 With pure deliberate notes spreading filling the night.

Loud in the pines and cedars dim,
Clear in the freshness moist and the swamp-perfume,
And I with my comrades there in the night.

While my sight that was bound in my eyes unclosed,
170 As to long panoramas of visions.

And I saw askant the armies,
I saw as in noiseless dreams hundreds of battle-flags,
Borne through the smoke of the battles and pierc'd with missiles I saw them,
And carried hither and yon through the smoke, and torn and bloody,
175 And at last but a few shreds left on the staffs, (and all in silence,)
And the staffs all splinter'd and broken.

I saw battle-corpses, myriads of them,
And the white skeletons of young men, I saw them,
I saw the debris and debris of all the slain soldiers of the war,
180 But I saw they were not as was thought,
They themselves were fully at rest, they suffer'd not,
The living remain'd and suffer'd, the mother suffer'd,
And the wife and the child and the musing comrade suffer'd,
And the armies that remain'd suffer'd.

16

185 Passing the visions, passing the night,
Passing, unloosing the hold of my comrades' hands,
Passing the song of the hermit bird and the tallying song of my soul,
Victorious song, death's outlet song, yet varying ever-altering song,
As low and wailing, yet clear the notes, rising and falling, flooding the night,
190 Sadly sinking and fainting, as warning and warning, and yet again bursting with joy,
Covering the earth and filling the spread of the heaven,
As that powerful psalm in the night I heard from recesses,
Passing, I leave thee lilac with heart-shaped leaves,
I leave thee there in the door-yard, blooming, returning with spring.

195 I cease from my song for thee,
From my gaze on thee in the west, fronting the west, communing with thee,
O comrade lustrous with silver face in the night.

Yet each to keep and all, retrievements out of the night,
The song, the wondrous chant of the gray-brown bird,
200 And the tallying chant, the echo arous'd in my soul,
With the lustrous and drooping star with the countenance full of woe,
With the holders holding my hand nearing the call of the bird, Comrades mine and I in the midst, and their memory ever to keep,
for the dead I loved so well,
For the sweetest, wisest soul of all my days and lands—and this for his dear sake,
205 Lilac and star and bird twined with the chant of my soul,
There in the fragrant pines and the cedars dusk and dim.

1865–66 1881

A Noiseless Patient Spider

A noiseless patient spider,
I mark'd where on a little promontory it stood isolated,
Mark'd how to explore the vacant vast surrounding,
It launch'd forth filament, filament, filament, out of itself,
5 Ever unreeling them, ever tirelessly speeding them.

And you O my soul where you stand,
Surrounded, detached, in measureless oceans of space, Ceaselessly musing, venturing, throwing, seeking the spheres to connect them,
Till the bridge you will need be form'd, till the ductile anchor hold,
10 Till the gossamer thread you fling catch somewhere, O my soul.

1868 1881

To a Locomotive in Winter

Thee for my recitative,
Thee in the driving storm even as now, the snow, the winter-day declining,
Thee in thy panoply,[1] thy measur'd dual throbbing and thy beat convulsive,
Thy black cylindric body, golden brass and silvery steel,
5 Thy ponderous side-bars, parallel and connecting rods, gyrating,
shuttling at thy sides,

1. Protective covering or magnificent display.

Thy metrical, now swelling pant and roar, now tapering in the distance,
Thy great protruding head-light fix'd in front,
Thy long, pale, floating vapor-pennants, tinged with delicate purple,
The dense and murky clouds out-belching from thy smoke-stack, 10 Thy knitted frame, thy springs and valves, the tremulous twinkle of thy wheels,
Thy train of cars behind, obedient, merrily following,
Through gale or calm, now swift, now slack, yet steadily careering;
Type of the modern—emblem of motion and power—pulse of the continent,
For once come serve the Muse[2] and merge in verse, even as here I see thee,
15 With storm and buffeting gusts of wind and falling snow,
By day thy warning ringing bell to sound its notes,
By night thy silent signal lamps to swing.

Fierce-throated beauty!
Roll through my chant with all thy lawless music, thy swinging lamps at night,
20 Thy madly-whistled laughter, echoing, rumbling like an earthquake, rousing all,
Law of thyself complete, thine own track firmly holding,
(No sweetness debonair of tearful harp or glib piano thine,)
Thy trills of shrieks by rocks and hills return'd,
Launch'd o'er the prairies wide, across the lakes,
25 To the free skies unpent and glad and strong.

1876 1881

FREDERICK GODDARD TUCKERMAN
1821–1873

From Sonnets, Third Series[1]

IV

Thin little leaves of wood fern, ribbed and toothed,
Long curved sail needles of the green pitch pine,
With common sandgrass, skirt the horizon line,
And over these the incorruptible blue!
5 Here let me gently lie and softly view
All world asperities,° lightly touched and smoothed roughnesses
As by his gracious hand, the great Bestower.
What though the year be late? some colors run
Yet through the dry, some links of melody.
10 Still let me be, by such, assuaged and soothed
And happier made, as when, our schoolday done,

2. Source of poetic inspiration.
1. Tuckerman wrote five series of sonnets; some, including the third, were published posthumously.

We hunted on from flower to frosty flower,
Tattered and dim, the last red butterfly,
Or the old grasshopper molasses-mouthed.

V

How well do I recall that walk in state
Across the Common, by the paths we knew:
Myself in silver badge and riband° blue, ribbon
My little sister with her book and slate;
5 The elm tree by the Pond, the fence of wood,
The burial place that at the corner stood
Where once we crossed, through the forbidden grate,
The stones that grudg'd us way, the graveside weed,
The ominous wind that turned us half about.
10 Smit° by the flying drops, at what a speed hit
Across the paths, unblessed and unforgiven
We hurried homeward when the day was late
And heard, with awe that left no place for doubt,
God's anger mutter in the darkened heaven.

VI

I looked across the rollers of the deep,
Long land-swells, ropes of weed, and riding foam,
With bitter angry heart: did I not roam
Ever like these? And what availeth sleep?
5 Or wakefulness? or pain? And still the sea
Rustled and sang, "Alike! and one to me!"
Ay! once I trod these shores too happily,
Murmuring my gladness to the rocks and ground
And, while the wave broke loud on ledge and reef, 10 Whispered it in the pause, like one who tells
His heart's dream and delight! And still the sea
Went back and forth upon its bar of shells,
Washed and withdrew, with a soft shaling sound,
As though the wet were dry and joy were grief.

1860–72 1931

MATTHEW ARNOLD
1822–1888

Shakespeare

Others abide our question. Thou art free.
We ask and ask—Thou smilest and art still,
Out-topping knowledge. For the loftiest hill,
Who to the stars uncrowns his majesty,

5 Planting his steadfast footsteps in the sea,
Making the heaven of heavens his dwelling-place,
Spares but the cloudy border of his base
To the foiled searching of mortality;

And thou, who didst the stars and sunbeams know,
10 Self-schooled, self-scanned, self-honored, self-secure,
Didst tread on earth unguessed at—better so!

All pains the immortal spirit must endure,
All weakness which impairs, all griefs which bow,
Find their sole speech in that victorious brow.

1849

To Marguerite

Yes! in the sea of life enisled,
With echoing straits between us thrown,
Dotting the shoreless watery wild,
We mortal millions live alone.
5 The islands feel the enclasping flow,
And then their endless bounds they know.

But when the moon their hollows lights,
And they are swept by balms of spring,
And in their glens, on starry nights,
10 The nightingales divinely sing;
And lovely notes, from shore to shore,
Across the sounds and channels pour—

Oh! then a longing like despair
Is to their farthest caverns sent;
15 For surely once, they feel, we were
Parts of a single continent!
Now round us spreads the watery plain—
Oh might our marges° meet again! margins

Who ordered, that their longing's fire
20 Should be, as soon as kindled, cooled?
Who renders vain their deep desire?—
A God, a God their severance ruled!
And bade betwixt their shores to be
The unplumbed, salt, estranging sea.

1852

The Scholar-Gypsy[1]

Go, for they call you, shepherd, from the hill;
Go, shepherd, and untie the wattled cotes![2]
No longer leave thy wistful flock unfed,
Nor let thy bawling fellows rack their throats,
5 Nor the cropped herbage shoot another head.
But when the fields are still,
And the tired men and dogs all gone to rest,
And only the white sheep are sometimes seen
Cross and recross the strips of moon-blanched green,
10 Come, shepherd, and again begin the quest!

Here, where the reaper was at work of late—
In this high field's dark corner, where he leaves
His coat, his basket, and his earthen cruse,° vessel
And in the sun all morning binds the sheaves,
15 Then here, at noon, comes back his stores to use—
Here will I sit and wait,
While to my ear from uplands far away
The bleating of the folded° flocks is borne, penned up
With distant cries of reapers in the corn°— grain
20 All the live murmur of a summer's day.

Screened is this nook o'er the high, half-reaped field,
And here till sundown, shepherd! will I be.
Through the thick corn the scarlet poppies peep,
And round green roots and yellowing stalks I see 25 Pale pink convolvulus in tendrils creep;
And air-swept lindens yield
Their scent, and rustle down their perfumed showers
Of bloom on the bent grass where I am laid,
And bower me from the August sun with shade;
30 And the eye travels down to Oxford's towers.

And near me on the grass lies Glanvil's book—
Come, let me read the oft-read tale again!
The story of the Oxford scholar poor,
Of pregnant parts[3] and quick inventive brain,
35 Who, tired of knocking at preferment's door,
One summer-morn forsook

1. " 'There was very lately a lad in the University of Oxford, who was by his poverty forced to leave his studies there; and at last to join himself to a company of vagabond gypsies. Among these extravagant people, by the insinuating subtlety of his carriage, he quickly got so much of their love and esteem as that they discovered to him their mystery. After he had been a pretty while well exercised in the trade, there chanced to ride by a couple of scholars, who had formerly been of his acquaintance. They quickly spied out their old friend among the gypsies; and he gave them an account of the necessity which drove him to that kind of life, and told them that the people he went with were not such impostors as they were taken for, but that they had a traditional kind of learning among them, and could do wonders by the power of imagination, their fancy binding that of others: that himself had learned much of their art, and when he had compassed the whole secret, he intended, he said, to leave their company, and give the world an account of what he had learned.'—Glanvil's Vanity of Dogmatizing, 1661" [Arnold's note].
2. Sheepfolds made of woven boughs (wattles).
3. I.e., of intellectual abilities.

His friends, and went to learn the gypsy-lore,
And roamed the world with that wild brotherhood,
And came, as most men deemed, to little good,
40 But came to Oxford and his friends no more.

But once, years after, in the country-lanes,
Two scholars, whom at college erst he knew,
Met him, and of his way of life enquired;
Whereat he answered, that the gypsy-crew,
45 His mates, had arts to rule as they desired
The workings of men's brains,
And they can bind them to what thoughts they will.
"And I," he said, "the secret of their art,
When fully learned, will to the world impart;
50 But it needs heaven-sent moments for this skill."

This said, he left them, and returned no more.—
But rumors hung about the country-side,
That the lost Scholar long was seen to stray,
Seen by rare glimpses, pensive and tongue-tied,
55 In hat of antique shape, and cloak of gray.
The same the gypsies wore.
Shepherds had met him on the Hurst[4] in spring;
At some lone alehouse in the Berkshire moors,
On the warm ingle°-bench, the smock-frocked boors° — fireside / rustics
60 Had found him seated at their entering,

But, 'mid their drink and clatter, he would fly.
And I myself seem half to know thy looks,
And put the shepherds, wanderer! on thy trace;
And boys who in lone wheatfields scare the rooks[5]
65 I ask if thou hast passed their quiet place;
Or in my boat I lie
Moored to the cool bank in the summer-heats,
'Mid wide grass meadows which the sunshine fills,
And watch the warm, green-muffled Cumner hills,
70 And wonder if thou haunt'st their shy retreats.

For most, I know, thou lov'st retirèd ground!
Thee at the ferry Oxford riders blithe,
Returning home on summer-nights, have met
Crossing the stripling Thames[6] at Bab-lock-hithe,
75 Trailing in the cool stream thy fingers wet,
As the punt's rope chops round;[7]
And leaning backward in a pensive dream,
And fostering in thy lap a heap of flowers

4. A hill near Oxford. (All place-names in the poem, with the obvious exception of the Mediterranean localities of the last two stanzas, refer to the countryside around Oxford.)
5. The boys have been hired to frighten crows away from eating wheat grains.
6. The narrow upper reaches of the river before it broadens out to its full width.
7. I.e., as the rope tying the small boat to the bank shifts around.

Plucked in shy fields and distant Wychwood bowers,
80 And thine eyes resting on the moonlit stream.

And then they land, and thou art seen no more!
Maidens, who from the distant hamlets come
To dance around the Fyfield elm in May,
Oft through the darkening fields have seen thee roam,
85 Or cross a stile into the public way.
Oft thou hast given them store
Of flowers—the frail-leafed, white anemone,
Dark bluebells drenched with dews of summer eves,
And purple orchises with spotted leaves—
90 But none hath words she can report of thee.

And, above Godstow Bridge, when hay-time's here
In June, and many a scythe in sunshine flames,
Men who through those wide fields of breezy grass
Where black-winged swallows haunt the glittering Thames,
95 To bathe in the abandoned lasher[8] pass,
Have often passed thee near Sitting upon the river bank o'ergrown;
Marked thine outlandish garb, thy figure spare,
Thy dark vague eyes, and soft abstracted air—
100 But, when they came from bathing, thou wast gone!

At some lone homestead in the Cumner hills,
Where at her open door the housewife darns,
Thou hast been seen, or hanging on a gate
To watch the threshers in the mossy barns.
105 Children, who early range these slopes and late
For cresses from the rills,° streams
Have known thee eying, all an April-day,
The springing pastures and the feeding kine;° cattle
And marked thee, when the stars come out and shine,
110 Through the long dewy grass move slow away.

In autumn, on the skirts of Bagley Wood—
Where most the gypsies by the turf-edged way
Pitch their smoked tents, and every bush you see
With scarlet patches tagged and shreds of gray,
115 Above the forest-ground called Thessaly—
The blackbird, picking food,
Sees thee, nor stops his meal, nor fears at all;
So often has he known thee past him stray,
Rapt, twirling in thy hand a withered spray,
120 And waiting for the spark from heaven to fall.

And once, in winter, on the causeway chill
Where home through flooded fields foot-travelers go,
Have I not passed thee on the wooden bridge,

8. Slack water above a weir, or dam.

Wrapt in thy cloak and battling with the snow,
125 Thy face tow'rd Hinksey and its wintry ridge?
And thou hast climbed the hill,
And gained the white brow of the Cumner range;
Turned once to watch, while thick the snowflakes fall,
The line of festal light in Christ Church hall—
130 Then sought thy straw in some sequestered grange.[9]

But what—I dream! Two hundred years are flown
Since first thy story ran through Oxford halls,
And the grave Glanvil did the tale inscribe
That thou wert wandered from the studious walls
135 To learn strange arts, and join a gypsy-tribe;
And thou from earth art gone
Long since, and in some quiet churchyard laid—
Some country-nook, where o'er thy unknown grave
Tall grasses and white flowering nettles wave, 140 Under a dark, red-fruited yew-tree's shade.

—No, no, thou hast not felt the lapse of hours!
For what wears out the life of mortal men?
'Tis that from change to change their being rolls;
'Tis that repeated shocks, again, again,
145 Exhaust the energy of strongest souls
And numb the elastic powers.
Till having used our nerves with bliss and teen,° vexation
And tired upon a thousand schemes our wit,
To the just-pausing Genius[1] we remit
150 Our worn-out life, and are—what we have been.

Thou hast not lived, why should'st thou perish, so?
Thou hadst one aim, one business, one desire;
Else wert thou long since numbered with the dead!
Else hadst thou spent, like other men, thy fire!
155 The generations of thy peers are fled.
And we ourselves shall go;
But thou possessest an immortal lot,
And we imagine thee exempt from age
And living as thou liv'st on Glanvil's page,
160 Because thou hadst—what we, alas! have not.

For early didst thou leave the world, with powers
Fresh, undiverted to the world without,
Firm to their mark, not spent on other things;
Free from the sick fatigue, the languid doubt,
165 Which much to have tried, in much been baffled, brings.
O life unlike to ours!
Who fluctuate idly without term or scope,

9. Country house. Christ Church hall: dining hall of an Oxford college.
1. In classical mythology, the protecting spirit assigned to each being to see it through the world and finally to usher it out.

Of whom each strives, nor knows for what he strives,
And each half[2] lives a hundred different lives;
170 Who wait like thee, but not, like thee, in hope.

Thou waitest for the spark from heaven! and we,
Light half-believers of our casual creeds,
Who never deeply felt, nor clearly willed,
Whose insight never has borne fruit in deeds,
175 Whose vague resolves never have been fulfilled;
For whom each year we see
Breeds new beginnings, disappointments new;
Who hesitate and falter life away,
And lose tomorrow the ground won today—
180 Ah! do not we, wanderer! await it too?

Yes, we await it! but it still delays,
And then we suffer! and amongst us one,[3]
Who most has suffered, takes dejectedly
His seat upon the intellectual throne;
185 And all his store of sad experience he Lays bare of wretched days;
Tells us his misery's birth and growth and signs,
And how the dying spark of hope was fed,
And how the breast was soothed, and how the head,
190 And all his hourly varied anodynes.

This for our wisest! and we others pine,
And wish the long unhappy dream would end,
And waive all claim to bliss, and try to bear;
With close-lipped patience for our only friend,
195 Sad patience, too near neighbor to despair—
But none has hope like thine!
Thou through the fields and through the woods dost stray,
Roaming the countryside, a truant boy,
Nursing thy project in unclouded joy,
200 And every doubt long blown by time away.

O born in days when wits were fresh and clear,
And life ran gaily as the sparkling Thames;
Before this strange disease of modern life,
With its sick hurry, its divided aims,
205 Its head o'ertaxed, its palsied hearts, was rife—
Fly hence, our contact fear!
Still fly, plunge deeper in the bowering wood!
Averse, as Dido did with gesture stern
From her false friend's approach in Hades turn,[4]
210 Wave us away, and keep thy solitude!

2. I.e., half-heartedly.
3. Possibly the German poet Johann Wolfgang von Goethe (1749–1832) or the English poet Alfred, Lord Tennyson (1809–1892; see pp. 982–1009).
4. According to Virgil's Aeneid, Dido, queen of Carthage, had been deserted by Aeneas after giving her love to him. Aeneas later encountered her in the underworld, among the shades of those who had died of unhappy love, but when he greeted her she turned her back on him.

Still nursing the unconquerable hope,
Still clutching the inviolable shade,
With a free, onward impulse brushing through,
By night, the silvered branches of the glade—
215 Far on the forest-skirts, where none pursue,
On some mild pastoral slope
Emerge, and resting on the moonlit pales° fences
Freshen thy flowers as in former years
With dew, or listen with enchanted ears,
220 From the dark dingles,° to the nightingales! valleys

But fly our paths, our feverish contact fly!
For strong the infection of our mental strife,
Which, though it gives no bliss, yet spoils for rest;
And we should win thee from thy own fair life,
225 Like us distracted, and like us unblest.
Soon, soon thy cheer would die,
Thy hopes grow timorous, and unfixed thy powers,
And thy clear aims be cross and shifting made;
And then thy glad perennial youth would fade,
230 Fade, and grow old at last, and die like ours.

Then fly our greetings, fly our speech and smiles!
—As some grave Tyrian[5] trader, from the sea,
Descried at sunrise an emerging prow
Lifting the cool-haired creepers stealthily,
235 The fringes of a southward-facing brow
Among the Aegean isles;
And saw the merry Grecian coaster come,
Freighted with amber grapes, and Chian[6] wine,
Green, bursting figs, and tunnies° steeped in brine— tuna
240 And knew the intruders on his ancient home,

The young light-hearted masters of the waves—
And snatched his rudder, he shook out more sail;
And day and night held on indignantly
O'er the blue Midland waters with the gale,
245 Betwixt the Syrtes[7] and soft Sicily,
To where the Atlantic raves
Outside the western straits;[8] and unbent sails
There, where down cloudy cliffs, through sheets of foam,
Shy traffickers, the dark Iberians[9] come;
250 And on the beach undid his corded bales.

1853

5. A native of the ancient Phoenician city of Tyre, in the eastern Mediterranean.
6. From the island of Chios, famous for its wine.
7. Two gulfs on the North African coast, one off Cyrenaica, the other off Tunisia.
8. I.e., the Straits of Gibraltar.
9. Ancient name for the inhabitants of Spain.

Thyrsis

A Monody, to Commemorate the Author's Friend, Arthur Hugh Clough, Who Died at Florence, 1861[1]

How changed is here each spot man makes or fills!
In the two Hinkseys[2] nothing keeps the same;
The village street its haunted mansion lacks,
And from the sign is gone Sibylla's name,[3]
5 And from the roofs the twisted chimney-stacks—
Are ye too changed, ye hills?
See, 'tis no foot of unfamiliar men
Tonight from Oxford up your pathway strays!
Here came I often, often, in old days—
10 Thyrsis and I; we still had Thyrsis then.

Runs it not here, the track by Childsworth Farm,
Past the high wood, to where the elm-tree crowns
The hill behind whose ridge the sunset flames?
The signal-elm, that looks on Ilsley Downs,
15 The Vale, the three lone weirs,° the youthful Thames? dams
This winter-eve is warm,
Humid the air! leafless, yet soft as spring,
The tender purple spray on copse° and briers! small wood
And that sweet city with her dreaming spires,
20 She needs not June for beauty's heightening,

Lovely all times she lies, lovely tonight!
Only, methinks, some loss of habit's power
Befalls me wandering through this upland dim.
Once passed I blindfold here, at any hour;
25 Now seldom come I, since I came with him.
That single elm-tree bright
Against the west—I miss it! is it gone?
We prized it dearly; while it stood, we said,
Our friend, the Gypsy-Scholar, was not dead;
30 While the tree lived, he in these fields lived on.

Too rare, too rare, grow now my visits here,
But once I knew each field, each flower, each stick;
And with the country-folk acquaintance made

1. The friendship between Arnold and the English poet Clough (1819–1861; see pp. 1051–53) had been at its closest while they were at Oxford, and Arnold chooses as the framework for this poem a visit to Oxford—at least in reminiscence—and more specifically to a hill above the town crowned by the "signal-elm." They connected the tree with the continuing symbolic presence in the countryside of the Scholar-Gypsy and his lonely faithfulness to an ideal of truth-seeking. (See Arnold's poem "The Scholar-Gypsy" and his note to it, above.) As in his use of the names Thyrsis (for Clough) and Corydon (line 80, for himself), both traditional designations for shepherd-poets, Arnold is adopting the conventions of the Greek and Latin pastoral elegy for his monody, or poem in which a single mourner laments.

2. North and South Hinksey, two villages near Oxford.

3. Sibylla Kerr, a tavern keeper when Arnold and Clough were students.

By barn in threshing-time, by new-built rick.
35 Here, too, our shepherd-pipes we first assayed.
Ah me! this many a year
My pipe is lost, my shepherd's holiday!
Needs must I lose them, needs with heavy heart
Into the world and wave of men depart;
40 But Thyrsis of his own will went away.[4]

It irked him to be here, he could not rest.
He loved each simple joy the country yields,
He loved his mates; but yet he could not keep,° stay
For that a shadow loured on the fields,
45 Here with the shepherds and the silly° sheep. innocent
Some life of men unblest
He knew, which made him droop; and filled his head.
He went; his piping took a troubled sound
Of storms[5] that rage outside our happy ground;
50 He could not wait their passing, he is dead.

So, some tempestuous morn in early June,
When the year's primal burst of bloom is o'er,
Before the roses and the longest day—
When garden-walks and all the grassy floor
55 With blossoms red and white of fallen May
And chestnut-flowers are strewn—
So have I heard the cuckoo's parting cry,
From the wet field, through the vext garden-trees,
Come with the volleying rain and tossing breeze:
60 The bloom is gone, and with the bloom go I!

Too quick despairer, wherefore wilt thou go?
Soon will the high Midsummer pomps come on,
Soon will the musk carnations break and swell,
Soon shall we have gold-dusted snapdragon,
65 Sweet-William with his homely cottage-smell,
And stocks in fragrant blow;
Roses that down the alleys shine afar,
And open, jasmine-muffled lattices,
And groups under the dreaming garden-trees,
70 And the full moon, and the white evening-star.

He hearkens not! light comer, he is flown!
What matters it? next year he will return,
And we shall have him in the sweet spring-days,
With whitening hedges, and uncrumpling fern,
75 And bluebells trembling by the forest-ways,
And scent of hay new-mown.
But Thyrsis never more we swains shall see;
See him come back, and cut a smoother reed,

4. Arnold left Oxford in 1847 to earn a living, first as a minor diplomat, then as inspector of schools. Clough resigned his Oxford fellowship in 1848, rather than subscribe to the Thirty-nine Articles of the Anglican Church.
5. Religious and political controversies.

And blow a strain the world at last shall heed—
80 For Time, not Corydon, hath conquered thee!

Alack, for Corydon no rival now!
But when Sicilian shepherds lost a mate,
Some good survivor with his flute would go,
Piping a ditty sad for Bion's fate;[6]
85 And cross the unpermitted ferry's flow,[7]
And relax Pluto's brow,
And make leap up with joy the beauteous head
Of Proserpine, among whose crownèd hair
Are flowers first opened on Sicilian air,
90 And flute his friend, like Orpheus,[8] from the dead.

O easy access to the hearer's grace
When Dorian[9] shepherds sang to Proserpine!
For she herself had trod Sicilian fields,
She knew the Dorian water's gush divine,
95 She knew each lily white which Enna yields,
Each rose with blushing face;
She loved the Dorian pipe, the Dorian strain.
But ah, of our poor Thames she never heard!
Her foot the Cumner cowslips° never stirred; wildflowers
100 And we should tease her with our plaint in vain!

Well! wind-dispersed and vain the words will be,
Yet, Thyrsis, let me give my grief its hour
In the old haunt, and find our tree-topped hill!
Who, if not I, for questing here hath power?
105 I know the wood which hides the daffodil,
I know the Fyfield tree,
I know what white, what purple fritillaries[1]
The grassy harvest of the river-fields,
Above by Ensham, down by Sandford, yields,
110 And what sedged brooks are Thames's tributaries;

I know these slopes; who knows them if not I?
But many a dingle° on the loved hillside, valley
With thorns once studded, old, white-blossomed trees,
Where thick the cowslips grew, and far descried
115 High towered the spikes of purple orchises,
Hath since our day put by
The coronals of that forgotten time;[2]
Down each green bank hath gone the ploughboy's team,

6. Refers to a Greek pastoral poet of the first century B.C.E. who lived in Sicily and was mourned in "Lament for Bion," sometimes ascribed to his pupil Moschus.
7. The ferry across the river Styx to Hades, ruled over by Pluto and his queen, Proserpine, whom he had abducted while she was gathering flowers in the fields near Enna, in Sicily. She spent half of each year in the underworld and half on Earth.
8. Who, because of the power and charm of his music, had been permitted to attempt to lead his wife, Eurydice, back from the dead.
9. One of the ancient Greek lyrical modes, characterized by simplicity and nobility.
1. Flowers commonly found in moist meadows.
2. I.e., the flowers that once crowned them.

And only in the hidden brookside gleam
120 Primroses, orphans of the flowery prime.

Where is the girl, who by the boatman's door,
Above the locks, above the boating throng,
Unmoored our skiff when through the Wytham flats,
Red loosestrife and blond meadow-sweet[3] among 125 And darting swallows and light water-gnats,
We tracked the shy Thames shore?
Where are the mowers, who, as the tiny swell
Of our boat passing heaved the river-grass,
Stood with suspended scythe to see us pass?
130 They all are gone, and thou art gone as well!

Yes, thou art gone! and round me too the night
In ever-nearing circle weaves her shade.
I see her veil draw soft across the day,
I feel her slowly chilling breath invade
135 The cheek grown thin, the brown hair sprent° with gray; sprinkled
I feel her finger light
Laid pausefully upon life's headlong train;
The foot less prompt to meet the morning dew,
The heart less bounding at emotion new,
140 And hope, once crushed, less quick to spring again.

And long the way appears, which seemed so short
To the less practiced eye of sanguine° youth; confident
And high the mountain-tops, in cloudy air,
The mountain-tops where is the throne of Truth,
145 Tops in life's morning-sun so bright and bare!
Unbreachable the fort
Of the long-battered world uplifts its wall;
And strange and vain the earthly turmoil grows,
And near and real the charm of thy repose,
150 And night as welcome as a friend would fall.

But hush! the upland hath a sudden loss
Of quiet!—Look, adown the dusk hillside,
A troop of Oxford hunters going home,
As in old days, jovial and talking, ride!
155 From hunting with the Berkshire hounds they come.
Quick! let me fly, and cross
Into yon farther field!—'Tis done; and see,
Backed by the sunset, which doth glorify
The orange and pale violet evening-sky,
160 Bare on its lonely ridge, the Tree! the Tree!

I take the omen! Eve lets down her veil,
The white fog creeps from bush to bush about,
The west unflushes, the high stars grow bright,
And in the scattered farms the lights come out.

3. Like loosestrife, flowers that grow in moist meadows and near streams.

165 I cannot reach the signal-tree to-night,
Yet, happy omen, hail!
Hear it from thy broad lucent Arno-vale[4]
(For there thine earth-forgetting eyelids keep
The morningless and unawakening sleep
170 Under the flowery oleanders pale),

Hear it, O Thyrsis, still our tree is there!
Ah, vain! These English fields, this upland dim,
These brambles pale with mist engarlanded,
That lone, sky-pointing tree, are not for him;
175 To a boon southern country he is fled,
And now in happier air,
Wandering with the great Mother's train divine[5]
(And purer or more subtle soul than thee,
I trow, the mighty Mother doth not see)
180 Within a folding of the Apennine,[6]

Thou hearest the immortal chants[7] of old!
Putting his sickle to the perilous grain
In the hot cornfield of the Phrygian king,
For thee the Lityerses-song again
185 Young Daphnis with his silver voice doth sing;[8]
Sings his Sicilian fold,
His sheep, his hapless love, his blinded eyes—
And how a call celestial round him rang,
And heavenward from the fountain-brink he sprang,
190 And all the marvel of the golden skies.

There thou art gone, and me thou leavest here
Sole in these fields! yet will I not despair.
Despair I will not, while I yet descry
Neath the mild canopy of English air
195 That lonely tree against the western sky.
Still, still these slopes, 'tis clear,
Our Gypsy-Scholar haunts, outliving thee!
Fields where soft sheep from cages pull the hay,
Woods with anemonies in flower till May,
200 Know him a wanderer still; then why not me?

4. Clough is buried in the Protestant cemetery in Florence, which is situated in the valley of the Arno River.
5. Devotees of Demeter (whose name may mean Earth Mother), goddess of agriculture.
6. The Apennines are a mountain range in Italy.
7. Sung in Demeter's honor.
8. "Daphnis, the ideal Sicilian shepherd of Greek pastoral poetry, was said to have followed into Phrygia his mistress Piplea, who had been carried off by robbers, and to have found her in the power of the king of Phrygia, Lityerses. Lityerses used to make strangers try a contest with him in reaping corn, and to put them to death if he overcame them. Hercules arrived in time to save Daphnis, took upon himself the reaping-contest with Lityerses, overcame him, and slew him. The Lityerses-song connected with this tradition was, like the Linus-song, one of the early plaintive strains of Greek popular poetry, and used to be sung by corn-reapers. Other traditions represented Daphnis as beloved by a nymph who exacted from him an oath to love no one else. He fell in love with a princess, and was struck blind by the jealous nymph. Mercury, who was his father, raised him to heaven, and made a fountain spring up in the place from which he ascended. At this fountain the Sicilians offered yearly sacrifices.—See Servius, Comment. in Virgil. Bucol., v.20 and viii.68" [Arnold's note].

A fugitive and gracious light he seeks,
Shy to illumine; and I seek it too.
This does not come with houses or with gold,
With place, with honor, and a flattering crew;
205 'Tis not in the world's market bought and sold—
But the smooth-slipping weeks
Drop by, and leave its seeker still untired;
Out of the heed of mortals he is gone,
He wends unfollowed, he must house alone;
210 Yet on he fares, by his own heart inspired.

Thou too, O Thyrsis, on like quest wast bound;
Thou wanderest with me for a little hour!
Men gave thee nothing; but this happy quest,
If men esteemed thee feeble, gave thee power,
215 If men procured thee trouble, gave thee rest.
And this rude Cumner ground,
Its fir-topped Hurst,° its farms, its quiet fields, a hill
Here cam'st thou in thy jocund youthful time,
Here was thine height of strength, thy golden prime!
220 And still the haunt beloved a virtue yields.

What though the music of thy rustic flute
Kept not for long its happy, country tone;
Lost it too soon, and learnt a stormy note
Of men contention-tost, of men who groan,
225 Which tasked thy pipe too sore, and tired thy throat—
It failed, and thou wast mute!
Yet hadst thou alway visions of our light,
And long with men of care thou couldst not stay,
And soon thy foot resumed its wandering way,
230 Left human haunt, and on alone till night.

Too rare, too rare, grow now my visits here!
'Mid city-noise, not, as with thee of yore,
Thyrsis! in reach of sheep-bells is my home.
—Then through the great town's harsh, heart-wearying roar,
235 Let in thy voice a whisper often come,
To chase fatigue and fear:
Why faintest thou? I wandered till I died.
Roam on! The light we sought is shining still.
Dost thou ask proof? Our tree yet crowns the hill,
240 Our Scholar travels yet the loved hillside.

1866

Dover Beach

The sea is calm tonight.
The tide is full, the moon lies fair
Upon the straits; on the French coast the light
Gleams and is gone; the cliffs of England stand,
5 Glimmering and vast, out in the tranquil bay.
Come to the window, sweet is the night-air!
Only, from the long line of spray
Where the sea meets the moon-blanched land,
Listen! you hear the grating roar
10 Of pebbles which the waves draw back, and fling,
At their return, up the high strand,
Begin, and cease, and then again begin,
With tremulous cadence slow, and bring
The eternal note of sadness in.

15 Sophocles long ago
Heard it on the Aegean, and it brought Into his mind the turbid ebb and flow
Of human misery;[9] we Find also in the sound a thought,
20 Hearing it by this distant northern sea.

The Sea of Faith
Was once, too, at the full, and round earth's shore
Lay like the folds of a bright girdle furled.
But now I only hear
25 Its melancholy, long withdrawing roar,
Retreating, to the breath
Of the night-wind, down the vast edges drear
And naked shingles[1] of the world.

Ah, love, let us be true
30 To one another! for the world, which seems
To lie before us like a land of dreams,
So various, so beautiful, so new,
Hath really neither joy, nor love, nor light,
Nor certitude, nor peace, nor help for pain;
35 And we are here as on a darkling plain
Swept with confused alarms of struggle and flight,
Where ignorant armies clash by night.

1867

9. A reference to a chorus in Sophocles' play Antigone, lines 583–92: "Happy are they whose life has not tasted evils. But for those whose house has been shaken by God, no mass of ruin fails to creep upon their families. It is like the sea-swell . . . when an undersea darkness drives upon it with gusts of Thracian wind; it rolls the dark sand from the depths, and the beaches, beaten by the waves and wind, groan and roar."

1. Beaches covered with water-worn small stones and pebbles.

DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI
1828–1882

The Blessed Damozel[1]

The blessed damozel leaned out
  From the gold bar of Heaven;
Her eyes were deeper than the depth
  Of waters stilled at even;
5 She had three lilies in her hand,
  And the stars in her hair were seven.

Her robe, ungirt from clasp to hem,
  No wrought flowers did adorn,
But a white rose of Mary's gift,
10 For service meetly° worn; properly
Her hair that lay along her back
  Was yellow like ripe corn.° wheat, grain

Herseemed° she scarce had been a day it seemed to her
  One of God's choristers;
15 The wonder was not yet quite gone
  From that still look of hers;
Albeit, to them she left, her day
  Had counted as ten years.

(To one, it is ten years of years.
20 . . . Yet now, and in this place,
Surely she leaned o'er me—her hair
  Fell all about my face. . . .
Nothing: the autumn fall of leaves.
  The whole year sets apace.)

25 It was the rampart of God's house
  That she was standing on;
By God built over the sheer depth
  The which is Space begun;
So high, that looking downward thence 30 She scarce could see the sun.

It lies in Heaven, across the flood
  Of ether, as a bridge.
Beneath, the tides of day and night
  With flame and darkness ridge
35 The void, as low as where this earth
  Spins like a fretful midge.° gnatlike insect

Around her, lovers, newly met
  In joy no sorrow claims,

1. Older form of damsel, meaning "young unmarried lady," preferred by Romantic and later writers because it avoids the simpler, homelier associations of damsel.

Spoke evermore among themselves
40 Their rapturous new names;
And the souls mounting up to God
Went by her like thin flames.

And still she bowed herself and stooped
Out of the circling charm;
45 Until her bosom must have made
The bar she leaned on warm,
And the lilies lay as if asleep
Along her bended arm.

From the fixed place of Heaven she saw
50 Time like a pulse shake fierce
Through all the worlds. Her gaze still strove
Within the gulf to pierce
Its path; and now she spoke as when
The stars sang in their spheres.

55 The sun was gone now; the curled moon
Was like a little feather
Fluttering far down the gulf; and now
She spoke through the still weather.
Her voice was like the voice the stars
60 Had when they sang together.

(Ah sweet! Even now, in that bird's song,
Strove not her accents there,
Fain to be hearkened? When those bells
Possessed the midday air,
65 Strove not her steps to reach my side
Down all the echoing stair?)

"I wish that he were come to me,
For he will come," she said.
"Have I not prayed in Heaven?—on earth,
70 Lord, Lord, has he not prayed?
Are not two prayers a perfect strength?
And shall I feel afraid?

"When round his head the aureole° clings, radiant light
And he is clothed in white,
75 I'll take his hand and go with him
To the deep wells of light;
We will step down as to a stream,
And bathe there in God's sight.

"We two will stand beside that shrine,
80 Occult, withheld, untrod,
Whose lamps are stirred continually
With prayer sent up to God;
And see our old prayers, granted, melt
Each like a little cloud.

85 "We two will lie i' the shadow of
 That living mystic tree
Within whose secret growth the Dove
 Is sometimes felt to be,
While every leaf that His plumes touch
90 Saith His Name audibly.

"And I myself will teach to him,
 I myself, lying so,
The songs I sing here; which his voice
 Shall pause in, hushèd and slow,
95 And find some knowledge at each pause,
 Of some new thing to know."

(Alas! We two, we two, thou say'st!
 Yea, one wast thou with me
That once of old. But shall God lift
100 To endless unity
The soul whose likeness with thy soul
 Was but its love for thee?)

"We two," she said, "will seek the groves
 Where the lady Mary is,
105 With her five handmaidens, whose names
 Are five sweet symphonies,
Cecily, Gertrude, Magdalen,
 Margaret and Rosalys.

"Circlewise sit they, with bound locks
110 And foreheads garlanded;
Into the fine cloth white like flame
 Weaving the golden thread,
To fashion the birth-robes for them
 Who are just born, being dead.

115 "He shall fear, haply, and be dumb:
 Then will I lay my cheek
To his, and tell about our love,
 Not once abashed or weak:
And the dear Mother will approve
120 My pride, and let me speak.

"Herself shall bring us, hand in hand,
 To Him round whom all souls
Kneel, the clear-ranged unnumbered heads
 Bowed with their aureoles:
125 And angels meeting us shall sing
 To their citherns and citoles.[2]

2. The cithern is a seventeenth-century guitarlike instrument with wire strings; the citole, a stringed instrument dating from the thirteenth to the fifteenth century.

"There will I ask of Christ the Lord
  Thus much for him and me:—
Only to live as once on earth
130   With Love—only to be,
As then awhile, forever now
  Together, I and he."

She gazed and listened and then said,
  Less sad of speech than mild,
135 "All this is when he comes." She ceased.
  The light thrilled towards her, filled
With angels in strong level flight.
  Her eyes prayed, and she smiled.

(I saw her smile.) But soon their path
140   Was vague in distant spheres:
And then she cast her arms along
  The golden barriers,
And laid her face between her hands,
  And wept. (I heard her tears.)

1846 1850

Sudden Light

I have been here before,
  But when or how I cannot tell:
I know the grass beyond the door,
  The sweet keen smell,
5 The sighing sound, the lights around the shore.

You have been mine before,
  How long ago I may not know:
But just when at that swallow's soar
  Your neck turned so,
10 Some veil did fall—I knew it all of yore.

Has this been thus before?
  And shall not thus time's eddying flight
Still with our lives our love restore
  In death's despite,
15 And day and night yield one delight once more?

1854 1863

The Woodspurge

The wind flapped loose, the wind was still,
Shaken out dead from tree and hill:

I had walked on at the wind's will—
I sat now, for the wind was still.

5 Between my knees my forehead was—
My lips, drawn in, said not Alas!
My hair was over in the grass,
My naked ears heard the day pass.

My eyes, wide open, had the run
10 Of some ten weeds to fix upon;
Among those few, out of the sun,
The woodspurge flowered, three cups in one.

From perfect grief there need not be
Wisdom or even memory:
15 One thing then learnt remains to me—
The woodspurge has a cup of three.

1856 1870

From The House of Life

A Sonnet

A Sonnet is a moment's monument,—
Memorial from the Soul's eternity
To one dead deathless hour. Look that it be,
Whether for lustral° rite or dire portent, purificatory
5 Of its own arduous fullness reverent:
Carve it in ivory or in ebony,
As Day or Night may rule; and let Time see
Its flowering crest impearled and orient.

A Sonnet is a coin: its face reveals
10 The soul—its converse, to what Power 'tis due:
Whether for tribute to the august appeals
Of Life, or dower in Love's high retinue,
It serve; or, 'mid the dark wharf's cavernous breath,
In Charon's[3] palm it pay the toll to Death.

19. Silent Noon

Your hands lie open in the long fresh grass—
The finger-points look through like rosy blooms:
Your eyes smile peace. The pasture gleams and glooms
'Neath billowing skies that scatter and amass.
5 All round our nest, far as the eye can pass,
Are golden kingcup-fields with silver edge
Where the cow-parsley skirts the hawthorn-hedge.
'Tis visible silence, still as the hour-glass.

3. In Greek mythology, Charon received a coin, an obolus, for ferrying the shades of the newly dead across the river Styx to Hades.

Deep in the sun-searched growths the dragonfly
10 Hangs like a blue thread loosened from the sky:
So this winged hour is dropt to us from above.
Oh! clasp we to our hearts, for deathless dower,° gift
This close-companioned inarticulate hour
When twofold silence was the song of love.

70. The Hill Summit

This feast-day of the sun, his altar there
In the broad west has blazed for vesper°-song; evening
And I have loitered in the vale° too long valley
And gaze now a belated worshipper.
5 Yet may I not forget that I was 'ware,° aware
So journeying, of his face at intervals
Transfigured where the fringed horizon falls,
A fiery bush with coruscating° hair. glittering

And now that I have climbed and won this height,
10 I must tread downward through the sloping shade
And travel the bewildered tracks till night.
Yet for this hour I still may here be stayed
And see the gold air and the silver fade
And the last bird fly into the last light.

1847–80 1870, 1881

GEORGE MEREDITH
1828–1909

From Modern Love[1]

1

By this he knew she wept with waking eyes:
That, at his hand's light quiver by her head,
The strange low sobs that shook their common bed
Were called into her with a sharp surprise,
5 And strangled mute, like little gaping snakes,
Dreadfully venomous to him. She lay
Stone-still, and the long darkness flowed away
With muffled pulses. Then, as midnight makes
Her giant heart of Memory and Tears
10 Drink the pale drug of silence, and so beat
Sleep's heavy measure, they from head to feet
Were moveless, looking through their dead black years,
By vain regret scrawled over the blank wall.
Like sculptured effigies they might be seen

1. A sequence of fifty sixteen-line sonnets, a kind of novel in verse about the breakup of a marriage. For most of the sequence the husband is the speaker, but the opening and closing sections are told in the third person.

15 Upon their marriage-tomb,[2] the sword between;
Each wishing for the sword that severs all.

17

At dinner, she is hostess, I am host.
Went the feast ever cheerfuller? She keeps
The Topic over intellectual deeps
In buoyancy afloat. They see no ghost.
5 With sparkling surface-eyes we ply the ball:
It is in truth a most contagious game:
HIDING THE SKELETON, shall be its name.
Such play as this the devils might appall!
But here's the greater wonder; in that we,
10 Enamored of an acting naught can tire,
Each other, like true hypocrites, admire;
Warm-lighted looks, Love's ephemerioe,° short-lived creatures
Shoot gaily o'er the dishes and the wine.
We waken envy of our happy lot.
15 Fast, sweet, and golden, shows the marriage-knot.
Dear guests, you now have seen Love's corpse-light[3] shine.

30

What are we first? First, animals; and next Intelligences at a leap; on whom
Pale lies the distant shadow of the tomb,
And all that draweth on the tomb for text.
5 Into which state comes Love, the crowning sun:
Beneath whose light the shadow loses form.
We are the lords of life, and life is warm.
Intelligence and instinct now are one.
But nature says: "My children most they seem
10 When they least know me: therefore I decree
That they shall suffer." Swift doth young Love flee,
And we stand wakened, shivering from our dream.
Then if we study Nature we are wise.
Thus do the few who live but with the day:
15 The scientific animals are they—
Lady, this is my sonnet to your eyes.[4]

48

Their sense is with their senses all mixed in,
Destroyed by subtleties these women are![5]
More brain, O Lord, more brain! or we shall mar
Utterly this fair garden we might win.

2. I.e., as motionless as sculptured stone statues on a tomb. In medieval legend, a naked sword between lovers symbolized chastity.
3. Flame seen in a churchyard and believed to be an omen of death.
4. A poetic convention of love sonnets was the praise of one of the lady's features, such as her eyes. Meredith uses it as an ironic close to a statement of his theory of evolution.
5. Earlier, the couple had at last talked together about the wife's affair with another man and had become reconciled. But when the husband tells her of his own recent passing affair with his "lost Lady" (line 9), she resolves to give him up to his mistress. Her resolve is a noble one but, in his view, without "sense" or "brain."

5 Behold! I looked for peace, and thought it near.
Our inmost hearts had opened, each to each.
We drank the pure daylight of honest speech.
Alas! that was the fatal draught, I fear.
For when of my lost Lady came the word,
10 This woman, O this agony of flesh!
Jealous devotion bade her break the mesh,
That I might seek that other like a bird.
I do adore the nobleness! despise
The act! She has gone forth, I know not where.
15 Will the hard world my sentience of her share?
I feel the truth; so let the world surmise.

49

He found her by the ocean's moaning verge,
Nor any wicked change in her discerned;
And she believed his old love had returned,
Which was her exultation, and her scourge.
5 She took his hand, and walked with him, and seemed
The wife he sought, though shadow-like and dry.
She had one terror, lest her heart should sigh,
And tell her loudly she no longer dreamed.
She dared not say, "This is my breast: look in."
10 But there's a strength to help the desperate weak.
That night he learned how silence best can speak
The awful things when Pity pleads for Sin.
About the middle of the night her call
Was heard, and he came wondering to the bed.
15 "Now kiss me, dear! it may be, now!" she said.
Lethe[6] had passed those lips, and he knew all.

50

Thus piteously Love closed what he begat:
The union of this ever-diverse pair!
These two were rapid falcons in a snare,
Condemned to do the flitting of the bat.
5 Lovers beneath the singing sky of May,
They wandered once; clear as the dew on flowers:
But they fed not on the advancing hours:
Their hearts held cravings for the buried day.
Then each applied to each that fatal knife,
10 Deep questioning, which probes to endless dole.° sorrow
Ah, what a dusty answer gets the soul
When hot for certainties in this our life!—
In tragic hints here see what evermore
Moves dark as yonder midnight ocean's force,
15 Thundering like ramping° hosts of warrior horse, rearing
To throw that faint thin line upon the shore!

1862

6. River of forgetfulness in Hades, the mythological Greek underworld.

Lucifer in Starlight

On a starred night Prince Lucifer uprose.
Tired of his dark dominion, swung the fiend
Above the rolling ball, in cloud part screened,
Where sinners hugged their specter of repose.
5 Poor prey to his hot fit of pride were those.
And now upon his western wing he leaned,
Now his huge bulk o'er Afric's sands careened,
Now the black planet shadowed Arctic snows.
Soaring through wider zones that pricked his scars
10 With memory of the old revolt from Awe,[7]
He reached a middle height, and at the stars,
Which are the brain of heaven, he looked, and sank.
Around the ancient track marched, rank on rank,
The army of unalterable law.

1883

EMILY DICKINSON*
1830–1886

39 (49)

I never lost as much but twice -
And that was in the sod.
Twice have I stood a beggar
Before the door of God!

5 Angels - twice descending
Reimbursed my store -
Burglar! Banker - Father!
I am poor once more!

1858 1890

68 (89)

Some things that fly there be -
Birds - Hours - the Bumblebee -
Of these no Elegy.

7. I.e., God. Satan is reminded of the wounds he suffered when his revolt against God was crushed and he was hurled from heaven into hell.

*R. W. Franklin's 1998 edition of Emily Dickinson's poems built on and has now supplanted the editions by Thomas Johnson (1955 and following) with which most contemporary readers are familiar. Phrasing, spelling, punctuation, and other features in Franklin, often differing from Johnson, reflect as closely as possible Dickinson's choices. (She often misused the apostrophe, especially in the possessive of it, which she wrote as it's, and she also commonly misspelled words, such as opon for upon.) Franklin has also renumbered the poems after considering their likely chronology. Date on left, often approximate, refers to first known manuscript; date on right, to first book publication. Each poem here is identified by Franklin number, then by Johnson number in parentheses.

Some things that stay there be -
5 Grief - Hills - Eternity -
Nor this behooveth me.[1]

There are that resting, rise.
Can I expound the skies?
How still the Riddle lies!

1859 1890

112 (67)

Success is counted sweetest
By those who ne'er succeed.
To comprehend a nectar
Requires sorest need.

5 Not one of all the purple Host° army
Who took the Flag today
Can tell the definition
So clear of Victory

As he defeated - dying -
10 On whose forbidden ear
The distant strains of triumph
Burst agonized and clear!

1859 1890

124 (216), first version[2]

Safe in their Alabaster[3] Chambers -
Untouched by morning
And untouched by noon -
Sleep the meek members of the Resurrection -
5 Rafter of satin,
And Roof of stone.

Light laughs the breeze
In her Castle above them -
Babbles the Bee in a stolid Ear,
10 Pipe the sweet Birds in ignorant cadence -
Ah, what sagacity perished here!

1859 1862

1. I.e., nor do I need to write about these.
2. This poem is one of many that exist in varying versions and illustrate wholesale revision. Dickinson sent the 1859 version to her sister-in-law, Sue Dickinson, whose suggestions prompted substantial changes. The first version here, the earliest extant, was one of the few poems Dickinson published (in a magazine). In correspondence in 1862 with Thomas W. Higginson, the literary critic who would help publish her poems posthumously, Dickinson sent a modified version, the basis of the second version here.
3. Translucent white material.

124 (216), second version

Safe in their Alabaster Chambers -
Untouched by Morning -
And untouched by noon -
Sleep the meek members of the Resurrection,
5 Rafter of Satin and Roof of Stone -

Grand go the Years,
In the Crescent above them -
Worlds scoop their Arcs -
And Firmaments - row -
10 Diadems° - drop - crowns
And Doges[4] - surrender -
Soundless as Dots,
On a Disc of Snow.

1862 1890

145 (59)

A little East of Jordan,
Evangelists record,[5]
A Gymnast and an Angel
Did wrestle long and hard -

5 Till morning touching mountain
And Jacob, waxing strong,
The Angel begged permission
To Breakfast - to return!

Not so, said cunning Jacob!
10 "I will not let thee go
Except thou bless me" - Stranger!
The which acceded to -

Light swung the silver fleeces[6]
"Peniel" Hills beyond,
15 And the bewildered Gymnast
Found he had worsted God!

1860 1914

4. Chief magistrates in the republics of Venice and Genoa from the eleventh through the sixteenth centuries.
5. The story actually occurs in Genesis 32.24–30. Jacob wrestled with the angel for a blessing; having succeeded, "Jacob called the place Peniel: for I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved."
6. Clouds; also, a possible allusion to the Golden Fleece that, in Greek mythology, Jason long traveled to find.

202 (185)

"Faith" is a fine invention
For Gentlemen who see!
But Microscopes are prudent
In an Emergency!

1861 1891

259 (287)

A Clock stopped -
Not the Mantel's -
Geneva's farthest skill[7]
Cant put the puppet bowing -
5 That just now dangled still -

An awe came on the Trinket!
The Figures hunched - with pain -
Then quivered out of Decimals -
Into Degreeless noon -

10 It will not stir for Doctor's -
This Pendulum of snow -
The Shopman importunes it -
While cool- concernless No -

Nods from the Gilded pointers -
15 Nods from the Seconds slim - Decades of Arrogance between The Dial life -
And Him -

1861 1896

260 (288)

I'm Nobody! Who are you?
Are you - Nobody - too?
Then there's a pair of us!
Dont tell! they'd advertise - you know!

5 How dreary - to be - Somebody!
How public - like a Frog -
To tell one's name - the livelong June -
To an admiring Bog!

1861 1891

7. Geneva, Switzerland, is famous for clock- and watchmaking.

269 (249)

Wild nights - Wild nights!
Were I with thee
Wild nights should be
Our luxury!

5 Futile - the winds -
To a Heart in port -
Done with the Compass -
Done with the Chart!

Rowing in Eden -
10 Ah - the Sea!
Might I but moor - tonight -
In thee!

1861 1891

314 (254)

"Hope" is the thing with feathers -
That perches in the soul -
And sings the tune without the words -
And never stops - at all -

5 And sweetest - in the Gale - is heard -
And sore must be the storm -
That could abash the little Bird
That kept so many warm -

I've heard it in the chillest land -
10 And on the strangest Sea -
Yet - never - in Extremity,
It asked a crumb - of me.

1862 1891

320 (258)

There's a certain Slant of light,
Winter Afternoons -
That oppresses, like the Heft
Of Cathedral Tunes -

5 Heavenly Hurt, it gives us -
We can find no scar,

But internal difference -
Where the Meanings, are -

None may teach it - Any -
10 'Tis the Seal Despair -
An imperial affliction
Sent us of the Air -

When it comes, the Landscape listens -
Shadows - hold their breath -
15 When it goes, 'tis like the Distance
On the look of Death -

1862 1890

339 (241)

I like a look of Agony,
Because I know it's true -
Men do not sham Convulsion,
Nor simulate, a Throe -

5 The eyes glaze once - and that is Death -
Impossible to feign
The Beads opon the Forehead
By homely Anguish strung.

1862 1890

340 (280)

I felt a Funeral, in my Brain,
And Mourners to and fro
Kept treading - treading - till it seemed That Sense was breaking through -

5 And when they all were seated,
A Service, like a Drum -
Kept beating - beating - till I thought
My mind was going numb -

And then I heard them lift a Box
10 And creak across my Soul
With those same Boots of Lead, again,
Then Space - began to toll,

As all the Heavens were a Bell,
And Being, but an Ear,

15 And I, and Silence, some strange Race
Wrecked, solitary, here -

And then a Plank in Reason, broke,
And I dropped down, and down -
And hit a World, at every plunge,
20 And Finished knowing - then -

1862 1896

348 (505)

I would not paint - a picture -
I'd rather be the One
It's bright impossibility
To dwell - delicious - on -
5 And wonder how the fingers feel
Whose rare - celestial - stir -
Evokes so sweet a torment -
Such sumptuous - Despair -

I would not talk, like Cornets -
10 I'd rather be the One
Raised softly to the Ceilings -
And out, and easy on -
Through Villages of Ether - Myself endued° Balloon endowed
15 By but a lip of Metal -
The pier to my Pontoon° - boat

Nor would I be a Poet -
It's finer - Own the Ear -
Enamored - impotent - content -
20 The License to revere,
A privilege so awful° awesome
What would the Dower° be, dowry, gift
Had I the Art to stun myself
With Bolts - of Melody!

1862 1945

359 (328)

A Bird, came down the Walk -
He did not know I saw -
He bit an Angle Worm in halves
And ate the fellow, raw,

5 And then, he drank a Dew
From a convenient Grass -
And then hopped sidewise to the Wall
To let a Beetle pass -

He glanced with rapid eyes,
10 That hurried all abroad -
They looked like frightened Beads, I thought,
He stirred his Velvet Head. -

Like one in danger, Cautious,
I offered him a Crumb,
15 And he unrolled his feathers,
And rowed him softer Home -

Than Oars divide the Ocean,
Too silver for a seam,
Or Butterflies, off Banks of Noon,
20 Leap, plashless° as they swim. splashless

1862 1891

372 (341)

After great pain, a formal feeling comes -
The Nerves sit ceremonious, like Tombs -
The stiff Heart questions "was it He, that bore,
And "Yesterday, or Centuries before"?

5 The Feet, mechanical, go round -
A Wooden way
Of Ground, or Air, or Ought° - nothing, anything
Regardless grown,
A Quartz contentment, like a stone -

10 This is the Hour of Lead -
Remembered, if outlived,
As Freezing persons, recollect the Snow -
First - Chill - then Stupor - then the letting go -

1862 1929

383 (585)

I like to see it lap the Miles -
And lick the Valleys up -
And stop to feed itself at Tanks -
And then - prodigious step

5 Around a Pile of Mountains -
And supercilious peer
In Shanties - by the sides of Roads -
And then a Quarry pare

To fit it's sides
10 And crawl between Complaining all the while
In horrid - hooting stanza -
Then chase itself down Hill -

And neigh like Boanerges[8] - 15 Then - prompter than a Star
Stop - docile and omnipotent
At it's own stable door -

1862 1891

409 (303)

The Soul selects her own Society -
Then - shuts the Door -
To her divine Majority -
Present no more -

5 Unmoved - she notes the Chariots - pausing -
At her low Gate -
Unmoved - an Emperor be kneeling
Opon her Mat -

I've known her - from an ample nation -
10 Choose One -
Then - close the Valves of her attention -
Like Stone -

1862 1890

411 (528)

Mine - by the Right of the White Election!
Mine - by the Royal Seal!
Mine - by the sign in the Scarlet prison -
Bars - cannot conceal!

5 Mine - here - in Vision - and in Veto!
Mine - by the Grave's Repeal -

8. Like thunder. Cf. Mark 3.17: "And James the son of Zebedee, and John the brother of James; and he surnamed them Boanerges, which is, The sons of thunder."

Titled - Confirmed -
Delirious Charter!
Mine - long as Ages steal!

1862 1890

445 (613)

They shut me up in Prose -
As when a little Girl
They put me in the Closet -
Because they liked me "still" -

5 Still! Could themself have peeped -
And seen my Brain - go round -
They might as wise have lodged a Bird
For Treason - in the Pound -

Himself has but to will 10 And easy as a Star
Look down opon Captivity -
And laugh - No more have I -

1862 1935

479 (712)

Because I could not stop for Death -
He kindly stopped for me -
The Carriage held but just Ourselves -
And Immortality.

5 We slowly drove - He knew no haste
And I had put away
My labor and my leisure too,
For His Civility -

We passed the School, where Children strove
10 At Recess - in the Ring -
We passed the Fields of Gazing Grain -
We passed the Setting Sun -

Or rather - He passed Us -
The Dews drew quivering and Chill -
15 For only Gossamer, my Gown -
My Tippet - only Tulle[9] -

9. Sheer silk net. Tippet: shoulder cape.

We paused before a House that seemed
A Swelling of the Ground -
The Roof was scarcely visible -
20 The Cornice° - in the Ground - crowning point

Since then - 'tis Centuries - and yet
Feels shorter than the Day
I first surmised the Horses' Heads
Were toward Eternity -

1862 1890

533 (569)

I reckon - When I count at all -
First - Poets - Then the Sun -
Then Summer - Then the Heaven of God -
And then - the List is done -

5 But, looking back - the First so seems To Comprehend the Whole -
The Others look a needless Show -
So I write - Poets - All -

Their Summer - lasts a solid Year -
10 They can afford a Sun
The East - would deem extravagant -
And if the Further Heaven -

Be Beautiful as they prepare
For Those who worship Them -
15 It is too difficult a Grace -
To Justify the Dream -

1863 1929

588 (536)

The Heart asks Pleasure - first -
And then - excuse from Pain -
And then - those little Anodynes
That deaden suffering -

5 And then - to go to sleep -
And then - if it should be
The will of it's Inquisitor
The privilege to die -

1863 1890

591 (465)

I heard a Fly buzz - when I died -
The Stillness in the Room
Was like the Stillness in the Air -
Between the Heaves of Storm -

5 The Eyes around - had wrung them dry -
And Breaths were gathering firm
For that last Onset - when the King
Be witnessed - in the Room -

I willed my Keepsakes - Signed away
10 What portion of me be Assignable - and then it was
There interposed a Fly -

With Blue - uncertain - stumbling Buzz -
Between the light - and me -
15 And then the Windows failed - and then
I could not see to see -

1863 1896

620 (435)

Much Madness is divinest Sense -
To a discerning Eye -
Much Sense - the starkest Madness -
'Tis the Majority
5 In this, as all, prevail -
Assent - and you are sane -
Demur - you're straightway dangerous -
And handled with a Chain -

1863 1890

740 (789)

On a Columnar Self -
How ample to rely
In Tumult - or Extremity -
How good the Certainty

5 That Lever cannot pry -
And Wedge cannot divide
Conviction - That Granitic Base -
Though none be on our side -

Suffice Us - for a Crowd -
10 Ourself - and Rectitude -
And that Assembly - not far off
From furthest Spirit - God -

1863 1929

764 (754)

My Life had stood - a Loaded Gun -
In Corners - till a Day
The Owner passed - identified -
And carried Me away -

5 And now We roam in Sovreign Woods -
And now We hunt the Doe -
And every time I speak for Him
The Mountains straight reply -

And do I smile, such cordial light
10 Opon the Valley glow -
It is as a Vesuvian[1] face
Had let it's pleasure through -

And when at Night - Our good Day done -
I guard My Master's Head -
15 'Tis better than the Eider Duck's
Deep Pillow[2] - to have shared -

To foe of His - I'm deadly foe -
None stir the second time -
On whom I lay a Yellow Eye -
20 Or an emphatic Thumb -

Thought I than He - may longer live
He longer must - than I -
For I have but the power to kill,
Without - the power to die -

1863 1929

781 (744)

Remorse - is Memory - awake -
Her Parties all astir -
A Presence of Departed Acts -
At window - and at Door -

1. Capable of erupting, like Mt. Vesuvius, the volcano near Naples.
2. I.e., pillow stuffed with feathers or down.

5 It's Past - set down before the Soul
And lighted with a match -
Perusal - to facilitate -
And help Belief to stretch -

Remorse is cureless - the Disease
10 Not even God - can heal -
For 'tis His institution - and
The Adequate of Hell -

1863 1891

782 (745)

Renunciation - is a piercing Virtue -
The letting go
A Presence - for an Expectation -
Not now -
5 The putting out of Eyes -
Just Sunrise -
Lest Day -
Day's Great Progenitor -
Outvie
10 Renunciation - is the Choosing Against itself -
Itself to justify Unto itself -
When larger function -
15 Make that appear -
Smaller - that Covered Vision - Here -

1863 1929

788 (709)

Publication - is the Auction
Of the Mind of Man -
Poverty - be justifying
For so foul a thing

5 Possibly - but We - would rather
From Our Garret go
White - unto the White Creator -
Than invest - Our snow -

Thought belong to Him who gave it -
10 Then - to Him Who bear
It's Corporeal illustration - sell
The Royal Air -

In the Parcel - Be the Merchant
Of the Heavenly Grace -
15 But reduce no Human Spirit
To Disgrace of Price -

1863 1929

895 (1068)

Further in Summer than the Birds -
Pathetic from the Grass -
A minor Nation[3] celebrates
It's unobtrusive Mass.

5 No Ordinance° be seen - prescribed usage
So gradual the Grace
A gentle Custom it becomes - Enlarging Loneliness -

Antiquest felt at Noon -
10 When August burning low
Arise this spectral Canticle° liturgical song
Repose to typify -

Remit as yet no Grace -
No furrow on the Glow,
15 But a Druidic[4] Difference
Enhances Nature now -

1865, 1883 1891

905 (861)

Split the Lark - and you'll find the Music -
Bulb after Bulb, in Silver rolled -
Scantily dealt to the Summer Morning
Saved for your Ear, when Lutes be old -

5 Loose the Flood - you shall find it patent° - open
Gush after Gush, reserved for you -
Scarlet Experiment! Sceptic Thomas![5]
Now, do you doubt that your Bird was true?

1865 1896

3. I.e., insects.
4. Pertaining to the ancient sacred lore of the Celtic priest-magicians.
5. Doubting Thomas, who would not believe Christ's divinity until he had seen the print of the nails in Jesus' hands and thrust a hand into Jesus' side (John 20.25).

935 (1540)

As imperceptibly as Grief
The Summer lapsed away -
Too imperceptible at last
To seem like Perfidy° - treachery
5 A Quietness distilled
As Twilight long begun,
Or Nature spending with herself
Sequestered Afternoon -
The Dusk drew earlier in -
10 The Morning foreign shone -
A courteous, yet harrowing Grace,
As Guest, that would be gone -
And thus, without a Wing
Or service of a Keel
15 Our Summer made her light escape
Into the Beautiful -

1865 1891

1096 (986)

A narrow Fellow in the Grass
Occasionally rides -
You may have met him? Did you not His notice instant is -

5 The Grass divides as with a Comb -
A spotted Shaft is seen,
And then it closes at your Feet
And opens further on -

He likes a Boggy Acre -
10 A Floor too cool for Corn -
But when a Boy and Barefoot
I more than once at Noon

Have passed I thought a Whip Lash
Unbraiding in the Sun
15 When stooping to secure it
It wrinkled And was gone -

Several of Nature's People
I know and they know me
I feel for them a transport
20 Of Cordiality

But never met this Fellow
Attended or alone
Without a tighter Breathing
And Zero at the Bone.

1865 1891

1108 (1078)

The Bustle in a House
The Morning after Death
Is solemnest of industries
Enacted opon Earth -

5 The Sweeping up the Heart
And putting Love away
We shall not want to use again
Until Eternity -

1865 1890

1263 (1129)

Tell all the truth but tell it slant -
Success in Circuit lies
Too bright for our infirm Delight
The Truth's superb surprise
5 As Lightning to the Children eased
With explanation kind
The Truth must dazzle gradually
Or every man be blind -

1872 1945

1489 (1463)

A Route of Evanescence,
With a revolving Wheel -
A Resonance of Emerald
A Rush of Cochineal° - red dye
5 And every Blossom on the Bush
Adjusts it's tumbled Head -
The Mail from Tunis[6] - probably,
An easy Morning's Ride -

1879 1891

6. City on the northern coast of Africa.

1577 (1545)

The Bible is an antique Volume -
Written by faded Men
At the suggestion of Holy Spectres -
Subjects - Bethlehem -
5 Eden - the ancient Homestead - Satan - the Brigadier - Judas - the Great Defaulter -
David - the Troubadour -
Sin - a distinguished Precipice
10 Others must resist -
Boys that "believe" are very lonesome -
Other Boys are "lost" -
Had but the Tale a warbling Teller -
All the Boys would come -
15 Orpheu's[7] Sermon captivated -
It did not condemn -

1882 1924

1793 (1732)

My life closed twice before it's close;
It yet remains to see
If Immortality unveil
A third event to me,

5 So huge, so hopeless to conceive
As these that twice befell.
Parting is all we know of heaven,
And all we need of hell.

1896

1788 (1763)

Fame is a bee.
It has a song -
It has a sting -
Ah, too, it has a wing.

1955

7. Orpheu's: i.e., that of Orpheus, the Greek mythological figure whose music attracted and controlled beasts, rocks, and trees.

CHRISTINA ROSSETTI
1830–1894

Song

When I am dead, my dearest,
  Sing no sad songs for me;
Plant thou no roses at my head,
  Nor shady cypress tree:
5 Be the green grass above me
  With showers and dewdrops wet;
And if thou wilt, remember,
  And if thou wilt, forget.

I shall not see the shadows,
10 I shall not feel the rain;
I shall not hear the nightingale
  Sing on, as if in pain:
And dreaming through the twilight
  That doth not rise nor set,
15 Haply I may remember,
  And haply may forget.

1848 1862

Remember

Remember me when I am gone away,
  Gone far away into the silent land;
  When you can no more hold me by the hand,
Nor I half turn to go yet turning stay.
5 Remember me when no more day by day
  You tell me of our future that you planned:
  Only remember me; you understand
It will be late to counsel then or pray.
Yet if you should forget me for a while 10 And afterwards remember, do not grieve:
  For if the darkness and corruption leave
  A vestige of the thoughts that once I had,
Better by far you should forget and smile
  Than that you should remember and be sad.

1849 1862

Echo

Come to me in the silence of the night;
  Come in the speaking silence of a dream;

Come with soft rounded cheeks and eyes as bright
As sunlight on a stream;
5 Come back in tears,
O memory, hope, love of finished years.

Oh dream how sweet, too sweet, too bitter sweet,
Whose wakening should have been in Paradise,
Where souls brimful of love abide and meet;
10 Where thirsting longing eyes
Watch the slow door
That opening, letting in, lets out no more.

Yet come to me in dreams, that I may live
My very life again tho' cold in death:
15 Come back to me in dreams, that I may give Pulse for pulse, breath for breath:
Speak low, lean low,
As long ago, my love, how long ago.

1854 1862

In an Artist's Studio

One face looks out from all his canvases,
One selfsame figure sits or walks or leans:
We found her hidden just behind those screens,
That mirror gave back all her loveliness.
5 A queen in opal or in ruby dress,
A nameless girl in freshest summer-greens,
A saint, an angel—every canvas means
The same one meaning, neither more nor less.
He feeds upon her face by day and night,
10 And she with true kind eyes looks back on him,
Fair as the moon and joyful as the light:
Not wan with waiting, not with sorrow dim;
Not as she is, but was when hope shone bright;
Not as she is, but as she fills his dream.

1856 1896

Up-Hill

Does the road wind up-hill all the way?
Yes, to the very end.
Will the day's journey take the whole long day?
From morn to night, my friend.

5 But is there for the night a resting-place?
A roof for when the slow dark hours begin.
May not the darkness hide it from my face?
You cannot miss that inn.

Shall I meet other wayfarers at night?
10 Those who have gone before.
Then must I knock, or call when just in sight?
They will not keep you standing at that door.

Shall I find comfort, travel-sore and weak?
Of labor you shall find the sum.
15 Will there be beds for me and all who seek?
Yea, beds for all who come.

1858 1862

The Convent Threshold

There's blood between us, love, my love,
There's father's blood, there's brother's blood;
And blood's a bar I cannot pass:
I choose the stairs that mount above,
5 Stair after golden skyward stair,
To city and to sea of glass.
My lily feet are soiled with mud,
With scarlet mud which tells a tale
Of hope that was, of guilt that was,
10 Of love that shall not yet avail;
Alas, my heart, if I could bare
My heart, this selfsame stain is there:
I seek the sea of glass and fire
To wash the spot, to burn the snare;
15 Lo, stairs are meant to lift us higher:
Mount with me, mount the kindled stair.

Your eyes look earthward, mine look up.
I see the far-off city grand,
Beyond the hills a watered land,
20 Beyond the gulf a gleaming strand
Of mansions where the righteous sup;
Who sleep at ease among their trees,
Or wake to sing a cadenced hymn
With Cherubim and Seraphim;[1]
25 They bore the Cross, they drained the cup,
Racked, roasted, crushed, wrenched limb from limb,
They the offscouring[2] of the world:

1. Plurals (Hebrew, biblical) of, respectively, cherub and seraph; seraphim are the highest order of angels, just above the cherubim.

2. What is "scoured off," hence refuse, that which is rejected.

The heaven of starry heavens unfurled,
The sun before their face is dim.

30 You looking earthward, what see you?
Milk-white, wine-flushed among the vines,
Up and down leaping, to and fro,
Most glad, most full, made strong with wines,
Blooming as peaches pearled with dew,
35 Their golden windy hair afloat,
Love-music warbling in their throat,
Young men and women come and go.

You linger, yet the time is short:
Flee for your life, gird up your strength
40 To flee; the shadows stretched at length
Show that day wanes, that night draws nigh;
Flee to the mountain, tarry not.
Is this a time for smile and sigh,
For songs among the secret trees
45 Where sudden blue birds nest and sport?
The time is short and yet you stay:
Today while it is called today
Kneel, wrestle, knock, do violence, pray;
Today is short, tomorrow nigh:
50 Why will you die? why will you die?

You sinned with me a pleasant sin:
Repent with me, for I repent.
Woe's me the lore I must unlearn!
Woe's me that easy way we went,
55 So rugged when I would return!
How long until my sleep begin,
How long shall stretch these nights and days?
Surely, clean Angels cry, she prays;
She laves her soul with tedious tears:
60 How long must stretch these years and years?

I turn from you my cheeks and eyes,
My hair which you shall see no more—
Alas for joy that went before,
For joy that dies, for love that dies.
65 Only my lips still turn to you,
My livid lips that cry, Repent.
Oh weary life, Oh weary Lent,[3]
Oh weary time whose stars are few.

How should I rest in Paradise,
70 Or sit on steps of heaven alone?
If Saints and Angels spoke of love
Should I not answer from my throne:

3. Period in the Christian calendar from Ash Wednesday to Easter Eve, devoted to fasting and penitence in commemoration of Christ's fasting in the wilderness.

Have pity upon me, ye my friends,
For I have heard the sound thereof:
75 Should I not turn with yearning eyes,
Turn earthwards with a pitiful pang?
Oh save me from a pang in heaven.
By all the gifts we took and gave,
Repent, repent, and be forgiven:
80 This life is long, but yet it ends;
Repent and purge your soul and save:
No gladder song the morning stars
Upon their birthday morning sang
Than Angels sing when one repents.

85 I tell you what I dreamed last night:
A spirit with transfigured face
Fire-footed clomb° an infinite space. climbed
I heard his hundred pinions° clang, feathered wings
Heaven-bells rejoicing rang and rang,
90 Heaven-air was thrilled with subtle scents,
Worlds spun upon their rushing cars:
He mounted shrieking: "Give me light."
Still light was poured on him, more light;
Angels, Archangels he outstripped
95 Exultant in exceeding might,
And trod the skirts of Cherubim.
Still "Give me light," he shrieked; and dipped
His thirsty face, and drank a sea,
Athirst with thirst it could not slake.
100 I saw him, drunk with knowledge, take
From aching brows the aureole crown[4]—
His locks writhed like a cloven snake—
He left his throne to grovel down
And lick the dust of Seraphs' feet:
105 For what is knowledge duly weighed?
Knowledge is strong, but love is sweet;
Yea all the progress he had made
Was but to learn that all is small
Save love, for love is all in all.

110 I tell you what I dreamed last night:
It was not dark, it was not light,
Cold dews had drenched my plenteous hair
Thro' clay; you came to seek me there.
And "Do you dream of me?" you said.
115 My heart was dust that used to leap
To you; I answered half asleep:
"My pillow is damp, my sheets are red,
There's a leaden tester° to my bed: canopy
Find you a warmer playfellow,
120 A warmer pillow for your head,
A kinder love to love than mine."

4. Golden crown or halo.

You wrung your hands; while I like lead
Crushed downwards thro' the sodden earth:
You smote your hands but not in mirth,
125 And reeled but were not drunk with wine.

For all night long I dreamed of you:
I woke and prayed against my will,
Then slept to dream of you again.
At length I rose and knelt and prayed:
130 I cannot write the words I said,
My words were slow, my tears were few;
But thro' the dark my silence spoke
Like thunder. When this morning broke,
My face was pinched, my hair was gray,
135 And frozen blood was on the sill
Where stifling in my struggle I lay.

If now you saw me you would say:
Where is the face I used to love?
And I would answer: Gone before;
140 It tarries veiled in paradise.
When once the morning star shall rise,
When earth with shadow flees away
And we stand safe within the door,
Then you shall lift the veil thereof.
145 Look up, rise up: for far above
Our palms are grown, our place is set;
There we shall meet as once we met
And love with old familiar love.

1858 1862

Passing Away, Saith the World, Passing Away

Passing away, saith the World, passing away:
Chances, beauty and youth sapped day by day:
Thy life never continueth in one stay.
Is the eye waxen dim, is the dark hair changing to gray
5 That hath won neither laurel nor bay?[5]
I shall clothe myself in Spring and bud in May:
Thou, root-stricken, shalt not rebuild thy decay
On my bosom for aye.
Then I answered: Yea.

10 Passing away, saith my Soul, passing away:
With its burden of fear and hope, of labor and play;
Hearken what the past doth witness and say:

5. In ancient Greece, victors in the Pythian games were crowned with a wreath made from the leaves of the laurel, and later such wreaths were bestowed on the winners of academic or poetic honors. "Bay" is synonymous with laurel.

Rust in thy gold, a moth is in thine array,
A canker is in thy bud, thy leaf must decay.
15 At midnight, at cockcrow, at morning, one certain day
Lo the bridegroom shall come and shall not delay:
Watch thou and pray.
Then I answered: Yea.

Passing away, saith my God, passing away:
20 Winter passeth after the long delay:
New grapes on the vine, new figs on the tender spray,
Turtle calleth turtle in Heaven's May.
Tho' I tarry, wait for Me, trust Me, watch and pray.
Arise, come away, night is past and lo it is day,
25 My love, My sister, My spouse, thou shalt hear Me say.
Then I answered: Yea.

1860 1862

Amor Mundi[6]

"Oh where are you going with your love-locks flowing
On the west wind blowing along this valley track?"
"The downhill path is easy, come with me an° it please ye, if We shall escape the uphill by never turning back."

5 So they two went together in glowing August weather,
The honey-breathing heather lay to their left and right;
And dear she was to dote on, her swift feet seemed to float on
The air like soft twin pigeons too sportive to alight.

"Oh what is that in heaven where gray cloud-flakes are seven,
10 Where blackest clouds hang riven just at the rainy skirt?"
Oh that's a meteor sent us, a message dumb, portentous,
An undeciphered solemn signal of help or hurt."

"Oh what is that glides quickly where velvet flowers grow thickly,
Their scent comes rich and sickly?"—"A scaled and hooded worm."
15 "Oh what's that in the hollow, so pale I quake to follow?"
"Oh that's a thin dead body which waits the eternal term."

"Turn again, O my sweetest,—turn again, false and fleetest:
This beaten way thou beatest I fear is hell's own track."
"Nay, too steep for hill-mounting; nay, too late for cost-counting:
20 This downhill path is easy, but there's no turning back."

1865 1875

6. Love of the world (Latin).

LEWIS CARROLL (CHARLES LUTWIDGE DODGSON) 1832–1898

Jabberwocky[1]

There was a book lying near Alice on the table, and while she sat watching the White King (for she was still a little anxious about him, and had the ink all ready to throw over him, in case he fainted again), she turned over the leaves, to find some part that she could read, "—for it's all in some language I don't know," she said to herself. It was like this:

Jabberwocky

'Twas brillig, and the slithy toves
Did gyre and gimble in the wabe:
All mimsy were the borogoves,
And the mome raths outgrabe.

She puzzled over this for some time, but at last a bright thought struck her. "Why, it's a Looking-glass book, of course! And, if I hold it up to a glass, the words will all go the right way again."

This was the poem that Alice read:

Jabberwocky

'Twas brillig, and the slithy toves
  Did gyre and gimble in the wabe:
All mimsy were the borogoves,
  And the mome raths outgrabe.

5 "Beware the Jabberwock, my son!
  The jaws that bite, the claws that catch!
Beware the Jubjub bird, and shun
  The frumious Bandersnatch!"

He took his vorpal sword in hand:
10 Long time the manxome foe he sought—
So rested he by the Tumtum tree,
  And stood awhile in thought.

And, as in uffish thought he stood,
  The Jabberwock, with eyes of flame,
15 Came whiffling through the tulgey wood,
  And burbled as it came!

1. From Through the Looking-Glass, chapter 1.

One, two! One, two! And through and through
The vorpal blade went snicker-snack!
He left it dead, and with its head
20 He went galumphing back.

"And hast thou slain the Jabberwock?
Come to my arms, my beamish boy!
O frabjous day! Callooh! Callay!"
He chortled in his joy.

25 'Twas brillig, and the slithy toves
Did gyre and gimble in the wabe:
All mimsy were the borogoves,
And the mome raths outgrabe.

[Humpty Dumpty's Explication of Jabberwocky][2]

"You seem very clever at explaining words, Sir," said Alice. "Would you kindly tell me the meaning of the poem Jabberwocky?"

"Let's hear it," said Humpty Dumpty. "I can explain all the poems that ever were invented—and a good many that haven't been invented just yet."

This sounded very hopeful, so Alice repeated the first verse:

" 'Twas brillig, and the slithy toves
Did gyre and gimble in the wabe;
All mimsy were the borogoves,
And the mome raths outgrabe."

"That's enough to begin with," Humpty Dumpty interrupted: "there are plenty of hard words there. 'Brillig' means four o'clock in the afternoon—the time when you begin broiling things for dinner."

"That'll do very well," said Alice: "and 'slithy'?"[3]

"Well, 'slithy' means 'lithe and slimy.' 'Lithe' is the same as 'active.' You see it's like a portmanteau—there are two meanings packed up into one word."

"I see it now," Alice remarked thoughtfully: "and what are 'toves'?"

"Well, 'toves' are something like badgers—they're something like lizards—and they're something like corkscrews."

"They must be very curious creatures."

"They are that," said Humpty Dumpty: "also they make their nests under sundials—also they live on cheese."

"And what's to 'gyre' and to 'gimble'?"

"To 'gyre' is to go round and round like a gyroscope. To 'gimble' is to make holes like a gimlet."

"And the 'wabe' is the grass plot round a sundial, I suppose?" said Alice, surprised at her own ingenuity.

2. From Through the Looking-Glass, chapter 6.

3. Concerning the pronunciation of these words, Carroll later said: "The 'i' in 'slithy' is long, as in 'writhe'; and 'toves' is pronounced so as to rhyme with 'groves.' Again, the first 'o' in 'borogoves' is pronounced like the 'o' in 'borrow.' I have heard people try to give it the sound of the 'o' in 'worry.' Such is Human Perversity."

"Of course it is. It's called 'wabe,' you know, because it goes a long way before it, and a long way behind it—"

"And a long way beyond it on each side," Alice added.

"Exactly so. Well then, 'mimsy' is 'flimsy and miserable' (there's another portmanteau for you). And a 'borogove' is a thin shabby-looking bird with its feathers sticking out all round—something like a live mop."

"And then 'mome raths'?" said Alice. "If I'm not giving you too much trouble."

"Well, a 'rath' is a sort of green pig: but 'mome' I'm not certain about. I think it's short for 'from home'—meaning that they'd lost their way, you know."

"And what does 'outgrabe' mean?"

"Well, 'outgribing' is something between bellowing and whistling, with a kind of sneeze in the middle: however, you'll hear it done, maybe—down in the wood yonder—and when you've once heard it you'll be quite content. Who's been repeating all that hard stuff to you?"

"I read it in a book," said Alice.

1871

The White Knight's Song[4]

Haddock's Eyes or The Aged Aged Man or Ways and Means or A-Sitting on a Gate

I'll tell thee everything I can;
  There's little to relate.
I saw an aged, aged man,
  A-sitting on a gate.
5 "Who are you, aged man?" I said.
  "And how is it you live?"
And his answer trickled through my head
  Like water through a sieve.

He said "I look for butterflies
10   That sleep among the wheat;
I make them into mutton-pies,
  And sell them in the street.
I sell them unto men," he said,
  "Who sail on stormy seas;
15 And that's the way I get my bread—
  A trifle, if you please."

But I was thinking of a plan
  To dye one's whiskers green,
And always use so large a fan
20   That it could not be seen.
So, having no reply to give

4. From Through the Looking-Glass, chapter 8; the song is in part a parody of Wordsworth's "Resolution and Independence" (see p. 790).

To what the old man said,
I cried, "Come, tell me how you live!"
And thumped him on the head.

25 His accents mild took up the tale;
He said, "I go my ways,
And when I find a mountain-rill,° -stream
I set it in a blaze;
And thence they make a stuff they call
30 Rowland's Macassar Oil[5]—
Yet twopence-halfpenny is all
They give me for my toil."

But I was thinking of a way
To feed oneself on batter,
35 And so go on from day to day
Getting a little fatter.
I shook him well from side to side,
Until his face was blue;
"Come, tell me how you live," I cried
40 "And what it is you do!"

He said, "I hunt for haddocks' eyes
Among the heather bright,
And work them into waistcoat-buttons
In the silent night.
45 And these I do not sell for gold
Or coin of silvery shine,
But for a copper halfpenny,
And that will purchase nine.

"I sometimes dig for buttered rolls,
50 Or set limed twigs for crabs;
I sometimes search the grassy knolls
For wheels of hansom-cabs.
And that's the way" (he gave a wink)
"By which I get my wealth—
55 And very gladly will I drink
Your Honor's noble health."

I heard him then, for I had just Completed my design
To keep the Menai bridge[6] from rust
60 By boiling it in wine.
I thanked him much for telling me
The way he got his wealth,
But chiefly for his wish that he Might drink my noble health.

65 And now, if e'er by chance I put
My fingers into glue,

5. A patented hairdressing.

6. Railway bridge in Wales.

Or madly squeeze a right-hand foot
  Into a left-hand shoe,
Or if I drop upon my toe
70 A very heavy weight,
I weep, for it reminds me so
Of that old man I used to know—
Whose look was mild, whose speech was slow,
Whose hair was whiter than the snow,
75 Whose face was very like a crow,
With eyes, like cinders, all aglow,
Who seemed distracted with his woe,
Who rocked his body to and fro,
And muttered mumblingly and low,
80 As if his mouth were full of dough,
Who snorted like a buffalo—
That summer evening long ago
  A-sitting on a gate.

1871

WILLIAM MORRIS
1834–1896

The Haystack in the Floods[1]

Had she come all the way for this,
To part at last without a kiss?
Yea, had she borne the dirt and rain
That her own eyes might see him slain
5 Beside the haystack in the floods?

Along the dripping leafless woods,
The stirrup touching either shoe,
She rode astride as troopers do;
With kirtle° kilted to her knee, long skirt
10 To which the mud splashed wretchedly;
And the wet dripped from every tree
Upon her head and heavy hair,
And on her eyelids broad and fair;
The tears and rain ran down her face.
15 By fits and starts they rode apace,
And very often was his place
Far off from her; he had to ride
Ahead, to see what might betide
When the roads crossed; and sometimes, when 20 There rose a murmuring from his men,

1. The events of the poem take place immediately after the Battle of Poitiers (1356), in which the English defeated the French. An English knight, Sir Robert de Marny, and his mistress, Jehane, are attempting to escape the French by reaching Gascony, held by the English.

Had to turn back with promises;
Ah me! she had but little ease;
And often for pure doubt and dread
She sobbed, made giddy in the head
25 By the swift riding; while, for cold,
Her slender fingers scarce could hold
The wet reins; yea, and scarcely, too,
She felt the foot within her shoe
Against the stirrup: all for this,
30 To part at last without a kiss
Beside the haystack in the floods.

For when they neared that old soaked hay,
They saw across the only way
That Judas, Godmar, and the three
35 Red running lions dismally
Grinned from his pennon,° under which, banner
In one straight line along the ditch,
They counted thirty heads.

So then,
While Robert turned round to his men,
40 She saw at once the wretched end,
And, stooping down, tried hard to rend
Her coif the wrong way from her head,
And hid her eyes; while Robert said:
"Nay, love, 'tis scarcely two to one,
45 At Poitiers where we made them run
So fast—why, sweet my love, good cheer.
The Gascon frontier is so near,
Nought after this."

But, "O," she said,
"My God! my God! I have to tread
50 The long way back without you; then
The court at Paris; those six men;[2]
The gratings of the Chatelet;
The swift Seine[3] on some rainy day
Like this, and people standing by,
55 And laughing, while my weak hands try
To recollect how strong men swim,[4]
All this, or else a life with him,
For which I should be damned at last,
Would God that this next hour were past!"

60 He answered not, but cried his cry,
"St. George for Marny!" cheerily;
And laid his hand upon her rein.

2. I.e., the judges.
3. The river that runs through Paris. Le Châtelet is a prison in the city.
4. When captured, she will have to undergo trial by water to determine whether she is a witch: if she sinks, she will be presumed innocent and will be rescued, but if she swims, this will be assumed to be by virtue of her powers as a witch, and she will be burned at the stake.

Alas! no man of all his train° following
Gave back that cheery cry again;
65 And, while for rage his thumb beat fast
Upon his sword-hilts, someone cast
About his neck a kerchief long,
And bound him.

Then they went along
To Godmar; who said: "Now, Jehane,
70 Your lover's life is on the wane
So fast, that, if this very hour
You yield not as my paramour,
He will not see the rain leave off—
Nay, keep your tongue from gibe and scoff,
75 Sir Robert, or I slay you now."

She laid her hand upon her brow,
Then gazed upon the palm, as though
She thought her forehead bled, and—"No,"
She said, and turned her head away,
80 As there were nothing else to say,
And everything were settled: red
Grew Godmar's face from chin to head:
"Jehane, on yonder hill there stands
My castle, guarding well my lands:
85 What hinders me from taking you,
And doing that I list to do
To your fair willful body, while
Your knight lies dead?"
A wicked smile
Wrinkled her face, her lips grew thin,
90 A long way out she thrust her chin:
"You know that I should strangle you
While you were sleeping; or bite through Your throat, by God's help—ah!" she said,
"Lord Jesus, pity your poor maid!
95 For in such wise they hem me in,
I cannot choose but sin and sin,
Whatever happens: yet I think
They could not make me eat or drink,
And so should I just reach my rest."
100 "Nay, if you do not my behest,
O Jehane! though I love you well,"
Said Godmar, "would I fail to tell
All that I know." "Foul lies," she said.
"Eh? lies my Jehane? by God's head,
105 At Paris folks would deem them true!
Do you know, Jehane, they cry for you,
'Jehane the brown! Jehane the brown!
Give us Jehane to burn or drown!'—
Eh—gag me Robert!—sweet my friend,
110 This were indeed a piteous end

For those long fingers, and long feet,
And long neck, and smooth shoulders sweet;
An end that few men would forget
That saw it—so, an hour yet:
115 Consider, Jehane, which to take
Of life or death!"

So, scarce awake,
Dismounting, did she leave that place,
And totter some yards: with her face
Turned upward to the sky she lay,
120 Her head on a wet heap of hay,
And fell asleep: and while she slept,
And did not dream, the minutes crept
Round to the twelve again; but she,
Being waked at last, sighed quietly,
125 And strangely childlike came, and said:
"I will not." Straightway Godmar's head,
As though it hung on strong wires, turned
Most sharply round, and his face burned.

For Robert—both his eyes were dry,
130 He could not weep, but gloomily
He seemed to watch the rain; yea, too,
His lips were firm; he tried once more
To touch her lips; she reached out, sore
And vain desire so tortured them,
135 The poor gray lips, and now the hem
Of his sleeve brushed them.

With a start
Up Godmar rose, thrust them apart;
From Robert's throat he loosed the bands
Of silk and mail; with empty hands
140 Held out, she stood and gazed, and saw,
The long bright blade without a flaw
Glide out from Godmar's sheath, his hand
In Robert's hair; she saw him bend
Back Robert's head; she saw him send 145 The thin steel down; the blow told well,
Right backward the knight Robert fell,
And moaned as dogs do, being half dead,
Unwitting, as I deem: so then
Godmar turned grinning to his men,
150 Who ran, some five or six, and beat
His head to pieces at their feet.

Then Godmar turned again, and said:
"So, Jehane, the first fitte[5] is read!
Take note, my lady, that your way
155 Lies backward to the Chatelet!"
She shook her head and gazed awhile

5. Division of a song, poem, or tale.

At her cold hands with a rueful smile,
As though this thing had made her mad.

This was the parting that they had 160 Beside the haystack in the floods.

1858

The Earthly Paradise[6]

Of heaven or hell I have no power to sing,
I cannot ease the burden of your fears,
Or make quick-coming death a little thing,
Or bring again the pleasure of past years,
5 Nor for my words shall ye forget your tears,
Or hope again for aught that I can say,
The idle singer of an empty day.

But rather, when, aweary of your mirth,
From full hearts still unsatisfied ye sigh,
10 And, feeling kindly unto all the earth,
Grudge every minute as it passes by,
Made the more mindful that the sweet days die—
Remember me a little then I pray,
The idle singer of an empty day.

15 The heavy trouble, the bewildering care
That weighs us down who live and earn our bread,
These idle verses have no power to bear;
So let me sing of names rememberéd,
Because they, living not, can ne'er be dead,
20 Or long time take their memory quite away
From us poor singers of an empty day.

Dreamer of dreams, born out of my due time,
Why should I strive to set the crooked straight?
Let it suffice me that my murmuring rhyme
25 Beats with light wing against the ivory gate,[7]
Telling a tale not too importunate
To those who in the sleepy region stay,
Lulled by the singer of an empty day.

Folk say, a wizard to a northern king
30 At Christmas-tide such wondrous things did show,
That through one window men beheld the spring,
And through another saw the summer glow,
And through a third the fruited vines a-row,

6. The dedicatory stanzas to Morris's poem The Earthly Paradise (1868–70), consisting of a prologue and twenty-four tales on classical and medieval—especially Norse—subjects.

7. In Homer, dreams came through one or the other of two gates: through the gates of ivory, those that were untrue; through the gates of horn, those that were true.

While still, unheard, but in its wonted° way, usual
35 Piped the drear wind of that December day.

So with this Earthly Paradise it is,
If ye will read aright, and pardon me,
Who strive to build a shadowy isle of bliss
Midmost the beating of the steely sea,
40 Where tossed about all hearts of men must be;
Whose ravening monsters mighty men shall slay,
Not the poor singer of an empty day.

1868–70

W. S. GILBERT
1836–1911

I Am the Very Model of a Modern Major-General[1]

I am the very model of a modern Major-General,
I've information vegetable, animal, and mineral,
I know the kings of England, and I quote the fights historical,
From Marathon to Waterloo, in order categorical;[2]
5 I'm very well acquainted too with matters mathematical,
I understand equations, both the simple and quadratical,
About binomial theorem I'm teeming with a lot o' news—
With many cheerful facts about the square of the hypotenuse.[3]

ALL With many cheerful facts, etc.

10 GEN. I'm very good at integral and differential calculus,
I know the scientific names of beings animalculous;[4]
In short, in matters vegetable, animal, and mineral,
I am the very model of a modern Major-General.

ALL In short, in matters vegetable, animal, and mineral,
15 He is the very model of a modern Major-General.

GEN. I know our mythic history, King Arthur's and Sir Caradoc's,
I answer hard acrostics, I've a pretty taste for paradox,
I quote in elegiacs all the crimes of Heliogabalus,
In conics I can floor peculiarities parabolous.[5]

1. Sung by the Major-General on his entrance in act 1 of The Pirates of Penzance.
2. The Greeks defeated the Persians in a famous battle at Marathon in 490 B.C.E.; the duke of Wellington won his decisive victory over Napoleon at Waterloo in 1815.
3. All these are mathematical terms.
4. Microscopic organisms.
5. More examples of the Major-General's abstruse bits of knowledge: Sir Caradoc was a legendary figure in British history, supposedly one of King Arthur's knights; acrostics are word puzzles (forerunners of crossword puzzles); elegiacs were a classical verse form of praise, quite unsuitable to describe the life of the most depraved Roman emperor; conics is the study of three-dimensional figures, of which the parabola is one.

20 I can tell undoubted Raphaels from Gerard Dows and Zoffanies,
I know the croaking chorus from the Frogs of Aristophanes,
Then I can hum a fugue of which I've heard the music's
dinafore,
And whistle all the airs from that infernal nonsense Pinafore.[6]

ALL And whistle all the airs, etc.

25 GEN. Then I can write a washing bill in Babylonic cuneiform,
And tell you every detail of Caractacus's uniform;[7]
In short, in matters vegetable, animal, and mineral,
I am the very model of a modern Major-General.

ALL In short, in matters vegetable, animal, and mineral,
30 He is the very model of a modern Major-General.

GEN. In fact, when I know what is meant by "mamelon" and "ravelin,"
When I can tell at sight a chassepôt rifle from a javelin,
When such affairs as sorties and surprises I'm more wary at,
And when I know precisely what is meant by "commissariat," 35 When I have learnt what progress has been made in modern gunnery,
When I know more of tactics than a novice in a nunnery:
In short, when I've a smattering of elemental strategy, You'll say a better Major-Gener*al* has never sat a gee—[8]

ALL You'll say a better, etc.

40 GEN. For my military knowledge, though I'm plucky and adventury,
Has only been brought down to the beginning of the century;
But still in matters vegetable, animal, and mineral,
I am the very model of a modern Major-General.

ALL But still in matters vegetable, animal, and mineral,
45 He is the very model of a modern Major-General.

1879

6. Raphael was one of the great painters of the early Italian Renaissance, as opposed to Gerhard Dou and Johann Zoffany, undistinguished seventeenth- and eighteenth-century painters; in The Frogs, by Aristophanes, the great classical comic playwright, a chorus of frogs chants "Brekke-ko-ax, ko-ax, ko-ax"; a fugue is a learned (and, incidentally, multivoiced) musical composition; the last line of the verse is Gilbert's sly dig at the immense popularity of the previous Gilbert and Sullivan operetta, H.M.S. Pinafore (1878).

7. Cuneiform was a form of writing (made by pressing a stick into clay) practiced in ancient Babylonia; Caractacus is an alternate form of Caradoc.

8. Horse (usually a work horse). The Major-General has just listed his "smattering" of military terms: a mamelon is a fortified mound, while a ravelin is a detached outwork also used in fortification; the chassepôt rifle was a bolt-action, breech-loading rifle, very recently invented in Gilbert's time, while a javelin is a light spear that has been used in warfare for centuries; sorties and surprises are sudden military attacks; a commissariat is the system for supplying an army with food.

Titwillow[9]

On a tree by a river a little tom-tit
Sang "Willow, titwillow, titwillow!"
And I said to him, "Dicky-bird, why do you sit Singing 'Willow, titwillow, titwillow'?"
5 "Is it weakness of intellect, birdie?" I cried,
"Or a rather tough worm in your little inside?"
With a shake of his poor little head, he replied,
"Oh, willow, titwillow, titwillow!"

He slapped at his chest, as he sat on that bough,
10 Singing "Willow, titwillow, titwillow!"
And a cold perspiration bespangled his brow,
Oh, willow, titwillow, titwillow!
He sobbed and he sighed, and a gurgle he gave,
Then he plunged himself into the billowy wave,
15 And an echo arose from the suicide's grave—
"Oh, willow, titwillow, titwillow!"

Now I feel just as sure as I'm sure that my name
Isn't Willow, titwillow, titwillow,
That 'twas blighted affection that made him exclaim
20 "Oh, willow, titwillow, titwillow!"
And if you remain callous and obdurate, I Shall perish as he did, and you will know why,
Though I probably shall not exclaim as I die,
"Oh, willow, titwillow, titwillow!"

1885

ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE
1837–1909

Chorus from Atalanta in Calydon

When the Hounds of Spring Are on Winter's Traces

When the hounds of spring are on winter's traces,
The mother of months[1] in meadow or plain
Fills the shadows and windy places
With lisp of leaves and ripple of rain;
5 And the brown bright nightingale amorous

9. Sung by Ko-Ko in act 2 of The Mikado.
1. This chorus, with which Swinburne's tragedy begins, is addressed to Artemis, called "mother of months" because in Greek mythology she is the moon goddess.

Is half assuaged for Itylus,[2]
For the Thracian ships and the foreign faces,
  The tongueless vigil, and all the pain.

Come with bows bent and with emptying of quivers,
10 Maiden most perfect, lady of light,
With a noise of winds and many rivers,
  With a clamor of waters, and with might;
Bind on thy sandals, O thou most fleet,
Over the splendor and speed of thy feet;
15 For the faint east quickens, the wan west shivers,
  Round the feet of the day and the feet of the night.

Where shall we find her, how shall we sing to her,
  Fold our hands round her knees, and cling?
O that man's heart were as fire and could spring to her,
20 Fire, or the strength of the streams that spring!
For the stars and the winds are unto her
As raiment, as songs of the harp-player;
For the risen stars and the fallen cling to her,
  And the southwest wind and the west wind sing.

25 For winter's rains and ruins are over,
  And all the season of snows and sins;
The days dividing lover and lover,
  The light that loses, the night that wins;
And time remembered is grief forgotten,
30 And frosts are slain and flowers begotten,
And in green underwood and cover
  Blossom by blossom the spring begins.

The full streams feed on flower of rushes,
  Ripe grasses trammel a traveling foot,
35 The faint fresh flame of the young year flushes
  From leaf to flower and flower to fruit;
And fruit and leaf are as gold and fire,
And the oat° is heard above the lyre, musical pipe
And the hoofèd heel of a satyr[3] crushes
40 The chestnut-husk at the chestnut-root.

And Pan by noon and Bacchus by night,[4]
  Fleeter of foot than the fleet-foot kid,
Follows with dancing and fills with delight
  The Maenad and the Bassarid;
45 And soft as lips that laugh and hide
The laughing leaves of the trees divide,

2. Tereus, king of Thrace, raped his sister-in-law, Philomela, and cut out her tongue to ensure her silence. But Philomela wove the story of his deed into a tapestry, and in revenge her sister, Procne, served up to her husband the cooked flesh of their son Itys (or Itylus), at a banquet. The sisters, fleeing from Tereus, were changed into birds before he could overtake them, Procne into a swallow, Philomela into a nightingale.
3. A woodland god, half man, half beast.
4. Pan was the Greek god of flocks and shepherds; Bacchus, or Dionysus, god of wine, was accompanied in his revels (Bacchanalia) by a train of devotees that included Maenads and Bassarids (line 44).

And screen from seeing and leave in sight
  The god pursuing, the maiden hid.

The ivy falls with the Bacchanal's hair
50 Over her eyebrows hiding her eyes;
The wild vine slipping down leaves bare
  Her bright breast shortening into sighs;
The wild vine slips with the weight of its leaves,
But the berried ivy catches and cleaves
55 To the limbs that glitter, the feet that scare
  The wolf that follows, the fawn that flies.

1865

The Garden of Proserpine[5]

Here, where the world is quiet;
  Here, where all trouble seems
Dead winds' and spent waves' riot
  In doubtful dreams of dreams;
5 I watch the green field growing
For reaping folk and sowing,
For harvest-time and mowing,
  A sleepy world of streams.

I am tired of tears and laughter,
10 And men that laugh and weep;
Of what may come hereafter
  For men that sow to reap:
I am weary of days and hours,
Blown buds of barren flowers,
15 Desires and dreams and powers
  And everything but sleep.

Here life has death for neighbor,
  And far from eye or ear
Wan waves and wet winds labor,
20 Weak ships and spirits steer;
They drive adrift, and whither
They wot° not who make thither; know
But no such winds blow hither,
  And no such things grow here.

25 No growth of moor or coppice,° forest
  No heather-flower or vine,
But bloomless buds of poppies,
  Green grapes of Proserpine,

5. Persephone, in Roman mythology Proserpine, the daughter of Zeus and Demeter, had been abducted by Hades (the Roman Pluto), god of the underworld (over which she ruled with him thereafter as his queen and as goddess of death and eternal sleep).

Pale beds of blowing rushes
30 Where no leaf blooms or blushes
Save this whereout she crushes
For dead men deadly wine.

Pale, without name or number,
In fruitless fields of corn,° wheat
35 They bow themselves and slumber
All night till light is born;
And like a soul belated,
In hell and heaven unmated,
By cloud and mist abated
40 Comes out of darkness morn.

Though one were strong as seven,
He too with death shall dwell,
Nor wake with wings in heaven,
Nor weep for pains in hell;
45 Though one were fair as roses,
His beauty clouds and closes;
And well though love reposes,
In the end it is not well.

Pale, beyond porch and portal,
50 Crowned with calm leaves, she stands
Who gathers all things mortal
With cold immortal hands;
Her languid lips are sweeter
Than love's who fears to greet her
55 To men that mix and meet her
From many times and lands.

She waits for each and other,
She waits for all men born;
Forgets the earth her mother,
60 The life of fruits and corn;
And spring and seed and swallow
Take wing for her and follow
Where summer song rings hollow
And flowers are put to scorn.

65 There go the loves that wither,
The old loves with wearier wings;
And all dead years draw thither,
And all disastrous things;
Dead dreams of days forsaken,
70 Blind buds that snows have shaken,
Wild leaves that winds have taken,
Red strays of ruined springs.

We are not sure of sorrow,
And joy was never sure;

75 Today will die tomorrow;
Time stoops to no man's lure;[6]
And love, grown faint and fretful,
With lips but half regretful
Sighs, and with eyes forgetful
80 Weeps that no love endure.

From too much love of living,
From hope and fear set free,
We thank with brief thanksgiving
Whatever gods may be 85 That no life lives for ever;
That dead men rise up never;
That even the weariest river
Winds somewhere safe to sea.

Then star nor sun shall waken,
90 Nor any change of light:
Nor sound of waters shaken,
Nor any sound or sight:
Nor wintry leaves nor vernal,° of spring
Nor days nor things diurnal;° daily
95 Only the sleep eternal
In an eternal night.

1866

A Forsaken Garden

In a coign° of the cliff between lowland and highland, corner
At the sea-down's edge between windward and lee,
Walled round with rocks as an inland island,
The ghost of a garden fronts the sea.
5 A girdle of brushwood and thorn encloses
The steep square slope of the blossomless bed
Where the weeds that grew green from the graves of its roses
Now lie dead.

The fields fall southward, abrupt and broken,
10 To the low last edge of the long lone land.
If a step should sound or a word be spoken,
Would a ghost not rise at the strange guest's hand?
So long have the grey bare walks lain guestless,
Through branches and briars if a man make way,
15 He shall find no life but the sea-wind's, restless
Night and day.

6. In falconry, a device used to recall the hawk to the falconer's wrist.

The dense hard passage is blind and stifled
   That crawls by a track none turn to climb
To the strait waste place that the years have rifled
20   Of all but the thorns that are touched not of time.
The thorns he spares when the rose is taken;
   The rocks are left when he wastes the plain.
The wind that wanders, the weeds wind-shaken,
         These remain.

25 Not a flower to be pressed of the foot that falls not;
   As the heart of a dead man the seed-plots are dry;
From the thicket of thorns whence the nightingale calls not,
   Could she call, there were never a rose to reply.
Over the meadows that blossom and wither
30   Rings but the note of a sea-bird's song;
Only the sun and the rain come hither
         All year long.

The sun burns sere° and the rain dishevels   dry
   One gaunt bleak blossom of scentless breath.
35 Only the wind here hovers and revels
   In a round where life seems barren as death.
Here there was laughing of old, there was weeping,
   Haply, of lovers none ever will know,
Whose eyes went seaward a hundred sleeping
40   Years ago.

Heart handfast in heart as they stood, "Look thither,"
   Did he whisper? "look forth from the flowers to the sea,
For the foam-flowers endure when the rose-blossoms wither,
   And men that love lightly may die—but we?"
45 And the same wind sang and the same waves whitened,
   And or ever the garden's last petals were shed,
In the lips that had whispered, the eyes that had lightened,
         Love was dead.

Or they loved their life through, and then went whither?
50   And were one to the end—but what end who knows?
Love deep as the sea as a rose must wither,
   As the rose-red seaweed that mocks the rose.
Shall the dead take thought for the dead to love them?
   What love was ever as deep as a grave?
55 They are loveless now as the grass above them
         Or the wave.

All are at one now, roses and lovers,
   Not known of the cliffs and the fields and the sea.
Not a breath of the time that has been hovers
60   In the air now soft with a summer to be.
Not a breath shall there sweeten the seasons hereafter
   Of the flowers or the lovers that laugh now or weep,
When as they that are free now of weeping and laughter
         We shall sleep.

65 Here death may deal not again for ever;
Here change may come not till all change end.
From the graves they have made they shall rise up never,
Who have left nought living to ravage and rend.
Earth, stones, and thorns of the wild ground growing,
70 While the sun and the rain live, these shall be;
Till a last wind's breath upon all these blowing
Roll the sea.

Till the slow sea rise and the sheer cliff crumble,
Till terrace and meadow the deep gulfs drink,
75 Till the strength of the waves of the high tides humble
The fields that lessen, the rocks that shrink,
Here now in his triumph where all things falter,
Stretched out on the spoils that his own hand spread,
As a god self-slain on his own strange altar,
80 Death lies dead.

1876 1878

THOMAS HARDY
1840–1928

Hap[1]

If but some vengeful god would call to me
From up the sky, and laugh: "Thou suffering thing,
Know that thy sorrow is my ecstasy,
That thy love's loss is my hate's profiting!"

5 Then would I bear it, clench myself, and die,
Steeled by the sense of ire unmerited;
Half-eased in that a Powerfuller than I
Had willed and meted me the tears I shed.

But not so. How arrives it joy lies slain,
10 And why unblooms the best hope ever sown?
—Crass Casualty obstructs the sun and rain,
And dicing Time for gladness casts a moan. . . .
These purblind Doomsters had as readily strown
Blisses about my pilgrimage as pain.

1866 1898

1. I.e., chance (as also "Casualty," line 11).

Neutral Tones

We stood by a pond that winter day,
And the sun was white, as though chidden° of° God, rebuked / by
And a few leaves lay on the starving sod;° turf
—They had fallen from an ash, and were grey.

5 Your eyes on me were as eyes that rove
Over tedious riddles of years ago;
And some words played between us to and fro
On which lost the more by our love.

The smile on your mouth was the deadest thing
10 Alive enough to have strength to die;
And a grin of bitterness swept thereby
Like an ominous bird a-wing . . .

Since then, keen lessons that love deceives,
And wrings with wrong, have shaped to me
15 Your face, and the God-curst sun, and a tree,
And a pond edged with greyish leaves.

1867 1898

I Look into My Glass[2]

I look into my glass,
And view my wasting skin,
And say, "Would God it came to pass
My heart had shrunk as thin!"

5 For then, I, undistrest
By hearts grown cold to me,
Could lonely wait my endless rest
With equanimity.

But Time, to make me grieve,
10 Part steals, lets part abide;
And shakes this fragile frame at eve
With throbbings of noontide.

1898

2. Mirror.

Drummer Hodge[3]

1

They throw in Drummer Hodge, to rest
 Uncoffined—just as found:
His landmark is a kopje-crest[4]
 That breaks the veldt around;
5 And foreign constellations west[5]
 Each night above his mound.

2

Young Hodge the Drummer never knew—
 Fresh from his Wessex home—
The meaning of the broad Karoo,
10 The Bush,[6] the dusty loam,
And why uprose to nightly view
 Strange stars amid the gloam.

3

Yet portion of that unknown plain
 Will Hodge forever be;
15 His homely Northern breast and brain
 Grow to some Southern tree,
And strange-eyed constellations reign
 His stars eternally.

1899 1902

A Broken Appointment

You did not come,
And marching Time drew on, and wore me numb.
Yet less for loss of your dear presence there
Than that I thus found lacking in your make
5 That high compassion which can overbear
Reluctance for pure lovingkindness' sake
Grieved I, when, as the hope-hour stroked its sum,
 You did not come.

You love not me,
10 And love alone can lend you loyalty;
—I know and knew it. But, unto the store
Of human deeds divine in all but name,

3. The poem presents an incident from the Boer War (1899–1902) and when first published bore this note: "One of the Drummers killed was a native of a village near Casterbridge," i.e., Dorchester, the principal city of the region of southern England to which, in his novels and poems, Hardy gave its medieval name, Wessex.

4. Crest of a small hill (South African Dutch). The veldt (line 4) is open country, unenclosed pasture land; the Karoo (line 9), barren tracts of plateau-land.

5. Set. Foreign: i.e., to an English soldier.

6. Uncleared area of land (British colonial word).

Was it not worth a little hour or more
To add yet this: Once you, a woman, came 15 To soothe a time-torn man; even though it be
You love not me?

1902

The Darkling Thrush

I leant upon a coppice gate[7]
When Frost was spectre-grey,
And Winter's dregs made desolate
The weakening eye of day.
5 The tangled bine-stems[8] scored the sky
Like strings of broken lyres,
And all mankind that haunted nigh
Had sought their household fires.

The land's sharp features seemed to be 10 The Century's corpse outleant,[9]
His crypt the cloudy canopy,
The wind his death-lament.
The ancient pulse of germ and birth
Was shrunken hard and dry,
15 And every spirit upon earth
Seemed fervourless as I.

At once a voice arose among
The bleak twigs overhead
In a full-hearted evensong
20 Of joy illimited;
An aged thrush, frail, gaunt, and small,
In blast-beruffled plume,
Had chosen thus to fling his soul
Upon the growing gloom.

25 So little cause for carolings
Of such ecstatic sound
Was written on terrestrial things
Afar or nigh around,
That I could think there trembled through 30 His happy good-night air
Some blessed Hope, whereof he knew
And I was unaware.

December 31, 1900 1902

7. Gate leading to a small wood.
8. Shoots or stems of a climbing plant.
9. Leaning out (i.e., of its coffin); note the poem's composition date.

The Ruined Maid

"O'Melia, my dear, this does everything crown!
Who could have supposed I should meet you in Town?
And whence such fair garments, such prosperi-ty?"
"O didn't you know I'd been ruined?" said she.

5 "You left us in tatters, without shoes or socks,
Tired of digging potatoes, and spudding up docks;[1]
And now you've gay bracelets and bright feathers three!"
"Yes: that's how we dress when we're ruined," said she.

"At home in the barton° you said 'thee' and 'thou,' farm
10 And 'thik oon,' and 'theäs oon,' and 't'other'; but now
Your talking quite fits 'ee for high compa-ny!"
"Some polish is gained with one's ruin," said she.

"Your hands were like paws then, your face blue and bleak
But now I'm bewitched by your delicate cheek,
15 And your little gloves fit as on any la-dy!"
"We never do work when we're ruined," said she.

"You used to call home-life a hag-ridden dream,
And you'd sigh, and you'd sock;° but at present you seem sigh
To know not of megrims° or melancho-ly!" low spirits 20 "True. One's pretty lively when ruined," said she.

"I wish I had feathers, a fine sweeping gown,
And a delicate face, and could strut about Town!"
"My dear—a raw country girl, such as you be, Cannot quite expect that. You ain't ruined," said she.

1866 1902

The Convergence of the Twain

Lines on the Loss of the Titanic[2]

I

In a solitude of the sea
Deep from human vanity,
And the Pride of Life that planned her, stilly couches she.

2

Steel chambers, late the pyres
5 Of her salamandrine fires,[3]
Cold currents thrid,° and turn to rhythmic tidal lyres. thread

1. Digging up weedy herbs.
2. The White Star liner R.M.S. Titanic was sunk, with great loss of life, as the result of collision with an iceberg on its maiden voyage from Southampton to New York on April 15, 1912. Twain: two.
3. The ship's fires, which burn though immersed in water, are compared to the salamander, a lizard-like creature that according to fable could live in the midst of fire.

3

Over the mirrors meant
To glass the opulent
The sea-worm crawls—grotesque, slimed, dumb, indifferent.

4

10 Jewels in joy designed
To ravish the sensuous mind
Lie lightless, all their sparkles bleared and black and blind.

5

Dim moon-eyed fishes near Gaze at the gilded gear
15 And query: "What does this vaingloriousness down here?"

6

Well: while was fashioning
This creature of cleaving wing,
The Immanent Will[4] that stirs and urges everything

7

Prepared a sinister mate
20 For her—so gaily great—
A Shape of Ice, for the time far and dissociate.

8

And as the smart ship grew
In stature, grace, and hue,
In shadowy silent distance grew the Iceberg too.

9

25 Alien they seemed to be:
No mortal eye could see
The intimate welding of their later history,

10

Or sign that they were bent
By paths coincident
30 On being anon° twin halves of one august° event, soon / important

11

Till the Spinner of the Years
Said "Now!" And each one hears,
And consummation comes, and jars two hemispheres.

1912

Channel Firing[5]

That night your great guns, unawares,
Shook all our coffins as we lay,

4. The blind force (in Hardy's belief system, not identified with any deity) that drives the world.
5. I.e., gunnery practice in the English Channel. Four months after Hardy wrote this poem, World War I began.

And broke the chancel[6] window-squares,
We thought it was the Judgment-day

5 And sat upright. While drearisome
Arose the howl of wakened hounds:
The mouse let fall the altar-crumb,
The worms drew back into the mounds,

The glebe cow[7] drooled. Till God called, "No;
10 It's gunnery practice out at sea
Just as before you went below;
The world is as it used to be:

"All nations striving strong to make
Red war yet redder. Mad as hatters
15 They do no more for Christés sake
Than you who are helpless in such matters.

"That this is not the judgment-hour
For some of them's a blessed thing,
For if it were they'd have to scour
20 Hell's floor for so much threatening. . . .

"Ha, ha. It will be warmer when I blow the trumpet (if indeed
I ever do; for you are men,
And rest eternal sorely need)."

25 So down we lay again. "I wonder,
Will the world ever saner be,"
Said one, "than when He sent us under
In our indifferent century!"

And many a skeleton shook his head.
30 "Instead of preaching forty year,"
My neighbour Parson Thirdly said,
"I wish I had stuck to pipes and beer."

Again the guns disturbed the hour,
Roaring their readiness to avenge,
35 As far inland as Stourton Tower,
And Camelot, and starlit Stonehenge.[8]

April 1914 1914

6. Part of a church nearest the altar.
7. Cow pastured on the glebe, a piece of land attached to a vicarage or rectory.
8. Stourton Tower, built in 1772, and locally known as "Alfred's Tower," stands on the highest point of the estate of Stourhead, in Wiltshire, close to the Somersetshire border. Camelot, the seat of the legendary King Arthur's court, has been variously associated with Winchester and with certain places in Somersetshire. Stonehenge is a circular grouping of megalithic monuments on Salisbury Plain, Wiltshire, dating back to the late Neolithic or early Bronze Age.

Under the Waterfall

"Whenever I plunge my arm, like this,
In a basin of water, I never miss
The sweet sharp sense of a fugitive day
Fetched back from its thickening shroud of grey.
5 Hence the only prime
And real love-rhyme
That I know by heart,
And that leaves no smart,
Is the purl[9] of a little valley fall
10 About three spans wide and two spans tall
Over a table of solid rock
And into a scoop of the self-same block;
The purl of a runlet that never ceases
In stir of kingdoms, in wars, in peaces;
15 With a hollow boiling voice it speaks
And has spoken since hills were turfless peaks."

"And why gives this the only prime
Idea to you of a real love-rhyme?
And why does plunging your arm in a bowl
20 Full of spring water, bring throbs to your soul?"

"Well, under the fall, in a crease of the stone,
Though where precisely none ever has known,
Jammed darkly, nothing to show how prized,
And by now with its smoothness opalized,
25 Is a drinking-glass:
For, down that pass
My lover and I Walked under a sky
Of blue with a leaf-wove awning of green,
30 In the burn of August, to paint the scene,
And we placed our basket of fruit and wine
By the runlet's rim, where we sat to dine;
And when we had drunk from the glass together,
Arched by the oak-copse° from the weather, -thicket
35 I held the vessel to rinse in the fall,
Where it slipped, and sank, and was past recall,
Though we stooped and plumbed the little abyss
With long bared arms. There the glass still is.
And, as said, if I thrust my arm below
40 Cold water in basin or bowl, a throe° violent pang
From the past awakens a sense of that time,
And the glass we used, and the cascade's rhyme.
The basin seems the pool, and its edge
The hard smooth face of the brook-side ledge,

9. Flow with a murmuring sound.

45 And the leafy pattern of china-ware
The hanging plants that were bathing there.

"By night, by day, when it shines or lours,° darkens
There lies intact that chalice of ours,
And its presence adds to the rhyme of love
50 Persistently sung by the fall above.
No lip has touched it since his and mine
In turns therefrom sipped lovers' wine."

1914

The Voice

Woman much missed, how you call to me, call to me,
Saying that now you are not as you were
When you had changed from the one who was all to me,
But as at first, when our day was fair.

5 Can it be you that I hear? Let me view you, then,
Standing as when I drew near to the town
Where you would wait for me: yes, as I knew you then,
Even to the original air-blue gown!

Or is it only the breeze, in its listlessness
10 Travelling across the wet mead° to me here, meadow
You being ever dissolved to wan wistlessness,° heedlessness
Heard no more again far or near?

Thus I; faltering forward,
Leaves around me falling,
15 Wind oozing thin through the thorn from norward,° northward
And the woman calling.

December 1912 1914

During Wind and Rain

They sing their dearest songs—
He, she, all of them—yea,
Treble and tenor and bass,
And one to play;
5 With the candles mooning° each face. . . . lighting
Ah, no; the years O!
How the sick leaves reel down in throngs!

They clear the creeping moss—
Elders and juniors—aye,

10 Making the pathways neat
And the garden gay;
And they build a shady seat. . . .
Ah, no; the years, the years;
See, the white storm-birds wing across.

15 They are blithely° breakfasting all— cheerfully
Men and maidens—yea,
Under the summer tree,
With a glimpse of the bay,
While pet fowl come to the knee. . . .
20 Ah, no; the years O!
And the rotten rose is ript from the wall.

They change to a high new house,
He, she, all of them—aye,
Clocks and carpets and chairs
25 On the lawn all day,
And brightest things that are theirs. . . .
Ah, no; the years, the years
Down their carved names the rain-drop ploughs.

1917

In Time of "The Breaking of Nations"[1]

1

Only a man harrowing° clods° cultivating / earth
In a slow silent walk
With an old horse that stumbles and nods
Half asleep as they stalk.

2

5 Only thin smoke without flame
From the heaps of couch-grass;
Yet this will go onward the same
Though Dynasties pass.

3

Yonder a maid and her wight° man
10 Come whispering by:
War's annals will cloud into night
Ere their story die.

1915 1916

1. Cf. Jeremiah 51.20: "Thou art my battle ax and weapons of war: for with thee will I break in pieces the nations, and with thee will I destroy kingdoms."

Afterwards

When the Present has latched its postern° behind my tremulous stay back gate
And the May month flaps its glad green leaves like wings,
Delicate-filmed as new-spun silk, will the neighbours say,
"He was a man who used to notice such things"?

5 If it be in the dusk when, like an eyelid's soundless blink,
The dewfall-hawk comes crossing the shades to alight
Upon the wind-warped upland thorn, a gazer may think,
"To him this must have been a familiar sight."

If I pass during some nocturnal blackness, mothy and warm,
10 When the hedgehog travels furtively over the lawn,
One may say, "He strove that such innocent creatures should come to no harm,
But he could do little for them; and now he is gone."

If, when hearing that I have been stilled at last, they stand at the door,
Watching the full-starred heavens that winter sees,
15 Will this thought rise on those who will meet my face no more,
"He was one who had an eye for such mysteries"?

And will any say when my bell of quittance is heard in the gloom,
And a crossing breeze cuts a pause in its outrollings,
Till they rise again, as they were a new bell's boom,
20 "He hears it not now, but used to notice such things"?

1917

SIDNEY LANIER

1842–1881

From the Flats[1]

What heartache—ne'er a hill!
Inexorable, vapid, vague, and chill
The drear sand-levels drain my spirit low.
With one poor word they tell me all they know;
5 Whereat their stupid tongues, to tease my pain,
Do drawl it o'er again and o'er again.
They hurt my heart with griefs I cannot name:
Always the same, the same.

1. Written in Tampa, Florida; Lanier was from Georgia.

Nature hath no surprise,
10 No ambuscade° of beauty 'gainst mine eyes — ambush
From brake or lurking dell or deep defile;° — narrow pass
No humors, frolic forms—this mile, that mile;
No rich reserves or happy-valley hopes
Beyond the bends of roads, the distant slopes.
15 Her fancy fails, her wild is all run tame:
Ever the same, the same.

Oh, might I through these tears
But glimpse some hill my Georgia high uprears,
Where white the quartz and pink the pebble shine,
20 The hickory heavenward strives, the muscadine° — grapevine
Swings o'er the slope, the oak's far-falling shade
Darkens the dogwood in the bottom glade,
And down the hollow from a ferny nook
Bright leaps a living brook!

1877

The Marshes of Glynn[2]

Glooms of the live-oaks,[3] beautiful-braided and woven
With intricate shades of the vines that myriad-cloven
Clamber the forks of the multiform boughs,— Emerald twilights,—
5 Virginal shy lights,
Wrought of the leaves to allure to the whisper of vows,
When lovers pace timidly down through the green colonnades
Of the dim sweet woods, of the dear dark woods,
Of the heavenly woods and glades,
10 That run to the radiant marginal sand-beach within
The wide sea-marshes of Glynn;—

Beautiful glooms, soft dusks in the noon-day fire,—
Wildwood privacies, closets of lone desire,
Chamber from chamber parted with wavering arras° of leaves,— — tapestry
15 Cells for the passionate pleasure of prayer to the soul that grieves,
Pure with a sense of the passing of saints through the wood,
Cool for the dutiful weighing of ill with good;—

O braided dusks of the oak and woven shades of the vine,
While the riotous noon-day sun of the June-day long did shine,
20 Ye held me fast in your heart and I held you fast in mine;
But now when the noon is no more, and riot is rest,
And the sun is a-wait at the ponderous gate of the West,
And the slant yellow beam down the wood-aisle doth seem

2. Glynn County, Georgia.
3. Evergreen oaks, indigenous to the American South.

Like a lane into heaven that leads from a dream,—
25 Ay, now, when my soul all day hath drunken the soul of the oak,
And my heart is at ease from men, and the wearisome sound of the stroke
Of the scythe of time and the trowel of trade is low,
And belief overmasters doubt, and I know that I know,
And my spirit is grown to a lordly great compass within,
30 That the length and the breadth and the sweep of the marshes of Glynn
Will work me no fear like the fear they have wrought me of yore
When length was fatigue, and when breadth was but bitterness sore,
And when terror and shrinking and dreary unnamable pain
Drew over me out of the merciless miles of the plain,— 35 Oh, now, unafraid, I am fain[4] to face
The vast sweet visage of space.
To the edge of the wood I am drawn, I am drawn,
Where the gray beach glimmering runs, as a belt of the dawn,
For a mete° and a mark measure
40 To the forest-dark:—
So:
Affable live-oak, leaning low,—
Thus—with your favor—soft, with a reverent hand,
(Not lightly touching your person, Lord of the land!)
45 Bending your beauty aside, with a step I stand
On the firm-packed sand,
Free
By a world of marsh that borders a world of sea.
Sinuous southward and sinuous northward the shimmering band
50 Of the sand-beach fastens the fringe of the marsh to the folds of the land.
Inward and outward to northward and southward the beachlines linger and curl
As a silver-wrought garment that clings to and follows the firm sweet limbs of a girl.
Vanishing, swerving, evermore curving again into sight,
Softly the sand-beach wavers away to a dim gray looping of light.
55 And what if behind me to westward the wall of the woods stands high?
The world lies east: how ample, the marsh and the sea and the sky!
A league[5] and a league of marsh-grass, waist-high, broad in the blade,
Green, and all of a height, and unflecked with a light or a shade,
Stretch leisurely off, in a pleasant plain,
60 To the terminal blue of the main.° sea

Oh, what is abroad in the marsh and the terminal sea?
Somehow my soul seems suddenly free
From the weighing of fate and the sad discussion of sin,
By the length and the breadth and the sweep of the marshes of Glynn.

4. I would like.

5. An English unit of about three miles.

65 Ye marshes, how candid and simple and nothing-withholding and free
Ye publish yourselves to the sky and offer yourselves to the sea!
Tolerant plains, that suffer the sea and the rains and the sun,
Ye spread and span like the catholic[6] man who hath mightily won
God out of knowledge and good out of infinite pain
70 And sight out of blindness and purity out of a stain.

As the marsh-hen secretly builds on the watery sod,
Behold I will build me a nest on the greatness of God:
I will fly in the greatness of God as the marsh-hen flies
In the freedom that fills all the space 'twixt the marsh and the skies:
75 By so many roots as the marsh-grass sends in the sod
I will heartily lay me a-hold on the greatness of God:
Oh, like to the greatness of God is the greatness within
The range of the marshes, the liberal marshes of Glynn.

And the sea lends large, as the marsh: lo, out of his plenty the sea 80 Pours fast: full soon the time of the flood-tide must be:
Look how the grace of the sea doth go
About and about through the intricate channels that flow
Here and there,
Everywhere,
Till his waters have flooded the uttermost creeks and the low-lying 85 lanes,
And the marsh is meshed with a million veins,
That like as with rosy and silvery essences flow
In the rose-and-silver evening glow.
Farewell, my lord Sun!
90 The creeks overflow: a thousand rivulets run
'Twixt the roots of the sod; the blades of the marsh-grass stir;
Passeth a hurrying sound of wings that westward whirr;
Passeth, and all is still; and the currents cease to run;
And the sea and the marsh are one.

95 How still the plains of the waters be!
The tide is in his ecstasy.
The tide is at his highest height:
And it is night.

And now from the Vast of the Lord will the waters of sleep
100 Roll in on the souls of men,
But who will reveal to our waking ken° range of vision
The forms that swim and the shapes that creep
Under the waters of sleep?
And I would I could know what swimmeth below when the tide comes in 105 On the length and the breadth of the marvellous marshes of Glynn.

1878

6. Broad-minded.

GERARD MANLEY HOPKINS
1844–1889

God's Grandeur

The world is charged with the grandeur of God.
It will flame out, like shining from shook foil;[1]
It gathers to a greatness, like the ooze of oil
Crushed.[2] Why do men then now not reck his rod?
5 Generations have trod, have trod, have trod;
And all is seared with trade; bleared, smeared with toil;
And wears man's smudge and shares man's smell: the soil
Is bare now, nor can foot feel, being shod.

And for° all this, nature is never spent; despite 10 There lives the dearest freshness deep down things;
And though the last lights off the black West went
Oh, morning, at the brown brink eastward, springs—
Because the Holy Ghost over the bent
World broods with warm breast and with ah! bright wings.

1877 1895

The Windhover[3]

To Christ Our Lord

I caught this morning morning's minion,° king- darling, favorite dom of daylight's dauphin,[4] dapple-dawn-drawn Falcon, in his riding
Of the rolling level underneath him steady air, and striding
High there, how he rung upon[5] the rein of a wimpling° wing rippling
5 In his ecstasy! then off, off forth on swing,
As a skate's heel sweeps smooth on a bow-bend: the hurl and gliding Rebuffed the big wind. My heart in hiding
Stirred for a bird,—the achieve of, the mastery of the thing!

Brute beauty and valour and act, oh, air, pride, plume, here
10 Buckle![6] AND the fire that breaks from thee then, a billion
Times told lovelier, more dangerous, O my chevalier![7]

1. In a letter of 1883, Hopkins writes: "I mean foil in its sense of leaf or tinsel, and no other word whatever will give the effect I want. Shaken goldfoil gives off broad glares like sheet lightning and also, and this is true of nothing else, owing to its zigzag dints and crossings and network of small many cornered facets, a sort of fork lightning too."
2. I.e., as when olives are crushed for their oil.
3. The kestrel, a small hawk, that hovers with its head to the wind.
4. The eldest son of the king of France was called the dauphin: hence the word here means "heir to a splendid, kingly condition."
5. Circled at the end of.
6. "Buckle" brings to a focus the elements of line 9, both in their literal sense, as descriptive of a single, sudden movement of the airborne bird, and in their symbolic sense as descriptive of Christ and with further reference to the poet and the lesson he draws from his observation. It may be read as either indicative or imperative, and in one or another of its possible meanings: "to fasten," "to join closely," "to equip for battle," "to grapple with, engage," but also "to cause to bend, give way, crumple."
7. Knight, nobleman, champion.

No wonder of it: shéer plód makes plough down sillion[8]
Shine, and blue-bleak embers, ah my dear,
Fall, gall° themselves, and gash gold-vermilion. break the surface of 1877 1918

Pied[9] Beauty

Glory be to God for dappled things—
For skies of couple-colour as a brinded° cow; brindled
For rose-moles all in stipple upon trout that swim;
Fresh-firecoal chestnut-falls;[1] finches' wings;
5 Landscape plotted and pieced—fold, fallow, and plough;[2]
And áll trádes, their gear and tackle and trim.° equipment
All things counter,° original, spare,° strange; contrary / rare
Whatever is fickle, freckled (who knows how?)
With swift, slow; sweet, sour; adazzle, dim;
10 He fathers-forth whose beauty is past change:
Praise him.

1877 1918

[As Kingfishers Catch Fire, Dragonflies Draw Flame][3]

As kingfishers catch fire, dragonflies draw flame;
As tumbled over rim in roundy wells
Stones ring; like each tucked° string tells, each hung bell's touched, plucked
Bow swung finds tongue to fling out broad its name;
5 Each mortal thing does one thing and the same:
Deals out that being indoors each one dwells;[4]
Selves[5]—goes itself; myself it speaks and spells, Crying What I do is me: for that I came.

I say more: the just man justices;
10 Keeps gráce: thát keeps all his goings graces;
Acts in God's eye what in God's eye he is—
Chríst. For Christ plays in ten thousand places, Lovely in limbs, and lovely in eyes not his
To the Father through the features of men's faces.

1877 1918

8. Ridge between two furrows of a plowed field.
9. Having two or more colors, in patches or blotches.
1. In his Journals, Hopkins writes of "chestnuts as bright as coals or spots of vermilion."
2. The land makes a pattern of varicolored patches by reason of its several uses, as for pasture, or being left fallow for a season, or being plowed and sown.
3. I.e., as their bright colors flash in the light.
4. I.e., gives utterance to the essential nature that dwells within ("indoors") each individual being.
5. I.e., gives being to its own individuality.

Felix Randal

Felix Randal the farrier,° O is he dead then? my duty all ended, blacksmith
Who have watched his mould of man, big-boned and hardy-handsome Pining, pining, till time when reason rambled in it and some Fatal four disorders, fleshed there, all contended?

5 Sickness broke him. Impatient, he cursed at first, but mended Being anointed[6] and all; though a heavenlier heart began some Months earlier, since I had our sweet reprieve and ransom
Tendered to him.[7] Ah well, God rest him all road ever he offended![8]

This seeing the sick endears them to us, us too it endears.
10 My tongue had taught thee comfort, touch had quenched thy tears,
Thy tears that touched my heart, child, Felix, poor Felix Randal;

How far from then forethought of, all thy more boisterous years,
When thou at the random[9] grim forge, powerful amidst peers,
Didst fettle[1] for the great grey drayhorse his bright and battering sandal!

1880 1918

Spring and Fall

To a Young Child

Márgarét, áre you gríeving
Over Goldengrove unleaving?
Leáves, líke the things of man, you
With your fresh thoughts care for, can you?
5 Áh! ás the heart grows older
It will come to such sights colder
By and by, nor spare a sigh
Though worlds of wanwood leafmeal[2] lie;
And yet you will weep and know why.
10 Now no matter, child, the name:
Sórrow's spríngs áre the same.
Nor mouth had, no nor mind, expressed
What heart heard of, ghost° guessed: spirit, soul
It ís the blight man was born for,
15 It is Margaret you mourn for.

1880 1893

6. Having received the sacrament for the dying.
7. I.e., since I had a priest visit him to hear his confession and give absolution.
8. I.e., for any way in which he may have offended.
9. Ramshackle, as applied to the forge itself; but also meaning that the man's life as a blacksmith was merely one casual earthly life as opposed to the sure way of Christian salvation.
1. To prepare (the horse's shoe).
2. Coined by Hopkins by analogy with piecemeal and meaning "leaf by leaf" or "leaf mold"—in the first sense, the foliage lies about the grove, having fallen leaf by leaf; in the second, foliage gradually decays to leaf mold. Wanwood: "pale" or "dim"—the groves are pale because of their light-colored autumn foliage, or dim because of the filtered light.

[Carrion Comfort]

Not, I'll not, carrion[3] comfort, Despair, not feast on thee;
Not untwist—slack they may be—these last strands of man
In me ór, most weary, cry I can no more. I can;
Can something, hope, wish day come, not choose not to be.
5 But ah, but O thou terrible, why wouldst thou rude° on me roughly
Thy wring-world right foot[4] rock? lay a lionlimb against me? scan
With darksome devouring eyes my bruisèd bones? and fan,
O in turns of tempest, me heaped there; me frantic to avoid thee and flee?

Why? That my chaff might fly; my grain lie, sheer and clear.
10 Nay in all that toil, that coil,° since (seems) I kissed the rod, tumult Hand[5] rather, my heart lo! lapped strength, stole joy, would laugh, chéer.
Cheer whom though? The hero whose heaven-handling flung me, fóot tród
Me? or me that fought him? O which one? is it each one? That night, that year
Of now done darkness I wretch lay wrestling with (my God!) my God.

1885 1918

[No Worst, There Is None. Pitched Past Pitch of Grief]

No worst, there is none. Pitched past pitch of grief,
More pangs will, schooled at forepangs, wilder wring.
Comforter, where, where is your comforting?
Mary, mother of us, where is your relief?

5 My cries heave, herds-long; huddle in a main, a chief-woe, world-sorrow; on an age-old anvil wince and sing—
Then lull, then leave off. Fury had shrieked "No lingering! Let me be fell:° force° I must be brief". fierce / perforce

O the mind, mind has mountains; cliffs of fall
10 Frightful, sheer, no-man-fathomed. Hold them cheap
May who ne'er hung there. Nor does long our small Durance° deal with that steep or deep. Here! creep, endurance
Wretch, under a comfort serves in a whirlwind: all Life death does end and each day dies with sleep.

1885 1918

3. Dead and putrefying flesh.
4. I.e., the foot capable of causing the world to writhe or twist.
5. I.e., the hand that wields the rod.

[I Wake and Feel the Fell of Dark, Not Day]

I wake and feel the fell[6] of dark, not day.
What hours, O what black hoürs we have spent
This night! what sights you, heart, saw; ways you went!
And more must, in yet longer light's delay.

5 With witness I speak this. But where I say Hours I mean years, mean life. And my lament
Is cries countless, cries like dead° letters sent — undelivered
To dearest him that lives alas! away.

I am gall, I am heartburn. God's most deep decree
10 Bitter would have me taste: my taste was me;
Bones built in me, flesh filled, blood brimmed the curse.

Selfyeast of spirit a dull dough sours. I see
The lost are like this, and their scourge to be
As I am mine, their sweating selves, but worse.

1885 — 1918

[My Own Heart Let Me More Have Pity On]

My own heart let me more have pity on; let
Me live to my sad self hereafter kind,
Charitable; not live this tormented mind
With this tormented mind tormenting yet.

5 I cast for comfort I can no more get
By groping round my comfortless, than blind
Eyes in their dark can day or thirst can find
Thirst's all-in-all in all a world of wet.[7]

Soul, self; come, poor Jackself,[8] I do advise 10 You, jaded, let be; call off thoughts awhile
Elsewhere; leave comfort root-room;[9] let joy size° — grow

6. Can be read in a number of senses: as "the hide or hairy skin of a beast," or, in an obsolete or rare sense, as "gall, bitterness; hence, animosity, rancor" [O.E.D.], or possibly as the adjective fell—fierce, savage, cruel—used as a noun.
7. I.e., as shipwrecked persons adrift without drinking water cannot quench their thirst, even though they are surrounded by "wet." "World" is common to all three instances: the speaker's "comfortless" world, the blind eyes' "dark" world, the "world of wet" in which the shipwrecked are adrift.
8. The humble self—"Jack" used in a pitying, deprecating sense (as in "jack-of-all-trades").
9. Room for its roots to grow.

At God knows when to God knows what;[1] whose smile
's not wrung,[2] see you; unforeseen times rather—as skies
Betweenpie mountains[3]—lights a lovely mile.

1885 1918

That Nature is a Heraclitean Fire[4] and of the comfort of the Resurrection

Cloud-puffball, torn tuffs, tossed pillows | flaunt forth, then chevy° on an air- race, scamper
built thoroughfare: heaven-roysterers, in gay-gangs[5] | they throng;
they glitter in marches.
Down roughcast,[6] down dazzling whitewash, | wherever an elm arches,
Shivelights and shadowtackle[7] in long | lashes lace, lance, and pair.
5 Delightfully the bright wind boisterous | ropes, wrestles, beats earth bare
Of yestertempest's creases; | in pool and rutpeel parches[8]
Squandering ooze to squeezed | dough, crust, dust; stanches, starches
Squadroned masks and manmarks | treadmire toil there
Footfretted in it. Million-fuelèd, | nature's bonfire burns on.
10 But quench her bonniest, dearest | to her, her clearest-selvèd spark
Man, how fast his firedint,[9] | his mark on mind, is gone!
Both are in an unfathomable, all is in an enormous dark
Drowned. O pity and indig | nation! Manshape, that shone
Sheer off, disseveral,° a star, | death blots black out; separate
nor mark
15 Is any of him at all so stark
But vastness blurs and time | beats level. Enough! the Resurrection,
A heart's-clarion!° Away grief's gasping, | joyless days, -trumpet dejection.
Across my foundering deck shone
A beacon, an eternal beam. | Flesh fade, and mortal trash
20 Fall to the residuary worm; | world's wildfire, leave but ash:
In a flash, at a trumpet crash,
I am at once what Christ is, | since he was what I am, and
This Jack,[1] joke, poor potsherd, | patch, matchwood, immortal diamond,
Is immortal diamond.

1888 1918

1. I.e., at unpredictable times until it reaches an unpredictable condition.
2. Cannot be forced, but must come as it will.
3. The brightness of skies, seen between mountains, makes a variegated patterning of light and dark. Betweenpie: verb coined by Hopkins based on the adjective pied (see "Pied Beauty," above).
4. Heraclitus (ca. 540–ca. 480 B.C.E.), founder of an important school of pre-Socratic philosophy, taught that all is in flux and that the world had its origin in fire and will end in fire.
5. Sky-swaggerers, in carefree groups.
6. A mixture of lime and gravel used to coat walls.
7. Shadows in complicated shapes, as of ship's ropes, tackle, gear. Shivelights: light in splinters, fragments.
8. I.e., in pool and rutpeel [ruts described as peeled places] the bright wind parches.
9. Hopkins's compound, meaning the mark made by the flame of humanity's spirit, the spirit's power to make its mark.
1. Common mortal (like "poor Jackself" in "My Own Heart Let Me More Have Pity On," above).

[Thou Art Indeed Just, Lord . . .]

Justus quidem tu es, Domine, si disputem tecum: verumtamen justa loquar ad te: Quare via impiorum prosperatur? & c.[2]

Thou art indeed just, Lord, if I contend
With thee; but, sir, so what I plead is just.
Why do sinners' ways prosper? and why must Disappointment all I endeavour end?
5 Wert thou my enemy, O thou my friend,
How wouldst thou worse, I wonder, than thou dost
Defeat, thwart me? Oh, the sots and thralls of lust
Do in spare hours more thrive than I that spend,
Sir, life upon thy cause. See, banks and brakes° thickets
10 Now, leavèd how thick! lacèd they are again
With fretty chervil,[3] look, and fresh wind shakes
Them; birds build—but not I build; no, but strain,
Time's eunuch, and not breed one work that wakes.
Mine, O thou lord of life, send my roots rain.

1889 1893

EMMA LAZARUS
1849–1887

The New Colossus[1]

Not like the brazen giant of Greek fame,
With conquering limbs astride from land to land;
Here at our sea-washed, sunset gates shall stand
A mighty woman with a torch, whose flame
5 Is the imprisoned lightning, and her name
Mother of Exiles. From her beacon-hand
Glows world-wide welcome; her mild eyes command
The air-bridged harbor that twin cities frame.
"Keep, ancient lands, your storied pomp!"[2] cries she 10 With silent lips. "Give me your tired, your poor,
Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free,
The wretched refuse of your teeming shore.

2. The Latin epigraph, Hopkins's original title, is from the Vulgate version of Jeremiah 12.1; the first three lines of the poem translate it. The "& c" indicates that the whole of Jeremiah 12 is relevant to the poem, which, while it does not continue to translate it directly, parallels it frequently.
3. An herb of the carrot or parsley family, with curled leaves.
1. Written as part of a fundraising campaign for the Statue of Liberty, in New York harbor. The poem was recited in 1866 at the statue's dedication; later its final lines were engraved on the pedestal. Lazarus contrasts the Statue of Liberty with the Colossus of Rhodes, one of the Seven Wonders of the World, a statue to the sun god, Helios, that stood in the harbor at Rhodes, Greece. Contrary to legend that dates from the Middle Ages, the statue could not have straddled the harbor entrance (line 2).
2. The splendors of your history. Twin cities: New York City and Jersey City, New Jersey.

Send these, the homeless, tempest-tost° to me, -tossed
I lift my lamp beside the golden door!"

1883 1888

A. E. HOUSMAN
1859–1936

Loveliest of Trees, the Cherry Now

Loveliest of trees, the cherry now
Is hung with bloom along the bough,
And stands about the woodland ride
Wearing white for Eastertide.

5 Now, of my threescore years and ten,
Twenty will not come again,
And take from seventy springs a score,
It only leaves me fifty more.

And since to look at things in bloom
10 Fifty springs are little room,
About the woodlands I will go
To see the cherry hung with snow.

1896

Reveille

Wake: the silver dusk returning
Up the beach of darkness brims,
And the ship of sunrise burning
Strands upon the eastern rims.

5 Wake: the vaulted shadow shatters,
Trampled to the floor it spanned,
And the tent of night in tatters
Straws° the sky-pavilioned land. strews

Up, lad, up, 'tis late for lying:
10 Hear the drums of morning play;
Hark, the empty highways crying
"Who'll beyond the hills away?"

Towns and countries woo together,
Forelands beacon, belfries call;

15 Never lad that trod on leather
Lived to feast his heart with all.

Up, lad; thews° that lie and cumber limbs
Sunlit pallets never thrive;
Morns abed and daylight slumber
20 Were not meant for man alive.

Clay lies still, but blood's a rover;
Breath's a ware that will not keep.
Up, lad: when the journey's over
There'll be time enough to sleep.

1896

When I Watch the Living Meet

When I watch the living meet,
And the moving pageant file
Warm and breathing through the street
Where I lodge a little while,

5 If the heats of hate and lust
In the house of flesh are strong,
Let me mind the house of dust
Where my sojourn shall be long.

In the nation that is not 10 Nothing stands that stood before;
There revenges are forgot,
And the hater hates no more;

Lovers lying two and two
Ask not whom they sleep beside,
15 And the bridegroom all night through
Never turns him to the bride.

1896

To an Athlete Dying Young

The time you won your town the race
We chaired you through the market-place;
Man and boy stood cheering by,
And home we brought you shoulder-high.

5 Today, the road all runners come,
Shoulder-high we bring you home,

And set you at your threshold down,
Townsman of a stiller town.

Smart lad, to slip betimes away
10 From fields where glory does not stay
And early though the laurel grows
It withers quicker than the rose.

Eyes the shady night has shut
Cannot see the record cut,° broken
15 And silence sounds no worse than cheers
After earth has stopped the ears:

Now you will not swell the rout° crowd
Of lads that wore their honours out,
Runners whom renown outran
20 And the name died before the man.

So set, before its echoes fade,
The fleet foot on the sill of shade,
And hold to the low lintel up
The still-defended challenge-cup.

25 And round that early-laurelled[1] head
Will flock to gaze the strengthless dead,
And find unwithered on its curls
The garland briefer than a girl's.

1896

Is My Team Ploughing

"Is my team ploughing,
  That I was used to drive
And hear the harness jingle
  When I was man alive?"

5 Ay, the horses trample,
  The harness jingles now;
No change though you lie under
  The land you used to plough.

"Is football playing
10   Along the river shore,
With lads to chase the leather,
  Now I stand up no more?"

Ay, the ball is flying,
  The lads play heart and soul;

1. In ancient Greece and Rome, victorious athletes wore laurel wreaths as crowns.

15 The goal stands up, the keeper
 Stands up to keep the goal.

"Is my girl happy,
 That I thought hard to leave,
And has she tired of weeping
20 As she lies down at eve?"

Ay, she lies down lightly,
 She lies not down to weep:
Your girl is well contented.
 Be still, my lad, and sleep.

25 "Is my friend hearty,
 Now I am thin and pine,
And has he found to sleep in
 A better bed than mine?"

Yes, lad, I lie easy,
30 I lie as lads would choose;
I cheer a dead man's sweetheart,
 Never ask me whose.

1896

On Wenlock Edge[2] the Wood's in Trouble

On Wenlock Edge the wood's in trouble;
 His forest fleece the Wrekin[3] heaves;
The gale, it plies the saplings double,
 And thick on Severn[4] snow the leaves.

5 'Twould blow like this through holt and hanger[5]
 When Uricon[6] the city stood:
'Tis the old wind in the old anger,
 But then it threshed another wood.

Then, 'twas before my time, the Roman
10 At yonder heaving hill would stare:
The blood that warms an English yeoman,
 The thoughts that hurt him, they were there.

There, like the wind through woods in riot,
 Through him the gale of life blew high;
15 The tree of man was never quiet:
 Then 'twas the Roman, now 'tis I.

2. A range of hills in Shropshire.
3. A prominent, isolated hill in Shropshire.
4. The Severn River, which flows past the Wrekin and into Wales.
5. A holt is a wood or wooded hill; a hanger is a steep wooded slope.
6. The Roman town Uriconium, on the site of the modern town of Wroxeter, Shropshire.

The gale, it plies the saplings double,
  It blows so hard, 'twill soon be gone:
To-day the Roman and his trouble
20 Are ashes under Uricon.

1896

From Far, from Eve and Morning

From far, from eve and morning
  And yon twelve-winded sky,[7]
The stuff of life to knit me
  Blew hither: here am I.

5 Now—for a breath I tarry
  Nor yet disperse apart—
Take my hand quick and tell me,
  What have you in your heart.

Speak now, and I will answer;
10 How shall I help you, say;
Ere to the wind's twelve quarters
  I take my endless way.

1896

With Rue My Heart Is Laden

With rue my heart is laden
  For golden friends I had,
For many a rose-lipt maiden
  And many a lightfoot lad.

5 By brooks too broad for leaping
  The lightfoot boys are laid;
The rose-lipt girls are sleeping
  In fields where roses fade.

1896

"Terence,[8] This Is Stupid Stuff . . ."

"Terence, this is stupid stuff:
You eat your victuals fast enough;

7. I.e., winds blowing from the twelve compass points.
8. Housman had at first planned to call the volume in which this poem appeared The Poems of Terence Hearsay.

There can't be much amiss, 'tis clear,
To see the rate you drink your beer.
5 But oh, good Lord, the verse you make,
It gives a chap the belly-ache.
The cow, the old cow, she is dead;
It sleeps well, the hornèd head:
We poor lads, 'tis our turn now
10 To hear such tunes as killed the cow.
Pretty friendship 'tis to rhyme
Your friends to death before their time
Moping melancholy mad:
Come, pipe a tune to dance to, lad."

15 Why, if 'tis dancing you would be,
There's brisker pipes than poetry.
Say, for what were hop-yards meant,
Or why was Burton built on Trent?[9]
Oh many a peer of England brews
20 Livelier liquor than the Muse,[1]
And malt does more than Milton can
To justify God's ways to man.[2]
Ale, man, ale's the stuff to drink
For fellows whom it hurts to think:
25 Look into the pewter pot
To see the world as the world's not.
And faith, 'tis pleasant till 'tis past:
The mischief is that 'twill not last.
Oh I have been to Ludlow[3] fair
30 And left my necktie God knows where,
And carried halfway home, or near,
Pints and quarts of Ludlow beer:
Then the world seemed none so bad,
And I myself a sterling lad;
35 And down in lovely muck I've lain,
Happy till I woke again.
Then I saw the morning sky:
Heigho, the tale was all a lie;
The world, it was the old world yet,
40 I was I, my things were wet,
And nothing now remained to do
But begin the game anew.

Therefore, since the world has still
Much good, but much less good than ill,
45 And while the sun and moon endure
Luck's a chance, but trouble's sure,
I'd face it as a wise man would,

9. The principal industry of Burton-on-Trent, a town in Staffordshire, is the brewing of ale. Some of the town's nineteenth-century brewery magnates were raised to the peerage.
1. In Greek mythology, Calliope, one of the nine sister goddesses known as the Muses, presided over (inspired) epic poetry.
2. An echo of Milton's epic, Paradise Lost (1.25–26): "I may assert Eternal Providence, / And justify the ways of God to men."
3. A market town in Shropshire.

And train for ill and not for good.
'Tis true, the stuff I bring for sale
50 Is not so brisk a brew as ale:
Out of a stem that scored° the hand cut
I wrung it in a weary land.
But take it: if the smack is sour,
The better for the embittered hour;
55 It should do good to heart and head
When your soul is in my soul's stead;
And I will friend you, if I may,
In the dark and cloudy day.

There was a king reigned in the East:
60 There, when kings will sit to feast,
They get their fill before they think
With poisoned meat and poisoned drink.
He gathered all that springs to birth
From the many-venomed earth;
65 First a little, thence to more,
He sampled all her killing store;
And easy, smiling, seasoned sound,
Sate the king when healths went round.
They put arsenic in his meat
70 And stared aghast to watch him eat;
They poured strychnine in his cup
And shook to see him drink it up:
They shook, they stared as white's their shirt:
Them it was their poison hurt.
75 —I tell the tale that I heard told.
Mithridates, he died old.[4]

1896

Astronomy

The Wain[5] upon the northern steep
Descends and lifts away.
Oh I will sit me down and weep
For bones in Africa.[6]

5 For pay and medals, name and rank,
Things that he has not found,
He hove the Cross[7] to heaven and sank
The pole-star underground.

And now he does not even see
10 Signs of the nadir° roll lowest point

4. Mithridates VI, king of Pontus (in Asia Minor) in the first century B.C.E., made himself immune to certain poisons by taking small, gradual doses.
5. The constellation Ursa Minor.
6. Housman's brother Herbert died fighting in the Boer War in 1901.
7. The Southern Cross, a constellation visible from the southern hemisphere.

At night over the ground where he
  Is buried with the pole.

1922

Epitaph on an Army of Mercenaries[8]

These, in the day when heaven was falling,
  The hour when earth's foundations fled,
Followed their mercenary calling
  And took their wages and are dead.

5 Their shoulders held the sky suspended;
  They stood, and earth's foundations stay;
What God abandoned, these defended,
  And saved the sum of things for pay.

1915 1922

Crossing Alone the Nighted Ferry

Crossing alone the nighted ferry
  With the one coin for fee,[9]
Whom, on the wharf of Lethe waiting,
  Count you to find? Not me.

5 The brisk fond lackey to fetch and carry,
  The true, sick-hearted slave,
Expect him not in the just city
  And free land of the grave.

1936

Here Dead Lie We Because We Did Not Choose

Here dead lie we because we did not choose
  To live and shame the land from which we sprung.
Life, to be sure, is nothing much to lose;
  But young men think it is, and we were young.

1936

8. This poem honors the professional soldiers of the British regular army who fought in the First Battle of Ypres (1914), toward the beginning of World War I. For the Scottish poet Hugh MacDiarmid's reply, "Another Epitaph on an Army of Mercenaries," see p. 1379.

9. In Greek mythology, the souls of the dead paid Charon an obolus (a coin) to ferry them over the river Styx to Hades. Souls about to be reincarnated forgot their previous existences by drinking water from Lethe (line 3), another river in the underworld.

RUDYARD KIPLING
1865–1936

Tommy[1]

I went into a public-'ouse° to get a pint o'beer, bar
The publican° 'e up an' sez, "We serve no red-coats here." barkeep
The girls be'ind the bar they laughed an' giggled fit to die,
I outs into the street again an' to myself sez I:
5 O it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' "Tommy, go away";
But it's "Thank you, Mister Atkins," when the band begins to play—
The band begins to play, my boys, the band begins to play,
O it's "Thank you, Mister Atkins," when the band begins to play.

I went into a theatre as sober as could be,
10 They gave a drunk civilian room, but 'adn't none for me;
They sent me to the gallery or round the music-'alls,[2]
But when it comes to fightin', Lord! they'll shove me in the stalls!
For it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' "Tommy, wait outside";
But its "Special train for Atkins" when the trooper's on the tide—
15 The troopship's on the tide, my boys, the troopship's on the tide,
O it's "Special train for Atkins" when the trooper's on the tide.

Yes, makin' mock o' uniforms that guard you while you sleep
Is cheaper than them uniforms, an' they're starvation cheap;
An' hustlin' drunken soldiers when they're goin' large a bit
20 Is five times better business than paradin' in full kit.° equipment
Then it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' "Tommy, 'ow's yer soul?"
But it's "Thin red line of 'eroes"[3] when the drums begin to roll—
The drums begin to roll, my boys, the drums begin to roll,
O it's "Thin red line of 'eroes" when the drums begin to roll.

25 We aren't no thin red 'eroes, nor we aren't no blackguards° too, criminals
But single men in barricks, most remarkable like you;
An' if sometimes our conduck isn't all your fancy paints,
Why, single men in barricks don't grow into plaster saints;
While it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' "Tommy, fall be'ind," 30 But it's "Please to walk in front, sir," when there's trouble in the wind—
There's trouble in the wind, my boys, there's trouble in the wind,
O it's "Please to walk in front, sir," when there's trouble in the wind.

You talk o' better food for us, an' schools, an' fires, an' all:
We'll wait for extry rations if you treat us rational.
35 Don't mess about the cook-room slops, but prove it to our face
The Widow's Uniform[4] is not the soldier-man's disgrace.

1. The typical soldier (British usage, derived from "Thomas Atkins," name used as a model in official army forms).
2. Cheaper seats in a theater, in the balcony; the best seats, in the orchestra, are the stalls (line 12).
3. W. H. Russell, a London Times correspondent, had used the phrase "thin red line tipped with steel" to describe the 93rd Highlanders infantry regiment as they stood to meet the advancing Russian cavalry at Balaclava (1854), in the Crimean War.
4. I.e., the queen's uniform. In his poems and sto-

For it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' "Chuck him out, the brute!"
But it's "Saviour of 'is country" when the guns begin to shoot;
An' it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' anything you please;
40 An' Tommy ain't a bloomin' fool—you bet that Tommy sees!

1890

Recessional[5]

1897[6]

God of our fathers, known of old,
Lord of our far-flung battle-line,
Beneath whose awful Hand we hold
Dominion over palm and pine—
5 Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

The tumult and the shouting dies;
The Captains and the Kings depart:
Still stands Thine ancient sacrifice,
10 An humble and a contrite heart.[7]
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

Far-called, our navies melt away;
On dune and headland sinks the fire:[8]
15 Lo, all our pomp of yesterday
Is one with Nineveh and Tyre![9]
Judge of the Nations, spare us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

If, drunk with sight of power, we loose
20 Wild tongues that have not Thee in awe,
Such boastings as the Gentiles use,
Or lesser breeds without the Law—[1]
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!

25 For heathen heart that puts her trust
In reeking tube and iron shard,

---

ries, Kipling occasionally referred to Queen Victoria as "The Widow at Windsor."
5. A piece of music or a hymn to be played or sung at the close of a religious service.
6. The year of Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee, celebrating the sixtieth year of her reign, the occasion serving also to celebrate the great extent, power, and prosperity of the British Empire.
7. Cf. Psalms 51.17.
8. On the night of the anniversary of Victoria's accession to the throne, bonfires were lit on high points throughout Great Britain.
9. Nineveh, ancient capital of Assyria, and Tyre, capital of Phoenicia, were once great cities, but dwindled to ruins and a small town, respectively.
1. Cf. Romans 2.14.

All valiant dust that builds on dust,
And guarding, calls not Thee to guard,
For frantic boast and foolish word—
30 Thy mercy on Thy People, Lord!

1897 1899

Epitaphs of the War

1914–18

"Equality of Sacrifice"

A. "I was a Have." B. "I was a 'have-not.' "
(Together.) "What hast thou given which I gave not?"

A Servant

We were together since the war began.
He was my servant—and the better man.

A Son

My son was killed while laughing at some jest. I would I knew What it was, and it might serve me in a time when jests are few.

An Only Son

I have slain none except my mother. She (Blessing her slayer) died of grief for me.

Ex-clerk

Pity not! The army gave Freedom to a timid slave:
In which freedom did he find
Strength of body, will, and mind:
5 By which strength he came to prove
Mirth, companionship, and love:
For which love to death he went:
In which death he lies content.

The Wonder

Body and spirit I surrendered whole
To harsh instructors—and received a soul . . .
If mortal man could change me through and through
From all I was—what may the God not do?

Hindu Sepoy[2] in France

This man in his own country prayed we know not to what powers.
We pray them to reward him for his bravery in ours.

The Coward

I could not look on death, which being known,
Men led me to him, blindfold and alone.

Shock

My name, my speech, my self I had forgot.
My wife and children came—I knew them not.
I died. My mother followed. At her call
And on her bosom I remembered all.

A Grave Near Cairo

Gods of the Nile, should this stout fellow here
Get out—get out! He knows not shame nor fear.

Pelicans in the Wilderness

(A GRAVE NEAR HALFA)[3]

The blown sand heaps on me, that none may learn
  Where I am laid for whom my children grieve. . . .
O wings that beat at dawning, ye return
  Out of the desert to your young at eve!

Two Canadian Memorials

1

We giving all gained all.
  Neither lament us nor praise.
Only in all things recall,
  It is fear, not death that slays.

2

From little towns in a far land we came,
  To save our honour and a world aflame.
By little towns in a far land we sleep;
  And trust that world we won for you to keep.

The Favour

Death favoured me from the first, well knowing I could not endure
  To wait on him day by day. He quitted my betters and came

2. Native of India employed as soldier under European (especially British) discipline.

3. In the Sudan.

Whistling over the fields, and, when he had made all sure,
"Thy line is at end," he said, "but at least I have saved its name."

The Beginner

On the first hour of my first day
In the front trench I fell.
(Children in boxes at a play Stand up to watch it well.)

R.A.F.[4] (Aged Eighteen)

Laughing through clouds, his milk-teeth still unshed,
Cities and men he smote from overhead.
His deaths delivered, he returned to play
Childlike, with childish things now put away.

The Refined Man

I was of delicate mind. I stepped aside for my needs, Disdaining the common office. I was seen from afar and killed. . . .
How is this matter for mirth? Let each man be judged by his deeds.
I have paid my price to live with myself on the terms that I willed.

Native Water-Carrier (M.E.F.)

Prometheus[5] brought down fire to men.
This brought up water.
The Gods are jealous—now, as then,
Giving no quarter.

Bombed in London

On land and sea I strove with anxious care
To escape conscription. It was in the air!

The Sleepy Sentinel

Faithless the watch that I kept: now I have none to keep.
I was slain because I slept: now I am slain I sleep.
Let no man reproach me again, whatever watch is unkept—
I sleep because I am slain. They slew me because I slept.

Batteries Out of Ammunition

If any mourn us in the workshop, say
We died because the shift kept holiday.

4. Royal Air Force.
5. In Greek mythology, a Titan who gave fire to humanity and was punished by the gods. M.E.F.: Mediterranean Expeditionary Force.

Common Form

If any question why we died,
Tell them, because our fathers lied.

A Dead Statesman

I could not dig: I dared not rob:
Therefore I lied to please the mob.
Now all my lies are proved untrue
And I must face the men I slew.
5 What tale shall serve me here among
Mine angry and defrauded young?

The Rebel

If I had clamoured at Thy gate
For gift of life on earth,
And, thrusting through the souls that wait,
Flung headlong into birth—
5 Even then, even then, for gin and snare
About my pathway spread,
Lord, I had mocked Thy thoughtful care
Before I joined the dead!
But now? . . . I was beneath Thy hand
10 Ere yet the planets came.
And now—though planets pass, I stand
The witness to Thy shame!

The Obedient

Daily, though no ears attended,
Did my prayers arise.
Daily, though no fire descended,
Did I sacrifice.
5 Though my darkness did not lift,
Though I faced no lighter odds,
Though the Gods bestowed no gift,
Nonetheless,
Nonetheless, I served the Gods!

A Drifter Off Tarentum[6]

He from the wind-bitten North with ship and companions descended,
Searching for eggs of death spawned by invisible hulls.
Many he found and drew forth. Of a sudden the fishery ended
In flame and a clamorous breath known to the eye-pecking gulls.

6. Roman name for Taranto, just under the heel of the Italian peninsula.

Destroyers in Collision

For fog and fate no charm is found
  To lighten or amend.
I, hurrying to my bride, was drowned—
  Cut down by my best friend.

Convoy Escort

I was a shepherd to fools
  Causelessly bold or afraid.
They would not abide by my rules.
  Yet they escaped. For I stayed.

Unknown Female Corpse

Headless, lacking foot and hand,
Horrible I come to land.
I beseech all women's sons
Know I was a mother once.

Raped and Revenged

One used and butchered me: another spied
Me broken—for which thing an hundred died.
So it was learned among the heathen hosts
How much a freeborn woman's favour costs.

Salonikan[7] Grave

I have watched a thousand days
Push out and crawl into night
Slowly as tortoises.
Now I, too, follow these.
5 It is fever, and not the fight—
Time, not battle,—that slays.

The Bridegroom

Call me not false, beloved,
  If, from thy scarce-known breast
So little time removed,
  In other arms I rest.

5 For this more ancient bride,
  Whom coldly I embrace,
Was constant at my side
  Before I saw thy face.

7. Of Thessalonica (or Salonika), the second largest city in Greece, destroyed by fire in 1917.

Our marriage, often set—
10 By miracle delayed—
At last is consummate,
And cannot be unmade.

Live, then, whom life shall cure,
15 Almost, of memory,
And leave us to endure
Its immortality.

V.A.D.[8] (Mediterranean)

Ah, would swift ships had never been, for then we ne'er had found,
These harsh Aegean[9] rocks between, this little virgin drowned,
Whom neither spouse nor child shall mourn, but men she nursed through pain
And—certain keels for whose return the heathen look in vain.

Actors

ON A MEMORIAL TABLET IN HOLY TRINITY CHURCH, STRATFORD-ON-AVON[1]

We counterfeited once for your disport
Men's joy and sorrow: but our day has passed.
We pray you pardon all where we fell short—
Seeing we were your servants to this last.

Journalists

ON A PANEL IN THE HALL OF THE INSTITUTE OF JOURNALISTS

We have served our day.

1919, 1940

WILLIAM BUTLER YEATS*
1865–1939

The Stolen Child

Where dips the rocky highland
Of Sleuth Wood[1] in the lake,
There lies a leafy island
Where flapping herons wake

8. Voluntary Aid Detachment.
9. Aegean Sea, part of the Mediterranean Sea.
1. Town in central England where Shakespeare was born, lived part of his life, and died.
*Yeats's poems are arranged here in the order in which they appear in The Collected Poems of William Butler Yeats (1940).
1. Place-names throughout the poem refer to the area near Sligo, in the west of Ireland: Rosses Point on Sligo Bay, and Glen-Car, a small lake near Sligo.

5 The drowsy water-rats;
There we've hid our faery vats,
Full of berries
And of reddest stolen cherries.
Come away, O human child!
10 To the waters and the wild
With a faery, hand in hand,
For the world's more full of weeping than you can understand.

Where the wave of moonlight glosses
The dim grey sands with light,
15 Far off by furthest Rosses
We foot it all the night,
Weaving olden dances,
Mingling hands and mingling glances
Till the moon has taken flight;
20 To and fro we leap
And chase the frothy bubbles,
While the world is full of troubles
And is anxious in its sleep.
Come away, O human child!
25 To the waters and the wild
With a faery, hand in hand,
For the world's more full of weeping than you can understand.

Where the wandering water gushes
From the hills above Glen-Car,
30 In pools among the rushes
That scarce could bathe a star,
We seek for slumbering trout
And whispering in their ears
Give them unquiet dreams;
35 Leaning softly out
From ferns that drop their tears
Over the young streams.
Come away, O human child!
To the waters and the wild
40 With a faery, hand in hand,
For the world's more full of weeping than you can understand.

Away with us he's going,
The solemn-eyed:
He'll hear no more the lowing
45 Of the calves on the warm hillside
Or the kettle on the hob
Sing peace into his breast,
Or see the brown mice bob
Round and round the oatmeal-chest.
50 For he comes, the human child!
To the waters and the wild
With a faery, hand in hand,
From a world more full of weeping than he can understand.

1889

The Lake Isle of Innisfree[2]

I will arise and go now, and go to Innisfree,
And a small cabin build there, of clay and wattles[3] made:
Nine bean-rows will I have there, a hive for the honey-bee,
And live alone in the bee-loud glade.

5 And I shall have some peace there, for peace comes dropping slow,
Dropping from the veils of the morning to where the cricket sings;
There midnight's all a glimmer, and noon a purple glow,
And evening full of the linnet's° wings. a songbird's

I will arise and go now, for always night and day
10 I hear lake water lapping with low sounds by the shore;
While I stand on the roadway, or on the pavements grey,
I hear it in the deep heart's core.

1890 1892

When You Are Old[4]

When you are old and grey and full of sleep,
And nodding by the fire, take down this book,
And slowly read, and dream of the soft look
Your eyes had once, and of their shadows deep;

5 How many loved your moments of glad grace,
And loved your beauty with love false or true,
But one man loved the pilgrim soul in you,
And loved the sorrows of your changing face;

And bending down beside the glowing bars,
10 Murmur, a little sadly, how Love fled
And paced upon the mountains overhead
And hid his face amid a crowd of stars.

1891 1893

Adam's Curse[5]

We sat together at one summer's end,
That beautiful mild woman, your close friend,[6]
And you and I, and talked of poetry.

2. Island in Lough Gill, County Sligo.
3. Rods interwoven with twigs or branches to form a framework for walls or roof.
4. This poem derives from a sonnet by the French poet Pierre de Ronsard (1524–1585) that begins "Quand vous serez bien vieille, au soir à la chandelle" ("When you are very old, in the evening, by candlelight"), but is a free adaptation rather than a translation.
5. After the Fall, God cursed Adam to work the ground for his food (Genesis 3.17–19).
6. The two women who figure in the poem are the Irish nationalist Maud Gonne (whom Yeats loved unrequitedly) and, rather than a friend, her

I said, "A line will take us hours maybe;
5 Yet if it does not seem a moment's thought,
Our stitching and unstitching has been naught.
Better go down upon your marrow-bones
And scrub a kitchen pavement, or break stones
Like an old pauper, in all kinds of weather;
10 For to articulate sweet sounds together
Is to work harder than all these, and yet
Be thought an idler by the noisy set
Of bankers, schoolmasters, and clergymen
The martyrs call the world."

And thereupon
15 That beautiful mild woman for whose sake
There's many a one shall find out all heartache
On finding that her voice is sweet and low Replied, "To be born woman is to know—
Although they do not talk of it at school—
20 That we must labour to be beautiful."

I said, "It's certain there is no fine thing
Since Adam's fall but needs much labouring.
There have been lovers who thought love should be
So much compounded of high courtesy
25 That they would sigh and quote with learned looks Precedents out of beautiful old books;
Yet now it seems an idle trade enough."

We sat grown quiet at the name of love;
We saw the last embers of daylight die,
30 And in the trembling blue-green of the sky
A moon, worn as if it had been a shell
Washed by time's waters as they rose and fell
About the stars and broke in days and years.

I had a thought for no one's but your ears:
35 That you were beautiful, and that I strove
To love you in the old high way of love;
That it had all seemed happy, and yet we'd grown
As weary-hearted as that hollow moon.

November 1902 1904

No Second Troy[7]

Why should I blame her[8] that she filled my days
With misery, or that she would of late
Have taught to ignorant men most violent ways,

sister, Kathleen Pilcher.
7. According to legend, Helen of Troy (see note 8, p. 1197) caused the Trojan War and hence the destruction of the first city of Troy, on the east side of the Aegean entrance to the Dardanelles.
8. Maud Gonne (see note 6 above).

Or hurled the little streets upon the great,
5 Had they but courage equal to desire?
What could have made her peaceful with a mind
That nobleness made simple as a fire,
With beauty like a tightened bow, a kind
That is not natural in an age like this,
10 Being high and solitary and most stern?
Why, what could she have done, being what she is?
Was there another Troy for her to burn?

December 1908 1910

The Wild Swans at Coole[9]

The trees are in their autumn beauty,
The woodland paths are dry,
Under the October twilight the water
Mirrors a still sky;
5 Upon the brimming water among the stones
Are nine-and-fifty swans.

The nineteenth autumn has come upon me
Since I first made my count;[1]
I saw, before I had well finished,
10 All suddenly mount
And scatter wheeling in great broken rings
Upon their clamorous wings.

I have looked upon those brilliant creatures,
And now my heart is sore.
15 All's changed since I, hearing at twilight,
The first time on this shore,
The bell-beat of their wings above my head,
Trod with a lighter tread.

Unwearied still, lover by lover,
20 They paddle in the cold
Companionable streams or climb the air;
Their hearts have not grown old;
Passion or conquest, wander where they will,
Attend upon them still.

25 But now they drift on the still water,
Mysterious, beautiful;
Among what rushes will they build,
By what lake's edge or pool

9. Coole Park, the estate in western Ireland of Lady Augusta Gregory, Yeats's patroness and friend.

1. Yeats had first visited Coole Park nineteen years earlier.

Delight men's eyes when I awake some day
30 To find they have flown away?

October 1916 1917

An Irish Airman Foresees His Death[2]

I know that I shall meet my fate
Somewhere among the clouds above;
Those that I fight I do not hate,
Those that I guard I do not love;
5 My country is Kiltartan Cross,[3]
My countrymen Kiltartan's poor,
No likely end could bring them loss
Or leave them happier than before.
Nor law, nor duty bade me fight,
10 Nor public men, nor cheering crowds,
A lonely impulse of delight
Drove to this tumult in the clouds;
I balanced all, brought all to mind,
The years to come seemed waste of breath,
15 A waste of breath the years behind
In balance with this life, this death.

1919

The Scholars

Bald heads forgetful of their sins,
Old, learned, respectable bald heads
Edit and annotate the lines
That young men, tossing on their beds,
5 Rhymed out in love's despair
To flatter beauty's ignorant ear.

All shuffle there; all cough in ink;
All wear the carpet with their shoes;
All think what other people think;
10 All know the man their neighbour knows.
Lord, what would they say
Did their Catullus[4] walk that way?

1917

2. The airman, killed in action in Italy in January 1918, is Major Robert Gregory, son of Yeats's friend and patron Lady Augusta Gregory.
3. A village near the Gregory estate, Coole Park, in County Galway, western Ireland.
4. Gaius Valerius Catullus (ca. 84–ca. 54 B.C.E.), Roman poet famous for his erotic verse.

Easter 1916[5]

I have met them at close of day
Coming with vivid faces
From counter or desk among grey
Eighteenth-century houses.
5 I have passed with a nod of the head
Or polite meaningless words,
Or have lingered awhile and said
Polite meaningless words,
And thought before I had done
10 Of a mocking tale or a gibe
To please a companion
Around the fire at the club,
Being certain that they and I
But lived where motley[6] is worn:
15 All changed, changed utterly:
A terrible beauty is born.

That woman's days were spent
In ignorant good will,
Her nights in argument
20 Until her voice grew shrill.
What voice more sweet than hers
When, young and beautiful,
She rode to harriers?[7]
This man had kept a school
25 And rode our wingéd horse;[8]
This other his helper and friend
Was coming into his force;
He might have won fame in the end,
So sensitive his nature seemed,
30 So daring and sweet his thought.
This other man I had dreamed
A drunken, vainglorious lout.[9]
He had done most bitter wrong
To some who are near my heart,
35 Yet I number him in the song;
He, too, has resigned his part

5. This title, echoing Yeats's "September 1913," suggests the poem is a palinode (one in which the author retracts something said in a previous poem). On Easter Monday of 1916, Irish nationalists launched a heroic but unsuccessful revolt against the British government; the week of street fighting that followed is known as the Easter Rising. As a result, a number of the nationalists were executed: Britain, at war with Germany, was in no mood to tolerate Irish agitation for independence—which was supported, for obvious reasons, by Germany. Yeats knew the chief rebels personally.
6. Jester's multicolored costume.
7. Countess Constance Georgina Markiewicz, née Gore-Booth, an Irish aristocrat and nationalist.
8. Pádraic Pearse, a schoolmaster and prolific writer of poems, plays, stories, and essays on Irish politics and Gaelic literature. The mythological winged horse, Pegasus, is here used as a symbol of poetic inspiration. "This other" (line 26) was Thomas MacDonough, a schoolteacher.
9. Major John MacBride, who had married Maud Gonne (the Irish nationalist with whom Yeats had for years been hopelessly in love) in 1903 and separated from her in 1905.

In the casual comedy;
He, too, has been changed in his turn,
Transformed utterly:
40 A terrible beauty is born.

Hearts with one purpose alone
Through summer and winter seem
Enchanted to a stone
To trouble the living stream.
45 The horse that comes from the road,
The rider, the birds that range
From cloud to tumbling cloud,
Minute by minute they change;
A shadow of cloud on the stream
50 Changes minute by minute;
A horse-hoof slides on the brim,
And a horse plashes within it;
The long-legged moor-hens dive,
And hens to moor-cocks call;
55 Minute by minute they live:
The stone's in the midst of all.

Too long a sacrifice
Can make a stone of the heart.
O when may it suffice?
60 That is Heaven's part, our part
To murmur name upon name,
As a mother names her child
When sleep at last has come
On limbs that had run wild.
65 What is it but nightfall?
No, no, not night but death;
Was it needless death after all?
For England may keep faith
For all that is done and said.
70 We know their dream; enough
To know they dreamed and are dead;
And what if excess of love
Bewildered them till they died?
I write it out in a verse—
75 MacDonagh and MacBride
And Connolly and Pearse
Now and in time to be,
Wherever green is worn,
Are changed, changed utterly.
80 A terrible beauty is born.

September 25, 1916 1916

The Second Coming

Turning and turning in the widening gyre
The falcon cannot hear the falconer;[1]
Things fall apart; the centre cannot hold;
Mere anarchy is loosed upon the world,
5 The blood-dimmed tide is loosed, and everywhere
The ceremony of innocence is drowned;
The best lack all conviction, while the worst
Are full of passionate intensity.

Surely some revelation is at hand;
10 Surely the Second Coming is at hand:
The Second Coming! Hardly are those words out
When a vast image out of Spiritus Mundi[2]
Troubles my sight: somewhere in sands of the desert
A shape with lion body and the head of a man,[3]
15 A gaze blank and pitiless as the sun,
Is moving its slow thighs, while all about it
Reel shadows of the indignant desert birds.
The darkness drops again; but now I know
That twenty centuries of stony sleep
20 Were vexed to nightmare by a rocking cradle,[4]
And what rough beast, its hour come round at last,
Slouches towards Bethlehem[5] to be born?

January 1919 1921

A Prayer for My Daughter[6]

Once more the storm is howling, and half hid
Under this cradle-hood and coverlid
My child sleeps on. There is no obstacle
But Gregory's wood[7] and one bare hill
5 Whereby the haystack- and roof-levelling wind,
Bred on the Atlantic, can be stayed;

1. The gyre (Yeats's term, pronounced with a hard g) is a conical shape based on the geometrical figure of interpenetrating cones; here, it is traced in the falcon's sweep upward and out in widening circles from the falconer. Yeats used this "fundamental symbol" to diagram his cyclical view of history, as in "The Great Wheel" (A Vision, 1937). He saw the cycle of Greco-Roman civilization as having been brought to a close by the advent of Christianity, and in the violence of his own times—"the growing murderousness of the world"—he saw signs that the two-thousand-year cycle of Christianity was about to end and be replaced by a system antithetical to it.

2. Or Anima Mundi, the Great Memory (Latin); according to Yeats, "a great memory passing on from generation to generation. . . . Our daily thought was certainly but the line of foam at the shallow edge of a vast luminous sea."

3. In the introduction to his play The Resurrection (in Wheels and Butterflies, 1935), Yeats describes the way in which the sphinx image had first manifested itself to him: "Our civilisation was about to reverse itself, or some new civilisation about to be born from all that our age had rejected . . . ; because we had worshipped a single god it would worship many. . . . I associated [the 'brazen winged beast'] with laughing, ecstatic destruction."

4. That of the infant Christ.

5. Christ's birthplace.

6. Yeats's daughter, Anne Butler Yeats, was born on February 26, 1919.

7. Part of the Gregory estate—about which, and about Yeats's tower (line 10), which he called Thoor Ballylee, see note to the next poem.

And for an hour I have walked and prayed
Because of the great gloom that is in my mind.

I have walked and prayed for this young child an hour
10 And heard the sea-wind scream upon the tower,
And under the arches of the bridge, and scream
In the elms above the flooded stream;
Imagining in excited reverie
That the future years had come,
15 Dancing to a frenzied drum,
Out of the murderous innocence of the sea.

May she be granted beauty and yet not
Beauty to make a stranger's eye distraught,
Or hers before a looking glass, for such,
20 Being made beautiful overmuch,
Consider beauty a sufficient end,
Lose natural kindness and maybe
The heart-revealing intimacy
That chooses right, and never find a friend.

25 Helen[8] being chosen found life flat and dull
And later had much trouble from a fool,
While that great Queen,[9] that rose out of the spray,
Being fatherless could have her way
Yet chose a bandy-leggèd smith for man.
30 It's certain that fine women eat
A crazy salad with their meat,
Whereby the Horn of Plenty is undone.

In courtesy I'd have her chiefly learned;
Hearts are not had as a gift but hearts are earned 35 By those that are not entirely beautiful;
Yet many, that have played the fool
For beauty's very self, has charm made wise,
And many a poor man that has roved,
Loved and thought himself beloved,
40 From a glad kindness cannot take his eyes.

May she become a flourishing hidden tree
That all her thoughts may like the linnet° be, a songbird
And have no business but dispensing round
Their magnanimities of sound,
45 Nor but in merriment begin a chase,
Nor but in merriment a quarrel.
Oh, may she live like some green laurel
Rooted in one dear perpetual place.

8. Helen of Troy, whose beauty was legendary. The daughter of Zeus (the supreme god) and Leda (a mortal), she married Menelaus, brother of the Greek leader, Agamemnon. She was abducted by Paris, son of the king of Troy; the Greeks undertook an expedition to Troy to bring her back, besieged the city for ten years, and finally took it. Helen was reunited with Menelaus.

9. Aphrodite, Greek goddess of love. "Fatherless" (line 28) in the sense that, in Hesiod's version of the myth, she sprang from sea foam. She was married to Hephaestus, the blacksmith, lame from birth, who forged thunderbolts for the gods.

My mind, because the minds that I have loved,
50 The sort of beauty that I have approved,
Prosper but little, has dried up of late,
Yet knows that to be choked with hate
May well be of all evil chances chief.
If there's no hatred in a mind
55 Assault and battery of the wind
Can never tear the linnet from the leaf.

An intellectual hatred is the worst,
So let her think opinions are accursed.
Have I not seen the loveliest woman born[1]
60 Out of the mouth of Plenty's horn,
Because of her opinionated mind
Barter that horn and every good
By quiet natures understood
For an old bellows full of angry wind?

65 Considering that, all hatred driven hence,
The soul recovers radical innocence
And learns at last that it is self-delighting,
Self-appeasing, self-affrighting,
And that its own sweet will is Heaven's will;
70 She can, though every face should scowl
And every windy quarter howl
Or every bellows burst, be happy still.

And may her bridegroom bring her to a house
Where all's accustomed, ceremonious;
75 For arrogance and hatred are the wares
Peddled in the thoroughfares.
How but in custom and in ceremony
Are innocence and beauty born?
Ceremony's a name for the rich horn,
80 And custom for the spreading laurel tree.

February–June 1919 1921

To Be Carved on a Stone at Thoor Ballylee[2]

I, the poet William Yeats,
With old mill boards and sea-green slates,
And smithy work from the Gort forge,
Restored this tower for my wife George;

1. Doubtless Maud Gonne, whom Yeats had loved hopelessly since meeting her in 1889, and who had married Major John MacBride in 1903; often to Yeats's dismay, she was a very daring activist in the cause of Irish liberation.
2. In June 1917, Yeats had purchased a small plot of land and the buildings on it, including a ruined Norman tower, Thoor (Gaelic for "tower") Ballylee, part of the Gregory estate, Coole Park, in Kiltartan, near the village of Gort, County Galway. After marrying Georgie (changed by Yeats to George) Hyde-Lees in October 1917, he made the tower and two cottages suitable for habitation.

5 And may these characters remain
When all is ruin once again.

1918 1921

Sailing to Byzantium[3]

I

That is no country for old men. The young
In one another's arms, birds in the trees
—Those dying generations—at their song,
The salmon-falls, the mackerel-crowded seas,
5 Fish, flesh, or fowl, commend all summer long
Whatever is begotten, born, and dies.
Caught in that sensual music all neglect
Monuments of unaging intellect.

2

An aged man is but a paltry thing,
10 A tattered coat upon a stick, unless Soul clap its hands and sing, and louder sing
For every tatter in its mortal dress,
Nor is there singing school but studying
Monuments of its own magnificence;
15 And therefore I have sailed the seas and come
To the holy city of Byzantium.

3

O sages standing in God's holy fire
As in the gold mosaic of a wall,
Come from the holy fire, perne in a gyre,[4]
20 And be the singing-masters of my soul.
Consume my heart away; sick with desire

3. Of the ancient city of Byzantium—on the site of modern Istanbul, capital of the Eastern Roman Empire, and the center, especially in the fifth and sixth centuries, of highly developed and characteristic forms of art and architecture—Yeats made a many-faceted symbol, which, since it is a symbol, should not be brought within the limits of too narrowly specific interpretation. Byzantine painting and the mosaics that decorated its churches (Yeats had seen later derivatives of these mosaics in Italy, at Ravenna and elsewhere) were stylized and formal, making no attempt at the full naturalistic rendering of human forms, so that the city and its art can appropriately symbolize a way of life in which art is frankly accepted and proclaimed as artifice. As artifice, as a work of the intellect, this art is not subject to the decay and death that overtake the life of "natural things." But while such an opposition of artifice and nature is central to the poem, there are references to Byzantium in Yeats's prose that suggest the wider range of meaning that the city held for him. In A Vision (1937), particularly, he makes of it an exemplar of a civilization that had achieved "Unity of Being": "I think if I could be given a month of Antiquity and leave to spend it where I chose, I would spend it in Byzantium a little before Justinian [who ruled at Byzantium from 527 to 565] opened St. Sophia and closed the Academy of Plato [i.e., circa 535]. . . . I think that in early Byzantium, maybe never before or since in recorded history, religious, aesthetic and practical life were one, that architect and artificers . . . spoke to the multitude and the few alike. The painter, the mosaic worker, the worker in gold and silver, the illuminator of sacred books, were almost impersonal, almost perhaps without the consciousness of individual design, absorbed in their subject-matter and that the vision of a whole people."

4. Out of the noun pern (usually pirn), a weaver's bobbin, spool, or reel, Yeats makes a verb meaning to move in the spiral pattern taken by thread being unwound from a bobbin or being wound upon it. Here the speaker entreats the sages to descend to him in this manner, to come down into the gyres of history, the cycles of created life, out of their eternity. On "gyre," see note 1, p. 1196.

And fastened to a dying animal
It knows not what it is; and gather me
Into the artifice of eternity.

4

25 Once out of nature I shall never take
My bodily form from any natural thing,
But such a form as Grecian goldsmiths make
Of hammered gold and gold enamelling
To keep a drowsy Emperor awake;
30 Or set upon a golden bough to sing
To lords and ladies of Byzantium
Of what is past, or passing, or to come.

September 1926 — 1927

Leda and the Swan[5]

A sudden blow: the great wings beating still
Above the staggering girl, her thighs caressed
By the dark webs, her nape caught in his bill,
He holds her helpless breast upon his breast.

5 How can those terrified vague fingers push
The feathered glory from her loosening thighs?
And how can body, laid in that white rush,
But feel the strange heart beating where it lies?

A shudder in the loins engenders there
10 The broken wall, the burning roof and tower
And Agamemnon dead.
Being so caught up,
So mastered by the brute blood of the air,
Did she put on his knowledge with his power
Before the indifferent beak could let her drop?

September 1923 — 1924

Among School Children

I

I walk through the long schoolroom questioning;
A kind old nun in a white hood replies;
The children learn to cipher and to sing,

5. In Greek mythology, Leda, raped by Zeus, the supreme god, in the guise of a swan, gave birth to Helen of Troy and the twins Castor and Pollux. Helen's abduction by Paris from her husband, Menelaus, caused the Trojan War. Leda was also the mother of Clytemnestra, who murdered her own husband, Agamemnon, on his return from the war. Yeats saw Leda as the recipient of an annunciation that would found Greek civilization, as the Annunciation to Mary would found Christianity.

To study reading-books and histories,
5 To cut and sew, be neat in everything
In the best modern way—the children's eyes
In momentary wonder stare upon
A sixty-year-old smiling public man.

2

I dream of a Ledaean body,[6] bent
10 Above a sinking fire, a tale that she Told of a harsh reproof, or trivial event
That changed some childish day to tragedy—
Told, and it seemed that our two natures blent
Into a sphere from youthful sympathy,
15 Or else, to alter Plato's parable,
Into the yolk and white of the one shell.[7]

3

And thinking of that fit of grief or rage
I look upon one child or t'other there
And wonder if she stood so at that age—
20 For even daughters of the swan can share
Something of every paddler's heritage—
And had that colour upon cheek or hair,
And thereupon my heart is driven wild:
She stands before me as a living child.

4

25 Her present image floats into the mind—
Did Quattrocento finger[8] fashion it
Hollow of cheek as though it drank the wind
And took a mess of shadows for its meat?
And I though never of Ledaean kind 30 Had pretty plumage once—enough of that,
Better to smile on all that smile, and show
There is a comfortable kind of old scarecrow.

5

What youthful mother, a shape upon her lap
Honey of generation had betrayed,
35 And that must sleep, shriek, struggle to escape
As recollection or the drug decide,[9]

6. I.e., the body of a woman he has known and loved and who has seemed to him as beautiful as Leda or her daughter, Helen of Troy—about both of whom, see note to the previous poem.

7. In Plato's Symposium, one of the speakers, to explain the origin of human love, recounts the legend according to which human beings were originally double their present form until Zeus, the supreme god, fearing their power, cut them in two, which he did "as men cut sorbapples in two when they are preparing them for pickling, or as they cut eggs in two with a hair." Since then, "each of us is . . . but the half of a human being, . . . each is forever seeking his missing half."

8. I.e., the hand of an Italian artist of the fifteenth century.

9. "I have taken the 'honey of generation' from Porphyry's essay on 'The Cave of the Nymphs' but find no warrant in Porphyry for considering it the 'drug' that destroys the 'recollection' of pre-natal freedom" [Yeats's note]. In the essay, which explains the symbolism of a passage from book 13 of the Odyssey, the Neoplatonic philosopher Porphyry (ca. 232–305) makes such statements as that "the sweetness of honey signifies . . . the same thing as the pleasure arising from copulation," the pleasure "which draws souls downward to generation."

Would think her son, did she but see that shape
With sixty or more winters on its head,
A compensation for the pang of his birth,
40 Or the uncertainty of his setting forth?

6

Plato thought nature but a spume that plays
Upon a ghostly paradigm of things;[1]
Solider Aristotle played the taws
Upon the bottom of a king of kings;[2]
45 World-famous golden-thighed Pythagoras[3]
Fingered upon a fiddle-stick or strings
What a star sang and careless Muses[4] heard:
Old clothes upon old sticks to scare a bird.

7

Both nuns and mothers worship images,
50 But those the candles light are not as those
That animate a mother's reveries,
But keep a marble or a bronze repose.
And yet they too break hearts—O Presences
That passion, piety or affection knows,
55 And that all heavenly glory symbolize—
O self-born mockers of man's enterprise;

8

Labour is blossoming or dancing where
The body is not bruised to pleasure soul,
Nor beauty born out of its own despair,
60 Nor blear-eyed wisdom out of midnight oil.
O chestnut-tree, great-rooted blossomer,
Are you the leaf, the blossom or the bole?° trunk
O body swayed to music, O brightening glance,
How can we know the dancer from the dance?

June 1926 1927

Byzantium[5]

The unpurged images of day recede;
The Emperor's drunken soldiery are abed;

1. In Plato's philosophy, the world of nature, of appearances, that we know is but the copy of a world of ideal, permanently enduring prototypes.
2. Aristotle's philosophy differed most markedly from Plato's in that it emphasized the systematic investigation of verifiable phenomena. Aristotle was tutor to the son of King Philip of Macedonia, later Alexander the Great. Played the taws: whipped.
3. Greek philosopher (ca. 580–ca. 500 B.C.E.), about whom many legends clustered even in his own lifetime, as that he was the incarnation of the god Apollo, that he had a golden hipbone or thighbone, and so on. Central to the Pythagorean school of philosophy (along with the doctrine of the transmigration of souls) was the premise that the universe is mathematically regular, an idea based on the Pythagoreans' observations of the exact mathematical relationships underlying musical harmony.
4. In Greek mythology, nine sister goddesses who presided over song, poetry, and the arts and sciences.
5. Under the heading "Subject for a Poem, April 30th," Yeats wrote in his 1930 Diary: "Describe Byzantium as it is in the system [that is, his system in A Vision] towards the end of the first Christian millennium. A walking mummy. Flames at the Night resonance recedes, night-walkers' song

After great cathedral gong;
5 A starlit or a moonlit dome disdains[6]
All that man is,
All mere complexities,
The fury and the mire of human veins.

Before me floats an image, man or shade,
10 Shade more than man, more image than a shade;
For Hades' bobbin bound in mummy-cloth
May unwind the winding path;[7]
A mouth that has no moisture and no breath
Breathless mouths may summon;[8]
15 I hail the superhuman;
I call it death-in-life and life-in-death.

Miracle, bird or golden handiwork,
More miracle than bird or handiwork,
Planted on the starlit golden bough,
20 Can like the cocks of Hades crow,[9]
Or, by the moon embittered, scorn aloud
In glory of changeless metal
Common bird or petal
And all complexities of mire or blood.

25 At midnight on the Emperor's pavement flit
Flames that no faggot[1] feeds, nor steel has lit,
Nor storm disturbs, flames begotten of flame,
Where blood-begotten spirits come
And all complexities of fury leave,
30 Dying into a dance,
An agony of trance,
An agony of flame that cannot singe a sleeve.

---

street corners where the soul is purified, birds of hammered gold singing in the golden trees, in the harbor [dolphins], offering their backs to the wailing dead that they may carry them to Paradise."

6. If the dome is "starlit" at the dark of the moon and "moonlit" at the full, then these terms may refer to Phase 1 and Phase 15, respectively, of the twenty-eight phases of the moon in the system of A Vision. As Yeats's character Michael Robartes says in "The Phases of the Moon," "There's no human life at the full or the dark," these being "the superhuman phases," opposite to one another on the Wheel of Being. Phase 1 is the phase of complete objectivity, the soul being "completely absorbed by its supernatural environment," waiting to be formed, in a state of "complete plasticity." Phase 15 is the state of complete subjectivity, when the soul is completely absorbed in an achieved state, "a phase of complete beauty." Thus the world of "mere complexities," the world in which humanity is in a state of becoming, is banished from the poem at the beginning, as the "unpurged images of day" have been banished.

7. Hades was the Greek god of the underworld, the realm of the dead. The comparison of a dead body or soul to a bobbin (spool) is at first visual, to describe the figure, wrapped in a winding-sheet or mummy-cloth, but it also conveys the idea that the soul may unwind the thread of its fate by retracing its path, returning to the world to serve as guide, instructor, inspiration.

8. The two lines have been read in two different ways, depending on which of the two phrases ("a mouth" or "breathless mouths") is seen as subject and which as object of "may summon." Taking "breathless mouths" as subject: mouths of the living, breathless with the intensity of the act of invocation, may call up the mouths of the dead to instruct them.

9. A symbol of rebirth and resurrection. In a book on Roman sculpture that Yeats is believed to have known, Apotheosis and After Life (1915), Eugenia Strong writes: "The great vogue of the cock on later Roman tombstones is due . . . to the fact that as herald of the sun he becomes by an easy transition the herald of rebirth and resurrection." In the next sentence, she mentions a visual symbol that figures in the poem's last stanza: "The dolphins and marine monsters, another frequent decoration, form a mystic escort of the dead to the Islands of the Blest."

1. Bundle of sticks.

Astraddle on the dolphin's mire and blood,
Spirit after spirit! The smithies break the flood.
35 The golden smithies of the Emperor!
Marbles of the dancing floor
Break bitter furies of complexity,
Those images that yet
Fresh images beget,
40 That dolphin-torn, that gong-tormented sea.

September 1930 1932

Crazy Jane[2] Talks with the Bishop

I met the Bishop on the road
And much said he and I.
"Those breasts are flat and fallen now,
Those veins must soon be dry;
5 Live in a heavenly mansion,
Not in some foul sty."

"Fair and foul are near of kin,
And fair needs foul," I cried.[3]
"My friends are gone, but that's a truth
10 Nor grave nor bed denied,
Learned in bodily lowliness
And in the heart's pride.

"A woman can be proud and stiff
When on love intent;
15 But Love has pitched his mansion in
The place of excrement;
For nothing can be sole or whole
That has not been rent."

November 1931 1932

Lapis Lazuli[4]

(For Harry Clifton)

I have heard that hysterical women say
They are sick of the palette and fiddle-bow,
Of poets that are always gay,

2. In a series of poems, Yeats presents her as a source of wisdom.
3. Cf. Macbeth 1.1.10: "Fair is foul, and foul is fair."
4. A deep-blue semiprecious stone. In a letter dated July 6, 1935, Yeats wrote, "Someone [i.e., the English writer Harry Clifton (1908–1978)] has sent me a present of a great piece [of lapis lazuli] carved by some Chinese sculptor into the semblance of a mountain with temple, trees, paths and an ascetic and pupil about to climb the mountain. Ascetic, pupil, hard stone, eternal theme of the sensual east. The heroic cry in the midst of despair. But no, I am wrong, the east has its solutions always and therefore knows nothing of tragedy. It is we, not the east, that must raise the heroic cry."

For everybody knows or else should know
5 That if nothing drastic is done
Aeroplane and Zeppelin[5] will come out,
Pitch like King Billy[6] bomb-balls in
Until the town lie beaten flat.

All perform their tragic play,
10 There struts Hamlet, there is Lear,
That's Ophelia, that Cordelia;
Yet they, should the last scene be there,
The great stage curtain about to drop,
If worthy their prominent part in the play,
15 Do not break up their lines to weep.
They know that Hamlet and Lear are gay;
Gaiety transfiguring all that dread.
All men have aimed at, found and lost;
Black out; Heaven blazing into the head:
20 Tragedy wrought to its uttermost.
Though Hamlet rambles and Lear rages,
And all the drop-scenes drop at once
Upon a hundred thousand stages,
It cannot grow by an inch or an ounce.

25 On their own feet they came, or on shipboard,
Camelback, horseback, ass-back, mule-back,
Old civilizations put to the sword.
Then they and their wisdom went to rack:
No handiwork of Callimachus,[7]
30 Who handled marble as if it were bronze,
Made draperies that seemed to rise
When sea-wind swept the corner, stands;
His long lamp-chimney shaped like the stem
Of a slender palm, stood but a day;
35 All things fall and are built again,
And those that build them again are gay.

Two Chinamen, behind them a third,
Are carved in lapis lazuli,
Over them flies a long-legged bird,
40 A symbol of longevity;
The third, doubtless a serving-man,
Carries a musical instrument.

Every discolouration of the stone,
Every accidental crack or dent,
45 Seems a water-course or an avalanche,
Or lofty slope where it still snows
Though doubtless plum or cherry-branch

5. Cylindrical airship.
6. At the Battle of the Boyne on July 1, 1690, William III, king of England since 1689, had defeated the forces of the deposed king, James II.
7. Greek sculptor of the fifth century B.C.E. In A Vision, Yeats says that only one example of his work remains, a marble chair, and goes on to mention "that bronze lamp [in the Erechtheum, a temple of the guardian deities of Athens] shaped like a palm, known to us by a description in Pausanias."

Sweetens the little half-way house
Those Chinamen climb towards, and I
50 Delight to imagine them seated there;
There, on the mountain and the sky,
On all the tragic scene they stare.
One asks for mournful melodies;
Accomplished fingers begin to play.
55 Their eyes mid many wrinkles, their eyes,
Their ancient, glittering eyes, are gay.

July 1936 1938

Long-Legged Fly

That civilisation may not sink,
Its great battle lost,
Quiet the dog, tether the pony
To a distant post;
5 Our master Caesar is in the tent
Where the maps are spread,
His eyes fixed upon nothing,
A hand under his head.
Like a long-legged fly upon the stream
10 His mind moves upon silence.

That the topless towers be burnt
And men recall that face,[8]
Move most gently if move you must
In this lonely place.
15 She thinks, part woman, three parts a child,
That nobody looks; her feet
Practice a tinker shuffle
Picked up on a street.
Like a long-legged fly upon the stream
20 Her mind moves upon silence.

That girls at puberty may find
The first Adam in their thought,
Shut the door of the Pope's chapel,[9]
Keep those children out.
25 There on that scaffolding reclines
Michael Angelo.
With no more sound than the mice make
His hand moves to and fro.
Like a long-legged fly upon the stream
30 His mind moves upon silence.

November 1937 1939

8. Helen, legendary beauty whose abduction caused the Trojan War and hence the fall of Troy. An echo of Christopher Marlowe's play Dr. Faustus: "Was this the face that launched a thousand ships, / And burnt the topless towers of Ilium?"

9. On the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel, so called because it was built under Pope Sixtus IV, Michelangelo (1475–1564) painted a series of biblical scenes, including the creation of Adam.

The Circus Animals' Desertion

1

I sought a theme and sought for it in vain,
I sought it daily for six weeks or so.
Maybe at last, being but a broken man,
I must be satisfied with my heart, although 5 Winter and summer till old age began
My circus animals were all on show,
Those stilted boys, that burnished chariot,[1]
Lion and woman and the Lord knows what.

2

What can I but enumerate old themes?
10 First that sea-rider Oisin[2] led by the nose
Through three enchanted islands, allegorical dreams,
Vain gaiety, vain battle, vain repose,
Themes of the embittered heart, or so it seems,
That might adorn old songs or courtly shows;
15 But what cared I that set him on to ride,
I, starved for the bosom of his faery bride?

And then a counter-truth filled out its play,
The Countess Cathleen[3] was the name I gave it;
She, pity-crazed, had given her soul away,
20 But masterful Heaven had intervened to save it.
I thought my dear[4] must her own soul destroy,
So did fanaticism and hate enslave it,
And this brought forth a dream and soon enough
This dream itself had all my thought and love.

25 And when the Fool and Blind Man stole the bread
Cuchulain fought the ungovernable sea;[5]
Heart-mysteries there, and yet when all is said
It was the dream itself enchanted me:
Character isolated by a deed
30 To engross the present and dominate memory.
Players and painted stage took all my love,
And not those things that they were emblems of.

1. The images of lines 7–8 may refer to motifs from earlier works by Yeats (in his play The Unicorn from the Stars, for instance, a gilded state coach, adorned with lion and unicorn, is being built on stage), or they may be generalized images, in line with the title and argument of the poem, of the people and things to be encountered in the heightened, unreal world of a circus.
2. The hero of Yeats's allegorical (and symbolic) long poem, The Wanderings of Oisin (pronounced Ushēēn), 1889, is led by the fairy Niamh (pronounced Nee-ave) in succession to the three Islands of, respectively, Dancing (changeless joy), Victories (also called "Of Many Fears"), and Forgetfulness.
3. Yeats's first play, 1892. In it, the people, in a time of famine, are selling their souls to emissaries of the Devil. To save their souls, the Countess Cathleen sells hers "for a great price." She dies, but an angel announces that she is "passing to the floor of peace."
4. Maud Gonne, whom Yeats had loved since first meeting her in 1889, and who had married John MacBride in 1903; she was a daring, even violent, activist in the cause of Irish liberation.
5. In another early play, On Baile's Strand, 1904, Cuchulain (pronounced Cuhoolin) unwittingly kills his own son; maddened, he rushes out to fight the waves. As the people run to the shore to watch, the fool and the blind man hurry off to steal the bread from their ovens.

3

Those masterful images because complete
Grew in pure mind, but out of what began?
35 A mound of refuse or the sweeping of a street,
Old kettles, old bottles, and a broken can,
Old iron, old bones, old rags, that raving slut
Who keeps the till. Now that my ladder's gone,
I must lie down where all the ladders start,
40 In the foul rag-and-bone shop of the heart.

1939

Under Ben Bulben[6]

1

Swear by what the sages spoke
Round the Mareotic Lake[7]
That the Witch of Atlas knew,
Spoke and set the cocks a-crow.[8]

5 Swear by those horsemen, by those women
Complexion and form prove superhuman,[9]
That pale, long-visaged company
That air in immortality
Completeness of their passions won;
10 Now they ride the wintry dawn
Where Ben Bulben sets the scene.[1]

Here's the gist of what they mean.

2

Many times man lives and dies
Between his two eternities,
15 That of race and that of soul,
And ancient Ireland knew it all.

6. A mountain in County Sligo, in the west of Ireland, that overlooks Drumcliff Churchyard, where Yeats is buried. The last three lines of the poem are carved on his tombstone.
7. Lake Mareotis, a salt lake in northern Egypt, near which the Christian monks and nuns of the Thebaid, among them St. Anthony (ca. 251–356), had withdrawn to contemplation. In his 1930 Diary, Yeats wrote that "men went on pilgrimage to Saint Anthony that they might learn about their spiritual states, what was about to happen and why it happened, and Saint Anthony would reply neither out of traditional casuistry nor common sense but from spiritual powers."
8. In the poem "The Witch of Atlas," by Percy Bysshe Shelley (1792–1822; for his poetry, see pp. 863–93) the protagonist, a spirit of love, beauty, and freedom, visits Egypt and the Mareotic Lake in the course of her magic journeyings. The knowledge and belief that Yeats describes as common to her and to the sages "set the cocks a-crow" in the sense that, like "the cocks of Hades" and the golden bird in Yeats's "Byzantium" (see p. 1202), they summon to a spiritual rebirth.
9. Fairies called the Sidhe (pronounced shee) were believed to ride through the countryside near Ben Bulben.
1. In another late poem, "Alternative Song for the Severed Head in 'The King of the Great Clock Tower,' " Yeats reintroduces some of the Irish mythological or legendary heroes and heroines who figure in his early poems—Cuchulain, Niamh and others—with whom the supernatural riders of these lines may be identified.

Whether man die in his bed
Or the rifle knocks him dead,
A brief parting from those dear
20 Is the worst man has to fear.
Though gravediggers' toil is long,
Sharp their spades, their muscles strong,
They but thrust their buried men
Back in the human mind again.

3

25 You that Mitchel's prayer have heard,
"Send war in our time, O Lord!"[2]
Know that when all words are said
And a man is fighting mad,
Something drops from eyes long blind,
30 He completes his partial mind,
For an instant stands at ease,
Laughs aloud, his heart at peace.
Even the wisest man grows tense
With some sort of violence
35 Before he can accomplish fate,
Know his work or choose his mate.

4

Poet and sculptor, do the work,
Nor let the modish painter shirk
What his great forefathers did,
40 Bring the soul of man to God,
Make him fill the cradles right.

Measurement began our might:[3]
Forms a stark Egyptian thought,
Forms that gentler Phidias wrought.
45 Michael Angelo left a proof
On the Sistine Chapel roof,[4]
Where but half-awakened Adam
Can disturb globe-trotting Madam
Till her bowels are in heat,
50 Proof that there's a purpose set
Before the secret working mind:
Profane perfection of mankind.
Quattrocento[5] put in paint
On backgrounds for a God or Saint

2. John Mitchel (1815–1875), Irish nationalist, wrote in his Jail Journal, or Five Years in British Prisons (1854): "Czar, I bless thee, I kiss the hem of thy garment. I drink to thy health and longevity. Give us war in our time, O Lord."
3. The achievements of Western civilization (now, according to the poem, being challenged or destroyed) began with the exact mathematical rules that the Egyptians followed in working out the proportions of their sculptured figures—rules that Phidias (line 44), the great Greek sculptor of the fifth century B.C.E., used, and that have been implicit in the greatest Western art up to the present, when "confusion [falls] upon our thought" (line 67).
4. See note 9, p. 1206.
5. The Italian fifteenth century.

55 Gardens where a soul's at ease;
Where everything that meets the eye,
Flowers and grass and cloudless sky,
Resemble forms that are or seem
When sleepers wake and yet still dream,
60 And when it's vanished still declare,
With only bed and bedstead there,
That heavens had opened.
Gyres[6] run on;
When that greater dream had gone
Calvert and Wilson, Blake and Claude,
65 Prepared a rest for the people of God,
Palmer's phrase,[7] but after that Confusion fell upon our thought.

5

Irish poets, learn your trade,
Sing whatever is well made,
70 Scorn the sort now growing up
All out of shape from toe to top,
Their unremembering hearts and heads
Base-born products of base beds.
Sing the peasantry, and then
75 Hard-riding country gentlemen,
The holiness of monks, and after
Porter°-drinkers' randy laughter; dark brown beer
Sing the lords and ladies gay
That were beaten into the clay
80 Through seven heroic centuries;
Cast your mind on other days
That we in coming days may be Still the indomitable Irishry.

6

Under bare Ben Bulben's head
85 In Drumcliff churchyard Yeats is laid.
An ancestor was rector there[8]
Long years ago, a church stands near,
By the road an ancient cross.
No marble, no conventional phrase;
90 On limestone quarried near the spot
By his command these words are cut:

6. I.e., the cycles of history. See note 1, p. 1196.
7. Lines 64–66 name five artists who had provided Yeats with images and with ideals of what art should be. Claude Lorrain (1600–1682), French landscape painter, was a central standard for landscape painters up to the early nineteenth century, including the English artists mentioned here, especially Richard Wilson (1714–1782). Edward Calvert (1799–1883) and Samuel Palmer (1805–1881), visionaries, landscape painters, and engravers, had found inspiration in the life and work of William Blake (1757–1827; see pp. 732–47).
8. Yeats's great-grandfather, the Reverend John Yeats (1774–1847), was rector of Drumcliff from 1805.

Cast a cold eye
On life, on death.
Horseman, pass by!

September 4, 1938 1939

ERNEST DOWSON
1867–1900

Vitae summa brevis spem nos vetat incohare longam[1]

They are not long, the weeping and the laughter,
Love and desire and hate:
I think they have no portion in us after
We pass the gate.

5 They are not long, the days of wine and roses:
Out of a misty dream
Our path emerges for a while, then closes
Within a dream.

1891 1896

Non sum qualis eram bonae sub regno Cynarae[2]

Last night, ah, yesternight, betwixt her lips and mine
There fell thy shadow, Cynara! thy breath was shed
Upon my soul between the kisses and the wine;
And I was desolate and sick of an old passion,
5 Yea, I was desolate and bowed my head:
I have been faithful to thee, Cynara! in my fashion.

All night upon mine heart I felt her warm heart beat,
Night-long within mine arms in love and sleep she lay;
Surely the kisses of her bought red mouth were sweet;
10 But I was desolate and sick of an old passion,
When I awoke and found the dawn was grey:
I have been faithful to thee, Cynara! in my fashion.

I have forgot much, Cynara! gone with the wind,
Flung roses, roses riotously with the throng,
15 Dancing, to put thy pale, lost lilies out of mind;
But I was desolate and sick of an old passion,

1. The brevity of life forbids us to entertain hopes of long duration (Latin); Horace, Odes 1.4.15.
2. I am not as I was under the reign of the good Cynara (Latin); Horace, Odes 4.1.3–4: the poet urges Venus, Roman goddess of love and beauty, to spare him new efforts in her service, because he is no longer up to the task.

Yea, all the time, because the dance was long:
I have been faithful to thee, Cynara! in my fashion.

I cried for madder music and for stronger wine,
20 But when the feast is finished and the lamps expire,
Then falls thy shadow, Cynara! the night is thine;
And I am desolate and sick of an old passion,
Yea hungry for the lips of my desire:
I have been faithful to thee, Cynara! in my fashion.

1891 1896

EDWIN ARLINGTON ROBINSON
1869–1935

Richard Cory

Whenever Richard Cory went down town,
We people on the pavement looked at him:
He was a gentleman from sole to crown,
Clean favored, and imperially slim.

5 And he was always quietly arrayed,
And he was always human when he talked;
But still he fluttered pulses when he said,
"Good-morning," and he glittered when he walked.

And he was rich—yes, richer than a king—
10 And admirably schooled in every grace:
In fine, we thought that he was everything
To make us wish that we were in his place.

So on we worked, and waited for the light,
And went without the meat, and cursed the bread;
15 And Richard Cory, one calm summer night,
Went home and put a bullet through his head.

1869

George Crabbe[1]

Give him the darkest inch your shelf allows,
Hide him in lonely garrets, if you will,
But his hard, human pulse is throbbing still
With the sure strength that fearless truth endows.

1. English poet, physician, and curate (1754–1832; see pp. 723–31), known for his realistic narrative poems.

5 In spite of all fine science disavows,
Of his plain excellence and stubborn skill
There yet remains what fashion cannot kill,
Though years have thinned the laurel[2] from his brows.

Whether or not we read him, we can feel
10 From time to time the vigor of his name
Against us like a finger for the shame
And emptiness of what our souls reveal
In books that are as altars where we kneel
To consecrate the flicker, not the flame.

1897

Reuben Bright

Because he was a butcher and thereby
Did earn an honest living (and did right),
I would not have you think that Reuben Bright
Was any more a brute than you or I;

5 For when they told him that his wife must die,
He stared at them, and shook with grief and fright,
And cried like a great baby half that night,
And made the women cry to see him cry.

And after she was dead, and he had paid
10 The singers and the sexton and the rest,
He packed a lot of things that she had made
Most mournfully away in an old chest
Of hers, and put some chopped-up cedar boughs
In with them, and tore down the slaughter-house.

1897

Miniver Cheevy

Miniver Cheevy, child of scorn,
Grew lean while he assailed the seasons;
He wept that he was ever born,
And he had reasons.

5 Miniver loved the days of old
When swords were bright and steeds were prancing;
The vision of a warrior bold
Would set him dancing.

2. In classical Greece, laurel was associated with prophecy and poetry; laurel wreaths crowned poets as well as the victors in athletic contests.

Miniver sighed for what was not,
10 And dreamed, and rested from his labors;
He dreamed of Thebes and Camelot,
And Priam's[3] neighbors.

Miniver mourned the ripe renown
That made so many a name so fragrant;
15 He mourned Romance, now on the town,
And Art, a vagrant.

Miniver loved the Medici,[4]
Albeit he had never seen one;
He would have sinned incessantly
20 Could he have been one.

Miniver cursed the commonplace
And eyed a khaki suit with loathing;
He missed the medieval grace
Of iron clothing.

25 Miniver scorned the gold he sought,
But sore annoyed was he without it;
Miniver thought, and thought, and thought,
And thought about it.

Miniver Cheevy, born too late,
30 Scratched his head and kept on thinking;
Miniver coughed, and called it fate,
And kept on drinking.

1910

The Mill

The miller's wife had waited long,
The tea was cold, the fire was dead;
And there might yet be nothing wrong
In how he went and what he said:
5 "There are no millers any more,"
Was all that she had heard him say;
And he had lingered at the door
So long that it seemed yesterday.

Sick with a fear that had no form
10 She knew that she was there at last;
And in the mill there was a warm
And mealy fragrance of the past.

3. King of Troy during the Trojan War, immortalized in Homer's Iliad. Thebes: Ancient Greek city, famous in history and legend. Camelot: according to English legend, the site of King Arthur's court.

4. Merchant-princes of Renaissance Florence, known both for cruelty and for their support of learning and art.

What else there was would only seem
To say again what he had meant;
15 And what was hanging from a beam
Would not have heeded where she went.

And if she thought it followed her,
She may have reasoned in the dark
That one way of the few there were 20 Would hide her and would leave no mark:
Black water, smooth above the weir° milldam
Like starry velvet in the night,
Though ruffled once, would soon appear
The same as ever to the sight.

1920

Mr. Flood's Party

Old Eben Flood, climbing alone one night
Over the hill between the town below
And the forsaken upland hermitage
That held as much as he should ever know
5 On earth again of home, paused warily.
The road was his with not a native near;
And Eben, having leisure, said aloud,
For no man else in Tilbury Town to hear:

"Well, Mr. Flood, we have the harvest moon
10 Again, and we may not have many more;
The bird is on the wing, the poet says,[5]
And you and I have said it here before.
Drink to the bird." He raised up to the light
The jug that he had gone so far to fill,
15 And answered huskily: "Well, Mr. Flood, Since you propose it, I believe I will."

Alone, as if enduring to the end
A valiant armor of scarred hopes outworn,
He stood there in the middle of the road
20 Like Roland's ghost winding a silent horn.[6]
Below him, in the town among the trees,
Where friends of other days had honored him,
A phantom salutation of the dead
Rang thinly till old Eben's eyes were dim.

5. A paraphrase of the seventh stanza of The Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám as translated in 1859 by the English poet Edward FitzGerald (1809–1883; see pp. 961–73).

6. The hero of the French poem The Song of Roland (ca. 1000) had an enchanted horn; in battle at Roncevalles (778), he sounded his horn for help just before dying.

25 Then, as a mother lays her sleeping child
Down tenderly, fearing it may awake,
He set the jug down slowly at his feet
With trembling care, knowing that most things break;
And only when assured that on firm earth
30 It stood, as the uncertain lives of men
Assuredly did not, he paced away,
And with his hand extended paused again:

"Well, Mr. Flood, we have not met like this
In a long time; and many a change has come 35 To both of us, I fear, since last it was
We had a drop together. Welcome home!"
Convivially returning with himself,
Again he raised the jug up to the light;
And with an acquiescent quaver said:
40 "Well, Mr. Flood, if you insist, I might.

"Only a very little, Mr. Flood—
For auld lang syne.[7] No more, sir; that will do."
So, for the time, apparently it did,
And Eben evidently thought so too;
45 For soon amid the silver loneliness
Of night he lifted up his voice and sang,
Secure, with only two moons listening,
Until the whole harmonious landscape rang—

"For auld lang syne." The weary throat gave out, 50 The last word wavered; and the song being done,
He raised again the jug regretfully
And shook his head, and was again alone.
There was not much that was ahead of him,
And there was nothing in the town below—
55 Where strangers would have shut the many doors
That many friends had opened long ago.

1920

CHARLOTTE MEW
1869–1928

The Farmer's Bride

Three Summers since I chose a maid,
Too young maybe—but more's to do
At harvest-time than bide and woo.
  When us was wed she turned afraid

7. Old long since (Scottish), the days of long ago; title and refrain of a famous song by the eighteenth-century Scottish poet Robert Burns (see p. 753).

5 Of love and me and all things human;
Like the shut of a winter's day.
Her smile went out, and 'twasn't a woman—
More like a little frightened fay.° fairy
One night, in the Fall, she runned away.

10 "Out 'mong the sheep, her be," they said,
'Should properly have been abed;
But sure enough she wasn't there
Lying awake with her wide brown stare.
So over seven-acre field and up-along across the down° upland pasture
15 We chased her, flying like a hare
Before our lanterns. To Church-Town
All in a shiver and a scare
We caught her, fetched her home at last
And turned the key upon her, fast.

20 She does the work about the house
As well as most, but like a mouse:
Happy enough to chat and play
With birds and rabbits and such as they,
So long as men-folk keep away.
25 "Not near, not near!" her eyes beseech
When one of us comes within reach.
The women say that beasts in stall
Look round like children at her call.
I've hardly heard her speak at all.

30 Shy as a leveret,° swift as he, young hare
Straight and slight as a young larch tree,
Sweet as the first wild violets, she,
To her wild self. But what to me?

The short days shorten and the oaks are brown,
35 The blue smoke rises to the low grey sky,
One leaf in the still air falls slowly down,
A magpie's spotted feathers lie
On the black earth spread white with rime,° frozen dew
The berries redden up to Christmas-time.
40 What's Christmas-time without there be
Some other in the house than we!

She sleeps up in the attic there
Alone, poor maid. 'Tis but a stair
Betwixt us. Oh! my God! the down,° light, soft body hair
45 The soft young down of her, the brown,
The brown of her—her eyes, her hair, her hair!

1912 1916

In Nunhead Cemetery

It is the clay that makes the earth stick to his spade;
He fills in holes like this year after year;
The others have gone; they were tired, and half afraid
But I would rather be standing here;

5 There is nowhere else to go. I have seen this place
From the windows of the train that's going past
Against the sky. This is rain on my face—
It was raining here when I saw it last.

There is something horrible about a flower;
10 This, broken in my hand, is one of those
He threw in just now: it will not live another hour;
There are thousands more: you do not miss a rose.

One of the children hanging about
Pointed at the whole dreadful heap and smiled
15 This morning, after THAT was carried out;
There is something terrible about a child.

We were like children, last week, in the Strand;[1]
That was the day you laughed at me
Because I tried to make you understand
20 The cheap, stale chap I used to be Before I saw the things you made me see.

This is not a real place; perhaps by-and-by
I shall wake—I am getting drenched with all this rain:
To-morrow I will tell you about the eyes of the Crystal Palace[2] train
25 Looking down on us, and you will laugh and I shall see what you see again.

Not here, not now. We said "Not yet
Across our low stone parapet
Will the quick shadows of the sparrows fall."

But still it was a lovely thing
30 Through the grey months to wait for Spring
With the birds that go a-gypsying
In the parks till the blue seas call.
And next to these, you used to care
For the lions in Trafalgar Square,[3]
35 Who'll stand and speak for London when her bell of Judgment tolls—
And the gulls at Westminster that were
The old sea-captains' souls.

1. Street in central London.
2. Large building made of glass and iron, erected in London's Great Exhibition of 1851.
3. Grand plaza in the Westminster borough of London, wherein four bronze lions stand at the base of a commemorative column. Gulls gather in the fountains of Trafalgar, as in areas surrounding the nearby river Thames.

To-day again the brown tide splashes, step by step, the river stair,
And the gulls are there!

40 By a month we have missed our Day:
The children would have hung about
Round the carriage and over the way
As you and I came out.

We should have stood on the gulls' black cliffs and heard the sea
45 And seen the moon's white track,
I would have called, you would have come to me
And kissed me back.

You have never done that: I do not know
Why I stood staring at your bed
50 And heard you, though you spoke so low,
But could not reach your hands, your little head.
There was nothing we could not do, you said,
And you went, and I let you go!

Now I will burn you back, I will burn you through,
55 Though I am damned for it we two will lie
And burn, here where the starlings fly
To these white stones from the wet sky—;
Dear, you will say this is not I—
It would not be you, it would not be you!

60 If for only a little while
You will think of it you will understand,
If you will touch my sleeve and smile
As you did that morning in the Strand
I can wait quietly with you 65 Or go away if you want me to—
God! What is God? but your face has gone and your hand!
Let me stay here too.

When I was quite a little lad
At Christmas-time we went half mad
70 For joy of all the toys we had,
And then we used to sing about the sheep
The shepherds watched by night;
We used to pray to Christ to keep
Our small souls safe till morning light—;
75 I am scared, I am staying with you to-night—
Put me to sleep.

I shall stay here: here you can see the sky;
The houses in the streets are much too high;
There is no one left to speak to there;
80 Here they are everywhere,
And just above them fields and fields of roses lie—
If he would dig it all up again they would not die.

1916

STEPHEN CRANE
1871–1900

From The Black Riders and Other Lines[1]

I

BLACK RIDERS CAME FROM THE SEA.
THERE WAS CLANG AND CLANG OF SPEAR AND SHIELD, AND CLASH AND CLASH OF HOOF AND HEEL,
WILD SHOUTS AND THE WAVE OF HAIR
5 IN THE RUSH UPON THE WIND:
THUS THE RIDE OF SIN.

III

IN THE DESERT
I SAW A CREATURE, NAKED, BESTIAL, WHO, SQUATTING UPON THE GROUND,
HELD HIS HEART IN HIS HANDS,
5 AND ATE OF IT.
I SAID, "IS IT GOOD, FRIEND?"
"IT IS BITTER—BITTER," HE ANSWERED;
"BUT I LIKE IT
"BECAUSE IT IS BITTER,
10 "AND BECAUSE IT IS MY HEART."

XXV

BEHOLD, THE GRAVE OF A WICKED MAN,
AND NEAR IT, A STERN SPIRIT.

THERE CAME A DROOPING MAID WITH VIOLETS,
BUT THE SPIRIT GRASPED HER ARM.
5 "NO FLOWERS FOR HIM," HE SAID.
THE MAID WEPT:
"AH, I LOVED HIM."
BUT THE SPIRIT, GRIM AND FROWNING:
"NO FLOWERS FOR HIM."

10 NOW, THIS IS IT——
IF THE SPIRIT WAS JUST,
WHY DID THE MAID WEEP?

1. The stylish Boston publishers of Crane's first poetry collection, The Black Riders and Other Lines, proposed what they called a "severely classic" design, printing the poems in capitals only—which greatly pleased Crane. Modern editors have reproduced the poems in standard typography; here the original look of the "lines" ("I never call them poems," Crane said) is more closely approximated.

LVI

A MAN FEARED THAT HE MIGHT FIND AN ASSASSIN;
ANOTHER THAT HE MIGHT FIND A VICTIM.
ONE WAS MORE WISE THAN THE OTHER.

1895

From War is Kind[2]

Do not weep, maiden, for war is kind.
Because your lover threw wild hands toward the sky
And the affrighted steed ran on alone,
Do not weep.
5 War is kind.

Hoarse, booming drums of the regiment
Little souls who thirst for fight,
These men were born to drill and die
The unexplained glory flies above them
10 Great is the battle-god, great, and his kingdom——
A field where a thousand corpses lie.

Do not weep, babe, for war is kind.
Because your father tumbled in the yellow trenches,
Raged at his breast, gulped and died,
15 Do not weep.
War is kind.

Swift, blazing flag of the regiment
Eagle with crest of red and gold,
These men were born to drill and die
20 Point for them the virtue of slaughter
Make plain to them the excellence of killing
And a field where a thousand corpses lie.

Mother whose heart hung humble as a button
On the bright splendid shroud of your son,
25 Do not weep.
War is kind.

1899

[A Man Adrift on a Slim Spar]

A man adrift on a slim spar
A horizon smaller than the rim of a bottle

2. The poems in Crane's second and final collection of verse were printed conventionally, with upper- and lowercase letters.

Tented waves rearing lashy dark points
The near whine of froth in circles.
5 God is cold.

The incessant raise and swing of the sea
And growl after growl of crest
The sinkings, green, seething, endless
The upheaval half-completed.
10 God is cold.

The seas are in the hollow of The Hand;
Oceans may be turned to a spray
Raining down through the stars
Because of a gesture of pity toward a babe.
15 Oceans may become grey ashes,
Die with a long moan and a roar
Amid the tumult of the fishes
And the cries of the ships,
Because The Hand beckons the mice.

20 A horizon smaller than a doomed assassin's cap,
Inky, surging tumults
A reeling, drunken sky and no sky
A pale hand sliding from a polished spar.
God is cold.

25 The puff of a coat imprisoning air.
A face kissing the water-death
A weary slow sway of a lost hand
And the sea, the moving sea, the sea.
God is cold.

ca. 1897 1929

PAUL LAURENCE DUNBAR
1872–1906

A Summer's Night

The night is dewy as a maiden's mouth,
The skies are bright as are a maiden's eyes,
Soft as a maiden's breath, the wind that flies
Up from the perfumed bosom of the South.
5 Like sentinels, the pines stand in the park;
And hither hastening like rakes that roam,
With lamps to light their wayward footsteps home,
The fire-flies come stagg'ring down the dark.

1895

We Wear the Mask

We wear the mask that grins and lies,
It hides our cheeks and shades our eyes—
This debt we pay to human guile;
With torn and bleeding hearts we smile,
5 And mouth with myriad subtleties.

Why should the world be over-wise,
In counting all our tears and sighs?
Nay, let them only see us, while
We wear the mask.

10 We smile, but, O great Christ, our cries
To thee from tortured souls arise.
We sing, but oh the clay is vile
Beneath our feet, and long the mile;
But let the world dream otherwise,
15 We wear the mask!

1896

Little Brown Baby

Little brown baby wif spa'klin' eyes,
Come to yo' pappy an' set on his knee.
What you been doin', suh-makin' san' pies?
Look at dat bib—you's ez du'ty ez me.
5 Look at dat mouf—dat's merlasses, I bet;
Come hyeah, Maria, an' wipe off his han's.
Bees gwine to ketch you an' eat you up yit,
Bein' so sticky an sweet—goodness lan's!° lands!

Little brown baby wif spa'klin' eyes,
10 Who's pappy's darlin' an' who's pappy's chile?
Who is it all de day nevah once tries
Fu' to be cross, er once loses dat smile?
Whah did you git dem teef? My, you's a scamp!
Whah did dat dimple come f'om in yo' chin?
15 Pappy do' know you—I b'lieves you's a tramp;
Mammy, dis hyeah's some ol' straggler got in!

Let's th'ow him outen de do' in de san',
We do' want stragglers a-layin' 'roun' hyeah;
Let's gin him 'way to de big buggah-man;
20 I know he's hidin' erroun' hyeah right neah.
Buggah-man, buggah-man, come in de do',
Hyeah's a bad boy you kin have fu' to eat.

Mammy an' pappy do' want him no mo',
  Swaller him down f'om his haid to his feet!

25 Dah, now, I t'ought dat you'd hug me up close.
  Go back, ol' buggah, you sha'n't have dis boy.
He ain't no tramp, ner no straggler, of co'se;
  He's pappy's pa'dner an' playmate an' joy.
Come to you' pallet now—go to yo' res';
30 Wisht you could allus know ease an' cleah skies;
Wisht you could stay jes' a chile on my breas'—
  Little brown baby wif spa'klin' eyes!

1899?

Sympathy

I know what the caged bird feels, alas!
  When the sun is bright on the upland slopes;
When the wind stirs soft through the springing grass,
And the river flows like a stream of glass;
5 When the first bird sings and the first bud opes,° opens
And the faint perfume from its chalice steals—
I know what the caged bird feels!

I know why the caged bird beats his wing
  Till its blood is red on the cruel bars;
10 For he must fly back to his perch and cling
When he fain would be[1] on the bough a-swing;
  And a pain still throbs in the old, old scars
And they pulse again with a keener sting—
I know why he beats his wing!

15 I know why the caged bird sings, ah me,
  When his wing is bruised and his bosom sore,—
When he beats his bars and he would be free;
It is not a carol of joy or glee,
  But a prayer that he sends from his heart's deep core,
20 But a plea, that upward to Heaven he flings—
I know why the caged bird sings!

1899

1. He would like to be.

JOHN McCRAE
1872–1918

In Flanders Fields[1]

In Flanders fields the poppies blow
Between the crosses, row on row,
  That mark our place; and in the sky
  The larks, still bravely singing, fly
5 Scarce heard amid the guns below.

We are the Dead. Short days ago
We lived, felt dawn, saw sunset glow,
  Loved and were loved, and now we lie,
    In Flanders fields.

10 Take up our quarrel with the foe:
To you from failing hands we throw
  The torch; be yours to hold it high.
  If ye break faith with us who die
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow
15   In Flanders fields.

1915 1919

WALTER DE LA MARE
1873–1956

The Listeners

"Is there anybody there?" said the Traveller,
  Knocking on the moonlit door;
And his horse in the silence champed the grasses
  Of the forest's ferny floor:
5 And a bird flew up out of the turret,
  Above the Traveller's head:
And he smote upon the door again a second time;
  "Is there anybody there?" he said.
But no one descended to the Traveller;
10 No head from the leaf-fringed sill
Leaned over and looked into his grey eyes,

1. Written in April 1915 during the Second Battle of Ypres, France, in the region (once the country) called Flanders, which encompasses parts of modern France, Belgium, and the Netherlands. McCrae, a Canadian soldier and physician, survived massive German shelling in one of the bloodiest chapters in World War I. Major-General E. W. B. Morrison, who commanded McCrae's brigade, wrote: "During periods in the battle men who were shot actually rolled down the bank [of the Ypres Canal] into his dressing station. . . . [H]e and I watched [men] burying their dead whenever there was a lull. Thus the crosses, row on row, grew into a good-sized cemetery." The poem, first published in the December 1915 issue of Punch magazine, achieved instant international fame and was memorized by soldiers.

Where he stood perplexed and still.
But only a host of phantom listeners
That dwelt in the lone house then
15 Stood listening in the quiet of the moonlight
To that voice from the world of men:
Stood thronging the faint moonbeams on the dark stair,
That goes down to the empty hall,
Hearkening in an air stirred and shaken
20 By the lonely Traveller's call.
And he felt in his heart their strangeness,
Their stillness answering his cry,
While his horse moved, cropping the dark turf,
'Neath the starred and leafy sky;
25 For he suddenly smote on the door, even Louder, and lifted his head:—
"Tell them I came, and no one answered,
That I kept my word," he said.
Never the least stir made the listeners,
30 Though every word he spake
Fell echoing through the shadowiness of the still house
From the one man left awake:
Ay, they heard his foot upon the stirrup,
And the sound of iron on stone,
35 And how the silence surged softly backward,
When the plunging hoofs were gone.

1912

Fare Well

When I lie where shades of darkness
Shall no more assail mine eyes,
Nor the rain make lamentation
When the wind sighs;
5 How will fare the world whose wonder
Was the very proof of me?
Memory fades, must the remembered
Perishing be?

Oh, when this my dust surrenders
10 Hand, foot, lip, to dust again,
May these loved and loving faces
Please other men!
May the rusting harvest hedgerow
Still the Traveller's Joy[1] entwine,
15 And as happy children gather
Posies once mine.

1. Wild climbing plant also known as Virgin's Bower or Old Man's Beard.

Look thy last on all things lovely,
Every hour. Let no night
Seal thy sense in deathly slumber
20 Till to delight
Thou have paid thy utmost blessing;
Since that all things thou wouldst praise
Beauty took from those who loved them
In other days.

1918

ROBERT FROST
1874–1963

Mending Wall

Something there is that doesn't love a wall,
That sends the frozen-ground-swell under it,
And spills the upper boulders in the sun;
And makes gaps even two can pass abreast.
5 The work of hunters is another thing:
I have come after them and made repair
Where they have left not one stone on a stone,
But they would have the rabbit out of hiding,
To please the yelping dogs. The gaps I mean,
10 No one has seen them made or heard them made,
But at spring mending-time we find them there.
I let my neighbor know beyond the hill;
And on a day we meet to walk the line
And set the wall between us once again.
15 We keep the wall between us as we go.
To each the boulders that have fallen to each.
And some are loaves and some so nearly balls
We have to use a spell to make them balance:
"Stay where you are until our backs are turned!"
20 We wear our fingers rough with handling them.
Oh, just another kind of outdoor game,
One on a side. It comes to little more:
There where it is we do not need the wall:
He is all pine and I am apple orchard.
25 My apple trees will never get across
And eat the cones under his pines, I tell him.
He only says, "Good fences make good neighbors."
Spring is the mischief in me, and I wonder
If I could put a notion in his head:
30 "Why do they make good neighbors? Isn't it
Where there are cows? But here there are no cows.
Before I built a wall I'd ask to know

What I was walling in or walling out,
And to whom I was like to give offense.
35 Something there is that doesn't love a wall,
That wants it down." I could say "Elves" to him,
But it's not elves exactly, and I'd rather
He said it for himself. I see him there
Bringing a stone grasped firmly by the top 40 In each hand, like an old-stone savage armed.
He moves in darkness as it seems to me,
Not of woods only and the shade of trees.
He will not go behind his father's saying,
And he likes having thought of it so well
45 He says again, "Good fences make good neighbors."

1914

Home Burial

He saw her from the bottom of the stairs
Before she saw him. She was starting down,
Looking back over her shoulder at some fear.
She took a doubtful step and then undid it
5 To raise herself and look again. He spoke Advancing toward her. "What is it you see
From up there always—for I want to know."
She turned and sank upon her skirts at that,
And her face changed from terrified to dull.
10 He said to gain time: "What is it you see,"
Mounting until she cowered under him.
"I will find out now—you must tell me, dear."
She, in her place, refused him any help
With the least stiffening of her neck and silence.
15 She let him look, sure that he wouldn't see,
Blind creature; and awhile he didn't see.
But at last he murmured, "Oh," and again, "Oh."

"What is it—what?" she said.

"Just that I see."

20 "You don't," she challenged. "Tell me what it is."

"The wonder is I didn't see at once.
I never noticed it from here before.
I must be wonted° to it—that's the reason. accustomed
The little graveyard where my people are!
25 So small the window frames the whole of it.
Not so much larger than a bedroom, is it?
There are three stones of slate and one of marble,

Broad-shouldered little slabs there in the sunlight
On the sidehill. We haven't to mind those.
30 But I understand: it is not the stones,
But the child's mound—"

"Don't, don't, don't, don't," she cried.

She withdrew shrinking from beneath his arm
That rested on the bannister, and slid downstairs;
35 And turned on him with such a daunting look,
He said twice over before he knew himself:
"Can't a man speak of his own child he's lost?"

"Not you! Oh, where's my hat? Oh, I don't need it!
I must get out of here. I must get air.
40 I don't know rightly whether any man can."

"Amy! Don't go to someone else this time.
Listen to me. I won't come down the stairs."
He sat and fixed his chin between his fists.
"There's something I should like to ask you, dear."

45 "You don't know how to ask it."

"Help me, then."

Her fingers moved the latch for all reply.

"My words are nearly always an offense.
I don't know how to speak of anything
50 So as to please you. But I might be taught
I should suppose. I can't say I see how.
A man must partly give up being a man
With women-folk. We could have some arrangement
By which I'd bind myself to keep hands off
55 Anything special you're a-mind to name.
Though I don't like such things 'twixt those that love.
Two that don't love can't live together without them.
But two that do can't live together with them."
She moved the latch a little. "Don't—don't go.
60 Don't carry it to someone else this time.
Tell me about it if it's something human.
Let me into your grief. I'm not so much
Unlike other folks as your standing there
Apart would make me out. Give me my chance.
65 I do think, though, you overdo it a little.
What was it brought you up to think it the thing
To take your mother-loss of a first child
So inconsolably—in the face of love.
You'd think his memory might be satisfied—"

70 "There you go sneering now!"

"I'm not, I'm not!
You make me angry. I'll come down to you.
God, what a woman! And it's come to this,
A man can't speak of his own child that's dead."

75 "You can't because you don't know how to speak.
If you had any feelings, you that dug
With your own hand—how could you?—his little grave;
I saw you from that very window there,
Making the gravel leap and leap in air,
80 Leap up, like that, like that, and land so lightly
And roll back down the mound beside the hole.
I thought, Who is that man? I didn't know you.
And I crept down the stairs and up the stairs
To look again, and still your spade kept lifting.
85 Then you came in. I heard your rumbling voice
Out in the kitchen, and I don't know why,
But I went near to see with my own eyes.
You could sit there with the stains on your shoes
Of the fresh earth from your own baby's grave
90 And talk about your everyday concerns.
You had stood the spade up against the wall
Outside there in the entry, for I saw it."

"I shall laugh the worst laugh I ever laughed.
I'm cursed. God, if I don't believe I'm cursed."

95 "I can repeat the very words you were saying.
Three foggy mornings and one rainy day
Will rot the best birch fence a man can build.
Think of it, talk like that at such a time!
What had how long it takes a birch to rot
100 To do with what was in the darkened parlor.
You couldn't care! The nearest friends can go
With anyone to death, comes so far short
They might as well not try to go at all.
No, from the time when one is sick to death,
105 One is alone, and he dies more alone.
Friends make pretense of following to the grave,
But before one is in it, their minds are turned
And making the best of their way back to life
And living people, and things they understand.
110 But the world's evil. I won't have grief so
If I can change it. Oh, I won't, I won't!"

"There, you have said it all and you feel better.
You won't go now. You're crying. Close the door.
The heart's gone out of it: why keep it up.
115 Amy! There's someone coming down the road!"

"You—oh, you think the talk is all. I must go—Somewhere out of this house. How can I make you—"

"If—you—do!" She was opening the door wider.
"Where do you mean to go? First tell me that.
120 I'll follow and bring you back by force. I will!—"

1914

After Apple-Picking

My long two-pointed ladder's sticking through a tree
Toward heaven still,
And there's a barrel that I didn't fill
Beside it, and there may be two or three
5 Apples I didn't pick upon some bough.
But I am done with apple-picking now.
Essence of winter sleep is on the night,
The scent of apples: I am drowsing off.
I cannot rub the strangeness from my sight
10 I got from looking through a pane of glass
I skimmed this morning from the drinking trough
And held against the world of hoary grass.
It melted, and I let it fall and break.
But I was well
15 Upon my way to sleep before it fell,
And I could tell
What form my dreaming was about to take.
Magnified apples appear and disappear,
Stem end and blossom end,
20 And every fleck of russet showing clear.
My instep arch not only keeps the ache,
It keeps the pressure of a ladder-round.
I feel the ladder sway as the boughs bend.
And I keep hearing from the cellar bin
25 The rumbling sound
Of load on load of apples coming in.
For I have had too much
Of apple-picking: I am overtired
Of the great harvest I myself desired.
30 There were ten thousand thousand fruit to touch,
Cherish in hand, lift down, and not let fall.
For all
That struck the earth,
No matter if not bruised or spiked with stubble,
35 Went surely to the cider-apple heap
As of no worth.
One can see what will trouble
This sleep of mine, whatever sleep it is.
Were he not gone,
40 The woodchuck could say whether it's like his Long sleep, as I describe its coming on,
Or just some human sleep.

1914

The Wood-Pile

Out walking in the frozen swamp one gray day,
I paused and said, "I will turn back from here.
No, I will go on farther—and we shall see."
The hard snow held me, save where now and then
5 One foot went through. The view was all in lines
Straight up and down of tall slim trees
Too much alike to mark or name a place by
So as to say for certain I was here
Or somewhere else: I was just far from home.
10 A small bird flew before me. He was careful
To put a tree between us when he lighted,
And say no word to tell me who he was
Who was so foolish as to think what he thought.
He thought that I was after him for a feather—
15 The white one in his tail; like one who takes Everything said as personal to himself.
One flight out sideways would have undeceived him.
And then there was a pile of wood for which
I forgot him and let his little fear
20 Carry him off the way I might have gone,
Without so much as wishing him good-night.
He went behind it to make his last stand.
It was a cord of maple, cut and split
And piled—and measured, four by four by eight.
25 And not another like it could I see.
No runner tracks in this year's snow looped near it.
And it was older sure than this year's cutting,
Or even last year's or the year's before.
The wood was gray and the bark warping off it 30 And the pile somewhat sunken. Clematis
Had wound strings round and round it like a bundle.
What held it though on one side was a tree
Still growing, and on one a stake and prop,
These latter about to fall. I thought that only 35 Someone who lived in turning to fresh tasks
Could so forget his handiwork on which
He spent himself, the labor of his ax,
And leave it there far from a useful fireplace
To warm the frozen swamp as best it could 40 With the slow smokeless burning of decay.

1914

The Road Not Taken

Two roads diverged in a yellow wood,
And sorry I could not travel both

And be one traveler, long I stood
And looked down one as far as I could
5 To where it bent in the undergrowth;

Then took the other, as just as fair,
And having perhaps the better claim,
Because it was grassy and wanted wear;
Though as for that the passing there
10 Had worn them really about the same,

And both that morning equally lay
In leaves no step had trodden black.
Oh, I kept the first for another day!
Yet knowing how way leads on to way,
15 I doubted if I should ever come back.

I shall be telling this with a sigh
Somewhere ages and ages hence:
Two roads diverged in a wood, and I—
I took the one less traveled by,
20 And that has made all the difference.

1916

The Oven Bird

There is a singer everyone has heard,
Loud, a mid-summer and a mid-wood bird,
Who makes the solid tree trunks sound again.
He says that leaves are old and that for flowers
5 Mid-summer is to spring as one to ten.
He says the early petal-fall is past
When pear and cherry bloom went down in showers
On sunny days a moment overcast;
And comes that other fall we name the fall.
10 He says the highway dust is over all.
The bird would cease and be as other birds
But that he knows in singing not to sing.
The question that he frames in all but words
Is what to make of a diminished thing.

1916

Birches

When I see birches bend to left and right
Across the lines of straighter darker trees,
I like to think some boy's been swinging them.

But swinging doesn't bend them down to stay
5 As ice-storms do. Often you must have seen them
Loaded with ice a sunny winter morning
After a rain. They click upon themselves
As the breeze rises, and turn many-colored
As the stir cracks and crazes their enamel.
10 Soon the sun's warmth makes them shed crystal shells
Shattering and avalanching on the snow-crust—
Such heaps of broken glass to sweep away
You'd think the inner dome of heaven had fallen.
They are dragged to the withered bracken° by the load, ferns
15 And they seem not to break; though once they are bowed
So low for long, they never right themselves:
You may see their trunks arching in the woods
Years afterwards, trailing their leaves on the ground
Like girls on hands and knees that throw their hair
20 Before them over their heads to dry in the sun.
But I was going to say when Truth broke in
With all her matter-of-fact about the ice-storm
I should prefer to have some boy bend them
As he went out and in to fetch the cows—
25 Some boy too far from town to learn baseball,
Whose only play was what he found himself,
Summer or winter, and could play alone.
One by one he subdued his father's trees
By riding them down over and over again
30 Until he took the stiffness out of them,
And not one but hung limp, not one was left
For him to conquer. He learned all there was
To learn about not launching out too soon
And so not carrying the tree away
35 Clear to the ground. He always kept his poise
To the top branches, climbing carefully
With the same pains you use to fill a cup
Up to the brim, and even above the brim.
Then he flung outward, feet first, with a swish,
40 Kicking his way down through the air to the ground.
So was I once myself a swinger of birches.
And so I dream of going back to be.
It's when I'm weary of considerations,
And life is too much like a pathless wood
45 Where your face burns and tickles with the cobwebs
Broken across it, and one eye is weeping
From a twig's having lashed across it open.
I'd like to get away from earth awhile
And then come back to it and begin over.
50 May no fate willfully misunderstand me
And half grant what I wish and snatch me away
Not to return. Earth's the right place for love:
I don't know where it's likely to go better.
I'd like to go by climbing a birch tree,
55 And climb black branches up a snow-white trunk

Toward heaven, till the tree could bear no more,
But dipped its top and set me down again.
That would be good both going and coming back.
One could do worse than be a swinger of birches.

1916

The Hill Wife

Loneliness

HER WORD

One ought not to have to care
So much as you and I
Care when the birds come round the house
To seem to say good-by;

5 Or care so much when they come back
With whatever it is they sing;
The truth being we are as much
Too glad for the one thing

As we are too sad for the other here—
10 With birds that fill their breasts
But with each other and themselves
And their built or driven nests.

House Fear

Always—I tell you this they learned—
Always at night when they returned
To the lonely house from far away
To lamps unlighted and fire gone gray,
5 They learned to rattle the lock and key
To give whatever might chance to be
Warning and time to be off in flight:
And preferring the out- to the in-door night,
They learned to leave the house-door wide
10 Until they had lit the lamp inside.

The Smile

HER WORD

I didn't like the way he went away.
That smile! It never came of being gay.
Still he smiled—did you see him?—I was sure!
Perhaps because we gave him only bread
5 And the wretch knew from that that we were poor.
Perhaps because he let us give instead

Of seizing from us as he might have seized.
Perhaps he mocked at us for being wed,
Or being very young (and he was pleased
10 To have a vision of us old and dead).
I wonder how far down the road he's got.
He's watching from the woods as like as not.

The Oft-Repeated Dream

She had no saying dark enough
For the dark pine that kept
Forever trying the window-latch
Of the room where they slept.

5 The tireless but ineffectual hands
That with every futile pass
Made the great tree seem as a little bird
Before the mystery of glass!

It never had been inside the room,
10 And only one of the two
Was afraid in an oft-repeated dream
Of what the tree might do.

The Impulse

It was too lonely for her there,
And too wild,
And since there were but two of them,
And no child,

5 And work was little in the house,
She was free,
And followed where he furrowed field,
Or felled tree.

She rested on a log and tossed
10 The fresh chips,
With a song only to herself
On her lips.

And once she went to break a bough
Of black alder.
15 She strayed so far she scarcely heard
When he called her—

And didn't answer—didn't speak—
Or return.
She stood, and then she ran and hid
20 In the fern.

He never found her, though he looked
Everywhere,

And he asked at her mother's house
  Was she there.

25 Sudden and swift and light as that
  The ties gave,
And he learned of finalities
  Besides the grave.

1916

Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening

Whose woods these are I think I know.
His house is in the village though;
He will not see me stopping here
To watch his woods fill up with snow.

5 My little horse must think it queer
To stop without a farmhouse near
Between the woods and frozen lake
The darkest evening of the year.

He gives his harness bells a shake
10 To ask if there is some mistake.
The only other sound's the sweep
Of easy wind and downy flake.

The woods are lovely, dark and deep,
But I have promises to keep,
15 And miles to go before I sleep,
And miles to go before I sleep.

1923

Acquainted with the Night

I have been one acquainted with the night.
I have walked out in rain—and back in rain.
I have outwalked the furthest city light.

I have looked down the saddest city lane.
5 I have passed by the watchman on his beat
And dropped my eyes, unwilling to explain.

I have stood still and stopped the sound of feet
When far away an interrupted cry
Came over houses from another street,

10 But not to call me back or say good-by;
And further still at an unearthly height,
One luminary clock against the sky

Proclaimed the time was neither wrong nor right.
I have been one acquainted with the night.

1928

West-Running Brook

"Fred, where is north?"

"North? North is there, my love.
The brook runs west."

"West-running Brook then call it."
5 (West-running Brook men call it to this day.)
"What does it think it's doing running west
When all the other country brooks flow east
To reach the ocean? It must be the brook
Can trust itself to go by contraries
10 The way I can with you—and you with me—
Because we're—we're—I don't know what we are.
What are we?"

"Young or new?"

"We must be something.
15 We've said we two. Let's change that to we three.
As you and I are married to each other,
We'll both be married to the brook. We'll build
Our bridge across it, and the bridge shall be
Our arm thrown over it asleep beside it.
20 Look, look, it's waving to us with a wave
To let us know it hears me."

"Why, my dear,
That wave's been standing off this jut of shore—"
(The black stream, catching on a sunken rock,
25 Flung backward on itself in one white wave,
And the white water rode the black forever,
Not gaining but not losing, like a bird
White feathers from the struggle of whose breast
Flecked the dark stream and flecked the darker pool
30 Below the point, and were at last driven wrinkled
In a white scarf against the far shore alders.)
"That wave's been standing off this jut of shore
Ever since rivers, I was going to say,
Were made in heaven. It wasn't waved to us."

35 "It wasn't, yet it was. If not to you
It was to me—in an annunciation."

"Oh, if you take it off to lady-land,
As't were the country of the Amazons[1]
We men must see you to the confines of 40 And leave you there, ourselves forbid to enter,—
It is your brook! I have no more to say."

"Yes, you have, too. Go on. You thought of something."

"Speaking of contraries, see how the brook
In that white wave runs counter to itself.
45 It is from that in water we were from Long, long before we were from any creature.
Here we, in our impatience of the steps,
Get back to the beginning of beginnings,
The stream of everything that runs away.
50 Some say existence like a Pirouot
And Pirouette,[2] forever in one place,
Stands still and dances, but it runs away,
It seriously, sadly, runs away
To fill the abyss' void with emptiness.
55 It flows beside us in this water brook,
But it flows over us. It flows between us
To separate us for a panic moment.
It flows between us, over us, and with us.
And it is time, strength, tone, light, life, and love—
60 And even substance lapsing unsubstantial;
The universal cataract of death
That spends to nothingness—and unresisted,
Save by some strange resistance in itself,
Not just a swerving, but a throwing back,
65 As if regret were in it and were sacred.
It has this throwing backward on itself
So that the fall of most of it is always Raising a little, sending up a little.
Our life runs down in sending up the clock.
70 The brook runs down in sending up our life.
The sun runs down in sending up the brook.
And there is something sending up the sun.
It is this backward motion toward the source,
Against the stream, that most we see ourselves in,
75 The tribute of the current to the source.
It is from this in nature we are from.
It is most us."

"Today will be the day
You said so."

1. Legendary female warriors who inhabited a country without men.

2. Traditional characters in French pantomime.

80 "No, today will be the day
You said the brook was called West-running Brook."

"Today will be the day of what we both said."

1928

Neither Out Far Nor In Deep

The people along the sand
All turn and look one way.
They turn their back on the land.
They look at the sea all day.

5 As long as it takes to pass
A ship keeps raising its hull;
The wetter ground like glass
Reflects a standing gull.

The land may vary more;
10 But wherever the truth may be—
The water comes ashore,
And the people look at the sea.

They cannot look out far.
They cannot look in deep.
15 But when was that ever a bar
To any watch they keep?

1936

Design

I found a dimpled spider, fat and white,
On a white heal-all,[3] holding up a moth
Like a white piece of rigid satin cloth—
Assorted characters of death and blight
5 Mixed ready to begin the morning right,
Like the ingredients of a witches' broth—
A snow-drop spider, a flower like a froth,
And dead wings carried like a paper kite.

What had that flower to do with being white,
10 The wayside blue and innocent heal-all?
What brought the kindred spider to that height,
Then steered the white moth thither in the night?

3. One of a variety of plants in the mint family; the flowers are usually violet-blue.

What but design of darkness to appall?—
If design govern in a thing so small.

1936

Provide, Provide

The witch that came (the withered hag)
To wash the steps with pail and rag,
Was once the beauty Abishag,[4]

The picture pride of Hollywood.
5 Too many fall from great and good
For you to doubt the likelihood.

Die early and avoid the fate.
Or if predestined to die late,
Make up your mind to die in state.

10 Make the whole stock exchange your own!
If need be occupy a throne,
Where nobody can call you crone.

Some have relied on what they knew;
Others on being simply true.
15 What worked for them might work for you.

No memory of having starred
Atones for later disregard,
Or keeps the end from being hard.

Better to go down dignified
20 With boughten friendship at your side
Than none at all. Provide, provide!

1934 1936

The Silken Tent

She is as in a field a silken tent
At midday when a sunny summer breeze
Has dried the dew and all its ropes relent,
So that in guys[5] it gently sways at ease,
5 And its supporting central cedar pole,
That is its pinnacle to heavenward
And signifies the sureness of the soul,

4. A beautiful maiden brought to warm King David in his old age (1 Kings 1.2–4).

5. Ropes or cables used to steady an object.

Seems to owe naught to any single cord,
But strictly held by none, is loosely bound
10 By countless silken ties of love and thought
To everything on earth the compass round,
And only by one's going slightly taut
In the capriciousness of summer air
Is of the slightest bondage made aware.

1942

Come In

As I came to the edge of the woods,
Thrush music—hark!
Now if it was dusk outside,
Inside it was dark.

5 Too dark in the woods for a bird
By sleight of wing
To better its perch for the night,
Though it still could sing.

The last of the light of the sun
10 That had died in the west
Still lived for one song more
In a thrush's breast.

Far in the pillared dark
Thrush music went—15 Almost like a call to come in
To the dark and lament.

But no, I was out for stars:
I would not come in.
I meant not even if asked,
20 And I hadn't been.

1942

Never Again Would Birds' Song Be the Same[6]

He would declare and could himself believe
That the birds there in all the garden round
From having heard the daylong voice of Eve
Had added to their own an oversound,
5 Her tone of meaning but without the words.
Admittedly an eloquence so soft

6. Cf. Genesis 2.18 ff., God's creation of Eve for Adam.

Could only have had an influence on birds
When call or laughter carried it aloft.
Be that as may be, she was in their song.
10 Moreover her voice upon their voices crossed
Had now persisted in the woods so long
That probably it never would be lost.
Never again would birds' song be the same.
And to do that to birds was why she came.

1942

The Most of It

He thought he kept the universe alone;
For all the voice in answer he could wake
Was but the mocking echo of his own
From some tree-hidden cliff across the lake.
5 Some morning from the boulder-broken beach
He would cry out on life, that what it wants
Is not its own love back in copy speech,
But counter-love, original response.
And nothing ever came of what he cried
10 Unless it was the embodiment that crashed
In the cliff's talus[7] on the other side,
And then in the far distant water splashed,
But after a time allowed for it to swim,
Instead of proving human when it neared
15 And someone else additional to him,
As a great buck it powerfully appeared,
Pushing the crumpled water up ahead,
And landed pouring like a waterfall,
And stumbled through the rocks with horny tread,
20 And forced the underbrush—and that was all.

1942

The Gift Outright

The land was ours before we were the land's.
She was our land more than a hundred years
Before we were her people. She was ours
In Massachusetts, in Virginia,
5 But we were England's, still colonials,
Possessing what we still were unpossessed by,
Possessed by what we now no more possessed.
Something we were withholding made us weak
Until we found it was ourselves

7. Sloping rock debris.

10 We were withholding from our land of living,
And forthwith found salvation in surrender.
Such as we were we gave ourselves outright
(The deed of gift was many deeds of war)
To the land vaguely realizing westward,
15 But still unstoried, artless, unenhanced,
Such as she was, such as she would become.

1942

Directive

Back out of all this now too much for us,
Back in a time made simple by the loss
Of detail, burned, dissolved, and broken off
Like graveyard marble sculpture in the weather,
5 There is a house that is no more a house
Upon a farm that is no more a farm
And in a town that is no more a town.
The road there, if you'll let a guide direct you
Who only has at heart your getting lost,
10 May seem as if it should have been a quarry—
Great monolithic knees the former town
Long since gave up pretense of keeping covered.
And there's a story in a book about it:
Besides the wear of iron wagon wheels
15 The ledges show lines ruled southeast northwest,
The chisel work of an enormous Glacier
That braced his feet against the Arctic Pole.
You must not mind a certain coolness from him
Still said to haunt this side of Panther Mountain.
20 Nor need you mind the serial ordeal
Of being watched from forty cellar holes
As if by eye pairs out of forty firkins.° small wooden tubs
As for the woods' excitement over you
That sends light rustle rushes to their leaves,
25 Charge that to upstart inexperience.
Where were they all not twenty years ago?
They think too much of having shaded out
A few old pecker-fretted[8] apple trees.
Make yourself up a cheering song of how 30 Someone's road home from work this once was,
Who may be just ahead of you on foot
Or creaking with a buggy load of grain.
The height of the adventure is the height
Of country where two village cultures faded
35 Into each other. Both of them are lost.
And if you're lost enough to find yourself
By now, pull in your ladder road behind you
And put a sign up CLOSED to all but me.

8. I.e., marked by woodpeckers.

Then make yourself at home. The only field
40 Now left's no bigger than a harness gall.[9]
First there's the children's house of make believe,
Some shattered dishes underneath a pine,
The playthings in the playhouse of the children.
Weep for what little things could make them glad.
45 Then for the house that is no more a house,
But only a belilaced cellar hole,
Now slowly closing like a dent in dough.
This was no playhouse but a house in earnest.
Your destination and your destiny's
50 A brook that was the water of the house,
Cold as a spring as yet so near its source,
Too lofty and original to rage.
(We know the valley streams that when aroused
Will leave their tatters hung on barb and thorn.)
55 I have kept hidden in the instep arch
Of an old cedar at the waterside
A broken drinking goblet like the Grail
Under a spell so the wrong ones can't find it,
So can't get saved, as Saint Mark says they mustn't.[1]
60 (I stole the goblet from the children's playhouse.)
Here are your waters and your watering place.
Drink and be whole again beyond confusion.

1947

AMY LOWELL
1874–1925

Patterns

I walk down the garden paths,
And all the daffodils
Are blowing, and the bright blue squills.[1]
I walk down the patterned garden-paths
5 In my stiff, brocaded gown.
With my powdered hair and jewelled fan,
I too am a rare
Pattern. As I wander down
The garden paths.

10 My dress is richly figured,
And the train
Makes a pink and silver stain

9. A sore caused by chafing against a harness.
1. Cf. Mark 16.16: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." The Grail: the cup used by Jesus at the Last Supper, the object of many quests in medieval and Arthurian romance.
1. Plants of the lily family.

On the gravel, and the thrift
Of the borders.
15 Just a plate of current fashion,
Tripping by in high-heeled, ribboned shoes.
Not a softness anywhere about me,
Only whalebone and brocade.
And I sink on a seat in the shade
20 Of a lime tree. For my passion Wars against the stiff brocade.
The daffodils and squills
Flutter in the breeze
As they please.
25 And I weep;
For the lime-tree is in blossom
And one small flower has dropped upon my bosom.

And the plashing° of waterdrops — splashing
In the marble fountain
30 Comes down the garden-paths.
The dripping never stops.
Underneath my stiffened gown
Is the softness of a woman bathing in a marble basin,
A basin in the midst of hedges grown
35 So thick, she cannot see her lover hiding,
But she guesses he is near,
And the sliding of the water
Seems the stroking of a dear
Hand upon her.
40 What is Summer in a fine brocaded gown!
I should like to see it lying in a heap upon the ground.
All the pink and silver crumpled up on the ground.

I would be the pink and silver as I ran along the paths,
And he would stumble after,
45 Bewildered by my laughter.
I should see the sun flashing from his sword-hilt and the buckles on his shoes.
I would choose
To lead him in a maze along the patterned paths,
A bright and laughing maze for my heavy-booted lover.
50 Till he caught me in the shade,
And the buttons of his waistcoat bruised my body as he clasped me,
Aching, melting, unafraid.
With the shadows of the leaves and the sundrops,
And the plopping of the waterdrops,
55 All about us in the open afternoon—
I am very like to swoon
With the weight of this brocade,
For the sun sifts through the shade.

Underneath the fallen blossom
60 In my bosom,
Is a letter I have hid.

It was brought to me this morning by a rider from the Duke.
"Madam, we regret to inform you that Lord Hartwell Died in action Thursday se'nnight."° a week ago
65 As I read it in the white, morning sunlight,
The letters squirmed like snakes.
"Any answer, Madam," said my footman.
"No," I told him.
"See that the messenger takes some refreshment.
70 No, no answer."
And I walked into the garden,
Up and down the patterned paths,
In my stiff, correct brocade.
The blue and yellow flowers stood up proudly in the sun,
75 Each one.
I stood upright too,
Held rigid to the pattern
By the stiffness of my gown.
Up and down I walked,
80 Up and down.

In a month he would have been my husband.
In a month, here, underneath this lime,
We would have broke the pattern;
He for me, and I for him,
85 He as Colonel, I as Lady,
On this shady seat.
He had a whim
That sunlight carried blessing.
And I answered, "It shall be as you have said."
90 Now he is dead.

In Summer and in Winter I shall walk
Up and down
The patterned garden-paths
In my stiff, brocaded gown.
95 The squills and daffodils
Will give place to pillared roses, and to asters, and to snow.
I shall go
Up and down,
In my gown.
100 Gorgeously arrayed,
Boned and stayed.
And the softness of my body will be guarded from embrace
By each button, hook, and lace.
For the man who should loose me is dead,
105 Fighting with the Duke in Flanders,[2]
In a pattern called a war.
Christ! What are patterns for?

1916

2. A medieval country; later the term for a region comprised of parts of France, Belgium, and the Netherlands. The poem was written during World War I, when Flanders was also a famous site of battle.

The Weather-Cock Points South

I put your leaves aside,
One by one:
The stiff, broad outer leaves;
The smaller ones,
5 Pleasant to touch, veined with purple;
The glazed inner leaves.
One by one
I parted you from your leaves,
Until you stood up like a white flower
10 Swaying slightly in the evening wind.

White flower,
Flower of wax, of jade, of unstreaked agate;
Flower with surfaces of ice,
With shadows faintly crimson.
15 Where in all the garden is there such a flower?
The stars crowd through the lilac leaves
To look at you.
The low moon brightens you with silver.

The bud is more than the calyx.[3]
20 There is nothing to equal a white bud,
Of no colour, and of all,
Burnished by moonlight,
Thrust upon by a softly-swinging wind.

1919

GERTRUDE STEIN
1874–1946

From Stanzas in Meditation[1]

Part I

STANZA XIII

She may count three little daisies very well
By multiplying to either six nine or fourteen
Or she can be well mentioned as twelve
Which they may like which they can like soon

3. Outermost group of the parts of a flower.

1. Written in the same year as Stein's hugely popular Autobiography of Alice B. Toklas, Stanzas in Meditation is a long-neglected five-part poem with autobiographical elements, but which resists straightforward interpretation. "These austere 'stanzas' are made up almost entirely of colorless connecting words such as 'where,' 'which,' 'there,' 'of,' 'not,' 'have,' 'about,' and so on, though now and then Miss Stein throws in an orange, a lilac, or an Albert to remind us that it really is the world, our world, that she has been talking about" [American poet John Ashbery (b. 1927; see pp. 1736–40)]. In the Autobiography, Stein calls the Stanzas "her real achievement of the commonplace."

5 Or more than ever which they wish as a button
Just as much as they arrange which they wish
Or they can attire where they need as which say
Can they call a hat or a hat a day
Made merry because it is so.

Part III

STANZA II

I think very well of Susan but I do not know her name
I think very well of Ellen but which is not the same
I think very well of Paul I tell him not to do so I think very well of Francis Charles but do I do so
5 I think very well of Thomas but I do not not do so I think very well of not very well of William
I think very well of any very well of him
I think very well of him.
It is remarkable how quickly they learn
10 But if they learn and it is very remarkable how quickly they learn
It makes not only but by and by
And they can not only be not here
But not there
Which after all makes no difference
15 After all this does not make any does not make any difference
I add added it to it.
I could rather be rather be here.

STANZA V

It is not a range of a mountain
Of average of a range of a average mountain
Nor can they of which of which of arrange
To have been not which they which 5 Can add a mountain to this.
Upper an add it then maintain
That if they were busy so to speak
Add it to and
It not only why they could not add ask
10 Or when just when more each other
There is no each other as they like
They add why then emerge an add in
It is of absolutely no importance how often they add it.

Part V

STANZA XXXVIII

Which I wish to say is this
There is no beginning to an end
But there is a beginning and an end
To beginning.
5 Why yes of course.

Any one can learn that north of course
Is not only north but north as north
Why were they worried.
What I wish to say is this.
10 Yes of course

STANZA LXIII

I wish that I had spoken only of it all.

1932 1956

TRUMBULL STICKNEY
1874–1904

[And, the Last Day Being Come, Man Stood Alone]

And, the last day being come,[1] Man stood alone
Ere sunrise on the world's dismantled verge,° edge
Awaiting how from everywhere should urge
The Coming of the Lord. And, behold, none

5 Did come,—but indistinct from every realm
Of earth and air and water, growing more
And louder, shriller, heavier, a roar
Up the dun° atmosphere did overwhelm dark

His ears; and as he looked affrighted round
10 Every manner of beast innumerable
All thro' the shadows crying grew, until
The wailing was like grass upon the ground.

Asudden then within his human side
Their anguish, since the goad[2] he wielded first,
15 And, since he gave them not to drink, their thirst,
Darted compressed and vital.—As he died,

Low in the East now lighting gorgeously
He saw the last sea-serpent iris-mailed[3]
Which, with a spear transfixèd, yet availed
20 To pluck the sun down into the dead sea.

1905

1. Stickney's apocalyptic vision of the Lord's coming partakes of imagery in Revelation and other books of the Bible, but is essentially original.

2. A pointed stick for driving cattle and other animals.

3. In rainbow-colored armor.

An Athenian Garden

The burned and dusty garden said:
"My leaves are echoes, and thy earth
Is packed with footsteps of the dead.

"The strength of spring-time brought to birth
5 Some needles on the crooked fir,—
A rose, a laurel[4]—little worth.

"Come here, ye dreaming souls that err
Among the immortals of the grave:[5]
My summer is your sepulchre.

10 "On earth what darker voices rave
Than now this sea-breeze, driving dust
And whirling radiance wave on wave,

"With lulls so fearful thro' the gust
That on the shapeless flower-bed
15 Like timber splits the yellow crust.

"O thirsty, thirsty are the dead,[6]
Still thirsty, ever unallayed.
Where is no water, bring no bread."

I then had almost answer made,
20 When round the path in pleasure drew
Three golden children to the shade.

They stirred the dust with pail and hoe.
Then did the littlest from his fears
Come up and with his eyes of blue

25 Give me some berries seriously.
And as he turned to his brother, I Looked after him thro' happy tears.

1903 1905

4. The laurel is a symbol of glory; the fir, of time; the rose, of love.
5. Stickney, a devotee of the ancient Greek philosopher Plato, may be referring to Plato's Myth of Er, according to which immortal souls are given lots that allow them to choose, wisely or unwisely, from an assortment of next lives (Republic 10).
6. In Greek mythology, the dead are often represented as thirsty.

From Fragments

IX[7]

I hear a river thro' the valley wander
Whose water runs, the song alone remaining.
A rainbow stands and summer passes under.

1905

CARL SANDBURG
1878–1967

Chicago

Hog Butcher for the World,
Tool Maker, Stacker of Wheat,
Player with Railroads and the Nation's Freight Handler;
Stormy, husky, brawling,
5 City of the Big Shoulders:

They tell me you are wicked and I believe them, for I have seen your painted women under the gas lamps luring the farm boys.
And they tell me you are crooked and I answer: Yes, it is true I have seen the gunman kill and go free to kill again.
And they tell me you are brutal and my reply is: On the faces of women and children I have seen the marks of wanton hunger.
And having answered so I turn once more to those who sneer at this my city, and I give them back the sneer and say to them:
10 Come and show me another city with lifted head singing so proud to be alive and coarse and strong and cunning.
Flinging magnetic curses amid the toil of piling job on job, here is a tall bold slugger set vivid against the little soft cities;
Fierce as a dog with tongue lapping for action, cunning as a savage pitted against the wilderness, Bareheaded,
Shoveling,
15 Wrecking,
Planning,
Building, breaking, rebuilding,
Under the smoke, dust all over his mouth, laughing with white teeth,
Under the terrible burden of destiny laughing as a young man laughs,
20 Laughing even as an ignorant fighter laughs who has never lost a battle,

7. Cf. John Hollander's homage to this poem, "Variations on a Fragment by Trumbull Stickney" (p. 1777).

Bragging and laughing that under his wrist is the pulse, and under his ribs the heart of the people, Laughing!
Laughing the stormy, husky, brawling laughter of Youth, half-naked, sweating, proud to be Hog Butcher, Tool Maker, Stacker of Wheat, Player with Railroads and Freight Handler to the Nation.

1916

Grass

Pile the bodies high at Austerlitz[1] and Waterloo.
Shovel them under and let me work—
I am the grass; I cover all.

And pile them high at Gettysburg
5 And pile them high at Ypres and Verdun.
Shovel them under and let me work.
Two years, ten years, and passengers ask the conductor:
What place is this?
Where are we now?

10 I am the grass.
Let me work.

1918

EDWARD THOMAS
1878–1917

Adlestrop[1]

Yes, I remember Adlestrop—
The name, because one afternoon
Of heat the express-train drew up there
Unwontedly. It was late June.

5 The steam hissed. Someone cleared his throat.
No one left and no one came
On the bare platform. What I saw
Was Adlestrop—only the name

1. The places listed here are sites of major, bloody battles in the Napoleonic Wars, the Civil War, and World War I.

1. Village in Gloucestershire, southwest-central England.

And willows, willow-herb, and grass,
10 And meadowsweet, and haycocks dry,
No whit less still and lonely fair
Than the high cloudlets in the sky.

And for that minute a blackbird sang
Close by, and round him, mistier,
15 Farther and farther, all the birds
Of Oxfordshire and Gloucestershire.

1915 1917

The Owl

Downhill I came, hungry, and yet not starved;
Cold, yet had heat within me that was proof
Against the North wind; tired, yet so that rest
Had seemed the sweetest thing under a roof.

5 Then at the inn I had food, fire, and rest,
Knowing how hungry, cold, and tired was I.
All of the night was quite barred out except
An owl's cry, a most melancholy cry

Shaken out long and clear upon the hill,
10 No merry note, nor cause of merriment,
But one telling me plain what I escaped
And others could not, that night, as in I went.

And salted was my food, and my repose,
Salted and sobered, too, by the bird's voice
15 Speaking for all who lay under the stars,
Soldiers and poor, unable to rejoice.

1917

In Memoriam [Easter 1915]

The flowers left thick at nightfall in the wood
This Eastertide call into mind the men,
Now far from home, who, with their sweethearts, should
Have gathered them and will do never again.

1915 1917

Rain

Rain, midnight rain, nothing but the wild rain
On this bleak hut, and solitude, and me
Remembering again that I shall die
And neither hear the rain nor give it thanks
5 For washing me cleaner than I have been Since I was born into this solitude.
Blessed are the dead that the rain rains upon:
But here I pray that none whom once I loved
Is dying tonight or lying still awake
10 Solitary, listening to the rain,
Either in pain or thus in sympathy
Helpless among the living and the dead,
Like a cold water among broken reeds,
Myriads of broken reeds all still and stiff,
15 Like me who have no love which this wild rain
Has not dissolved except the love of death,
If love it be towards what is perfect and Cannot, the tempest tells me, disappoint.

1916 1917

As the team's head brass[2]

As the team's head brass flashed out on the turn
The lovers disappeared into the wood.
I sat among the boughs of the fallen elm
That strewed an angle of the fallow,[3] and 5 Watched the plough narrowing a yellow square
Of charlock.[4] Every time the horses turned Instead of treading me down, the ploughman leaned
Upon the handles to say or ask a word,
About the weather, next about the war.
10 Scraping the share he faced towards the wood,
And screwed along the furrow till the brass flashed
Once more.
The blizzard felled the elm whose crest
I sat in, by a woodpecker's round hole,
The ploughman said. "When will they take it away?"
15 "When the war's over." So the talk began—
One minute and an interval of ten,
A minute more and the same interval.
"Have you been out?" "No." "And don't want to, perhaps?"
"If I could only come back again, I should.
20 I could spare an arm. I shouldn't want to lose

2. A team of horses pulling a plow, the head brass being the ornamental brass plaque attached to their bridle.

3. Cultivated land left unplanted during the growing season.

4. Wild mustard, a common, yellow field weed.

A leg. If I should lose my head, why, so,
I should want nothing more. . . . Have many gone
From here?" "Yes." "Many lost?" "Yes, a good few.
Only two teams work on the farm this year.
25 One of my mates is dead. The second day
In France they killed him. It was back in March,
The very night of the blizzard, too. Now if He had stayed here we should have moved the tree."
"And I should not have sat here. Everything 30 Would have been different. For it would have been Another world." "Ay, and a better, though
If we could see all all might seem good." Then
The lovers came out of the wood again:
The horses started and for the last time
35 I watched the clods crumble and topple over
After the ploughshare and the stumbling team.

1916 1917

WALLACE STEVENS
1879–1955

The Snow Man

One must have a mind of winter
To regard the frost and the boughs
Of the pine-trees crusted with snow;

And have been cold a long time
5 To behold the junipers shagged° with ice, shaggy
The spruces rough in the distant glitter

Of the January sun; and not to think
Of any misery in the sound of the wind,
In the sound of a few leaves,

10 Which is the sound of the land
Full of the same wind
That is blowing in the same bare place

For the listener, who listens in the snow,
And, nothing himself, beholds
15 Nothing that is not there and the nothing that is.

1923

The Emperor of Ice-Cream

Call the roller of big cigars,
The muscular one, and bid him whip

In kitchen cups concupiscent curds.
Let the wenches dawdle in such dress
5 As they are used to wear, and let the boys
Bring flowers in last month's newspapers.
Let be be finale of seem.
The only emperor is the emperor of ice-cream.

Take from the dresser of deal.° pine or firwood
10 Lacking the three glass knobs, that sheet
On which she embroidered fantails° once fantail pigeons
And spread it so as to cover her face.
If her horny feet protrude, they come
To show how cold she is, and dumb.
15 Let the lamp affix its beam.
The only emperor is the emperor of ice-cream.

1923

Sunday Morning

I

Complacencies of the peignoir,° and late negligée
Coffee and oranges in a sunny chair,
And the green freedom of a cockatoo
Upon a rug mingle to dissipate
5 The holy hush of ancient sacrifice.
She dreams a little, and she feels the dark
Encroachment of that old catastrophe,
As a calm darkens among water-lights.
The pungent oranges and bright, green wings
10 Seem things in some procession of the dead,
Winding across wide water, without sound.
The day is like wide water, without sound,
Stilled for the passing of her dreaming feet
Over the seas, to silent Palestine,
15 Dominion of the blood and sepulchre.[1]

2

Why should she give her bounty to the dead?
What is divinity if it can come
Only in silent shadows and in dreams?
Shall she not find in comforts of the sun,
20 In pungent fruit and bright, green wings, or else
In any balm or beauty of the earth,
Things to be cherished like the thought of heaven?
Divinity must live within herself:
Passions of rain, or moods in falling snow;
25 Grievings in loneliness, or unsubdued
Elations when the forest blooms; gusty

1. I.e., the holy sepulcher, the cave in Jerusalem where Jesus was entombed; at the Last Supper, Jesus referred to his blood as sealing "the covenant between God and his people" (Matthew 26.28).

Emotions on wet roads on autumn nights;
All pleasures and all pains, remembering
The bough of summer and the winter branch.
30 These are the measures destined for her soul.

3

Jove[2] in the clouds had his inhuman birth.
No mother suckled him, no sweet land gave
Large-mannered motions to his mythy mind
He moved among us, as a muttering king,
35 Magnificent, would move among his hinds,[3]
Until our blood, commingling, virginal,
With heaven, brought such requital to desire
The very hinds discerned it, in a star.
Shall our blood fail? Or shall it come to be 40 The blood of paradise? And shall the earth
Seem all of paradise that we shall know?
The sky will be much friendlier then than now,
A part of labor and a part of pain,
And next in glory to enduring love,
45 Not this dividing and indifferent blue.

4

She says, "I am content when wakened birds,
Before they fly, test the reality
Of misty fields, by their sweet questionings;
But when the birds are gone, and their warm fields
50 Return no more, where, then, is paradise?"
There is not any haunt of prophecy,
Nor any old chimera[4] of the grave,
Neither the golden underground, nor isle
Melodious, where spirits gat them home,
55 Nor visionary south, nor cloudy palm Remote on heaven's hill, that has endured
As April's green endures; or will endure
Like her remembrance of awakened birds,
Or her desire for June and evening, tipped
60 By the consummation of the swallow's wings.

5

She says, "But in contentment I still feel
The need of some imperishable bliss."
Death is the mother of beauty; hence from her,
Alone, shall come fulfilment to our dreams
65 And our desires. Although she strews the leaves
Of sure obliteration on our paths,
The path sick sorrow took, the many paths

2. Or Jupiter (meaning "sky father"), supreme Roman god. His Greek counterpart, Zeus, was suckled by a goat in his childhood.
3. Farmhands, rustics; alludes to the shepherds who saw the Star of Bethlehem, which signaled Jesus' birth.
4. In Greek mythology, a monster with a lion's head, goat's body, and serpent's tail. Also, an illusion or fabrication of the mind.

Where triumph rang its brassy phrase, or love
Whispered a little out of tenderness,
70 She makes the willow shiver in the sun
For maidens who were wont° to sit and gaze accustomed
Upon the grass, relinquished to their feet.
She causes boys to pile new plums and pears
On disregarded plate.[5] The maidens taste
75 And stray impassioned in the littering leaves.

6

Is there no change of death in paradise?
Does ripe fruit never fall? Or do the boughs
Hang always heavy in that perfect sky,
Unchanging, yet so like our perishing earth,
80 With rivers like our own that seek for seas
They never find, the same receding shores
That never touch with inarticulate pang?
Why set the pear upon those river-banks
Or spice the shores with odors of the plum?
85 Alas, that they should wear our colors there,
The silken weavings of our afternoons,
And pick the strings of our insipid lutes!
Death is the mother of beauty, mystical,
Within whose burning bosom we devise 90 Our earthly mothers waiting, sleeplessly.

7

Supple and turbulent, a ring of men
Shall chant in orgy on a summer morn
Their boisterous devotion to the sun,
Not as a god, but as a god might be,
95 Naked among them, like a savage source.
Their chant shall be a chant of paradise,
Out of their blood, returning to the sky;
And in their chant shall enter, voice by voice,
The windy lake wherein their lord delights,
100 The trees, like serafin,[6] and echoing hills,
That choir among themselves long afterward.
They shall know well the heavenly fellowship
Of men that perish and of summer morn.
And whence they came and whither they shall go
105 The dew upon their feet shall manifest.

8

She hears, upon that water without sound,
A voice that cries, "The tomb in Palestine
Is not the porch of spirits lingering.
It is the grave of Jesus, where he lay."
110 We live in an old chaos of the sun,

5. "Plate is used in the sense of so-called family plate. Disregarded refers to the disuse into which things fall that have been possessed for a long time. I mean, therefore, that death releases and renews" [Letters of Wallace Stevens, 1966, 183–84].
6. I.e., seraphim, the highest order of angels.

Or old dependency of day and night,
Or island solitude, unsponsored, free,
Of that wide water, inescapable.
Deer walk upon our mountains, and the quail
115 Whistle about us their spontaneous cries;
Sweet berries ripen in the wilderness;
And, in the isolation of the sky,
At evening, casual flocks of pigeons make
Ambiguous undulations as they sink,
120 Downward to darkness, on extended wings.

1915 1923

Anecdote of the Jar

I placed a jar in Tennessee,
And round it was, upon a hill.
It made the slovenly wilderness
Surround that hill.

5 The wilderness rose up to it,
And sprawled around, no longer wild.
The jar was round upon the ground
And tall and of a port in air.

It took dominion everywhere.
10 The jar was gray and bare.
It did not give of bird or bush,
Like nothing else in Tennessee.

1923

Thirteen Ways of Looking at a Blackbird

I

Among twenty snowy mountains,
The only moving thing
Was the eye of the blackbird.

II

I was of three minds,
5 Like a tree
In which there are three blackbirds.

III

The blackbird whirled in the autumn winds.
It was a small part of the pantomime.

IV

A man and a woman
10 Are one.
A man and a woman and a blackbird
Are one.

V

I do not know which to prefer,
The beauty of inflections
15 Or the beauty of innuendoes,
The blackbird whistling
Or just after.

VI

Icicles filled the long window
With barbaric glass.
20 The shadow of the blackbird
Crossed it to and fro.
The mood
Traced in the shadow
An indecipherable cause.

VII

25 O thin men of Haddam,[7]
Why do you imagine golden birds?
Do you not see how the blackbird
Walks around the feet
Of the women about you?

VIII

30 I know noble accents
And lucid, inescapable rhythms;
But I know, too,
That the blackbird is involved
In what I know.

IX

35 When the blackbird flew out of sight,
It marked the edge
Of one of many circles.

7. A town in Connecticut. Stevens explains: "The thin men of Haddam are entirely fictitious. . . . I just like the name. . . . It has a completely Yankee sound" [Letters, 340].

X

At the sight of blackbirds
Flying in a green light,
40 Even the bawds of euphony[8]
Would cry out sharply.

XI

He rode over Connecticut
In a glass coach.
Once, a fear pierced him
45 In that he mistook
The shadow of his equipage° — coach
For blackbirds.

XII

The river is moving.
The blackbird must be flying.

XIII

50 It was evening all afternoon.
It was snowing
And it was going to snow.
The blackbird sat
In the cedar-limbs.

1923

Peter Quince at the Clavier[9]

I

Just as my fingers on these keys
Make music, so the selfsame sounds
On my spirit make a music, too.

Music is feeling, then, not sound;
5 And thus it is that what I feel,
Here in this room, desiring you,

Thinking of your blue-shadowed silk,
Is music. It is like the strain
Waked in the elders by Susanna.[1]

8. I.e., madams or prostitutes of sweet sound.
9. Early keyboard instrument. Peter Quince: the stage manager of the rustic actors who clumsily perform a "tragedy" within Shakespeare's comedy A Midsummer Night's Dream. Also, an allusion to the poem "Quince to Lilac: to G. H.," from Bliss Carmen and Richard Hovey's once-popular book More Songs from Vagabondia (1895).
1. In Daniel 13, a chapter in the Apocrypha, Susanna refuses seduction by two Hebrew elders, or tribal councilors, who then falsely accuse her of a liaison with a young man. Daniel protects her from being punished.

10 Of a green evening, clear and warm,
She bathed in her still garden, while
The red-eyed elders watching, felt

The basses of their beings throb
In witching chords, and their thin blood
15 Pulse pizzicati of Hosanna.[2]

II

In the green water, clear and warm,
Susanna lay.
She searched
The touch of springs,
20 And found
Concealed imaginings.
She sighed,
For so much melody.

Upon the bank, she stood 25 In the cool
Of spent emotions.
She felt, among the leaves,
The dew
Of old devotions.

30 She walked upon the grass,
Still quavering.
The winds were like her maids,
On timid feet,
Fetching her woven scarves,
35 Yet wavering.

A breath upon her hand
Muted the night.
She turned—
A cymbal crashed,
40 And roaring horns.

III

Soon, with a noise like tambourines,
Came her attendant Byzantines.[3]

They wondered why Susanna cried
Against the elders by her side;

45 And as they whispered, the refrain
Was like a willow swept by rain.

2. Great praise. Pizzicati: musical passages in which strings are plucked.
3. People of the Byzantine Empire (fourth through the fifteenth centuries); an anachronism, as they postdated Susanna.

Anon, their lamps' uplifted flame
Revealed Susanna and her shame.

And then, the simpering Byzantines
50 Fled, with a noise like tambourines.

IV

Beauty is momentary in the mind—
The fitful tracing of a portal;
But in the flesh it is immortal.

The body dies; the body's beauty lives.
55 So evenings die, in their green going,
A wave, interminably flowing.
So gardens die, their meek breath scenting
The cowl of winter, done repenting.
So maidens die, to the auroral
60 Celebration of a maiden's choral.

Susanna's music touched the bawdy strings
Of those white elders; but, escaping,
Left only Death's ironic scraping.
Now, in its immortality, it plays
65 On the clear viol of her memory,
And makes a constant sacrament of praise.

1923 1931

The Idea of Order at Key West[4]

She sang beyond the genius[5] of the sea.
The water never formed to mind or voice,
Like a body wholly body, fluttering
Its empty sleeves; and yet its mimic motion
5 Made constant cry, caused constantly a cry,
That was not ours although we understood,
Inhuman, of the veritable ocean.
The sea was not a mask. No more was she.
The song and water were not medleyed sound
10 Even if what she sang was what she heard,
Since what she sang was uttered word by word.
It may be that in all her phrases stirred
The grinding water and the gasping wind;
But it was she and not the sea we heard.
15 For she was the maker of the song she sang.
The ever-hooded, tragic-gestured sea
Was merely a place by which she walked to sing.
Whose spirit is this? we said, because we knew

4. One of the coral islands off the south coast of Florida.

5. The pervading and guardian spirit of a place.

It was the spirit that we sought and knew
20 That we should ask this often as she sang.

If it was only the dark voice of the sea
That rose, or even colored by many waves;
If it was only the outer voice of sky
And cloud, of the sunken coral water-walled,
25 However clear, it would have been deep air,
The heaving speech of air, a summer sound
Repeated in a summer without end
And sound alone. But it was more than that,
More even than her voice, and ours, among 30 The meaningless plungings of water and the wind,
Theatrical distances, bronze shadows heaped
On high horizons, mountainous atmospheres
Of sky and sea.
It was her voice that made
35 The sky acutest at its vanishing.
She measured to the hour its solitude.
She was the single artificer of the world
In which she sang. And when she sang, the sea,
Whatever self it had, became the self 40 That was her song, for she was the maker. Then we,
As we beheld her striding there alone,
Knew that there never was a world for her
Except the one she sang and, singing, made.

Ramon Fernandez,[6] tell me, if you know,
45 Why, when the singing ended and we turned Toward the town, tell why the glassy lights,
The lights in the fishing boats at anchor there,
As the night descended, tilting in the air,
Mastered the night and portioned out the sea,
50 Fixing emblazoned zones and fiery poles,
Arranging, deepening, enchanting night.

Oh! Blessed rage for order, pale Ramon,
The maker's rage to order words of the sea,
Words of the fragrant portals, dimly-starred,
55 And of ourselves and of our origins,
In ghostlier demarcations, keener sounds.

1936

Waving Adieu, Adieu, Adieu[7]

That would be waving and that would be crying,
Crying and shouting and meaning farewell,

6. Stevens claimed (Letters, 798) that he had simply combined two common Spanish names at random, without conscious reference to the French literary critic and essayist Ramon Fernandez (1894–1944).
7. Cf. Mark Strand's homage to this poem in Dark Harbor, XVI (p. 1864).

Farewell in the eyes and farewell at the centre,
Just to stand still without moving a hand.

5 In a world without heaven to follow, the stops
Would be endings, more poignant than partings, profounder,
And that would be saying farewell, repeating farewell,
Just to be there and just to behold.

To be one's singular self, to despise
10 The being that yielded so little, acquired
So little, too little to care, to turn
To the ever-jubilant weather, to sip

One's cup and never to say a word,
Or to sleep or just to lie there still,
15 Just to be there, just to be beheld,
That would be bidding farewell, be bidding farewell.

One likes to practice the thing. They practice,
Enough, for heaven. Ever-jubilant,
What is there here but weather, what spirit
20 Have I except it comes from the sun?

1936

The Poems of Our Climate

I

Clear water in a brilliant bowl,
Pink and white carnations. The light
In the room more like a snowy air,
Reflecting snow. A newly-fallen snow
5 At the end of winter when afternoons return.
Pink and white carnations—one desires
So much more than that. The day itself
Is simplified: a bowl of white,
Cold, a cold porcelain, low and round,
10 With nothing more than the carnations there.

II

Say even that this complete simplicity
Stripped one of all one's torments, concealed
The evilly compounded, vital I
And made it fresh in a world of white,
15 A world of clear water, brilliant-edged,
Still one would want more, one would need more,
More than a world of white and snowy scents.

III

There would still remain the never-resting mind,
So that one would want to escape, come back 20 To what had been so long composed.
The imperfect is our paradise.
Note that, in this bitterness, delight,
Since the imperfect is so hot in us,
Lies in flawed words and stubborn sounds.

1942

The House Was Quiet and the World Was Calm

The house was quiet and the world was calm.
The reader became the book; and summer night

Was like the conscious being of the book.
The house was quiet and the world was calm.

5 The words were spoken as if there was no book,
Except that the reader leaned above the page,

Wanted to lean, wanted much most to be
The scholar to whom his book is true, to whom

The summer night is like a perfection of thought.
10 The house was quiet because it had to be.

The quiet was part of the meaning, part of the mind:
The access of perfection to the page.

And the world was calm. The truth in a calm world,
In which there is no other meaning, itself

15 Is calm, itself is summer and night, itself
Is the reader leaning late and reading there.

1947

Table Talk

Granted, we die for good.
Life, then, is largely a thing
Of happens to like, not should.

And that, too, granted, why
5 Do I happen to like red bush,
Gray grass and green-gray sky?

What else remains? But red,
Gray, green, why those of all?
That is not what I said:

10 Not those of all. But those.
One likes what one happens to like.
One likes the way red grows.

It cannot matter at all.
Happens to like is one 15 Of the ways things happen to fall.

ca. 1935 1957

A Room on a Garden

O stagnant east-wind, palsied mare,
Giddap! The ruby roses' hair
Must blow.

Behold how order is the end
5 Of everything. The roses bend
As one.

Order, the law of hoes and rakes,
May be perceived in windy quakes
And squalls.

10 The gardener searches earth and sky
The truth in nature to espy
In vain.

He well might find that eager balm
In lilies' stately-statued calm;
15 But then

He well might find it in this fret
Of lilies rusted, rotting, wet
With rain.

ca. 1935 1957

Of Mere Being

The palm at the end of the mind,
Beyond the last thought, rises
In the bronze decor,[8]

8. In the first published version of this poem, the 1957 Opus Posthumous incorrectly gave "decor" as "distance." The 1989 edition provided a correction.

A gold-feathered bird
5 Sings in the palm, without human meaning,
Without human feeling, a foreign song.

You know then that it is not the reason
That makes us happy or unhappy.
The bird sings. Its feathers shine.

10 The palm stands on the edge of space.
The wind moves slowly in the branches.
The bird's fire-fangled feathers dangle down.

1955? 1957, 1989

WITTER BYNNER
1881–1968

Haskell[1]

Here in Kansas is a school
Made of square stones and windows,
Where Indian boys are taught to use a tool,
A printing-press, a book,
5 And Indian girls
To read, to dress, to cook.
And as I watch today
The orderly industrious classes,
Only their color and silence and the way
10 The hair lies flat and black on their heads proclaims them Sioux, Comanche, Choctaw, Cherokee,
Creek, Chippewa, Paiute[2]—and the red and blue
Of the girls' long sweaters and the purple and yellow,
And the tawny slant of the machine-made shirts . . .

15 Noon—and out they come. And one tall fellow,
Breaking from the others with a glittering yell and crouching slim,
Gives a leap like the leap of Mordkin,[3]
And the sun carves under him
A canyon of glory . . .
20 And then it shadows, and he darts,
With head hung, to the dormitory.

1920

1. Town in Kansas.
2. Names of Native American tribes.
3. Mikhail Mordkin (1881–1944), Russian ballet dancer.

From Chinese Drawings

A Philosopher

What though they conquer us?
The tea has come.
In at most nine hundred years,
Someone will conquer them.

1920

The Wintry Mind

Winter uncovers distances, I find;
And so the cold and so the wintry mind
Takes leaves away, till there is left behind
A wide cold world. And so the heart grows blind
5 To the earth's green motions lying warm below
Field upon field, field upon field, of snow.

1940

More Lovely than Antiquity

There comes a moment in her veins
Not of the earth, not of the rains,
Something not of stalks and stems
But of dim crowns and diadems,° royal headbands
5 Something commanding her to be
More ancient than antiquity
And to soothe her head on a pike above
The vacant circumstance of love.

1947

E. J. PRATT
1883–1964

Come Not the Seasons Here

Comes not the springtime here,
Though the snowdrop came,
And the time of the cowslip° is near, a wildflower
For a yellow flame
5 Was found in a tuft of green;

And the joyous shout
Of a child rang out
That a cuckoo's eggs were seen.

Comes not the summer here,
10 Though the cowslip be gone,
Though the wild rose blow as the year
Draws faithfully on;
Though the face of the poppy be red
In the morning light,
15 And the ground be white
With the bloom of the locust shed.

Comes not the autumn here,
Though someone said
He found a leaf in the sere° withered state
20 By an aster dead;
And knew that the summer was done,
For a herdsman cried
That his pastures were brown in the sun,
And his wells were dried.

25 Nor shall the winter come,
Though the elm be bare,
And every voice be dumb
On the frozen air;
But the flap of a waterfowl
30 In the marsh alone,
Or the hoot of a horned owl
On a glacial stone.

1923

From Stone to Steel

From stone to bronze, from bronze to steel
Along the road-dust of the sun
Two revolutions of the wheel
From Java to Geneva run.[1]

5 The snarl Neanderthal is worn
Close to the smiling Aryan[2] lips,
The civil polish of the horn
Gleams from our praying finger tips.

The evolution of desire
10 Has but matured a toxic wine,

1. Java, now part of Indonesia, was the site of fossil excavations where the bones of an early type of prehistoric human ("Neanderthal," line 5) were found. Geneva, in Switzerland, was the headquarters of the League of Nations from 1919 until the outbreak of World War II.
2. According to Nazi racial theory, the Aryan "race" was superior to all others.

Drunk long before its heady fire
Reddened Euphrates or the Rhine.[3]

Between the temple and the cave
The boundary lies tissue-thin:
15 The yearlings still the altars crave
As satisfaction for a sin.

The road goes up, the road goes down—
Let Java or Geneva be—
But whether to the cross or crown,
20 The path lies through Gethsemane.[4]

1932

WILLIAM CARLOS WILLIAMS
1883–1963

Danse Russe[1]

If when my wife is sleeping and the baby and Kathleen are sleeping
and the sun is a flame-white disc 5 in silken mists above shining trees,— if I in my north room dance naked, grotesquely
before my mirror
10 waving my shirt round my head and singing softly to myself:
"I am lonely, lonely.
I was born to be lonely,
I am best so!"
15 If I admire my arms, my face, my shoulders, flanks, buttocks against the yellow drawn shades,—

Who shall say I am not the happy genius[2] of my household?

1917

3. The Euphrates was one of the two great river valleys of ancient Mesopotamian civilization. The river Rhine flows through western Germany and the Netherlands.
4. The garden where Christ prayed while his disciples slept, and where Judas betrayed him (Matthew 26.36–56).

1. Russian dance (French). Just before writing this poem, Williams had seen a performance in New York City by the Ballet Russes, a company led by the producer and critic Sergey Pavlovich Diaghilev (1872–1929).
2. The pervading and guardian spirit of a place.

Portrait of a Lady[3]

Your thighs are appletrees
whose blossoms touch the sky.
Which sky? The sky
where Watteau hung a lady's 5 slipper.[4] Your knees are a southern breeze—or a gust of snow. Agh! what sort of man was Fragonard?
—as if that answered
10 anything. Ah, yes—below the knees, since the tune drops that way, it is one of those white summer days,
the tall grass of your ankles
15 flickers upon the shore—
Which shore?—
the sand clings to my lips—
Which shore?
Agh, petals maybe. How 20 should I know?
Which shore? Which shore?
I said petals from an appletree.

1920, 1934

Queen-Anne's-Lace[5]

Her body is not so white as anemone petals nor so smooth—nor so remote a thing. It is a field of the wild carrot taking 5 the field by force; the grass does not raise above it.
Here is no question of whiteness,
white as can be, with a purple mole
at the center of each flower.
10 Each flower is a hand's span of her whiteness. Wherever his hand has lain there is a tiny purple blemish. Each part is a blossom under his touch

3. The title recalls those of works by the English (American-born) novelist Henry James (1843–1916), the English (American-born) poet T. S. Eliot (1888–1965; see pp. 1340–66), and the American poet Ezra Pound (1885–1972; see pp. 1295–1310). Cf. Pound's poem "Portrait d'une Femme" (p. 1295).

4. Williams seems to be conflating the French painter Jean-Antoine Watteau (1684–1721) with the French artist Jean-Honoré Fragonard (1732–1806). In Fragonard's famous painting The Swing, a girl on a swing has kicked off her slipper, which remains suspended in air.

5. A common field flower.

15 to which the fibres of her being stem one by one, each to its end, until the whole field is a white desire, empty, a single stem,
a cluster, flower by flower,
20 a pious wish to whiteness gone over—or nothing.

1921

The Red Wheelbarrow

so much depends upon a red wheel barrow

5 glazed with rain water

beside the white chickens.

1923

This Is Just to Say[6]

I have eaten
the plums that were in the icebox

5 and which you were probably saving for breakfast

Forgive me
10 they were delicious
so sweet and so cold

1934

6. Cf. Kenneth Koch's parody of this poem, "Variations on a Theme by William Carlos Williams" (p. 1693).

Poem

As the cat climbed over the top of the jamcloset

5 first the right forefoot carefully then the hind stepped down

10 into the pit of the empty
flowerpot

1934

The Yachts

contend in a sea which the land partly encloses
shielding them from the too-heavy blows of an ungoverned ocean which when it chooses

tortures the biggest hulls, the best man knows
5 to pit against its beatings, and sinks them pitilessly.
Mothlike in mists, scintillant in the minute brilliance of cloudless days, with broad bellying sails they glide to the wind tossing green water from their sharp prows while over them the crew crawls

10 ant-like, solicitously grooming them, releasing, making fast as they turn, lean far over and having caught the wind again, side by side, head for the mark.

In a well guarded arena of open water surrounded by lesser and greater craft which, sycophant, lumbering 15 and flittering follow them, they appear youthful, rare

as the light of a happy eye, live with the grace of all that in the mind is fleckless, free and naturally to be desired. Now the sea which holds them is moody, lapping their glossy sides, as if feeling 20 for some slightest flaw but fails completely.

Today no race. Then the wind comes again. The yachts move, jockeying for a start, the signal is set and they are off. Now the waves strike at them but they are too well made, they slip through, though they take in canvas.

25 Arms with hands grasping seek to clutch at the prows.
Bodies thrown recklessly in the way are cut aside.
It is a sea of faces about them in agony, in despair

until the horror of the race dawns staggering the mind,
the whole sea become an entanglement of watery bodies 30 lost to the world bearing what they cannot hold. Broken, beaten, desolate, reaching from the dead to be taken up they cry out, failing, failing! their cries rising in waves still as the skillful yachts pass over.

1935

A Sort of a Song

Let the snake wait under his weed
and the writing
be of words, slow and quick, sharp
5 to strike, quiet to wait, sleepless.

—through metaphor to reconcile
the people and the stones.
Compose. (No ideas
10 but in things) Invent!
Saxifrage[7] is my flower that splits
the rocks.

1944

From Asphodel, That Greeny Flower[8]

Book I

Of asphodel, that greeny flower,
like a buttercup

7. Breaking rocks (Latin); a perennial herb.
8. A tripartite love poem, with coda, for the poet's wife. The green asphodel first impressed Williams as a child in Switzerland, and it appears in his early work Kora in Hell: Improvisations (1920). (Kora—or Kore, Greek for girl or young woman—is another name for the mythological figure Persephone. The daughter of Demeter, she was carried to the underworld by its ruler, Hades. In the underworld of Homer's Odyssey, a grove of poplars sacred to Persephone stood at the entrance of asphodel limona, fields of asphodel inhabited by the souls of the dead.) The opening lines were originally published in the October 1952 issue of Poetry magazine, as "Paterson, Book V: The River of Heaven," but were later removed from Williams's epic, Paterson.

upon its branching stem—save that it's green and wooden—
5 I come, my sweet,
to sing to you.
We lived long together
a life filled,
if you will,
10 with flowers. So that I was cheered
when I came first to know that there were flowers also in hell.
15 Today
I'm filled with the fading memory of those flowers that we both loved,
even to this poor
colorless thing—
20 I saw it when I was a child—
little prized among the living but the dead see,
asking among themselves:
25 What do I remember that was shaped
as this thing is shaped?
while our eyes fill
with tears.
30 Of love, abiding love
it will be telling though too weak a wash of crimson colors it
to make it wholly credible.
35 There is something something urgent
I have to say to you and you alone
but it must wait
40 while I drink in the joy of your approach,
perhaps for the last time.
And so with fear in my heart
45 I drag it out and keep on talking for I dare not stop.
Listen while I talk on against time.
50 It will not be
for long.
I have forgot
and yet I see clearly enough something

55 central to the sky
which ranges round it.
An odor
springs from it!
A sweetest odor!
60 Honeysuckle! And now
there comes the buzzing of a bee!
and a whole flood of sister memories!
Only give me time,
65 time to recall them
before I shall speak out.
Give me time,
time.
When I was a boy
70 I kept a book to which, from time to time,
I added pressed flowers
until, after a time,
75 I had a good collection.
The asphodel,
forebodingly,
among them.
I bring you,
80 reawakened,
a memory of those flowers.
They were sweet
when I pressed them
and retained
85 something of their sweetness
a long time.
It is a curious odor,
a moral odor,
that brings me
90 near to you.
The color
was the first to go.
There had come to me
a challenge,
95 your dear self,
mortal as I was,
the lily's throat
to the hummingbird!
Endless wealth,
100 I thought,
held out its arms to me.
A thousand tropics
in an apple blossom.
The generous earth itself
105 gave us lief.[9]
The whole world

9. Leave, or permission. An obsolete form of leaf and life, "lief" also connotes gladness.

became my garden!
But the sea
which no one tends 110 is also a garden
when the sun strikes it and the waves
are wakened.
I have seen it
115 and so have you when it puts all flowers to shame.
Too, there are the starfish
stiffened by the sun
120 and other sea wrack and weeds. We knew that along with the rest of it for we were born by the sea, knew its rose hedges
125 to the very water's brink.
There the pink mallow grows and in their season
strawberries
and there, later,
130 we went to gather the wild plum.
I cannot say that I have gone to hell for your love
135 but often found myself there in your pursuit.
I do not like it and wanted to be 140 in heaven. Hear me out.
Do not turn away.
I have learned much in my life
from books
and out of them
145 about love.
Death
is not the end of it.
There is a hierarchy
which can be attained, 150 I think,
in its service.
Its guerdon° reward
is a fairy flower;
a cat of twenty lives.
155 If no one came to try it
the world
would be the loser.
It has been for you and me

160 as one who watches a storm come in over the water.
We have stood from year to year before the spectacle of our lives
165 with joined hands.
The storm unfolds.
Lightning
plays about the edges of the clouds.
The sky to the north 170 is placid,
blue in the afterglow
as the storm piles up.
It is a flower
that will soon reach
175 the apex of its bloom.
We danced,
in our minds,
and read a book together.
You remember?
180 It was a serious book.
And so books
entered our lives.
The sea! The sea!
Always
185 when I think of the sea
there comes to mind
the Iliad
and Helen's public fault that bred it.[1]
190 Were it not for that there would have been no poem but the world
if we had remembered,
those crimson petals
195 spilled among the stones, would have called it simply murder.
The sexual orchid that bloomed then sending so many 200 disinterested men to their graves has left its memory
to a race of fools
or heroes
205 if silence is a virtue.
The sea alone
with its multiplicity holds any hope.
The storm

1. In Greek mythology, the beautiful Helen (daughter of the god Zeus and the mortal Leda; wife of the Spartan King Menelaus) was abducted by Paris (son of the Trojan king, Priam). The dispute that followed was a cause of the Trojan War.

210 has proven abortive
but we remain
after the thoughts it roused to re-cement our lives.
215 It is the mind
the mind
that must be cured
short of death's intervention,
220 and the will becomes again
a garden. The poem is complex and the place made in our lives
for the poem.
225 Silence can be complex too, but you do not get far
with silence.
Begin again.
It is like Homer's
230 catalogue of ships:[2]
it fills up the time.
I speak in figures,
well enough, the dresses
you wear are figures also,
235 we could not meet otherwise. When I speak of flowers
it is to recall that at one time
240 we were young.
All women are not Helen,
I know that,
but have Helen in their hearts.
My sweet,
245 you have it also, therefore I love you
and could not love you otherwise.
Imagine you saw a field made up of women
250 all silver-white.
What should you do
but love them?
The storm bursts or fades! it is not 255 the end of the world.
Love is something else,
or so I thought it,
a garden which expands,
though I knew you as a woman 260 and never thought otherwise, until the whole sea

2. Cf. Iliad 2.484–785, where the Greek ships that sailed to Troy are listed.

has been taken up
and all its gardens.
It was the love of love,
265 the love that swallows up all else,
a grateful love,
a love of nature, of people,
animals,
a love engendering
270 gentleness and goodness that moved me
and that I saw in you.
I should have known,
though I did not,
275 that the lily-of-the-valley is a flower makes many ill who whiff it.
We had our children,
rivals in the general onslaught.
280 I put them aside though I cared for them
as well as any man could care for his children
according to my lights.
285 You understand
I had to meet you after the event
and have still to meet you.
Love
290 to which you too shall bow along with me—
a flower
a weakest flower
shall be our trust 295 and not because we are too feeble
to do otherwise but because
at the height of my power 300 I risked what I had to do, therefore to prove that we love each other while my very bones sweated that I could not cry to you 305 in the act.
Of asphodel, that greeny flower,
I come, my sweet,
to sing to you!
My heart rouses
310 thinking to bring you news of something that concerns you and concerns many men. Look at what passes for the new.

315 You will not find it there but in despised poems.
It is difficult to get the news from poems
yet men die miserably every day 320 for lack of what is found there.
Hear me out for I too am concerned and every man 325 who wants to die at peace in his bed
besides.

1955

From Pictures from Brueghel[3]

II Landscape with the Fall of Icarus[4]

According to Brueghel
when Icarus fell
it was spring

a farmer was ploughing
5 his field
the whole pageantry

of the year was awake tingling near

10 the edge of the sea concerned with itself

sweating in the sun
that melted
15 the wings' wax

unsignificantly off the coast
there was a splash quite unnoticed

20 this was Icarus drowning

1962

3. Peter Brueghel (or Breughel) the Elder (1521?–1569), Flemish painter; this poem, taking its title from one of Brueghel's paintings, is one of ten in a series.

4. In Greek mythology, Icarus and his father, Daedalus, sought to escape Crete on wings Daedalus made of feathers and wax. Icarus flew too close to the sun and fell into the sea when his wings melted. Cf. W. H. Auden, "Musée des Beaux Arts" (p. 1471), which like Williams's poem notes Brueghel's marginal treatment of Icarus's legs in the sea.

D. H. LAWRENCE
1885–1930

Love on the Farm[1]

What large, dark hands are those at the window
Grasping in the golden light
Which weaves its way through the evening wind
At my heart's delight?

5 Ah, only the leaves! But in the west
I see a redness suddenly come
Into the evening's anxious breast—
'Tis the wound of love goes home!

The woodbine° creeps abroad — honeysuckle
10 Calling low to her lover:
The sun-lit flirt who all the day
Has poised above her lips in play
And stolen kisses, shallow and gay
Of pollen, now has gone away—
15 She woos the moth with her sweet, low word:
And when above her his moth-wings hover
Then her bright breast she will uncover
And yield her honey-drop to her lover.

Into the yellow, evening glow
20 Saunters a man from the farm below;
Leans, and looks in at the low-built shed
Where the swallow has hung her marriage bed.
The bird lies warm against the wall.
She glances quick her startled eyes
25 Towards him, then she turns away
Her small head, making warm display
Of red upon the throat. Her terrors sway
Her out of the nest's warm, busy ball,
Whose plaintive cry is heard as she flies
30 In one blue stoop from out the sties° — pens for animals
Into the twilight's empty hall.
Oh, water-hen, beside the rushes
Hide your quaintly scarlet blushes,
Still your quick tail, lie still as dead,
35 Till the distance folds over his ominous tread!

The rabbit presses back her ears,
Turns back her liquid, anguished eyes
And crouches low; then with wild spring
Spurts from the terror of his oncoming;
40 To be choked back, the wire ring
Her frantic effort throttling:

1. Originally published as "Cruelty and Love," but retitled for the Collected Poems (1928).

Piteous brown ball of quivering fears!
Ah, soon in his large, hard hands she dies,
And swings all loose from the swing of his walk!
45 Yet calm and kindly are his eyes
And ready to open in brown surprise
Should I not answer to his talk
Or should he my tears surmise.

I hear his hand on the latch, and rise from my chair
50 Watching the door open; he flashes bare
His strong teeth in a smile, and flashes his eyes
In a smile like triumph upon me; then careless-wise
He flings the rabbit soft on the table board
And comes towards me: ah! the uplifted sword
55 Of his hand against my bosom! and oh, the broad Blade of his glance that asks me to applaud
His coming! With his hand he turns my face to him
And caresses me with his fingers that still smell grim
Of the rabbit's fur! God, I am caught in a snare!° wire trap
60 I know not what fine wire is round my throat;
I only know I let him finger there
My pulse of life, and let him nose like a stoat[2]
Who sniffs with joy before he drinks the blood.

And down his mouth comes to my mouth! and down
65 His bright dark eyes come over me, like a hood
Upon my mind! his lips meet mine, and a flood
Of sweet fire sweeps across me, so I drown
Against him, die, and find death good.

1913

Piano

Softly, in the dusk, a woman is singing to me;
Taking me back down the vista of years, till I see
A child sitting under the piano, in the boom of the tingling strings
And pressing the small, poised feet of a mother who smiles as she sings.

5 In spite of myself, the insidious mastery of song
Betrays me back, till the heart of me weeps to belong
To the old Sunday evenings at home, with winter outside
And hymns in the cosy parlour, the tinkling piano our guide.

So now it is vain for the singer to burst into clamour
10 With the great black piano appassionato. The glamour
Of childish days is upon me, my manhood is cast
Down in the flood of remembrance, I weep like a child for the past.

1918

2. Small, carnivorous animal of the weasel family.

Snake

A snake came to my water-trough
On a hot, hot day, and I in pyjamas for the heat,
To drink there.

In the deep, strange-scented shade of the great dark carob-tree
5 I came down the steps with my pitcher
And must wait, must stand and wait, for there he was at the trough before me.

He reached down from a fissure in the earth-wall in the gloom
And trailed his yellow-brown slackness soft-bellied down, over the edge of the stone trough
And rested his throat upon the stone bottom,
10 And where the water had dripped from the tap, in a small clearness,
He sipped with his straight mouth,
Softly drank through his straight gums, into his slack long body,
Silently.

Someone was before me at my water-trough,
15 And I, like a second comer, waiting.

He lifted his head from his drinking, as cattle do,
And looked at me vaguely, as drinking cattle do,
And flickered his two-forked tongue from his lips, and mused a moment,
And stooped and drank a little more,
20 Being earth-brown, earth-golden from the burning bowels of the earth
On the day of Sicilian July, with Etna[3] smoking.
The voice of my education said to me
He must be killed,
For in Sicily the black, black snakes are innocent, the gold are venomous.

25 And voices in me said, If you were a man
You would take a stick and break him now, and finish him off.

But must I confess how I liked him,
How glad I was he had come like a guest in quiet, to drink at my water-trough

And depart peaceful, pacified, and thankless,
30 Into the burning bowels of this earth?

Was it cowardice, that I dared not kill him?
Was it perversity, that I longed to talk to him?

3. Mt. Etna, a volcano.

Was it humility, to feel so honoured?
I felt so honoured.

35 And yet those voices:
If you were not afraid, you would kill him!

And truly I was afraid, I was most afraid,
But even so, honoured still more
That he should seek my hospitality
40 From out the dark door of the secret earth.

He drank enough
And lifted his head, dreamily, as one who has drunken,
And flickered his tongue like a forked night on the air, so black,
Seeming to lick his lips,
45 And looked around like a god, unseeing, into the air,
And slowly turned his head,
And slowly, very slowly, as if thrice adream,
Proceeded to draw his slow length curving round
And climb again the broken bank of my wall-face.

50 And as he put his head into that dreadful hole,
And as he slowly drew up, snake-easing his shoulders, and entered farther,
A sort of horror, a sort of protest against his withdrawing into that horrid black hole,
Deliberately going into the blackness, and slowly drawing himself after,
Overcame me now his back was turned.

55 I looked round, I put down my pitcher,
I picked up a clumsy log
And threw it at the water-trough with a clatter.

I think it did not hit him,
But suddenly that part of him that was left behind convulsed in undignified haste.
60 Writhed like lightning, and was gone
Into the black hole, the earth-lipped fissure in the wall-front,
At which, in the intense still noon, I stared with fascination.

And immediately I regretted it.
I thought how paltry, how vulgar, what a mean act!
65 I despised myself and the voices of my accursed human education.

And I thought of the albatross[4]
And I wished he would come back, my snake.

For he seemed to me again like a king,
Like a king in exile, uncrowned in the underworld,
70 Now due to be crowned again.

4. In Samuel Taylor Coleridge's "Rime of the Ancient Mariner" (see p. 812).

And so, I missed my chance with one of the lords
Of life.[5]
And I have something to expiate;
A pettiness.

Taormina.
1923

Elemental

Why don't people leave off being lovable
Or thinking they are lovable, or wanting to be lovable,
And be a bit elemental instead?

Since man is made up of the elements
5 Fire, and rain, and air, and live loam
And none of these is lovable
But elemental,
Man is lop-sided on the side of the angels.

I wish men would get back their balance among the elements
10 And be a bit more fiery, as incapable of telling lies
As fire is.
I wish they'd be true to their own variation, as water is,
Which goes through all the stages of steam and stream and ice
Without losing its head.

15 I am sick of lovable people,
Somehow they are a lie.

1929

Self-Protection

When science starts to be interpretive
It is more unscientific even than mysticism.

To make self-preservation and self-protection the first law of existence
Is about as scientific as making suicide the first law of existence,
5 And amounts to very much the same thing.

A nightingale singing at the top of his voice
Is neither hiding himself nor preserving himself nor propagating his species;
He is giving himself away in every sense of the word;
And obviously, it is the culminating point of his existence.

5. Cf. George Meredith, "Modern Love," 30, line 7 (p. 1108).

10 A tiger is striped and golden for his own glory.
He would certainly be much more invisible if he were grey-green.
And I don't suppose the ichthyosaurus sparkled like the humming-bird,
No doubt he was khaki-colored with muddy protective colouration,
So why didn't he survive?

15 As a matter of fact, the only creatures that seem to survive
Are those that give themselves away in flash and sparkle
And gay flicker of joyful life;
Those that go glittering abroad
With a bit of splendour.

20 Even mice play quite beautifully at shadows,
And some of them are brilliantly piebald.° of different colors

I expect the dodo looked like a clod,
A drab and dingy bird.

1929

Trees in the Garden

Ah in the thunder air
How still the trees are!

And the lime-tree, lovely and tall, every leaf silent
Hardly looses even a last breath of perfume.

5 And the ghostly, creamy coloured little tree of leaves
White, ivory white among the rambling greens
How evanescent, variegated elder, she hesitates on the green grass
As if, in another moment, she would disappear
With all her grace of foam!

10 And the larch that is only a column, it goes up too tall to see:
And the balsam-pines that are blue with the grey-blue blueness of things from the sea,
And the young copper beech, its leaves red-rosy at the ends
How still they are together, they stand so still
In the thunder air, all strangers to one another 15 As the green grass glows upwards, strangers in the garden.

Lichtental.[6]

1932

6. A village near Baden-Baden, in south Germany, where Lawrence wrote the poem.

The English Are So Nice!

The English are so nice
So awfully nice
They are the nicest people in the world.

And what's more, they're very nice about being nice
5 About your being nice as well!
If you're not nice they soon make you feel it.

Americans and French and Germans and so on They're all very well
But they're not really nice, you know.
10 They're not nice in our sense of the word, are they now?

That's why one doesn't have to take them seriously.
We must be nice to them, of course,
Of course, naturally.
But it doesn't really matter what you say to them,
15 They don't really understand
You can just say anything to them:
Be nice, you know, just nice
But you must never take them seriously, they wouldn't understand,
Just be nice, you know! oh, fairly nice,
20 Not too nice of course, they take advantage
But nice enough, just nice enough
To let them feel they're not quite as nice as they might be.

1932

Andraitx[7]—Pomegranate Flowers

It is June, it is June
The pomegranates are in flower,
The peasants are bending cutting the bearded wheat.

The pomegranates are in flower
5 Beside the high road, past the deathly dust,
And even the sea is silent in the sun.

Short gasps of flame in the green of night, way off
The pomegranates are in flower,
Small sharp red fires in the night of leaves.

10 And noon is suddenly dark, is lustrous, is silent and dark
Men are unseen, beneath the shading hats;
Only, from out the foliage of the secret loins

7. A town on the island of Majorca, Spain.

Red flamelets here and there reveal
A man, a woman there.

1932

Bavarian Gentians[8]

Not every man has gentians in his house
in Soft September, at slow, sad Michaelmas.[9]

Bavarian gentians, big and dark, only dark darkening the daytime, torch-like with the smoking blueness of Pluto's gloom,[1]
5 ribbed and torch-like, with their blaze of darkness spread blue down flattening into points, flattened under the sweep of white day torch-flower of the blue-smoking darkness, Pluto's dark-blue daze, black lamps from the halls of Dis, burning dark blue, giving off darkness, blue darkness, as Demeter's pale lamps give off light,
10 lead me then, lead the way.

Reach me a gentian, give me a torch!
let me guide myself with the blue, forked torch of this flower down the darker and darker stairs, where blue is darkened on blueness even where Persephone goes, just now, from the frosted September 15 to the sightless realm where darkness is awake upon the dark and Persephone herself is but a voice or a darkness invisible enfolded in the deeper dark of the arms Plutonic, and pierced with the passion of dense gloom, among the splendour of torches of darkness, shedding darkness on the lost bride and her groom.

1932

The Ship of Death[2]

1

Now it is autumn and the falling fruit
and the long journey towards oblivion.

8. Herbs with striking blue flowers.
9. September 29, the feast day celebrating St. Michael the Archangel.
1. Pluto (Greek Hades), also known as Dis (line 8), was the Roman god of the underworld. He abducted Persephone (Roman Proserpine), the daughter of Demeter (Roman Ceres), goddess of growing vegetation and living nature. Persephone ruled with him as queen of the underworld, but returned to spend six months of each year with her mother in the world above.
2. In Etruscan Places (1932), the book that describes his visit to the Etruscan painted tombs in central Italy in the spring of 1927, Lawrence mentions that originally, before the tombs were pillaged, there would be found in the last chamber among "the sacred treasures of the dead, the little bronze ship that should bear [the soul of the dead] over to the other world." He had in mind his own imminent death.

The apples falling like great drops of dew to bruise themselves an exit from themselves.

5 And it is time to go, to bid farewell to one's own self, and find an exit from the fallen self.

2

Have you built your ship of death, O have you?
O build your ship of death, for you will need it.

10 The grim frost is at hand, when the apples will fall thick, almost thundrous, on the hardened earth.

And death is on the air like a smell of ashes!
Ah! can't you smell it?

And in the bruised body, the frightened soul
15 finds itself shrinking, wincing from the cold that blows upon it through the orifices.

3

And can a man his own quietus° make — release from life
with a bare bodkin?[3]

With daggers, bodkins, bullets, man can make 20 a bruise or break of exit for his life;
but is that a quietus, O tell me, is it quietus?

Surely not so! for how could murder, even self-murder ever a quietus make?

4

O let us talk of quiet that we know,
25 that we can know, the deep and lovely quiet of a strong heart at peace!

How can we this, our own quietus, make?

5

Build then the ship of death, for you must take the longest journey, to oblivion.

3. I.e., his death bring about with an unsheathed dagger? Cf. Hamlet 3.1.77–78.

30 And die the death, the long and painful death that lies between the old self and the new.

Already our bodies are fallen, bruised, badly bruised, already our souls are oozing through the exit
of the cruel bruise.

35 Already the dark and endless ocean of the end is washing in through the breaches of our wounds, already the flood is upon us.

Oh build your ship of death, your little ark
and furnish it with food, with little cakes, and wine 40 for the dark flight down oblivion.

6

Piecemeal the body dies, and the timid soul
has her footing washed away, as the dark flood rises.

We are dying, we are dying, we are all of us dying and nothing will stay the death-flood rising within us 45 and soon it will rise on the world, on the outside world.

We are dying, we are dying, piecemeal our bodies are dying and our strength leaves us, and our soul cowers naked in the dark rain over the flood,
cowering in the last branches of the tree of our life.

7

50 We are dying, we are dying, so all we can do is now to be willing to die, and to build the ship of death to carry the soul on the longest journey.

A little ship, with oars and food and little dishes, and all accoutrements
55 fitting and ready for the departing soul.

Now launch the small ship, now as the body dies and life departs, launch out, the fragile soul in the fragile ship of courage, the ark of faith with its store of food and little cooking pans 60 and change of clothes, upon the flood's black waste
upon the waters of the end
upon the sea of death, where still we sail darkly, for we cannot steer, and have no port.

65 There is no port, there is nowhere to go only the deepening blackness darkening still blacker upon the soundless, ungurgling flood darkness at one with darkness, up and down and sideways utterly dark, so there is no direction any more.

70 and the little ship is there; yet she is gone.
She is not seen, for there is nothing to see her by.
She is gone! gone! and yet somewhere she is there.
Nowhere!

8

75 And everything is gone, the body is gone completely under, gone, entirely gone.
The upper darkness is heavy as the lower,
between them the little ship is gone
80 she is gone.

It is the end, it is oblivion.

9

And yet out of eternity, a thread separates itself on the blackness,
a horizontal thread
85 that fumes a little with pallor upon the dark.

Is it illusion? or does the pallor fume
A little higher?
Ah wait, wait, for there's the dawn,
the cruel dawn of coming back to life
90 out of oblivion.

Wait, wait, the little ship drifting, beneath the deathly ashy grey of a flood-dawn.

Wait, wait! even so, a flush of yellow
95 and strangely, O chilled wan soul, a flush of rose.

A flush of rose, and the whole thing starts again.

10

The flood subsides, and the body, like a worn sea-shell emerges strange and lovely.
And the little ship wings home, faltering and lapsing 100 on the pink flood,
and the frail soul steps out, into her house again
filling the heart with peace.

Swings the heart renewed with peace
even of oblivion.

105 Oh build your ship of death, oh build it!
for you will need it.
For the voyage of oblivion awaits you.

1929–30 1932

EZRA POUND
1885–1972

Portrait d'une Femme[1]

Your mind and you are our Sargasso Sea,[2]
London has swept about you this score years
And bright ships left you this or that in fee:
Ideas, old gossip, oddments of all things,
5 Strange spars of knowledge and dimmed wares of price.
Great minds have sought you—lacking someone else.
You have been second always. Tragical?
No. You preferred it to the usual thing:
One dull man, dulling and uxorious,
10 One average mind—with one thought less, each year.
Oh, you are patient, I have seen you sit
Hours, where something might have floated up.
And now you pay one. Yes, you richly pay.
You are a person of some interest, one comes to you 15 And takes strange gain away:
Trophies fished up; some curious suggestion;
Fact that leads nowhere; and a tale or two,
Pregnant with mandrakes,[3] or with something else
That might prove useful and yet never proves,
20 That never fits a corner or shows use,
Or finds its hour upon the loom of days:
The tarnished, gaudy, wonderful old work;
Idols and ambergris[4] and rare inlays,
These are your riches, your great store; and yet
25 For all this sea-hoard of deciduous things,
Strange woods half sodden, and new brighter stuff:
In the slow float of differing light and deep,
No! there is nothing! In the whole and all,
Nothing that's quite your own.
30 Yet this is you.

1912

1. Portrait of a lady (French). Cf. William Carlos Williams, "Portrait of a Lady" (p. 1273)
2. A relatively calm part of the North Atlantic, named for an abundance of floating gulfweed.
3. Plants, the root of which, shaped roughly like a human body, traditionally was believed to promote female fertility.
4. Waxlike substance produced by sperm whales, used in making perfume.

The Garden

En robe de parade.[5]
—Samain

Like a skein of loose silk blown against a wall
She walks by the railing of a path in Kensington Gardens,[6]
And she is dying piecemeal of a sort of emotional anemia.

5 And round about there is a rabble
Of the filthy, sturdy, unkillable infants of the very poor.
They shall inherit the earth.[7]

In her is the end of breeding.
Her boredom is exquisite and excessive.
10 She would like some one to speak to her,
And is almost afraid that I will commit that indiscretion.

1913, 1916

A Pact

I make a pact with you, Walt Whitman[8]—
I have detested you long enough.
I come to you as a grown child
Who has had a pig-headed father;
5 I am old enough now to make friends.
It was you that broke the new wood,
Now is a time for carving.
We have one sap and one root—
Let there be commerce between us.

1913, 1916

Ts'ai Chi'h[9]

The petals fall in the fountain,
          the orange-colored rose-leaves,
Their ochre clings to the stone.

1913, 1916

5. Dressed as for a state occasion; from "The Infanta," a poem by the French poet Albert Samain (1858–1900).
6. Extensive public gardens in a residential district of London.
7. Cf. Psalm 37.11: "But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace."
8. American poet (1819–1892; see pp. 1060–86).
9. More usually Ts'ao Chih, a Chinese poet (192–232) who wrote five-character poems.

In a Station of the Metro[1]

The apparition of these faces in the crowd;
Petals on a wet, black bough.

1913, 1916

The River-Merchant's Wife: a Letter[2]

While my hair was still cut straight across my forehead
I played about the front gate, pulling flowers.
You came by on bamboo stilts, playing horse,
You walked about my seat, playing with blue plums.
5 And we went on living in the village of Chokan:[3]
Two small people, without dislike or suspicion.
At fourteen I married My Lord you.
I never laughed, being bashful.
Lowering my head, I looked at the wall.
10 Called to, a thousand times, I never looked back.

At fifteen I stopped scowling,
I desired my dust to be mingled with yours
Forever and forever and forever.
Why should I climb the look out?

15 At sixteen you departed,
You went into far Ku-to-yen,[4] by the river of swirling eddies,
And you have been gone five months.
The monkeys make sorrowful noise overhead.

You dragged your feet when you went out.
20 By the gate now, the moss is grown, the different mosses,
Too deep to clear them away!
The leaves fall early this autumn, in wind.
The paired butterflies are already yellow with August
Over the grass in the West garden;
25 They hurt me. I grow older.
If you are coming down through the narrows of the river Kiang,
Please let me know beforehand,

1. Pound writes in Gaudier-Brzeska: A Memoir (1916) of having suddenly seen a succession of beautiful faces one day on the Paris Métro (subway), after which he tried all day to find words "as worthy, or as lovely as that sudden emotion. And that evening . . . I was still trying and I found, suddenly, the expression. I do not mean that I found words, but there came an equation . . . not in speech, but in little splotches of color. . . . The 'one-image poem' is a form of super-position, that is to say, it is one idea set on top of another. I found it useful in getting out of the impasse in which I had been left by my metro emotion. I wrote a thirty-line poem, and destroyed it. . . . Six months later I made the following hokku-like sentence."

2. Adaptation from the Chinese of Li Po (701–762), named Rihaku in Japanese. Pound's work is based on notes by the American scholar Ernest Fenellosa, themselves based on interpretations by Japanese scholars.

3. Ch'ang-Kan, a suburb of Nanking.

4. Ch'üt'ang, a Chinese river called Kiang in Japanese (line 26), here treated as a place.

And I will come out to meet you
As far as Cho-fu-Sa.[5]

By Rihaku
1915

Hugh Selwyn Mauberley

LIFE AND CONTACTS[6]

E. P. Ode pour l'election de Son Sépulchre[7]

For three years, out of key with his time,
He strove to resuscitate the dead art
Of poetry; to maintain "the sublime"
In the old sense. Wrong from the start—

5 No, hardly, but seeing he had been born
In a half savage country,[8] out of date;
Bent resolutely on wringing lilies from the acorn;
Capaneus;[9] trout for factitious° bait; false, artificial

Ἴδμεν γάρ τοι πάνθ' ὅσ' ἐνὶ Τροίῃ[1]
10 Caught in the unstopped ear;
Giving the rocks small lee-way
The chopped seas held him, therefore, that year.

His true Penelope was Flaubert,[2]
He fished by obstinate isles;
15 Observed the elegance of Circe's[3] hair
Rather than the mottoes on sundials.

Unaffected by "the march of events,"
He passed from men's memory in l'an trentiesme
De son eage;[4] the case presents
20 No adjunct to the Muses' diadem.[5]

5. Chang-feng Sha, a beach several hundred miles up the river from Nanking.
6. Hugh Selwyn Mauberley comprises two sets of poems: the thirteen poems reprinted here ("Life and Contacts," or "Contacts and Life," as Pound subtitled a 1957 edition) and five poems that follow, headed "Mauberley (1920)." The entire volume bore an epigraph from the fourth Eclogue of the third-century Carthaginian poet Nemesianus: Vocat aestus in umbram (Latin, "The heat calls us into the shade").
7. Cf. Pierre de Ronsard (1524–1585), Odes 4.5, "De l'élection de son sépulchre" [French, "Concerning the choice of his tomb"], in which the poet describes the kind of burial place and the kind of fame he would like to have.
8. I.e., the United States.
9. In Aeschylus's tragedy The Seven against Thebes (467 B.C.E.), Capaneus swore he would sack that city despite the god Zeus and was struck dead with a thunderbolt.
1. For we know all the things that [were suffered] in Troy (Greek); Homer, Odyssey 12.189. From the song of the Sirens, which was meant to lure Odysseus's ship onto the rocks. Odysseus plugged his companions' ears with wax, and he alone, bound to the mast, heard the song with "unstopped ear" (line 10).
2. Gustave Flaubert (1821–1880), French realist novelist and meticulous craftsman. Penelope, the paradigmatic faithful wife, fended off suitors while Odysseus spent ten years at the siege of Troy and another ten years returning home.
3. Beautiful enchantress who seduced Odysseus; he stayed on her island for over a year.
4. In the thirty-first year of his age (French); Pound's age when his book Lustra was published. Adapted from the beginning of Le Grand Testament, by the fifteenth-century French poet François Villon: "In the thirtieth year of my age."
5. Crown. In Greek mythology, the Muses were nine sister goddesses who presided over song, poetry, and the arts and sciences.

II

The age demanded an image
Of its accelerated grimace,
Something for the modern stage,
Not, at any rate, an Attic[6] grace;

5 Not, not certainly, the obscure reveries
Of the inward gaze;
Better mendacities
Than the classics in paraphrase!

The "age demanded" chiefly a mold in plaster,
10 Made with no loss of time,
A prose kinema,[7] not, not assuredly, alabaster
Or the "sculpture" of rhyme.

III

The tea-rose tea-gown, etc.
Supplants the mousseline of Cos,[8]
The pianola° "replaces" player piano
Sappho's barbitos.[9]

5 Christ follows Dionysus,[1]
Phallic and ambrosial
Made way for macerations;° fastings, wastings
Caliban casts out Ariel.[2]

All things are a flowing,
10 Sage Heracleitus[3] says;
But a tawdry cheapness
Shall outlast our days.

Even the Christian beauty
Defects—after Samothrace;[4]
15 We see τὸ καλόν[5]
Decreed in the market place.

Faun's flesh is not to us,
Nor the saint's vision.
We have the press for wafer;
20 Franchise for circumcision.

6. Athenian; i.e., simple, pure, classical.
7. Motion (Greek); and an early spelling of cinema (motion pictures).
8. Greek island. Mousseline: fine cloth (muslin).
9. Lyrelike instrument played by the Greek lyric poet Sappho (fl. ca. 610–ca. 580 B.C.E.).
1. Greek god of fertility, wine, and poetic inspiration, whose worship included ecstatic frenzies, sexual rites, and dramatic festivals.
2. In Shakespeare's Tempest, Caliban is earthbound and coarse, Ariel a beautiful and imaginative spirit.
3. Greek philosopher (ca. 540–ca. 480 B.C.E.), whose teaching emphasized flux ("all things flow").
4. Greek island where a mystery cult was centered and where the famous statue Winged Victory was found.
5. The beautiful (Greek).

All men, in law, are equals.
Free of Pisistratus,[6]
We choose a knave or an eunuch
To rule over us.

25 O bright Apollo,
τίν̓ ἄνδρα, τίν̓ ἥρωα, τίνα θεόν,[7]
What god, man, or hero
Shall I place a tin wreath upon!

IV

These fought in any case,
and some believing,
pro domo,[8] in any case . . .

Some quick to arm,
5 some for adventure,
some from fear of weakness,
some from fear of censure,
some for love of slaughter, in imagination,
learning later . . .
10 some in fear, learning love of slaughter;

Died some, pro patria,
non "dulce" non "et decor" . . . [9]
walked eye-deep in hell believing in old men's lies, then unbelieving 15 came home, home to a lie, home to many deceits,
home to old lies and new infamy;
usury age-old and age-thick and liars in public places.

20 Daring as never before, wastage as never before.
Young blood and high blood,
fair cheeks, and fine bodies;
fortitude as never before

frankness as never before,
25 disillusions as never told in the old days,
hysterias, trench confessions,
laughter out of dead bellies.

V

There died a myriad,
And of the best, among them,

6. Three times the absolute ruler of Athens (d. 527 B.C.E.), he made the city the foremost power in Ionia and supported the arts.
7. What man, what hero, what god (Greek); cf. the Greek poet Pindar's Olympian Ode 2.2: "What god, what hero, what man shall we loudly praise?"
8. For home (Latin).
9. For one's native land, not sweetly, not gloriously (Latin); cf. the Roman poet Horace's Odes 3.2.13: "Sweet and fitting it is to die for one's country."

For an old bitch gone in the teeth,
For a botched civilization,

5 Charm, smiling at the good mouth,
Quick eyes gone under earth's lid,

For two gross of broken statues,
For a few thousand battered books.

Yeux Glauques[1]

Gladstone[2] was still respected,
When John Ruskin produced
"King's Treasuries";[3] Swinburne
And Rossetti still abused.[4]

5 Fetid Buchanan lifted up his voice
When that faun's head of hers
Became a pastime for
Painters and adulterers.

The Burne-Jones cartons[5]
10 Have preserved her eyes;
Still, at the Tate, they teach
Cophetua to rhapsodize;

Thin like brook water,
With a vacant gaze.
15 The English Rubaiyat was stillborn[6]
In those days.

The thin, clear gaze, the same
Still darts out faunlike from the half-ruined face,
Questing and passive. . . .
20 "Ah, poor Jenny's case"[7] . . .

Bewildered that a world
Shows no surprise
At her last maquero's[8]
Adulteries.

1. Sea-green eyes (French). Pound's poem focuses on the eyes of Elizabeth Siddal (d. 1862), wife of the English poet and painter Dante Gabriel Rossetti (1828–1882) and the model used for many of his paintings as well as for those of other Pre-Raphaelite painters, including Edward Burne-Jones (1833–1898), in whose painting King Cophetua and the Beggar Maid (1884; now in the Tate Gallery, London; see the third stanza below) she appears as the beggar maid.
2. William Ewart Gladstone (1809–1898), active in British politics for over sixty years, was four times prime minister.
3. "Sesame. Of King's Treasuries" is the first lecture in Sesame and Lilies (1865), in which the English critic John Ruskin (1819–1900) accuses the English of having "despised literature . . . science . . . Art! . . . Nature . . . compassion."
4. Rossetti and the English poet Algernon Swinburne (1837–1909) were abused by the Scottish writer Robert W. Buchanan (1841–1901) in "The Fleshly School of Poetry" (1871).
5. Cartoons (French); preliminary sketches.
6. Edward FitzGerald's translation of The Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám (see p. 961), first published in 1859, became popular only when the Pre-Raphaelites "discovered" it.
7. Buchanan had particularly attacked Rossetti's "Jenny," a sympathetic portrayal of a prostitute.
8. Perhaps a pun, suggesting both one who lacquers pictures (from the Spanish verb maquear) and a pimp (from the French noun maquereau).

"Siena Mi Fe'; Disfecemi Maremma"[9]

Among the pickled fetuses and bottled bones,
Engaged in perfecting the catalogue,
I found the last scion of the Senatorial families of Strasbourg, Monsieur Verog.[1]

5 For two hours he talked of Gallifet;[2]
Of Dowson; of the Rhymers' Club;[3]
Told me how Johnson (Lionel) died[4]
By falling from a high stool in a pub . . .

But showed no trace of alcohol
10 At the autopsy, privately performed—
Tissue preserved—the pure mind
Arose toward Newman[5] as the whiskey warmed.

Dowson found harlots cheaper than hotels;
Headlam for uplift; Image[6] impartially imbued
15 With raptures for Bacchus, Terpsichore[7] and the Church.
So spoke the author of "The Dorian Mood,"

M. Verog, out of step with the decade,
Detached from his contemporaries,
Neglected by the young,
20 Because of these reveries.

Brennbaum[8]

The skylike limpid eyes,
The circular infant's face,
The stiffness from spats to collar
Never relaxing into grace;

5 The heavy memories of Horeb, Sinai and the forty years[9]
Showed only when the daylight fell

9. Siena made me; the Maremma undid me (Italian; Purgatorio 5.134). Words spoken to Dante by the spirit of Pia de' Tolomei, encountered in Purgatory among those who died by violence and without absolution. She was murdered by her husband. The line carries with it the idea of exile from one's native place; the subject of Pound's poem had been born in Alsace.
1. Pound's model for Verog was the poet and librarian of the Royal College of Surgeons Victor Gustav Plarr (1863–1929), author of the poem "In the Dorian-Mood" (line 16). His friends included the poets Ernest Dowson (1867–1900; see pp. 1211–12) and Lionel Johnson (1867–1902). He, like them, was a member of the Rhymers' Club (see line 6, note 2); he published a memoir of Dowson. Pound edited Johnson's Poetical Works (1915).
2. Marquis de Galliffet (1830–1909), a French general who led a cavalry charge at the Battle of Sedan (1870), in the Franco-Prussian War.
3. London literary club founded in 1891 by the Irish poet William Butler Yeats (1865–1939; see pp. 1188–1211) and his friends.
4. I.e., from a fall in the street.
5. John Henry Newman (1801–1890), the most famous Victorian convert to Roman Catholicism (and eventually a cardinal). Johnson was also an ardent convert.
6 Selwyn Image (1849–1930), artist, poet, and clergyman; the Reverend Stewart Headlam (1847–1924), liberal clergyman who was for many years a vicar in the East End of London, writer on social and religious questions. Both members of the Rhymers' Club, they founded the Church and Stage Guild.
7. Greek Muse of the dance. Bacchus: Roman god of wine.
8. Often identified as Max Beerbohm (1872–1956), English critic and caricaturist, who was known as "the Incomparable Max." Pound mistakenly thought he was Jewish.
9. After the Exodus from Egypt, the Israelites, led by Moses, spent forty years in the wilderness. At

Level across the face
Of Brennbaum "The Impeccable."

Mr. Nixon[1]

In the cream gilded cabin of his steam yacht
Mr. Nixon advised me kindly, to advance with fewer Dangers of delay. "Consider
Carefully the reviewer.

5 "I was as poor as you are;
"When I began I got, of course,
"Advance on royalties, fifty at first," said Mr. Nixon,
"Follow me, and take a column,
"Even if you have to work free.

10 "Butter reviewers. From fifty to three hundred
"I rose in eighteen months;
"The hardest nut I had to crack
"Was Dr. Dundas.

"I never mentioned a man but with the view 15 "Of selling my own works.
"The tip's a good one, as for literature
"It gives no man a sinecure.

"And no one knows, at sight, a masterpiece.
"And give up verse, my boy,
20 "There's nothing in it."

. . . .

Likewise a friend of Bloughram's[2] once advised me:
Don't kick against the pricks,[3]
Accept opinion. The "Nineties"° tried your game — 1890s
And died, there's nothing in it.

X

Beneath the sagging roof
The stylist[4] has taken shelter,
Unpaid, uncelebrated,
At last from the world's welter

5 Nature receives him;
With a placid and uneducated mistress

Horeb, God spoke to Moses from a burning bush (Exodus 3.1–4); on Mt. Sinai, Moses received the Ten Commandments (Exodus 19–20).
1. Pound wrote that Nixon "is a fictitious name for a real person"—perhaps the English novelist Arnold Bennett (1867–1931), who owned a yacht.
2. The speaker in "Bishop Blougram's Apology" (1855), by the English poet Robert Browning (1812–1889; see pp. 1009–41), is more practical than devotional in his beliefs.
3. Cf. Jesus' words to Saul: "It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks" (Acts 9.5).
4. Probably based on the English writer Ford Madox Ford (1873–1939), a friend of Pound and an influence on his writing style.

He exercises his talents
And the soil meets his distress.

The haven from sophistications and contentions
10 Leaks through its thatch;
He offers succulent cooking;
The door has a creaking latch.

XI

"Conservatrix of Milésien"[5]
Habits of mind and feeling,
Possibly. But in Ealing[6]
With the most bank-clerkly of Englishmen?

5 No, "Milésian" is an exaggeration.
No instinct has survived in her
Older than those her grandmother
Told her would fit her station.

XII

"Daphne with her thighs in bark Stretches toward me her leafy hands,"[7]—
Subjectively. In the stuffed-satin drawing room
I await The Lady Valentine's commands,

5 Knowing my coat has never been
Of precisely the fashion
To stimulate, in her,
A durable passion;

Doubtful, somewhat, of the value
10 Of well-gowned approbation
Of literary effort,
But never of The Lady Valentine's vocation:

Poetry, her border of ideas,
The edge, uncertain, but a means of blending
15 With other strata
Where the lower and higher have ending;

A hook to catch the Lady Jane's attention,
A modulation toward the theatre,
Also, in the case of revolution,

5. I.e., preserver of Milesian tradition; cf. the phrase "Women, conservers of Milesian traditions," from the short story "Stratages," by the French writer Rémy de Gourmont (1858–1915). The Greek city Miletus, a center of literature and philosophy, was also associated with the erotic stories of Aristides' Milesian Tales (second century B.C.E.), which have not survived and so cannot be conserved.

6. Staid, middle-class London suburb.

7. A translation of two lines from "Le Château de Souvenir," by the French poet Théophile Gautier (1811–1872). In Greek mythology, Daphne, pursued by the god Apollo, was turned into a laurel to enable her to escape.

20 A possible friend and comforter.

. . . .

Conduct, on the other hand, the soul
"Which the highest cultures have nourished"[8]
To Fleet St. where
Dr. Johnson[9] flourished;

25 Beside this thoroughfare
The sale of half-hose has Long since superseded the cultivation
Of Pierian[1] roses.

Envoi (1919)

Go, dumb-born book,[2]
Tell her that sang me once that song of Lawes:
Hadst thou but song
As thou hast subjects known,
5 Then were there cause in thee that should condone
Even my faults that heavy upon me lie,
And build her glories their longevity.

Tell her that sheds
Such treasure in the air,
10 Recking naught else but that her graces give Life to the moment,
I would bid them live
As roses might, in magic amber laid,
Red overwrought with orange and all made 15 One substance and one color
Braving time.

Tell her that goes
With song upon her lips
But sings not out the song, nor knows 20 The maker of it, some other mouth,
May be as fair as hers,
Might, in new ages, gain her worshipers,
When our two dusts with Waller's shall be laid,
Siftings on siftings in oblivion,
25 Till change hath broken down
All things save Beauty alone.

1920

8. A translation of two lines from "Complainte de Pianos," by the French poet Jules Laforgue (1860–1887).
9. Samuel Johnson (1709–1784), poet, journalist, critic, essayist, lexicographer, and the dominant English man of letters of the mid-eighteenth century. Fleet Street: the center of London newspaper publishing.
1. Pieria is a region of northern Greece associated with the Muses, nine sister goddesses in Greek mythology who presided over song, poetry, and the arts and sciences.
2. Here and throughout this poem, Pound echoes Edmund Waller's "Song" (see p. 393), which begins "Go, lovely rose!" and which was set to music by the English composer Henry Lawes (1596–1662).

Medallion[3]

Luini[4] in porcelain!
The grand piano
Utters a profane
Protest with her clear soprano.

5 The sleek head emerges
From the gold-yellow frock
As Anadyomene[5] in the opening
Pages of Reinach.

Honey-red, closing the face-oval,
10 A basket-work of braids which seem as if they were Spun in King Minos'[6] hall
From metal, or intractable amber;

The face-oval beneath the glaze,
Bright in its suave bounding-line, as,
15 Beneath half-watt rays,
The eyes turn topaz.

1920

From The Cantos

I[7]

And then went down to the ship,
Set keel to breakers, forth on the godly sea, and
We set up mast and sail on that swart ship,
Bore sheep aboard her, and our bodies also
5 Heavy with weeping, and winds from sternward
Bore us out onward with bellying canvas,
Circe's this craft, the trim-coifed goddess.[8]
Then sat we amidships, wind jamming the tiller,

3. This poem was originally an "Envoi (1919)"-like (see above) final section of Pound's "1920 (Mauberley)," itself an extension of and comment on "Hugh Selwyn Mauberley: Life and Contacts."
4. Bernardino Luini (ca. 1480–1532), Italian painter.
5. Rising [from the sea] (Greek); Aphroditē anaduomenē was a famous painting by Apelles (fourth century B.C.E.), and similar depictions of the goddess in sculpture are illustrated in Salomon Reinach's Apollo: An Illustrated History of Art throughout the Ages (1904).
6. In Greek mythology, king of Crete.
7. The opening of Pound's Cantos, the complex poem of epic proportions on which he worked for over fifty years, is taken up, through line 67, with Pound's translation of the beginning of book 11 of Homer's Odyssey, not directly from the Greek but from the sixteenth-century Latin translation of Andreas Divus (see line 68 and note 3). Book 11 describes Odysseus's trip to the underworld to consult the spirit of Tiresias, the blind Theban prophet, who will give him instructions for the final stages of his return to his home island, Ithaca.
8. Circe was the enchantress with whom Odysseus lived for over a year and who told him to seek Tiresias's advice.

Thus with stretched sail, we went over sea till day's end.
10 Sun to his slumber, shadows o'er all the ocean,
Came we then to the bounds of deepest water,
To the Kimmerian lands,[9] and peopled cities
Covered with close-webbed mist, unpierced ever
With glitter of sun-rays
15 Nor with stars stretched, nor looking back from heaven
Swartest night stretched over wretched men there.
The ocean flowing backward, came we then to the place
Aforesaid by Circe.
Here did they rites, Perimedes and Eurylochus,[1]
20 And drawing sword from my hip
I dug the ell-square pitkin;[2]
Poured we libations unto each the dead,
First mead[3] and then sweet wine, water mixed with white flour.
Then prayed I many a prayer to the sickly death's-heads;
25 As set in Ithaca, sterile bulls of the best
For sacrifice, heaping the pyre with goods,
A sheep to Tiresias only, black and a bell-sheep.[4]
Dark blood flowed in the fosse,° trench, ditch
Souls out of Erebus,[5] cadaverous dead, of brides
30 Of youths and of the old who had borne much;
Souls stained with recent tears, girls tender,
Men many, mauled with bronze lance heads,
Battle spoil, bearing yet dreory[6] arms,
These many crowded about me; with shouting,
35 Pallor upon me, cried to my men for more beasts;
Slaughtered the herds, sheep slain of bronze;
Poured ointment, cried to the gods,
To Pluto the strong, and praised Proserpine;[7]
Unsheathed the narrow sword,
40 I sat to keep off the impetuous impotent dead,
Till I should hear Tiresias.
But first Elpenor[8] came, our friend Elpenor,
Unburied, cast on the wide earth,
Limbs that we left in the house of Circe,
45 Unwept, unwrapped in sepulchre, since toils urged other.
Pitiful spirit. And I cried in hurried speech:
"Elpenor, how art thou come to this dark coast?
"Cam'st thou afoot, outstripping seamen?"
And he in heavy speech:

9. The Cimmerians were a mythical people living in darkness and mist on the farthest borders of the known world.
1. Two of Odysseus's men.
2. Small, square pit, one ell (forty-five inches) on each side.
3. Alcoholic drink made from fermented honey.
4. The sheep that leads the herd, here likened to Tiresias.
5. A dark place in the underworld, on the way to Hades.
6. Bloody (from the Old English dreorig).
7. Roman name for Persephone, goddess of regeneration and wife of Pluto (Roman Dis), god of the underworld.
8. The youngest of Odysseus's men, he had drunkenly fallen asleep on a loft on the eve of their departure from her island and fell to his death when he tried to climb down a ladder.

50 "Ill fate and abundant wine. I slept in Circe's ingle.° nook, corner
"Going down the long ladder unguarded,
"I fell against the buttress,
"Shattered the nape-nerve, the soul sought Avernus.[9]
"But thou, O King, I bid remember me, unwept, unburied, 55 "Heap up mine arms, be° tomb by sea-bord, and inscribed: make my
"A man of no fortune, and with a name to come.
"And set my oar up, that I swung mid fellows."

And Anticlea[1] came, whom I beat off, and then Tiresias Theban,
Holding his golden wand, knew me, and spoke first:
60 "A second time?[2] why? man of ill star,
"Facing the sunless dead and this joyless region?
"Stand from the fosse, leave me my bloody bever° drink
"For soothsay."
And I stepped back,
65 And he strong with the blood, said then: "Odysseus
"Shalt return through spiteful Neptune, over dark seas,
"Lose all companions." And then Anticlea came.
Lie quiet Divus. I mean, that is Andreas Divus,[3]
In officina Wecheli, 1538, out of Homer.
70 And he sailed, by Sirens and thence outward and away
And unto Circe.[4]
Venerandam,[5]
In the Cretan's phrase, with the golden crown, Aphrodite, Cypri munimenta sortita est, mirthful, oricalchi,[6] with golden
75 Girdles and breast bands, thou with dark eyelids
Bearing the golden bough of Argicida. So that:[7]

1921 1930

9. A lake near Naples believed by the ancients to be the entrance to the underworld.
1. Odysseus's mother; according to the Odyssey, Odysseus wept at seeing her, but obeyed Circe's instruction to speak to no one until he had heard Tiresias.
2. They first saw each other on Earth.
3. The sixteenth-century Italian whose translation of the Odyssey had been published "in officina Wecheli," at the printing shop of Chrétien Wechel, Paris, in 1538.
4. After this visit to the underworld, Odysseus returned to Circe and then, forewarned by her, successfully sailed past the Sirens.
5. Worthy of worship (Latin); applied to Aphrodite, Greek goddess of love and beauty. This, like the Latin words and phrases in the next lines, derives from a Latin translation of two Hymns to Aphrodite (among the so-called Homeric Hymns, dating from the eighth to the sixth century B.C.E). This translation by Georgius Dartona Cretensis ("the Cretan," line 73) was contained in the volume in which Pound had found Divus's translation of the Odyssey. One hymn begins with the words that figure, in Latin or in English, in the closing lines of the Canto: "Reverend golden-crowned beautiful Aphrodite I shall sing, who has received as her lot the citadels of all sea-girt Cyprus. . . ."
6. Of copper. I.e., Aphrodite has received earrings, flower-shaped, of copper and gold.
7. The Canto ends on the colon, going immediately into Canto II, which begins with the words "Hang it all, Robert Browning, / There can be but one 'Sordello.' " Argicida: an epithet for Hermes, the gods' messager and "slayer of Argos" (the many-eyed herdsman set to watch Io); from the other Homeric Hymn, which recounts the union of Aphrodite and Anchises, a union that led to the birth of the Trojan leader Aeneas. Aphrodite, deceiving Anchises at first, says that she is a mortal maiden, that the "slayer of Argos, with wand of gold" has brought her to be his wife. Before descending to the underworld, Aeneas offered the golden bough to Proserpine; it is sacred to the goddess Diana, though Pound seems to associate it with Aphrodite, "slayer of Argi" (Greeks) during the Trojan War.

XLV

With Usura[8]

With usura hath no man a house of good stone each block cut smooth and well fitting that design might cover their face,
with usura
5 hath no man a painted paradise on his church wall harpes et luthes[9] or where virgin receiveth message and halo projects from incision,
with usura
10 seeth no man Gonzaga his heirs and his concubines[1] no picture is made to endure nor to live with but it is made to sell and sell quickly with usura, sin against nature, is thy bread ever more of stale rags
15 is thy bread dry as paper, with no mountain wheat, no strong flour with usura the line grows thick with usura is no clear demarcation and no man can find site for his dwelling.
20 Stone cutter is kept from his stone
weaver is kept from his loom
WITH USURA
wool comes not to market
sheep bringeth no gain with usura
25 Usura is a murrain,° usura plague
blunteth the needle in the maid's hand and stoppeth the spinner's cunning. Pietro Lombardo[2] came not by usura
Duccio[3] came not by usura
30 nor Pier della Francesca; Zuan Bellin' not by usura nor was "La Calunnia"[4] painted.
Came not by usura Angelico; came not Ambrogio Praedis,
Came no church of cut stone signed: Adamo me fecit.[5]
Not by usura St Trophime
35 Not by usura Saint Hilaire,[6]
Usura rusteth the chisel

8. Usury (Latin). "N.B. Usury: a charge for the use of purchasing power, levied without regard to production; often without regard to the possibilities of production. (Hence the failure of the Medici bank)" [Pound's note]. Medici bank: operated 1397–1494 by the Medici family of Florence. Pound felt that the legalizing of usury during the Reformation had profound, negative effects on society.
9. Allusion to a poem of the Grand Testament, by the French poet François Villon (1431–1463?): "Painted paradise where there are harps and lutes."
1. Gonzaga, His Heirs and Concubines is a painting of a powerful patron of Mantua, Francesco Gonzaga (1444–1483), by the Italian painter Andrea Mantegna (1431–1506).
2. Italian architect and sculptor (1435–1515). He and other artists in the poem were supported by patrons.
3. Agostino di Duccio (1418?–1481), Italian sculptor.
4. Calumny (Italian); title of painting by Sandro Botticelli (1444–1510). Piero della Francesca (ca. 1420–1492) and Giovanni Bellini (ca. 1430–1516), Italian painters.
5. Adam made me (Latin); a sculptor's inscription in the Church of San Zeno, Verona, Italy. Fra Angelico (ca. 1400–1455) and Ambrogio Praedis (1455?–1508), Italian painters.
6. Church in Poitiers, France. St Trophime: church in Arles, France.

It rusteth the craft and the craftsman
It gnaweth the thread in the loom
None learneth to weave gold in her pattern;
40 Azure hath a canker by usura; cramoisi[7] is unbroidered
Emerald findeth no Memling[8]
Usura slayeth the child in the womb
It stayeth the young man's courting
It hath brought palsey to bed, lyeth
45 between the young bride and her bridegroom
CONTRA NATURAM[9]
They have brought whores for Eleusis[1]
Corpses are set to banquet at behest of usura.

1937

ELINOR WYLIE
1885–1928

Full Moon

My bands of silk and miniver° white fur
Momently grew heavier;
The black gauze was beggarly thin;
The ermine muffled mouth and chin;
5 I could not suck the moonlight in.

Harlequin in lozenges[1]
Of love and hate, I walked in these
Striped and ragged rigmaroles;[2]
Along the pavement my footsoles
10 Trod warily on living coals.

Shouldering the thoughts I loathed,
In their corrupt disguises clothed,
Mortality I could not tear
From my ribs, to leave them bare
15 Ivory in silver air.

There I walked, and there I raged;
The spiritual savage caged
Within my skeleton, raged afresh
To feel, behind a carnal mesh,
20 The clean bones crying in the flesh.

1923

7. Crimson cloth (French).
8. Hans Memling (1430?–1495), Flemish painter.
9. Against nature (Latin); phrase used in Aristotle's Politics to describe usury.
1. Town in ancient Greece known for spring fertility rites (involving priestesses—Pound substitutes "whores").
1. Diamond shapes. Harlequin: a buffoon, a character in the Italian commedia dell'arte, or one dressed in fabric of certain variegated patterns.
2. Literally, confused or meaningless statements.

Doomsday

The end of everything approaches;
I hear it coming
Loud as the wheels of painted coaches
On turnpikes drumming;
5 Loud as the pomp of plumy hearses,
Or pennoned charges;[3]
Loud as when every oar reverses
Venetian barges;
Loud as the caves of covered bridges
10 Fulfilled with rumble
Of hooves; and loud as cloudy ridges
When glaciers tumble;
Like creeping thunder this continues
Diffused and distant,
15 Loud in our ears and in our sinews,
Insane, insistent;
Loud as a lion scorning carrion
Further and further;
Loud as the ultimate loud clarion
20 Or the first murther.° murder

1932

H. D. (HILDA DOOLITTLE)
1886–1961

Sea Rose

Rose, harsh rose,
marred and with stint of petals,
meager flower, thin,
sparse of leaf,

5 more precious than a wet rose single on a stem—
you are caught in the drift.

Stunted, with small leaf,
10 you are flung on the sand,
you are lifted
in the crisp sand
that drives in the wind.

3. Military charges with streaming banners.

Can the spice-rose
15 drip such acrid fragrance hardened in a leaf?

1916

Sea Violet

The white violet
is scented on its stalk,
the sea-violet
fragile as agate,
5 lies fronting all the wind
among the torn shells on the sand-bank.

The greater blue violets
flutter on the hill, 10 but who would change for these who would change for these one root of the white sort?

Violet
your grasp is frail 15 on the edge of the sand-hill,
but you catch the light—
frost, a star edges with its fire.

1916

Helen[1]

All Greece hates
the still eyes in the white face,
the luster as of olives
where she stands,
5 And the white hands.

All Greece reviles
the wan face when she smiles, hating it deeper still
when it grows wan and white, 10 remembering past enchantments
and past ills.

1. In Greek mythology, the beautiful wife of the Greek leader Menelaus; abducted by the Trojan prince Paris, she was blamed for the Trojan War, waged to regain her.

Greece sees unmoved,
God's daughter, born of love,[2]
the beauty of cool feet
15 and slenderest knees, could love indeed the maid,
only if she were laid,
white ash amid funereal cypresses.

1924

Wine Bowl

I will rise from my troth
with the dead,
I will sweeten my cup
5 and my bread
with a gift;
I will chisel a bowl for the wine,
for the white wine
and red;
10 I will summon a Satyr to dance,[3]
a Centaur, a Nymph
and a Faun;
I will picture
15 a warrior King,
a Giant,
a Naiad,
a Monster;
I will cut round the rim of the crater,[4]
20 some simple familiar thing, vine leaves
or the sea-swallow's wing;
I will work at each separate part 25 till my mind is worn out and my heart:
in my skull,
where the vision had birth,
will come wine,
30 would pour song
of the hot earth,
of the flower and the sweet

2. Helen was said to be the daughter of Zeus, ruler of the gods, and Leda, a mortal woman, whom Zeus raped in the guise of a swan.
3. Lines 10–18 evoke figures from classical mythology. Nymphs were minor nature goddesses; those who lived in springs, fountains, rivers, and lakes were called naiads. In Greek mythology, satyrs were woodland spirits in the form of men with the legs of goats and with pointed ears or horns. The Romans identified satyrs with their own woodland spirits, the fauns. Centaurs had the faces and chests of men and the bodies of horses. Satyrs are usually associated with lechery; centaurs, with savagery.
4. I.e., a kratēr, the usual Greek term for a drinking bowl.

of the hill,
thyme,
35 meadow-plant,
grass-blade and sorrel;
in my skull,
from which vision took flight,
will come wine
40 will pour song
of the cool night,
of the silver and blade of the moon,
of the star,
of the sun's kiss at midnoon;
45 I will challenge the reed-pipe and stringed lyre,[5]
to sing sweeter,
pipe wilder,
praise louder
50 the fragrance and sweet of the wine jar,
till each lover
must summon another, to proffer a rose 55 where all flowers are,
in the depths of the exquisite crater;
flower will fall upon flower till the red shower inflame all 60 with intimate fervor;
till:
men who travel afar
will look up,
sensing grape
65 and hill-slope
in the cup;
men who sleep by the wood will arise, hearing ripple and fall
70 of the tide,
being drawn by the spell of the sea;
the bowl will ensnare and enchant men who crouch by the hearth till they want 75 but the riot of stars in the night;
those who dwell far inland will seek ships;
the deep-sea fisher,
plying his nets,
80 will forsake them
for wheat-sheaves and loam;
men who wander

5. The pipe was the instrument of Pan, Greek god of forests, pastures, flocks, and herds; the lyre was the instrument of Apollo, Greek and Roman god of sunlight, prophecy, music, and poetry.

will yearn for their home,
men at home
85 will depart.

I will rise
from my troth with the dead,
I will sweeten my cup
and my bread
90 with a gift;
I will chisel a bowl for the wine,
for the white wine
and red.

1931

From The Walls Do Not Fall[6]

[1]

An incident here and there,
and rails gone (for guns)
from your (and my) old town square:

mist and mist-grey, no colour,
5 still the Luxor[7] bee, chick and hare pursue unalterable purpose

in green, rose-red, lapis;
they continue to prophesy
from the stone papyrus:

10 there, as here, ruin opens the tomb, the temple; enter,
there as here, there are no doors:

the shrine lies open to the sky,
the rain falls, here, there 15 sand drifts; eternity endures:

ruin everywhere, yet as the fallen roof leaves the sealed room
open to the air,

6. The first of three book-length poems (the other two being Tribute to the Angels and The Flowering of the Rod) that would be known as H. D.'s war trilogy. "The parallel between ancient Egypt and 'ancient' London is obvious. In I (The Walls Do Not Fall) the 'fallen roof leaves the sealed room open to the air' is of course true of our own house of life—outer violence touching the deepest hidden subconscious terrors, etc. and we see so much of our past 'on show,' as it were 'another sliced wall where poor utensils show like rare objects in a museum' " (H. D., in a letter to her eventual literary executor, the American scholar Norman Holmes Pearson).

7. An Egyptian town on the Nile, near the ruins of ancient Thebes. Representations of the bee, chick, and hare appear on the Temple of Karnak, in Thebes.

so, through our desolation,
20 thoughts stir, inspiration stalks us through gloom:

unaware, Spirit announces the Presence;
shivering overtakes us,
as of old, Samuel:[8]

25 trembling at a known street-corner,
we know not nor are known;
the Pythian[9] pronounces—we pass on to another cellar, to another sliced wall where poor utensils show

30 like rare objects in a museum;

Pompeii[1] has nothing to teach us,
we know crack of volcanic fissure,
slow flow of terrible lava,

pressure on heart, lungs, the brain
35 about to burst its brittle case
(what the skull can endure!):

over us, Apocryphal[2] fire,
under us, the earth sway, dip of a floor,
slope of a pavement

40 where men roll, drunk with a new bewilderment,
sorcery, bedevilment:

the bone-frame was made for no such shock knit within terror, 45 yet the skeleton stood up to it:

the flesh? it was melted away,
the heart burnt out, dead ember,
tendons, muscles shattered, outer husk dismembered,

yet the frame held:
50 we passed the flame: we wonder what saved us? what for?

1944

8. Cf. 1 Samuel 28.15, where the prophet Samuel is disturbed at being raised from the dead, and 1 Samuel 28.3: "When Saul saw the army of the Philistines, he was afraid, and his heart trembled greatly."
9. In Greek mythology, high priestess of the oracle at Delphi.
1. Ancient city on the bay of Naples, buried by an eruption of Mt. Vesuvius in 79 C.E.
2. Or perhaps "apocalyptic," meaning the fiery judgments of the Apocalypse prophesied in the Christian Scriptures. Cf. 1 Corinthians 3.15: "If any man's work shall be burned, he shall suffer loss: but he himself shall be saved; yet so as by fire." The Apocrypha are books rejected from the Bible because of dubious authenticity.

SIEGFRIED SASSOON
1886–1967

Christ and the Soldier

I

The straggled soldier halted—stared at Him—
Then clumsily dumped down upon his knees,
Gasping, "O blessed crucifix, I'm beat!"
And Christ, still sentried by the seraphim,[1]
5 Near the front-line, between two splintered trees,
Spoke him: "My son, behold these hands and feet."

The soldier eyed Him upward, limb by limb, Paused at the Face; then muttered, "Wounds like these Would shift a bloke to Blighty[2] just a treat!"
10 Christ, gazing downward, grieving and ungrim,
Whispered, "I made for you the mysteries,
Beyond all battles moves the Paraclete."[3]

II

The soldier chucked his rifle in the dust,
And slipped his pack, and wiped his neck, and said—
15 "O Christ Almighty, stop this bleeding fight!"
Above that hill the sky was stained like rust
With smoke. In sullen daybreak flaring red
The guns were thundering bombardment's blight.

The soldier cried, "I was born full of lust,
20 With hunger, thirst, and wishfulness to wed.
Who cares today if I done wrong or right?"
Christ asked all pitying, "Can you put no trust
In my known word that shrives each faithful head?
Am I not resurrection, life and light?"

III

25 Machine-guns rattled from below the hill;
High bullets flicked and whistled through the leaves;
And smoke came drifting from exploding shells.
Christ said, "Believe; and I can cleanse your ill.
I have not died in vain between two thieves;
30 Nor made a fruitless gift of miracles."

1. Angels of the highest of nine orders. In the Bible (Isaiah 6), six-winged celestial beings.
2. Slang for Britain.
3. Advocate or counselor; sometimes, as here, applied to the Holy Ghost.

The soldier answered, "Heal me if you will,
Maybe there's comfort when a soul believes
In mercy, and we need it in these hells.
But be you for both sides? I'm paid to kill 35 And if I shoot a man his mother grieves.
Does that come into what your teaching tells?"

A bird lit on the Christ and twittered gay;
Then a breeze passed and shook the ripening corn.
A Red Cross waggon bumped along the track.
40 Forsaken Jesus dreamed in the desolate day—
Uplifted Jesus, Prince of Peace forsworn—
An observation post for the attack.

"Lord Jesus, ain't you got no more to say?"
Bowed hung that head below the crown of thorns.
45 The soldier shifted, and picked up his pack,
And slung his gun, and stumbled on his way.
"O God," he groaned, "why ever was I born?" . . .
The battle boomed, and no reply came back.

1916 1973

"They"

The Bishop tells us: "When the boys come back
They will not be the same; for they'll have fought
In a just cause: they lead the last attack
On Anti-Christ; their comrades' blood has bought
5 New right to breed an honourable race,
They have challenged Death and dared him face to face."

"We're none of us the same!" the boys reply.
"For George lost both his legs; and Bill's stone blind;
Poor Jim's shot through the lungs and like to die;
10 And Bert's gone syphilitic: you'll not find
A chap who's served that hasn't found some change."
And the Bishop said: "The ways of God are strange!"

1916 1917

The General

"Good-morning, good-morning!" the General said
When we met him last week on our way to the line.
Now the soldiers he smiled at are most of 'em dead,
And we're cursing his staff for incompetent swine.

5 "He's a cheery old card," grunted Harry to Jack
As they slogged up to Arras[4] with rifle and pack.

. . .

But he did for them both by his plan of attack.

1917 1918

Glory of Women

You love us when we're heroes, home on leave,
Or wounded in a mentionable place.
You worship decorations; you believe
That chivalry redeems the war's disgrace.
5 You make us shells. You listen with delight,
By tales of dirt and danger fondly thrilled.
You crown our distant ardours while we fight,
And mourn our laurelled memories when we're killed.
You can't believe that British troops "retire"
10 When hell's last horror breaks them, and they run,
Trampling the terrible corpses—blind with blood.
O German mother dreaming by the fire,
While you are knitting socks to send your son
His face is trodden deeper in the mud.

1917 1918

Everyone Sang

Everyone suddenly burst out singing;
And I was filled with such delight
As prisoned birds must find in freedom,
Winging wildly across the white
5 Orchards and dark-green fields; on—on—and out of sight.

Everyone's voice was suddenly lifted;
And beauty came like the setting sun:
My heart was shaken with tears; and horror
Drifted away . . . O, but Everyone
10 Was a bird; and the song was wordless; the singing will never be done.

1919 1919

4. A city in northern France, in the front line throughout much of World War I. The British assault on the Western Front that began on April 9, 1917, was known as the Battle of Arras. The British suffered casualties of eighty-four thousand troops, inflicted casualties of seventy-five thousand on the Germans, and took thirteen thousand prisoners.

On Passing the New Menin Gate[5]

Who will remember, passing through this Gate,
The unheroic Dead who fed the guns?
Who shall absolve the foulness of their fate,—
Those doomed, conscripted, unvictorious ones?
5 Crudely renewed, the Salient[6] holds its own.
Paid are its dim defenders by this pomp;
Paid, with a pile of peace-complacent stone,
The armies who endured that sullen swamp.

Here was the world's worst wound. And here with pride
10 "Their name liveth for ever," the Gateway claims.
Was ever an immolation so belied
As these intolerably nameless names?
Well might the Dead who struggled in the slime
Rise and deride this sepulchre of crime.

1927–28 1928

ROBINSON JEFFERS
1887–1962

Shine, Perishing Republic

While this America settles in the mold of its vulgarity, heavily thickening to empire,
And protest, only a bubble in the molten mass, pops and sighs out,
and the mass hardens,

I sadly smiling remember that the flower fades to make fruit, the fruit
rots to make earth.
Out of the mother; and through the spring exultances, ripeness and decadence; and home to the mother.

5 You making haste haste on decay: not blameworthy; life is good, be it stubbornly long or suddenly
A mortal splendor: meteors are not needed less than mountains:
shine, perishing republic.

But for my children, I would have them keep their distance from the thickening center; corruption
Never has been compulsory, when the cities lie at the monster's feet there are left the mountains.

5. The names of 54,889 men killed in World War I are engraved on the gate, a war memorial in Belgium.

6. Projecting part of a line of defensive trenches, open to attack from the front and both sides.

And boys, be in nothing so moderate as in love of man, a clever servant, insufferable master.
10 There is the trap that catches noblest spirits, that caught—they say—
God, when he walked on earth.

1924

Boats in a Fog

Sports and gallantries, the stage, the arts, the antics of dancers,
The exuberant voices of music,
Have charm for children but lack nobility; it is bitter earnestness
That makes beauty; the mind
5 Knows, grown adult.
A sudden fog-drift muffled the ocean,
A throbbing of engines moved in it,
At length, a stone's throw out, between the rocks and the vapor,
One by one moved shadows
10 Out of the mystery, shadows, fishing-boats, trailing each other,
Following the cliff for guidance,
Holding a difficult path between the peril of the sea-fog
And the foam on the shore granite.
One by one, trailing their leader, six crept by me,
15 Out of the vapor and into it,
The throb of their engines subdued by the fog, patient and cautious,
Coasting all round the peninsula
Back to the buoys in Monterey harbor.[1] A flight of pelicans
Is nothing lovelier to look at;
20 The flight of the planets is nothing nobler; all the arts lose virtue
Against the essential reality
Of creatures going about their business among the equally
Earnest elements of nature.

1924

Hurt Hawks

1

The broken pillar of the wing jags from the clotted shoulder,
The wing trails like a banner in defeat,
No more to use the sky forever but live with famine
And pain a few days: cat nor coyote
5 Will shorten the week of waiting for death, there is game without talons.
He stands under the oak-bush and waits
The lame feet of salvation; at night he remembers freedom
And flies in a dream, the dawns ruin it.

1. Part of Monterey Bay, a Pacific inlet in California.

He is strong and pain is worse to the strong, incapacity is worse.
10 The curs of the day come and torment him
At distance, no one but death the redeemer will humble that head,
The intrepid readiness, the terrible eyes.
The wild God of the world is sometimes merciful to those
That ask mercy, not often to the arrogant.
15 You do not know him, you communal people, or you have forgotten him;
Intemperate and savage, the hawk remembers him;
Beautiful and wild, the hawks, and men that are dying, remember him.

2

I'd sooner, except the penalties, kill a man than a hawk; but the great redtail° red-tailed hawk
Had nothing left but unable misery
20 From the bone too shattered for mending, the wing that trailed under his talons when he moved.
We had fed him six weeks, I gave him freedom,
He wandered over the foreland hill and returned in the evening, asking for death,
Not like a beggar, still eyed with the old
Implacable arrogance. I gave him the lead gift in the twilight. What fell was relaxed, 25 Owl-downy, soft feminine feathers; but what Soared: the fierce rush: the night-herons by the flooded river cried fear at its rising
Before it was quite unsheathed from reality.

1928

The Purse-Seine[2]

Our sardine fishermen work at night in the dark of the moon; daylight or moonlight
They could not tell where to spread the net, unable to see the phosphorescence of the shoals° of fish. schools
They work northward from Monterey, coasting Santa Cruz; off New Year's Point or off Pigeon Point[3]
The look-out man will see some lakes of milk-color light on the sea's night-purple; he points, and the helmsman
5 Turns the dark prow, the motorboat circles the gleaming shoal and drifts out her seine-net. They close the circle
And purse the bottom of the net, then with great labor haul it in.

I cannot tell you
How beautiful the scene is, and a little terrible, then, when the crowded fish

2. Large fishing net with a closeable bottom.
3. These are all places in the Monterey Bay area of western California.

Know they are caught, and wildly beat from one wall to the other of their closing destiny the phosphorescent
10 Water to a pool of flame, each beautiful slender body sheeted with flame, like a live rocket
A comet's tail wake of clear yellow flame; while outside the narrowing
Floats and cordage of the net great sea-lions come up to watch, sighing in the dark; the vast walls of night
Stand erect to the stars.

Lately I was looking from a night mountain-top
15 On a wide city, the colored splendor, galaxies of light: how could I help but recall the seine-net
Gathering the luminous fish? I cannot tell you how beautiful the city appeared, and a little terrible.
I thought, We have geared the machines and locked all together into interdependence; we have built the great cities; now
There is no escape. We have gathered vast populations incapable of free survival, insulated
From the strong earth, each person in himself helpless, on all dependent. The circle is closed, and the net
20 Is being hauled in. They hardly feel the cords drawing, yet they shine already. The inevitable mass-disasters
Will not come in our time nor in our children's, but we and our children
Must watch the net draw narrower, government take all powers—or revolution, and the new government
Take more than all, add to kept bodies kept souls—or anarchy, the mass-disasters.

These things are Progress;
25 Do you marvel our verse is troubled or frowning, while it keeps its reason? Or it lets go, lets the mood flow
In the manner of the recent young men into mere hysteria, splintered gleams, crackled laughter. But they are quite wrong.
There is no reason for amazement: surely one always knew that cultures decay, and life's end is death.

1937

Birds and Fishes

Every October millions of little fish come along the shore,
Coasting this granite edge of the continent
On their lawful occasions: but what a festival for the sea-fowl.
What a witches' sabbath[4] of wings
5 Hides the dark water. The heavy pelicans shout "Haw!" like Job's friend's warhorse[5]
And dive from the high air, the cormorants[6]

4. Midnight meeting of witches and wizards, believed to be devil worshipers, to celebrate the witchcraft cult.
5. In Job 39.19–25, God describes the strength of the horse, who "saith among the trumpets Ha, ha; and he smelleth the battle afar off, the thunder of the captains and the shouting."
6. Aquatic birds with dark plumage.

Slip their long black bodies under the water and hunt like wolves
Through the green half-light. Screaming, the gulls watch, Wild with envy and malice, cursing and snatching. What hysterical greed!
10 What a filling of pouches! the mob
Hysteria is nearly human—these decent birds!—as if they were finding Gold in the street. It is better than gold,
It can be eaten: and which one in all this fury of wild-fowl pities the fish?
No one certainly. Justice and mercy
15 Are human dreams, they do not concern the birds nor the fish nor eternal God.
However—look again before you go.
The wings and wild hungers, the wave-worn skerries,° the bright quick minnows reefs
Living in terror to die in torment—
Man's fate and theirs—and the island rocks and immense ocean beyond, and Lobos[7] 20 Darkening above the bay: they are beautiful?
That is their quality: not mercy, not mind, not goodness, but the beauty of God.[8]

1963

RUPERT BROOKE
1887–1915

Sonnet

Oh! Death will find me, long before I tire
Of watching you; and swing me suddenly
Into the shade and loneliness and mire° mud
Of the last land! There, waiting patiently,

5 One day, I think, I'll feel a cool wind blowing,
See a slow light across the Stygian[1] tide,
And hear the Dead about me stir, unknowing,
And tremble. And I shall know that you have died,

And watch you, a broad-browed and smiling dream,
10 Pass, light as ever, through the lightless host,
Quietly ponder, start, and sway, and gleam—
Most individual and bewildering ghost!—

7. Point Lobos, a promontory on the Pacific in California.
8. Cf. Shakespeare, The Merchant of Venice 4.1.179–81: "The quality of mercy is not strained. / It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven / Upon the place beneath."
1. Of Styx, one of the mythological rivers of Hades, across which the ferryman Charon rowed the souls of the dead.

And turn, and toss your brown delightful head
Amusedly, among the ancient Dead.

April 1909 — 1911

From The Old Vicarage, Grantchester[2]

(Café des Westens, Berlin, May 1912)

Just now the lilac is in bloom,
All before my little room;
And in my flower-beds, I think,
Smile the carnation and the pink;
5 And down the borders, well I know,
The poppy and the pansy blow . . .
Oh! there the chestnuts, summer through,
Beside the river make for you
A tunnel of green gloom, and sleep
10 Deeply above; and green and deep
The stream mysterious glides beneath,
Green as a dream and deep as death.
—Oh, damn! I know it! and I know
How the May fields all golden show,
15 And when the day is young and sweet,
Gild gloriously the bare feet
That run to bathe . . .
Du lieber Gott![3]

Here am I, sweating, sick, and hot,
20 And there the shadowed waters fresh
Lean up to embrace the naked flesh.
Temperamentvoll[4] German Jews
Drink beer around;—and there the dews
Are soft beneath a morn of gold.
25 Here tulips bloom as they are told;
Unkempt about those hedges blows
An English unofficial rose;
And there the unregulated sun
Slopes down to rest when day is done,
30 And wakes a vague unpunctual star,
A slippered Hesper;° and there are — evening star (Venus)
Meads° towards Haslingfield and Coton — meadows
Where das Betreten's not verboten.[5]

εἴθε γενοίμην[6] . . . would I were
35 In Grantchester, in Grantchester!—

2. Like Haslingfield and Coton (both line 32) and Madingley (line 129), a village near Cambridge, England. The Old Vicarage was Brooke's house.
3. [You] dear God! (German).
4. Temperamental (German).
5. Forbidden (German). Das Betreten: walking on the grass (German).
6. Would I were (Greek).

Some, it may be, can get in touch
With Nature there, or Earth, or such.
And clever modern men have seen
A Faun a-peeping through the green,
40 And felt the Classics were not dead,
To glimpse a Naiad's reedy head,
Or hear the Goat-foot[7] piping low: . . .
But these are things I do not know.
I only know that you may lie
45 Day-long and watch the Cambridge sky,
And, flower-lulled in sleepy grass,
Hear the cool lapse of hours pass,
Until the centuries blend and blur
In Grantchester, in Grantchester. . . .
50 Still in the dawnlit waters cool
His ghostly Lordship swims his pool,[8]
And tries the strokes, essays the tricks,
Long learnt on Hellespont, or Styx.[9]
Dan Chaucer[1] hears his river still 55 Chatter beneath a phantom mill.
Tennyson[2] notes, with studious eye,
How Cambridge waters hurry by . . .
And in that garden, black and white,
Creep whispers through the grass all night;
60 And spectral dance, before the dawn,
A hundred Vicars down the lawn;
Curates,[3] long dust, will come and go
On lissom,° clerical, printless toe; lithe, nimble
And oft between the boughs is seen
65 The sly shade of a Rural Dean[4] . . .
Till, at a shiver in the skies,
Vanishing with Satanic cries,
The prim ecclesiastic rout
Leaves but a startled sleeper-out,
70 Grey heavens, the first bird's drowsy calls,
The falling house that never falls.

* * *

116 Ah God! to see the branches stir
Across the moon at Grantchester!

7. I.e., Pan, Greek god of pastures, flocks, and shepherds; half man and half goat, he played the reed flute. Faun: Roman mythological figure (Greek satyr), also half man and half goat, associated with nature. Naiad: a nymph (i.e., Greek mythological figure, female counterpart to the satyr) associated with lakes, rivers, springs, and fountains.
8. "Byron's Pool," a favorite bathing place in the river Cam, named for the English poet (then Cambridge student) George Gordon, Lord Byron (1788–1824; see pp. 833–63).
9. One of the mythological rivers of Hades over which Charon ferried the souls of the dead. Hellespont: the "Sea of Helle"—now known as the Dardanelles—between Bulgaria and Turkey; straits across which Byron once swam.
1. Geoffrey Chaucer (ca. 1343–1400; see pp. 19–70), who set "The Reeve's Tale" at the border of Cambridge and Grantchester, near a mill. Dan: master, sir (archaic).
2. Alfred, Lord Tennyson (1809–1892; see pp. 982–1009).
3. Junior clergyman in the Church of England.
4. Clergyman in the Church of England with responsibility for certain country parishes.

To smell the thrilling-sweet and rotten
Unforgettable, unforgotten
120 River-smell, and hear the breeze
Sobbing in the little trees.
Say, do the elm-clumps greatly stand
Still guardians of that holy land?
The chestnuts shade, in reverend dream,
125 The yet unacademic stream?
Is dawn a secret shy and cold
Anadyomene,[5] silver-gold?
And sunset still a golden sea
From Haslingfield to Madingley?
130 And after, ere the night is born,
Do hares come out about the corn?
Oh, is the water sweet and cool,
Gentle and brown, above the pool?
And laughs the immortal river still 135 Under the mill, under the mill?
Say, is there Beauty yet to find?
And Certainty? and Quiet kind?
Deep meadows yet, for to forget
The lies, and truths, and pain? . . . Oh! yet 140 Stands the Church clock at ten to three?
And is there honey still for tea?

1912 1914

The Soldier

If I should die, think only this of me:
That there's some corner of a foreign field
That is for ever England. There shall be
In that rich earth a richer dust concealed;
5 A dust whom England bore, shaped, made aware,
Gave, once, her flowers to love, her ways to roam,
A body of England's, breathing English air,
Washed by the rivers, blest by suns of home.

And think, this heart, all evil shed away,
10 A pulse in the eternal mind, no less
Gives somewhere back the thoughts by England given;
Her sights and sounds; dreams happy as her day;
And laughter, learnt of friends; and gentleness,
In hearts at peace, under an English heaven.

November–December 1914 1914

5. Rising (Greek); name given to the goddess Aphrodite, who rose (at her birth) from the sea.

MARIANNE MOORE
1887–1972

To a Steam Roller

The illustration
is nothing to you without the application.
You lack half wit. You crush all the particles down into close conformity, and then walk back and forth on them.

5 Sparkling chips of rock
are crushed down to the level of the parent block.
Were not "impersonal judgment in aesthetic matters, a metaphysical impossibility,"[1] you might fairly achieve 10 it. As for butterflies, I can hardly conceive of one's attending upon you, but to question

the congruence of the complement is vain, if it exists.

1915 1921

To a Chameleon[2]

Hid by the august foliage and fruit of the grape-vine
twine your anatomy
round the pruned and polished stem,
5 Chameleon.
Fire laid upon an emerald as long as the Dark King's massy
one,
10 could not snap the spectrum up for food as you have done.

1916 1921

The Fish

wade
through black jade.
Of the crow-blue mussel-shells, one keeps adjusting the ash-heaps;
5 opening and shutting itself like

1. Quotation, slightly changed, from an article by the American music critic Lawrence Gilman (1878–1939) in the April 1915 New American Review.

2. Originally published with the title "You are Like the Realistic Product of an Idealistic Search for Gold at the Foot of the Rainbow."

an injured fan.
The barnacles which encrust the side of the wave, cannot hide 10 there for the submerged shafts of the sun,

split like spun
glass, move themselves with spotlight swiftness into the crevices—
15 in and out, illuminating

the turquoise sea of bodies. The water drives a wedge of iron through the iron edge 20 of the cliff; whereupon the stars, pink rice-grains, ink-bespattered jelly-fish, crabs like green lilies, and submarine

25 toadstools, slide each on the other.

All external marks of abuse are present on this defiant edifice—
30 all the physical features of accident—lack of cornice, dynamite grooves, burns, and hatchet strokes, these things stand 35 out on it; the chasm-side is dead.

Repeated
evidence has proved that it can live on what can not revive
40 its youth. The sea grows old in it.

1918 1921, 1935

Poetry[3]

I, too, dislike it: there are things that are important beyond all this fiddle.
Reading it, however, with a perfect contempt for it, one discovers in

3. Moore later cut this poem to the first three lines.

it after all, a place for the genuine.
Hands that can grasp, eyes
5 that can dilate, hair that can rise if it must, these things are important not because a high-sounding interpretation can be put upon them but because they are useful. When they become so derivative as to become unintelligible, the same thing may be said for all of us, that we 10 do not admire what we cannot understand: the bat holding on upside down or in quest of something to eat, elephants pushing, a wild horse taking a roll, a tireless wolf under a tree, the immovable critic twitching his skin like a horse that feels a flea, the base-15 ball fan, the statistician—

nor is it valid to discriminate against "business documents and school-books";[4] all these phenomena are important. One must make a distinction

however: when dragged into prominence by half poets, the result is not poetry,
20 nor till the poets among us can be "literalists of the imagination"[5]—above
insolence and triviality and can present for inspection, "imaginary gardens with real toads in them", shall we 25 have it. In the meantime, if you demand on the one hand, the raw material of poetry in all its rawness and that which is on the other hand genuine, you are interested in poetry.

1919 1921

A Grave

Man looking into the sea, taking the view from those who have as much right to it as you have to it yourself,
it is human nature to stand in the middle of a thing,
but you cannot stand in the middle of this;

4. "Diary of Tolstoy (Dutton), p. 84. 'Where the boundary between prose and poetry lies, I shall never be able to understand. The question is raised in manuals of style, yet the answer to it lies beyond me. Poetry is verse: prose is not verse. Or else poetry is everything with the exception of business documents and school books' " [Moore's note]. Leo Tolstoy (1828–1910), Russian novelist, philosopher, and mystic.

5. "Yeats: Ideas of Good and Evil (A. H. Bullen), p. 182. 'The limitation of [Blake's] view was from the very intensity of his vision; he was a too literal realist of imagination, as others are of nature; and because he believed that the figures seen by the mind's eye, when exalted by inspiration, were "eternal existences," symbols of divine essences, he hated every grace of style that might obscure their lineaments' " [Moore's note]. William Butler Yeats (1865–1939; see pp. 1188–1211), Irish poet and dramatist.

5 the sea has nothing to give but a well excavated grave.
The firs stand in a procession, each with an emerald turkey-foot at the top,
reserved as their contours, saying nothing;
repression, however, is not the most obvious characteristic of the sea;
the sea is a collector, quick to return a rapacious look.
10 There are others besides you who have worn that look—whose expression is no longer a protest; the fish no longer investigate them
for their bones have not lasted:
men lower nets, unconscious of the fact that they are desecrating a grave,
and row quickly away—the blades of the oars 15 moving together like the feet of water-spiders as if there were no such thing as death.
The wrinkles progress among themselves in a phalanx[6]—beautiful under networks of foam,
and fade breathlessly while the sea rustles in and out of the seaweed;
the birds swim through the air at top speed, emitting cat-calls as heretofore—
the tortoise-shell scourges about the feet of the cliffs, in motion beneath them;
20 and the ocean, under the pulsation of lighthouses and noise of bell-buoys, advances as usual, looking as if it were not that ocean in which dropped things are bound to sink—in which if they turn and twist, it is neither with volition nor consciousness.

1921 1924, 1935

The Steeple-Jack

Revised, 1961

Dürer[7] would have seen a reason for living in a town like this, with eight stranded whales to look at; with the sweet sea air coming into your house on a fine day, from water etched
5   with waves as formal as the scales on a fish.

One by one in two's and three's, the seagulls keep flying back and forth over the town clock, or sailing around the lighthouse without moving their wings—10 rising steadily with a slight quiver of the body—or flock mewing where a sea the purple of the peacock's neck is paled to greenish azure as Dürer changed

6. Compact body of troops.
7. Albrecht Dürer (1471–1528), German painter and engraver particularly gifted in rendering closely and meticulously observed detail.

15 the pine green of the Tyrol[8] to peacock blue and guinea gray.[9] You can see a twenty-five-pound lobster; and fishnets arranged to dry. The whirlwind fife-and-drum of the storm bends the salt 20 marsh grass, disturbs stars in the sky and the star on the steeple; it is a privilege to see so much confusion. Disguised by what might seem the opposite, the seaside flowers and

25 trees are favored by the fog so that you have the tropics at first hand: the trumpet-vine, fox-glove, giant snap-dragon, a salpiglossis[1] that has spots and stripes; morning-glories, gourds, or moon-vines trained on fishing-twine 30 at the back door; cat-tails, flags, blueberries and spiderwort, striped grass, lichens, sunflowers, asters, daisies—

yellow and crab-claw ragged sailors with green bracts[2]—toad-plant, petunias, ferns; pink lilies, blue
35 ones, tigers; poppies; black sweet-peas.
The climate is not right for the banyan, frangipani, or jack-fruit trees;[3] or an exotic serpent life. Ring lizard and snake-skin for the foot, if you see fit; 40 but here they've cats, not cobras, to keep down the rats. The diffident little newt

with white pin-dots on black horizontal spaced out bands lives here; yet there is nothing that 45 ambition can buy or take away. The college student named Ambrose sits on the hillside with his not-native books and hat and sees boats

at sea progress white and rigid as if in 50 a groove. Liking an elegance of which the source is not bravado, he knows by heart the antique sugar-bowl shaped summer-house of interlacing slats, and the pitch of the church

8. The mountainous western area of Austria.
9. The slate gray, speckled with white, of the guinea fowl.
1. An herb with large, varicolored flowers that often have striking markings.
2. Flowerlike leaves on some plants (e.g., flowering dogwood).
3. The banyan is an East Indian tree, some of whose branches send out trunks that grow downward; frangipani is a tropical American shrub (red jasmine is a species); the jackfruit is a large East Indian tree with large edible fruit.

55 spire, not true,[4] from which a man in scarlet lets down a rope as a spider spins a thread;
he might be part of a novel, but on the sidewalk a sign says C. J. Poole, Steeple Jack, in black and white; and one in red 60 and white says

Danger. The church portico has four fluted columns, each a single piece of stone, made modester by white-wash. This would be a fit haven for waifs, children, animals, prisoners, 65 and presidents who have repaid sin-driven senators by not thinking about them. The place has a school-house, a post-office in a store, fish-houses, hen-houses, a three-masted 70 schooner on the stocks. The hero, the student,

the steeple-jack, each in his way,
is at home.

It could not be dangerous to be living
75 in a town like this, of simple people, who have a steeple-jack placing danger-signs by the church while he is gilding the solid-pointed star, which on a steeple stands for hope.

1932 1935, 1961

No Swan So Fine

"No water so still as the dead fountains of Versailles."[5] No swan, with swart blind look askance and gondoliering legs,[6] so fine
5 as the chintz china one with fawnbrown eyes and toothed gold collar on to show whose bird it was.

Lodged in the Louis Fifteenth candelabrum-tree[7] of cockscomb-10 tinted buttons, dahlias, sea-urchins, and everlastings,[8]
it perches on the branching foam

4. Not placed or fitted accurately.
5. "Percy Phillip, New York Times Magazine, May 10, 1931" [Moore's note]. Famed palace of French kings, including Louis XV, in the late seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries; now a museum.
6. Italian gondoliers paddle from the stern to propel their gondolas.
7. "A pair of Louis XV candelabra with Dresden figures of swans belonging to Lord Balfour" [Moore's note].
8. Plants with flowers that may be dried without losing their form or color; also, the flowers from such plants.

of polished sculptured
flowers—at ease and tall. The king is dead.

1932 1935, 1951

What Are Years?

What is our innocence,
what is our guilt? All are naked, none is safe. And whence is courage: the unanswered question, 5 the resolute doubt,— dumbly calling, deafly listening—that in misfortune, even death, encourages others
and in its defeat, stirs

10 the soul to be strong? He sees deep and is glad, who accedes to mortality and in his imprisonment rises upon himself as 15 the sea in a chasm, struggling to be free and unable to be,
in its surrendering finds its continuing.

So he who strongly feels,
20 behaves. The very bird, grown taller as he sings, steels
his form straight up. Though he is captive, his mighty singing
says, satisfaction is a lowly
25 thing, how pure a thing is joy.
This is mortality,
this is eternity.

1931–39 1941

Nevertheless

you've seen a strawberry
that's had a struggle; yet was, where the fragments met,

a hedgehog or a star-
5 fish for the multitude of seeds. What better food than apple-seeds—the fruit within the fruit—locked in like counter-curved twin

10 hazel-nuts? Frost that kills the little rubber-plant-leaves of kok-saghyz-stalks,[9] can't harm the roots; they still grow in frozen ground. Once where 15 there was a prickly-pear-leaf clinging to barbed wire,

a root shot down to grow
in earth two feet below;

as carrots form mandrakes[1] 20 or a ram's-horn root sometimes. Victory won't come to me unless I go to it; a grape-tendril ties a knot in knots till

25 knotted thirty times,—so the bound twig that's undergone and over-gone, can't stir.

The weak overcomes its menace, the strong over-30 comes itself. What is there like fortitude! What sap went through that little thread to make the cherry red!

1944

The Mind Is an Enchanting Thing

is an enchanted thing like the glaze on a katydid-wing
subdivided by sun
5 till the nettings are legion.
Like Gieseking playing Scarlatti;[2]

9. Russian dandelions.
1. Medicinal plants with forked roots.
2. Walter Wilhelm Gieseking (1895–1956), German (French-born) pianist, was famous for his renditions of the music of the Italian composer Domenico Scarlatti (1685–1757).

like the apteryx-awl[3]
as a beak, or the kiwi's rain-shawl
10 of haired feathers, the mind feeling its way as though blind, walks along with its eyes on the ground.

It has memory's ear that can hear without 15 having to hear.
Like the gyroscope's fall,
truly unequivocal
because trued° by regnant° certainty, balanced / authoritative

it is a power of 20 strong enchantment. It is like the dove-neck animated by
sun; it is memory's eye;
it's conscientious inconsistency.

25 It tears off the veil; tears
the temptation, the mist the heart wears,
from its eyes—if the heart
has a face; it takes apart
30 dejection. It's fire in the dove-neck's iridescence; in the inconsistencies of Scarlatti.

Unconfusion submits 35 its confusion to proof; it's not a Herod's oath[4] that cannot change.

1944

EDWIN MUIR
1887–1959

Childhood

Long time he lay upon the sunny hill,
To his father's house below securely bound.
Far off the silent, changing sound was still,
With the black islands lying thick around.

3. New Zealand bird, related to the kiwi, with an awl-shaped beak.
4. Herod, ruler of Judea under the Romans, fulfilled an oath to Salome by having John the Baptist beheaded. Cf. Mark 6.22–27.

5 He saw each separate height, each vaguer hue,
Where the massed islands rolled in mist away,
And though all ran together in his view
He knew that unseen straits between them lay.

Often he wondered what new shores were there.
10 In thought he saw the still light on the sand,
The shallow water clear in tranquil air,
And walked through it in joy from strand to strand.

Over the sound a ship so slow would pass
That in the black hill's gloom it seemed to lie.
15 The evening sound was smooth like sunken glass,
And time seemed finished ere the ship passed by.

Grey tiny rocks slept round him where he lay,
Moveless as they, more still as evening came,
The grasses threw straight shadows far away,
20 And from the house his mother called his name.

1925

The Return of the Greeks

The veteran Greeks came home
Sleepwandering from the war.[1]
We saw the galleys come
Blundering over the bar.
5 Each soldier with his scar
In rags and tatters came home.

Reading the wall of Troy
Ten years without a change
Was such intense employ
10 (Just out of the arrows' range),
All the world was strange
After ten years of Troy.

Their eyes knew every stone
In the huge heartbreaking wall
15 Year after year grown
Till there was nothing at all
But an alley steep and small,
Tramped earth and towering stone.

Now even the hills seemed low
20 In the boundless sea and land,
Weakened by distance so.

1. The Trojan War, during which the Greeks besieged the city of Troy for ten years (as described in Homer's Iliad).

How could they understand
Space empty on every hand
And the hillocks squat and low?

25 And when they arrived at last
They found a childish scene
Embosomed in the past,
And the war lying between—
A child's preoccupied scene
30 When they came home at last.

But everything trite and strange,
The peace, the parcelled ground,
The vinerows—never a change!
The past and the present bound
35 In one oblivious round
Past thinking trite and strange.

But for their grey-haired wives
And their sons grown shy and tall
They would have given their lives
40 To raise the battered wall
Again, if this was all
In spite of their sons and wives.

Penelope[2] in her tower
Looked down upon the show
45 And saw within an hour
Each man to his wife go,
Hesitant, sure and slow:
She, alone in her tower.

1946

Adam's Dream

They say the first dream Adam our father had
After his agelong daydream in the Garden[3]
When heaven and sun woke in his wakening mind,
The earth with all its hills and woods and waters,
5 The friendly tribes of trees and animals,
And earth's last wonder Eve (the first great dream
Which is the ground of every dream since then)—
They say he dreamt lying on the naked ground,
The gates shut fast behind him as he lay
10 Fallen in Eve's fallen arms, his terror drowned
In her engulfing terror, in the abyss

2. Wife of Odysseus, a Greek leader who took another ten years to return home (as described in the Odyssey).
3. I.e., after the Fall. According to Genesis 2–3, Adam and Eve were expelled from the Garden of Eden because they ate the fruit of the one tree forbidden to them by God (the tree of the knowledge of good and evil).

Whence there's no further fall, and comfort is—
That he was standing on a rocky ledge
High on the mountainside, bare crag behind,
15 In front a plain as far as eye could reach,
And on the plain a few small figures running
That were like men and women, yet were so far away
He could not see their faces. On they ran,
And fell, and rose again, and ran, and fell,
20 And rising were the same yet not the same,
Identical or interchangeable,
Different in indifference. As he looked
Still there were more of them, the plain was filling
As by an alien arithmetical magic 25 Unknown in Eden, a mechanical Addition without meaning, joining only
Number to number in no mode or order,
Weaving no pattern. For these creatures moved Towards no fixed mark even when in growing bands
30 They clashed against each other and clashing fell
In mounds of bodies. For they rose again,
Identical or interchangeable,
And went their way that was not like a way;
Some back and forward, back and forward, some 35 In a closed circle, wide or narrow, others
In zigzags on the sand. Yet all were busy,
And tense with purpose as they cut the air
Which seemed to press them back. Sometimes they paused
While one stopped one—fortuitous assignations
40 In the disorder, whereafter two by two
They ran awhile,
Then parted and again were single. Some
Ran straight against the frontier of the plain Till the horizon drove them back. A few 45 Stood still and never moved. Then Adam cried
Out of his dream, "What are you doing there?"
And the crag answered "Are you doing there?"
"What are you doing there?"—"you doing there?"
The animals had withdrawn and from the caves
50 And woods stared out in fear or condemnation,
Like outlaws or like judges. All at once
Dreaming or half-remembering, "This is time,"
Thought Adam in his dream, and time was strange
To one lately in Eden. "I must see," 55 He cried, "the faces. Where are the faces? Who Are you all out there?" Then in his changing dream
He was a little nearer, and he saw
They were about some business strange to him
That had a form and sequence past their knowledge;
60 And that was why they ran so frenziedly.
Yet all, it seemed, made up a story, illustrated
By these the living, the unknowing, cast
Each singly for his part. But Adam longed

For more, not this mere moving pattern, not 65 This illustrated storybook of mankind
Always a-making, improvised on nothing.
At that he was among them, and saw each face
Was like his face, so that he would have hailed them
As sons of God but that something restrained him.
70 And he remembered all, Eden, the Fall,
The Promise, and his place, and took their hands
That were his hands, his and his children's hands,
Cried out and was at peace, and turned again
In love and grief in Eve's encircling arms.

1950, 1952

T. S. ELIOT
1888–1965

The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock

S'io credesse che mia risposta fosse
A persona che mai tornasse al mondo,
Questa fiamma staria senza piu scosse.
Ma perciocche giammai di questo fondo
Non torno vivo alcun, s'i'odo il vero,
Senza tema d'infamia ti rispondo.[1]

Let us go then, you and I,
When the evening is spread out against the sky
Like a patient etherised upon a table;
Let us go, through certain half-deserted streets,
5 The muttering retreats
Of restless nights in one-night cheap hotels
And sawdust restaurants with oyster-shells:
Streets that follow like a tedious argument
Of insidious intent
10 To lead you to an overwhelming question . . .
Oh, do not ask, "What is it?"
Let us go and make our visit.

In the room the women come and go
Talking of Michelangelo.

15 The yellow fog that rubs its back upon the window-panes,
The yellow smoke that rubs its muzzle on the window-panes
Licked its tongue into the corners of the evening,
Lingered upon the pools that stand in drains,

1. Dante, Inferno 27.61–66. These words are spoken by Guido da Montefeltro, whom Dante has encountered among the false counselors (each spirit is concealed within a flame): "If I thought my answer were given / to anyone who would ever return to the world, / this flame would stand still without moving any further. / But since never from this abyss / has anyone ever returned alive, if what I hear is true, / without fear of infamy I answer you."

Let fall upon its back the soot that falls from chimneys,
20 Slipped by the terrace, made a sudden leap,
And seeing that it was a soft October night,
Curled once about the house, and fell asleep.

And indeed there will be time[2]
For the yellow smoke that slides along the street,
25 Rubbing its back upon the window-panes;
There will be time, there will be time
To prepare a face to meet the faces that you meet;
There will be time to murder and create,
And time for all the works and days[3] of hands
30 That lift and drop a question on your plate;
Time for you and time for me,
And time yet for a hundred indecisions,
And for a hundred visions and revisions,
Before the taking of a toast and tea.

35 In the room the women come and go
Talking of Michelangelo.

And indeed there will be time
To wonder, "Do I dare?" and, "Do I dare?"
Time to turn back and descend the stair,
40 With a bald spot in the middle of my hair—
[They will say: "How his hair is growing thin!"]
My morning coat, my collar mounting firmly to the chin,
My necktie rich and modest, but asserted by a simple pin—
[They will say: "But how his arms and legs are thin!"]
45 Do I dare
Disturb the universe?
In a minute there is time
For decisions and revisions which a minute will reverse.

For I have known them all already, known them all—
50 Have known the evenings, mornings, afternoons,
I have measured out my life with coffee spoons;
I know the voices dying with a dying fall[4]
Beneath the music from a farther room.
So how should I presume?

55 And I have known the eyes already, known them all—
The eyes that fix you in a formulated phrase,
And when I am formulated, sprawling on a pin,
When I am pinned and wriggling on the wall,
Then how should I begin
60 To spit out all the butt-ends of my days and ways?
And how should I presume?

2. Cf. Andrew Marvell, "To His Coy Mistress," line 1 (p. 478).
3. Works and Days, by the Greek poet Hesiod (eighth century B.C.E.), is a didactic poem about farming and family life.
4. Cf. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night 1.1.1–4: "If music be the food of love, play on. . . . That strain again, it had a dying fall."

And I have known the arms already, known them all—
Arms that are braceleted and white and bare
[But in the lamplight, downed with light brown hair!]
65 Is it perfume from a dress
That makes me so digress?
Arms that lie along a table, or wrap about a shawl.
And should I then presume?
And how should I begin?

. . . . .

70 Shall I say, I have gone at dusk through narrow streets
And watched the smoke that rises from the pipes
Of lonely men in shirt-sleeves, leaning out of windows? . . .

I should have been a pair of ragged claws
Scuttling across the floors of silent seas.

. . . . .

75 And the afternoon, the evening, sleeps so peacefully!
Smoothed by long fingers,
Asleep . . . tired . . . or it malingers,
Stretched on the floor, here beside you and me.
Should I, after tea and cakes and ices,
80 Have the strength to force the moment to its crisis?
But though I have wept and fasted, wept and prayed,
Though I have seen my head [grown slightly bald] brought in upon a platter,[5]
I am no prophet—and here's no great matter;
I have seen the moment of my greatness flicker,
85 And I have seen the eternal Footman hold my coat, and snicker,
And in short, I was afraid.

And would it have been worth it, after all,
After the cups, the marmalade, the tea,
Among the porcelain, among some talk of you and me,
90 Would it have been worth while,
To have bitten off the matter with a smile,
To have squeezed the universe into a ball[6]
To roll it toward some overwhelming question,
To say: "I am Lazarus,[7] come from the dead,
95 Come back to tell you all, I shall tell you all"—
If one, settling a pillow by her head,
Should say: "That is not what I meant at all.
That is not it, at all."

5. The head of John the Baptist was presented to Salome on a plate at her request (Mark 6.17–20, Matthew 14.3–11).

6. Cf. "To His Coy Mistress," lines 41–44.

7. On the resurrection of Lazarus, see John 11.1–44, Luke 16.19–31.

And would it have been worth it, after all,
100 Would it have been worth while,
After the sunsets and the dooryards and the sprinkled streets,
After the novels, after the teacups, after the skirts that trail along the floor—
And this, and so much more?—
It is impossible to say just what I mean!
105 But as if a magic lantern threw the nerves in patterns on a screen:
Would it have been worth while
If one, settling a pillow or throwing off a shawl,
And turning toward the window, should say:
"That is not it at all,
110 That is not what I meant, at all."

. . . . .

No! I am not Prince Hamlet, nor was meant to be;
Am an attendant lord, one that will do
To swell a progress,[8] start a scene or two,
Advise the prince; no doubt, an easy tool,
115 Deferential, glad to be of use,
Politic, cautious, and meticulous;
Full of high sentence,° but a bit obtuse; sententiousness
At times, indeed, almost ridiculous—
Almost, at times, the Fool.

120 I grow old . . . I grow old . . .
I shall wear the bottoms of my trousers rolled.

Shall I part my hair behind? Do I dare to eat a peach?
I shall wear white flannel trousers, and walk upon the beach.
I have heard the mermaids singing, each to each.

125 I do not think that they will sing to me.

I have seen them riding seaward on the waves
Combing the white hair of the waves blown back
When the wind blows the water white and black.

We have lingered in the chambers of the sea
130 By sea-girls wreathed with seaweed red and brown
Till human voices wake us, and we drown.

1910–11 1915, 1917

8. Journey made by a royal court, often depicted in Elizabethan drama, in which the Fool (line 119) was also a fixture.

The Waste Land[9]

"Nam Sibyllam quidem Cumis ego ipse oculis meis vidi in ampulla pendere, et cum illi pueri dicerent: Σίβυλλα τί θέλεις respondebatilla: ἀποθανειν θέλω."[1]

FOR EZRA POUND
IL MIGLIOR FABBRO.[2]

I. The Burial of the Dead[3]

April is the cruellest month, breeding[4]
Lilacs out of the dead land, mixing
Memory and desire, stirring
Dull roots with spring rain.
5 Winter kept us warm, covering
Earth in forgetful snow, feeding
A little life with dried tubers.
Summer surprised us, coming over the Starnbergersee[5]
With a shower of rain; we stopped in the colonnade,
10 And went on in sunlight, into the Hofgarten,
And drank coffee, and talked for an hour.
Bin gar keine Russin, stamm' aus Litauen, echt deutsch.[6]
And when we were children, staying at the arch-duke's,
My cousin's, he took me out on a sled,
15 And I was frightened. He said, Marie,
Marie, hold on tight. And down we went.
In the mountains, there you feel free.
I read, much of the night, and go south in the winter.

What are the roots that clutch, what branches grow
20 Out of this stony rubbish? Son of man,[7]
You cannot say, or guess, for you know only
A heap of broken images, where the sun beats,
And the dead tree gives no shelter, the cricket no relief,[8]
And the dry stone no sound of water. Only

9. On its publication in book form, T. S. Eliot provided The Waste Land with many (and perhaps sometimes parodic) notes. They begin: "Not only the title, but the plan and a good deal of the incidental symbolism of the poem were suggested by Miss Jessie L. Weston's book on the Grail legend: From Ritual to Romance (Cambridge, [1902]). Indeed, so deeply am I indebted, Miss Weston's book will elucidate the difficulties of the poem much better than my notes can do; and I recommend it (apart from the great interest of the book itself) to any who think such elucidation of the poem worth the trouble. To another work of anthropology I am indebted in general, one which has influenced our generation profoundly; I mean The Golden Bough [by Sir James Frazer; 12 volumes, 1890–1915]; I have used especially the two volumes Adonis, Attis, Osiris. Anyone who is acquainted with these works will immediately recognize in the poem certain references to vegetation ceremonies [i.e., fertility rites]."

1. "For indeed I myself have seen, with my own eyes, the Sibyl hanging in a bottle at Cumae, and when those boys would say to her: 'Sibyl, what do you want?' she replied, 'I want to die.' " From Petronius (d. 66), Satyricon, chapter 48. The Sibyl of Cumae, a prophetess of the god Apollo, was immortal but not eternally young.

2. The better craftsman (Italian). So the poet Guido Guinizelli characterizes the Provençal poet Arnaut Daniel in Dante's Purgatorio 26.117.

3. The burial service of the Anglican Church.

4. Perhaps an echo of Chaucer, "General Prologue" to The Canterbury Tales, line 1 (p. 19).

5. Lake a few miles south of Munich. The Hofgarten (line 10) is a public garden in Munich, partly surrounded by a colonnaded walk.

6. I am certainly no Russian, I come from Lithuania, a true German (German).

7. "Cf. Ezekiel II, i" [Eliot's note], where God addresses Ezekiel: "Son of man, stand upon thy feet, and I will speak unto thee."

8. "Cf. Ecclesiastes XII, v" [Eliot's note], a description of times of fear and death, when "the grasshopper shall be a burden, and desire shall fail." The passage continues, "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was" (12.7); cf. line 30 below.

25 There is shadow under this red rock,
(Come in under the shadow of this red rock),[9]
And I will show you something different from either
Your shadow at morning striding behind you
Or your shadow at evening rising to meet you;
30 I will show you fear in a handful of dust.
Frisch weht der Wind
Der Heimat zu
Mein Irisch Kind,
Wo weilest du?[1]
35 "You gave me hyacinths first a year ago;
"They called me the hyacinth girl."
—Yet when we came back, late, from the Hyacinth garden,
Your arms full, and your hair wet, I could not Speak, and my eyes failed, I was neither 40 Living nor dead, and I knew nothing,
Looking into the heart of light, the silence.
Oed' und leer das Meer.[2]

Madame Sosostris,[3] famous clairvoyante,
Had a bad cold, nevertheless
45 Is known to be the wisest woman in Europe,
With a wicked pack of cards.[4] Here, said she,
Is your card, the drowned Phoenician Sailor,
(Those are pearls that were his eyes.[5] Look!)
Here is Belladonna, the Lady of the Rocks,
50 The lady of situations.
Here is the man with three staves, and here the Wheel,
And here is the one-eyed merchant, and this card,
Which is blank, is something he carries on his back,
Which I am forbidden to see. I do not find 55 The Hanged Man. Fear death by water.
I see crowds of people, walking round in a ring.
Thank you. If you see dear Mrs. Equitone,
Tell her I bring the horoscope myself:
One must be so careful these days.

60 Unreal City,[6]
Under the brown fog of a winter dawn,

9. Cf. Isaiah's prophecy of a Messiah who will be "as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land" (Isaiah 32.2).
1. "V. Tristan und Isolde, I, verses 5–8" [Eliot's note]. The sailor's song from an opera by the German composer Richard Wagner (1813–1883): "Fresh blows the wind / Toward home. / My Irish child, / Where are you waiting?"
2. "Id. III, verse 24" [Eliot's note]. Empty and waste the sea (German); i.e., the ship bringing Isolde back to the dying Tristan is nowhere in sight.
3. A pseudo-Egyptian name assumed by a fortune-teller in the English writer Aldous Huxley's novel Chrome Yellow (1921).
4. "I am not familiar with the exact constitution of the Tarot pack of cards, from which I have obviously departed to suit my own convenience. The Hanged Man, a member of the traditional pack, fits my purpose in two ways: because he is associated in my mind with the Hanged God of Frazer, and because I associate him with the hooded figure in the passage of the disciples to Emmaus in Part V. The Phoenician Sailor and the Merchant appear later; also the 'crowds of people' and Death by Water is executed in Part IV. The Man with Three Staves (an authentic member of the Tarot pack) I associate, quite arbitrarily, with the Fisher King himself" [Eliot's note]. The tarot cards are used in fortune-telling; some of the figures named in the following lines come from tarot decks.
5. From Ariel's song in Shakespeare, Tempest 1.2: "Full fathom five thy father lies." Phoenician Sailor: the Phoenicians were seagoing merchants (cf. "Mr. Eugenides," line 209, and "Phlebas the Phoenician," line 312).
6. "Cf. Baudelaire: 'Fourmillante cité, cité pleine de rêves, / Où le spectre en plein jour raccroche le

A crowd flowed over London Bridge, so many,
I had not thought death had undone so many.[7]
Sighs, short and infrequent, were exhaled,[8]
65 And each man fixed his eyes before his feet.
Flowed up the hill and down King William Street,
To where Saint Mary Woolnoth kept the hours
With a dead sound on the final stroke of nine.[9]
There I saw one I knew, and stopped him, crying: "Stetson!
70 "You who were with me in the ships at Mylae![1]
"That corpse you planted last year in your garden,
"Has it begun to sprout? Will it bloom this year?
"Or has the sudden frost disturbed its bed?
"Oh keep the Dog far hence, that's friend to men, 75 "Or with his nails he'll dig it up again![2]
"You! hypocrite lecteur!—mon semblable,—mon frère!"[3]

II. A Game of Chess[4]

The Chair she sat in, like a burnished throne,[5]
Glowed on the marble, where the glass
Held up by standards wrought with fruited vines
80 From which a golden Cupidon peeped out
(Another hid his eyes behind his wing)
Doubled the flames of sevenbranched candelabra[6]
Reflecting light upon the table as
The glitter of her jewels rose to meet it,
85 From satin cases poured in rich profusion;
In vials of ivory and coloured glass
Unstoppered, lurked her strange synthetic perfumes,
Unguent,° powdered, or liquid—troubled, confused ointment
And drowned the sense in odours; stirred by the air
90 That freshened from the window, these ascended
In fattening the prolonged candle-flames, passant' " [Eliot's note]. Swarming city, city filled with dreams, / Where the specter in broad daylight accosts the passerby (French); from one of the poems in the French poet Charles Baudelaire's Les Fleurs du mal (1857).

7. "Cf. Inferno III, 55–57: 'si lunga tratta / di gente, ch' io non avrei mai creduto / che morte tanta n'avesse disfatta' " [Eliot's note]. On his arrival in the Inferno, Dante sees the vast crowd, "such a long procession of people, that I would never have believed that death had undone so many" (Italian).

8. "Cf. Inferno IV, 25–27: 'Quivi, secondo che per ascoltare, / non avea pianto, ma' che di sospiri, / che l'aura eterna facevan tremare' " [Eliot's note]. Dante descends into the first circle of Hell, filled with virtuous pagans condemned to Limbo because they had lived before Christianity: "Here, if one trusted to hearing, there was no weeping but so many sighs as caused the everlasting air to tremble" (Italian).

9. "A phenomenon which I have often noticed" [Eliot's note]. The church and the other London sites are in the City, London's financial and business center.

1. Sicilian seaport; at the battle of Mylae (260 B.C.E.), the Romans defeated the Carthaginians.

2. "Cf. the Dirge in Webster's White Devil [1612]" [Eliot's note]. In the English dramatist John Webster's play, the song is sung by a crazed mother, who has witnessed one son murder another, and ends, "But keep the wolf far thence, that's foe to men; / For with his nails he'll dig them up again" (5.4.97–98).

3. "V. Baudelaire, Preface to Fleurs du mal" [Eliot's note]. Hypocrite reader!—my likeness,—my brother! (French); last line of the prefatory poem, "Au lecteur" ("To the Reader").

4. The title alludes to two plays by the English dramatist Thomas Middleton, A Game of Chess (1627) and Women Beware Women (1657), both of which involve sexual intrigue. In the second, a game of chess is used to mark a seduction, the moves in the game paralleling its steps.

5. "Cf. Antony and Cleopatra, II, ii, l[ine] 190" [Eliot's note]. Eliot's language recalls the passage in Shakespeare that describes Cleopatra's first meeting with Antony, which begins: "The barge she sat in, like a burnished throne / Burned on the water."

6. The Menorah, used in Jewish worship.

Flung their smoke into the laquearia,[7]
Stirring the pattern on the coffered° ceiling. with recessed panels
Huge sea-wood fed with copper
95 Burned green and orange, framed by the coloured stone,
In which sad light a carvéd dolphin swam.
Above the antique mantel was displayed
As though a window gave upon the sylvan scene[8]
The change of Philomel, by the barbarous king[9]
100 So rudely forced; yet there the nightingale[1]
Filled all the desert with inviolable voice
And still she cried, and still the world pursues,
"Jug Jug"[2] to dirty ears.
And other withered stumps of time
105 Were told upon the walls; staring forms
Leaned out, leaning, hushing the room enclosed.
Footsteps shuffled on the stair.
Under the firelight, under the brush, her hair
Spread out in fiery points
110 Glowed into words, then would be savagely still.

"My nerves are bad to-night. Yes, bad. Stay with me.
"Speak to me. Why do you never speak. Speak.
"What are you thinking of? What thinking? What?
"I never know what you are thinking. Think."

115 I think we are in rats' alley[3]
Where the dead men lost their bones.

"What is that noise?"
The wind under the door.[4]
"What is that noise now? What is the wind doing?"
120 Nothing again nothing.
"Do
"You know nothing? Do you see nothing? Do you remember
"Nothing?"

I remember
125 Those are pearls that were his eyes.[5]
"Are you alive, or not? Is there nothing in your head?"

But
O O O O that Shakespeherian Rag—
It's so elegant

7. "Laquearia. V. Aeneid, I, 726: dependent lychni laquearibus aureis / Incensi, et noctem flammis funalia vincunt" [Eliot's note]. Lighted lamps hang from the golden paneled ceiling [laquearia], and the torches conquer the night with their flames (Latin); description of the banquet hall where Dido welcomes Aeneas to Carthage (her passion for the visitor, like Cleopatra's, ended in suicide).
8. "Sylvan scene. V. Milton, Paradise Lost, IV, 140" [Eliot's note]. The phrase occurs in the description of Eden as first seen by Satan.
9. "V. Ovid, Metamorphoses, VI, Philomela" [Eliot's note]. Ovid describes how Tereus raped his sister-in-law, Philomela, and cut out her tongue. To avenge her, his wife, Procne, murdered her son and fed him to Tereus. All three were changed into birds: the sisters into the nightingale and swallow, Tereus into the hoopoe pursuing them.
1. "Cf. Part III, l[ine] 204" [Eliot's note].
2. In Elizabethan poetry, the conventional rendering of the nightingale's song.
3. "Cf. Part III, l[ine] 195" [Eliot's note].
4. "Cf. Webster: 'Is the wind in that door still?' " [Eliot's note], referring to John Webster's play The Devil's Law Case (1623) 3.2.162. In context, the speaker is asking if someone is still alive.
5. "Cf. Part I, ll. 37, 48" [Eliot's note]. See note 5, p. 1345.

130 So intelligent[6]
"What shall I do now? What shall I do?"
"I shall rush out as I am, and walk the street
"With my hair down, so. What shall we do tomorrow?
"What shall we ever do?"
135 The hot water at ten.
And if it rains, a closed car at four.
And we shall play a game of chess,
Pressing lidless eyes and waiting for a knock upon the door.[7]

When Lil's husband got demobbed,[8] I said—
140 I didn't mince my words, I said to her myself,
HURRY UP PLEASE ITS TIME[9]
Now Albert's coming back, make yourself a bit smart.
He'll want to know what you done with that money he gave you
To get yourself some teeth. He did, I was there.
145 You have them all out, Lil, and get a nice set,
He said, I swear, I can't bear to look at you.
And no more can't I, I said, and think of poor Albert,
He's been in the army four years, he wants a good time,
And if you don't give it him, there's others will, I said.
150 Oh is there, she said. Something o' that, I said.
Then I'll know who to thank, she said, and give me a straight look.
HURRY UP PLEASE ITS TIME
If you don't like it you can get on with it, I said.
Others can pick and choose if you can't.
155 But if Albert makes off, it won't be for lack of telling.
You ought to be ashamed, I said, to look so antique.
(And her only thirty-one.)
I can't help it, she said, pulling a long face,
It's them pills I took, to bring it off,[1] she said.
160 (She's had five already, and nearly died of young George.)
The chemist° said it would be all right, but I've never been the same. druggist
You are a proper fool, I said.
Well, if Albert won't leave you alone, there it is, I said,
What you get married for if you don't want children?
165 HURRY UP PLEASE ITS TIME
Well, that Sunday Albert was home, they had a hot gammon,° smoked ham
And they asked me in to dinner, to get the beauty of it hot—
HURRY UP PLEASE ITS TIME
HURRY UP PLEASE ITS TIME
170 Goonight Bill. Goonight Lou. Goonight May. Goonight.
Ta ta. Goonight. Goonight.
Good night, ladies, good night, sweet ladies, good night, good night.[2]

6. Cf. the chorus to "The Shakespearian Rag," a popular song from 1912: "That Shakespearian Rag, most intelligent, very elegant."
7. "Cf. the game of chess in Middleton's Women Beware Women" [Eliot's note].
8. Demobilized (discharged from military service) after World War I.
9. Typical call of a British bartender to clear the bar at closing time.
1. To cause an abortion.
2. Cf. Ophelia's farewell before drowning (Hamlet 4.5.69–70) and the popular song lyric "Good night ladies, we're going to leave you now."

III. The Fire Sermon[3]

The river's tent is broken: the last fingers of leaf
Clutch and sink into the wet bank. The wind
175 Crosses the brown land, unheard. The nymphs are departed
Sweet Thames, run softly, till I end my song.[4]
The river bears no empty bottles, sandwich papers,
Silk handkerchiefs, cardboard boxes, cigarette ends
Or other testimony of summer nights. The nymphs are departed.
180 And their friends, the loitering heirs of city directors;
Departed, have left no addresses.
By the waters of Leman I sat down and wept[5] . . .
Sweet Thames, run softly till I end my song,
Sweet Thames, run softly, for I speak not loud or long.
185 But at my back in a cold blast I hear[6]
The rattle of the bones, and chuckle spread from ear to ear.
A rat crept softly through the vegetation
Dragging its slimy belly on the bank
While I was fishing in the dull canal
190 On a winter evening round behind the gashouse
Musing upon the king my brother's wreck[7]
And on the king my father's death before him.
White bodies naked on the low damp ground
And bones cast in a little low dry garret,
195 Rattled by the rat's foot only, year to year.
But at my back from time to time I hear[8]
The sound of horns and motors, which shall bring Sweeney to Mrs. Porter in the spring.[9]
O the moon shone bright on Mrs. Porter
200 And on her daughter
They wash their feet in soda water[1]
Et O ces voix d'enfants, chantant dans la coupole![2]

3. I.e., Buddha's Fire Sermon; see Eliot's note to line 309.
4. "V. Spenser, Prothalamion" [Eliot's note]. The line is the refrain of the marriage song by Edmund Spenser (ca. 1552–1599; see pp. 159–205), a pastoral celebration of a wedding near the Thames, the river that flows through London.
5. An echo of the exiled Jews mourning for their homeland (Psalm 137): "By the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion." Lac Léman is the French name for Lake Geneva, and much of The Waste Land was written at Lausanne, on its shore. Leman is also an archaic word for lover or mistress.
6. Cf. Andrew Marvell, "To His Coy Mistress," lines 21–22 (p. 479).
7. "Cf. The Tempest, I, ii" [Eliot's note]. Just before Ariel sings "Full fathom five thy father lies" (see line 48), Ferdinand describes himself as "sitting on a bank, / Weeping again the King my father's wreck. / This music crept by me upon the waters."
8. "Cf. Marvell, To His Coy Mistress" [Eliot's note]. See line 185.
9. "Cf. Day, Parliament of Bees: 'When of the sudden, listening, you shall hear, / A noise of horns and hunting, which shall bring / Actaeon to Diana in the spring' " [Eliot's note]. In Greek mythology, Actaeon saw Diana, chaste goddess of the hunt, naked as she bathed; the goddess changed him into a stag, and his own hounds killed him. The Parliament of Bees is the best-known work of the Elizabethan dramatist John Day.
1. "I do not know the origin of the ballad from which these lines are taken: it was reported to me from Sydney, Australia" [Eliot's note]. The bawdy song was popular with Australian soldiers in World War I. Sweeney (line 198) is the figure of vulgar, thoughtless sexual enterprise who figures in Eliot's "Sweeney Among the Nightingales" and "Sweeney Agonistes."
2. "V. Verlaine, Parsifal" [Eliot's note]. And O those children's voices singing in the dome! (French); last line of a sonnet by the French poet Paul Verlaine (1844–1896) that treats ironically the conquering of fleshly temptation. In Wagner's opera Parsifal, the feet of the title character, a questing knight, are washed before he enters the sanctuary of the Grail.

Twit twit twit
Jug jug jug jug jug jug
205 So rudely forc'd.
Tereu[3]

Unreal City
Under the brown fog of a winter noon
Mr. Eugenides, the Smyrna° merchant — port in West Turkey
210 Unshaven, with a pocket full of currants
C.i.f. London: documents at sight,[4]
Asked me in demotic[5] French
To luncheon at the Cannon Street Hotel
Followed by a weekend at the Metropole.[6]

215 At the violet hour, when the eyes and back
Turn upward from the desk, when the human engine waits
Like a taxi throbbing waiting,
I Tiresias,[7] though blind, throbbing between two lives,
Old man with wrinkled female breasts, can see 220 At the violet hour, the evening hour that strives Homeward, and brings the sailor home from sea,[8]
The typist home at teatime, clears her breakfast, lights
Her stove, and lays out food in tins.
Out of the window perilously spread
225 Her drying combinations° touched by the sun's last rays, — underwear
On the divan are piled (at night her bed)
Stockings, slippers, camisoles, and stays.° — corset
I Tiresias, old man with wrinkled dugs° — breasts
Perceived the scene, and foretold the rest—
230 I too awaited the expected guest.
He, the young man carbuncular,° arrives, — with pimples
A small house agent's clerk, with one bold stare,

3. Another conventional Elizabethan rendering of the nightingale's song, as well as a form of the name Tereus (see lines 99–103).
4. "The currants were quoted at a price 'carriage and insurance free to London'; and the Bill of Lading etc. were to be handled to the buyer upon payment of the sight draft" [Eliot's note]. "C.i.f." can also mean "cost, insurance, and freight."
5. I.e., vulgar or simplified.
6. A large hotel at Brighton, a seaside town on England's south coast. Cannon Street Hotel: a very large hotel in London's commercial district.
7. "Tiresias, although a mere spectator and not indeed a 'character,' is yet the most important personage in the poem, uniting all the rest. Just as the one-eyed merchant, seller of currants, melts into the Phoenician sailor, and the latter is not wholly distinct from Ferdinand Prince of Naples, so all the women are one woman, and the two sexes meet in Tiresias. What Tiresias sees, in fact, is the substance of the poem. The whole passage from Ovid is of great anthropological interest" [Eliot's note]. Eliot then cites in Latin Ovid's version of why Tiresias was blinded, then granted a seer's power (Metamorphoses 3.320–38): "Jove [the supreme god, here very drunk] said jokingly to Juno [his wife]: 'You women have greater pleasure in love than that enjoyed by men.' She denied it. So they decided to refer the question to wise Tiresias who knew love from both points of view. For once, with a blow of his staff, he had separated two huge snakes who were copulating in the forest, and miraculously was changed instantly from a man into a woman and remained so for seven years. In the eighth year he saw the snakes again and said: 'If a blow against you is so powerful that it changes the sex of the author of it, now I shall strike you again.' With these words he struck them, and his former shape and masculinity were restored. As referee in the sportive quarrel, he supported Jove's claim. Juno, overly upset by the decision, condemned the arbitrator to eternal blindness. But the all-powerful father (inasmuch as no god can undo what has been done by another god) gave him the power of prophecy, with this honor compensating him for the loss of sight."
8. "This may not appear as exact as Sappho's lines, but I had in mind the 'longshore' or 'dory' fisherman, who returns at nightfall" [Eliot's note]. Fragment 149 of the Greek poet Sappho (fl. ca. 610–ca. 580 B.C.E.): "Evening, bringing all that light-giving dawn has scattered, you bring the sheep, you bring the goat, you bring the child to its mother." But cf. "Requiem," by the Scottish poet Robert Louis Stevenson (1850–1894): "Home is the sailor, home from the sea."

One of the low on whom assurance sits
As a silk hat on a Bradford[9] millionaire.
235 The time is now propitious, as he guesses,
The meal is ended, she is bored and tired,
Endeavours to engage her in caresses
Which still are unreproved, if undesired.
Flushed and decided, he assaults at once;
240 Exploring hands encounter no defence;
His vanity requires no response,
And makes a welcome of indifference.
(And I Tiresias have foresuffered all
Enacted on this same divan or bed;
245 I who have sat by Thebes below the wall[1]
And walked among the lowest of the dead.)
Bestows one final patronizing kiss,
And gropes his way, finding the stairs unlit . . .

She turns and looks a moment in the glass,
250 Hardly aware of her departed lover;
Her brain allows one half-formed thought to pass:
"Well now that's done: and I'm glad it's over."
When lovely woman stoops to folly and Paces about her room again, alone,
255 She smoothes her hair with automatic hand,
And puts a record on the gramophone.[2]

"This music crept by me upon the waters"[3]
And along the Strand, up Queen Victoria Street.
O City city, I can sometimes hear
260 Beside a public bar in Lower Thames Street,
The pleasant whining of a mandoline
And a clatter and a chatter from within
Where fishmen lounge at noon: where the walls
Of Magnus Martyr[4] hold 265 Inexplicable splendour of Ionian white and gold.

The river sweats[5]
Oil and tar
The barges drift
With the turning tide
270 Red sails
Wide
To leeward, swing on the heavy spar.
The barges wash

9. A manufacturing town in Yorkshire, England, that enjoyed an industrial boom during World War I.
1. Tiresias prophesied in the marketplace by the wall of Thebes, foretold the fall of the Theban kings Oedipus and Creon, and continued to prophesy in the underworld.
2. "V. Goldsmith, the song in The Vicar of Wakefield" [Eliot's note]. Cf. Oliver Goldsmith, "When Lovely Woman Stoops to Folly" (p. 686).
3. "V. The Tempest, as above" [Eliot's note]. See note to line 191, p. 1349.
4. "The interior of [London's] St. Magnus Martyr is to my mind one of the finest among [Christopher] Wren's interiors" [Eliot's note].
5. "The song of the (three) Thames-daughters begins here. From line 292 to 306 inclusive they speak in turn. V. Götterdämmerung, III, i: the Rhine-daughters" [Eliot's note]. Lines 277–78 and 290–91 repeat the refrain of the Rhine maidens lamenting the lost beauty of their river in Wagner's opera.

Drifting logs
275 Down Greenwich reach
Past the Isle of Dogs.[6]
Weialala leia
Wallala leialala

Elizabeth and Leicester[7]
280 Beating oars
The stern was formed
A gilded shell
Red and gold
The brisk swell
285 Rippled both shores
Southwest wind
Carried down stream
The peal of bells
White towers
290 Weialala leia
Wallala leialala

"Trams and dusty trees.
Highbury bore me. Richmond and Kew
Undid me.[8] By Richmond I raised my knees
295 Supine on the floor of a narrow canoe."

"My feet are at Moorgate,[9] and my heart
Under my feet. After the event
He wept. He promised 'a new start.'
I made no comment. What should I resent?"

300 "On Margate Sands.[1]
I can connect
Nothing with nothing.
The broken fingernails of dirty hands.
My people humble people who expect 305 Nothing."
la la

To Carthage then I came[2]

6. A peninsula extending into the Thames opposite Greenwich, a borough of London and Queen Elizabeth I's birthplace.
7. "V. Froude, [Reign of] Elizabeth, Vol. I, ch. iv, letter of [Bishop] De Quadra [the ambassador] to Philip of Spain: 'In the afternoon we were in a barge, watching the games on the river. (The queen) was alone with the Lord Robert and myself on the poop, when they began to talk nonsense, and went so far that Lord Robert at last said, as I was on the spot there was no reason why they should not be married if the queen pleased' " [Eliot's note]. Sir Robert Dudley (1532?–1588), earl of Leicester, was romantically involved with the queen.
8. "Cf. Purgatorio, V, 133" [Eliot's note], referring to Dante's "Remember me, who am la Pia; Sien made me, the Maremma undid me"; also quoted by Ezra Pound in "Hugh Selwyn Mauberley" (see note 9, p. 1302). Highbury is a residential suburb in North London; Richmond and Kew are up the river from London.
9. A slum in East London.
1. A beach resort in Kent—popular with London residents—where the Thames broadens into the Channel.
2. "V. St. Augustine's Confessions: 'to Carthage then I came, where a cauldron of unholy loves sang all about mine ears' " [Eliot's note]. Augustine is recounting his licentious youth.

Burning burning burning burning[3]
O Lord Thou pluckest me out[4]
310 O Lord Thou pluckest

burning

IV. Death by Water

Phlebas the Phoenician, a fortnight dead,
Forgot the cry of gulls, and the deep sea swell
And the profit and loss.
315 A current under sea
Picked his bones in whispers. As he rose and fell
He passed the stages of his age and youth
Entering the whirlpool.
Gentile or Jew
320 O you who turn the wheel and look to windward,
Consider Phlebas, who was once handsome and tall as you.

V. What the Thunder Said[5]

After the torchlight red on sweaty faces
After the frosty silence in the gardens
After the agony in stony places
325 The shouting and the crying
Prison and palace and reverberation
Of thunder of spring over distant mountains
He who was living is now dead
We who were living are now dying
330 With a little patience

Here is no water but only rock
Rock and no water and the sandy road
The road winding above among the mountains
Which are mountains of rock without water
335 If there were water we should stop and drink
Amongst the rock one cannot stop or think
Sweat is dry and feet are in the sand
If there were only water amongst the rock
Dead mountain mouth of carious° teeth that cannot spit decayed
340 Here one can neither stand nor lie nor sit
There is not even silence in the mountains
But dry sterile thunder without rain
There is not even solitude in the mountains

3. Taken from "the complete text of the Buddha's Fire Sermon (which corresponds in importance to the Sermon on the Mount)" [Eliot's note].
4. "From St. Augustine's Confessions again. The collocation of these two representatives of eastern and western asceticism, as the culmination of this part of the poem, is not an accident" [Eliot's note]. Cf. Zechariah 3.2, where the Lord (i.e., God) calls Joshua "a brand plucked out of the fire."
5. "In the first part of Part V three themes are employed: the journey to Emmaus, the approach to the Chapel Perilous (see Miss Weston's book) and the present decay of eastern Europe" [Eliot's note]. On the third day after his Crucifixion, Jesus appeared to two of his disciples as they walked to the village of Emmaus, but they knew him only when he vanished (Luke 24.13–34). The Chapel Perilous is connected with the quest for the Holy Grail, in which only those of perfect purity can succeed.

But red sullen faces sneer and snarl
345 From doors of mudcracked houses
If there were water
And no rock
If there were rock
And also water
350 And water
A spring
A pool among the rock
If there were the sound of water only
Not the cicada[6]
355 And dry grass singing
But sound of water over a rock
Where the hermit-thrush[7] sings in the pine trees
Drip drop drip drop drop drop drop
But there is no water

360 Who is the third who walks always beside you?[8]
When I count, there are only you and I together
But when I look ahead up the white road
There is always another one walking beside you
Gliding wrapt in a brown mantle, hooded 365 I do not know whether a man or a woman
—But who is that on the other side of you?

What is that sound high in the air[9]
Murmur of maternal lamentation
Who are those hooded hordes swarming
370 Over endless plains, stumbling in cracked earth
Ringed by the flat horizon only
What is the city over the mountains
Cracks and reforms and bursts in the violet air
Falling towers
375 Jerusalem Athens Alexandria
Vienna London
Unreal

A woman drew her long black hair out tight
And fiddled whisper music on those strings
380 And bats with baby faces in the violet light
Whistled, and beat their wings
And crawled head downward down a blackened wall

6. Grasshopper. Cf. line 23 and note 8, p. 1344.
7. "This is . . . the hermit-thrush which I have heard in Quebec Province. . . . Its 'water-dripping song' is justly celebrated" [Eliot's note].
8. "The following lines were stimulated by the account of one of the Antarctic expeditions (I forget which, but I think one of Shackleton's): it was related that the party of explorers, at the extremity of their strength, had the constant delusion that there was one more member than could actually be counted" [Eliot's note]. These lines also recall the journey to Emmaus; see note 2 directly above.
9. Eliot's note to lines 367–77 quotes a passage from the nonfiction book Blick ins Chaos (A Glimpse into Chaos), by the German writer Herman Hesse (1877–1962), that may be translated as follows: "Already half Europe, already at least half of Eastern Europe, is on the road to Chaos, drives drunken in holy madness along the abyss and sings the while, sings drunk and hymnlike as Dmitri Karamazov sang [in the novel The Brothers Karamazov, by the Russian writer Fyodor Dostoyevsky (1821–1881)]. The bourgeois laughs, offended, at these songs, the saint and the prophet hear them with tears."

And upside down in air were towers
Tolling reminiscent bells, that kept the hours
385 And voices singing out of empty cisterns and exhausted wells.

In this decayed hole among the mountains
In the faint moonlight, the grass is singing
Over the tumbled graves, about the chapel
There is the empty chapel, only the wind's home.
390 It has no windows, and the door swings,
Dry bones can harm no one.
Only a cock stood on the rooftree
Co co rico co co rico[1]
In a flash of lightning. Then a damp gust
395 Bringing rain

Ganga[2] was sunken, and the limp leaves
Waited for rain, while the black clouds
Gathered far distant, over Himavant.° Himalayan peak
The jungle crouched, humped in silence.
400 Then spoke the thunder
DA[3]
Datta: what have we given?
My friend, blood shaking my heart
The awful daring of a moment's surrender
405 Which an age of prudence can never retract
By this, and this only, we have existed
Which is not to be found in our obituaries
Or in memories draped by the beneficent spider[4]
Or under seals broken by the lean solicitor° lawyer
410 In our empty rooms
DA
Dayadhvam: I have heard the key[5]
Turn in the door once and turn once only
We think of the key, each in his prison
415 Thinking of the key, each confirms a prison
Only at nightfall, ethereal rumours
Revive for a moment a broken Coriolanus[6]

1. When Peter denied Jesus, "immediately the cock crew," as Jesus had predicted (Matthew 26.34, 74–75). Also, in folklore a cock's crow signals the departure of ghosts.
2. The Sanskrit name of the Indian river Ganges.
3. " 'Datta, dayadhvam, damyata' (Give, sympathize, control). The fable of the meaning of the Thunder is found in the Brihadaranyaka—Upanishad, 5, 1" [Eliot's note]. In the Hindu fable (found within the ancient, sacred Sanskrit dialogues known as the Upanishads), the supreme deity, Prajapati, gives instruction in the form of the syllable Da, which the gods understand as "be restrained" (damyata), humans as "give alms" (datta), and demons as "have compassion" (dayadhvam). All are correct, and a divine voice repeats the syllable with the force of thunder.
4. "Cf. Webster, The White Devil, V. vi: '. . . they'll remarry / Ere the worm pierce your winding-sheet, ere the spider / Make a thin curtain for your epitaphs' " [Eliot's note].
5. "Cf. Inferno, XXXIII, 46" [Eliot's note], where Ugolino recalls his imprisonment with his sons in the tower where they starved to death: "And I heard below the door of the horrible tower being locked up." Eliot also cites F. H. Bradley, Appearance and Reality (1893), p. 346: "My external sensations are no less private to myself than are my thoughts or my feelings. In either case my experience falls within my own circle, a circle closed on the outside; and, with all its elements alike, every sphere is opaque to the others which surround it. . . . In brief, regarded as an existence which appears in a soul, the whole world for each is peculiar and private to that soul."
6. Legendary Roman patrician, the protagonist of Shakespeare's tragedy Coriolanus, who joined forces with the enemy he had once defeated when the leaders of the Roman populace opposed him.

Da
Damyata: The boat responded
420 Gaily, to the hand expert with sail and oar
The sea was calm, your heart would have responded Gaily, when invited, beating obedient
To controlling hands

I sat upon the shore
425 Fishing,[7] with the arid plain behind me
Shall I at least set my lands in order?[8]
London Bridge is falling down falling down falling down[9]
Poi s'ascose nel foco che gli affina[1]
Quando fiam uti chelidon[2]—O swallow swallow[3]
430 Le Prince d'Aquitaine à la tour abolie[4]
These fragments I have shored against my ruins
Why then Ile fit you. Hieronymo's mad againe.[5]
Datta. Dayadhvam. Damyata.
Shantih shantih shantih[6]

1922

The Hollow Men

Mistah Kurtz—he dead.[7]

A penny for the Old Guy[8]

I

We are the hollow men
We are the stuffed men

7. "V. Weston: From Ritual to Romance; chapter on the Fisher King" [Eliot's note].
8. Cf. Isaiah 38.1: "Thus saith the Lord, Set thine house in order: for thou shalt die, and not live."
9. One of the later lines of this nursery rhyme is "Take the key and lock her up, my fair lady."
1. "V. Purgatorio, XXVI, 148" [Eliot's note]. Eliot here quotes the final lines of Dante's encounter with the late twelfth-century poet Arnaut Daniel, encountered among the lustful in Purgatory: " 'And so I pray you, by that Virtue which guides you to the top of the stair, be reminded in time of my pain.' Then he hid himself in the fire that purifies them" (Italian). This last sentence translates line 428 of The Waste Land.
2. "V. Pervigilium Veneris. Cf. Philomela in Parts I and II" [Eliot's note]. The Vigil of Venus, an anonymous Latin poem (ca. second century C.E.) celebrating the spring festival of the goddess Venus, ends with an allusion to the Procne-Philomela-Tereus myth. The quoted line means "When shall I become like the swallow"; the Latin continues, "that I may cease to be silent."
3. Cf. "Itylus," by Algernon Charles Swinburne (1837–1909; see pp. 1146–52), which begins: "Swallow, my sister, O sister Swallow." Cf. also the song in The Princess, by Alfred, Lord Tennyson (1809–1892; see pp. 982–1009), that begins: "O Swallow, Swallow, flying, flying south."
4. "V. [French writer] Gérard de Nerval [1808–1855], Sonnet El Desdichado" [Eliot's note]. The line reads: "The prince of Aquitania in the ruined tower" (French).
5. "V. Kyd's Spanish Tragedy" [Eliot's note]. The subtitle of The Spanish Tragedy, by the English playwright Thomas Kyd (1558–1594), is Hieronymo's Mad Againe. Hieronymo, driven mad by his son's death, "fits" the parts in a court masque so that in the course of it he kills his son's murderers before himself committing suicide.
6. "Shantih. Repeated as here, a formal ending to an Upanishad. 'The Peace which passeth understanding' is our nearest equivalent to this word" [Eliot's note].
7. From the novella Heart of Darkness, by the Polish English (Ukrainian-born) novelist Joseph Conrad (1857–1924). The dying words of Mr. Kurtz, the official of a trading company, who has entered the African jungle and descended into evil, are "The horror! The horror!"
8. I.e., money to buy fireworks to burn Guy Fawkes in effigy. Said by begging children in England on November 5, Guy Fawkes Day, a commemoration of Fawkes's failed conspiracy, for which he was executed, to blow up the House of Commons in 1605.

Leaning together
Headpiece filled with straw. Alas!
5 Our dried voices, when
We whisper together
Are quiet and meaningless
As wind in dry grass
Or rats' feet over broken glass
10 In our dry cellar

Shape without form, shade without colour,
Paralysed force, gesture without motion;

Those who have crossed
With direct eyes, to death's other Kingdom
15 Remember us—if at all—not as lost
Violent souls, but only
As the hollow men
The stuffed men.

II

Eyes I dare not meet in dreams
20 In death's dream kingdom
These do not appear:
There, the eyes are
Sunlight on a broken column
There, is a tree swinging
25 And voices are
In the wind's singing
More distant and more solemn
Than a fading star.

Let me be no nearer
30 In death's dream kingdom
Let me also wear
Such deliberate disguises
Rat's coat, crowskin, crossed staves
In a field
35 Behaving as the wind behaves
No nearer—

Not that final meeting
In the twilight kingdom

III

This is the dead land
40 This is cactus land
Here the stone images
Are raised, here they receive
The supplication of a dead man's hand
Under the twinkle of a fading star.

45 Is it like this
In death's other kingdom
Waking alone
At the hour when we are Trembling with tenderness
50 Lips that would kiss
Form prayers to broken stone.

IV

The eyes are not here
There are no eyes here
In this valley of dying stars
55 In this hollow valley
This broken jaw of our lost kingdoms

In this last of meeting places
We grope together
And avoid speech
60 Gathered on this beach of the tumid river

Sightless, unless
The eyes reappear
As the perpetual star
Multifoliate rose[9]
65 Of death's twilight kingdom
The hope only
Of empty men.

V

Here we go round the prickly pear
Prickly pear prickly pear
70 Here we go round the prickly pear
At five o'clock in the morning.[1]

Between the idea
And the reality
Between the motion
75 And the act
Falls the Shadow
For Thine is the Kingdom[2]
Between the conception
And the creation
80 Between the emotion
And the response
Falls the Shadow
Life is very long

9. Reference to the vision of saved souls surrounding God in Paradiso, the third part of Dante's Divine Comedy.
1. An ironic variation on the children's chant "Here we go round the mulberry bush."
2. Fragment from the end of the Lord's Prayer: "For Thine is the Kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever and ever, Amen."

Between the desire
85 And the spasm
Between the potency
And the existence
Between the essence
And the descent
90 Falls the Shadow
For Thine is the Kingdom

For Thine is Life is
For Thine is the

95 This is the way the world ends
This is the way the world ends
This is the way the world ends
Not with a bang but a whimper.

1925

Journey of the Magi[3]

"A cold coming we had of it,[4]
Just the worst time of the year
For a journey, and such a long journey:
The ways deep and the weather sharp,
5 The very dead of winter."
And the camels galled, sore-footed, refractory,
Lying down in the melting snow.
There were times we regretted
The summer palaces on slopes, the terraces,
10 And the silken girls bringing sherbet.
Then the camel men cursing and grumbling
And running away, and wanting their liquor and women,
And the night-fires going out, and the lack of shelters,
And the cities hostile and the towns unfriendly 15 And the villages dirty and charging high prices:
A hard time we had of it.
At the end we preferred to travel all night,
Sleeping in snatches,
With the voices singing in our ears, saying
20 That this was all folly.

Then at dawn we came down to a temperate valley,
Wet, below the snow line, smelling of vegetation;
With a running stream and a water-mill beating the darkness,

3. The poem re-creates the recollections of one of the wise men, or Magi, who followed the star to Bethlehem bearing gifts for the newly born Jesus (Matthew 2.1–12).

4. The first five lines are adapted from the sermon preached at Christmas, 1622, by Bishop Lancelot Andrewes.

And three trees on the low sky,[5]
25 And an old white horse galloped away in the meadow.
Then we came to a tavern with vine-leaves over the lintel,
Six hands at an open door dicing for pieces of silver,
And feet kicking the empty wine-skins.
But there was no information, and so we continued
30 And arrived at evening, not a moment too soon
Finding the place; it was (you may say) satisfactory.

All this was a long time ago, I remember,
And I would do it again, but set down
This set down
35 This: were we led all that way for Birth or Death? There was a Birth, certainly,
We had evidence and no doubt. I had seen birth and death,
But had thought they were different; this Birth was Hard and bitter agony for us, like Death, our death.
40 We returned to our places, these Kingdoms,
But no longer at ease here, in the old dispensation,
With an alien people clutching their gods.
I should be glad of another death.

1927

FROM FOUR QUARTETS

Little Gidding[6]

I

Midwinter spring is its own season
Sempiternal° though sodden towards sundown, everlasting
Suspended in time, between pole and tropic.
When the short day is brightest, with frost and fire,
5 The brief sun flames the ice, on pond and ditches,
In windless cold that is the heart's heat,
Reflecting in a watery mirror
A glare that is blindness in the early afternoon.
And glow more intense than blaze of branch, or brazier,
10 Stirs the dumb spirit: no wind, but pentecostal fire[7]

5. The image prefigures the three crosses of the Crucifixion (Luke 23.32), as line 27 suggests the Roman soldiers casting lots for Jesus' robe (John 19.23–24), as well as the pieces of silver paid to Judas for betraying him (Matthew 26.14–15).
6. The final and, in Eliot's opinion, the best poem of Four Quartets, each of which is divided into five parts. This quartet, like the others, addresses one of the four elements; in "Little Gidding" it is fire. The imagery is reminiscent of the "Fire Sermon" section of The Waste Land (p. 1349), in which fire suggests both torment and salvation. Little Gidding, an Anglican religious community, was founded by Nicholas Ferrar in 1625. The community was dispersed after the Puritans' victory in the English Civil War, but in the nineteenth century its chapel was rebuilt.
7. See Acts 2.2–4, where Jesus' disciples are assembled on the feast of Pentecost: "And suddenly there came a sound from heaven, as of a rushing mighty wind. . . . And there appeared unto them cloven tongues, like as of fire. . . . And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost."

In the dark time of the year. Between melting and freezing
The soul's sap quivers. There is no earth smell
Or smell of living thing. This is the spring time
But not in time's covenant. Now the hedgerow
15 Is blanched for an hour with transitory blossom
Of snow, a bloom more sudden
Than that of summer, neither budding nor fading,
Not in the scheme of generation.
Where is the summer, the unimaginable
20 Zero summer?

If you came this way,
Taking the route you would be likely to take
From the place you would be likely to come from,
If you came this way in may time, you would find the hedges
25 White again, in May, with voluptuary sweetness.
It would be the same at the end of the journey,
If you came at night like a broken king,[8]
If you came by day not knowing what you came for,
It would be the same, when you leave the rough road
30 And turn behind the pig-sty to the dull façade
And the tombstone. And what you thought you came for
Is only a shell, a husk of meaning
From which the purpose breaks only when it is fulfilled
If at all. Either you had no purpose
35 Or the purpose is beyond the end you figured
And is altered in fulfilment. There are other places
Which also are the world's end, some at the sea jaws,
Or over a dark lake, in a desert or a city—
But this is the nearest, in place and time,
40 Now and in England.

If you came this way,
Taking any route, starting from anywhere,
At any time or at any season,
It would always be the same: you would have to put off
45 Sense and notion. You are not here to verify,
Instruct yourself, or inform curiosity
Or carry report. You are here to kneel
Where prayer has been valid. And prayer is more Than an order of words, the conscious occupation
50 Of the praying mind, or the sound of the voice praying.
And what the dead had no speech for, when living,
They can tell you, being dead: the communication
Of the dead is tongued with fire beyond the language of the living.
Here, the intersection of the timeless moment
55 Is England and nowhere. Never and always.

8. King Charles I (1600–1649), who went to Little Gidding after his defeat in the civil war.

II

Ash on an old man's sleeve
Is all the ash the burnt roses leave.
Dust in the air suspended
Marks the place where a story ended.
60 Dust inbreathed was a house—
The wall, the wainscot and the mouse.
The death of hope and despair,
This is the death of air.[9]
There are flood and drouth
65 Over the eyes and in the mouth,
Dead water and dead sand
Contending for the upper hand.
The parched eviscerate soil
Gapes at the vanity of toil,
70 Laughs without mirth.
This is the death of earth.

Water and fire succeed
The town, the pasture and the weed.
Water and fire deride
75 The sacrifice that we denied.
Water and fire shall rot
The marred foundations we forgot,
Of sanctuary and choir.
This is the death of water and fire.

80 In the uncertain hour before the morning[1]
Near the ending of interminable night
At the recurrent end of the unending
After the dark dove with the flickering tongue[2]
Had passed below the horizon of his homing
85 While the dead leaves still rattled on like tin
Over the asphalt where no other sound was Between three districts whence the smoke arose
I met one walking, loitering and hurried
As if blown towards me like the metal leaves
90 Before the urban dawn wind unresisting.
And as I fixed upon the down-turned face
That pointed scrutiny with which we challenge
The first-met stranger in the waning dusk
I caught the sudden look of some dead master
95 Whom I had known, forgotten, half recalled
Both one and many; in the brown baked features
The eyes of a familiar compound ghost[3]
Both intimate and unidentifiable.

9. The Greek philosopher Heraclitus (ca. 540–ca. 480 B.C.E.) theorized about the conflict among the elements: "Fire lives in the death of air."
1. The terza rima stanza pattern used by Dante in his Divine Comedy is roughly suggested by Eliot's form in this final section of part II. The speaker here patrols the streets as Eliot had done as an air-raid warden in London during World War II.
2. The Nazi dive bomber.
3. I.e., compounding the ghosts of two Irish-Anglo poets, William Butler Yeats (1865–1939; see pp. 1188–1211) and Jonathan Swift (1667–1745; see pp. 568–89).

So I assumed a double part, and cried
100 And heard another's voice cry: "What! are you here?"[4]
Although we were not. I was still the same,
Knowing myself yet being someone other—
And he a face still forming; yet the words sufficed
To compel the recognition they preceded.
105 And so, compliant to the common wind,
Too strange to each other for misunderstanding,
In concord at this intersection time
Of meeting nowhere, no before and after,
We trod the pavement in a dead patrol.
110 I said: "The wonder that I feel is easy,
Yet ease is cause of wonder. Therefore speak:
I may not comprehend, may not remember."
And he: "I am not eager to rehearse
My thought and theory which you have forgotten.
115 These things have served their purpose: let them be.
So with your own, and pray they be forgiven
By others, as I pray you to forgive
Both bad and good. Last season's fruit is eaten
And the fullfed beast shall kick the empty pail.
120 For last year's words belong to last year's language
And next year's words await another voice.
But, as the passage now presents no hindrance
To the spirit unappeased and peregrine° wandering
Between two worlds become much like each other,
125 So I find words I never thought to speak
In streets I never thought I should revisit
When I left my body on a distant shore.
Since our concern was speech, and speech impelled us
To purify the dialect of the tribe[5]
130 And urge the mind to aftersight and foresight,
Let me disclose the gifts reserved for age
To set a crown upon your lifetime's effort.
First, the cold friction of expiring sense
Without enchantment, offering no promise
135 But bitter tastelessness of shadow fruit
As body and soul begin to fall asunder.
Second, the conscious impotence of rage[6]
At human folly, and the laceration
Of laughter at what ceases to amuse.[7]
140 And last, the rending pain of re-enactment
Of all that you have done, and been; the shame
Of motives late revealed, and the awareness

4. Dante's words when he recognizes his mentor, Brunetto Latini, in Inferno 15.30.
5. From the poem "Le Tombeau d'Edgar Poe," by the French poet Stéphane Mallarmé (1842–1898): "Donner un sens plus pur aux mots de la tribu."
6. Cf. W. B. Yeats, "The Spur," lines 1–2: "You think it horrible that lust and rage / Should dance attendance upon my old age."
7. Allusion to Swift's Latin epitaph for himself, as translated by Yeats: "Savage indignation now / Cannot lacerate his breast."

Of things ill done and done to others' harm
Which once you took for exercise of virtue.[8]
145 Then fools' approval stings, and honour stains.
From wrong to wrong the exasperated spirit
Proceeds, unless restored by that refining fire[9]
Where you must move in measure, like a dancer."[1]
The day was breaking. In the disfigured street
150 He left me, with a kind of valediction,
And faded on the blowing of the horn.[2]

III

There are three conditions which often look alike
Yet differ completely, flourish in the same hedgerow:
Attachment to self and to things and to persons, detachment
155 From self and from things and from persons; and, growing between them, indifference
Which resembles the others as death resembles life,
Being between two lives—unflowering, between
The live and the dead nettle. This is the use of memory:
For liberation—not less of love but expanding
160 Of love beyond desire, and so liberation
From the future as well as the past. Thus, love of a country
Begins as attachment to our own field of action
And comes to find that action of little importance
Though never indifferent. History may be servitude, 165 History may be freedom. See, now they vanish,
The faces and places, with the self which, as it could, loved them,
To become renewed, transfigured, in another pattern.

Sin is Behovely,[3] but
All shall be well, and
170 All manner of thing shall be well.
If I think, again, of this place,
And of people, not wholly commendable,
Of no immediate kin or kindness,
But some of peculiar genius,
175 All touched by a common genius,
United in the strife which divided them;
If I think of a king at nightfall,
Of three men, and more, on the scaffold[4]
And a few who died forgotten
180 In other places, here and abroad,

8. Cf. Yeats, "Vacillation," esp. lines 51–56: "Things said or done long years ago, / Or things I did not do or say / But thought that I might say or do, / Weigh me down . . ."
9. As in the "Fire Sermon" section of The Waste Land, which alludes to Buddha's counseling his followers to turn away from the fires of passion and to attain freedom from earthly things.
1. Allusion to the images of humankind as dancers in Yeats, "Among School Children" and "Nineteen Hundred and Nineteen."
2. Eliot's description of the "All clear" siren fading after the air raid is phrased to recall the disappearance of Hamlet's father's ghost in Hamlet 1.1.138: "It faded on the crowing of the cock."
3. Necessary in God's eye. The fourteenth-century mystic Julian of Norwich wrote, "Sin is behovable but all shall be well . . . and all manner of things shall be well."
4. King Charles I and, earlier, his aides Thomas Wentworth and Archbishop Laud were executed on the scaffold.

And a few who died blind and quiet,[5]
Why should we celebrate
These dead men more than the dying?
It is not to ring the bell backward
185 Nor is it an incantation
To summon the spectre of a Rose.[6]
We cannot revive old factions
We cannot restore old policies
Or follow an antique drum.
190 These men, and those who opposed them
And those whom they opposed
Accept the constitution of silence
And are folded in a single party.
Whatever we inherit from the fortunate
195 We have taken from the defeated
What they had to leave us—a symbol:
A symbol perfected in death.
And all shall be well and
All manner of thing shall be well
200 By the purification of the motive
In the ground of our beseeching.[7]

IV

The dove[8] descending breaks the air
With flame of incandescent terror
Of which the tongues declare
205 The one discharge from sin and error.
The only hope, or else despair
  Lies in the choice of pyre or pyre—
  To be redeemed from fire by fire.

  Who then devised the torment? Love.
210 Love is the unfamiliar Name
Behind the hands that wove
The intolerable shirt of flame
Which human power cannot remove.[9]
  We only live, only suspire° breathe
215 Consumed by either fire or fire.

V

What we call the beginning is often the end
And to make an end is to make a beginning.

5. I.e., Milton, who sided against Charles during the civil war.
6. Allusions here to the title of a ballet in which a girl dreams of a rose she wore to a ball, and to the Wars of the Roses, in which the house of Lancaster was the white rose and the house of York the red.
7. According to Julian of Norwich, "the ground of our beseeching" is love.
8. Here, symbolizing the Holy Ghost, with its tongues of fire, and the dive bomber.
9. In Greek mythology, the shirt that Hercules' wife gave Nessus because she believed it would win his love; it clung to his skin so painfully that he immolated himself on a pyre.

The end is where we start from. And every phrase
And sentence that is right (where every word is at home,
220 Taking its place to support the others,
The word neither diffident nor ostentatious,
An easy commerce of the old and the new,
The common word exact without vulgarity,
The formal word precise but not pedantic,
225 The complete consort dancing together)
Every phrase and every sentence is an end and a beginning,
Every poem an epitaph. And any action
Is a step to the block, to the fire, down the sea's throat
Or to an illegible stone: and that is where we start.
230 We die with the dying:
See, they depart, and we go with them.
We are born with the dead:
See, they depart, and we go with them.
The moment of the rose and the moment of the yew-tree[1]
235 Are of equal duration. A people without history
Is not redeemed from time, for history is a pattern
Of timeless moments. So, while the light fails
On a winter's afternoon, in a secluded chapel
History is now and England.
240 With the drawing of this Love and the voice of this Calling[2]

We shall not cease from exploration
And the end of all our exploring
Will be to arrive where we started
And know the place for the first time.
245 Through the unknown, remembered gate
When the last of earth left to discover
Is that which was the beginning;
At the source of the longest river
The voice of the hidden waterfall
250 And the children in the apple-tree
Not known, because not looked for
But heard, half-heard, in the stillness
Between two waves of the sea.
Quick now, here, now, always—[3]
255 A condition of complete simplicity
(Costing not less than everything)
And all shall be well and
All manner of thing shall be well
When the tongues of flame are in-folded
260 Into the crowned knot[4] of fire
And the fire and the rose are one.

1942, 1943

1. Symbolizing death and grief, in contrast with the rose.
2. Quotation from the anonymous fourteenth-century religious work The Cloud of Unknowing.
3. Eliot comes full circle, to an image from Four Quartets's first poem, "Burnt Norton": "There rises the hidden laughter / Of children in the foliage / Quick now, here, always."
4. A nautical knot, tied to prevent untwisting.

JOHN CROWE RANSOM
1888–1974

Bells for John Whiteside's Daughter

There was such speed in her little body,
And such lightness in her footfall,
It is no wonder her brown study
Astonishes us all.

5 Her wars were bruited° in our high window. loudly voiced
We looked among orchard trees and beyond
Where she took arms against her shadow,
Or harried unto the pond

The lazy geese, like a snow cloud
10 Dripping their snow on the green grass,
Tricking and stopping, sleepy and proud,
Who cried in goose, Alas,

For the tireless heart within the little
Lady with rod that made them rise
15 From their noon apple-dreams and scuttle
Goose-fashion under the skies!

But now go the bells, and we are ready,
In one house we are sternly stopped
To say we are vexed at her brown study,
20 Lying so primly propped.

1924

Piazza Piece[1]

—I am a gentleman in a dustcoat trying
To make you hear. Your ears are soft and small
And listen to an old man not at all,
They want the young men's whispering and sighing.
5 But see the roses on your trellis dying
And hear the spectral singing of the moon;
For I must have my lovely lady soon,
I am a gentleman in a dustcoat trying.

—I am a lady young in beauty waiting
10 Until my truelove comes, and then we kiss.
But what gray man among the vines is this
Whose words are dry and faint as in a dream?

1. This sonnet plays upon the old folktale of Death and the Maiden. Piazza: porch.

Back from my trellis, Sir, before I scream!
I am a lady young in beauty waiting.

1925 1927

Blue Girls

Twirling your blue skirts, travelling the sward° grass
Under the towers of your seminary,
Go listen to your teachers old and contrary
Without believing a word.

5 Tie the white fillets° then about your hair ribbons
And think no more of what will come to pass
Than bluebirds that go walking on the grass
And chattering on the air.

Practise your beauty, blue girls, before it fail;
10 And I will cry with my loud lips and publish Beauty which all our power shall never establish,
It is so frail.

For I could tell you a story which is true;
I know a woman with a terrible tongue,
15 Blear° eyes fallen from blue, bleary
All her perfections tarnished—yet it is not long Since she was lovelier than any of you.

1927

Parting, without a Sequel

She has finished and sealed the letter
At last, which he so richly has deserved,
With characters venomous and hatefully curved,
And nothing could be better.

5 But even as she gave it
Saying to the blue-capped functioner of doom,
"Into his hands," she hoped the leering groom
Might somewhere lose and leave it.

Then all the blood
10 Forsook the face. She was too pale for tears,
Observing the ruin of her younger years.
She went and stood

Under her father's vaunting oak
Who kept his peace in wind and sun, and glistened
15 Stoical in the rain; to whom she listened
If he spoke.

And now the agitation of the rain
Rasped his sere leaves, and he talked low and gentle
Reproaching the wan daughter by the lintel;
20 Ceasing and beginning again.

Away went the messenger's bicycle,
His serpent's track went up the hill forever,
And all the time she stood there hot as fever
And cold as any icicle.

1927

Lady Lost

This morning, flew up the lane
A timid lady bird to our birdbath
And eyed her image dolefully as death;
This afternoon, knocked on our windowpane
5 To be let in from the rain.

And when I caught her eye
She looked aside, but at the clapping thunder
And sight of the whole world blazing up like tinder
Looked in on us again so miserably
10 It was as if she would cry.

So I will go out into the park and say,
"Who has lost a delicate brown-eyed lady
In the West End section? Or has anybody
Injured some fine woman in some dark way
15 Last night, or yesterday?

"Let the owner come and claim possession,
No questions will be asked. But stroke her gently
With loving words, and she will evidently Return to her full soft-haired white-breasted fashion
20 And her right home and her right passion."

1927

CONRAD AIKEN
1889–1973

From Senlin:[1] A Biography

II. His Futile Preoccupations

2[2]

It is morning, Senlin says, and in the morning
When the light drips through the shutters like the dew,
I arise, I face the sunrise,
And do the things my fathers learned to do.
5 Stars in the purple dusk above the rooftops
Pale in a saffron mist and seem to die,
And I myself on a swiftly tilting planet
Stand before a glass and tie my tie.

Vine leaves tap my window,
10 Dew-drops sing to the garden stones,
The robin chirps in the chinaberry tree
Repeating three clear tones.

It is morning. I stand by the mirror
And tie my tie once more.
15 While waves far off in a pale rose twilight
Crash on a coral shore.
I stand by a mirror and comb my hair:
How small and white my face!—
The green earth tilts through a sphere of air
20 And bathes in a flame of space.

There are houses hanging above the stars
And stars hung under a sea.
And a sun far off in a shell of silence
Dapples my walls for me.

25 It is morning, Senlin says, and in the morning
Should I not pause in the light to remember god?
Upright and firm I stand on a star unstable,
He is immense and lonely as a cloud.[3]
I will dedicate this moment before my mirror
30 To him alone, for him I will comb my hair.
Accept these humble offerings, cloud of silence!
I will think of you as I descend the stair.

Vine leaves tap my window,
The snail-track shines on the stones,

1. An invented name that, according to Aiken's preface to The Divine Pilgrim (1949), "means literally the 'little old man' that each of us must become"; the poem poses "the basic and possibly unanswerable question, who and what am I, how is it that I am I, Senlin, and not someone else?"
2. This section has also been published separately as "Morning Song."
3. An allusion to William Wordsworth, "I Wandered Lonely as a Cloud" (p. 801).

35 Dew-drops flash from the chinaberry tree
Repeating two clear tones.

It is morning, I awake from a bed of silence,
Shining I rise from the starless waters of sleep.
The walls are about me still as in the evening,
40 I am the same, and the same name still I keep.
The earth revolves with me, yet makes no motion,
The stars pale silently in a coral sky.
In a whistling void I stand before my mirror,
Unconcerned, and tie my tie.

45 There are horses neighing on far-off hills
Tossing their long white manes,
And mountains flash in the rose-white dusk,
Their shoulders black with rains.
It is morning. I stand by the mirror
50 And surprise my soul once more;
The blue air rushes above my ceiling,
There are suns beneath my floor.

. . . It is morning, Senlin says, I ascend from darkness
And depart on the winds of space for I know not where,
55 My watch is wound, a key is in my pocket,
And the sky is darkened as I descend the stair.
There are shadows across the windows, clouds in heaven,
And a god among the stars; and I will go
Thinking of him as I might think of daybreak
60 And humming a tune I know.

Vine leaves tap at the window,
Dewdrops sing to the garden stones,
The robin chirps in the chinaberry tree
Repeating three clear tones.

1918

IVOR GURNEY
1890–1937

To His Love

He's gone, and all our plans
Are useless indeed.
We'll walk no more on Cotswold[1]
Where the sheep feed
5 Quietly and take no heed.

1. Range of hills in Gloucestershire, in southwest-central England.

His body that was so quick
  Is not as you
Knew it, on Severn river[2]
  Under the blue
10 Driving our small boat through.

You would not know him now . . .
  But still he died
Nobly, so cover him over
  With violets of pride
15 Purple from Severn side.

Cover him, cover him soon!
  And with thick-set
Masses of memoried flowers—
  Hide that red wet
20 Thing I must somehow forget.

1919

The Silent One

Who died on the wires,[3] and hung there, one of two—
Who for his hours of life had chattered through Infinite lovely chatter of Bucks[4] accent:
Yet faced unbroken wires; stepped over, and went
5 A noble fool, faithful to his stripes—and ended.
But I weak, hungry, and willing only for the chance
Of line—to fight in the line, lay down under unbroken
Wires, and saw the flashes and kept unshaken,
Till the politest voice—a finicking accent, said:
10 "Do you think you might crawl through there: there's a hole."
Darkness, shot at: I smiled, as politely replied—
"I'm afraid not, Sir." There was no hole no way to be seen Nothing but chance of death, after tearing of clothes.
Kept flat, and watched the darkness, hearing bullets whizzing—
15 And thought of music—and swore deep heart's deep oaths (Polite to God) and retreated and came on again,
Again retreated—and a second time faced the screen.

1954

First Time In

After the dread tales and red yarns of the Line
Anything might have come to us; but the divine

2. Which flows west of the Cotswolds.
3. The barbed wire protecting the front from infantry attack.
4. Buckinghamshire, in southern England.

Afterglow brought us up to a Welsh colony
Hiding in sandbag ditches, whispering consolatory
5 Soft foreign things. Then we were taken in
To low huts candle-lit, shaded close by slitten° slit
Oilsheets, and there the boys gave us kind welcome,
So that we looked out as from the edge of home,
Sang us Welsh things, and changed all former notions
10 To human hopeful things. And the next day's guns
Nor any line-pangs ever quite could blot out
That strangely beautiful entry to war's rout;
Candles they gave us, precious and shared over-rations—
Ulysses[5] found little more in his wanderings without doubt.
15 "David of the White Rock", the "Slumber Song" so soft, and that Beautiful tune to which roguish words by Welsh pit boys
Are sung—but never more beautiful than there under the guns' noise.

1919–20 1982

ISAAC ROSENBERG
1890–1918

Break of Day in the Trenches

The darkness crumbles away.
It is the same old druid[1] Time as ever,
Only a live thing leaps my hand,
A queer sardonic rat,
5 As I pull the parapet's[2] poppy
To stick behind my ear.
Droll rat, they would shoot you if they knew
Your cosmopolitan sympathies.
Now you have touched this English hand
10 You will do the same to a German
Soon, no doubt, if it be your pleasure
To cross the sleeping green between.
It seems you inwardly grin as you pass
Strong eyes, fine limbs, haughty athletes,
15 Less chanced than you for life,
Bonds to the whims of murder,
Sprawled in the bowels of the earth,
The torn fields of France.
What do you see in our eyes
20 At the shrieking iron and flame
Hurled through still heavens?
What quaver—what heart aghast?

5. Or Odysseus, the hero of Homer's Odyssey, who spent ten years wandering on his way home after the Trojan War.

1. Member of an ancient Celtic order of priest-magicians.
2. Wall protecting a trench in World War I.

Poppies whose roots are in man's veins
Drop, and are ever dropping;
25 But mine in my ear is safe—
Just a little white with the dust.

June 1916 1922

Louse Hunting

Nudes—stark and glistening,
Yelling in lurid glee. Grinning faces
And raging limbs
Whirl over the floor one fire.
5 For a shirt verminously busy
Yon soldier tore from his throat, with oaths
Godhead might shrink at, but not the lice.
And soon the shirt was aflare
Over the candle he'd lit while we lay.

10 Then we all sprang up and stript
To hunt the verminous brood.
Soon like a demons' pantomime
The place was raging.
See the silhouettes agape,
15 See the gibbering shadows
Mixed with the battled arms on the wall.
See gargantuan hooked fingers
Pluck in supreme flesh
To smutch supreme littleness.
20 See the merry limbs in hot Highland fling[3]
Because some wizard vermin
Charmed from the quiet this revel
When our ears were half lulled
By the dark music
25 Blown from Sleep's trumpet.

1917 1922

Dead Man's Dump

The plunging limbers[4] over the shattered track
Racketed with their rusty freight,
Struck out like many crowns of thorns,
And the rusty stakes like sceptres old
5 To stay the flood of brutish men
Upon our brothers dear.

3. Scottish dance.
4. Two-wheeled vehicles for pulling guns or caissons (ammunition wagons).

The wheels lurched over sprawled dead
But pained them not, though their bones crunched,
Their shut mouths made no moan.
10 They lie there huddled, friend and foeman,
Man born of man, and born of woman,
And shells go crying over them
From night till night and now.

Earth has waited for them
15 All the time of their growth
Fretting for their decay:
Now she has them at last!
In the strength of their strength
Suspended—stopped and held.

20 What fierce imaginings their dark souls lit
Earth! have they gone into you?
Somewhere they must have gone,
And flung on your hard back
Is their souls' sack,
25 Emptied of God-ancestralled essences.
Who hurled them out? Who hurled?

None saw their spirits' shadow shake the grass,
Or stood aside for the half-used life to pass
Out of those doomed nostrils and the doomed mouth,
30 When the swift iron burning bee
Drained the wild honey of their youth.

What of us, who flung on the shrieking pyre,
Walk, our usual thoughts untouched,
Our lucky limbs as on ichor[5] fed,
35 Immortal seeming ever?
Perhaps when the flames beat loud on us,
A fear may choke in our veins
And the startled blood may stop.

The air is loud with death,
40 The dark air spurts with fire
The explosions ceaseless are.
Timelessly now, some minutes past,
These dead strode time with vigorous life,
Till the shrapnel called "an end!"
45 But not to all. In bleeding pangs
Some borne on stretchers dreamed of home,
Dear things, war-blotted from their hearts.

A man's brains splattered on
A stretcher-bearer's face;
50 His shook shoulders slipped their load,
But when they bent to look again

5. In Greek mythology, the ethereal fluid flowing through the veins of the gods.

The drowning soul was sunk too deep
For human tenderness.

They left this dead with the older dead,
55 Stretched at the cross roads.

Burnt black by strange decay,
Their sinister faces lie
The lid over each eye,
The grass and coloured clay
60 More motion have than they,
Joined to the great sunk silences.

Here is one not long dead;
His dark hearing caught our far wheels,
And the choked soul stretched weak hands
65 To reach the living word the far wheels said,
The blood-dazed intelligence beating for light,
Crying through the suspense of the far torturing wheels
Swift for the end to break,
Or the wheels to break,
70 Cried as the tide of the world broke over his sight.

Will they come? Will they ever come?
Even as the mixed hoofs of the mules,
The quivering-bellied mules,
And the rushing wheels all mixed
75 With his tortured upturned sight,
So we crashed round the bend,
We heard his weak scream,
We heard his very last sound,
And our wheels grazed his dead face.

1917 1922

HUGH MACDIARMID (CHRISTOPHER MURRAY GRIEVE) 1892–1978

From Lament for the Great Music

Yet there is no great problem in the world to-day
Except disease and death men cannot end
If no man tries to dominate another.
The struggle for material existence is over. It has been won.
5 The need for repressions and disciplines has passed.
The struggle for truth and that indescribable necessity,
Beauty, begins now, hampered by none of the lower needs.

No one now needs live less or be less than his utmost.
And in the slow and devious development that has brought men to this stage
10 Scottish genius has played a foremost role. Yet I turn to you,
For unselfish intellect rises like a perfume
Above the faults and follies of the world of will.
But for the excellence of the typical swift life no nation
Deserves to be remembered more than the sands of the sea.

15 I am only that Job[1] in feathers, a heron myself,
Gaunt and unsubstantial—yet immune to the vicissitudes
Other birds accept as a matter of course; impervious to the effects
Of even the wildest weather, no mean consideration in a country like this;
And my appetite is not restricted to any particular fare.
20 Hence I am encountered in places far removed from one another
And widely different in an intimately topographical sense
—Spearing a rat at the mouth of a culvert at midnight
And bolting an eel on the seashore in the halflight of dawn—Communal dweller yet lone hunter, lumbering yet swift and sustained flier,
25 The usual steely expression of my eyes does not flatter me;
Few birds perhaps have so successfully solved
The problem of existence as my grey lanky self
That in light or darkness, wet or shine, subsists
By a combination of alertness, patience, and passivity.
30 A kind of Caolite mac Ronain[2] too; but it takes
 All my wits in Scotland to-day.

This is the darkness where you have been; and have left
I think forever. It is the darkness from which nothing is cast out,
No loss, no wanton pain, no disease, no insanity,
35 None of the unripe intelligence of so-called dead nature,
Abortive attempts of nature to reflect itself.
All the unintelligible burden that alone leads to the height
Where it seems that extremes meet and I could reach you i bh-fogus do dhul ar neamh-nidh, with a leim eanamhail.[3]
40 In this depth that I dare not leave
I who am no dilettante of chaos and find
No bitter gratification in the contemplation of ultimate Incoherence Know that the world is at any given moment anything it may be called
And even more difficult to group round any central character,
45 Yet it is out of this aimless dispersion, all these zig-zagging efforts,
All this disorderly growth, that the ideal of an epoch ends
By disentangling itself. Myriads of human activities
Are scattered in all directions by the indifferent forces

1. Biblical character who has come to represent patience in adversity.
2. "The grey spare swift runner, he who saved Fionn once by that wonderful feat of gathering couples of all the wild beasts and birds of Ireland (a ram and a crimson sheep from Inis, two water-birds from the Erne, two cormorants from the Cliannth, two foxes from Slieve Gullion, and the rest)" [MacDiarmid's note].
3. Birdlike leap (Gaelic). I bh-fogus do dhul ar neamh-nidh: on the confines of vanishing (Gaelic).

Of self-interest, passion, crime, madness—but out of their number
50 Some few of these activities are endowed with a little constancy
By the pure in heart, for reasons which seem to respond
To the most elementary designs of the spirit.
Civilisation, culture, all the good in the world
Depends ultimately on the existence of a few men of good will.
55 The perspective will converge upon them yet.
I dare not leave this dark and distracted scene.
I believe in the necessary and unavoidable responsibility of man
And in the ineluctable certainty of the resurrection
And know that the mind of man creates no ideas
60 Though it is ideas alone that create.
Mind is the organ through which the Universe reaches Such consciousness of itself as is possible now, and I must not brood
On the intermittence of genius, the way consciousness varies
Or declines, as in Scotland here, till it seems 65 Heaven itself may be only the best that is feasible
For most people, but a sad declension from music like yours.
Yes, I am prepared to see the Heavens open
And find the celestial music poor by comparison.
Yet my duty is here. It is now the duty of the Scottish genius
70 Which has provided the economic freedom for it
To lead in the abandonment of creeds and moral compromises
Of every sort and to commence to express the unity of life
By confounding the curse of short-circuited thought Circumscribing consciousness, for that is the thought
75 Of compromise, the medium of the time-server.
This must be done to lead men to cosmic consciousness
And as it cannot be quick, except on occasion
And that the creative instant, the moment of divine realisation,
When the self is lit up by its own inner light
80 Caused in the self by its intensity of thought
Possibly over a long period, it must be thought of as a craft
In which the consummation of the idea, not in analysis but in synthesis,
Must be the subject of the object—life.
Wherefore I cannot take the bird-like leap to you
85 Though well I know that: "He that can endure
To follow with allegiance a fallen lord
Does conquer him that did his master conquer."[4]

I dare not leap to you now. But after all since I cannot believe
You will ever be really for everyone or even for many 90 And are likely to pursue in the hereafter
A separate destiny from theirs—or simply because I long to hear the great pipers play their great music themselves.
And they all dead (save one) centuries before I was born,
And have one glimpse of my beloved Scotland yet
95 As the land I have dreamt of where the supreme values
Which the people recognise are states of mind

4. Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra 3.13.42–44.

Their ruling passion the attainment of higher consciousness,
And their actual rulers those in whom they find,
Or think they do, the requisite knowledge for such attainments
100 And where one is not required to believe anything
But even warned of the dangers of doing so
Except with infinite qualifications and care,
My duty done, I will try to follow you on the last day of the world,
And pray I may see you all standing shoulder to shoulder
105 With Patrick Mor MacCrimmon and Duncan Ban MacCrimmon in the centre
In the hollow[5] at Boreraig or in front of Dunvegan Castle
Or on the lip of the broken graves in Kilmuir Kirkyard[6]
While, the living stricken ghastly in the eternal light
And the rest of the dead all risen blue-faced from their graves 110 (Though, the pipes to your hand, you will be once more Perfectly at ease, and as you were in your prime)
All ever born crowd the islands and the West Coast of Scotland
Which has standing room for them all, and the air curdled with angels,
And everywhere that feeling seldom felt on the earth before
115 Save in the hearts of parents or in youth untouched by tragedy
That in its very search for personal experience often found
A like impersonality and self-forgetfulness,
And you playing: "Farewell to Scotland, and the rest of the Earth,"
The only fit music there can be for that day
120 —And I will leap then and hide behind one of you,
Us Caismeachd phiob-mora bras shroiceadh am puirt.[7]

Look! Is that only the setting sun again?
Or a piper coming from far away?

1934

Another Epitaph on an Army of Mercenaries[8]

It is a God-damned lie to say that these
Saved, or knew, anything worth any man's pride.
They were professional murderers and they took
Their blood money and impious risks and died.
5 In spite of all their kind some elements of worth
With difficulty persist here and there on earth.

1935

5. I.e., the pipers' hollow where the students at the college of the MacCrimmons (1500–1800) practiced. Ten generations of MacCrimmons were the hereditary pipers of MacLeod, whose seat is at Dunvegan Castle in the Isle of Skye. Boreraig was where the MacCrimmons lived.
6. Near Dunvegan.
7. While the notes of the great pipes shrilly sounded out their cries (Gaelic); from "Charles Son of James," by the Scottish poet Alasdair MacMhaighstir Alasdair (1695–1770).
8. "In reply to A. E. Housman's" [MacDiarmid's note]. See A. E. Housman's poem "Epitaph on an Army of Mercenaries" (p. 1180).

From In Memoriam James Joyce

We Must Look at the Harebell[9]

We must look at the harebell as if
We had never seen it before.
Remembrance gives an accumulation of satisfaction
Yet the desire for change is very strong in us
5 And change is in itself a recreation.
To those who take any pleasure
In flowers, plants, birds, and the rest
An ecological change is recreative.
(Come. Climb with me. Even the sheep are different
10 And of new importance.
The coarse-fleeced, hardy Herdwick,
The Hampshire Down, artificially fed almost from birth,
And butcher-fat from the day it is weaned,
The Lincoln-Longwool, the biggest breed in England,
15 With the longest fleece, and the Southdown
Almost the smallest—and between them thirty other breeds,
Some whitefaced, some black,
Some with horns and some without,
Some long-wooled, some short-wooled,
20 In England where the men, and women too,
Are almost as interesting as the sheep.)
Everything is different, everything changes,
Except for the white bedstraw which climbs all the way
Up from the valleys to the tops of the high passes
25 The flowers are all different and more precious
Demanding more search and particularity of vision.
Look! Here and there a pinguicula[1] eloquent of the Alps
Still keeps a purple-blue flower
On the top of its straight and slender stem.
30 Bog-asphodel, deep-gold, and comely in form,
The queer, almost diabolical, sundew,
And when you leave the bog for the stag moors and the rocks
The parsley fern—a lovelier plant
Than even the proud Osmunda Regalis[2]—
35 Flourishes in abundance
Showing off oddly contrasted fronds
From the cracks of the lichened stones.
It is pleasant to find the books
Describing it as "very local."
40 Here is a change indeed!
The universal is the particular.

1955

9. A blue flower, with bell-shaped blossom, that grows wild in Scotland.
1. The butterwort, a small herb that secretes a sticky liquid to catch insects.
2. The flowering, or "royal," fern.

ARCHIBALD MacLEISH
1892–1982

Ars Poetica[1]

A poem should be palpable and mute
As a globed fruit,

Dumb
As old medallions to the thumb,

5 Silent as the sleeve-worn stone
Of casement ledges where the moss has grown—

A poem should be wordless
As the flight of birds.

*

A poem should be motionless in time
10 As the moon climbs,

Leaving, as the moon releases
Twig by twig the night-entangled trees,

Leaving, as the moon behind the winter leaves,
Memory by memory the mind—

15 A poem should be motionless in time
As the moon climbs.

*

A poem should be equal to:
Not true.

For all the history of grief
20 An empty doorway and a maple leaf.

For love
The leaning grasses and two lights above the sea—

A poem should not mean
But be.

1926

1. The art of poetry (Latin); title of a treatise on poetics by the Roman poet Horace (65–8 B.C.E.).

The Snowflake Which Is Now and Hence Forever

Will it last? he says.
Is it a masterpiece?
Will generation after generation
Turn with reverence to the page?

5 Birdseye scholar of the frozen fish,
What would he make of the sole, clean, clear
Leap of the salmon that has disappeared?

To be, yes!—whether they like it or not!
But not to last when leap and water are forgotten,
10 A plank of standard pinkness in the dish.

They also live
Who swerve and vanish in the river.[2]

1952

EDNA ST. VINCENT MILLAY
1892–1950

First Fig[1]

My candle burns at both ends;
It will not last the night;
But ah, my foes, and oh, my friends—
It gives a lovely light!

1920

Second Fig[2]

Safe upon the solid rock the ugly houses stand:
Come and see my shining palace built upon the sand!

1920

2. An allusion to Milton, "When I Consider How My Light Is Spent" (p. 418), a sonnet that concludes, "They also serve who only stand and wait."
1. From A Few Figs from Thistles, a title derived from Matthew 7.16: "Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?"
2. See the preceding note and Matthew 7.26–27, referring to "a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand."

Euclid Alone Has Looked on Beauty Bare

Euclid[3] alone has looked on Beauty bare.
Let all who prate of Beauty hold their peace,
And lay them prone upon the earth and cease
To ponder on themselves, the while they stare
5 At nothing, intricately drawn nowhere
In shapes of shifting lineage; let geese
Gabble and hiss, but heroes seek release
From dusty bondage into luminous air.
O blinding hour, O holy, terrible day,
10 When first the shaft into his vision shone
Of light anatomized! Euclid alone
Has looked on Beauty bare. Fortunate they
Who, though once only and then but far away,
Have heard her massive sandal set on stone.

1920

Spring

To what purpose, April, do you return again?
Beauty is not enough.
You can no longer quiet me with the redness
Of little leaves opening stickily.
5 I know what I know.
The sun is hot on my neck as I observe
The spikes of the crocus.
The smell of the earth is good.
It is apparent that there is no death.
10 But what does that signify?
Not only under ground are the brains of men
Eaten by maggots.
Life in itself
Is nothing,
15 An empty cup, a flight of uncarpeted stairs.
It is not enough that yearly, down this hill,
April
Comes like an idiot, babbling and strewing flowers.

1921

[I, Being Born a Woman and Distressed]

I, being born a woman and distressed
By all the needs and notions of my kind,

3. Greek mathematician (ca. 300 B.C.E.), best-known for his treatise on geometry.

Am urged by your propinquity° to find nearness
Your person fair, and feel a certain zest
5 To bear your body's weight upon my breast:
So subtly is the fume of life designed,
To clarify the pulse and cloud the mind,
And leave me once again undone, possessed.
Think not for this, however, the poor treason
10 Of my stout blood against my staggering brain,
I shall remember you with love, or season
My scorn with pity,—let me make it plain:
I find this frenzy insufficient reason
For conversation when we meet again.

1923

The Buck in the Snow

White sky, over the hemlocks bowed with snow,
Saw you not at the beginning of evening the antlered buck and his doe
Standing in the apple-orchard? I saw them. I saw them suddenly go,
Tails up, with long leaps lovely and slow,
5 Over the stone-wall into the wood of hemlocks bowed with snow.

Now lies he here, his wild blood scalding the snow.

How strange a thing is death, bringing to his knees, bringing to his antlers
The buck in the snow.
How strange a thing,—a mile away by now, it may be,
10 Under the heavy hemlocks that as the moments pass
Shift their loads a little, letting fall a feather of snow—
Life, looking out attentive from the eyes of the doe.

1928

I Dreamed I Moved among the Elysian Fields[4]

I dreamed I moved among the Elysian fields,
In converse with sweet women long since dead;
And out of blossoms which that meadow yields
I wove a garland for your living head.
5 Danae,[5] that was the vessel for a day
Of golden Jove, I saw, and at her side,
Whom Jove the Bull desired and bore away,
Europa[6] stood, and the Swan's featherless bride.[7]
All these were mortal women, yet all these

4. The abode of the happy dead in the Greek mythological underworld.
5. Whom Jove (Zeus), the supreme god, seduced by descending upon her as a shower of gold.
6. Carried away by Jove in the form of a bull.
7. Leda, raped by Jove in the form of a swan.

10 Above the ground had had a god for guest;
Freely I walked beside them and at ease,
Addressing them, by them again addressed,
And marveled nothing, for remembering you,
Wherefore I was among them well I knew.

1930

Ragged Island

There, there where those black spruces crowd
To the edge of the precipitous cliff,
Above your boat, under the eastern wall of the island;
And no wave breaks; as if
5 All had been done, and long ago, that needed
Doing; and the cold tide, unimpeded
By shoal or shelving ledge, moves up and down,
Instead of in and out;
And there is no driftwood there, because there is no beach;
10 Clean cliff going down as deep as clear water can reach;

No driftwood, such as abounds on the roaring shingle,[8]
To be hefted home, for fires in the kitchen stove;
Barrels, banged ashore about the boiling outer harbor;
Lobster-buoys, on the eel-grass of the sheltered cove:

15 There, thought unbraids itself, and the mind becomes single.
There you row with tranquil oars, and the ocean
Shows no scar from the cutting of your placid keel;
Care becomes senseless there; pride and promotion
Remote; you only look; you scarcely feel.

20 Even adventure, with its vital uses,
Is aimless ardour now; and thrift is waste.

Oh, to be there, under the silent spruces,
Where the wide, quiet evening darkens without haste
Over a sea with death acquainted, yet forever chaste.

1954

Armenonville[9]

By the lake at Armenonville in the Bois de Boulogne
Small begonias had been set in the embankment, both pink and red;
With polished leaf and brittle, juicy stem;
They covered the embankment; there were wagon-loads of them,
5 Charming and neat, gay colours in the warm shade.

8. Stones on a seashore.
9. Pavilion in the park of the Bois de Boulogne, in Paris.

We had preferred a table near the lake, half out of view,
Well out of hearing, for a voice not raised above
A low, impassioned question and its low reply.
We both leaned forward with our elbows on the table, and you
10 Watched my mouth while I answered, and it made me shy.
I looked about, but the waiters knew we were in love,
And matter-of-factly left us blissfully alone.

There swam across the lake, as I looked aside, avoiding
Your eyes for a moment, there swam from under the pink and red begonias
15 A small creature; I thought it was a water-rat; it swam very well,
In complete silence, and making no ripples at all
Hardly; and when suddenly I turned again to you, Aware that you were speaking, and perhaps had been speaking for some time,
I was aghast at my absence, for truly I did not know
20 Whether you had been asking or telling.

1954

WILFRED OWEN
1893–1918

Anthem for Doomed Youth

What passing-bells for these who die as cattle?[1]
—Only the monstrous anger of the guns.
Only the stuttering rifles' rapid rattle
Can patter out their hasty orisons.° prayers
5 No mockeries now for them; no prayers nor bells;
Nor any voice of mourning save the choirs,—
The shrill, demented choirs of wailing shells;
And bugles calling for them from sad shires.° counties

What candles may be held to speed them all?
10 Not in the hands of boys but in their eyes
Shall shine the holy glimmers of goodbyes.
The pallor of girls' brows shall be their pall;
Their flowers the tenderness of patient minds,
And each slow dusk a drawing-down of blinds.

September–October 1917 1920

1. Owen was probably responding to the anonymous prefatory note to Poems of Today (1916), of which he possessed a copy: "This book has been compiled in order that boys and girls, already perhaps familiar with the great classics of the English speech, may also know something of the newer poetry of their own day. Most of the writers are living, and the rest are still vivid memories among us, while one of the youngest, almost as these words are written, has gone singing to lay down his life for his country's cause. . . . There is no arbitrary isolation of one theme from another; they mingle and interpenetrate throughout, to the music of Pan's flute, and of Love's viol, and the bugle-call of Endeavour, and the passing-bells of Death."

Dulce Et Decorum Est[2]

Bent double, like old beggars under sacks,
Knock-kneed, coughing like hags, we cursed through sludge,
Till on the haunting flares we turned our backs
And towards our distant rest began to trudge.
5 Men marched asleep. Many had lost their boots
But limped on, blood-shod. All went lame; all blind;
Drunk with fatigue; deaf even to the hoots
Of tired, outstripped Five-Nines[3] that dropped behind.

Gas! GAS! Quick, boys!—An ecstasy of fumbling,
10 Fitting the clumsy helmets just in time;
But someone still was yelling out and stumbling,
And flound'ring like a man in fire or lime . . .
Dim, through the misty panes[4] and thick green light,
As under a green sea, I saw him drowning.

15 In all my dreams, before my helpless sight,
He plunges at me, guttering, choking, drowning.

If in some smothering dreams you too could pace
Behind the wagon that we flung him in,
And watch the white eyes writhing in his face,
20 His hanging face, like a devil's sick of sin;
If you could hear, at every jolt, the blood
Come gargling from the froth-corrupted lungs,
Obscene as cancer, bitter as the cud
Of vile, incurable sores on innocent tongues,—
25 My friend,[5] you would not tell with such high zest
To children ardent for some desperate glory,
The old Lie: Dulce et decorum est
Pro patria mori.

October 1917–March 1918 1920

Insensibility

1

Happy are men who yet before they are killed
Can let their veins run cold.
Whom no compassion fleers° mocks
Or makes their feet

2. "The famous Latin tag [from Horace, Odes 3.2.13] means, of course, It is sweet and meet to die for one's country. Sweet! And decorous!" [Owen's letter to his mother, October 16, 1917].
3. I.e., 5.9-caliber shells.
4. Of the gas mask's celluloid window.
5. Jessie Pope, to whom the poem was originally to have been dedicated, was the author of numerous prewar children's books as well as Jessie Pope's War Poems (1915).

5 Sore on the alleys cobbled[6] with their brothers.
The front line withers.
But they are troops who fade, not flowers,
For poets' tearful fooling:
Men, gaps for filling:
10 Losses, who might have fought
Longer; but no one bothers.

2

And some cease feeling
Even themselves or for themselves.
Dullness best solves
15 The tease and doubt of shelling,
And Chance's strange arithmetic
Comes simpler than the reckoning of their shilling.[7]
They keep no check on armies' decimation.

3

Happy are these who lose imagination:
20 They have enough to carry with ammunition.
Their spirit drags no pack.
Their old wounds, save with cold, can not more ache.
Having seen all things red,
Their eyes are rid
25 Of the hurt of the colour of blood for ever.
And terror's first constriction over,
Their hearts remain small-drawn.
Their senses in some scorching cautery of battle
Now long since ironed,
30 Can laugh among the dying, unconcerned.

4

Happy the soldier home, with not a notion
How somewhere, every dawn, some men attack,
And many sighs are drained.
Happy the lad whose mind was never trained:
35 His days are worth forgetting more than not.
He sings along the march
Which we march taciturn, because of dusk,
The long, forlorn, relentless trend
From larger day to huger night.

6. "They are dying again at Beaumont Hamel, which already in 1916 was cobbled with skulls" [Owen's letter to his sister, March 1918].

7. A "King's shilling" was traditionally given to the newly established soldier by the recruiting officer.

5

40 We wise,[8] who with a thought besmirch
Blood over all our soul,
How should we see our task
But through his blunt and lashless eyes?
Alive, he is not vital overmuch;
45 Dying, not mortal overmuch;
Nor sad, nor proud,
Nor curious at all.
He cannot tell
Old men's placidity from his.

6

50 But cursed are dullards whom no cannon stuns,
That they should be as stones.
Wretched are they, and mean
With paucity that never was simplicity.
By choice they made themselves immune
55 To pity and whatever moans in man
Before the last sea and the hapless stars;
Whatever mourns when many leave these shores;
Whatever shares
The eternal reciprocity of tears.

1917–18 1920

Strange Meeting[9]

It seemed that out of battle I escaped
Down some profound dull tunnel, long since scooped
Through granites which titanic wars had groined.° grooved

Yet also there encumbered sleepers groaned,
5 Too fast in thought or death to be bestirred.
Then, as I probed them, one sprang up, and stared
With piteous recognition in fixed eyes,
Lifting distressful hands, as if to bless.
And by his smile, I knew that sullen hall,—
10 By his dead smile I knew we stood in Hell.

With a thousand pains that vision's face was grained;
Yet no blood reached there from the upper ground,
And no guns thumped, or down the flues made moan.

8. I.e., poets.
9. Cf. Shelley, The Revolt of Islam, lines 1828–32:

And one whose spear had pierced me, leaned beside,
With quivering lips and humid eyes;—and all
Seemed like some brothers on a journey wide
Gone forth, whom now strange meeting did befall
In a strange land.

The speaker of Owen's poem imagines his victim a German poet.

"Strange friend," I said, "here is no cause to mourn."
15 "None," said that other, "save the undone years,
The hopelessness. Whatever hope is yours,
Was my life also; I went hunting wild
After the wildest beauty in the world,
Which lies not calm in eyes, or braided hair,
20 But mocks the steady running of the hour,
And if it grieves, grieves richlier than here.
For by my glee might many men have laughed.
And of my weeping something had been left,
Which must die now. I mean the truth untold,
25 The pity of war, the pity war distilled.[1]
Now men will go content with what we spoiled,
Or, discontent, boil bloody, and be spilled.
They will be swift with swiftness of the tigress.
None will break ranks, though nations trek from progress.
30 Courage was mine, and I had mystery,
Wisdom was mine, and I had mastery:
To miss the march of this retreating world
Into vain citadels that are not walled.
Then, when much blood had clogged their chariot-wheels,
35 I would go up and wash them from sweet wells,
Even with truths that lie too deep for taint.
I would have poured my spirit without stint
But not through wounds; not on the cess[2] of war.
Foreheads of men have bled where no wounds were.

40 "I am the enemy you killed, my friend.
I knew you in this dark: for so you frowned
Yesterday through me as you jabbed and killed.
I parried; but my hands were loath and cold.
Let us sleep now. . . ."

January–March 1918 1920

Futility

Move him into the sun—
Gently its touch awoke him once,
At home, whispering of fields half-sown.
Always it woke him, even in France,
5 Until this morning and this snow.
If anything might rouse him now
The kind old sun will know.

Think how it wakes the seeds—
Woke once the clays of a cold star.

1. "My subject is War, and the pity of War. The Poetry is in the pity" [Owen's draft preface to his poems].

2. Luck, as in the phrase bad cess to you (may evil befall you); also muck or excrement, as in the word cesspool.

10 Are limbs, so dear achieved, are sides
Full-nerved, still warm, too hard to stir?
Was it for this the clay grew tall?
—O what made fatuous sunbeams toil
To break earth's sleep at all?

May 1918 1920

DOROTHY PARKER
1893–1967

Unfortunate Coincidence

By the time you swear you're his,
Shivering and sighing,
And he vows his passion is Infinite, undying—
5 Lady, make a note of this:
One of you is lying.

1926

Résumé

Razors pain you;
Rivers are damp;
Acids stain you;
And drugs cause cramp.
5 Guns aren't lawful;
Nooses give;
Gas smells awful;
You might as well live.

1926

One Perfect Rose

A single flow'r he sent me, since we met.
All tenderly his messenger he chose;
Deep-hearted, pure, with scented dew still wet—
One perfect rose.

5 I knew the language of the floweret;
"My fragile leaves," it said, "his heart enclose."
Love long has taken for his amulet
One perfect rose.

Why is it no one ever sent me yet
10 One perfect limousine, do you suppose?
Ah no, it's always just my luck to get
One perfect rose.

1926

E. E. CUMMINGS
1894–1962

All in green went my love riding

All in green went my love riding
on a great horse of gold
into the silver dawn.

four lean hounds crouched low and smiling
5 the merry deer ran before.

Fleeter be they than dappled dreams
the swift sweet deer
the red rare deer.

Four red roebuck at a white water
10 the cruel bugle sang before.

Horn at hip went my love riding riding the echo down
into the silver dawn.

four lean hounds crouched low and smiling
15 the level meadows ran before.

Softer be they than slippered sleep
the lean lithe deer
the fleet flown deer.

Four fleet does at a gold valley
20 the famished arrow sang before.

Bow at belt went my love riding riding the mountain down
into the silver dawn.

four lean hounds crouched low and smiling
25 the sheer peaks ran before.

Paler be they than daunting death
the sleek slim deer
the tall tense deer.

Four tall stags at a green mountain
30 the lucky hunter sang before.

All in green went my love riding
on a great horse of gold
into the silver dawn.

four lean hounds crouched low and smiling
35 my heart fell dead before.

1923

the Cambridge ladies who live in furnished souls

the Cambridge ladies who live in furnished souls
are unbeautiful and have comfortable minds (also, with the church's protestant blessings daughters, unscented shapeless spirited)
5 they believe in Christ and Longfellow,[1] both dead, are invariably interested in so many things—
at the present writing one still finds delighted fingers knitting for the is it Poles?
perhaps. While permanent faces coyly bandy
10 scandal of Mrs. N and Professor D
. . . . the Cambridge ladies do not care,above Cambridge if sometimes in its box of sky lavender and cornerless,the moon rattles like a fragment of angry candy

1923

Spring is like a perhaps hand

Spring is like a perhaps hand (which comes carefully out of Nowhere)arranging a window,into which people look(while 5 people stare arranging and changing placing carefully there a strange thing and a known thing here)and changing everything carefully

10 spring is like a perhaps
Hand in a window (carefully to

1. For most of his life, the American poet Henry Wadsworth Longfellow (1807–1882; see pp. 951–57) lived in Cambridge, Massachusetts, where for two decades he taught modern languages at Harvard University.

and fro moving New and Old things,while 15 people stare carefully moving a perhaps fraction of flower here placing an inch of air there)and without breaking anything.

1925

"next to of course god america i

"next to of course god america i love you land of the pilgrims' and so forth oh say can you see by the dawn's early my country 'tis of centuries come and go 5 and are no more what of it we should worry in every language even deafanddumb thy sons acclaim your glorious name by gorry by jingo[2] by gee by gosh by gum
why talk of beauty what could be more beaut-10 iful than these heroic happy dead who rushed like lions to the roaring slaughter they did not stop to think they died instead then shall the voice of liberty be mute?"

He spoke. And drank rapidly a glass of water

1926

since feeling is first

since feeling is first
who pays any attention
to the syntax of things
will never wholly kiss you;

5 wholly to be a fool while Spring is in the world

my blood approves,
and kisses are a better fate
than wisdom
10 lady i swear by all flowers. Don't cry —the best gesture of my brain is less than your eyelids' flutter which says

2. "Jingo" is both part of a mild oath and a reference to jingoism: extreme nationalism, especially as demonstrated in a belligerent foreign policy.

we are for each other:then laugh,leaning back in my arms
15 for life's not a paragraph

And death i think is no parenthesis

1926 somewhere i have never travelled,gladly beyond

somewhere i have never travelled,gladly beyond any experience,your eyes have their silence:
in your most frail gesture are things which enclose me, or which i cannot touch because they are too near

5 your slightest look easily will unclose me though i have closed myself as fingers,
you open always petal by petal myself as Spring opens (touching skilfully,mysteriously)her first rose or if your wish be to close me,i and 10 my life will shut very beautifully,suddenly, as when the heart of this flower imagines

the snow carefully everywhere descending;

nothing which we are to perceive in this world equals
the power of your intense fragility:whose texture 15 compels me with the colour of its countries, rendering death and forever with each breathing

(i do not know what it is about you that closes and opens;only something in me understands the voice of your eyes is deeper than all roses)
20 nobody,not even the rain,has such small hands

1931 may i feel said he

may i feel said he (i'll squeal said she just once said he)
it's fun said she

5 (may i touch said he how much said she a lot said he)
why not said she

(let's go said he not too far said she what's too far said he where you are said she)

may i stay said he (which way said she like this said he if you kiss said she may i move said he is it love said she) if you're willing said he (but you're killing said she

but it's life said he but your wife said she now said he)
ow said she (tiptop said he don't stop said she oh no said he) go slow said she (cccome?said he ummm said she) you're divine!said he

(you are Mine said she)

1935

anyone lived in a pretty how town

anyone lived in a pretty how town
(with up so floating many bells down)
spring summer autumn winter
he sang his didn't he danced his did.

Women and men(both little and small) cared for anyone not at all they sowed their isn't they reaped their same sun moon stars rain

children guessed(but only a few and down they forgot as up they grew autumn winter spring summer) that noone loved him more by more when by now and tree by leaf

she laughed his joy she cried his grief

15 bird by snow and stir by still anyone's any was all to her someones married their everyones laughed their cryings and did their dance (sleep wake hope and then)they 20 said their nevers they slept their dream

stars rain sun moon
(and only the snow can begin to explain how children are apt to forget to remember with up so floating many bells down)

25 one day anyone died i guess
(and noone stooped to kiss his face) busy folk buried them side by side little by little and was by was all by all and deep by deep 30 and more by more they dream their sleep noone and anyone earth by april wish by spirit and if by yes.

Women and men(both dong and ding)
summer autumn winter spring 35 reaped their sowing and went their came sun moon stars rain

1940

who are you,little i

who are you,little i

(five or six years old) peering from some high window;at the gold

5 of november sunset

(and feeling:that if day has to become night

this is a beautiful way)

1963

JEAN TOOMER
1894–1967

From Cane[1]

Reapers

Black reapers with the sound of steel on stones
Are sharpening scythes. I see them place the hones
In their hip-pockets as a thing that's done,
And start their silent swinging, one by one.
5 Black horses drive a mower through the weeds,
And there, a field rat, startled, squealing bleeds,
His belly close to ground. I see the blade,
Blood-stained, continue cutting weeds and shade.

Face

Hair—silver-gray,
like streams of stars,
Brows—
5 recurved canoes
quivered by the ripples blown by pain,
Her eyes—
mist of tears
condensing on the flesh below
10 And her channeled muscles are cluster grapes of sorrow purple in the evening sun
nearly ripe for worms.

Georgia Dusk

The sky, lazily disdaining to pursue
The setting sun, too indolent to hold
A lengthened tournament for flashing gold,
Passively darkens for night's barbecue,

5 A feast of moon and men and barking hounds,
An orgy for some genius of the South
With blood-hot eyes and cane-lipped scented mouth,
Surprised in making folksongs from soul sounds.

1. A collection—of fiction, drama, and poetry—that Toomer saw as a unified book not to be excerpted. Set in Georgia and in Washington, D.C., it was partly inspired by the period in which the urban Toomer, of black and white ancestry, worked in a school in Sparta, Georgia.

The sawmill blows its whistle, buzz-saws stop,
10 And silence breaks the bud of knoll and hill,
Soft settling pollen where plowed lands fulfill
Their early promise of a bumper crop.

Smoke from the pyramidal sawdust pile
Curls up, blue ghosts of trees, tarrying low
15 Where only chips and stumps are left to show
The solid proof of former domicile.

Meanwhile, the men, with vestiges of pomp,
Race memories of king and caravan,
High-priests, an ostrich, and a juju-man,[2]
20 Go singing through the footpaths of the swamp.

Their voices rise . . the pine trees are guitars,
Strumming, pine-needles fall like sheets of rain . .
Their voices rise . . the chorus of the cane
Is caroling a vesper to the stars . .

25 O singers, resinous and soft your songs
Above the sacred whisper of the pines,
Give virgin lips to cornfield concubines,
Bring dreams of Christ to dusky cane-lipped throngs.

Portrait in Georgia

Hair—braided chestnut,
coiled like a lyncher's rope,
Eyes—fagots,° bundles of sticks
Lips—old scars, or the first red blisters,
5 Breath—the last sweet scent of cane,
And her slim body, white as the ash
of black flesh after flame.

Harvest Song

I am a reaper whose muscles set at sundown. All my oats are cradled.
But I am too chilled, and too fatigued to bind them. And I hunger.

I crack a grain between my teeth. I do not taste it.
I have been in the fields all day. My throat is dry. I hunger.

5 My eyes are caked with dust of oatfields at harvest-time.
I am a blind man who stares across the hills, seeking stacked fields of other harvesters.

2. One who controls the magic associated with jujus, the fetishes or charms of West African peoples.

It would be good to see them . . crook'd, split, and iron-ringed handles of the scythes. It would be good to see them, dust-caked and blind. I hunger.

(Dusk is a strange feared sheath their blades are dulled in.)
My throat is dry. And should I call, a cracked grain like the oats . . . eoho—

10 I fear to call. What should they hear me, and offer me their grain, oats, or wheat, or corn? I have been in the fields all day. I fear I could not taste it. I fear knowledge of my hunger.

My ears are caked with dust of oatfields at harvest-time.
I am a deaf man who strains to hear the calls of other harvesters whose throats are also dry.

It would be good to hear their songs . . reapers of the sweet-stalked cane, cutters of the corn . . even though their throats cracked and the strangeness of their voices deafened me.

I hunger. My throat is dry. Now that the sun has set and I am chilled, I fear to call. (Eoho, my brothers!)

15 I am a reaper. (Eoho!) All my oats are cradled. But I am too fatigued to bind them. And I hunger. I crack a grain. It has no taste to it. My throat is dry . . .

O my brothers, I beat my palms, still soft, against the stubble of my harvesting. (You beat your soft palms, too.) My pain is sweet. Sweeter than the oats or wheat or corn. It will not bring me knowledge of my hunger.

1923

ROBERT GRAVES
1895–1985

Love Without Hope

Love without hope, as when the young bird-catcher
Swept off his tall hat to the Squire's own daughter,
So let the imprisoned larks escape and fly
Singing about her head, as she rode by.

1925

In Broken Images

He is quick, thinking in clear images;
I am slow, thinking in broken images.

He becomes dull, trusting to his clear images;
I become sharp, mistrusting my broken images.

5 Trusting his images, he assumes their relevance;
Mistrusting my images, I question their relevance.

Assuming their relevance, he assumes the fact;
Questioning their relevance, I question the fact.

When the fact fails him, he questions his senses;
10 When the fact fails me, I approve my senses.

He continues quick and dull in his clear images;
I continue slow and sharp in my broken images.

He in a new confusion of his understanding;
I in a new understanding of my confusion.

1929

Warning to Children

Children, if you dare to think
Of the greatness, rareness, muchness,
Fewness of this precious only
Endless world in which you say
5 You live, you think of things like this:
Blocks of slate enclosing dappled
Red and green, enclosing tawny
Yellow nets, enclosing white
And black acres of dominoes,
10 Where a neat brown paper parcel
Tempts you to untie the string.
In the parcel a small island,
On the island a large tree,
On the tree a husky fruit.
15 Strip the husk and pare the rind off:
In the kernel you will see
Blocks of slate enclosed by dappled
Red and green, enclosed by tawny
Yellow nets, enclosed by white
20 And black acres of dominoes,
Where the same brown paper parcel—
Children, leave the string alone!
For who dares undo the parcel
Finds himself at once inside it,
25 On the island, in the fruit,
Blocks of slate about his head,
Finds himself enclosed by dappled
Green and red, enclosed by yellow
Tawny nets, enclosed by black

30 And white acres of dominoes,
With the same brown paper parcel
Still unopened on his knee.
And, if he then should dare to think
Of the fewness, muchness, rareness,
35 Greatness of this endless only
Precious world in which he says
He lives—he then unties the string.

1929

The Persian Version

Truth-loving Persians do not dwell upon
The trivial skirmish fought near Marathon.[1]
As for the Greek theatrical tradition
Which represents that summer's expedition
5 Not as a mere reconnaissance in force
By three brigades of foot and one of horse
(Their left flank covered by some obsolete Light craft detached from the main Persian fleet)
But as a grandiose, ill-starred attempt
10 To conquer Greece—they treat it with contempt;
And only incidentally refute
Major Greek claims, by stressing what repute
The Persian monarch and the Persian nation
Won by this salutary demonstration:
15 Despite a strong defence and adverse weather
All arms combined magnificently together.

1945

To Juan at the Winter Solstice[2]

There is one story and one story only
That will prove worth your telling,
Whether as learned bard or gifted child;[3]
To it all lines or lesser gauds[4] belong
5 That startle with their shining
Such common stories as they stray into.

Is it of trees you tell, their months and virtues,[5]
Or strange beasts that beset you,

1. The Battle of Marathon (490 B.C.E.) was a decisive Greek victory over the Persians.
2. Graves's "grammar of poetic myth," The White Goddess (1948), finds the only theme for true poetry in the story of the life cycle of the Sun God, or Sun Hero, his marriage with the Goddess, and his inevitable death at her hands or by her command. The poet's son Juan was born on December 21, 1945, one day before the winter solstice, which (being the time when the sun gives least heat and light to the north) is in many religions the birthday of the Sun Hero.
3. The ancient Celtic bard Taliesin, as a "gifted child," outmatched twenty-four experienced court poets.
4. The larger beads placed between the decades of "aves" in a Roman Catholic rosary (i.e., every eleventh bead).
5. Graves cites, in addition to Taliesin's poem "The Battle of the Trees," an ancient Druidic "tree-

Of birds that croak at you the Triple will?[6]
10 Or of the Zodiac and how slow it turns
Below the Boreal Crown,[7]
Prison of all true kings that ever reigned?

Water to water, ark again to ark,
From woman back to woman:
15 So each new victim treads unfalteringly
The never altered circuit of his fate,
Bringing twelve peers[8] as witness
Both to his starry rise and starry fall.[9]

Or is it of the Virgin's silver beauty,
20 All fish below the thighs?
She in her left hand bears a leafy quince;[1]
When with her right she crooks a finger, smiling,
How may the King hold back?
Royally then he barters life for love.

25 Or of the undying snake from chaos hatched,
Whose coils contain the ocean,
Into whose chops with naked sword he springs,
Then in black water, tangled by the reeds,
Battles three days and nights,
30 To be spewed up beside her scalloped shore?[2]

Much snow is falling, winds roar hollowly,
The owl hoots from the elder,
Fear in your heart cries to the loving-cup:
Sorrow to sorrow as the sparks fly upward.
35 The log groans and confesses:[3]
There is one story and one story only.

Dwell on her graciousness, dwell on her smiling,
Do not forget what flowers
The great boar trampled down in ivy time.[4]
40 Her brow was creamy as the crested wave,
Her sea-grey eyes were wild[5]
But nothing promised that is not performed.

1945

calendar" that describes the natural and magic properties of different trees and associates each with a different month or season.

6. The Goddess sometimes speaks through such "prophetic" birds as the owl and eagle and has been called the Triple Goddess because of her threefold aspect as Goddess of the Underworld, Earth, and Sky.

7. "Corona Borealis, . . . which in Thracian-Libyan mythology carried to Bronze Age Britain, was the purgatory where Solar Heroes went after death" [Graves's note]. The twelve signs of the turning zodiac correspond to the twelve months.

8. Perhaps the twelve knights of King Arthur's round table, Christ's twelve apostles, or the twelve signs of the zodiac.

9. The king (or Solar Hero), reincarnated, reappears at the winter solstice floating in an ark on the water.

1. Two forms of the Goddess are Aphrodite, Greek goddess of love, whose emblem is the quince, and Rahab, the Hebraic sea goddess, who was depicted with a fish's tail.

2. The snake, Ophion, was created by the Goddess and mated with her. From their egg, the world was hatched by the sun's rays. The king (or Solar Hero) must kill the snake to win the Goddess, but in October the snake (perhaps reincarnated as the boar of line 39) must kill the king.

3. Cf. Job 5.7: "Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward." "The log is the Yule [or Christmas] log, burned at the year's end" [Graves's note].

4. Aphrodite's lover, Adonis, was killed by a boar.

5. Cf. Keats, "La Belle Dame sans Merci," line 16: "And her eyes were wild" (p. 917).

The White Goddess[6]

All saints revile her, and all sober men
Ruled by the God Apollo's golden mean[7]—
In scorn of which we sailed to find her
In distant regions likeliest to hold her
5 Whom we desired above all things to know,
Sister of the mirage and echo.

It was a virtue not to stay,
To go our headstrong and heroic way
Seeking her out at the volcano's head,
10 Among pack ice, or where the track had faded
Beyond the cavern of the seven sleepers:[8]
Whose broad high brow was white as any leper's,
Whose eyes were blue, with rowan-berry lips,
With hair curled honey-coloured to white hips.

15 Green sap of Spring in the young wood a-stir
Will celebrate the Mountain Mother,
And every song-bird shout awhile for her;
But we are gifted, even in November
Rawest of seasons, with so huge a sense
20 Of her nakedly worn magnificence
We forget cruelty and past betrayal,
Heedless of where the next bright bolt may fall.

1953

EDMUND BLUNDEN
1896–1974

Forefathers

Here they went with smock and crook,
  Toiled in the sun, lolled in the shade,
Here they mudded out the brook
  And here their hatchet cleared the glade:
5 Harvest-supper woke their wit,
Huntsman's moon their wooings lit.

From this church they led their brides,
  From this church themselves were led
Shoulder-high; on these waysides
10   Sat to take their beer and bread.

6. See note 2, p. 1402.
7. The middle way, moderation. Apollo's motto was "Nothing in Excess."
8. Cf. Donne, "The Good Morrow," line 4 (p. 293): "Or snorted we in the Seven Sleepers' den?"

Names are gone—what men they were
These their cottages declare.

Names are vanished, save the few
  In the old brown Bible scrawled;
15 These were men of pith and thew,[1]
  Whom the city never called;
Scarce could read or hold a quill,
Built the barn, the forge, the mill.

On the green they watched their sons
20 Playing till too dark to see,
As their fathers watched them once,
  As my father once watched me;
While the bat and beetle flew
On the warm air webbed with dew.

25 Unrecorded, unrenowned,
  Men from whom my ways begin,
Here I know you by your ground
  But I know you not within—
There is silence, there survives
30 Not a moment of your lives.

Like the bee that now is blown
  Honey-heavy on my hand,
From his toppling tansy[2]-throne
  In the green tempestuous land—
35 I'm in clover now, nor know
Who made honey long ago.

1922

1916 seen from 1921

Tired with dull grief, grown old before my day,
I sit in solitude and only hear
Long silent laughters, murmurings of dismay,
The lost intensities of hope and fear;
5 In those old marshes yet the rifles lie,
On the thin breastwork flutter the grey rags,
The very books I read are there—and I
Dead as the men I loved, wait while life drags

Its wounded length from those sad streets of war
10 Into green places here, that were my own;
But now what once was mine is mine no more,
I seek such neighbours here and I find none.

1. Strong muscle. Of pith: i.e., forcible and terse. 2. Tall, yellow-flowered plant.

With such strong gentleness and tireless will
Those ruined houses seared themselves in me,
15 Passionate I look for their dumb story still,
And the charred stub outspeaks the living tree.

I rise up at the singing of a bird
And scarcely knowing slink along the lane,
I dare not give a soul a look or word
20 Where all have homes and none's at home in vain:
Deep red the rose burned in the grim redoubt,[3]
The self-sown wheat around was like a flood,
In the hot path the lizard lolled time out,
The saints in broken shrines were bright as blood.

25 Sweet Mary's shrine between the sycamores!
There we would go, my friend of friends and I,
And snatch long moments from the grudging wars,
Whose dark made light intense to see them by.
Shrewd bit the morning fog, the whining shots
30 Spun from the wrangling wire;[4] then in warm swoon
The sun hushed all but the cool orchard plots,
We crept in the tall grass and slept till noon.

1922 1930

LOUISE BOGAN

1897–1970

Medusa[1]

I had come to the house, in a cave of trees,
Facing a sheer sky.
Everything moved,—a bell hung ready to strike,
Sun and reflection wheeled by.

5 When the bare eyes were before me
And the hissing hair,
Held up at a window, seen through a door.
The stiff bald eyes, the serpents on the forehead
Formed in the air.

10 This is a dead scene forever now.
Nothing will ever stir.
The end will never brighten it more than this,
Nor the rain blur.

3. Earthwork defensive position enclosed on all sides.
4. Barbed wire.
1. One of the Gorgons, Greek mythological sisters with monstrous faces and snakes for hair, the sight of whom was so terrible it turned people to stone. Perseus killed Medusa by cutting off her head, which retained the power to petrify (in both senses) its viewers.

The water will always fall, and will not fall,
15 And the tipped bell make no sound.
The grass will always be growing for hay
Deep on the ground.

And I shall stand here like a shadow
Under the great balanced day,
20 My eyes on the yellow dust, that was lifting in the wind,
And does not drift away.

1923

Juan's Song

When beauty breaks and falls asunder
I feel no grief for it, but wonder.
When love, like a frail shell, lies broken,
I keep no chip of it for token.
5 I never had a man for friend
Who did not know that love must end.
I never had a girl for lover
Who could discern when love was over.
What the wise doubt, the fool believes—
10 Who is it, then, that love deceives?

1923

Man Alone

It is yourself you seek
In a long rage,
Scanning through light and darkness
Mirrors, the page,

5 Where should reflected be
Those eyes and that thick hair,
That passionate look, that laughter.
You should appear

Within the book, or doubled,
10 Freed, in the silvered glass;
Into all other bodies
Yourself should pass.

The glass does not dissolve;
Like walls the mirrors stand;
15 The printed page gives back
Words by another hand.

And your infatuate eye
Meets not itself below:
Strangers lie in your arms
20 As I lie now.

1937

Roman Fountain

Up from the bronze, I saw
Water without a flaw
Rush to its rest in air,
Reach to its rest, and fall.

5 Bronze of the blackest shade,
An element man-made,
Shaping upright the bare
Clear gouts of water in air.

O, as with arm and hammer,
10 Still it is good to strive
To beat out the image whole,
To echo the shout and stammer
When full-gushed waters, alive,
Strike on the fountain's bowl
15 After the air of summer.

1937

Song for the Last Act

Now that I have your face by heart, I look
Less at its features than its darkening frame
Where quince and melon, yellow as young flame,
Lie with quilled dahlias and the shepherd's crook.
5 Beyond, a garden. There, in insolent ease
The lead and marble figures watch the show
Of yet another summer loath to go
Although the scythes hang in the apple trees.

Now that I have your face by heart, I look.

10 Now that I have your voice by heart, I read
In the black chords upon a dulling page
Music that is not meant for music's cage,
Whose emblems mix with words that shake and bleed.
The staves[2] are shuttled over with a stark

2. Horizontal lines on which music is written.

15 Unprinted silence. In a double dream
I must spell out the storm, the running stream.
The beat's too swift. The notes shift in the dark.

Now that I have your voice by heart, I read.

Now that I have your heart by heart, I see
20 The wharves with their great ships and architraves;[3]
The rigging and the cargo and the slaves
On a strange beach under a broken sky.
O not departure, but a voyage done!
The bales stand on the stone; the anchor weeps
25 Its red rust downward, and the long vine creeps
Beside the salt herb, in the lengthening sun.

Now that I have your heart by heart, I see.

1954

Night

The cold remote islands
And the blue estuaries
Where what breathes, breathes
The restless wind of the inlets,
5 And what drinks, drinks
The incoming tide;

Where shell and weed
Wait upon the salt wash of the sea,
And the clear nights of stars
10 Swing their lights westward
To set behind the land;

Where the pulse clinging to the rocks
Renews itself forever;
Where, again on cloudless nights,
15 The water reflects
The firmament's partial setting;

—O remember
In your narrowing dark hours
That more things move
20 Than blood in the heart.

1968

3. Beams on columns.

HART CRANE
1899–1932

My Grandmother's Love Letters

There are no stars to-night
But those of memory.
Yet how much room for memory there is
In the loose girdle of soft rain.

5 There is even room enough
For the letters of my mother's mother,
Elizabeth,
That have been pressed so long
Into a corner of the roof
10 That they are brown and soft,
And liable to melt as snow.

Over the greatness of such space
Steps must be gentle.
It is all hung by an invisible white hair.
15 It trembles as birch limbs webbing the air.

And I ask myself:

"Are your fingers long enough to play
Old keys that are but echoes:
Is the silence strong enough
20 To carry back the music to its source
And back to you again
As though to her?"
Yet I would lead my grandmother by the hand
Through much of what she would not understand;
25 And so I stumble. And the rain continues on the roof
With such a sound of gently pitying laughter.

1926

At Melville's[1] Tomb

Often beneath the wave, wide from this ledge
The dice[2] of drowned men's bones he saw bequeath
An embassy. Their numbers as he watched,
Beat on the dusty shore and were obscured.

5 And wrecks passed without sound of bells,
The calyx[3] of death's bounty giving back

1. The American poet and novelist Herman Melville (1819–1891; see pp. 1054–57), best-known for his works dealing with the sea.
2. Small, broken pieces. "Dice as a symbol of chance and circumstance is also implied" [Crane's note to editor Harriet Monroe].
3. Literally, the outer whorl of a flower, formed by modified leaves. "This calyx refers in a double ironic sense both to a cornucopia (cone-shaped receptacle) and the vortex made by a sinking ves-

A scattered chapter, livid hieroglyph,
The portent wound in corridors of shells.

Then in the circuit calm of one vast coil,
10 Its lashings charmed and malice reconciled,
Frosted eyes there were that lifted altars;
And silent answers crept across the stars.

Compass, quadrant and sextant[4] contrive
No farther tides . . . High in the azure steeps
15 Monody[5] shall not wake the mariner.
This fabulous shadow only the sea keeps.

1926

Voyages

1

Above the fresh ruffles of the surf
Bright striped urchins flay each other with sand.
They have contrived a conquest for shell shucks,
And their fingers crumble fragments of baked weed
5 Gaily digging and scattering.

And in answer to their treble interjections
The sun beats lightning on the waves,
The waves fold thunder on the sand;
And could they hear me I would tell them:

10 O brilliant kids, frisk with your dog,
Fondle your shells and sticks, bleached
By time and the elements; but there is a line
You must not cross nor ever trust beyond it
Spry cordage° of your bodies to caresses ropes in ship's rigging
15 Too lichen-faithful from too wide a breast.
The bottom of the sea is cruel.

2

—And yet this great wink of eternity,
Of rimless floods, unfettered leewardings,
Samite[6] sheeted and processioned where
Her undinal[7] vast belly moonward bends,
5 Laughing the wrapt inflections of our love;

sel" [Crane's note to Monroe].
4. Instruments used in navigation: the compass determines geographic directions; the quadrant and sextant measure angles and reckon altitudes. Crane's note to Monroe suggests that they "have inadvertently so extended the concepts of the entity they were invented to measure . . . that they may metaphorically be said to have extended the original boundaries of the entity measured."
5. Elegy or dirge sung by one person.
6. A rich, silky fabric interwoven with gold or silver. Leewardings: ship's movements away from the wind.
7. The adjective suggests both waves and undines, or water spirits.

Take this Sea, whose diapason° knells — burst of sound
On scrolls of silver snowy sentences,
The sceptered terror of whose sessions rends
As her demeanors motion well or ill.
10 All but the pieties of lovers' hands.

And onward, as bells off San Salvador[8]
Salute the crocus lusters of the stars,
In these poinsettia[9] meadows of her tides—
Adagios of islands, O my Prodigal,[1]
15 Complete the dark confessions her veins spell.

Mark how her turning shoulders wind the hours,
And hasten while her penniless rich palms
Pass superscription of bent foam and wave—
Hasten, while they are true—sleep, death, desire,
20 Close round one instant in one floating flower.

Bind us in time, O Seasons clear, and awe.
O minstrel galleons of Carib[2] fire,
Bequeath us to no earthly shore until
Is answered in the vortex of our grave
25 The seal's wide spindrift gaze toward paradise.

3

Infinite consanguinity° it bears— — blood relationship
This tendered theme of you that light
Retrieves from sea plains where the sky
Resigns a breast that every wave enthrones;
5 While ribboned water lanes I wind
Are laved and scattered with no stroke
Wide from your side, whereto this hour
The sea lifts, also, reliquary hands.[3]

And so, admitted through black swollen gates
10 That must arrest all distance otherwise,
Past whirling pillars and lithe pediments,
Light wrestling there incessantly with light,
Star kissing star through wave on wave unto
Your body rocking!
15 and where death, if shed,
Presumes no carnage, but this single change,
Upon the steep floor flung from dawn to dawn
The silken skilled transmemberment[4] of song;

Permit me voyage, love, into your hands . . .

8. An island of the Bahamas group, Columbus's first landfall on the first voyage.
9. Showy plant native to Central America.
1. Wasteful, lavish one; cf. the Prodigal Son in Luke 15. Adagios: divisions of a composition that are musically slow and graceful.
2. Some of the West Indian islands, or the sea surrounding them.
3. I.e., hands holding sacred relics.
4. Exchange or transformation of parts.

4

Whose counted smile of hours and days, suppose
I know as spectrum of the sea and pledge
Vastly now parting gulf on gulf of wings
Whose circles bridge, I know, (from palms to the severe
5 Chilled albatross's[5] white immutability)
No stream of greater love advancing now
Than, singing, this mortality alone
Through clay aflow immortally to you.

All fragrance irrefragibly,[6] and claim
10 Madly meeting logically in this hour
And region that is ours to wreathe again,
Portending eyes and lips and making told
The chancel[7] port and portion of our June—

Shall they not stem and close in our own steps
15 Bright staves of flowers and quills to-day as I Must first be lost in fatal tides to tell?

In signature of the incarnate word
The harbor shoulders to resign in mingling
Mutual blood, transpiring as foreknown
20 And widening noon within your breast for gathering
All bright insinuations that my years have caught
For islands where must lead inviolably
Blue latitudes and levels of your eyes—

In this expectant, still exclaim receive 25 The secret oar and petals of all love.

5

Meticulous, past midnight in clear rime,° frost
Infrangible° and lonely, smooth as though cast inviolable
Together in one merciless white blade—
The bay estuaries fleck the hard sky limits.

5 —As if too brittle or too clear to touch!
The cables of our sleep so swiftly filed,
Already hang, shred ends from remembered stars.
One frozen trackless smile . . . What words
Can strangle this deaf moonlight? For we

10 Are overtaken. Now no cry, no sword
Can fasten or deflect this tidal wedge,
Slow tyranny of moonlight, moonlight loved
And changed . . . "There's

5. That of a large seabird capable of long, sustained flights away from land, believed to sleep in the air without moving its wings.

6. Undeniably; unalterably.

7. The part of a church that contains the altar and seats for the clergy and choir.

Nothing like this in the world," you say,
15 Knowing I cannot touch your hand and look
Too, into that godless cleft of sky
Where nothing turns but dead sands flashing.

"—And never to quite understand!" No,
In all the argosy[8] of your bright hair I dreamed 20 Nothing so flagless as this piracy.

But now
Draw in your head, alone and too tall here.
Your eyes already in the slant of drifting foam;
Your breath sealed by the ghosts I do not know:
25 Draw in your head and sleep the long way home.

6

Where icy and bright dungeons lift
Of swimmers their lost morning eyes,
And ocean rivers, churning, shift
Green borders under stranger skies,

5 Steadily as a shell secretes
Its beating leagues of monotone,
Or as many waters trough the sun's
Red kelson[9] past the cape's wet stone;

O rivers mingling toward the sky
10 And harbor of the phoenix'[1] breast—
My eyes pressed black against the prow,
—Thy derelict and blinded guest

Waiting, afire, what name, unspoke,
I cannot claim: let thy waves rear
15 More savage than the death of kings,
Some splintered garland for the seer.

Beyond siroccos[2] harvesting
The solstice thunders, crept away,
Like a cliff swinging or a sail
20 Flung into April's inmost day—

Creation's blithe and petaled word
To the lounged goddess when she rose
Conceding dialogue with eyes
That smile unsearchable repose—

8. A rich supply; also, a large ship or a fleet of ships.
9. A beam laid parallel to the keel of a ship to hold together the flooring and the keel.
1. A mythological bird said to end its very long life by burning itself; from its ashes arises a new phoenix. The phoenix is also a symbol of the Resurrection.
2. Hot, moist winds, usually those from North African deserts.

25 Still fervid covenant, Belle Isle,[3]
—Unfolded floating dais before
Which rainbows twine continual hair—
Belle Isle, white echo of the oar!

The imaged Word, it is, that holds
30 Hushed willows anchored in its glow.
It is the unbetrayable reply
Whose accent no farewell can know.

1926

From The Bridge

Proem: To Brooklyn Bridge

How many dawns, chill from his rippling rest
The seagull's wings shall dip and pivot him,
Shedding white rings of tumult, building high
Over the chained bay waters Liberty—

5 Then, with inviolate curve, forsake our eyes
As apparitional as sails that cross
Some page of figures to be filed away;
—Till elevators drop us from our day . . .

I think of cinemas, panoramic sleights
10 With multitudes bent toward some flashing scene
Never disclosed, but hastened to again,
Foretold to other eyes on the same screen;

And Thee,[4] across the harbor, silver-paced
As though the sun took step of thee, yet left
15 Some motion ever unspent in thy stride—
Implicitly thy freedom staying thee!

Out of some subway scuttle, cell or loft
A bedlamite° speeds to thy parapets, madman
Tilting there momently, shrill shirt ballooning,
20 A jest falls from the speechless caravan.

Down Wall,[5] from girder into street noon leaks,
A rip-tooth of the sky's acetylene,
All afternoon the cloud-flown derricks turn . . .
Thy cables breathe the North Atlantic still.

25 And obscure as that heaven of the Jews,[6]
Thy guerdon° . . . Accolade thou dost bestow reward

3. Tiny island near Newfoundland that is the first land seen by boats coming from Europe.
4. I.e., Brooklyn Bridge.
5. Wall Street is less than half a mile south of the bridge's Manhattan end.
6. I.e., heaven is a vaguer notion in the Jewish tradition than in the Christian.

Of anonymity time cannot raise:
Vibrant reprieve and pardon thou dost show.

O harp and altar, of the fury fused,
30 (How could mere toil align thy choiring strings!)[7]
Terrific threshold of the prophet's pledge,
Prayer of pariah, and the lover's cry—

Again the traffic lights that skim thy swift
Unfractioned idiom, immaculate sigh of stars,
35 Beading thy path—condense eternity:
And we have seen night lifted in thine arms.

Under thy shadow by the piers I waited;
Only in darkness is thy shadow clear.
The City's fiery parcels all undone,
40 Already snow submerges an iron year . . .

O Sleepless as the river under thee,
Vaulting the sea, the prairies' dreaming sod,
Unto us lowliest sometime sweep, descend
And of the curveship lend a myth to God.

1930

To Emily Dickinson[8]

You who desired so much—in vain to ask—
Yet fed your hunger like an endless task,
Dared dignify the labor, bless the quest—
Achieved that stillness ultimately best,

5 Being, of all, least sought for: Emily, hear!
O sweet, dead Silencer, most suddenly clear
When singing that Eternity possessed
And plundered momently in every breast;

—Truly no flower yet withers in your hand,
10 The harvest you descried and understand
Needs more than wit to gather, love to bind.
Some reconcilement of remotest mind—

Leaves Ormus rubyless, and Ophir chill.[9]
Else tears heap all within one clay-cold hill.

1933

7. The suspension bridge has cables formed from parallel steel wires that were spun in place.
8. American poet (1830–1886; see pp. 1110–27).
9. Ormus (or Hormuz), ancient city on the Persian Gulf; in 1 Kings 10.11, Solomon receives rich gifts, including gold and precious stones, from a region called Ophir.

ALLEN TATE
1899–1979

Ode to the Confederate Dead

Row after row with strict impunity
The headstones yield their names to the element,
The wind whirrs without recollection;
In the riven troughs the splayed leaves
5 Pile up, of nature the casual sacrament
To the seasonal eternity of death;
Then driven by the fierce scrutiny
Of heaven to their election in the vast breath,
They sough° the rumor of mortality. moan

10 Autumn is desolation in the plot
Of a thousand acres where these memories grow
From the inexhaustible bodies that are not Dead, but feed the grass row after rich row.
Think of the autumns that have come and gone!
15 Ambitious November with the humors of the year,
With a particular zeal for every slab,
Staining the uncomfortable angels that rot
On the slabs, a wing chipped here, an arm there:
The brute curiosity of an angel's stare
20 Turns you, like them, to stone,
Transforms the heaving air
Till plunged to a heavier world below
You shift your sea-space blindly
Heaving, turning like the blind crab.

25 Dazed by the wind, only the wind
The leaves flying, plunge

You know who have waited by the wall
The twilight certainty of an animal,
Those midnight restitutions of the blood
30 You know—the immitigable[1] pines, the smoky frieze
Of the sky, the sudden call: you know the rage,
The cold pool left by the mounting flood,
Of muted Zeno and Parmenides.[2]
You who have waited for the angry resolution
35 Of those desires that should be yours tomorrow,
You know the unimportant shrift of death
And praise the vision
And praise the arrogant circumstance
Of those who fall
40 Rank upon rank, hurried beyond decision—
Here by the sagging gate, stopped by the wall.

1. Unable to become less harsh.
2. Greek philosophers (fifth century B.C.E.) of the Eleatic school. They held that what is various and changeable, all "development," is illusory, for reality is one and changeless.

Seeing, seeing only the leaves
Flying, plunge and expire

Turn your eyes to the immoderate past,
45 Turn to the inscrutable infantry rising
Demons out of the earth—they will not last.
Stonewall, Stonewall, and the sunken fields of hemp,
Shiloh, Antietam, Malvern Hill, Bull Run.[3]
Lost in that orient of the thick and fast
50 You will curse the setting sun.

Cursing only the leaves crying
Like an old man in a storm

You hear the shout, the crazy hemlocks point
With troubled fingers to the silence which 55 Smothers you, a mummy, in time.

The hound bitch
Toothless and dying, in a musty cellar
Hears the wind only.

Now that the salt of their blood
60 Stiffens the saltier oblivion of the sea,
Seals the malignant purity of the flood,
What shall we who count our days and bow
Our heads with a commemorial woe
In the ribboned coats of grim felicity,
65 What shall we say of the bones, unclean,
Whose verdurous[4] anonymity will grow?

The ragged arms, the ragged heads and eyes
Lost in these acres of the insane green?
The gray lean spiders come, they come and go;
70 In a tangle of willows without light
The singular screech-owl's tight
Invisible lyric seeds the mind
With the furious murmur of their chivalry.

We shall say only the leaves
75 Flying, plunge and expire

We shall say only the leaves whispering
In the improbable mist of nightfall
That flies on multiple wing:
Night is the beginning and the end
80 And in between the ends of distraction
Waits mute speculation, the patient curse
That stones the eyes, or like the jaguar leaps
For his own image in a jungle pool, his victim.

3. Names of important Civil War battles. Stonewall: Thomas "Stonewall" Jackson (1824–1863), Confederate general, earned his nickname at the first battle of Bull Run (1861); fatally wounded by his men at Chancellorsville.

4. Green (i.e., vigorous) as growing vegetation.

What shall we say who have knowledge
85 Carried to the heart? Shall we take the act
To the grave? Shall we, more hopeful, set up the grave
In the house? The ravenous grave?

Leave now
The shut gate and the decomposing wall:
90 The gentle serpent, green in the mulberry bush,
Riots with his tongue through the hush—
Sentinel of the grave who counts us all!

1928

The Swimmers

SCENE: Montgomery County,
Kentucky, July 1911

Kentucky water, clear springs: a boy fleeing
To water under the dry Kentucky sun,
His four little friends in tandem with him, seeing

Long shadows of grapevine wriggle and run
5 Over the green swirl; mullein under the ear
Soft as Nausicaä's[5] palm; sullen fun

Savage as childhood's thin harmonious tear:
O fountain, bosom source undying-dead
Replenish me the spring of love and fear

10 And give me back the eye that looked and fled
When a thrush idling in the tulip tree
Unwound the cold dream of the copperhead.

—Along the creek the road was winding; we Felt the quicksilver sky. I see again
15 The shrill companions of that odyssey:

Bill Eaton, Charlie Watson, "Nigger" Layne
The doctor's son, Harry Duèsler who played
The flute; and Tate, with water on the brain.

Dog-days:[6] the dusty leaves where rain delayed
20 Hung low on poison-oak and scuppernong,[7]
And we were following the active shade

Of water, that bells and bickers all night long.
"No more'n a mile," Layne said. All five stood still.
Listening, I heard what seemed at first a song;

5. The king's daughter who welcomes Odysseus in book 6 of the Odyssey. Mullein: wooly-leaved herb.
6. The hottest days of the year.
7. Kind of grapevine.

25 Peering, I heard the hooves come down the hill.
The posse passed, twelve horse; the leader's face
Was worn as limestone on an ancient sill.

Then, as sleepwalkers shift from a hard place
In bed, and rising to keep a formal pledge
30 Descend a ladder into empty space,

We scuttled down the bank below a ledge
And marched stiff-legged in our common fright
Along a hog-track by the riffle's[8] edge:

Into a world where sound shaded the sight
35 Dropped the dull hooves again; the horsemen came Again, all but the leader: it was night

Momently and I feared: eleven same
Jesus-Christers unmembered and unmade,
Whose Corpse had died again in dirty shame.

40 The bank then levelling in a speckled glade,
We stopped to breathe above the swimming-hole;
I gazed at its reticulated° shade netlike

Recoiling in blue fear, and felt it roll
Over my ears and eyes and lift my hair
45 Like seaweed tossing on a sunk atoll.

I rose again. Borne on the copper air
A distant voice green as a funeral wreath
Against a grave: "That dead nigger there."

The melancholy sheriff slouched beneath
50 A giant sycamore; shaking his head
He plucked a sassafras twig and picked his teeth:

"We come too late." He spoke to the tired dead
Whose ragged shirt soaked up the viscous flow
Of blood in which It lay discomfited.

55 A butting horse-fly gave one ear a blow
And glanced off, as the sheriff kicked the rope
Loose from the neck and hooked it with his toe

Away from the blood.—I looked back down the slope:
The friends were gone that I had hoped to greet.—
60 A single horseman came at a slow lope

And pulled up at the hanged man's horny feet;
The sheriff noosed the feet, the other end
The stranger tied to his pommel in a neat

8. Shallow part of a stream.

Slip-knot. I saw the Negro's body bend
65 And straighten, as a fish-line cast transverse
Yields to the current that it must subtend.

The sheriff's Goddamn was a murmured curse
Not for the dead but for the blinding dust
That boxed the cortège[9] in a cloudy hearse

70 And dragged it towards our town. I knew I must Not stay till twilight in that silent road;
Sliding my bare feet into the warm crust,

I hopped the stonecrop like a panting toad
Mouth open, following the heaving cloud
75 That floated to the court-house square its load

Of limber corpse that took the sun for shroud.
There were three figures in the dying sun
Whose light were company where three was crowd.

My breath crackled the dead air like a shotgun
80 As, sheriff and the stranger disappearing,
The faceless head lay still. I could not run

Or walk, but stood. Alone in the public clearing
This private thing was owned by all the town,
Though never claimed by us within my hearing.

1953

BASIL BUNTING
1900–1985

From Briggflatts[1]

From I

Brag, sweet tenor bull, descant on Rawthey's madrigal,[2]
each pebble its part for the fells'[3] late spring.
5 Dance tiptoe, bull,
black against may.[4]
Ridiculous and lovely chase hurdling shadows morning into noon.

9. Funeral procession.
1. In an interview, Bunting remarked, "My autobiography is Briggflatts." His poem's title is the name of a small village, straddling the river Rawthey, in the Lake District of northern England.
2. Part-song for three or more voices. Descant: sing the upper part of a part-song.
3. Hills or stretches of high moorland.
4. Flowers, pink or white, of the hawthorn tree.

10 May on the bull's hide and through the dale furrows fill with may,
paving the slowworm's[5] way.

A mason times his mallet
15 to a lark's twitter, listening while the marble rests, lays his rule
at a letter's edge,
fingertips checking,
20 till the stone spells a name naming none,
a man abolished.
Painful lark, labouring to rise!
the solemn mallet says:
25 In the grave's slot
he lies. We rot.

Decay thrusts the blade,
Wheat stands in excrement trembling. Rawthey trembles.
30 Tongue stumbles, ears err
for fear of spring.
Rub the stone with sand,
wet sandstone rending roughness away. Fingers
35 ache on the rubbing stone.
The mason says: Rocks happen by chance.
No one here bolts the door,
love is so sore.

40 Stone smooth as skin,
cold as the dead they load on a low lorry° by night. truck
The moon sits on the fell but it will rain.
45 Under sacks on the stone
two children lie,
hear the horse stale,° urinate
the mason whistle,
harness mutter to shaft,
50 felloe° to axle squeak, exterior rim of a wheel
rut thud the rim,
crushed grit.

Stocking to stocking, jersey° to jersey, sweater
head to a hard arm,
55 they kiss under the rain,
bruised by their marble bed.

5. Or blind worm, a small, burrowing, limbless lizard.

In Garsdale, dawn;
at Hawes, tea from the can.[6]
Rain stops, sacks
60 steam in the sun, they sit up.
Copper-wire moustache,
sea-reflecting eyes and Baltic plainsong speech declare: By such rocks
65 men killed Bloodaxe.[7]

Fierce blood throbs in his tongue,
lean words.
Skulls cropped for steel caps
huddle round Stainmore.[8] 70 Their becks ring on limestone, whisper to peat.[9]
The clogged cart pushes the horse downhill.
In such soft air
they trudge and sing,
75 laying the tune frankly on the air.
All sounds fall still,
fellside bleat,
hide-and-seek peewit.[1]

Her pulse their pace,
80 palm countering palm,
till a trench is filled,
stone white as cheese
jeers at the dale.
Knotty wood, hard to rive,° split
85 smoulders to ash;
smell of October apples.
The road again,
at a trot.
Wetter, warmed, they watch
90 the mason meditate on name and date.

Rain rinses the road,
the bull streams and laments.
Sour rye porridge from the hob[2]
95 with cream and black tea, meat, crust and crumb.
Her parents in bed
the children dry their clothes.
He has untied the tape

6. Metal container with handle and cover (not, i.e., a modern sealed can). Garsdale and Hawes are small country towns in northern England.
7. Eric Bloodaxe, ruler of the Viking kingdom of Northumbria, was overthrown and killed by the English in 954. "Baltic plainsong" refers to the Vikings' rough yet rhythmic speech.
8. Desolate forest in the north of England. Steel caps: helmets.
9. "Beck" is a dialect word for a mattock, an agricultural instrument; it would "ring" on hard limestone, but "whisper" cutting into soft "peat," or decayed vegetable tissue in the earth.
1. Bird noted for its shrill, wailing cry.
2. Shelf in a fireplace, where a kettle can be kept warm.

100 of her striped flannel drawers before the range. Naked on the pricked rag mat[3]
his fingers comb
thatch of his manhood's home.

105 Gentle generous voices weave over bare night
words to confirm and delight
till bird dawn.
Rainwater from the butt
110 she fetches and flannel to wash him inch by inch,
kissing the pebbles.
Shining slowworm part of the marvel.
The mason stirs:
115 Words!
Pens are too light.
Take a chisel to write.

Every birth a crime,
every sentence life.
120 Wiped of mould and mites
would the ball run true?
No hope of going back.
Hounds falter and stray,
Shame deflects the pen.
125 Love murdered neither bleeds nor stifles
but jogs the draftsman's elbow.
what can he, changed, tell her, changed, perhaps dead?
Delight dwindles. Blame
130 stays the same.

Brief words are hard to find,
shapes to carve and discard:
Bloodaxe, king of York,
king of Dublin, king of Orkney.[4]
135 Take no notice of tears;
letter the stone to stand over love laid aside lest insufferable happiness impede flight to Stainmore, 140 to trace
lark, mallet, becks, flocks
and axe knocks.

Dung will not soil the slowworm's
145 mosaic. Breathless lark

3. Rug made from strips of rag hooked through a sacking base.
4. Islands off the northeast coast of Scotland; "king" here is in the sense of an early tribal chieftain.

drops to nest in sodden trash;
Rawthey truculent, dingy.
Drudge at the mallet, the may is down, fog on fells. Guilty of spring 150 and spring's ending amputated years ache after the bull is beef, love a convenience.
It is easier to die than to remember.
Name and date
155 split in soft slate
a few months obliterate.

* * *

1965 1966

LAURA (RIDING) JACKSON
1901–1991

The Wind Suffers

The wind suffers of blowing,
The sea suffers of water,
And fire suffers of burning,
And I of a living name.

5 As stone suffers of stoniness,
As light of its shiningness,
As birds of their wingedness,
So I of my whoness.

And what the cure of all this?
10 What the not and not suffering?
What the better and later of this?
What the more me of me?

How for the pain-world to be
More world and no pain?
15 How for the old rain to fall
More wet and more dry?

How for the wilful blood to run
More salt-red and sweet-white?
And how for me in my actualness
20 To more shriek and more smile?

By no other miracles,
By the same knowing poison,
By an improved anguish,
By my further dying.

1930

Ding-Donging

With old hours all belfry heads
Are filled, as with thoughts.
With old hours ring the new hours
Between their bells.
5 And this hour-long ding-donging
So much employs the hour-long silences
That bells hang thinking when not striking,
When striking think of nothing.

Chimes of forgotten hours
10 More and more are played
While bells stare into space,
And more and more space wears
A look of having heard
But hearing not:
15 Forgotten hours chime louder
In the meantime, as if always,
And spread ding-donging back
More and more to yesterdays.

1930

STERLING A. BROWN
1901–1989

Slim in Atlanta[1]

Down in Atlanta,
De whitefolks got laws
For to keep all de niggers
From laughin' outdoors.

5 Hope to Gawd I may die
If I ain't speakin' truth
Make de niggers do deir laughin'
In a telefoam booth.

Slim Greer hit de town
10 An' de rebs[2] got him told,—
"Dontcha laugh on de street,
If you want to die old."

1. One of a series of poems about the fictional character Slim Greer.
2. Abbreviation for rebels, or members of the Confederacy in the Civil War; here, a general term for southerners.

Den dey showed him de booth,
An' a hundred shines° black people
15 In front of it, waitin'
In double lines.

Slim thought his sides
Would bust in two,
Yelled, "Lookout, everybody,
20 I'm coming through!"

Pulled de other man out,
An' bust in de box,
An' laughed four hours
By de Georgia clocks.

25 Den he peeked through de door,
An' what did he see?
Three hundred niggers there
In misery.—

Some holdin' deir sides,
30 Some holdin' deir jaws,
To keep from breakin'
De Georgia laws.

An' Slim gave a holler,
An' started again;
35 An' from three hundred throats
Come a moan of pain.

An' everytime Slim
Saw what was outside,
Got to whoopin' again
40 Till he nearly died.

An' while de poor critters
Was waitin' deir chance,
Slim laughed till dey sent
Fo' de ambulance.

45 De state paid de railroad
To take him away;
Den, things was as usural
In Atlanta, Gee A.[3]

1932

3. GA; abbreviation for the state of Georgia.

Chillen Get Shoes

Hush little Lily,
  Don't you cry;
You'll get your silver slippers
  Bye and bye.[4]

5 Moll wears silver slippers
  With red heels,
And men come to see her
  In automobiles.

Lily walks wretched,
10   Dragging her doll,
Worshipping stealthily
  Good-time Moll;

Envying bitterly
  Moll's fine clothes,
15 And her plump legs clad
  In openwork hose.

Don't worry, Lily,
  Don't you cry;
You'll be like Moll, too,
20   Bye and bye.

1932

Bitter Fruit of the Tree

They said to my grandmother: "Please do not be bitter,"
When they sold her first-born and let the second die,
When they drove her husband till he took to the swamplands,
And brought him home bloody and beaten at last.
5 They told her, "It is better you should not be bitter,
Some must work and suffer so that we, who must, can live,
Forgiving is noble, you must not be heathen bitter;
These are your orders: you are not to be bitter."
And they left her shack for their porticoed house.

10 They said to my father: "Please do not be bitter,"
When he ploughed and planted a crop not his,
When he weatherstripped a house that he could not enter,
And stored away a harvest he could not enjoy.
They answered his questions: "It does not concern you,

4. Cf. the lullaby "Hush Little Baby."

15 It is not for you to know, it is past your understanding,[5]
All you need know is: you must not be bitter."

1939 1980

Conjured

"She done put huh little hands
On the back uh my head;
I cain't git away from her
Twill I'm dead.

5 "She done laid her little body
Beneaf my breast,
And I won't never
Git no rest.

"She done been in my arms
10 Twill the break of day Won't never Git away. . . .

"She done put her little shoes
Underneaf my bed
15 Never git away from her
Twill I'm dead.

"Won't want to leave her Then," he said.
"Oh, baby, gotta lay
20 So long Alone. . . ."

1930s 1980

LANGSTON HUGHES
1902–1967

The Weary Blues

Droning a drowsy syncopated tune,
Rocking back and forth to a mellow croon,
I heard a Negro play.
Down on Lenox Avenue[1] the other night

5. Ironic echo of Phillipians 4, esp. 4.7: "And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus."

1. A main thoroughfare in New York City, in the heart of Harlem; now called Malcolm X Blvd.

5 By the pale dull pallor of an old gas light
He did a lazy sway. . . .
He did a lazy sway. . . .
To the tune o' those Weary Blues.
With his ebony hands on each ivory key
10 He made that poor piano moan with melody.
O Blues!
Swaying to and fro on his rickety stool
He played that sad raggy tune like a musical fool.
Sweet Blues!
15 Coming from a black man's soul.
O Blues!
In a deep song voice with a melancholy tone
I heard that Negro sing, that old piano moan—
"Ain't got nobody in all this world,
20 Ain't got nobody but ma self.
I's gwine to quit ma frownin'
And put ma troubles on the shelf."
Thump, thump, thump, went his foot on the floor.
He played a few chords then he sang some more—

25 "I got the Weary Blues
And I can't be satisfied.
Got the Weary Blues
And can't be satisfied—
I ain't happy no mo'
30 And I wish that I had died."
And far into the night he crooned that tune.
The stars went out and so did the moon.
The singer stopped playing and went to bed
While the Weary Blues echoed through his head.
35 He slept like a rock or a man that's dead.

1926

The Negro Speaks of Rivers

(To W.E.B. Du Bois)[2]

I've known rivers:
I've known rivers ancient as the world and older than the flow of human blood in human veins.
My soul has grown deep like the rivers.

I bathed in the Euphrates when dawns were young.
5 I built my hut near the Congo and it lulled me to sleep.
I looked upon the Nile and raised the pyramids above it.
I heard the singing of the Mississippi when Abe Lincoln went down to New Orleans,[3] and I've seen its muddy bosom turn all golden in the sunset.

2. American historian, educator, and activist (1868–1963); he was one of the founders of the NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People), and in later life became increasingly interested in Pan-Africanism.
3. President Lincoln's decision to end slavery was partly inspired by this trip.

I've known rivers:
Ancient, dusky rivers.

10 My soul has grown deep like the rivers.

1926

Dream Variations

To fling my arms wide
In some place of the sun,
To whirl and to dance
Till the white day is done.
5 Then rest at cool evening
Beneath a tall tree
While night comes on gently,
Dark like me—
That is my dream!

10 To fling my arms wide
In the face of the sun,
Dance! Whirl! Whirl!
Till the quick day is done.
Rest at pale evening . . .
15 A tall, slim tree . . .
Night coming tenderly
Black like me.

1926

Cross

My old man's a white old man
And my old mother's black.
If ever I cursed my white old man
I take my curses back.

5 If ever I cursed my black old mother
And wished she were in hell,
I'm sorry for that evil wish
And now I wish her well.

My old man died in a fine big house.
10 My ma died in a shack.
I wonder where I'm gonna die,
Being neither white nor black?

1926

Bad Luck Card

Cause you don't love me
Is awful, awful hard.
Gypsy done showed me
My bad luck card.

5 There ain't no good left
In this world for me.
Gypsy done tole me—
Unlucky as can be.

I don't know what
10 Po' weary me can do.
Gypsy says I'd kill my self
If I was you.

1927

Song for a Dark Girl

Way Down South in Dixie
(Break the heart of me)
They hung my black young lover
To a cross roads tree.

5 Way Down South in Dixie
(Bruised body high in air)
I asked the white Lord Jesus
What was the use of prayer.

Way Down South in Dixie
10 (Break the heart of me)
Love is a naked shadow
On a gnarled and naked tree.

1927

Harlem Sweeties

Have you dug the spill
Of Sugar Hill?[4]
Cast your gims° eyes
On this sepia° thrill: brown
5 Brown sugar lassie,
Caramel treat,

4. In the early part of the twentieth century, the most fashionable residential area of Harlem.

Honey-gold baby
Sweet enough to eat.
Peach-skinned girlie,
10 Coffee and cream,
Chocolate darling
Out of a dream.
Walnut tinted
Or cocoa brown,
15 Pomegranate-lipped
Pride of the town.
Rich cream-colored
To plum-tinted black,
Feminine sweetness
20 In Harlem's no lack.
Glow of the quince
To blush of the rose.
Persimmon bronze
To cinnamon toes.
25 Blackberry cordial,
Virginia Dare[5] wine—
All those sweet colors
Flavor Harlem of mine!
Walnut or cocoa,
30 Let me repeat:
Caramel, brown sugar,
A chocolate treat.
Molasses taffy,
Coffee and cream,
35 Licorice, clove, cinnamon
To a honey-brown dream.
Ginger, wine-gold,
Persimmon, blackberry,
All through the spectrum
40 Harlem girls vary—
So if you want to know beauty's
Rainbow-sweet thrill,
Stroll down luscious,
Delicious, fine Sugar Hill.

1942

Harlem

What happens to a dream deferred?

Does it dry up
like a raisin in the sun?
Or fester like a sore—
5 And then run?

5. A brand of wine.

Does it stink like rotten meat?
Or crust and sugar over—like a syrupy sweet?

Maybe it just sags
10 like a heavy load.

Or does it explode?

1951

Theme for English B

The instructor said,

Go home and write a page tonight.
And let that page come out of you—
5 Then, it will be true.

I wonder if it's that simple?
I am twenty-two, colored, born in Winston-Salem.
I went to school there, then Durham,[6] then here
to this college[7] on the hill above Harlem.
10 I am the only colored student in my class.
The steps from the hill lead down into Harlem,
through a park, then I cross St. Nicholas,
Eighth Avenue, Seventh, and I come to the Y,
the Harlem Branch Y, where I take the elevator
15 up to my room, sit down, and write this page:

It's not easy to know what is true for you or me at twenty-two, my age. But I guess I'm what I feel and see and hear, Harlem, I hear you:
hear you, hear me—we two—you, me, talk on this page.
20 (I hear New York, too.) Me—who?
Well, I like to eat, sleep, drink, and be in love.
I like to work, read, learn, and understand life.
I like a pipe for a Christmas present,
or records—Bessie,[8] bop, or Bach.
25 I guess being colored doesn't make me not like the same things other folks like who are other races.
So will my page be colored that I write?
Being me, it will not be white.

6. Like Winston-Salem, a city in North Carolina.
7. City College of the City University of New York (CCNY).
8. Bessie Smith (1894 or 1898–1937), American blues singer.

But it will be
30 a part of you, instructor.
You are white—
yet a part of me, as I am a part of you.
That's American.
Sometimes perhaps you don't want to be a part of me.
35 Nor do I often want to be a part of you.
But we are, that's true!
I guess you learn from me—
although you're older—and white—and somewhat more free.

40 This is my page for English B.

1951

Dinner Guest: Me

I know I am
The Negro Problem[9]
Being wined and dined,
Answering the usual questions
5 That come to white mind
Which seeks demurely
To probe in polite way
The why and wherewithal
Of darkness U.S.A.—
10 Wondering how things got this way
In current democratic night,
Murmuring gently
Over fraises du bois,[1]
"I'm so ashamed of being white."

15 The lobster is delicious,
The wine divine,
And center of attention
At the damask table, mine.
To be a Problem on 20 Park Avenue at eight
Is not so bad.
Solutions to the Problem,
Of course, wait.

1967

9. Allusion to the controversial 1963 essay "My Negro Problem—and Ours," by the American writer Norman Podhoretz (b. 1930).

1. Wild strawberries (French); ironic allusion to W. E. B. Du Bois (see note 2, p. 1430).

ROY CAMPBELL
1902–1957

The Zulu Girl

To F. C. Slater

When in the sun the hot red acres smoulder,
Down where the sweating gang its labour plies,
A girl flings down her hoe, and from her shoulder
Unslings her child tormented by the flies.

5 She takes him to a ring of shadow pooled
By thorn-trees: purpled with the blood of ticks,
While her sharp nails, in slow caresses ruled,
Prowl through his hair with sharp electric clicks,

His sleepy mouth, plugged by the heavy nipple,
10 Tugs like a puppy, grunting as he feeds:
Through his frail nerves her own deep languors ripple
Like a broad river sighing through its reeds.

Yet in that drowsy stream his flesh imbibes
An old unquenched unsmotherable heat—
15 The curbed ferocity of beaten tribes,
The sullen dignity of their defeat.

Her body looms above him like a hill
Within whose shade a village lies at rest,
Or the first cloud so terrible and still 20 That bears the coming harvest in its breast.

1926 1930

The Sisters

After hot loveless nights, when cold winds stream
Sprinkling the frost and dew, before the light,
Bored with the foolish things that girls must dream
Because their beds are empty of delight,

5 Two sisters rise and strip. Out from the night
Their horses run to their low-whistled pleas—
Vast phantom shapes with eyeballs rolling white
That sneeze a fiery steam about their knees:

Through the crisp manes their stealthy prowling hands,
10 Stronger than curbs, in slow caresses rove,
They gallop down across the milk-white sands
And wade far out into the sleeping cove:

The frost stings sweetly with a burning kiss
As intimate as love, as cold as death:
15 Their lips, whereon delicious tremors hiss,
Fume with the ghostly pollen of their breath.

Far out on the grey silence of the flood
They watch the dawn in smouldering gyres° expand spiral turnings
Beyond them: and the day burns through their blood
20 Like a white candle through a shuttered hand.

1926 1930

OGDEN NASH
1902–1971

The Cow

The cow is of the bovine ilk;
One end is moo, the other, milk.

1931

Reflections on Ice-breaking

Candy
Is dandy
But liquor
Is quicker.

1931

Requiem

There was a young belle of old Natchez[1]
Whose garments were always in patchez.
When comment arose
On the state of her clothes,
5 She drawled, When Ah itchez, Ah scratchez!

1935

1. Town in Mississippi.

Columbus

Once upon a time there was an Italian,
And some people thought he was a rapscallion,
But he wasn't offended,
Because other people thought he was splendid,
5 And he said the world was round,
And everybody made an uncomplimentary sound,
But he went and tried to borrow some money from Ferdinand But Ferdinand said America was a bird in the bush and he'd rather have a berdinand,
But Columbus' brain was fertile, it wasn't arid,
10 And he remembered that Ferdinand was married,
And he thought, there is no wife like a misunderstood one, Because if her husband thinks something is a terrible idea she is bound to think it a good one,
So he perfumed his handkerchief with bay rum and citronella,
And he went to see Isabella,
15 And he looked wonderful but he had never felt sillier,
And she said, I can't place the face but the aroma is familiar,
And Columbus didn't say a word,
All he said was, I am Columbus, the fifteenth-century Admiral Byrd,[2]
And, just as he thought, her disposition was very malleable, 20 And she said, Here are my jewels, and she wasn't penurious like Cornelia the mother of the Gracchi,[3] she wasn't referring to her children, no, she was referring to her jewels, which were very very valuable,
So Columbus said, Somebody show me the sunset and somebody did and he set sail for it,
And he discovered America and they put him in jail for it,
And the fetters gave him welts,
And they named America after somebody else,[4]
25 So the sad fate of Columbus ought to be pointed out to every child and every voter,
Because it has a very important moral, which is, Don't be a discoverer, be a promoter.

1935

The Turtle

The turtle lives 'twixt plated decks
Which practically conceal its sex.
I think it clever of the turtle
In such a fix to be so fertile.

1940

2. Richard Evelyn Byrd (1888–1957), American explorer of the North and South Poles.
3. Cornelia (second century B.C.E.) was the Roman model of matronly virtue. Though hardly penurious, she famously responded to a request to show her jewels by producing her two sons (famous men in their own right).
4. Amerigo Vespucci (1454–1512), Italian navigator and explorer, who first sailed across the Atlantic in 1497.

STEVIE SMITH
1902–1971

No Categories!

I cry I cry
To God who created me
Not to you Angels who frustrated me
Let me fly, let me die,
5 Let me come to Him.

Not to you Angels on the wing,
With your severe faces,
And your scholarly grimaces,
And your do this and that,
10 And your exasperating pit-pat
Of appropriate admonishment.

That is not what the Creator meant.
In the day of his gusty creation
He made this and that 15 And laughed to see them grow fat.

Plod on, you Angels say, do better aspire higher
And one day you may be like us, or those next below us,
Or nearer the lowest,
Or lowest,
20 Doing their best.

Oh no no, you Angels, I say,
No hierarchies I pray.

Oh God, laugh not too much aside
Say not, it is a small matter.
25 See what your Angels do; scatter
Their pride; laugh them away.

Oh no categories I pray.

1950

Mr. Over

Mr. Over is dead
He died fighting and true
And on his tombstone they wrote
Over to You.

5 And who pray is this You
To whom Mr. Over is gone?

Oh if we only knew that
We should not do wrong.

But who is this beautiful You
10 We all of us long for so much
Is he not our friend and our brother
Our father and such?

Yes he is this and much more
This is but a portion
15 A sea-drop in a bucket
Taken from the ocean

So the voices spake
Softly above my head
And a voice in my heart cried: Follow
20 Where he has led

And a devil's voice cried: Happy
Happy the dead.

1950

The Death Sentence

Cold as No Plea,
Yet wild with all negation,
Weeping I come
To my heart's destination,
5 To my last bed
Between th' unhallowed boards—
The Law allows it
And the Court awards.

1950

Not Waving but Drowning

Nobody heard him, the dead man,
But still he lay moaning:
I was much further out than you thought
And not waving but drowning.

5 Poor chap, he always loved larking
And now he's dead
It must have been too cold for him his heart gave way,
They said.

Oh, no no no, it was too cold always
10 (Still the dead one lay moaning)
I was much too far out all my life
And not waving but drowning.

1957

The Celts

I think of the Celts[1] as rather a whining lady
Who was beautiful once but is not so much so now
She is not very loving, but there is one thing she loves
It is her grievance which she hugs and takes out walking.
5 The Celtic lady likes fighting very much for freedom
But when she has got it she is a proper tyrant Nobody likes her much when she is governing.

The Celtic lady is not very widely popular
But the English love her oh they love her very much
10 Especially when the Celtic lady is Irish they love her
Which is odd as she hates them then more than anyone else,
When she's Welsh the English stupidly associate her chiefly
With national hats, eisteddfods[2] and Old Age Pensions.
(They don't think of her at all when she is Scotch, it is rather a problem.)

15 Oh the Celtic lady when she's Irish is the one for me
Oh she is so witty and wild, my word witty,
And flashing and spiteful this Celtic lady we love
All the same she is not so beautiful as she was.

1957

Thoughts about the Person from Porlock[3]

Coleridge received the Person from Porlock
And ever after called him a curse,
Then why did he hurry to let him in?
He could have hid in the house.

5 It was not right of Coleridge in fact it was wrong
(But often we all do wrong)

1. Peoples speaking languages related to those of the ancient Gauls, including Bretons, Cornish, Welsh, Irish, etc.
2. Traditional Welsh congresses of bards, minstrels, and poets, at which contests of minstrelsy, singing, or oratory are conducted.
3. See Samuel Taylor Coleridge's poem "Kubla Khan" and, especially, note 8 (p. 809). Coleridge attributed his leaving "Kubla Khan" unfinished to an interruption, while he was writing it, by "a person on business from Porlock." Having been "detained by him for above an hour," Coleridge proved unable to recapture the vision that was the substance of the poem.

As the truth is I think he was already stuck
With Kubla Khan.

He was weeping and wailing: I am finished, finished,
10 I shall never write another word of it,
When along comes the Person from Porlock
And takes the blame for it.

It was not right, it was wrong,
But often we all do wrong.

15 May we enquire the name of the Person from Porlock?
Why, Porson, didn't you know?
He lived at the bottom of Porlock Hill
So had a long way to go,

He wasn't much in the social sense
20 Though his grandmother was a Warlock,
One of the Rutlandshire ones I fancy
And nothing to do with Porlock,

And he lived at the bottom of the hill as I said
And had a cat named Flo,
25 And had a cat named Flo.

I long for the Person from Porlock
To bring my thoughts to an end,
I am becoming impatient to see him
I think of him as a friend,

30 Often I look out the window
Often I run to the gate
I think, He will come this evening,
I think it is rather late.

I am hungry to be interrupted
35 For ever and ever amen
O Person from Porlock come quickly
And bring my thoughts to an end.

I felicitate the people who have a Person from Porlock
To break up everything and throw it away
40 Because then there will be nothing to keep them
And they need not stay.

Why do they grumble so much?
He comes like a benison° blessing
They should be glad he has not forgotten them
45 They might have had to go on.

These thoughts are depressing I know. They are depressing,
I wish I was more cheerful, it is more pleasant,

Also it is a duty, we should smile as well as submitting
To the purpose of One Above who is experimenting 50 With various mixtures of human character which goes best,
All is interesting for him it is exciting, but not for us.
There I go again. Smile, smile, and get some work to do
Then you will be practically unconscious without positively having to go.

1962

COUNTEE CULLEN
1903–1946

Heritage

For Harold Jackman

What is Africa to me:
Copper sun or scarlet sea,
Jungle star or jungle track,
Strong bronzed men, or regal black
5 Women from whose loins I sprang
When the birds of Eden sang?
One three centuries removed
From the scenes his fathers loved,
Spicy grove, cinnamon tree,
10 What is Africa to me?

So I lie, who all day long
Want no sound except the song
Sung by wild barbaric birds
Goading massive jungle herds,
15 Juggernauts[1] of flesh that pass
Trampling tall defiant grass
Where young forest lovers lie,
Plighting troth beneath the sky.
So I lie, who always hear,
20 Though I cram against my ear
Both my thumbs, and keep them there,
Great drums throbbing through the air.
So I lie, whose fount of pride,
Dear distress, and joy allied,
25 Is my somber flesh and skin,
With the dark blood dammed within
Like great pulsing tides of wine
That, I fear, must burst the fine
Channels of the chafing net
30 Where they surge and foam and fret.

1. Great forces or massive objects that crush everything in their path.

Africa? A book one thumbs Listlessly, till slumber comes.
Unremembered are her bats
Circling through the night, her cats
35 Crouching in the river reeds,
Stalking gentle flesh that feeds
By the river brink; no more
Does the bugle-throated roar
Cry that monarch claws have leapt
40 From the scabbards where they slept.
Silver snakes that once a year
Doff the lovely coats you wear,
Seek no covert in your fear
Lest a mortal eye should see;
45 What's your nakedness to me?
Here no leprous flowers rear
Fierce corollas° in the air; petals
Here no bodies sleek and wet,
Dripping mingled rain and sweat,
50 Tread the savage measures of Jungle boys and girls in love.
What is last year's snow to me,[2]
Last year's anything? The tree
Budding yearly must forget
55 How its past arose or set—
Bough and blossom, flower, fruit,
Even what shy bird with mute
Wonder at her travail there,
Meekly labored in its hair.
60 One three centuries removed
From the scenes his fathers loved,
Spicy grove, cinnamon tree,
What is Africa to me?

So I lie, who find no peace
65 Night or day, no slight release
From the unremittent beat
Made by cruel padded feet
Walking through my body's street.
Up and down they go, and back,
70 Treading out a jungle track.
So I lie, who never quite Safely sleep from rain at night—
I can never rest at all
When the rain begins to fall;
75 Like a soul gone mad with pain
I must match its weird refrain;
Ever must I twist and squirm,
Writhing like a baited worm,

2. Cf. the refrain of "Ballad of the Ladies of Bygone Time," by the French poet François Villon (1431–1463?): "Where are the snows of yesteryear?"

While its primal measures drip 80 Through my body, crying, "Strip!
Doff this new exuberance.
Come and dance the Lover's Dance!"
In an old remembered way
Rain works on me night and day.

85 Quaint, outlandish heathen gods
Black men fashion out of rods,
Clay, and brittle bits of stone,
In a likeness like their own,
My conversion came high-priced;
90 I belong to Jesus Christ,
Preacher of Humility;
Heathen gods are naught to me.

Father, Son, and Holy Ghost,
So I make an idle boast;
95 Jesus of the twice-turned cheek,[3]
Lamb of God, although I speak
With my mouth thus, in my heart
Do I play a double part.
Ever at Thy glowing altar
100 Must my heart grow sick and falter,
Wishing He I served were black,
Thinking then it would not lack Precedent of pain to guide it,
Let who would or might deride it;
105 Surely then this flesh would know
Yours had borne a kindred woe.
Lord, I fashion dark gods, too,
Daring even to give You
Dark despairing features where,
110 Crowned with dark rebellious hair,
Patience wavers just so much as Mortal grief compels, while touches
Quick and hot, of anger, rise
To smitten cheek and weary eyes.
115 Lord, forgive me if my need
Sometimes shapes a human creed.
All day long and all night through,
One thing only must I do:
Quench my pride and cool my blood,
120 Lest I perish in the flood,
Lest a hidden ember set
Timber that I thought was wet
Burning like the dryest flax,
Melting like the merest wax,

3. Cf. Matthew 5.39: "I say unto you, that ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also."

125 Lest the grave restore its dead.
Not yet has my heart or head
In the least way realized
They and I are civilized.

1925

Incident

Once riding in old Baltimore,
Heart-filled, head-filled with glee,
I saw a Baltimorean
Keep looking straight at me.

5 Now I was eight and very small,
And he was no whit bigger,
And so I smiled, but he poked out
His tongue, and called me, "Nigger."

I saw the whole of Baltimore
10 From May until December;
Of all the things that happened there
That's all that I remember.

1925

Yet Do I Marvel

I doubt not God is good, well-meaning, kind,
And did He stoop to quibble could tell why
The little buried mole continues blind,
Why flesh that mirrors Him must some day die,
5 Make plain the reason tortured Tantalus[4]
Is baited by the fickle fruit, declare
If merely brute caprice dooms Sisyphus[5]
To struggle up a never-ending stair.
Inscrutable His ways are, and immune
10 To catechism by a mind too strewn
With petty cares to slightly understand
What awful brain compels His awful hand.
Yet do I marvel at this curious thing:
To make a poet black, and bid him sing!

1925

4. Figure in Greek mythology who was offered food and water only to have it taken away.

5. Figure in Greek mythology who perpetually rolled a stone uphill only to see it roll down again.

EARLE BIRNEY
1904–1991

Bushed

He invented a rainbow but lightning struck it shattered it into the lake-lap of a mountain
so big his mind slowed when he looked at it

Yet he built a shack on the shore
5 learned to roast porcupine belly and wore the quills on his hatband

At first he was out with the dawn whether it yellowed bright as wood-columbine or was only a fuzzed moth in a flannel of storm 10 But he found the mountain was clearly alive sent messages whizzing down every hot morning boomed proclamations at noon and spread out a white guard of goat
before falling asleep on its feet at sundown

15 When he tried his eyes on the lake   ospreys[1] would fall like valkyries[2] choosing the cut-throat
He took then to waiting till the night smoke rose from the boil of the sunset

20 But the moon carved unknown totems out of the lakeshore owls in the beardusky woods derided him moosehorned cedars circled his swamps and tossed their antlers up to the stars
25 Then he knew   though the mountain slept   the winds were shaping its peak to an arrowhead poised

And now he could only bar himself in and wait
30 for the great flint to come singing into his heart

1952

The Bear on the Delhi Road[3]

Unreal   tall as a myth
by the road the Himalayan bear

1. Large, fish-eating hawks.
2. In Norse mythology, the warrior-maidens of Odin; they selected the heroes who were to die in battle and afterwards carried them to Valhalla, the hall of the heroic slain.
3. In India.

is beating the brilliant air with his crooked arms
5 About him two men bare spindly as locusts leap
One pulls on a ring
in the great soft nose His mate flicks flicks with a stick
10 up at the rolling eyes

They have not led him here down from the fabulous hills to this bald alien plain and the clamorous world to kill
15 but simply to teach him to dance

They are peaceful both these spare men of Kashmir[4] and the bear alive is their living too
If far on the Delhi way
20 around him galvanic[5] they dance
it is merely to wear wear from his shaggy body the tranced wish forever to stay only an ambling bear
25 four-footed in berries

It is no more joyous for them in this hot dust to prance out of reach of the praying claws sharpened to paw for ants
30 in the shadows of deodars° East Indian cedars
It is not easy to free myth from reality or rear this fellow up to lurch lurch with them
35 in the tranced dancing of men

1962 1975

C. DAY LEWIS
1904–1972

Two Songs

I've heard them lilting at loom and belting,[1]
Lasses lilting before dawn of day:

4. Mountainous region of northern India.
5. I.e., exciting him as if with electric shock.

1. Cf. Jean Elliot, "The Flowers of the Forest" (p. 677).

But now they are silent, not gamesome and gallant—
The flowers of the town are rotting away.

5 There was laughter and loving in the lanes at evening;
Handsome were the boys then, and girls were gay.
But lost in Flanders[2] by medalled commanders
The lads of the village are vanished away.

Cursed be the promise that takes our men from us—
10 All will be champion if you choose to obey:
They fight against hunger but still it is stronger—
The prime of our land grows cold as the clay.

The women are weary, once lilted so merry,
Waiting to marry for a year and a day:
15 From wooing and winning, from owning or earning
The flowers of the town are all turned away.

Come, live with me and be my love,[3]
And we will all the pleasures prove
Of peace and plenty, bed and board,
20 That chance employment may afford.

I'll handle dainties° on the docks delicacies
And thou shalt read of summer frocks:
At evening by the sour canals
We'll hope to hear some madrigals.

25 Care on thy maiden brow shall put
A wreath of wrinkles, and thy foot
Be shod with pain: not silken dress
But toil shall tire thy loveliness.

Hunger shall make thy modest zone° belt
30 And cheat fond death of all but bone—
If these delights thy mind may move,
Then live with me and be my love.

1935

Where are the War Poets?

They who in folly or mere greed
Enslaved religion, markets, laws,
Borrow our language now and bid
Us to speak up in freedom's cause.

2. Site of many of the most murderous battles of World War I.
3. Cf. Christopher Marlowe, "The Passionate Shepherd to His Love" (p. 256) and Sir Walter Ralegh, "The Nymph's Reply to the Shepherd" (p. 152).

5 It is the logic of our times,
No subject for immortal verse—
That we who lived by honest dreams
Defend the bad against the worse.

1943

RICHARD EBERHART
b. 1904

The Fury of Aerial Bombardment

You would think the fury of aerial bombardment
Would rouse God to relent; the infinite spaces
Are still silent. He looks on shock-pried faces.
History, even, does not know what is meant.

5 You would feel that after so many centuries
God would give man to repent; yet he can kill
As Cain[1] could, but with multitudinous will,
No farther advanced than in his ancient furies.

Was man made stupid to see his own stupidity?
10 Is God by definition indifferent, beyond us all?
Is the eternal truth man's fighting soul
Wherein the Beast ravens in its own avidity?

Of Van Wettering I speak, and Averill,
Names on a list, whose faces I do not recall 15 But they are gone to early death, who late° in school recently
Distinguished the belt feed lever from the belt holding pawl.[2]

1947

PATRICK KAVANAGH
1904–1967

Sanctity

To be a poet and not know the trade,
To be a lover and repel all women;
Twin ironies by which great saints are made,
The agonising pincer-jaws of Heaven.

1936

1. The firstborn son of Adam and Eve, he murdered his brother Abel (Genesis 4.8).
2. Parts of the .50-caliber Browning machine gun, mounted in American aircraft during World War II. Eberhart was an aerial gunnery instructor during the summer of 1944.

From The Great Hunger[1]

I

Clay is the word and clay is the flesh
Where the potato-gatherers like mechanised scarecrows move
Along the side-fall of the hill—Maguire and his men.
If we watch them an hour is there anything we can prove
5 Of life as it is broken-backed over the Book
Of Death? Here crows gabble over worms and frogs
And the gulls like old newspapers are blown clear of the hedges, luckily.
Is there some light of imagination in these wet clods?
Or why do we stand here shivering?
10 Which of these men
Loved the light and the queen
Too long virgin? Yesterday was summer. Who was it promised marriage to himself
Before apples were hung from the ceilings for Hallowe'en?
We will wait and watch the tragedy to the last curtain,
15 Till the last soul passively like a bag of wet clay
Rolls down the side of the hill, diverted by the angles
Where the plough missed or a spade stands, straitening the way.

A dog lying on a torn jacket under a heeled-up cart,
A horse nosing along the posied headland, trailing
20 A rusty plough. Three heads hanging between wide-apart Legs. October playing a symphony on a slack wire paling.
Maguire watches the drills flattened out
And the flints that lit a candle for him on a June altar Flameless. The drills slipped by and the days slipped by 25 And he trembled his head away and ran free from the world's halter,
And thought himself wiser than any man in the townland[2]
When he laughed over pints of porter° strong, dark ale
Of how he came free from every net spread
In the gaps of experience. He shook a knowing head
30 And pretended to his soul
That children are tedious in hurrying fields of April
Where men are spanging° across wide furrows. leaping
Lost in the passion that never needs a wife—
The pricks that pricked were the pointed pins of harrows.
35 Children scream so loud that the crows could bring
The seed of an acre away with crow-rude jeers.
Patrick Maguire, he called his dog and he flung a stone in the air
And hallooed the birds away that were the birds of the years.

1. Kavanagh's most famous work is his long poem in fourteen sections, The Great Hunger (1942). Named for a severe famine that decimated the Irish population during the 1840s, the poem focuses on the spiritual and sexual hunger of the Irish peasantry among whom Kavanagh grew up. The central figure is a potato farmer named Patrick Maguire, who is bound to the soil by the need not to leave his aged mother, and whose Church-induced sense of sin is so strong that he dies a bachelor and perhaps a virgin.

2. In Ireland, an area of land comparable to a township.

Turn over the weedy clods and tease out the tangled skeins.
40 What is he looking for there?
He thinks it is a potato, but we know better
Than his mud-gloved fingers probe in this insensitive hair.

"Move forward the basket and balance it steady
In this hollow. Pull down the shafts of that cart, Joe, 45 And straddle the horse," Maguire calls.
"The wind's over Brannagan's, now that means rain.
Graip° up some withered stalks and see that no potato falls — fork
Over the tail-board going down the ruckety pass—
And that's a job we'll have to do in December,
50 Gravel it and build a kerb on the bog-side. Is that Cassidy's ass
Out in my clover? Curse o' God—
Where is that dog?
Never where he's wanted." Maguire grunts and spits
Through a clay-wattled moustache and stares about him from the height.
55 His dream changes again like the cloud-swung wind
And he is not so sure now if his mother was right
When she praised the man who made a field his bride.

Watch him, watch him, that man on a hill whose spirit
Is a wet sack flapping about the knees of time.
60 He lives that his little fields may stay fertile when his own body
Is spread in the bottom of a ditch under two coulters[3] crossed in Christ's Name.

He was suspicious in his youth as a rat near strange bread,
When girls laughed; when they screamed he knew that meant
The cry of fillies in season. He could not walk
65 The easy road to his destiny. He dreamt
The innocense of young brambles to hooked treachery.
O the grip, O the grip of irregular fields! No man escapes.
It could not be that back of the hills love was free
And ditches straight.
70 No monster hand lifted up children and put down apes
As here

"O God if I had been wiser!"

That was his sigh like the brown breeze in the thistles.
He looks towards his house and haggard.° "O God if I had been wiser!" — yard
75 But now a crumpled leaf from the whitethorn bushes
Darts like a frightened robin, and the fence
Shows the green of after-grass through a little window,
And he knows that his own heart is calling his mother a liar.
God's truth is life—even the grotesque shapes of its foulest fire.

80 The horse lifts its head and cranes
Through the whins° and stones — masses of gorse shrub
To lip late passion in the crawling clover.

3. Iron blades in ploughs.

In the gap there's a bush weighted with boulders like morality,
The fools of life bleed if they climb over.

85 The wind leans from Brady's, and the coltsfoot leaves are holed with rust,
Rain fills the cart-tracks and the sole-plate grooves;
A yellow sun reflects in Donaghmoyne[4]
The poignant light in puddles shaped by hooves.

Come with me, Imagination, into this iron house
90 And we will watch from the doorway the years run back,
And we will know what a peasant's left hand wrote on the page.
Be easy, October. No cackle hen, horse neigh, tree sough, duck quack.

1942

Epic

I have lived in important places, times
When great events were decided, who owned
That half a rood° of rock, a no-man's land — quarter acre
Surrounded by our pitchfork-armed claims.
5 I heard the Duffys shouting "Damn your soul"
And old McCabe stripped to the waist, seen
Step the plot defying blue cast-steel—
"Here is the march along these iron stones"
That was the year of the Munich bother.[5] Which 10 Was more important? I inclined
To lose my faith in Ballyrush and Gortin[6]
Till Homer's ghost came whispering to my mind
He said: I made the Iliad[7] from such
A local row. Gods make their own importance.

1951

Canal Bank Walk[8]

Leafy-with-love banks and the green waters of the canal
Pouring redemption for me, that I do
The will of God, wallow in the habitual, the banal,
Grow with nature again as before I grew.
5 The bright stick trapped, the breeze adding a third Party to the couple kissing on an old seat,
And a bird gathering materials for the nest for the Word
Eloquently new and abandoned to its delirious beat.

4. A stream in County Monaghan.
5. Diplomatic crisis of September 1939 (involving Britain, Czechoslovakia, France, and Germany) that precipitated World War II.
6. Small townships, near Kavanagh's home, in County Monaghan.
7. Homer's epic poem about the Trojan War.
8. Along Dublin's Grand Canal.

O unworn world enrapture me, encapture me in a web
10 Of fabulous grass and eternal voices by a beech,
Feed the gaping need of my senses, give me ad lib
To pray unselfconsciously with overflowing speech
For this soul needs to be honoured with a new dress woven
From green and blue things and arguments that cannot be proven.

1960

STANLEY KUNITZ
b. 1905

He[1]

He runs before the wise men: he
Is moving on the hills like snow.
No gifts, no tears, no company
He brings, but wind-rise and water-flow.

5 In meadows of descended day
His motion leans, dividing air:
He takes the unforgiving way
Beneath the apostolic star.[2]

She who has known him calls him stranger.
10 Parting the night's long hair, he steals
Within the heart, that humble manger
Where the white, astonished spirit kneels.

His vertical inflicting pride,
Whose shadow cuts the nib of space,
15 Bends to this virtue fructified.[3]
But though he kiss the little face

Like rapture breaking on the mind,
The necessary fierce details
Implacably he has designed.
20 Redemption hangs upon the nails.

1928, 1958 1930, 1958

Robin Redbreast

It was the dingiest bird
you ever saw, all the color

1. Kunitz's preferred version of a poem he wrote at twenty-three, inspired by Luke's account, in the Christian Scriptures, of the Annunciation and Incarnation.
2. The star of Bethlehem.
3. Made fruitful, productive. Nib: point of a pen.

washed from him, as if he had been standing in the rain,
5 friendless and stiff and cold,
since Eden went wrong.
In the house marked For Sale,
where nobody made a sound,
in the room where I lived 10 with an empty page, I had heard the squawking of the jays under the wild persimmons tormenting him.
So I scooped him up
15 after they knocked him down, in league with that ounce of heart pounding in my palm,
that dumb beak gaping.
Poor thing! Poor foolish life!
20 without sense enough to stop running in desperate circles, needing my lucky help
to toss him back into his element.
But when I held him high,
25 fear clutched my hand,
for through the hole in his head,
cut whistle-clean . . .
through the old dried wound between his eyes
30 where the hunter's brand had tunneled out his wits . . .
I caught the cold flash of the blue unappeasable sky.

1971

Touch Me

Summer is late, my heart.
Words plucked out of the air
some forty years ago when I was wild with love
5 and torn almost in two scatter like leaves this night of whistling wind and rain.
It is my heart that's late,
it is my song that's flown.
10 Outdoors all afternoon under a gun-metal sky
staking my garden down,
I kneeled to the crickets trilling underfoot as if about 15 to burst from their crusty shells;

and like a child again
marveled to hear so clear and brave a music pour from such a small machine.
20 What makes the engine go?
Desire, desire, desire.
The longing for the dance
stirs in the buried life.
One season only,
25 and it's done.
So let the battered old willow thrash against the windowpanes and the house timbers creak.
Darling, do you remember 30 the man you married? Touch me, remind me who I am.

1995

ROBERT PENN WARREN
1905–1989

Bearded Oaks

The oaks, how subtle and marine,
Bearded, and all the layered light
Above them swims; and thus the scene,
Recessed, awaits the positive night.

5 So, waiting, we in the grass now lie
Beneath the languorous tread of light:
The grasses, kelp-like, satisfy
The nameless motions of the air.

Upon the floor of light, and time,
10 Unmurmuring, of polyp made,
We rest; we are, as light withdraws,
Twin atolls on a shelf of shade.

Ages to our construction went,
Dim architecture, hour by hour:
15 And violence, forgot now, lent
The present stillness all its power.

The storm of noon above us rolled,
Of light the fury, furious gold,
The long drag troubling us, the depth:
20 Dark is unrocking, unrippling, still.

Passion and slaughter, ruth, decay
Descend, minutely whispering down,
Silted down swaying streams, to lay
Foundation for our voicelessness.

25 All our debate is voiceless here,
As all our rage, the rage of stone;
If hope is hopeless, then fearless is fear,
And history is thus undone.

Our feet once wrought the hollow street
30 With echo when the lamps were dead
At windows, once our headlight glare
Disturbed the doe that, leaping, fled.

I do not love you less that now
The caged heart makes iron stroke,
35 Or less that all that light once gave
The graduate° dark should now revoke. increasing

We live in time so little time
And we learn all so painfully,
That we may spare this hour's term
40 To practice for eternity.

1944

Masts at Dawn

Past second cock-crow yacht masts in the harbor go slowly white.

No light in the east yet, but the stars show a certain fatigue.
They withdraw into a new distance, have discovered our unworthiness.
It is long since

The owl, in the dark eucalyptus, dire and melodious, last called, and

5 Long since the moon sank and the English Finished fornicating in their ketches.[1] In the evening there was a strong swell.

Red died the sun, but at dark wind rose easterly, white sea nagged the black harbor headland.

When there is a strong swell, you may, if you surrender to it, experience
A sense, in the act, of mystic unity with that rhythm. Your peace is the sea's will.

10 But now no motion, the bay-face is glossy in darkness, like

1. Sailing vessels.

An old window pane flat on black ground by the wall, near the ash heap. It neither Receives nor gives light. Now is the hour when the sea

Sinks into meditation. It doubts its own mission. The drowned cat
That on the evening swell had kept nudging the piles of the pier and had seemed 15 To want to climb out and lick itself dry, now floats free. On that surface a slight convexity only, it is like

An eyelid, in darkness, closed. You must learn to accept the kiss of fate, for

The masts go white slow, as light, like dew, from darkness
Condensed on them, on oiled wood, on metal. Dew whitens in darkness.

I lie in my bed and think how, in darkness, the masts go white.

20 The sound of the engine of the first fishing dory dies seaward. Soon
In the inland glen wakes the dawn-dove. We must try

To love so well the world that we may believe, in the end, in God.

1968

There's a Grandfather's Clock in the Hall

There's a grandfather's clock in the hall, watch it closely. The minute hand stands still, then it jumps, and in between jumps there is no-Time,
And you are a child again watching the reflection of early morning sunlight on the ceiling above your bed,

Or perhaps you are fifteen feet under water and holding your breath as you struggle with a rock-snagged anchor, or holding your breath just long enough for one more long, slow thrust to make the orgasm really intolerable,
Or you are wondering why you really do not give a damn, as they trundle you off to the operating room,

5 Or your mother is standing up to get married and is very pretty, and excited and is a virgin, and your heart overflows, and you watch her with tears in your eyes, or
She is the one in the hospital room and she is really dying.

They have taken out her false teeth, which are now in a tumbler on the bedside table, and you know that only the undertaker will ever put them back in.
You stand there and wonder if you will ever have to wear false teeth.

She is lying on her back, and God, is she ugly, and 10 With gum-flabby lips and each word a special problem, she is asking if it is a new suit that you are wearing.

You say yes, and hate her uremic[2] guts, for she has no right to make you hurt the way that question hurts.
You do not know why that question makes your heart hurt like a kick in the scrotum,

For you do not yet know that the question, in its murderous triviality, is the last thing she will ever say to you,
Nor know what baptism is occurring in a sod-roofed hut or hole on the night-swept steppes of Asia, and a million mouths, like ruined stars in darkness, make a rejoicing that howls like wind, or wolves,

15 Nor do you know the truth, which is: Seize the nettle of innocence in both your hands, for this is the only way, and every Ulcer in love's lazaret[3] may, like a dawn-stung gem, sing—or even burst into whoops of, perhaps, holiness.

But, in any case, watch the clock closely. Hold your breath and wait.
Nothing happens, nothing happens, then suddenly, quick as a wink, and slick as a mink's prick, Time thrusts through the time of no-
Time.

1974

Evening Hawk

From plane of light to plane, wings dipping through
Geometries and orchids that the sunset builds,
Out of the peak's black angularity of shadow, riding
The last tumultuous avalanche of 5 Light above pines and the guttural gorge,
The hawk comes.

His wing
Scythes down another day, his motion
Is that of the honed steel-edge, we hear
10 The crashless fall of stalks of Time.

The head of each stalk is heavy with the gold of our error.

Look! Look! he is climbing the last light
Who knows neither Time nor error, and under Whose eye, unforgiving, the world, unforgiven, swings
15 Into shadow.

2. Characterized by a toxic condition associated with kidney disease.

3. Storeroom; also (lazaretto), quarters for quarantine or contagious hospital.

Long now,
The last thrush is still, the last bat
Now cruises in his sharp hieroglyphics. His wisdom
Is ancient, too, and immense. The star
20 Is steady, like Plato,[4] over the mountain.

If there were no wind we might, we think, hear
The earth grind on its axis, or history
Drip in darkness like a leaking pipe in the cellar.

1975

JOHN BETJEMAN
1906–1984

Death in Leamington[1]

She died in the upstairs bedroom
By the light of the evening star
That shone through the plate glass window
From over Leamington Spa.

5 Beside her the lonely crochet
Lay patiently and unstirred,
But the fingers that would have worked it
Were dead as the spoken word.

And Nurse came in with the tea-things
10 Breast high 'mid the stands and chairs—
But Nurse was alone with her own little soul,
And the things were alone with theirs.

She bolted the big round window,
She let the blinds unroll,
15 She set a match to the mantle,[2]
She covered the fire with coal.

And "Tea!" she said in a tiny voice
"Wake up! It's nearly five."
Oh! Chintzy,[3] chintzy cheeriness,
20 Half dead and half alive!

Do you know that the stucco is peeling?
Do you know that the heart will stop?
From those yellow Italianate arches
Do you hear the plaster drop?

4. Here, a symbol of the "steady" because he characterized physical objects as impermanent representations of unchanging ideas.
1. Leamington Spa is a health resort in Warwickshire, England, with medicinal springs and baths.
2. The incandescent cloth hood of a gaslight jet.
3. Not in the slang sense of gaudy or cheap, but meaning that the room's hangings and furniture coverings are of the flower-patterned, glazed-cotton fabric called chintz.

25 Nurse looked at the silent bedstead,
At the grey, decaying face,
As the calm of a Leamington evening
Drifted into the place.

She moved the table of bottles
30 Away from the bed to the wall;
And tiptoeing gently over the stairs
Turned down the gas in the hall.

1932

The Arrest of Oscar Wilde at the Cadogan Hotel[4]

He sipped at a weak hock[5] and seltzer
As he gazed at the London skies
Through the Nottingham lace of the curtains
Or was it his bees-winged[6] eyes?

5 To the right and before him Pont Street
Did tower in her new built red,
As hard as the morning gaslight
That shone on his unmade bed,

"I want some more hock in my seltzer,
10 And Robbie,[7] please give me your hand—
Is this the end or beginning?
How can I understand?

"So you've brought me the latest Yellow Book:[8]
And Buchan[9] has got in it now:
15 Approval of what is approved of
Is as false as a well-kept vow.

"More hock, Robbie—where is the seltzer?
Dear boy, pull again at the bell!
They are all little better than cretins,
20 Though this is the Cadogan Hotel.

"One astrakhan coat is at Willis's—
Another one's at the Savoy:
Do fetch my morocco portmanteau,
And bring them on later, dear boy."

4. On May 27, 1895, the Irish writer Oscar Wilde (1856–1900) was convicted of "indecencies between grown men, in public or private" (i.e., of homosexuality) and was sentenced to two years hard labor.
5. Generic term for German white wine.
6. Filmed over (from beeswing: a film that forms on old wines).
7. Robert Ross, a friend who remained loyal to Wilde after the latter's downfall.
8. An elaborately illustrated hardcover periodical, which appeared quarterly from 1894 to 1897, and in which many writers associated with the Aesthetic movement were published.
9. John Buchan, later Lord Tweedsmuir (1875–1940), author of several popular novels, contributed two stories to The Yellow Book in 1896.

25 A thump, and a murmur of voices—
("Oh why must they make such a din?")
As the door of the bedroom swung open
And TWO PLAIN CLOTHES POLICEMEN came in:

"Mr. Woilde, we'ave come for tew take yew
30 Where felons and criminals dwell:
We must ask yew tew leave with us quoietly
For this is the Cadogan Hotel."

He rose, and he put down The Yellow Book.
He staggered—and, terrible-eyed,
35 He brushed past the palms on the staircase
And was helped to a hansom outside.

1937

East Anglian Bathe[1]

Oh when the early morning at the seaside
Took us with hurrying steps from Horsey Mere
To see the whistling bent-grass on the leeside
And then the tumbled breaker-line appear,
5 On high, the clouds with mighty adumbration° shadows
Sailed over us to seaward fast and clear
And jellyfish in quivering isolation
Lay silted in the dry sand of the breeze
And we, along the tableland of beach blown
10 Went gooseflesh from our shoulders to our knees
And ran to catch the football, each to each thrown,
In the soft and swirling music of the seas.

There splashed about our ankles as we waded
Those intersecting wavelets morning-cold,
15 And sudden dark a patch of sea was shaded,
And sudden light, another patch would hold
The warmth of whirling atoms in a sun-shot
And underwater sandstorm green and gold.
So in we dived and louder than a gunshot
20 Sea water broke in fountains down the ear.
How cold the bathe, how chattering cold the drying,
How welcoming the inland reeds appear,
The wood smoke and the breakfast and the frying,
And your warm freshwater ripples, Horsey Mere.

1945

1. East Anglia comprises the English counties of Norfolk and Suffolk; Horsey Mere ("Mere," deriving from Latin mare, the sea, indicating the resort area of the town of Horsey) is on the coast of Norfolk, north of Great Yarmouth.

False Security

I remember the dread with which I at a quarter past four
Let go with a bang behind me our house front door
And, clutching a present for my dear little hostess tight,
Sailed out for the children's party into the night
5 Or rather the gathering night. For still some boys
In the near municipal acres were making a noise
Shuffling in fallen leaves and shouting and whistling
And running past hedges of hawthorn, spikey and bristling.
And black in the oncoming darkness stood out the trees
10 And pink shone the ponds in the sunset ready to freeze
And all was still and ominous waiting for dark
And the keeper was ringing his closing bell in the park
And the arc lights started to fizzle and burst into mauve
As I climbed West Hill to the great big house in The Grove, 15 Where the children's party was and the dear little hostess.
But halfway up stood the empty house where the ghost is
I crossed to the other side and under the arc
Made a rush for the next kind lamppost out of the dark
And so to the next and the next till I reached the top 20 Where the Grove branched off to the left. Then ready to drop
I ran to the ironwork gateway of number seven Secure at last on the lamplit fringe of Heaven.
Oh who can say how subtle and safe one feels
Shod in one's children's sandals from Daniel Neal's,
25 Clad in one's party clothes made of stuff from Heal's?[2]
And who can still one's thrill at the candle shine
On cakes and ices and jelly and blackcurrant wine,
And the warm little feel of my hostess's hand in mine?
Can I forget my delight at the conjuring show?
30 And wasn't I proud that I was the last to go?
Too overexcited and pleased with myself to know
That the words I heard my hostess's mother employ
To a guest departing, would ever diminish my joy,
I WONDER WHERE JULIA FOUND THAT STRANGE, RATHER COMMON LITTLE BOY?

1958

WILLIAM EMPSON
1906–1984

Legal Fiction[1]

Law makes long spokes of the short stakes of men.
Your well fenced out real estate of mind

2. English interior-design chain. Daniel Neal's: famous English shoe store.

1. Something assumed to be true for the purpose of legal argument, whether or not it is true.

No high flat of the nomad citizen
Looks over, or train leaves behind.

5 Your rights extend under and above your claim
Without bound; you own land in heaven and hell;
Your part of earth's surface and mass the same,
Of all cosmos' volume, and all stars as well.

Your rights reach down where all owners meet, in hell's
10 Pointed exclusive conclave, at earth's centre
(Your spun farm's root still on that axis dwells);
And up, through galaxies, a growing sector.

You are nomad yet; the lighthouse beam you own
Flashes, like Lucifer,[2] through the firmament.
15 Earth's axis varies; your dark central cone
Wavers a candle's shadow, at the end.

1935

Missing Dates

Slowly the poison the whole blood stream fills.
It is not the effort nor the failure tires.
The waste remains, the waste remains and kills.

It is not your system or clear sight that mills
5 Down small to the consequence a life requires;
Slowly the poison the whole blood stream fills.

They bled an old dog dry yet the exchange rills° — streams
Of young dog blood gave but a month's desires;
The waste remains, the waste remains and kills.

10 It is the Chinese tombs and the slag hills
Usurp the soil, and not the soil retires.[3]
Slowly the poison the whole blood stream fills.

Not to have fire is to be a skin that shrills.
The complete fire is death. From partial fires
15 The waste remains, the waste remains and kills.

It is the poems you have lost, the ills
From missing dates, at which the heart expires.
Slowly the poison the whole blood stream fills.
The waste remains, the waste remains and kills.

1940

2. The morning star (Venus); also, a name of Satan (meaning "light-bearer") before he was cast out of heaven.
3. "It is true about the old dog, at least I saw it reported somewhere, but the legend that a fifth or some such part of the soil of China is given up to ancestral tombs is (by the way) not true" [Empson's note].

W. H. AUDEN
1907–1973

Lullaby

Lay your sleeping head, my love,
Human on my faithless arm;
Time and fevers burn away
Individual beauty from 5 Thoughtful children, and the grave
Proves the child ephemeral:
But in my arms till break of day
Let the living creature lie,
Mortal, guilty, but to me
10 The entirely beautiful.

Soul and body have no bounds:
To lovers as they lie upon
Her tolerant enchanted slope
In their ordinary swoon,
15 Grave the vision Venus[1] sends
Of supernatural sympathy,
Universal love and hope;
While an abstract insight wakes
Among the glaciers and the rocks
20 The hermit's carnal ecstasy.

Certainty, fidelity
On the stroke of midnight pass
Like vibrations of a bell
And fashionable madmen raise
25 Their pedantic boring cry:
Every farthing[2] of the cost,
All the dreaded cards foretell,
Shall be paid, but from this night
Not a whisper, not a thought,
30 Not a kiss nor look be lost.

Beauty, midnight, vision dies:
Let the winds of dawn that blow
Softly round your dreaming head
Such a day of welcome show
35 Eye and knocking heart may bless,
Find our mortal world enough;
Noons of dryness find you fed
By the involuntary powers,
Nights of insult let you pass
40 Watched by every human love.

January 1937 1940

1. Roman goddess of love and beauty.
2. Old British coin worth one fourth of a penny.

Spain 1937[3]

Yesterday all the past. The language of size
Spreading to China along the trade-routes; the diffusion
Of the counting-frame and the cromlech;[4]
Yesterday the shadow-reckoning in the sunny climates.

5 Yesterday the assessment of insurance by cards,
The divination of water; yesterday the invention
Of cart-wheels and clocks, the taming of Horses; yesterday the bustling world of the navigators.

Yesterday the abolition of fairies and giants;
10 The fortress like a motionless eagle eyeing the valley,
The chapel built in the forest;
Yesterday the carving of angels and of frightening gargoyles;

The trial of heretics among the columns of stone;
Yesterday the theological feuds in the taverns
15 And the miraculous cure at the fountain;
Yesterday the Sabbath of Witches.[5] But to-day the struggle.

Yesterday the installation of dynamos and turbines;
The construction of railways in the colonial desert;
Yesterday the classic lecture
20 On the origin of Mankind. But to-day the struggle.

Yesterday the belief in the absolute value of Greek;
The fall of the curtain upon the death of a hero;
Yesterday the prayer to the sunset,
And the adoration of madmen. But to-day the struggle.

25 As the poet whispers, startled among the pines
Or, where the loose waterfall sings, compact, or upright
On the crag by the leaning tower:
"O my vision. O send me the luck of the sailor."

And the investigator peers through his instruments
30 At the inhuman provinces, the virile bacillus
Or enormous Jupiter finished:
"But the lives of my friends. I inquire, I inquire."

And the poor in their fireless lodgings dropping the sheets
Of the evening paper: "Our day is our loss. O show us 35 History the operator, the Organiser, Time the refreshing river."

3. Auden traveled to Spain in January 1936, saying he was going to drive an ambulance for the left-wing Republican forces then engaged in a civil war with the Fascist Nationalists, but returned shortly, without having done so, horrified by what he had seen.
4. Ancient stone monument.
5. Ceremonial gathering of witches in parody of Christian service.

And the nations combine each cry, invoking the life
That shapes the individual belly and orders
The private nocturnal terror:
40 "Did you not found once the city state of the sponge,

"Raise the vast military empires of the shark
And the tiger, establish the robin's plucky canton?° district Intervene. O descend as a dove[6] or
A furious papa or a mild engineer:[7] but descend."

45 And the life, if it answers at all, replies from the heart
And the eyes and the lungs, from the shops and squares of the city:
"O no, I am not the Mover,
Not to-day, not to you. To you I'm the

"Yes-man, the bar-companion, the easily-duped:
50 I am whatever you do; I am your vow to be Good, your humorous story;
I am your business voice; I am your marriage.

"What's your proposal? To build the Just City?[8] I will.
I agree. Or is it the suicide pact, the romantic 55 Death? Very well, I accept, for
I am your choice, your decision: yes, I am Spain."

Many have heard it on remote peninsulas,
On sleepy plains, in the aberrant fishermen's islands,
In the corrupt heart of the city;
60 Have heard and migrated like gulls or the seeds of a flower.

They clung like burrs to the long expresses that lurch
Through the unjust lands, through the night, through the alpine tunnel;
They floated over the oceans;
They walked the passes: they came to present their lives.

65 On that arid square, that fragment nipped off from hot
Africa, soldered so crudely to inventive Europe,
On that tableland scored by rivers,
Our fever's menacing shapes are precise and alive.

To-morrow, perhaps, the future: the research on fatigue
70 And the movements of packers; the gradual exploring of all the Octaves of radiation;
To-morrow the enlarging of consciousness by diet and breathing.

To-morrow the rediscovery of romantic love;
The photographing of ravens; all the fun under 75 Liberty's masterful shadow;
To-morrow the hour of the pageant-master and the musician.

6. In the Bible and Christian iconography, the Holy Ghost often takes the form of a dove descending to Earth.
7. Refers to a deus ex machina (Latin translation of the Greek for "god from the machinery"), the device by which in Greek theater the gods were shown in the air.
8. A topic discussed by Plato in his Republic.

To-morrow for the young the poets exploding like bombs,
The walks by the lake, the winter of perfect communion;
To-morrow the bicycle races
80 Through the suburbs on summer evenings: but to-day the struggle.

To-day the inevitable increase in the chances of death;
The conscious acceptance of guilt in the fact of murder;[9]
To-day the expending of powers
On the flat ephemeral pamphlet and the boring meeting.

85 To-day the makeshift consolations; the shared cigarette;
The cards in the candle-lit barn and the scraping concert,
The masculine jokes; to-day the
Fumbled and unsatisfactory embrace before hurting.

The stars are dead; the animals will not look:
90 We are left alone with our day, and the time is short and History to the defeated
May say Alas but cannot help or pardon.

April 1937 — 1937, 1940

As I Walked Out One Evening

As I walked out one evening,
Walking down Bristol Street,
The crowds upon the pavement
Were fields of harvest wheat.

5 And down by the brimming river
I heard a lover sing
Under an arch of the railway:
"Love has no ending.

"I'll love you, dear, I'll love you
10 Till China and Africa meet,
And the river jumps over the mountain
And the salmon sing in the street,

"I'll love you till the ocean
Is folded and hung up to dry
15 And the seven stars go squawking
Like geese about the sky.

"The years shall run like rabbits,
For in my arms I hold
The Flower of the Ages,
20 And the first love of the world."

9. At its first printing, this line read: "The conscious acceptance of guilt in the necessary murder." Auden later suppressed the poem, largely because of its seeming support for murder.

But all the clocks in the city
  Began to whirr and chime:
"O let not Time deceive you,
  You cannot conquer Time.

25 "In the burrows of the Nightmare
  Where Justice naked is,
Time watches from the shadow
  And coughs when you would kiss.

"In headaches and in worry
30 Vaguely life leaks away,
And Time will have his fancy
  Tomorrow or today.

"Into many a green valley
  Drifts the appalling snow;
35 Time breaks the threaded dances
  And the diver's brilliant bow.

"O plunge your hands in water,
  Plunge them in up to the wrist;
Stare, stare in the basin
40 And wonder what you've missed.

"The glacier knocks in the cupboard,
  The desert sighs in the bed,
And the crack in the teacup opens
  A lane to the land of the dead.

45 "Where the beggars raffle the banknotes
  And the Giant is enchanting to Jack,
And the Lily-white Boy is a Roarer,
  And Jill goes down on her back.

"O look, look in the mirror,
50 O look in your distress;
Life remains a blessing
  Although you cannot bless.

"O stand, stand at the window
  As the tears scald and start;
55 You shall love your crooked neighbour
  With your crooked heart."

It was late, late in the evening,
  The lovers they were gone;
The clocks had ceased their chiming,
60 And the deep river ran on.

November 1937 1940

From Twelve Songs

IX. [Funeral Blues]

Stop all the clocks, cut off the telephone,
Prevent the dog from barking with a juicy bone,
Silence the pianos and with muffled drum
Bring out the coffin, let the mourners come.

5 Let aeroplanes circle moaning overhead
Scribbling on the sky the message He Is Dead,
Put crêpe bows round the white necks of the public doves,
Let the traffic policemen wear black cotton gloves.

He was my North, my South, my East and West,
10 My working week and my Sunday rest,
My noon, my midnight, my talk, my song;
I thought that love would last for ever: I was wrong.

The stars are not wanted now: put out every one;
Pack up the moon and dismantle the sun;
15 Pour away the ocean and sweep up the wood;
For nothing now can ever come to any good.

1936? 1940

XII. [Tell Me the Truth About Love]

Some say that love's a little boy,
And some say it's a bird,
Some say it makes the world go round,
And some say that's absurd,
5 And when I asked the man next-door,
Who looked as if he knew,
His wife got very cross indeed,
And said it wouldn't do.

Does it look like a pair of pyjamas,
10 Or the ham in a temperance hotel?[1]
Does its odour remind one of llamas,[2]
Or has it a comforting smell?
Is it prickly to touch as a hedge is,
Or soft as eiderdown fluff?[3]
15 Is it sharp or quite smooth at the edges?
O tell me the truth about love.

Our history books refer to it
In cryptic little notes,
It's quite a common topic on 20 The Transatlantic boats;

1. A hotel where no alcohol is available.
2. South American camel-like animals.
3. Fluffy duck feathers.

I've found the subject mentioned in Accounts of suicides,
And even seen it scribbled on
The backs of railway-guides.

25 Does it howl like a hungry Alsatian,
Or boom like a military band?
Could one give a first-rate imitation
On a saw or a Steinway Grand?[4]
Is its singing at parties a riot?
30 Does it only like Classical stuff?
Will it stop when one wants to be quiet?
O tell me the truth about love.

I looked inside the summer-house;
It wasn't ever there:
35 I tried the Thames at Maidenhead,
And Brighton's's[5] bracing air.
I don't know what the blackbird sang,
Or what the tulip said;
But it wasn't in the chicken-run,
40 Or underneath the bed.

Can it pull extraordinary faces?
Is it usually sick on a swing?
Does it spend all its time at the races,
Or fiddling with pieces of string?
45 Has it views of its own about money?
Does it think Patriotism enough?
Are its stories vulgar but funny?
O tell me the truth about love.

When it comes, will it come without warning
50 Just as I'm picking my nose?
Will it knock on my door in the morning,
Or tread in the bus on my toes?
Will it come like a change in the weather?
Will its greeting be courteous or rough?
55 Will it alter my life altogether?
O tell me the truth about love.

January 1938 1940

Musée des Beaux Arts[6]

About suffering they were never wrong,
The Old Masters: how well they understood

4. Brand of grand piano.
5. Resort town on the English Channel. Thames at Maidenhead: the river Thames, as it runs through a town west of London.
6. Museum of Fine Arts (French).

Its human position; how it takes place
While someone else is eating or opening a window or just walking dully along;
5 How, when the aged are reverently, passionately waiting For the miraculous birth, there always must be Children who did not specially want it to happen, skating
On a pond at the edge of the wood:
They never forgot
10 That even the dreadful martyrdom must run its course
Anyhow in a corner, some untidy spot
Where the dogs go on with their doggy life and the torturer's horse
Scratches its innocent behind on a tree.

In Brueghel's Icarus,[7] for instance: how everything turns away
15 Quite leisurely from the disaster; the ploughman may Have heard the splash, the forsaken cry,
But for him it was not an important failure; the sun shone
As it had to on the white legs disappearing into the green
Water; and the expensive delicate ship that must have seen 20 Something amazing, a boy falling out of the sky,
Had somewhere to get to and sailed calmly on.

December 1938 1940

In Memory of W. B. Yeats[8]

(d. Jan. 1939)

I

He disappeared in the dead of winter:
The brooks were frozen, the airports almost deserted,
And snow disfigured the public statues;
The mercury sank in the mouth of the dying day.
5 What instruments we have agree
The day of his death was a dark cold day.

Far from his illness
The wolves ran on through the evergreen forests,
The peasant river was untempted by the fashionable quays;
10 By mourning tongues
The death of the poet was kept from his poems.

7. The Fall of Icarus, by the Flemish artist Pieter Brueghel (ca. 1525–1569), the painting described here, is in the Musée d'Art Ancien, a section of the Musées Royaux des Beaux Arts, in Brussels. Daedalus, the legendary Athenian craftsman, constructed a labyrinth for Minos, king of Crete, but was then imprisoned in it with his son, Icarus. Daedalus made wings of feathers and wax, with which they flew away, but Icarus flew too near the sun, the wax melted, and he fell into the sea.
The poem also alludes to the Nativity scene in Brueghel's Numbering at Bethlehem, skaters in his Winter Landscape with Skaters and a Bird Trap, and a horse scratching its behind in his Massacre of the Innocents.
Cf. William Carlos Williams, "Pictures from Brueghel" (p. 1283).

8. The Irish poet and dramatist William Butler Yeats (b. 1865; see pp. 1188–1211), died in Roquebrune (southern France) on January 29, 1939.

But for him it was his last afternoon as himself,
An afternoon of nurses and rumours;
The provinces of his body revolted,
15 The squares of his mind were empty,
Silence invaded the suburbs,
The current of his feeling failed; he became his admirers.

Now he is scattered among a hundred cities
And wholly given over to unfamiliar affections.
20 To find his happiness in another kind of wood[9]
And be punished under a foreign code of conscience.[1]
The words of a dead man
Are modified in the guts of the living.

But in the importance and noise of to-morrow
25 When the brokers are roaring like beasts on the floor of the Bourse,[2]
And the poor have the sufferings to which they are fairly accustomed,
And each in the cell of himself is almost convinced of his freedom,
A few thousand will think of this day
As one thinks of a day when one did something slightly unusual.

30 What instruments we have agree
The day of his death was a dark cold day.

II

You were silly like us;[3] your gift survived it all:
The parish of rich women,[4] physical decay,
Yourself. Mad Ireland hurt you into poetry.
35 Now Ireland has her madness and her weather still,
For poetry makes nothing happen: it survives
In the valley of its making where executives
Would never want to tamper, flows on south
From ranches of isolation and the busy griefs,
40 Raw towns that we believe and die in; it survives,
A way of happening, a mouth.

III

Earth, receive an honoured guest:
William Yeats is laid to rest.
Let the Irish vessel lie
45 Emptied of its poetry.[5]

9. At the beginning of the Inferno (1.1–3), middle-aged Dante finds himself in a metaphorical "dark wood."
1. Yeats, as represented by his work, must endure the judgment of the living; a veiled reference to his Irish nationalism.
2. The French stock exchange.
3. In his prose pieces, Auden objects to aspects of Yeats's thought, particularly to his interest in the supernatural.
4. Lady Augusta Gregory (1852–1932), Irish dramatist, was one of several wealthy women who provided financial help to Yeats.
5. This section's stanza pattern echoes the meter and rhyme of Yeats's late poem "Under Ben Bulben" (see p. 1208). In Collected Shorter Poems (1966) and thereafter, Auden omitted the three stanzas that originally followed:

Time that is intolerant
Of the brave and innocent,
And indifferent in a week
To a beautiful physique,

Worships language and forgives
Everyone by whom it lives;
Pardons cowardice, conceit
Lays its honours at their feet,

In the nightmare of the dark
All the dogs of Europe bark.[6]
And the living nations wait,
Each sequestered in its hate;

50 Intellectual disgrace
Stares from every human face,
And the seas of pity lie
Locked and frozen in each eye.

Follow, poet, follow right
55 To the bottom of the night,
With your unconstraining voice
Still persuade us to rejoice;

With the farming of a verse
Make a vineyard of the curse,
60 Sing of human unsuccess
In a rapture of distress;

In the deserts of the heart
Let the healing fountain start,
In the prison of his days
65 Teach the free man how to praise.

February 1939 1940

September 1, 1939[7]

I sit in one of the dives
On Fifty-Second Street[8]
Uncertain and afraid
As the clever hopes expire
5 Of a low dishonest decade:
Waves of anger and fear
Circulate over the bright
And darkened lands of the earth,
Obsessing our private lives;
10 The unmentionable odour of death
Offends the September night.

Accurate scholarship can
Unearth the whole offence

Time that with this strange excuse
Pardoned Kipling and his views,
And will pardon Paul Claudel,
Pardons him for writing well.

The English writer Rudyard Kipling (1865–1936; see pp. 1181–88) was imperialistic and jingoistic. The French poet, dramatist, and diplomat Paul Claudel (1868–1955) was extremely right-wing. Yeats was at times antidemocratic and appeared to favor dictatorship.

6. A reference to World War II, which began in September 1939.

7. The date of Hitler's invasion of Poland, which started World War II.

8. Perhaps the Dizzy Club, a bar on West 52nd Street, New York City.

From Luther[9] until now
15 That has driven a culture mad,
Find what occurred at Linz,[1]
What huge imago[2] made
A psychopathic god:
I and the public know
20 What all schoolchildren learn,
Those to whom evil is done
Do evil in return.

Exiled Thucydides[3] knew
All that a speech can say
25 About Democracy,
And what dictators do,
The elderly rubbish they talk
To an apathetic grave;
Analysed all in his book,
30 The enlightenment driven away,
The habit-forming pain,
Mismanagement and grief:
We must suffer them all again.

Into this neutral air
35 Where blind skyscrapers use
Their full height to proclaim
The strength of Collective Man,
Each language pours its vain
Competitive excuse:
40 But who can live for long
In an euphoric dream;
Out of the mirror they stare,
Imperialism's face
And the international wrong.

45 Faces along the bar
Cling to their average day:
The lights must never go out,
The music must always play,
All the conventions conspire
50 To make this fort assume
The furniture of home;
Lest we should see where we are,
Lost in a haunted wood,
Children afraid of the night
55 Who have never been happy or good.

The windiest militant trash
Important Persons shout

9. Martin Luther (1483–1546), biblical scholar and founder of the Protestant Reformation.
1. Hitler spent his boyhood in the Austrian city of Linz.
2. Psychoanalytic term for the subconscious image that influences a person's attitudes and behavior.
3. Greek general (460–400 B.C.E.), whose History of the Peloponnesian War Auden read in the summer of 1939.

Is not so crude as our wish:
What mad Nijinsky wrote
60 About Diaghilev[4]
Is true of the normal heart;
For the error bred in the bone
Of each woman and each man
Craves what it cannot have,
65 Not universal love
But to be loved alone.[5]

From the conservative dark
Into the ethical life
The dense commuters come,
70 Repeating their morning vow,
"I will be true to the wife,
I'll concentrate more on my work",
And helpless governors wake
To resume their compulsory game:
75 Who can release them now,
Who can reach the deaf,
Who can speak for the dumb?

All I have is a voice
To undo the folded lie,
80 The romantic lie in the brain
Of the sensual man-in-the-street
And the lie of Authority
Whose buildings grope the sky:
There is no such thing as the State
85 And no one exists alone;
Hunger allows no choice
To the citizen or the police;
We must love one another or die.[6]

Defenceless under the night
90 Our world in stupor lies;
Yet, dotted everywhere,
Ironic points of light
Flash out wherever the Just Exchange their messages:
95 May I, composed like them
Of Eros[7] and of dust,

4. Vaslav Nijinsky (1890–1950), dancer and choreographer, was a star of the Russian Ballet, directed by the impresario Sergey Diaghilev (1872–1929).
5. Auden borrowed lines 65–66 from The Diary of Vaslav Nijinsky (1937): "Some politicians are hypocrites like Diaghilev, who does not want universal love, but to be loved alone. I want universal love."
6. In his foreword to the first edition of B. C. Bloomfield's W. H. Auden: A Bibliography (1964), Auden writes:

> Rereading a poem of mine, 1st September, 1939, after it had been published, I came to the line "We must love one another or die" and said to myself: "That's a damned lie! We must die anyway." So, in the next edition, I altered it to "We must love one another and die." This didn't seem to do either, so I cut the stanza. Still no good. The whole poem, I realized, was infected with an incurable dishonesty—and must be scrapped.

The popularity of the poem persuaded Auden to restore it in later editions of his work.
7. Greek god of erotic love; hence, here, sexual love.

Beleaguered by the same
Negation and despair,
Show an affirming flame.

September 1939 1939

In Praise of Limestone

If it form the one landscape that we, the inconstant ones,
Are consistently homesick for, this is chiefly
Because it dissolves in water. Mark these rounded slopes
With their surface fragrance of thyme and, beneath,
5 A secret system of caves and conduits; hear the springs
That spurt out everywhere with a chuckle,
Each filling a private pool for its fish and carving
Its own little ravine whose cliffs entertain
The butterfly and the lizard; examine this region
10 Of short distances and definite places:
What could be more like Mother or a fitter background
For her son, the flirtatious male who lounges
Against a rock in the sunlight, never doubting
That for all his faults he is loved; whose works are but 15 Extensions of his power to charm? From weathered outcrop
To hilltop temple, from appearing waters to Conspicuous fountains, from a wild to a formal vineyard,
Are ingenious but short steps that a child's wish
To receive more attention than his brothers, whether 20 By pleasing or teasing, can easily take.

Watch, then, the band of rivals as they climb up and down
Their steep stone gennels° in twos and threes, at times channels
Arm in arm, but never, thank God, in step; or engaged
On the shady side of a square at midday in 25 Voluble discourse, knowing each other too well to think
There are any important secrets, unable
To conceive a god whose temper tantrums are moral
And not to be pacified by a clever line
Or a good lay: for, accustomed to a stone that responds,
30 They have never had to veil their faces in awe
Of a crater whose blazing fury could not be fixed;
Adjusted to the local needs of valleys
Where everything can be touched or reached by walking,
Their eyes have never looked into infinite space
35 Through the latticework of a nomad's comb; born lucky,
Their legs have never encountered the fungi
And insects of the jungle, the monstrous forms and lives
With which we have nothing, we like to hope, in common.
So, when one of them goes to the bad, the way his mind works
40 Remains comprehensible: to become a pimp

Or deal in fake jewelry or ruin a fine tenor voice
For effects that bring down the house, could happen to all
But the best and the worst of us . . .
That is why, I suppose,
The best and worst never stayed here long but sought
45 Immoderate soils where the beauty was not so external,
The light less public and the meaning of life
Something more than a mad camp. "Come!" cried the granite wastes,
"How evasive is your humour, how accidental
Your kindest kiss, how permanent is death." (Saints-to-be 50 Slipped away sighing.) "Come!" purred the clays and gravels.
"On our plains there is room for armies to drill; rivers
Wait to be tamed and slaves to construct you a tomb
In the grand manner: soft as the earth is mankind and both Need to be altered." (Intendant Caesars[8] rose and 55 Left, slamming the door.) But the really reckless were fetched
By an older colder voice, the oceanic whisper:
"I am the solitude that asks and promises nothing;
That is how I shall set you free. There is no love;
There are only the various envies, all of them sad."
60 They were right, my dear, all those voices were right
And still are; this land is not the sweet home that it looks,
Nor its peace the historical calm of a site
Where something was settled once and for all: A backward
And dilapidated province, connected
65 To the big busy world by a tunnel, with a certain Seedy appeal, is that all it is now? Not quite:
It has a worldly duty which in spite of itself
It does not neglect, but calls into question
All the Great Powers assume; it disturbs our rights. The poet, 70 Admired for his earnest habit of calling
The sun the sun, his mind Puzzle, is made uneasy
By these marble statues which so obviously doubt
His antimythological myth; and these gamins,° street urchins
Pursuing the scientist down the tiled colonnade
75 With such lively offers, rebuke his concern for Nature's Remotest aspects: I, too, am reproached, for what
And how much you know. Not to lose time, not to get caught,
Not to be left behind, not, please! to resemble
The beasts who repeat themselves, or a thing like water 80 Or stone whose conduct can be predicted, these
Are our Common Prayer, whose greatest comfort is music
Which can be made anywhere, is invisible,
And does not smell. In so far as we have to look forward
To death as a fact, no doubt we are right: But if 85 Sins can be forgiven, if bodies rise from the dead,
These modifications of matter into
Innocent athletes and gesticulating fountains,
Made solely for pleasure, make a further point:
The blessed will not care what angle they are regarded from, 90 Having nothing to hide. Dear, I know nothing of

8. I.e., administrative emperors.

Either, but when I try to imagine a faultless love
Or the life to come, what I hear is the murmur
Of underground streams, what I see is a limestone landscape.

May 1948 1951

Their Lonely Betters

As I listened from a beach-chair in the shade
To all the noises that my garden made,
It seemed to me only proper that words
Should be withheld from vegetables and birds.

5 A robin with no Christian name ran through
The Robin-Anthem which was all it knew,
And rustling flowers for some third party waited
To say which pairs, if any, should get mated.

Not one of them was capable of lying,
10 There was not one which knew that it was dying
Or could have with a rhythm or a rhyme
Assumed responsibility for time.

Let them leave language to their lonely betters
Who count some days and long for certain letters;
15 We, too, make noises when we laugh or weep:
Words are for those with promises to keep.

1950 1951

The Shield of Achilles[9]

She looked over his shoulder
For vines and olive trees,
Marble well-governed cities
And ships upon untamed seas,
5 But there on the shining metal
His hands had put instead
An artificial wilderness
And a sky like lead.

9. In books 16–17 of Homer's Iliad, Achilles, the chief Greek hero in the Trojan War, loses his armor when his great friend Patroclus, wearing it, is slain by Hector. While Achilles mourns his friend, his mother, the goddess Thetis, goes to Mt. Olympus to entreat Hephaestos to make new armor for Achilles, whom both she and Hephaestos pity because he is fated to die soon and his life has not been happy. The splendid shield, incorporating gold and silver as well as less precious metals, is described at length in Iliad 18.478–608, the scenes depicted on it constituting an epitome of the universe and human life. Hephaestos portrays on it the earth, the heavens, the sea, and the planets; a city in peace (with a wedding and a trial) and a city at war; country life (including a harvest feast and a grape-gathering), animal life, and the joyful life of young men and women. Around all these scenes, closing them in as the outer border, flows the ocean.

A plain without a feature, bare and brown,
10 No blade of grass, no sign of neighbourhood,
Nothing to eat and nowhere to sit down,
Yet, congregated on its blankness, stood
An unintelligible multitude,
A million eyes, a million boots in line,
15 Without expression, waiting for a sign.

Out of the air a voice without a face
Proved by statistics that some cause was just
In tones as dry and level as the place:
No one was cheered and nothing was discussed;
20 Column by column in a cloud of dust
They marched away enduring a belief
Whose logic brought them, somewhere else, to grief.

She looked over his shoulder
For ritual pieties,
25 White flower-garlanded heifers,
Libation and sacrifice,[1]
But there on the shining metal
Where the altar should have been,
She saw by his flickering forge-light
30 Quite another scene.

Barbed wire enclosed an arbitrary spot
Where bored officials lounged (one cracked a joke)
And sentries sweated for the day was hot:
A crowd of ordinary decent folk
35 Watched from without and neither moved nor spoke
As three pale figures were led forth and bound
To three posts driven upright in the ground.

The mass and majesty of this world, all
That carries weight and always weighs the same
40 Lay in the hands of others; they were small
And could not hope for help and no help came:
What their foes liked to do was done, their shame
Was all the worst could wish; they lost their pride
And died as men before their bodies died.

45 She looked over his shoulder
For athletes at their games,
Men and women in a dance
Moving their sweet limbs
Quick, quick, to music,
50 But there on the shining shield
His hands had set no dancing-floor
But a weed-choked field.

1. Lines 23–26: cf. John Keats, "Ode on a Grecian Urn," lines 31–34 (p. 939). Libation: sacrifice involving wine or other liquid.

A ragged urchin, aimless and alone,
  Loitered about that vacancy, a bird
55 Flew up to safety from his well-aimed stone:
  That girls are raped, that two boys knife a third,
  Were axioms to him, who'd never heard
Of any world where promises were kept,
Or one could weep because another wept.

60 The thin-lipped armourer,
  Hephaestos hobbled away,
Thetis of the shining breasts
  Cried out in dismay
At what the god had wrought
65 To please her son, the strong
Iron-hearted man-slaying Achilles
  Who would not live long.

1952 1955

A. D. HOPE
1907–2000

Australia

A Nation of trees, drab green and desolate grey
In the field uniform of modern wars,
Darkens her hills, those endless, outstretched paws
Of Sphinx[1] demolished or stone lion worn away.

5 They call her a young country, but they lie:
She is the last of lands, the emptiest,
A woman beyond her change of life,[2] a breast
Still tender but within the womb is dry.

Without songs, architecture, history:
10 The emotions and superstitions of younger lands,
Her rivers of water drown among inland sands,
The river of her immense stupidity

Floods her monotonous tribes from Cairns to Perth.[3]
In them at last the ultimate men arrive
15 Whose boast is not: "we live" but "we survive."
A type who will inhabit the dying earth.

1. A reference to the monumental stone sphinx of Egypt.
2. Menopause; i.e., she is past her childbearing years.
3. I.e., from one end of the continent to the other. Cairns is at the far northeast of Australia, Perth at the southwest.

And her five cities, like five teeming sores,
Each drains her: a vast parasite robber-state
Where second-hand Europeans pullulate° breed
20 Timidly on the edge of alien shores.

Yet there are some like me turn gladly home
From the lush jungle of modern thought, to find
The Arabian desert of the human mind,
Hoping, if still from the deserts the prophets come,

25 Such savage and scarlet as no green hills dare
Springs in that waste, some spirit which escapes
The learned doubt, the chatter of cultured apes
Which is called civilization over there.

1939

Imperial[4] Adam

Imperial Adam, naked in the dew,
Felt his brown flanks and found the rib was gone.
Puzzled he turned and saw where, two and two,
The mighty spoor of Jahweh° marked the lawn. Jehovah, God

5 Then he remembered through mysterious sleep
The surgeon fingers probing at the bone,
The voice so far away, so rich and deep:
"It is not good for him to live alone."[5]

Turning once more he found Man's counterpart
10 In tender parody breathing at his side.
He knew her at first sight, he knew by heart
Her allegory of sense unsatisfied.

The pawpaw[6] drooped its golden breasts above
Less generous than the honey of her flesh;
15 The innocent sunlight showed the place of love;
The dew on its dark hairs winked crisp and fresh.

This plump gourd severed from his virile root,
She promised on the turf of Paradise
Delicious pulp of the forbidden fruit;
20 Sly as the snake she loosed her sinuous thighs,

And waking, smiled up at him from the grass;
Her breasts rose softly and he heard her sigh—
From all the beasts whose pleasant task it was
In Eden to increase and multiply

4. I.e., emperor.
5. Genesis 2.18: "And the Lord said, It is not good that the man should be alone." Eve was created from one of Adam's ribs (cf. line 6).
6. Papaya tree.

25 Adam had learned the jolly deed of kind:
He took her in his arms and there and then,
Like the clean beasts, embracing from behind,
Began in joy to found the breed of men.

Then from the spurt of seed within her broke 30 Her terrible and triumphant female cry,
Split upward by the sexual lightning stroke.
It was the beasts now who stood watching by:

The gravid elephant, the calving hind,
The breeding bitch, the she-ape big with young 35 Were the first gentle midwives of mankind;
The teeming lioness rasped her with her tongue;

The proud vicuña[7] nuzzled her as she slept
Lax on the grass; and Adam watching too
Saw how her dumb breasts at their ripening wept,
40 The great pod of her belly swelled and grew,

And saw its water break, and saw, in fear,
Its quaking muscles in the act of birth,
Between her legs a pigmy face appear,
And the first murderer[8] lay upon the earth.

1955

Advice to Young Ladies

A.U.C.[9] 334: about this date
For a sexual misdemeanour, which she denied,
The vestal virgin[1] Postumia was tried.
Livy records it among affairs of state.

5 They let her off: it seems she was perfectly pure;
The charge arose because some thought her talk
Too witty for a young girl, her eyes, her walk
Too lively, her clothes too smart to be demure.

The Pontifex Maximus, summing up the case,
10 Warned her in future to abstain from jokes,
To wear less modish and more pious frocks.
She left the court reprieved, but in disgrace.

7. Species of wild llama, a camel-like animal.
8. Cf. Genesis 4: "And Adam knew Eve his wife; and she conceived, and bare Cain . . . and it came to pass . . . that Cain rose up against Abel his brother, and slew him."
9. Ab urbe Condita, "from the founding of the city" (Latin); the city is Rome, traditionally founded in 753 B.C.E. In his History of Rome from its Foundation, the Roman historian Livy (59 B.C.E.–17 C.E.) records the incident narrated in the first three stanzas.
1. One of the young, female priests who tended the shrine of Vesta, goddess of the hearth. They were governed by the Pontifex Maximus (line 9), chief priest of the Roman religion.

What then? With her the annalist° is less — historian
Concerned than what the men achieved that year:
15 Plots, quarrels, crimes, with oratory to spare!
I see Postumia with her dowdy dress,

Stiff mouth and listless step; I see her strive
To give dull answers. She had to knuckle down.
A vestal virgin who scandalized that town
20 Had fair trial, then they buried her alive.[2]

Alive, bricked up in suffocating dark,
A ration of bread, a pitcher if she was dry,
Preserved the body they did not wish to die
Until her mind was quenched to the last spark.

25 How many the black maw has swallowed in its time!
Spirited girls who would not know their place;
Talented girls who found that the disgrace
Of being a woman made genius a crime;

How many others, who would not kiss the rod[3]
30 Domestic bullying broke or public shame?
Pagan or Christian, it was much the same:
Husbands, St. Paul declared,[4] rank next to God.

Livy and Paul, it may be, never knew
That Rome was doomed; each spoke of her with pride.
35 Tacitus,[5] writing after both had died,
Showed that whole fabric rotten through and through.

Historians spend their lives and lavish ink
Explaining how great commonwealths collapse
From great defects of policy—perhaps 40 The cause is sometimes simpler than they think.

It may not seem so grave an act to break
Postumia's spirit as Galileo's,[6] to gag
Hypatia as crush Socrates,[7] or drag
Joan as Giordano Bruno[8] to the stake.

45 Can we be sure? Have more states perished, then,
For having shackled the inquiring mind,

2. As punishment for breaking her vows of chastity.
3. As the symbol of obedience and chastisement.
4. In Ephesians 5.22: "Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord."
5. Roman historian (ca. 77–117), whose Histories criticize the degeneracy of the times as exemplified by three Roman emperors who ruled and were successively deposed in 68–69.
6. In 1633, the Italian astronomer Galileo Galilei was forced by the Roman Catholic Church to condemn his own scientific conclusions and was for a time imprisoned.
7. In 415, Hypatia, a beautiful and learned Egyptian woman, was murdered, allegedly by order of an archbishop. In 399 B.C.E., Socrates was sentenced to die by poison because of his supposedly subversive teachings.
8. Both were burned at the stake, Joan of Arc in 1431 for heresy and sorcery, Bruno in 1600 for theological and scientific heresies.

Than whose who, in their folly not less blind,
Trusted the servile womb to breed free men?

1966

Inscription for a War

Stranger, go tell the Spartans
we died here obedient to their commands.
—Inscription at Thermopylae[9]

Linger not, stranger; shed no tear;
Go back to those who sent us here.

We are the young they drafted out
To wars their folly brought about.

5 Go tell those old men, safe in bed,
We took their orders and are dead.

1981

LOUIS MACNEICE
1907–1963

The Sunlight on the Garden[1]

The sunlight on the garden
Hardens and grows cold,
We cannot cage the minute
Within its nets of gold,
5 When all is told
We cannot beg for pardon.

Our freedom as free lances
Advances towards its end;
The earth compels, upon it
10 Sonnets and birds descend;
And soon, my friend,
We shall have no time for dances.

The sky was good for flying
Defying the church bells

9. Thermopylae takes its name from hot baths near the pass, twenty-five feet wide at its narrowest, between Thessaly and Locris in Greece. This place was defended by Leonides and three hundred Spartans (with seven hundred Thespians) against a huge Persian army led by Xerxes. The Persians infiltrated the Greek line by treachery, and the Spartans were wiped out.

1. MacNeice's farewell to his first wife, Mary (née Ezra), once the best dancer in Oxford (see line 12).

15 And every evil iron
Siren and what it tells:
The earth compels,
We are dying, Egypt, dying[2]

And not expecting pardon,
20 Hardened in heart anew,
But glad to have sat under
Thunder and rain with you,
And grateful too
For sunlight on the garden.

1938

Bagpipe Music[3]

It's no go the merrygoround, it's no go the rickshaw,
All we want is a limousine and a ticket for the peepshow.
Their knickers[4] are made of crêpe-de-chine, their shoes are made of python,
Their halls are lined with tiger rugs and their walls with heads of bison.

5 John MacDonald found a corpse, put it under the sofa,
Waited till it came to life and hit it with a poker,
Sold its eyes for souvenirs, sold its blood for whiskey,
Kept its bones for dumbbells to use when he was fifty.

It's no go the Yogi-man, it's no go Blavatsky[5]
10 All we want is a bank balance and a bit of skirt in a taxi.

Annie MacDougall went to milk, caught her foot in the heather,
Woke to hear a dance record playing of Old Vienna.
It's no go your maidenheads, it's no go your culture,
All we want is a Dunlop tyre and the devil mend the puncture.

15 The Laird o' Phelps spent Hogmanay[6] declaring he was sober, Counted his feet to prove the fact and found he had one foot over.
Mrs. Carmichael had her fifth, looked at the job with repulsion,
Said to the midwife "Take it away; I'm through with overproduction."

It's no go the gossip column, it's no go the Ceilidh,[7]
20 All we want is a mother's help and a sugar-stick for the baby.

2. From Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra 4.16.43, Antony's speech to Cleopatra: "I am dying, Egypt, dying."
3. The poem is set in Scotland in the 1930s, the years of the Depression, years that led up to the Munich crisis of 1938 and to the outbreak of World War II in 1939.
4. Women's panties.
5. Madame Helena Petrovna Blavatsky (1831–1891), Russian occultist and theosophist, in whose writings there was renewed interest in the 1930s.
6. New Year's Eve (Scottish).
7. Pronounced kaley; Gaelic term for a social gathering with traditional music, storytelling, or dancing.

Willie Murray cut his thumb, couldn't count the damage,
Took the hide of an Ayrshire cow and used it for a bandage.
His brother caught three hundred cran[8] when the seas were lavish,
Threw the bleeders back in the sea and went upon the parish.[9]

25 It's no go the Herring Board, it's no go the Bible,
All we want is a packet of fags° when our hands are idle. cigarettes

It's no go the picture palace, it's no go the stadium,
It's no go the country cot° with a pot of pink geraniums, cottage
It's no go the Government grants, it's no go the elections,
30 Sit on your arse for fifty years and hang your hat on a pension.

It's no go my honey love, it's no go my poppet;
Work your hands from day to day, the winds will blow the profit.
The glass° is falling hour by hour, the glass will fall forever, barometer
But if you break the bloody glass you won't hold up the weather.

1937 1938

From Autumn Journal[1]

IV

September has come and I wake
And I think with joy how whatever, now or in future, the system
Nothing whatever can take
The people away, there will always be people
5 For friends or for lovers though perhaps
The conditions of love will be changed and its vices diminished
And affection not lapse
To narrow possessiveness, jealousy founded on vanity.
September has come, it is hers
10 Whose vitality leaps in the autumn,
Whose nature prefers
Trees without leaves and a fire in the fire-place;
So I give her this month and the next
Though the whole of my year should be hers who has rendered already 15 So many of its days intolerable or perplexed
But so many more so happy;
Who has left a scent on my life and left my walls
Dancing over and over with her shadow,
Whose hair is twined in all my waterfalls
20 And all of London littered with remembered kisses.
So I am glad
That life contains her with her moods and moments
More shifting and more transient than I had

8. A measure of just-caught herrings (about 750).
9. I.e., went on relief.
1. A book-length "documentary" poem covering events (public and, as here, private) in autumn 1938.

Yet thought of as being integral to beauty;
25 Whose mind is like the wind on a sea of wheat,
Whose eyes are candour,
And assurance in her feet
Like a homing pigeon never by doubt diverted.
To whom I send my thanks
30 That the air has become shot silk, the streets are music,
And that the ranks
Of men are ranks of men, no more of cyphers.° zeros
So that if now alone
I must pursue this life, it will not be only
35 A drag from numbered stone to numbered stone
But a ladder of angels, river turning tidal.
Off-hand, at times hysterical, abrupt,
You are one I always shall remember,
Whom cant can never corrupt
40 Nor argument disinherit.
Frivolous, always in a hurry, forgetting the address,
Frowning too often, taking enormous notice
Of hats and backchat—how could I assess
The thing that makes you different?
45 You whom I remember glad or tired,
Smiling in drink or scintillating anger,
Inopportunely desired
On boats, on trains, on roads when walking.
Sometimes untidy, often elegant,
50 So easily hurt, so readily responsive,
To whom a trifle could be an irritant
Or could be balm and manna.° food (from heaven)
Whose words would tumble over each other and pelt
From pure excitement,
55 Whose fingers curl and melt
When you were friendly.
I shall remember you in bed with bright
Eyes or in a café stirring coffee
Abstractedly and on your plate the white
60 Smoking stub your lips had touched with crimson.
And I shall remember how your words could hurt
Because they were so honest
And even your lies were able to assert
Integrity of purpose.
65 And it is on the strength of knowing you
I reckon generous feeling more important
Than the mere deliberating what to do
When neither the pros nor cons affect the pulses.
And though I have suffered from your special strength
70 Who never flatter for points nor fake responses
I should be proud if I could evolve at length
An equal thrust and pattern.

1938

London Rain

The rain of London pimples
The ebony street with white
And the neon-lamps of London
Stain the canals of night
5 And the park becomes a jungle
In the alchemy of night.

My wishes turn to violent
Horses black as coal—
The randy mares of fancy,
10 The stallions of the soul—
Eager to take the fences
That fence about my soul.

Across the countless chimneys
The horses ride and across 15 The country to the channel
Where warning beacons toss,
To a place where God and No-God
Play at pitch and toss.

Whichever wins I am happy
20 For God will give me bliss
But No-God will absolve me
From all I do amiss
And I need not suffer conscience
If the world was made amiss.

25 Under God we can reckon
On pardon when we fall
But if we are under No-God
Nothing will matter at all,
Adultery and murder
30 Will count for nothing at all.

So reinforced by logic
As having nothing to lose
My lust goes riding horseback
To ravish where I choose,
35 To burgle all the turrets
Of beauty as I choose.

But now the rain gives over
Its dance upon the town,
Logic and lust together
40 Come dimly tumbling down,
And neither God nor No-God
Is either up or down.

The argument was wilful,
The alternatives untrue,
45 We need no metaphysics
To sanction what we do
Or to muffle us in comfort
From what we did not do.

Whether the living river
50 Began in bog or lake,
The world is what was given,
The world is what we make.
And we only can discover
Life in the life we make.

55 So let the water sizzle
Upon the gleaming slates,
There will be sunshine after
When the rain abates
And rain returning duly
60 When the sun abates.

My wishes now come homeward,
Their gallopings in vain,
Logic and lust are quiet
And again it starts to rain;
65 Falling asleep I listen
To the falling London rain.

1941

Star-gazer

Forty-two years ago (to me if to no one else
The number is of some interest) it was a brilliant starry night
And the westward train was empty and had no corridors
So darting from side to side I could catch the unwonted° sight unaccustomed
5 Of those almost intolerably bright Holes, punched in the sky, which excited me partly because Of their Latin names and partly because I had read in the textbooks
How very far off they were, it seemed their light
Had left them (some at least) long years before I was.

10 And this remembering now I mark that what Light was leaving some of them at least then,
Forty-two years ago, will never arrive
In time for me to catch it, which light when
It does get here may find that there is not 15 Anyone left alive

To run from side to side in a late night train
Admiring it and adding noughts in vain.

January 1963 1967

JOSEPHINE JACOBSEN
1908–2003

The Primer

I said in my youth
"they lie to children"
but it is not so.
Mother my goose[1] I know
5 told me the truth.

I remember that treetop minute.
That was a baby is a woman now;
in a rough wind, it was a broken bough brought down the cradle with the baby in it.

10 I had a dumpy friend (you would not know his name, though he indeed had several), after his fall lay in live pieces by my garden wall in a vain tide of epaulets and manes.

I had another friend (and you would know her name),
15 took up her candle on her way to bed.
She had a steady hand and a yellow head up the tall stairwell, but the chopper came.

So small they meant to run away, from sightless eyes three mice ran toward my mind instead; 20 I seized the shapely knife. They fled in scarlet haste, the blind and tailless mice.

Cock robin was three birds of a single feather.
Three times cock robin fell when a breeze blew;
eye of fly watched; arrow of sparrow flew:
25 three times cock robin died in the same weather.

Sheep, cows, meander in the corn and meadow;
soundless the horn, fine, fine my seam;
nothing I feed, but rosy grows my cream.
My blue boy sleeps under the stack's huge shadow.

1974

1. As in the Mother Goose nursery rhymes. Each stanza of the poem rewrites one of these rhymes.

Bush

It is the sound of lions lapping.
They drink themselves from the gold shapes that waver and grow shallower.

5 Blue peels itself in the waterhole; it is the sun coming.
Crouched, the lions meet their matches at the surface.

The foxy jackals are far off
10 but the vultures cloud the flat treetop;
the drum of the zebra's body
is lined with red sunrise.

The jackals and vultures are waiting for what happened under the moon.
15 The lions are through with it; they lift their dripping chins and look ahead.

It is six o'clock on Christmas morning.
Now the lions have stopped lapping
the bush makes no sound
20 the vultures shift, but without sound.

The day is perfectly seamless.
Slowly the lions move like pistons past the dry grasses;
the jackals do not move yet;
the vultures show patience.

25 The lions pass a thornbush and melt.
Though the whole day is unbroken
the passage of the sun will represent heaven;
the bones will represent time.

1974

Hourglass

"Flawless" is the word, no doubt, for this third of May that has landed on the grounds of Mayfair,
the Retirement Community par excellence.

Right behind the wheels of the mower, grass
5 explodes again, the bare trees most tenderly push out their chartreuse tips.

Bottle bees are back. Feckless, reckless,
stingless, they probably have a function.
Above the cardinal, scarlet on the rim

10 of the birdbath, twinning himself,
they hover, cruise the flowers, mate.
The tiny water catches the sky.

On the circular inner road, the lady untangles the poodle's leash from her cane.
15 He is wild to chase the splendid smells.

The small man with the small smile, rapidly steering his Amigo,[2]
bowls past. She would wave, but can't.

All around, birds and sexual flowers
20 are intent on color, flight, fragrance.
The gardener sweeps his sweaty face with a khaki sleeve. His tulips are shined black at their centers. They have come along nicely.

He is young and will be gone before dark.

25 The man in the Amigo has in mind a May a mirror of this, but unobtainable
as the touch of the woman in that glass.

The sun's force chills him. But the lady with the curly poodle could melt her cane
30 in the very heat of her precious pleasure.

She perfectly understands the calendar and the sun's passage. But she grips the leash and leans on the air that is hers and here.

1995

THEODORE ROETHKE
1908–1963

Root Cellar

Nothing would sleep in that cellar, dank as a ditch,
Bulbs broke out of boxes hunting for chinks in the dark,
Shoots dangled and drooped,
Lolling obscenely from mildewed crates,

2. Brand of sport utility vehicle.

5 Hung down long yellow evil necks, like tropical snakes.
And what a congress of stinks!
Roots ripe as old bait,
Pulpy stems, rank, silo-rich,
Leaf-mold, manure, lime, piled against slippery planks.
10 Nothing would give up life:
Even the dirt kept breathing a small breath.

1948

Child on Top of a Greenhouse[1]

The wind billowing out the seat of my britches,
My feet crackling splinters of glass and dried putty,
The half-grown chrysanthemums staring up like accusers,
Up through the streaked glass, flashing with sunlight,
5 A few white clouds all rushing eastward,
A line of elms plunging and tossing like horses,
And everyone, everyone pointing up and shouting!

1948

My Papa's Waltz

The whiskey on your breath
Could make a small boy dizzy;
But I hung on like death:
Such waltzing was not easy.

5 We romped until the pans
Slid from the kitchen shelf;
My mother's countenance
Could not unfrown itself.

The hand that held my wrist
10 Was battered on one knuckle;
At every step you missed
My right ear scraped a buckle.

You beat time on my head
With a palm caked hard by dirt,
15 Then waltzed me off to bed
Still clinging to your shirt.

1948

1. Roethke, author of a series of "greenhouse poems," called the greenhouse "my symbol for the whole of life, a womb, a heaven-on-earth." His father, a florist, owned a greenhouse in Saginaw, Michigan.

The Lost Son

1. The Flight

At Woodlawn[2] I heard the dead cry:
I was lulled by the slamming of iron,
A slow drip over stones,
Toads brooding wells.
5 All the leaves stuck out their tongues;
I shook the softening chalk of my bones,
Saying,
Snail, snail, glister me forward,
Bird, soft-sigh me home,
10 Worm, be with me.
This is my hard time.

Fished in an old wound,
The soft pond of repose;
Nothing nibbled my line,
15 Not even the minnows came.

Sat in an empty house
Watching shadows crawl,
Scratching.
There was one fly.

20 Voice, come out of the silence.
Say something.
Appear in the form of a spider
Or a moth beating the curtain.

Tell me:
25 Which is the way I take;
Out of what door do I go,
Where and to whom?

Dark hollows said, lee° to the wind, shelter
The moon said, back of an eel,
30 The salt said, look by the sea,
Your tears are not enough praise,
You will find no comfort here,
In the kingdom of bang and blab.

Running lightly over spongy ground,
35 Past the pasture of flat stones,
The three elms,
The sheep strewn on a field,
Over a rickety bridge
Toward the quick-water, wrinkling and rippling.

2. The New York City cemetery where Roethke's father was buried.

40 Hunting along the river,
Down among the rubbish, the bug-riddled foliage,
By the muddy pond-edge, by the bog-holes,
By the shrunken lake, hunting, in the heat of summer.

The shape of a rat?
45 It's bigger than that.
It's less than a leg
And more than a nose,
Just under the water
It usually goes.

50 Is it soft like a mouse?
Can it wrinkle its nose?
Could it come in the house
On the tips of its toes?

Take the skin of a cat
55 And the back of an eel,
Then roll them in grease,—
That's the way it would feel.

It's sleek as an otter
With wide webby toes
60 Just under the water
It usually goes.

2. The Pit

Where do the roots go?
Look down under the leaves.
Who put the moss there?
65 These stones have been here too long.
Who stunned the dirt into noise?
Ask the mole, he knows.[3]
I feel the slime of a wet nest.
Beware Mother Mildew.
70 Nibble again, fish nerves.

3. The Gibber[4]

At the wood's mouth,
By the cave's door,
I listened to something
I had heard before.

75 Dogs of the groin
Barked and howled,
The sun was against me,
The moon would not have me.

3. Cf. William Blake, The Book of Thel, lines 1–2: "Does the Eagle know what is in the pit? / Or wilt thou go ask the Mole?" (p. 737).

4. A possible triple pun: meaningless utterance, the pouch at the base of a flower's calyx, and working-class slang for a key.

The weeds whined,
80 The snakes cried,
The cows and briars
Said to me: Die.

What a small song. What slow clouds. What dark water.
Hath the rain a father?[5] All the caves are ice. Only the snow's here.
85 I'm cold. I'm cold all over. Rub me in father and mother.
Fear was my father, Father Fear.
His look drained the stones.

What gliding shape
Beckoning through halls,
90 Stood poised on the stair,
Fell dreamily down?

From the mouths of jugs
Perched on many shelves,
I saw substance flowing
95 That cold morning.

Like a slither of eels
That watery cheek
As my own tongue kissed
My lips awake.

100 Is this the storm's heart? The ground is unstilling itself.
My veins are running nowhere. Do the bones cast out their fire?
Is the seed leaving the old bed? These buds are live as birds.
Where, where are the tears of the world?
Let the kisses resound, flat like a butcher's palm;
105 Let the gestures freeze; our doom is already decided.
All the windows are burning! What's left of my life?
I want the old rage, the lash of primordial milk!
Goodbye, goodbye, old stones, the time-order is going,
I have married my hands to perpetual agitation,
110 I run, I run to the whistle of money.

Money money money
Water water water

How cool the grass is.
Has the bird left?
115 The stalk still sways.
Has the worm a shadow?
What do the clouds say?

These sweeps of light undo me.
Look, look, the ditch is running white!
120 I've more veins than a tree!
Kiss me, ashes, I'm falling through a dark swirl.

5. Quoted from Job 38.28.

4. The Return

The way to the boiler was dark,
Dark all the way,
Over slippery cinders
125 Through the long greenhouse.

The roses kept breathing in the dark.
They had many mouths to breathe with.
My knees made little winds underneath
Where the weeds slept.

130 There was always a single light
Swinging by the fire-pit,
Where the fireman pulled out roses,
The big roses, the big bloody clinkers.[6]

Once I stayed all night.
135 The light in the morning came slowly over the white Snow.
There were many kinds of cool
Air.
Then came steam.

140 Pipe-knock.

Scurry of warm over small plants.
Ordnung![7] ordnung!
Papa is coming!

A fine haze moved off the leaves;
145 Frost melted on far panes;
The rose, the chrysanthemum turned toward the light.
Even the hushed forms, the bent yellowy weeds
Moved in a slow up-sway.

5. "It was beginning winter"

It was beginning winter,
150 An in-between time,
The landscape still partly brown:
The bones of weeds kept swinging in the wind,
Above the blue snow.

It was beginning winter,
155 The light moved slowly over the frozen field,
Over the dry seed-crowns,
The beautiful surviving bones
Swinging in the wind.

6. Large cinders, the remains of burned coal.
7. Order! (German).

Light traveled over the wide field;
160 Stayed.
The weeds stopped swinging.
The mind moved, not alone,
Through the clear air, in the silence.

Was it light?
165 Was it light within?
Was it light within light?
Stillness becoming alive,
Yet still?

A lively understandable spirit
170 Once entertained you.
It will come again.
Be still.
Wait.

1948

Elegy for Jane

My Student, Thrown by a Horse

I remember the neckcurls, limp and damp as tendrils;
And her quick look, a sidelong pickerel smile;
And how, once startled into talk, the light syllables leaped for her,
And she balanced in the delight of her thought,
5 A wren, happy, tail into the wind,
Her song trembling the twigs and small branches.
The shade sang with her;
The leaves, their whispers turned to kissing;
And the mold sang in the bleached valleys under the rose.

10 Oh, when she was sad, she cast herself down into such a pure depth,
Even a father could not find her:
Scraping her cheek against straw;
Stirring the clearest water.
My sparrow, you are not here,
15 Waiting like a fern, making a spiny shadow.
The sides of wet stones cannot console me,
Nor the moss, wound with the last light.

If only I could nudge you from this sleep,
My maimed darling, my skittery pigeon.
20 Over this damp grave I speak the words of my love:
I, with no rights in this matter,
Neither father nor lover.

1953

The Waking

I wake to sleep, and take my waking slow.
I feel my fate in what I cannot fear.
I learn by going where I have to go.

We think by feeling. What is there to know?
5 I hear my being dance from ear to ear.
I wake to sleep, and take my waking slow.

Of those so close beside me, which are you?
God bless the Ground! I shall walk softly there,
And learn by going where I have to go.

10 Light takes the Tree; but who can tell us how?
The lowly worm climbs up a winding stair;
I wake to sleep, and take my waking slow.

Great Nature has another thing to do
To you and me; so take the lively air,
15 And, lovely, learn by going where to go.

This shaking keeps me steady. I should know.
What falls away is always. And is near.
I wake to sleep, and take my waking slow.
I learn by going where I have to go.

1953

I Knew a Woman

I knew a woman, lovely in her bones,
When small birds sighed, she would sigh back at them;
Ah, when she moved, she moved more ways than one:
The shapes a bright container can contain!
5 Of her choice virtues only gods should speak,
Or English poets who grew up on Greek
(I'd have them sing in chorus, cheek to cheek).

How well her wishes went! She stroked my chin,
She taught me Turn, and Counter-turn, and Stand;[8]
10 She taught me Touch, that undulant white skin;
I nibbled meekly from her proffered hand;
She was the sickle; I, poor I, the rake,
Coming behind her for her pretty sake
(But what prodigious mowing we did make).

8. Translations of the Greek literary terms strophe, antistrophe, and epode (more properly, "the song that follows"), which are the three parts of the Pindaric ode.

15 Love likes a gander, and adores a goose:
Her full lips pursed, the errant note to seize;
She played it quick, she played it light and loose,
My eyes, they dazzled at her flowing knees;
Her several parts could keep a pure repose,
20 Or one hip quiver with a mobile nose
(She moved in circles, and those circles moved).

Let seed be grass, and grass turn into hay:
I'm martyr to a motion not my own;
What's freedom for? To know eternity.
25 I swear she cast a shadow white as stone.
But who would count eternity in days?
These old bones live to learn her wanton ways:
(I measure time by how a body sways).

1958

Wish for a Young Wife

My lizard, my lively writher,
May your limbs never wither,
May the eyes in your face
Survive the green ice
5 Of envy's mean gaze;
May you live out your life
Without hate, without grief,
And your hair ever blaze,
In the sun, in the sun,
10 When I am undone,
When I am no one.

1964

In a Dark Time

In a dark time, the eye begins to see,
I meet my shadow in the deepening shade;
I hear my echo in the echoing wood—
A lord of nature weeping to a tree.
5 I live between the heron and the wren,[9]
Beasts of the hill and serpents of the den.

What's madness but nobility of soul
At odds with circumstance? The day's on fire!
I know the purity of pure despair,
10 My shadow pinned against a sweating wall.

9. The heron is a large, solitary wading bird, the wren a small, sociable songbird.

That place among the rocks—is it a cave,
Or winding path? The edge is what I have.

A steady storm of correspondences!
A night flowing with birds, a ragged moon,
15 And in broad day the midnight come again!
A man goes far to find out what he is—
Death of the self in a long, tearless night,
All natural shapes blazing unnatural light.

Dark, dark my light, and darker my desire.
20 My soul, like some heat-maddened summer fly,
Keeps buzzing at the sill. Which I is I?
A fallen man, I climb out of my fear.
The mind enters itself, and God the mind,
And one is One, free in the tearing[1] wind.

1964

RICHARD WRIGHT
1908–1960

From Haiku: This Other World

21

On winter mornings
The candle shows faint markings
Of the teeth of rats.

31

In the falling snow
A laughing boy holds out his palms
Until they are white.

120

Crying and crying,
Melodious strings of geese
Passing a graveyard.

1. With a pun on "tearless" (line 17), according to a note of Roethke's.

490

Waking from a nap
And hearing summer rain falling,—
What else has happened?

762

Droning autumn rain:
A boy lines up toy soldiers
For a big battle.

783

I cannot find it,
That very first violet
Seen from my window.

ca. 1960 2000

MALCOLM LOWRY
1909–1957

Delirium in Vera Cruz[1]

Where has tenderness gone, he asked the mirror
Of the Biltmore Hotel, cuarto° 216. Alas, room
Can its reflection lean against the glass
Too, wondering where I have gone, into what horror?
5 Is that it staring at me now with terror
Behind your frail tilted barrier? Tenderness
Was here, in this very bedroom, in this Place, its form seen, cries heard, by you. What error
Is here? Am I that rashed image?
10 Is this the ghost of the love you reflected?
Now with a background of tequila, stubs, dirty collars,
Sodium perborate,[2] and a scrawled page

1. The chief seaport of Mexico; now Veracruz. Canadian-born Lowry spent nineteen months in Mexico, where his most celebrated work, the novel Under the Volcano (1947), was set. The state of Lowry's poem texts is extraordinarily complicated, and the versions here are chosen from among several, offered either by his first editor, Earle Birney (whose 1962 selected edition included some questionable changes), or the editor of the 1992 Collected Poetry of Malcolm Lowry, Kathleen Sherf. This poem is a Birney version.
2. A water-soluble solid used as a bleach and as an antiseptic.

To the dead, telephone off the hook? In rage
He smashed all the glass in the room. (Bill: $50.)

1936 1962

The Wild Cherry[3]

We put a prop beneath the sagging bough
That yearned over the beach, setting four stones
Cairn-like against it, but we thought our groans
Were the wild cherry's, for it was as though
5 Utterly set with broken seams on doom
It listed wilfully down like a mast,
Stubborn as some smashed recalcitrant boom
That will neither be cut loose nor made fast.
Going—going—it was yet no bidder
10 For life, whether for such sober healing
We left its dead branches to consider
Until its sunward pulse renewed, feeling
The passionate hatred of that tree
Whose longing was to wash away to sea.

1940–47 1962, 1992

Eye-Opener[4]

How like a man, is Man, who rises late
And gazes on his unwashed dinner plate
And gazes on the bottles, empty too,
All gulphed in last night's loud long how-do-you-do,
5 —Although one glass yet holds a gruesome bait—
How like to Man is this man and his fate—
Still drunk and stumbling through the rusty trees
To breakfast on stale rum sardines and peas.

1953 1962, 1992

Strange Type[5]

I wrote: in the dark cavern of our birth.
The printer had it tavern, which seems better:
But herein lies the subject of our mirth,
Since on the next page death appears as dearth.

3. Sherf version.
4. Sherf version.
5. The title is Birney's; Lowry left the poem untitled. Though Sherf's punctuation is probably more accurate, Birney's version is given here for its reading of the last word, "bitter," which seems more likely than Sherf's "better."

5 So it may be that God's word was distraction,
Which to our strange type appears destruction,
Which is bitter.

1946–54 1962

STEPHEN SPENDER
1909–1995

I Think Continually of Those Who Were Truly Great

I think continually of those who were truly great.
Who, from the womb, remembered the soul's history
Through corridors of light where the hours are suns
Endless and singing. Whose lovely ambition
5 Was that their lips, still touched with fire,
Should tell of the Spirit clothed from head to foot in song.
And who hoarded from the Spring branches
The desires falling across their bodies like blossoms.

What is precious is never to forget
10 The essential delight of the blood drawn from ageless springs
Breaking through rocks in worlds before our earth.
Never to deny its pleasure in the morning simple light
Nor its grave evening demand for love.
Never to allow gradually the traffic to smother
15 With noise and fog the flowering of the spirit.

Near the snow, near the sun, in the highest fields
See how these names are fêted° by the waving grass honored
And by the streamers of white cloud
And whispers of wind in the listening sky.
20 The names of those who in their lives fought for life
Who wore at their hearts the fire's centre.
Born of the sun they travelled a short while towards the sun,
And left the vivid air signed with their honour.

1933

Ultima Ratio Regum[1]

The guns spell money's ultimate reason
In letters of lead on the Spring hillside.
But the boy lying dead under the olive trees
Was too young and too silly

1. Kings' ultimate reason, i.e., for taking action (Latin).

5 To have been notable to their important eye.
He was a better target for a kiss.

When he lived, tall factory hooters° never summoned him — sirens
Nor did restaurant plate-glass doors revolve to wave him in.
His name never appeared in the papers.
10 The world maintained its traditional wall
Round the dead with their gold sunk deep as a well,
Whilst his life, intangible as a Stock Exchange rumour, drifted outside.

O too lightly he threw down his cap
One day when the breeze threw petals from the trees.
15 The unflowering wall sprouted with guns,
Machine-gun anger quickly scythed the grasses;
Flags and leaves fell from hands and branches;
The tweed cap rotted in the nettles.

Consider his life which was valueless
20 In terms of employment, hotel ledgers, news files.
Consider. One bullet in ten thousand kills a man.
Ask. Was so much expenditure justified
On the death of one so young, and so silly
Lying under the olive trees, O world, O death?

1939

Seascape

(In Memoriam, M.A.S.)

There are some days the happy ocean lies
Like an unfingered harp, below the land.
Afternoon gilds all the silent wires
Into a burning music for the eyes.
5 On mirrors flashing between fine-strung fires
The shore, heaped up with roses, horses, spires,
Wanders on water, walking above ribbed sand.

The motionlessness of the hot sky tires
And a sigh, like a woman's, from inland
10 Brushes the instrument with shadowing hand
Drawing across its wires some gull's sharp cries
Or bell, or shout, from distant, hedged-in shires;° — counties
These, deep as anchors, the hushing wave buries.

Then from the shore, two zig-zag butterflies,
15 Like errant dog-roses, cross the bright strand
Spiraling over sea in foolish gyres° — spiral turnings
Until they fall into reflected skies.
They drown. Fishermen understand
Such wings sunk in such ritual sacrifice,

20 Recalling legends of undersea, drowned cities.
What voyagers, oh what heroes, flamed like pyres
With helmets plumed, have set forth from some island
And them the sea engulfed. Their eyes,
Contorted by the cruel waves' desires
25 Glitter with coins through the tide scarcely scanned,
While, above them, that harp assumes their sighs.

1947

ROBERT FITZGERALD
1910–1985

Figlio Maggiore[1]

Benedict Robert Campion Fitzgerald

Twitched in her belly, or he raised a fist,
and came and cried. O red and meager baby, umbilical, priapic,° knobby, — phallic
mashed and wrinkled as an old pugilist.

5 A lyric name he got and a saint's name,
a third stout name from Pa, cioè Roberto.[2] Think of this Christian if you care to filling his giant napkin° without shame. — diaper

And soon for happy trilled at goldy leaves
10 by a summer air. What hours our boy would warble.
You find my doting lines intolerable?
Never was infant such under such eaves.

Behave. "I'm being hayve." With Harpo's[3] grin.
At three he shook his cap and bells, our jester,
15 or tented him in a souwester° — rain hat and fragrant slicker to stay in the rain in.

Never (ah!) to inherit that dripping grove,
in a DC–6 he peered at cumulo-cirrus
"trees" on ocean. (Graciously hear us,
20 lord of that aircraft gaily named I LOVE)

Ligurian fry[4] inquired, "Why is your old man home all day? What mestiere[5] has he?"

1. Eldest son (Italian).
2. That is, Robert (Fitzgerald) (Italian). Lyric name: from Thomas Campion (1567–1620; see pp. 278–82), English poet and composer. Saint's name: Benedict.
3. Harpo Marx (1893–1964), one member of the Marx Brothers comedy team.
4. Children in Liguria, Italy.
5. Job, profession (Italian).

"Da notte va fuori a rubare case."[6]
A penman's alibi. Tie it if you can.

25 Off iodine-scented rock pure undersea,
fronded, astir, awaited our explorer.
Noon. With a tentacled small horror draped on his tines[7] he swam ashore in glee.

Daemonic lightning, ire of rebellious powers
30 could rend this patient hunter of the polyp.[8]
Bone-ache from one corrective wallop disabled the parental hand for hours.

Child of my own rage, rippling in Tuscan speech through five hard winters' compiti, my Benny, 35 temi, storie, disegni![9]
What will the next years teach?

1971

NORMAN MACCAIG
1910–1996

Summer Farm

Straws like tame lightnings lie about the grass
And hang zigzag on hedges. Green as glass
The water in the horse-trough shines.
Nine ducks go wobbling by in two straight lines.

5 A hen stares at nothing with one eye,
Then picks it up. Out of an empty sky
A swallow falls and, flickering through
The barn, dives up again into the dizzy blue.

I lie, not thinking, in the cool, soft grass,
10 Afraid of where a thought might take me—as
This grasshopper with plated° face — armor-plated
Unfolds his legs and finds himself in space.

Self under self, a pile of selves I stand
Threaded on time, and with metaphysic hand
15 Lift the farm like a lid and see
Farm within farm, and in the centre, me.

1955

6. At night he goes out to burgle houses (Italian).
7. Meant to suggest the tines of the triton of Neptune, Roman god of the sea.
8. Tentacled sea creature.
9. Themes, stories, drawings! (Italian). Compiti: homework (Italian).

Return to Scalpay[1]

The ferry wades across the kyle. I drive
The car ashore
On to a trim tarred road. A car on Scalpay?
Yes, and a road where never was one before.
5 The ferrymen's Gaelic wonders who I am
(Not knowing I know it), this man back from the dead,
Who takes the blue-black road (no traffic jam)
From by Craig Lexie over to Bay Head.

A man bows in the North wind, shaping up
10 His lazybeds,[2]
And through the salt air vagrant peat smells waver
From houses where no house should be. The sheds
At the curing station[3] have been newly tarred.
Aunt Julia's[4] house has vanished. The Red Well
15 Has been bulldozed away. But sharp and hard
The church still stands, barring the road to Hell.

A chugging prawn boat slides round Cuddy Point
Where in a gale
I spread my batwing jacket and jumped farther
20 Than I've jumped since. There's where I used to sail Boats looped from rushes. On the jetty there
I caught eels, cut their heads off and watched them slew
Slow through the water. Ah—Cape Finisterre[5]
I called that point, to show how much I knew.

25 While Hamish sketches, a crofter° tells me that — tenant farmer
The Scalpay folk,
Though very intelligent, are not Spinozas . . .[6]
We walk the Out End road (no need to invoke
That troublemaker, Memory, she's everywhere)
30 To Laggandoan, greeted all the way—
My city eyeballs prickle; it's hard to bear
With such affection and such gaiety.

Scalpay revisited?—more than Scalpay. I
Have no defence,
35 For half my thought and half my blood is Scalpay,
Against that pure, hardheaded innocence

1. Island in the Scottish Outer Hebrides, to the east of Harris and separated from it by a kyle, or narrow channel.
2. Earthen beds, about six feet wide, on which potatoes are grown.
3. Place where fish are salted and dried.
4. The subject of a well-known poem by MacCaig: "Aunt Julia spoke Gaelic / very loud and fast."
5. Promontory—the name meaning "world's end" (Latin)—on the Atlantic coast of northern Spain.
6. I.e., not as smart as the Dutch philosopher Benedict de (Baruch) Spinoza (1632–1677).

That shows love without shame, weeps without shame,
Whose every thought is hospitality—
Edinburgh, Edinburgh, you're dark years away.

40 Scuttering snowflakes riddling the hard wind
Are almost spent
When we reach Johann's[7] house. She fills the doorway,
Sixty years of size and astonishment,
Then laughs and cries and laughs, as she always did
45 And will (Easy glum, easy glow, a friend would say) . . .
Scones, oatcakes, herrings from under a bubbling lid.
Then she comes with us to put us on our way.

Hugging my arm in her stronger one, she says,
Fancy me
50 Walking this road beside my darling Norman!
And what is there to say? . . . We look back and see
Her monumental against the flying sky
And I am filled with love and praise and shame
Knowing that I have been, and knowing why,
55 Diminished and enlarged. Are they the same?

1974

Kingfisher

That kingfisher jewelling upstream seems to leave a streak of itself behind it in the bright air. The trees are all the better for its passing.

5 It's not a mineral eater, though it looks it:
It doesn't nip nicks out of the edges of rainbows.—It dives into the burly water, then, perched on a Japanese bough, gulps
10 into its own incandescence
a wisp of minnow, a warrior stickleback.
—Or it vanishes into its burrow, resplendent Samurai, returning home to his stinking slum.

1977

7. Johann Macleod, a native of Scalpay.

CHARLES OLSON
1910–1970

Merce[1] of Egypt

1

I sing the tree is a heron
I praise long grass[2]
I wear the lion skin over the long skirt
5 to the ankle. The ankle is a heron
I look straightly backward. Or I bend to the side straightly to raise the sheaf
up the stick of the leg
10 as the bittern's leg, raised as slow as his neck grows
as the wheat. The presentation, the representation,
15 is flat,

I am followed by women and a small boy in white carrying a duck, all have flat feet and, foot before foot, the women with black wigs
And I intent
upon idlers,
20 and flowers

2 the sedge

as tall as I am, the rushes
as I am
as far as I am animal, antelope 25 with such's attendant carnivores and rows of beaters
drive the game to the hunter, or into nets, where it is thick-wooded or there are open spaces with low shrubs

3

30 I speak downfall, the ball of my foot on the neck of the earth, the hardsong of the rise of all trees, the jay who uses the air. I am the recovered sickle

1. Merce Cunningham (b. 1919), American dancer and choreographer. While head of Black Mountain College, an experimental school in North Carolina, Olson brought him there to teach and even participated in some of his dance classes.

2. Olson's references to song and grass recall "Song of Myself," part of Leaves of Grass, by the American poet Walt Whitman (1819–1892; see pp. 1060–86).

with the grass-stains still on the flint of its teeth.
35 I am the six-rowed barley
they cut down.

I am tree. The boy of the back of my legs is roots. I am water fowl when motion is the season of my river, and the wild boar 40 casts me. But my time is hawkweed,

4

I hold what the wind blows, and silt.
I hide in the swamps of the valley to escape civil war,
and marauding soldiers. In the new procession 45 I am first, and carry wine made of dandelions. The new rites are my bones

I built my first settlement in groves

5

50 as they would flail crops
when the spring comes, and flood, the tassels rise, as my head

1953

Variations Done for Gerald Van De Wiele[3]

I. Le Bonheur[4]

dogwood flakes
what is green

the petals
from the apple
5 blow on the road

mourning doves
mark the sway
of the afternoon, bees
dig the plum blossoms

3. A student at Black Mountain College during Olson's time as head there (see note 1 above).
4. The "Variations" allude repeatedly, and in complex, subtle ways, to a poem by the French poet Arthur Rimbaud (1854–1891), "Le Bonheur" ("Happiness"), the last of the poems that occur throughout Rimbaud's poem-prose complex Une Saison en enfer (A Season in Hell, 1873). Sometimes Olson cites a word or a phrase from the poem in French, sometimes he translates a word by the English word it resembles (trépas as "trespass"), then later by the word that translates it correctly ("death").

10 the morning
stands up straight, the night is blue from the full of the April moon

iris and lilac, birds birds, yellow flowers 15 white flowers, the Diesel does not let up dragging the plow
as the whippoorwill,
the night's tractor, grinds 20 his song

and no other birds but us are as busy (O saisons, o châteaux!

Délires![5]

What soul
25 is without fault?

Nobody studies happiness

Every time the cock crows
I salute him

30 I have no longer any excuse for envy. My life has been given its orders: the seasons seize

the soul and the body, and make mock 35 of any dispersed effort. The hour of death is the only trespass

II. The Charge

dogwood flakes
the green

the petals from the apple-trees 40 fall for the feet to walk on the birds are so many they are loud, in the afternoon

5. Two sections of Une Saison en enfer are entitled "Délires" ("Deliriums," "Frenzies"), and "Le Bonheur" occurs in "Délires II." "O saisons, o châteaux!" ("O seasons! o castles!") is the first line and refrain of "Le Bonheur."

they distract, as so many bees do suddenly all over the place

45 With spring one knows today to see that in the morning each thing is separate but by noon they have melted into each other and by night only crazy things

50 like the full moon and the whippoorwill and us, are busy. We are busy

if we can get by that whiskered bird,

that nightjar,° and get across, the moon — a nocturnal bird
is our conversation, she will say

55 what soul
isn't in default?

can you afford not to make the magical study

which happiness is? do you hear 60 the cock when he crows? do you know the charge, that you shall have no envy, that your life has its orders, that the seasons

seize you too, that no body and soul are one if they are not wrought

65 in this retort? that otherwise efforts are efforts? And that the hour of your flight will be the hour of your death?

III. Spring

The dogwood lights up the day.

70 The April moon
flakes the night.

Birds, suddenly,
are a multitude

The flowers are ravined° — hollowed out
75 by bees, the fruit blossoms are thrown to the ground, the wind

the rain forces everything. Noise—

even the night is drummed by whippoorwills, and we get

80 as busy, we plow, we move, we break out, we love. The secret which got lost neither hides nor reveals itself, it shows forth tokens. And we rush 85 to catch up. The body whips the soul. In its great desire it demands the elixir

In the roar of spring, transmutations. Envy

90 drags herself off. The fault of the body and the soul —that they are not one—

the matutinal° cock clangs morning and singleness: we salute you season of no bungling

1960

ELIZABETH BISHOP
1911–1979

Casabianca[1]

Love's the boy stood on the burning deck trying to recite "The boy stood on the burning deck." Love's the son stood stammering elocution
5   while the poor ship in flames went down.

Love's the obstinate boy, the ship, even the swimming sailors, who would like a schoolroom platform, too,

1. Cf. Felicia Dorothea Hemans, "Casabianca" (p. 899), line 1 of which is "The boy stood on the burning deck." The boy had remained on the burning ship during the 1798 Battle of the Nile (a decisive defeat for Napoleon), thinking that his father, the admiral, had not released him from duty.

or an excuse to stay
10 on deck. And love's the burning boy.

1946

The Fish

I caught a tremendous fish and held him beside the boat half out of water, with my hook fast in a corner of his mouth.
5 He didn't fight.
He hadn't fought at all.
He hung a grunting weight, battered and venerable and homely. Here and there 10 his brown skin hung in strips like ancient wallpaper, and its pattern of darker brown
was like wallpaper:
shapes like full-blown roses
15 stained and lost through age.
He was speckled with barnacles,
fine rosettes of lime,
and infested
with tiny white sea-lice, 20 and underneath two or three rags of green weed hung down.
While his gills were breathing in the terrible oxygen
—the frightening gills,
25 fresh and crisp with blood,
that can cut so badly—
I thought of the coarse white flesh packed in like feathers,
the big bones and the little bones,
30 the dramatic reds and blacks of his shiny entrails, and the pink swim-bladder
like a big peony.
I looked into his eyes
35 which were far larger than mine but shallower, and yellowed, the irises backed and packed with tarnished tinfoil seen through the lenses
40 of old scratched isinglass.[2]
They shifted a little, but not to return my stare.

2. Mica in thin, transparent sheets; originally prepared from the air bladders of certain fish.

—It was more like the tipping of an object toward the light.
45 I admired his sullen face,
the mechanism of his jaw,
and then I saw that from his lower lip
—if you could call it a lip—
50 grim, wet, and weaponlike, hung five old pieces of fish-line,
or four and a wire leader
with the swivel still attached, with all their five big hooks
55 grown firmly in his mouth.
A green line, frayed at the end
where he broke it, two heavier lines, and a fine black thread
still crimped from the strain and snap
60 when it broke and he got away.
Like medals with their ribbons
frayed and wavering,
a five-haired beard of wisdom
trailing from his aching jaw.
65 I stared and stared and victory filled up
the little rented boat,
from the pool of bilge
where oil had spread a rainbow 70 around the rusted engine to the bailer rusted orange,
the sun-cracked thwarts,
the oarlocks on their strings,
the gunnels—until everything
75 was rainbow, rainbow, rainbow!
And I let the fish go.

1946

Filling Station

Oh, but it is dirty!
—this little filling station,
oil-soaked, oil-permeated to a disturbing, over-all 5 black translucency.
Be careful with that match!

Father wears a dirty,
oil-soaked monkey suit
that cuts him under the arms,
10 and several quick and saucy

and greasy sons assist him
(it's a family filling station),
all quite thoroughly dirty.

Do they live in the station?
15 It has a cement porch behind the pumps, and on it a set of crushed and grease-impregnated wickerwork;
on the wicker sofa
20 a dirty dog, quite comfy.

Some comic books provide the only note of color—of certain color. They lie upon a big dim doily
25 draping a taboret° drum-shaped table
(part of the set), beside a big hirsute begonia.

Why the extraneous plant?
Why the taboret?
30 Why, oh why, the doily?
(Embroidered in daisy stitch with marguerites,° I think, small daisies and heavy with gray crochet.)

Somebody embroidered the doily.
35 Somebody waters the plant, or oils it, maybe. Somebody arranges the rows of cans
so that they softly say:
ESSO—SO—SO—SO[3]
40 to high-strung automobiles.
Somebody loves us all.

1965

Sandpiper

The roaring alongside he takes for granted,
and that every so often the world is bound to shake.
He runs, he runs to the south, finical, awkward,
in a state of controlled panic, a student of Blake.[4]

5 The beach hisses like fat. On his left, a sheet of interrupting water comes and goes

3. The company name Esso, later changed to Exxon.
4. William Blake (1757–1827; see pp. 732–47), English poet, whose 1803 poem "Auguries of Innocence" begins, "To see a World in a Grain of Sand / And a Heaven in a Wild Flower, / Hold Infinity in the palm of your hand / And Eternity in an hour."

and glazes over his dark and brittle feet.
He runs, he runs straight through it, watching his toes.

—Watching, rather, the spaces of sand between them,
10 where (no detail too small) the Atlantic drains rapidly backwards and downwards. As he runs, he stares at the dragging grains.

The world is a mist. And then the world is minute and vast and clear. The tide 15 is higher or lower. He couldn't tell you which.
His beak is focussed; he is preoccupied,

looking for something, something, something.
Poor bird, he is obsessed!
The millions of grains are black, white, tan, and gray,
20 mixed with quartz grains, rose and amethyst.

1965

The Armadillo[5]

For Robert Lowell

This is the time of year
when almost every night
the frail, illegal fire balloons appear.
Climbing the mountain height,

5 rising toward a saint still honored in these parts, the paper chambers flush and fill with light that comes and goes, like hearts.

Once up against the sky it's hard
10 to tell them from the stars—planets, that is—the tinted ones:
Venus going down, or Mars,

or the pale green one. With a wind,
they flare and falter, wobble and toss;
15 but if it's still they steer between the kite sticks of the Southern Cross,[6]

receding, dwindling, solemnly and steadily forsaking us, or, in the downdraft from a peak,
20 suddenly turning dangerous.

5. Cf. Robert Lowell, "Skunk Hour" (p. 1601), which is modeled on Bishop's poem.

6. Bright constellation.

Last night another big one fell.
It splattered like an egg of fire against the cliff behind the house.
The flame ran down. We saw the pair

25 of owls who nest there flying up and up, their whirling black-and-white stained bright pink underneath, until they shrieked up out of sight.

The ancient owls' nest must have burned.
30 Hastily, all alone,
a glistening armadillo left the scene,
rose-flecked, head down, tail down,

and then a baby rabbit jumped out,
short-eared, to our surprise.
35 So soft!—a handful of intangible ash with fixed, ignited eyes.

Too pretty, dreamlike mimicry!
O falling fire and piercing cry and panic, and a weak mailed fist 40 clenched ignorant against the sky!

1965

Sestina[7]

September rain falls on the house.
In the failing light, the old grandmother sits in the kitchen with the child beside the Little Marvel Stove,[8] 5 reading the jokes from the almanac, laughing and talking to hide her tears.

She thinks that her equinoctial tears and the rain that beats on the roof of the house were both foretold by the almanac,
10 but only known to a grandmother.
The iron kettle sings on the stove.
She cuts some bread and says to the child,

It's time for tea now; but the child is watching the teakettle's small hard tears 15 dance like mad on the hot black stove,
the way the rain must dance on the house.
Tidying up, the old grandmother hangs up the clever almanac

7. On this verse form, see "Versification," p. 2045.
8. Brand of wood- or coal-burning stove.

on its string. Birdlike, the almanac 20 hovers half open above the child, hovers above the old grandmother and her teacup full of dark brown tears.
She shivers and says she thinks the house
feels chilly, and puts more wood in the stove.

25 It was to be, says the Marvel Stove.
I know what I know, says the almanac.
With crayons the child draws a rigid house and a winding pathway. Then the child puts in a man with buttons like tears
30 and shows it proudly to the grandmother.

But secretly, while the grandmother
busies herself about the stove,
the little moons fall down like tears
from between the pages of the almanac 35 into the flower bed the child has carefully placed in the front of the house.

Time to plant tears, says the almanac.
The grandmother sings to the marvelous stove
and the child draws another inscrutable house.

1965

In the Waiting Room

In Worcester, Massachusetts,
I went with Aunt Consuelo to keep her dentist's appointment and sat and waited for her
5 in the dentist's waiting room.
It was winter. It got dark early. The waiting room was full of grown-up people,
arctics and overcoats,
10 lamps and magazines.
My aunt was inside
what seemed like a long time and while I waited I read
the National Geographic
15 (I could read) and carefully studied the photographs:
the inside of a volcano,
black, and full of ashes;
then it was spilling over 20 in rivulets of fire.
Osa and Martin Johnson[9]

9. Famous husband-and-wife explorers and writers.

dressed in riding breeches,
laced boots, and pith helmets.
A dead man slung on a pole
25 —"Long Pig,"[1] the caption said.
Babies with pointed heads wound round and round with string;
black, naked women with necks wound round and round with wire
30 like the necks of light bulbs.
Their breasts were horrifying.
I read it right straight through.
I was too shy to stop.
And then I looked at the cover:
35 the yellow margins, the date.

Suddenly, from inside,
came an oh! of pain
—Aunt Consuelo's voice—
not very loud or long.
40 I wasn't at all surprised;
even then I knew she was a foolish, timid woman.
I might have been embarrassed,
but wasn't. What took me
45 completely by surprise was that it was me:
my voice, in my mouth.
Without thinking at all
I was my foolish aunt,
50 I—we—were falling, falling,
our eyes glued to the cover of the National Geographic,
February, 1918.

I said to myself: three days
55 and you'll be seven years old.
I was saying it to stop the sensation of falling off
the round, turning world into cold, blue-black space.
60 But I felt: you are an I,
you are an Elizabeth,
you are one of them.
Why should you be one, too?
I scarcely dared to look 65 to see what it was I was.
I gave a sidelong glance
—I couldn't look any higher—
at shadowy gray knees, trousers and skirts and boots
70 and different pairs of hands

1. Polynesian cannibals' name for the human body as food.

lying under the lamps.
I knew that nothing stranger had ever happened, that nothing stranger could ever happen.
75 Why should I be my aunt,
or me, or anyone?
What similarities—
boots, hands, the family voice
I felt in my throat, or even 80 the National Geographic and those awful hanging breasts—held us all together or made us all just one?
How—I didn't know any 85 word for it—how "unlikely" . . .
How had I come to be here,
like them, and overhear
a cry of pain that could have got loud and worse but hadn't?

90 The waiting room was bright and too hot. It was sliding beneath a big black wave, another, and another.

Then I was back in it.
95 The War[2] was on. Outside,
in Worcester, Massachusetts,
were night and slush and cold,
and it was still the fifth of February, 1918.

1976

The Moose

For Grace Bulmer Bowers

From narrow provinces[3]
of fish and bread and tea,
home of the long tides
where the bay leaves the sea 5 twice a day and takes the herrings long rides,

where if the river
enters or retreats
in a wall of brown foam
10 depends on if it meets

2. World War I.
3. The maritime provinces of Canada, including Nova Scotia, where Bishop was born, and New Brunswick.

the bay coming in,
the bay not at home;

where, silted red,
sometimes the sun sets
15 facing a red sea,
and others, veins the flats'
lavender, rich mud
in burning rivulets;

on red, gravelly roads,
20 down rows of sugar maples, past clapboard farmhouses
and neat, clapboard churches, bleached, ridged as clamshells,
past twin silver birches,

25 through late afternoon
a bus journeys west,
the windshield flashing pink,
pink glancing off of metal,
brushing the dented flank
30 of blue, beat-up enamel;

down hollows, up rises,
and waits, patient, while a lone traveller gives kisses and embraces 35 to seven relatives and a collie supervises.

Goodbye to the elms,
to the farm, to the dog.
The bus starts. The light
40 grows richer; the fog,
shifting, salty, thin,
comes closing in.

Its cold, round crystals form and slide and settle 45 in the white hens' feathers, in gray glazed cabbages,
on the cabbage roses
and lupins like apostles;

the sweet peas cling 50 to their wet white string on the whitewashed fences;
bumblebees creep
inside the foxgloves,
and evening commences.

55 One stop at Bass River.
Then the Economies—
Lower, Middle, Upper;
Five Islands, Five Houses,[4]
where a woman shakes a tablecloth
60 out after supper.

A pale flickering. Gone.
The Tantramar marshes[5]
and the smell of salt hay.
An iron bridge trembles
65 and a loose plank rattles
but doesn't give way.

On the left, a red light swims through the dark:
a ship's port lantern.
70 Two rubber boots show,
illuminated, solemn.
A dog gives one bark.

A woman climbs in
with two market bags,
75 brisk, freckled, elderly.
"A grand night. Yes, sir,
all the way to Boston."
She regards us amicably.

Moonlight as we enter
80 the New Brunswick woods, hairy, scratchy, splintery;
moonlight and mist
caught in them like lamb's wool on bushes in a pasture.

85 The passengers lie back.
Snores. Some long sighs.
A dreamy divagation begins in the night,
a gentle, auditory,
90 slow hallucination. . . .

In the creakings and noises,
an old conversation
—not concerning us,
but recognizable, somewhere,
95 back in the bus:
Grandparents' voices

4. Towns in Nova Scotia.
5. Marshes of the Tantramar River, which empties into the Bay of Fundy.

uninterruptedly talking, in Eternity:
names being mentioned,
100 things cleared up finally;
what he said, what she said,
who got pensioned;

deaths, deaths and sicknesses;
the year he remarried;
105 the year (something) happened.
She died in childbirth.
That was the son lost
when the schooner foundered.

He took to drink. Yes.
110 She went to the bad.
When Amos began to pray even in the store and finally the family had to put him away.

115 "Yes . . ." that peculiar affirmative. "Yes . . ."
A sharp, indrawn breath,
half groan, half acceptance,
that means "Life's like that.
120 We know it (also death)."

Talking the way they talked in the old featherbed, peacefully, on and on,
dim lamplight in the hall,
125 down in the kitchen, the dog
tucked in her shawl.

Now, it's all right now even to fall asleep
just as on all those nights.
130 —Suddenly the bus driver stops with a jolt,
turns off his lights.

A moose has come out of the impenetrable wood 135 and stands there, looms, rather,
in the middle of the road.
It approaches; it sniffs at the bus's hot hood.

Towering, antlerless,
140 high as a church,
homely as a house

(or, safe as houses).
A man's voice assures us
"Perfectly harmless. . . ."

145 Some of the passengers exclaim in whispers,
childishly, softly,
"Sure are big creatures."
"It's awful plain."
150 "Look! It's a she!"

Taking her time,
she looks the bus over,
grand, otherworldly.
Why, why do we feel 155 (we all feel) this sweet sensation of joy?

"Curious creatures," says our quiet driver,
rolling his r's.
160 "Look at that, would you."
Then he shifts gears.
For a moment longer,

by craning backward,
the moose can be seen 165 on the moonlit macadam;
then there's a dim smell of moose, an acrid smell of gasoline.

1976

One Art

The art of losing isn't hard to master;
so many things seem filled with the intent to be lost that their loss is no disaster.

Lose something every day. Accept the fluster
5 of lost door keys, the hour badly spent.
The art of losing isn't hard to master.

Then practice losing farther, losing faster:
places, and names, and where it was you meant to travel. None of these will bring disaster.

10 I lost my mother's watch. And look! my last, or next-to-last, of three loved houses went.
The art of losing isn't hard to master.

I lost two cities, lovely ones. And, vaster,
some realms I owned, two rivers, a continent.
15 I miss them, but it wasn't a disaster.

—Even losing you (the joking voice, a gesture
I love) I shan't have lied. It's evident the art of losing's not too hard to master though it may look like (Write it!) like disaster.

1976

ALLEN CURNOW
1911–2001

Landfall in Unknown Seas[1]

The 300th Anniversary of the Discovery of New Zealand by Abel Tasman, 13 December 1642

I

Simply by sailing in a new direction
You could enlarge the world
You picked your captain,
Keen on discoveries, tough enough to make them,
5 Whatever vessels could be spared from other
More urgent service for a year's adventure;
Took stock of the more probable conjectures
About the Unknown to be traversed, all
Guesses at golden coasts and tales of monsters
10 To be digested into plain instructions
For likely and unlikely situations.

All this resolved and done, you launched the whole
On a fine morning, the best time of year,
Skies widening and the oceanic furies
15 Subdued by summer illumination; time
To go and to be gazed at going
On a fine morning, in the Name of God
Into the nameless waters of the world.

O you had estimated all the chances
20 Of business in those waters, the world's waters
Yet unexploited.
But more than the sea-empire's
Cannon, the dogs of bronze and iron barking
From Timor to the Straits, backed up the challenge.
25 Between you and the South an older enmity
Lodged in the searching mind, that would not tolerate

1. Written as part of New Zealand's tercentenary celebrations.

So huge a hegemony of ignorance.
There, where your Indies had already sprinkled
Their tribes like ocean rains, you aimed your voyage;
30 Like them invoked your God, gave seas to history
And islands to new hazardous tomorrows.

II

Suddenly exhilaration
Went off like a gun, the whole
Horizon, the long chase done,
35 Hove to.[2] There was the seascape
Crammed with coast, surprising
As new lands will, the sailor
Moving on the face of the waters,
Watching the earth take shape
40 Round the unearthly summits, brighter
Than its emerging colour.

Yet this, no far fool's errand,
Was less than the heart desired,
In its old Indian dream
45 The glittering gulfs ascending
Past palaces and mountains
Making one architecture.
Here the uplifted structure,
Peak and pillar of cloud—
50 O splendour of desolation—reared
Tall from the pit of the swell,
With a shadow, a finger of wind, forbade
Hopes of a lucky landing.

Always to islanders danger
55 Is what comes over the sea;
Over the yellow sands and the clear
Shallows, the dull filament
Flickers, the blood of strangers:
Death discovered the Sailor
60 O in a flash, in a flat calm,
A clash of boats in the bay
And the day marred with murder.
The dead required no further
Warning to keep their distance;
65 The rest, noting the failure,
Pushed on with a reconnaissance
To the north; and sailed away.

III

Well, home is the Sailor,[3] and that is a chapter
In a schoolbook, a relevant yesterday

2. Dropped anchor.
3. From line 7 of "Requiem," by the Scottish writer Robert Louis Stevenson (1850–1894): "Home is the sailor, home from sea."

70 We thought we knew all about, being much apter
To profit, sure of our ground,
No murderers mooring in our Golden Bay.

But now there are no more islands to be found
And the eye scans risky horizons of its own
75 In unsettled weather, and murmurs of the drowned
Haunt their familiar beaches—
Who navigates us towards what unknown

But not improbable provinces? Who reaches
A future down for us from the high shelf
80 Of spiritual daring? Not those speeches
Pinning on the Past like a decoration
For merit that congratulates itself,

O not the self-important celebration
Or most painstaking history, can release
85 The current of a discoverer's elation
And silence the voices saying,
"Here is the world's end where wonders cease."

Only by a more faithful memory, laying
On him the half-light of a diffident glory, 90 The Sailor lives, and stands beside us, paying
Out into our time's wave
The stain of blood that writes an island story.

1942 1943

IRVING LAYTON
b. 1912

The Birth of Tragedy[1]

And me happiest when I compose poems.
Love, power, the huzza of battle
are something, are much;
yet a poem includes them like a pool
5 water and reflection.
In me, nature's divided things—tree, mold on tree—
have their fruition;
I am their core. Let them swap,
10 bandy, like a flame swerve
I am their mouth; as a mouth I serve.

1. The first book (1872) by the German philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche (1844–1900), The Birth of Tragedy argued for the importance of Dionysian emotionalism as well as Apollonian rationalism in the creation of tragedy.

And I observe how the sensual moths big with odor and sunshine
dart into the perilous shrubbery;
15 or drop their visiting shadows upon the garden I one year made of flowering stone to be a footstool
for the perfect gods:
who, friends to the ascending orders,
20 sustain all passionate meditations and call down pardons
for the insurgent blood.

A quiet madman, never far from tears,
I lie like a slain thing
25 under the green air the trees inhabit, or rest upon a chair towards which the inflammable air tumbles on many robins' wings;
noting how seasonably
30 leaf and blossom uncurl and living things arrange their death, while someone from afar off
blows birthday candles for the world.

1954

The Cold Green Element

At the end of the garden walk
the wind and its satellite wait for me;
their meaning I will not know
until I go there,
5 but the black-hatted undertaker who, passing, saw my heart beating in the grass, is also going there. Hi, I tell him, a great squall in the Pacific blew a dead poet

out of the water,
10 Who now hangs from the city's gates.

Crowds depart daily to see it, and return with grimaces and incomprehension;
if its limbs twitched in the air
they would sit at its feet
15 peeling their oranges.

And turning over I embrace like a lover the trunk of a tree, one of those for whom the lightning was too much and grew a brilliant 20 hunchback with a crown of leaves.

The ailments escaped from the labels
of medicine bottles are all fled to the wind;
I've seen myself lately in the eyes of old women,
25 spent streams mourning my manhood,

in whose old pupils the sun became a bloodsmear on broad catalpa leaves and hanging from ancient twigs,
    my murdered selves
30 sparked the air like the muted collisions of fruit. A black dog howls down my blood,

a black dog with yellow eyes;
he too by someone's inadvertence
    saw the bloodsmear
35 on the broad catalpa leaves.

But the furies[2] clear a path for me to the worm who sang for an hour in the throat of a robin, and misled by the cries of young boys
    I am again
40 a breathless swimmer in that cold green element.

1955

Berry Picking

Silently my wife walks on the still wet furze
Now darkgreen the leaves are full of metaphors
Now lit up is each tiny lamp of blueberry.
The white nails of rain have dropped and the sun is free.

5 And whether she bends or straightens to each bush
To find the children's laughter among the leaves
Her quiet hands seem to make the quiet summer hush—
Berries or children, patient she is with these.

I only vex and perplex her; madness, rage
10 Are endearing perhaps put down upon the page;
Even silence daylong and sullen can then
Enamor as restraint or classic discipline.

So I envy the berries she puts in her mouth,
The red and succulent juice that stains her lips;
15 I shall never taste that good to her, nor will they Displease her with a thousand barbarous jests.

2. In classical mythology, goddesses who punished the doers of unavenged wrongs.

How they lie easily for her hand to take,
Part of the unoffending world that is hers;
Here beyond complexity she stands and stares
20 And leans her marvelous head as if for answers.

No more the easy soul my childish craft deceives
Nor the simpler one for whom yes is always yes;
No, now her voice comes to me from a far way off
Though her lips are redder than the raspberries.

1958

ROBERT HAYDEN
1913–1980

Those Winter Sundays

Sundays too my father got up early
and put his clothes on in the blueblack cold, then with cracked hands that ached from labor in the weekday weather made
5 banked fires blaze. No one ever thanked him.

I'd wake and hear the cold splintering, breaking.
When the rooms were warm, he'd call,
and slowly I would rise and dress,
fearing the chronic angers of that house,

10 Speaking indifferently to him, who had driven out the cold
and polished my good shoes as well.
What did I know, what did I know of love's austere and lonely offices?

1962

Mourning Poem for the Queen of Sunday

Lord's lost Him His mockingbird,
His fancy warbler;
Satan sweet-talked her,
four bullets hushed her.
5 Who would have thought
she'd end that way?

Four bullets hushed her. And the world a-clang with evil.
Who's going to make old hardened sinner men tremble now and the righteous rock?

10 Oh who and oh who will sing Jesus down to help with struggling and doing without and being colored all through blue Monday?
Till way next Sunday?

All those angels
15 in their cretonne[1] clouds and finery
the true believer saw when she rared back her head and sang,
all those angels are surely weeping.
Who would have thought
20 she'd end that way?

Four holes in her heart. The gold works wrecked.
But she looks so natural in her big bronze coffin
among the Broken Hearts and Gates-Ajar,
it's as if any moment she'd lift her head
25 from its pillow of chill gardenias and turn this quiet into shouting Sunday and make folks forget what she did on Monday.

Oh, Satan sweet-talked her,
and four bullets hushed her.
30 Lord's lost Him His diva,
His fancy warbler's gone.
Who would have thought,
who would have thought she'd end that way?

1966

Night, Death, Mississippi[2]

I

A quavering cry. Screech-owl?
Or one of them?
The old man in his reek
and gauntness laughs—

5 One of them, I bet—
and turns out the kitchen lamp, limping to the porch to listen
in the windowless night.

Be there with Boy and the rest
10 if I was well again.
Time was. Time was.
White robes like moonlight

1. Cotton or linen cloth.
2. In Philadelphia, Mississippi, in 1964, Ku Klux Klansmen and police deputies murdered Michael Schwerner, Andrew Goodman, and James Chaney, civil rights activists known as Freedom Fighters, who were challenging segregationist laws in the South.

In the sweetgum[3] dark.
Unbucked that one then 15 and him squealing bloody Jesus
as we cut it off.

Time was. A cry?
A cry all right.
He hawks and spits,
20 fevered as by groinfire.

Have us a bottle,
Boy and me—
he's earned him a bottle—
when he gets home.

II

25 Then we beat them, he said, beat them till our arms was tired and the big old chains messy and red.

O Jesus burning on the lily cross

30 Christ, it was better than hunting bear which don't know why
you want him dead.

O night, rawhead and bloodybones night

35 You kids fetch Paw some water now so's he can wash that blood
off him, she said.

O night betrayed by darkness not its own

1966

" 'Mystery Boy' Looks for Kin in Nashville"

Puzzle faces in the dying elms promise him treats if he will stay.
Sometimes they hiss and spit at him like varmints caught
5 in a thicket of butterflies.

3. The dark woods of the sweet gum, a North American tree of a deep reddish brown grain.

A black doll,
one disremembered time,
came floating down to him through mimosa's fancywork leaves and blooms
10 to be his hidden bride.

From the road beyond the creepered walls
they call to him now and then,
and he'll take off in spite of the angry trees,
hearing like the loudening of his heart
15 the name he never can he never can repeat.

And when he gets to where the voices were—
Don't cry, his dollbaby wife implores;
I know where they are, don't cry.
We'll go and find them, we'll go
20 and ask them for your name again.

1977

Paul Laurence Dunbar[4]

For Herbert Martin

We lay red roses on his grave,
speak sorrowfully of him
as if he were but newly dead

And so it seems to us
5 this raw spring day, though years before we two were born he was a young poet dead.

Poet of our youth—
his "cri du coeur"[5] our own,
10 his verses "in a broken tongue"

beguiling as an elder brother's antic lore.
Their sad blackface lilt and croon survive him like

15 The happy look (subliminal of victim, dying man)
a summer's tintypes[6] hold.

4. African American poet (1872–1906; see pp. 1222–24).
5. Passionate appeal or protest (French; literally, cry from the heart). The next line is probably a reference to Dunbar's poems in dialect (blackface).
6. I.e., old photographs.

The roses flutter in the wind;
we weight their stems
20 with stones, then drive away.

1978

MURIEL RUKEYSER
1913–1980

Boy with His Hair Cut Short

Sunday shuts down on this twentieth-century evening.
The El° passes. Twilight and bulb define elevated train
the brown room, the overstuffed plum sofa,
the boy, and the girl's thin hands above his head.
5 A neighbor radio sings stocks, news, serenade.

He sits at the table, head down, the young clear neck exposed,
watching the drugstore sign from the tail of his eye;
tattoo, neon, until the eye blears, while his solicitous tall sister, simple in blue, bending
10 behind him, cuts his hair with her cheap shears.

The arrow's electric red always reaches its mark, successful neon! He coughs, impressed by that precision.
His child's forehead, forever protected by his cap,
is bleached against the lamplight as he turns head 15 and steadies to let the snippets drop.

Erasing the failure of weeks with level fingers,
she sleeks the fine hair, combing: "You'll look fine tomorrow!
You'll surely find something, they can't keep turning you down;
the finest gentleman's not so trim as you!" Smiling, he raises 20 the adolescent forehead wrinkling ironic now.

He sees his decent suit laid out, new-pressed, his carfare on the shelf. He lets his head fall, meeting her earnest hopeless look, seeing the sharp blades splitting, the darkened room, the impersonal sign, her motion,
25 the blue vein, bright on her temple, pitifully beating.

1938

Night Feeding

Deeper than sleep but not so deep as death
I lay there sleeping and my magic head remembered and forgot. On first cry I remembered and forgot and did believe.

5 I knew love and I knew evil:
woke to the burning song and the tree burning blind, despair of our days and the calm milk-giver who knows sleep, knows growth, the sex of fire and grass, and the black snake with gold bones.

10 Black sleeps, gold burns; on second cry I woke fully and gave to feed and fed on feeding.
Gold seed, green pain, my wizards in the earth walked through the house, black in the morning dark.
Shadows grew in my veins, my bright belief,
15 my head of dreams deeper than night and sleep.
Voices of all black animals crying to drink,
cries of all birth arise, simple as we,
found in the leaves, in clouds and dark, in dream,
deep as this hour, ready again to sleep.

1951

Rondel[1]

Now that I am fifty-six
Come and celebrate with me—

What happens to song and sex
Now that I am fifty-six?

5 They dance, but differently,
Death and distance in the mix;
Now that I'm fifty-six
Come and celebrate with me.

1973

Ballad of Orange and Grape

After you finish your work
after you do your day after you've read your reading
after you've written your say—5 you go down the street to the hot dog stand,
one block down and across the way.
On a blistering afternoon in East Harlem in the twentieth century.

1. Based loosely on the French syllabic verse form, a thirteen-line poem that turns on two rhymes, with a refrain.

Most of the windows are boarded up,
the rats run out of a sack—
10 sticking out of the crummy garage
one shiny long Cadillac;
at the glass door of the drug-addiction center,
a man who'd like to break your back.
But here's a brown woman with a little girl dressed in rose and pink,
too.

15 Frankfurters frankfurters sizzle on the steel where the hot-dog-man leans—nothing else on the counter
but the usual two machines,
the grape one, empty, and the orange one, empty, 20 I face him in between.
A black boy comes along, looks at the hot dogs, goes on walking.

I watch the man as he stands and pours in the familiar shape
bright purple in the one marked ORANGE 25 orange in the one marked GRAPE, the grape drink in the machine marked ORANGE and orange drink in the GRAPE.
Just the one word large and clear, unmistakable, on each machine.

I ask him : How can we go on reading
30 and make sense out of what we read?—
How can they write and believe what they're writing,
the young ones across the street,
while you go on pouring grape into ORANGE
and orange into the one marked GRAPE—?
35 (How are we going to believe what we read and we write and we hear and we say and we do?)

He looks at the two machines and he smiles and he shrugs and smiles and pours again.
It could be violence and nonviolence
it could be white and black women and men 40 it could be war and peace or any binary system, love and hate, enemy, friend.
Yes and no, be and not-be, what we do and what we don't do.

On a corner in East Harlem garbage, reading, a deep smile, rape, 45 forgetfulness, a hot street of murder,
misery, withered hope,
a man keeps pouring grape into ORANGE
and orange into the one marked GRAPE,
pouring orange into GRAPE and grape into ORANGE forever.

1973

MAY SWENSON
1913–1989

Motherhood

She sat on a shelf,
her breasts two bellies
on her poked-out belly, on which the navel looked like a sucked-in mouth— 5
her knees bent and apart,
her long left arm raised,
with the large hand knuckled
to a bar in the ceiling—
her right hand clamping 10
the skinny infant to her chest—its round, pale, new,
soft muzzle hunting
in the brown hair for a nipple, its splayed, tiny hand picking 15
at her naked, dirty ear.
Twisting its little neck,
with tortured, ecstatic eyes the size of lentils, it looked into her severe, close-set, 20 solemn eyes, that beneath bald eyelids glared—dull lights in sockets of leather.

She twitched some chin-hairs,
with pain or pleasure, 25
as the baby-mouth found and yanked at her nipple;
its pink-nailed, jointless fingers, wandering her face, tangled in the tufts 30
of her cliffy brows.
She brought her big hand down from the bar—with pretended exasperation unfastened the little hand, 35 and locked it within her palm—while her right hand, with snag-nailed forefinger and short, sharp thumb, raked
the new orange hair 40 of the infant's skinny flank—
and found a louse,
which she lipped, and thoughtfully crisped between broad teeth. 45

She wrinkled appreciative nostrils which, without a nose, stood open—damp holes
above the poke of her mouth.

50 She licked her lips, flicked her leather eyelids—then, suddenly flung up both arms and grabbed the bars overhead.
55 The baby's scrabbly fingers instantly caught the hair—
as if there were metal rings there—in her long, stretched armpits.
And, as she stately swung,
60 and then proudly, more swiftly slung herself from corner to corner of her cell—arms longer than her round body, short knees bent—65 her little wild-haired,
poke-mouthed infant hung,
like some sort of trophy,
or decoration, or shaggy medal—shaped like herself—but new,
70 clean, soft and shining on her chest.

1967

Cardinal Ideograms[1]

0 A mouth. Can blow or breathe, be funnel, or Hello.

1 A grass blade or a cut.

2 A question seated. And a proud bird's neck.

3 Shallow mitten for two-fingered hand.

4 Three-cornered hut on one stilt. Sometimes built so the roof gapes.

1. Counting numbers interpreted as if they were pictures.

5 A policeman. Polite.
Wearing visored cap.

6 O unrolling,
tape of ambiguous length on which is written the mystery of everything curly.

7 A step,
detached from its stair.

8 The universe in diagram:
A cosmic hourglass.
(Note enigmatic shape,
absence of any valve of origin,
how end overlaps beginning.)
Unknotted like a shoelace and whipped back and forth,
can serve as a model of time.

9 Lorgnette for the right eye.
In England or if you are Alice[2]
the stem is on the left.

10 A grass blade or a cut
companioned by a mouth.
Open? Open. Shut? Shut.

1967

Waterbird

Part otter, part snake, part bird the bird Anhinga,[3]
jalousie° wings, draped open, dry. When slack- shutterlike hinged, the wind flips them shut. Her cry, a slatted clatter, inflates her chin-
5 pouch; it's like a fish's swim-bladder. Anhinga's body, otterfurry, floats, under watermosses, neck a snake with white-rimmed blue round roving eyes. Those long feet stilt-10 paddle the only bird of the marsh that flies submerged. Otter-quick over bream° that hover in water- fish
shade, she feeds, finds fillets among the water-weeds. Her beak, ferrule° of a folded black metal tip

2. Alice, who sees the mirror images of things in the book Through the Looking-Glass, by the English mathematician and writer Lewis Carroll (1832–1898; see pp. 1135–39). Lorgnette: eyeglasses or opera glasses with a handle.
3. Also known as snake-bird or water-turkey. With a long fantail and thin neck, it swims submerged up to the neck, thus resembling a snake.

15 umbrella, with neat thrust impales her prey.
She flaps up to dry on the crooked, look-dead-limb of the Gumbo Limbo,[4] her tan-tipped wing fans spread, tail a shut fan dangled.

1987

Goodbye, Goldeneye[5]

Rag of black plastic, shred of a kite caught on the telephone cable above the bay has twisted in the wind all winter, summer, fall.

Leaves of birch and maple, brown paws of the oak 5 have all let go but this. Shiny black Mylar[6] on stem strong as fishline, the busted kite string whipped around the wire and knotted—how long will it cling there? Through another spring?

Long barge nudged up channel by a snorting tug,

10 its blunt front aproned with rot-black tires—
what is being hauled in slime-green drums?
The herring gulls that used to feed their young on the shore—puffy, wide-beaked babies standing spraddle-legged and crying—are not here this year.

15 Instead, steam shovel, bulldozer, cement mixer

rumble over sand, beginning the big new beach house.
There'll be a hotdog stand, flush toilets, trash—
plastic and glass, greasy cartons, crushed beercans, barrels of garbage for water rats to pick through.

20 So, goodbye, goldeneye, and grebe and scaup and loon.
Goodbye, morning walks beside the tide tinkling

among clean pebbles, blue mussel shells and snail shells that look like staring eyeballs. Goodbye, kingfisher, little green, black crowned heron,

25 snowy egret. And, goodbye, oh faithful pair of swans that used to glide—god and goddess shapes of purity—over the wide water.

1987

4. Tropical American tree with a smooth, coppery bark.
5. The goldeneye, like the grebe, scaup, and loon mentioned in line 20, is a freshwater diving duck.
6. Brand of strong, thin polyester film, here used in string.

R. S. THOMAS
1913–2000

Welsh Landscape

To live in Wales is to be conscious
At dusk of the spilled blood
That went to the making of the wild sky,
Dyeing the immaculate rivers
5 In all their courses.
It is to be aware,
Above the noisy tractor
And hum of the machine
Of strife in the strung woods,
10 Vibrant with sped arrows.
You cannot live in the present,
At least not in Wales.
There is the language for instance,
The soft consonants
15 Strange to the ear.
There are cries in the dark at night
As owls answer the moon,
And thick ambush of shadows,
Hushed at the fields' corners.
20 There is no present in Wales,
And no future;
There is only the past,
Brittle with relics,
Wind-bitten towers and castles
25 With sham ghosts;
Mouldering quarries and mines;
And an impotent people,
Sick with inbreeding,
Worrying the carcase of an old song.

1955

The View from the Window

Like a painting it is set before one,
But less brittle, ageless; these colours
Are renewed daily with variations
Of light and distance that no painter
5 Achieves or suggests. Then there is movement,
Change, as slowly the cloud bruises
Are healed by sunlight, or snow caps
A black mood; but gold at evening
To cheer the heart. All through history
10 The great brush has not rested,

Nor the paint dried; yet what eye,
Looking coolly, or, as we now,
Through the tears' lenses, ever saw
This work and it was not finished?

1958

On the Farm

There was Dai Puw. He was no good.
They put him in the fields to dock° swedes,° cut / turnips
And took the knife from him, when he came home
At late evening with a grin
5 Like the slash of a knife on his face.

There was Llew Puw, and he was no good.
Every evening after the ploughing
With the big tractor he would sit in his chair,
And stare into the tangled fire garden,
10 Opening his slow lips like a snail.

There was Huw Puw, too. What shall I say?
I have heard him whistling in the hedges
On and on, as though winter
Would never again leave those fields,
15 And all the trees were deformed.

And lastly there was the girl:
Beauty under some spell of the beast.
Her pale face was the lantern
By which they read in life's dark book
20 The shrill sentence: God is love.

1963

Lore

Job Davies, eighty-five
Winters old, and still alive
After the slow poison
And treachery of the seasons.

5 Miserable? Kick my arse!
It needs more than the rain's hearse,
Wind-drawn, to pull me off
The great perch of my laugh.

What's living but courage?
10 Paunch full of hot porridge,
Nerves strengthened with tea,
Peat-black, dawn found me

Mowing where the grass grew,
Bearded with golden dew.
15 Rhythm of the long scythe
Kept this tall frame lithe.

What to do? Stay green.
Never mind the machine,
Whose fuel is human souls.
20 Live large, man, and dream small.

1964

JOHN BERRYMAN
1914–1972

From Homage to Mistress Bradstreet[1]

[17]

The winters close, Springs open, no child stirs
130 under my withering heart, O seasoned heart
God grudged his aid.
All things else soil like a shirt.
Simon is much away. My executive[2] stales.
The town came through for the cartway by the pales,[3]
135 but my patience is short.
I revolt from, I am like, these savage foresters

[18]

whose passionless dicker in the shade, whose glance impassive & scant, belie their murderous cries when quarry seems to show.
140 Again I must have been wrong, twice.[4]
Unwell in a new way. Can that begin?
God brandishes. O love, O I love. Kin, gather. My world is strange and merciful, ingrown months, blessing a swelling trance.

1. Berryman's book-length poem about, and mostly in the voice of, the early American poet Anne Bradstreet (ca. 1612–1672; see pp. 458–67). Bradstreet speaks here of her struggle in childbirth. For a discussion of the complex stanza form Berryman invented for this poem (modeled partly on W. B. Yeats's "In Memory of Major Gregory"), as well as the form of the "dream song," see the introduction to Berryman's Collected Poems 1937–1971 (1989) by Charles Thornbury, xl–xliii.
2. Power to act. Simon: her husband.
3. Stockade fence.
4. I.e., she twice failed to conceive.

[19]

145 So squeezed, wince you I scream? I love you & hate off with you. Ages! Useless. Below my waist
he has me in Hell's vise.
Stalling. He let go. Come back: brace me somewhere. No. No. Yes! everything down 150 hardens I press with horrible joy down my back cracks like a wrist shame I am voiding oh behind it is too late

[20]

hide me forever I work thrust I must free now I all muscles & bones concentrate 155 what is living from dying?
Simon I must leave you so untidy
Monster you are killing me Be sure
I'll have you later Women do endure
I can can no longer
160 and it passes the wretched trap whelming and I am me

[21]

drencht & powerful, I did it with my body!
One proud tug greens Heaven. Marvellous, unforbidding Majesty.
Swell, imperious bells. I fly.
165 Mountainous, woman not breaks and will bend:
sways God nearby: anguish comes to an end.
Blossomed Sarah,[5] and I blossom. Is that thing alive? I hear a famisht howl.

1948–53 1956

A Sympathy, A Welcome

Feel for your bad fall how could I fail,
poor Paul, who had it so good.
I can offer you only: this world like a knife.
Yet you'll get to know your mother
5 and humourless as you do look you will laugh and all the others will NOT be fierce to you, and loverhood will swing your soul like a broken bell deep in a forsaken wood, poor Paul,
10 whose wild bad father loves you well.

1958

5. Wife of Abraham, who after long barrenness gave birth to Isaac (Genesis 17.19).

From The Dream Songs[6]

1

Huffy Henry hid the day,
unappeasable Henry sulked.
I see his point,—a trying to put things over.
It was the thought that they thought
5 they could do it made Henry wicked & away.
But he should have come out and talked.

All the world like a woolen lover
once did seem on Henry's side.
Then came a departure.
10 Thereafter nothing fell out as it might or ought.
I don't see how Henry, pried
open for all the world to see, survived.

What he has now to say is a long wonder the world can bear & be.
15 Once in a sycamore I was glad all at the top, and I sang.
Hard on the land wears the strong sea and empty grows every bed.

1964

4

Filling her compact & delicious body with chicken páprika, she glanced at me twice.
Fainting with interest, I hungered back
5 and only the fact of her husband & four other people kept me from springing on her or falling at her little feet and crying

"You are the hottest one for years of night
Henry's dazed eyes
10 have enjoyed, Brilliance." I advanced upon (despairing) my spumoni.—Sir Bones: is stuffed, de world, wif feeding girls.

—Black hair, complexion Latin, jeweled eyes downcast . . . The slob beside her feasts . . . What wonders is 15 she sitting on, over there?
The restaurant buzzes. She might as well be on Mars.

6. "[The Dream Songs are] essentially about an imaginary character (not the poet, not me) named Henry, a white American in early middle age sometimes in blackface, who has suffered an irreversible loss and talks about himself sometimes in the first person, sometimes in the third, sometimes even in the second; he has a friend, never named, who addresses him as Mr. Bones and variants thereof" [Berryman's note]. These poems were written over a period of thirteen years.

Where did it all go wrong? There ought to be a law against Henry.
—Mr. Bones: there is.

1964

14

Life, friends, is boring. We must not say so.
After all, the sky flashes, the great sea yearns,
we ourselves flash and yearn,
and moreover my mother told me as a boy
5 (repeatingly) "Ever to confess you're bored means you have no

Inner Resources." I conclude now I have no inner resources, because I am heavy bored.
Peoples bore me,
10 literature bores me, especially great literature,
Henry bores me, with his plights & gripes
as bad as achilles,[7]

who loves people and valiant art, which bores me.
And the tranquil hills, & gin, look like a drag 15 and somehow a dog has taken itself & its tail considerably away into mountains or sea or sky, leaving behind: me, wag.

1964

29

There sat down, once, a thing on Henry's heart
só heavy, if he had a hundred years
& more, & weeping, sleepless, in all them time
Henry could not make good.
5 Starts again always in Henry's ears
the little cough somewhere, an odor, a chime.

And there is another thing he has in mind like a grave Sienese face[8] a thousand years would fail to blur the still profiled reproach of. Ghastly, 10 with open eyes, he attends, blind.
All the bells say: too late. This is not for tears;
thinking.

But never did Henry, as he thought he did,
end anyone and hacks her body up

7. The Greek hero of Homer's Iliad, who withdrew from battle because of a slight from Agamemnon. Berryman claimed that some of the structure of The Dream Songs could be traced to parallel scenes in the Iliad. "The chief enemy, in Achilles' case, was Hector, whom Berryman explicitly equated with Henry's father" [John Haffenden, John Berryman: A Critical Commentary, 1980, 55].
8. The painters of thirteenth- and fourteenth-century Siena, Italy, were known for their austere religious portraits.

15 and hide the pieces, where they may be found.
He knows: he went over everyone, & nobody's missing.
Often he reckons, in the dawn, them up.
Nobody is ever missing.

1964

40

I'm scared a lonely. Never see my son, easy be not to see anyone,
combers out to sea
know they're goin somewhere but not me.
5 Got a little poison, got a little gun,
I'm scared a lonely.

I'm scared a only one thing, which is me,
from othering I don't take nothin, see,
for any hound dog's sake.
10 But this is where I livin, where I rake my leaves and cop my promise,[9] this' where we cry oursel's awake.

Wishin was dyin but I gotta make it all this way to that bed on these feet
15 where peoples said to meet.
Maybe but even if I see my son forever never, get back on the take, free, black & forty-one.[1]

1964

145

Also I love him: me he's done no wrong
for going on forty years—forgiveness time—
I touch now his despair,
he felt as bad as Whitman[2] on his tower
5 but he did not swim out with me or my brother as he threatened—

a powerful swimmer, to take one of us along as company in the defeat sublime, freezing my helpless mother:
10 he only, very early in the morning,
rose with his gun and went outdoors by my window and did what was needed.

9. Build my potential.
1. A play on the phrase free, white and twenty-one, connoting independence.
2. Charles Whitman, a sniper who, from a tower at the University of Texas at Austin, sprayed the campus with bullets for eighty minutes on August 1, 1966. Whitman wrote of fear and violent impulses before his mass killing. "He" here refers to Berryman's father, John Smith, who committed suicide when the poet was twelve years old.

I cannot read that wretched mind, so strong
& so undone. I've always tried. I—I'm 15 trying to forgive whose frantic passage, when he could not live an instant longer, in the summer dawn left Henry to live on.

1968

324. An Elegy for W.C.W.,[3] The Lovely Man

Henry in Ireland to Bill underground:
Rest well, who worked so hard, who made a good sound constantly, for so many years:
your high-jinks delighted the continents & our ears:
5 you had so many girls your life was a triumph and you loved your one wife.

At dawn you rose & wrote—the books poured forth—you delivered infinite babies,[4] in one great birth—and your generosity
10 to juniors made you deeply loved, deeply:
if envy was a Henry trademark, he would envy you,
especially the being through.

Too many journeys lie for him ahead,
too many galleys & page-proofs to be read,
15 he would like to lie down in your sweet silence, to whom was not denied the mysterious late excellence which is the crown of our trials & our last bride.

1968

382

At Henry's bier let some thing fall out well:
enter there none who somewhat has to sell,
the music ancient & gradual,
the voices solemn but the grief subdued,
5 no hairy jokes but everybody's mood subdued, subdued,

until the Dancer comes, in a short short dress hair black & long & loose, dark dark glasses,
uptilted face,
10 pallor & strangeness, the music changes to "Give!" & "Ow!" and how! the music changes,
she kicks a backward limb

3. The American poet William Carlos Williams (1883–1963; see pp. 1272–83).

4. Williams was a physician and specialized in pediatrics.

on tiptoe, pirouettes, & she is free to the knocking music, sails, dips, & suddenly 15 returns to the terrible gay occasion hopeless & mad, she weaves, it's hell, she flings to her head a leg, bobs, all is well,
she dances Henry away.

1968

RANDALL JARRELL
1914–1965

90 North[1]

At home, in my flannel gown, like a bear to its floe,
I clambered to bed; up the globe's impossible sides
I sailed all night—till at last, with my black beard,
My furs and my dogs, I stood at the northern pole.

5 There in the childish night my companions lay frozen,
The stiff furs knocked at my starveling throat,
And I gave my great sigh: the flakes came huddling,
Were they really my end? In the darkness I turned to my rest.

—Here, the flag snaps in the glare and silence
10 Of the unbroken ice. I stand here,
The dogs bark, my beard is black, and I stare
At the North Pole . . .
And now what? Why, go back.

Turn as I please, my step is to the south.
The world—my world spins on this final point
15 Of cold and wretchedness: all lines, all winds End in this whirlpool I at last discover.

And it is meaningless. In the child's bed
After the night's voyage, in that warm world
Where people work and suffer for the end
20 That crowns the pain—in that Cloud-Cuckoo-Land[2]

I reached my North and it had meaning.
Here at the actual pole of my existence,
Where all that I have done is meaningless,
Where I die or live by accident alone—

25 Where, living or dying, I am still alone;
Here where North, the night, the berg of death

1. Ninety degrees north latitude; the North Pole.
2. In the comedy The Birds, by the Greek dramatist Aristophanes (ca. 450–ca. 388 B.C.E.), an imaginary city the cuckoos build in the clouds.

Crowd me out of the ignorant darkness,
I see at last that all the knowledge

I wrung from the darkness—that the darkness flung me—
30 Is worthless as ignorance: nothing comes from nothing,[3]
The darkness from the darkness. Pain comes from the darkness
And we call it wisdom. It is pain.

1942

The Death of the Ball Turret Gunner[4]

From my mother's sleep I fell into the State,
And I hunched in its belly till my wet fur froze.
Six miles from earth, loosed from its dream of life,
I woke to black flak and the nightmare fighters.
5 When I died they washed me out of the turret with a hose.

1945

Eighth Air Force[5]

If, in an odd angle of the hutment,° encampment
A puppy laps the water from a can
Of flowers, and the drunk sergeant shaving
Whistles O Paradiso![6]—shall I say that man
5 Is not as men have said: a wolf to man?

The other murderers troop in yawning;
Three of them play Pitch,° one sleeps, and one a card game
Lies counting missions, lies there sweating
Till even his heart beats: One; One; One.
10 O murderers! . . . Still, this is how it's done:

This is a war. . . . But since these play, before they die,
Like puppies with their puppy; since, a man,
I did as these have done, but did not die—
I will content the people as I can
15 And give up these to them: Behold the man![7]

3. Cf. Shakespeare, King Lear 1.1.89: "Nothing will come of nothing"; also a statement in Aristotle, Physics 1.
4. "A ball turret was a plexiglass sphere set into the belly of a B-17 or B-24, and inhabited by two .50 caliber machine-guns and one man, a short small man. When this gunner tracked with his machine-guns a fighter attacking his bomber from below, he revolved with the turret; hunched upside-down in his little sphere, he looked like the foetus in the womb. The fighters which attacked him were armed with cannon firing explosive shells. The hose was a steam hose" [Jarrell's note].
5. "A poem about the air force which bombed the Continent from England. The man who lies counting missions has one to go before being sent home. The phrases from the Gospels compare such criminals and scapegoats as these with that earlier criminal and scapegoat about whom the Gospels were written" [Jarrell's note].
6. A popular operatic aria.
7. Quoting John 19.5: these are Pilate's words as he presents Jesus, scourged and wearing a crown of thorns, to the crowd.

I have suffered, in a dream, because of him,
Many things;[8] for this last saviour, man,
I have lied as I lie now. But what is lying?
Men wash their hands, in blood, as best they can:
20 I find no fault in this just man.[9]

1945

A Front[1]

Fog over the base: the beams ranging
From the five towers pull home from the night
The crews cold in fur, the bombers banging
Like lost trucks down the levels of the ice.
5 A glow drifts in like mist (how many tons of it?),
Bounces to a roll, turns suddenly to steel
And tires and turrets, huge in the trembling light.
The next is high, and pulls up with a wail,
Comes round again—no use. And no use for the rest
10 In drifting circles out along the range;
Holding no longer, changed to a kinder course,
The flights drone southward through the steady rain.
The base is closed. . . . But one voice keeps on calling,
The lowering pattern of the engines grows;
15 The roar gropes downward in its shaky orbit
For the lives the season quenches. Here below
They beg, order, are not heard; and hear the darker Voice rising: Can't you hear me? Over. Over—
All the air quivers, and the east sky glows.

1945

A Field Hospital

He stirs, beginning to awake.
A kind of ache
Of knowing troubles his blind warmth; he moans,
And the high hammering drone
5 Of the first crossing fighters shakes
His sleep to pieces, rakes
The darkness with its skidding bursts, is done.
All that he has known

8. Pilate's wife wrote to him about Jesus: "Have nothing to do with that just man: for I have suffered many things this day in a dream because of him" (Matthew 27.19).

9. After the crowd had called on him to free the robber Barabbas and execute Jesus, Pilate had Jesus brought forth, "that you may know that I find no fault in him" (John 19.4–5). Pilate washed his hands to symbolize his freedom from responsibility for Christ's death.

1. "A front is closing in over a bomber base; the bombers, guided in by signals from the five towers of the radio range, are landing. Only one lands before the base is closed; the rest fly south to fields that are still open. One plane's radio has gone bad—it still transmits, but doesn't receive—and this plane tries to land and crashes" [Jarrell's note].

Floods in upon him; but he dreads
10 The crooked thread
Of fire upon the darkness: "The great drake
Flutters to the icy lake—
The shotguns stammer in my head.
I lie in my own bed,"
15 He whispers, "dreaming"; and he thinks to wake.
The old mistake.

A cot creaks; and he hears the groan
He thinks his own—
And groans, and turns his stitched, blind, bandaged head
20 Up to the tent-flap, red
With dawn. A voice says, "Yes, this one";
His arm stings; then, alone,
He neither knows, remembers—but instead
Sleeps, comforted.

1948

Next Day

Moving from Cheer to Joy, from Joy to All,
I take a box
And add it to my wild rice, my Cornish game hens.
The slacked or shorted, basketed, identical
5 Food-gathering flocks
Are selves I overlook. Wisdom, said William James,

Is learning what to overlook.[2] And I am wise
If that is wisdom.
Yet somehow, as I buy All from these shelves
10 And the boy takes it to my station wagon,
What I've become
Troubles me even if I shut my eyes.

When I was young and miserable and pretty
And poor, I'd wish
15 What all girls wish: to have a husband,
A house and children. Now that I'm old, my wish
Is womanish:
That the boy putting groceries in my car

See me. It bewilders me he doesn't see me.
20 For so many years
I was good enough to eat: the world looked at me
And its mouth watered. How often they have undressed me,
The eyes of strangers!
And, holding their flesh within my flesh, their vile

2. From Principles of Psychology, by the American philosopher William James (1842–1910).

25 Imaginings within my imagining,
I too have taken
The chance of life. Now the boy pats my dog
And we start home. Now I am good.
The last mistaken,
30 Ecstatic, accidental bliss, the blind

Happiness that, bursting, leaves upon the palm
Some soap and water—
It was so long ago, back in some Gay
Twenties, Nineties, I don't know . . . Today I miss 35 My lovely daughter
Away at school, my sons away at school,

My husband away at work—I wish for them.
The dog, the maid,
And I go through the sure unvarying days
40 At home in them. As I look at my life,
I am afraid
Only that it will change, as I am changing:

I am afraid, this morning, of my face.
It looks at me
45 From the rear-view mirror, with the eyes I hate,
The smile I hate. Its plain, lined look
Of gray discovery
Repeats to me: "You're old." That's all, I'm old.

And yet I'm afraid, as I was at the funeral
50 I went to yesterday.
My friend's cold made-up face, granite among its flowers,
Her undressed, operated-on, dressed body
Were my face and body.
As I think of her I hear her telling me

55 How young I seem; I am exceptional;
I think of all I have.
But really no one is exceptional,
No one has anything, I'm anybody,
I stand beside my grave
60 Confused with my life, that is commonplace and solitary.

1965

A Man Meets a Woman in the Street

Under the separated leaves of shade
Of the gingko, that old tree
That has existed essentially unchanged
Longer than any other living tree,

5 I walk behind a woman. Her hair's coarse gold
Is spun from the sunlight that it rides upon.
Women were paid to knit from sweet champagne
Her second skin: it winds and unwinds, winds
Up her long legs, delectable haunches,
10 As she sways, in sunlight, up the gazing aisle.
The shade of the tree that is called maidenhair,
That is not positively known
To exist in a wild state, spots her fair or almost fair
Hair twisted in a French twist; tall or almost tall,
15 She walks through the air the rain has washed, a clear thing
Moving easily on its high heels, seeming to men Miraculous . . . Since I can call her, as Swann[3] couldn't,
A woman who is my type, I follow with the warmth
Of familiarity, of novelty, this new 20 Example of the type,
Reminded of how Lorenz's[4] just-hatched goslings
Shook off the last remnants of the egg
And, looking at Lorenz, realized that Lorenz
Was their mother. Quacking, his little family
25 Followed him everywhere; and when they met a goose,
Their mother, they ran to him afraid.

Imprinted upon me
Is the shape I run to, the sweet strange Breath-taking contours that breathe to me: "I am yours, 30 Be mine!"
Following this new
Body, somehow familiar, this young shape, somehow old,
For a moment I'm younger, the century is younger.
The living Strauss,[5] his moustache just getting gray,
35 Is shouting to the players: "Louder!
Louder! I can still hear Madame Schumann-Heink—"[6]
Or else, white, bald, the old man's joyfully
Telling conductors they must play Elektra
Like A Midsummer Night's Dream[7]—like fairy music;
40 Proust, dying, is swallowing his iced beer
And changing in proof the death of Bergotte[8]
According to his own experience; Garbo,[9]
A commissar in Paris, is listening attentively
To the voice telling how McGillicuddy met McGillivray,
45 And McGillivray said to McGillicuddy—no, McGillicuddy

3. Charles Swann, a protagonist of the first book in the seven-volume novel À la recherche du temps perdu (In Search of Lost Time), by the French writer Marcel Proust (1871–1922). After Swann's infatuation with his lover Odette ceases, he remarks that she was never his type.
4. Konrad Lorenz (1903–1989), Austrian ethologist who in a 1935 study described the process of "imprinting." Just-hatched goslings preferred Lorenz to their natural mother after having received certain stimuli.
5. Richard Strauss (1864–1949), German composer, wrote the opera Electra.
6. Ernestine Schumann-Heink (1861–1936), American (Bohemian-born) contralto.
7. Incidental music, based on Shakespeare's play, by Felix Mendelssohn (1809–1847), German composer.
8. Character in Proust's novel, a distinguished writer.
9. Greta Garbo (1905–1990), American (Swedish-born) film actor, famous for her unsmiling demeanor. Here quoted from the film Ninotchka (1939), before she finally laughs for the first time on screen.

Said to McGillivray—that is, McGillivray . . . Garbo
Says seriously: "I vish dey'd never met."

As I walk behind this woman I remember
That before I flew here—waked in the forest
50 At dawn, by the piece called Birds Beginning Day
That, each day, birds play to begin the day—
I wished as men wish: "May this day be different!"
The birds were wishing, as birds wish—over and over,
With a last firmness, intensity, reality—
55 "May this day be the same!"
Ah, turn to me
And look into my eyes, say: "I am yours,
Be mine!"
My wish will have come true. And yet 60 When your eyes meet my eyes, they'll bring into
The weightlessness of my pure wish the weight
Of a human being: someone to help or hurt,
Someone to be good to me, to be good to,
Someone to cry when I am angry
65 That she doesn't like Elektra, someone to start out on Proust with.
A wish, come true, is life. I have my life.
When you turn just slide your eyes across my eyes
And show in a look flickering across your face
As lightly as a leaf's shade, a bird's wing,
70 That there is no one in the world quite like me,
That if only . . . If only . . .
That will be enough.

But I've pretended long enough: I walk faster
And come close, touch with the tip of my finger
75 The nape of her neck, just where the gold
Hair stops, and the champagne-colored dress begins.
My finger touches her as the gingko's shadow
Touches her.
Because, after all, it is my wife
80 In a new dress from Bergdorf's, walking toward the park.
She cries out, we kiss each other, and walk arm in arm
Through the sunlight that's much too good for New York,
The sunlight of our own house in the forest.
Still, though, the poor things need it . . . We've no need 85 To start out on Proust, to ask each other about Strauss.
We first helped each other, hurt each other, years ago.
After so many changes made and joys repeated,
Our first bewildered, transcending recognition
Is pure acceptance. We can't tell our life
90 From our wish. Really I began the day
Not with a man's wish: "May this day be different,"
But with the birds' wish: "May this day
Be the same day, the day of my life."

1967

WELDON KEES
1914–1955

What the Spider Heard

Will there be time for eggnogs and eclogues
In the place where we're going?
Said the spider to the fly.[1]

I think not, said the fly.
5 I think not, sang the chorus.
I think not, said a stranger
Who mysteriously happened by.

Will they beat me and treat me the way they did here,
In the place where we're going?
10 Asked the spider of the fly.

It is likely, said the fly.
Very likely, sang the chorus.
Extremely likely, said the stranger,
With an eager gleam in his eye.

15 O, why go there when we know there is nothing there but fear
At this place where we're going?
Said the spider to the fly.

What a question! said the fly.
What a question! sang the chorus.
20 What a question! said the stranger,
Leering slightly at the spider,
Winking slyly at the fly.

1943

For H. V. (1901–1927)

I remember the clumsy surgery: the face
Scarred out of recognition, ruined and not his own.
Wax hands fattened among pink silk and pinker roses.
The minister was in fine form that afternoon.

5 I remember the ferns, the organ faintly out of tune,
The gray light, the two extended prayers,
Rain falling on stained glass; the pallbearers,
Selected by the family, and none of them his friends.

1943

1. Allusion to the children's poem "The Spider and the Fly," by the English writer Mary Howitt (1799–1888), which begins, " 'Will you walk into my parlor?' said the spider to the fly.' " The spider seduces the fly "up his winding stair" and kills her.

When the Lease Is Up

Walk the horses down the hill
Through the darkening groves;
Pat their rumps and leave the stall;
Even the eyeless cat perceives
5 Things are not going well.

Fasten the lock on the drawingroom door,
Cover the tables with sheets:
This is the end of the swollen year
When even the sound of the rain repeats:
10 The lease is up, the time is near.

Pull the curtains to the sill,
Darken the rooms, cut all the wires.
Crush the embers as they fall
From the dying fires:
15 Things are not going well.

1943

Robinson[2]

The dog stops barking after Robinson has gone.
His act is over. The world is a gray world,
Not without violence, and he kicks under the grand piano,
The nightmare chase well under way.

5 The mirror from Mexico, stuck to the wall,
Reflects nothing at all. The glass is black.
Robinson alone provides the image Robinsonian.

Which is all of the room—walls, curtains,
Shelves, bed, the tinted photograph of Robinson's first wife,
10 Rugs, vases, panatellas° in a humidor. cigars
They would fill the room if Robinson came in.

The pages in the books are blank,
The books that Robinson has read. That is his favorite chair,
Or where the chair would be if Robinson were here.

15 All day the phone rings. It could be Robinson
Calling. It never rings when he is here.

Outside, white buildings yellow in the sun.
Outside, the birds circle continuously
Where trees are actual and take no holiday.

1947

2. A fictional everyman who appears in a number of Kees's poems.

NORMAN NICHOLSON
1914–1987

To the River Duddon[1]

I wonder, Duddon, if you still remember
An oldish man with a nose like a pony's nose,
Broad bones, legs long and lean but strong enough
To carry him over Hardknott at seventy years of age.
5 He came to you first as a boy with a fishing-rod
And a hunk of Ann Tyson's bread and cheese in his pocket,
Walking from Hawkshead across Walna Scar;[2]
Then as a middle-aged Rydal[3] landlord,
With a doting sister and a pension on the civil list,
10 Who left his verses gummed to your rocks like lichen,
The dry and yellow edges of a once-green spring.
He made a guide-book for you, from your source
There where you bubble through the moss on Wrynose (Among the ribs of bald and bony fells° — upland tracts
15 With screes[4] scratched in the turf like grey scabs),
And twist and slither under humpbacked bridges—
Built like a child's house from odds and ends
Of stones that lie about the mountain side—
Past Cockley Beck Farm and on to Birk's Bridge, 20 Where the rocks stride about like legs in armour,
And the steel birches buckle and bounce in the wind
With a crinkle of silver foil in the crisp of the leaves;
On then to Seathwaite, where like a steam-navvy[5]
You shovel and slash your way through the gorge
25 By Wallabarrow Crag, broader now
From becks that flow out of black upland tarns° — small lakes
Or ooze through golden saxifrage and the roots of rowans;
Next Ulpha, where a stone dropped from the bridge
Swims like a tadpole down thirty feet of water 30 Between steep skirting-boards of rock; and thence
You dribble into lower Dunnerdale
Through wet woods and wood-soil and woodland flowers,
Tutson, the St. John's-wort with a single yellow bead,
Marsh marigold, creeping jenny and daffodils;
35 Here from hazel islands in the late spring
The catkins° fall and ride along the stream — spiky flowerings
Like little yellow weasels, and the soil is loosed
From bulbs of the white lily that smells of garlic,
And dippers rock up and down on rubber legs,
40 And long-tailed tits° are flung through the air like darts; — birds

1. In England's southwest Lake District, flowing down Dunnerdale from Wrynose and Hardknott passes. This poem recalls The River Duddon: A Series of Sonnets (1820), by William Wordsworth (1770–1850; see pp. 763–805), the "oldish man" in line 2.
2. A rocky eminence in England's Lake District. Wordsworth lodged with Hugh and Ann Tyson while attending Hawshead Grammar School, Cumbria.
3. Lake District village where Wordsworth later lived with his sister, Dorothy (1771–1855).
4. Masses of debris at the foot of a cliff.
5. Steam-powered excavator (navvy: laborer).

By Foxfield now you taste the salt in your mouth,
And thrift mingles with the turf, and the heron stands
Watching the wagtails. Wordsworth wrote:
"Remote from every taint of sordid industry".[6]
45 But you and I know better, Duddon lass.
For I, who've lived for nearly thirty years
Upon your shore, have seen the slagbanks[7] slant
Like screes sheer into the sand, and seen the tide
Purple with ore back up the muddy gullies
50 And wiped the sinter dust from the farmyard damsons.[8]
A hundred years of floods and rain and wind
Have washed your rocks clear of his words again,
Many of them half-forgotten, brimming the Irish Sea,
But that which Wordsworth knew, even the old man
55 When poetry had failed like desire, was something
I have yet to learn, and you, Duddon,
Have learned and re-learned to forget and forget again.
Not the radical, the poet and heretic,
To whom the water-forces shouted and the fells
60 Were like a blackboard for the scrawls of God,
But the old man, inarticulate and humble,
Knew that eternity flows in a mountain beck°— creek
The long cord of the water, the shepherd's numerals
That run upstream, through the singing decades of dialect.
65 He knew, beneath mutation of year and season,
Flood and drought, frost and fire and thunder,
The frothy blossom on the rowan and the reddening of the berries,
The silt, the sand, the slagbanks and the shingle,[9]
And the wild catastrophes of the breaking mountains,
70 There stands the base and root of the living rock,
Thirty thousand feet of solid Cumberland.

1944

Halley's Comet

My father saw it back in 1910,
The year King Edward died.
Above dark telegraph poles, above the high
Spiked steeple of the Liberal Club, the white
5 Gas-lit dials of the Market Clock,
Beyond the wide
Sunset-glow cirrus of blast-furnace smoke,
My father saw it fly
Its thirty-seven-million-mile-long kite
10 Across Black Combe's[1] black sky.

6. From The River Duddon, sonnet II, lines 1–2.
7. Accumulations of volcanic rock.
8. Plum trees. Sinter: cinder (i.e., from slag).
9. Round, water-worn gravel and pebbles.
1. Place-name meaning dark, armchair-shaped rock formation.

And what of me,
Born four years too late?
Will I have breath to wait
Till the long-circuiting commercial traveller
15 Turns up at his due?
In 1986, aged seventy-two,
Watery in the eyes and phlegmy in the flue
And a bit bad tempered at so delayed a date,
Will I look out above whatever is left of the town—
20 The Liberal Club long closed and the clock stopped,
And the chimneys smokeless above damped-down
Furnace fires? And then will I
At last have chance to see it
With my own as well as my father's eyes,
25 And share his long-ago Edwardian surprise
At that high, silent jet, laying its bright trail
Across Black Combe's black sky?

1981

HENRY REED
1914–1986

Chard Whitlow

(Mr Eliot's Sunday Evening Postscript)[1]

As we get older we do not get any younger.
Seasons return, and today I am fifty-five,
And this time last year I was fifty-four,
And this time next year I shall be sixty-two.
5 And I cannot say I should care (to speak for myself)
To see my time over again—if you can call it time,
Fidgeting uneasily under a draughty stair,
Or counting sleepless nights in the crowded Tube.[2]

There are certain precautions—though none of them very reliable—
10 Against the blast from bombs, or the flying splinter,
But not against the blast from Heaven, vento dei venti,[3]
The wind within a wind, unable to speak for wind;
And the frigid burnings of purgatory will not be touched
By any emollient.
15 I think you will find this put,
Far better than I could ever hope to express it,
In the words of Kharma:[4] "It is, we believe,

1. Mr. Eliot is the British (American-born) poet T. S. Eliot (1888–1965; see pp. 1340–66). Reed's title and subtitle evoke three of Eliot's titles: Burnt Norton, "Mr. Eliot's Sunday Morning Service," and "The Boston Evening Transcript." Whitlow: inflammatory sore on the finger.
2. Colloquial term for the London subway, in which thousands of Londoners were sheltering during the firebombing of London (known as the Blitz) of World War II, when this poem was written.
3. Wind of winds (Italian).
4. A concept common to Hinduism, Buddhism, and Jainism, the doctrine of Karma asserts that

Idle to hope that the simple stirrup-pump[5]
Can extinguish hell."

20 Oh, listeners,
And you especially who have switched off the wireless,[6]
And sit in Stoke or Basingstoke, listening appreciatively to the silence (Which is also the silence of hell), pray not for yourselves but your souls.

And pray for me also under the draughty stair.
25 As we get older we do not get any younger.

And pray for Kharma under the holy mountain.

1941 1946

Lessons of the War

TO ALAN MICHELL

Vixi duellis nuper idoneus
Et militavi non sine gloria[7]

1. Naming of Parts

Today we have naming of parts. Yesterday,
We had daily cleaning. And tomorrow morning,
We shall have what to do after firing. But today,
Today we have naming of parts. Japonica[8]
5 Glistens like coral in all of the neighbouring gardens,
And today we have naming of parts.

This is the lower sling swivel. And this Is the upper sling swivel, whose use you will see,
When you are given your slings. And this is the piling swivel,
10 Which in your case you have not got. The branches
Hold in the gardens their silent, eloquent gestures,
Which in our case we have not got.

This is the safety-catch, which is always released
With an easy flick of the thumb. And please do not let me 15 See anyone using his finger. You can do it quite easy one's state in this life is a result of actions in past incarnations, and that action in this life can determine one's destiny in future incarnations. Reed deliberately misspells Karma and confuses it with Buddha.

5. A portable foot pump used to combat fires during the Blitz.
6. I.e., radio.
7. The opening lines of a Latin poem by Horace (3.26), but with Horace's word puellis (girls) changed to duellis (war, battles): "Lately I have lived in the midst of battles, creditably enough, / And have soldiered, not without glory."
8. The flowering quince (Cydonia japonica), a shrub with brilliant scarlet flowers.

If you have any strength in your thumb. The blossoms
Are fragile and motionless, never letting anyone see
Any of them using their finger.

And this you can see is the bolt. The purpose of this 20 Is to open the breech, as you see. We can slide it Rapidly backwards and forwards: we call this
Easing the spring.[9] And rapidly backwards and forwards
The early bees are assaulting and fumbling the flowers:
They call it easing the Spring.

25 They call it easing the Spring: it is perfectly easy
If you have any strength in your thumb: like the bolt,
And the breech, and the cocking-piece, and the point of balance,
Which in our case we have not got; and the almond-blossom
Silent in all of the gardens and the bees going backwards and forwards,
30 For today we have naming of parts.

1942 1946

2. Judging Distances

Not only how far away, but the way that you say it
Is very important. Perhaps you may never get
The knack of judging a distance, but at least you know
How to report on a landscape: the central sector,
5 The right of arc and that, which we had last Tuesday,
And at least you know

That maps are of time,[1] not place, so far as the army
Happens to be concerned—the reason being,
Is one which need not delay us. Again, you know
10 There are three kinds of tree, three only, the fir and the poplar,
And those which have bushy tops to; and lastly
That things only seem to be things.

A barn is not called a barn, to put it more plainly,
Or a field in the distance, where sheep may be safely grazing.
15 You must never be over-sure. You must say, when reporting:
At five o'clock in the central sector is a dozen
Of what appear to be animals; whatever you do,
Don't call the bleeders sheep.

I am sure that's quite clear; and suppose, for the sake of example,
20 The one at the end, asleep, endeavours to tell us
What he sees over there to the west, and how far away,
After first having come to attention. There to the west,
On the fields of summer the sun and the shadows bestow
Vestments of purple and gold.

9. Moving the bolt of a rifle "rapidly backwards and forwards," thereby ejecting any bullets remaining in the magazine and taking pressure off the spring.

1. I.e., they convey the locations of targets through an imaginary clock with a topographical feature at its center.

25 The still white dwellings are like a mirage in the heat,
And under the swaying elms a man and a woman
Lie gently together. Which is, perhaps, only to say
That there is a row of houses to the left of arc,
And that under some poplars a pair of what appear to be humans
30 Appear to be loving.

Well that, for an answer, is what we might rightly call Moderately satisfactory only, the reason being,
Is that two things have been omitted, and those are important.
The human beings, now: in what direction are they,
35 And how far away, would you say? And do not forget
There may be dead ground[2] in between.

There may be dead ground in between; and I may not have got
The knack of judging a distance; I will only venture
A guess that perhaps between me and the apparent lovers
40 (Who, incidentally, appear by now to have finished)
At seven o'clock from the houses, is roughly a distance
Of about one year and a half.

1943 1946

DYLAN THOMAS
1914–1953

The Force That Through the Green Fuse Drives the Flower

The force that through the green fuse drives the flower
Drives my green age; that blasts the roots of trees
Is my destroyer.
And I am dumb to tell the crooked rose
5 My youth is bent by the same wintry fever.

The force that drives the water through the rocks
Drives my red blood; that dries the mouthing streams
Turns mine to wax.
And I am dumb to mouth unto my veins
10 How at the mountain spring the same mouth sucks.

The hand that whirls the water in the pool[1]
Stirs the quicksand; that ropes the blowing wind
Hauls my shroud sail.
And I am dumb to tell the hanging man
15 How of my clay is made the hangman's lime.[2]

2. Military term for space that cannot be reached by fire from a given weapon or a given point.
1. In John 5.1–4, an angel stirs the pool Bethesda, making the water curative.
2. Quicklime poured into the graves of people publically hanged, to hasten decomposition.

The lips of time leech to the fountain head;
Love drips and gathers, but the fallen blood
Shall calm her sores.
And I am dumb to tell a weather's wind
20 How time has ticked a heaven round the stars.

And I am dumb to tell the lover's tomb
How at my sheet[3] goes the same crooked worm.

1934

The Hand That Signed the Paper

The hand that signed the paper felled a city;
Five sovereign fingers taxed the breath,
Doubled the globe of dead and halved a country;
These five kings did a king to death.

5 The mighty hand leads to a sloping shoulder,
The finger joints are cramped with chalk;
A goose's quill has put an end to murder
That put an end to talk.

The hand that signed the treaty bred a fever,
10 And famine grew, and locusts came;
Great is the hand that holds dominion over
Man by a scribbled name.

The five kings count the dead but do not soften
The crusted wound nor stroke the brow;
15 A hand rules pity as a hand rules heaven;
Hands have no tears to flow.

1936

After the Funeral

(In Memory of Ann Jones)[4]

After the funeral, mule praises, brays,
Windshake of sailshaped ears, muffle-toed tap
Tap happily of one peg in the thick
Grave's foot, blinds down the lids, the teeth in black,
5 The spittled eyes, the salt ponds in the sleeves,
Morning smack of the spade that wakes up sleep,
Shakes a desolate boy who slits his throat

3. Corpse's winding-sheet.
4. Ann [Williams] Jones (d. 1933), Dylan Thomas's maternal aunt, married a tenant farmer; their rented farm, in the Welsh countryside, was Fern Hill (see p. 1571).

In the dark of the coffin and sheds dry leaves,
That breaks one bone to light with a judgment clout,
10 After the feast of tear-stuffed time and thistles
In a room with a stuffed fox and a stale fern,
I stand, for this memorial's sake, alone
In the snivelling hours with dead, humped Ann
Whose hooded, fountain heart once fell in puddles
15 Round the parched worlds of Wales and drowned each sun
(Though this for her is a monstrous image blindly
Magnified out of praise; her death was a still drop;
She would not have me sinking in the holy Flood of her heart's fame; she would lie dumb and deep 20 And need no druid[5] of her broken body).
But I, Ann's bard on a raised hearth, call all
The seas to service that her wood-tongued virtue
Babble like a bellbuoy over the hymning heads,
Bow down the walls of the ferned and foxy woods
25 That her love sing and swing through a brown chapel,
Bless her bent spirit with four, crossing birds.
Her flesh was meek as milk, but this skyward statue
With the wild breast and blessed and giant skull
Is carved from her in a room with a wet window
30 In a fiercely mourning house in a crooked year.
I know her scrubbed and sour humble hands
Lie with religion in their cramp, her threadbare
Whisper in a damp word, her wits drilled hollow,
Her fist of a face died clenched on a round pain;
35 And sculptured Ann is seventy years of stone.
These cloud-sopped, marble hands, this monumental
Argument of the hewn voice, gesture and psalm,
Storm me forever over her grave until
The stuffed lung of the fox twitch and cry Love
40 And the strutting fern lay seeds on the black sill.

1939

The Hunchback in the Park

The hunchback in the park
A solitary mister
Propped between trees and water
From the opening of the garden lock
5 That lets the trees and water enter
Until the Sunday sombre bell at dark[6]

Eating bread from a newspaper
Drinking water from the chained cup
That the children filled with gravel

5. Priest, among ancient Celts of Gaul or Britain; also, magician or soothsayer.

6. The bell that warns visitors that the park gates are about to be closed for the night.

10 In the fountain basin where I sailed my ship
Slept at night in a dog kennel
But nobody chained him up.

Like the park birds he came early
Like the water he sat down
15 And Mister they called Hey mister
The truant boys from the town
Running when he had heard them clearly
On out of sound

Past lake and rockery
20 Laughing when he shook his paper
Hunchbacked in mockery
Through the loud zoo of the willow groves
Dodging the park keeper
With his stick that picked up leaves.

25 And the old dog sleeper
Alone between nurses and swans
While the boys among willows
Made the tigers jump out of their eyes
To roar on the rockery stones
30 And the groves were blue with sailors

Made all day until bell time
A woman figure without fault
Straight as a young elm
Straight and tall from his crooked bones
35 That she might stand in the night
After the locks and chains

All night in the unmade park
After the railings and shrubberies
The birds the grass the trees the lake
40 And the wild boys innocent as strawberries
Had followed the hunchback
To his kennel in the dark.

1942

A Refusal to Mourn the Death, by Fire,[7] of a Child in London

Never until the mankind making
Bird beast and flower
Fathering and all humbling darkness
Tells with silence the last light breaking
5 And the still hour
Is come of the sea tumbling in harness

7. During the firebombing of London, known as the Blitz, in World War II.

And I must enter again the round
Zion[8] of the water bead
And the synagogue of the ear of corn
10 Shall I let pray the shadow of a sound
Or sow my salt seed
In the least valley of sackcloth to mourn

The majesty and burning of the child's death.
I shall not murder
15 The mankind of her going with a grave truth
Nor blaspheme down the stations of the breath
With any further
Elegy of innocence and youth.

Deep with the first dead lies London's daughter,
20 Robed in the long friends,
The grains beyond age, the dark veins of her mother,
Secret by the unmourning water
Of the riding Thames.[9]
After the first death, there is no other.

1946

The Conversation of Prayer

The conversation of prayers about to be said
By the child going to bed and the man on the stairs
Who climbs to his dying love in her high room,
The one not caring to whom in his sleep he will move
5 And the other full of tears that she will be dead,

Turns in the dark on the sound they know will arise
Into the answering skies from the green ground,
From the man on the stairs and the child by his bed.
The sound about to be said in the two prayers
10 For the sleep in a safe land and the love who dies

Will be the same grief flying. Whom shall they calm?
Shall the child sleep unharmed or the man be crying?
The conversation of prayers about to be said
Turns on the quick and the dead, and the man on the stairs
15 Tonight shall find no dying but alive and warm

In the fire of his care his love in the high room.
And the child not caring to whom he climbs his prayer
Shall drown in a grief as deep as his true grave,
And mark the dark eyed wave, through the eyes of sleep,
20 Dragging him up the stairs to one who lies dead.

1946

8. Heaven (from a Palestinian citadel, the nucleus of Jerusalem).

9. River that flows through London.

Fern Hill[1]

Now as I was young and easy under the apple boughs
About the lilting house and happy as the grass was green,
The night above the dingle[2] starry,
Time let me hail and climb
5 Golden in the heydays of his eyes,
And honoured among wagons I was prince of the apple towns
And once below a time I lordly had the trees and leaves
Trail with daisies and barley
Down the rivers of the windfall light.

10 And as I was green and carefree, famous among the barns
About the happy yard and singing as the farm was home,
In the sun that is young once only,
Time let me play and be
Golden in the mercy of his means,
15 And green and golden I was huntsman and herdsman, the calves
Sang to my horn, the foxes on the hills barked clear and cold,
And the sabbath rang slowly
In the pebbles of the holy streams.

All the sun long it was running, it was lovely, the hay
20 Fields high as the house, the tunes from the chimneys, it was air
And playing, lovely and watery
And fire green as grass.
And nightly under the simple stars
As I rode to sleep the owls were bearing the farm away,
25 All the moon long I heard, blessed among stables, the night-jars
Flying with the ricks,[3] and the horses
Flashing into the dark.

And then to awake, and the farm, like a wanderer white
With the dew, come back, the cock on his shoulder: it was all 30 Shining, it was Adam and maiden,[4]
The sky gathered again
And the sun grew round that very day.
So it must have been after the birth of the simple light
In the first, spinning place, the spellbound horses walking warm
35 Out of the whinnying green stable
On to the fields of praise.

And honoured among foxes and pheasants by the gay house
Under the new made clouds and happy as the heart was long,
In the sun born over and over,
40 I ran my heedless ways,
My wishes raced through the house high hay
And nothing I cared, at my sky blue trades, that time allows
In all his tuneful turning so few and such morning songs

1. Welsh farm, rented by Thomas's aunt and uncle, in which he spent summer holidays as a boy.
2. Small wooded valley.
3. Haystacks. Night-jars: nocturnal birds.
4. Adam and Eve (Genesis 1).

Before the children green and golden
45 Follow him out of grace,

Nothing I cared, in the lamb white days, that time would take me
Up to the swallow thronged loft by the shadow of my hand,
In the moon that is always rising,
Nor that riding to sleep
50 I should hear him fly with the high fields
And wake to the farm forever fled from the childless land.
Oh as I was young and easy in the mercy of his means,
Time held me green and dying
Though I sang in my chains like the sea.

1946

In My Craft or Sullen Art

In my craft or sullen art
Exercised in the still night
When only the moon rages
And the lovers lie abed
5 With all their griefs in their arms,
I labour by singing light
Not for ambition or bread
Or the strut and trade of charms
On the ivory stages
10 But for the common wages
Of their most secret heart.

Not for the proud man apart
From the raging moon I write
On these spindrift[5] pages
15 Nor for the towering dead
With their nightingales and psalms
But for the lovers, their arms
Round the griefs of the ages,
Who pay no praise or wages
20 Nor heed my craft or art.

1946

Do Not Go Gentle into That Good Night[6]

Do not go gentle into that good night,
Old age should burn and rave at close of day;
Rage, rage against the dying of the light.

5. Driven by the wind, like sea spray.
6. This villanelle was written in May 1951, during the final, prolonged illness of Thomas's father.

Though wise men at their end know dark is right,
5 Because their words had forked no lightning they
Do not go gentle into that good night.

Good men, the last wave by, crying how bright
Their frail deeds might have danced in a green bay,
Rage, rage against the dying of the light.

10 Wild men who caught and sang the sun in flight,
And learn, too late, they grieved it on its way,
Do not go gentle into that good night.

Grave men, near death, who see with blinding sight
Blind eyes could blaze like meteors and be gay,
15 Rage, rage against the dying of the light.

And you, my father, there on the sad height,
Curse, bless, me now with your fierce tears, I pray.
Do not go gentle into that good night.
Rage, rage against the dying of the light.

1952

ALUN LEWIS
1915–1944

All Day It Has Rained

All day it has rained, and we on the edge of the moors
Have sprawled in our bell-tents,[1] moody and dull as boors, Groundsheets and blankets spread on the muddy ground
And from the first grey wakening we have found
5 No refuge from the skirmishing fine rain
And the wind that made the canvas heave and flap
And the taut wet guy-ropes ravel out and snap.
All day the rain has glided, wave and mist and dream,
Drenching the gorse and heather, a gossamer stream
10 Too light to stir the acorns that suddenly
Snatched from their cups by the wild south-westerly
Pattered against the tent and our upturned dreaming faces.
And we stretched out, unbuttoning our braces,
Smoking a Woodbine,[2] darning dirty socks,
15 Reading the Sunday papers—I saw a fox
And mentioned it in the note I scribbled home;—
And we talked of girls, and dropping bombs on Rome,
And thought of the quiet dead and the loud celebrities
Exhorting us to slaughter, and the herded refugees;

1. Conical tents with a central pole.

2. Brand of cheap cigarette.

20 —Yet thought softly, morosely of them, and as indifferently
As of ourselves or those whom we
For years have loved, and will again
Tomorrow maybe love; but now it is the rain
Possesses us entirely, the twilight and the rain.

25 And I can remember nothing dearer or more to my heart
Than the children I watched in the woods on Saturday
Shaking down burning chestnuts for the schoolyard's merry play,
Or the shaggy patient dog who followed me
By Sheet and Steep and up the wooded scree[3]
30 To the Shoulder o' Mutton where Edward Thomas brooded long
On death and beauty—till a bullet stopped his song.[4]

1940 1941, 1942

Song

(On seeing dead bodies floating off the Cape[5])

The first month of his absence
I was numb and sick
And where he'd left his promise
Life did not turn or kick.
5 The seed, the seed of love was sick.

The second month my eyes were sunk
In the darkness of despair,
And my bed was like a grave
And his ghost was lying there.
10 And my heart was sick with care.

The third month of his going
I thought I heard him say
"Our course deflected slightly
On the thirty-second day—"
15 The tempest blew his words away.

And he was lost among the waves,
His ship rolled helpless in the sea,
The fourth month of his voyage
He shouted grievously
20 "Beloved, do not think of me."

The flying fish like kingfishers
Skim the sea's bewildered crests,

3. Mass of debris at the foot of a cliff. Sheet and Steep: villages.
4. The English poet Edward Thomas (1878–1917; see pp. 1253–56) was killed in World War I. In the issue of the magazine Horizon in which this poem first appeared, Lewis reviewed Thomas's The Trumpet and Other Poems: "I have been garrisoned for six months in Edward Thomas country and walked his walks. I have sheltered from the rain in the beautiful house he built but did not inhabit." Shoulder o' Mutton: a hill in Hampshire.
5. The Cape of Good Hope, South Africa.

The whales blow steaming fountains,
The seagulls have no nests
25 Where my lover sways and rests.

We never thought to buy and sell
This life that blooms or withers in the leaf,
And I'll not stir, so he sleeps well,
Though cell by cell the coral reef
30 Builds an eternity of grief.

But oh! the drag and dullness of my Self;
The turning seasons wither in my head;
All this slowness, all this hardness,
The nearness that is waiting in my bed,
35 The gradual self-effacement of the dead.

1944

Goodbye

So we must say Goodbye, my darling,
And go, as lovers go, for ever;
Tonight remains, to pack and fix on labels
And make an end of lying down together.

5 I put a final shilling in the gas,[6]
And watch you slip your dress below your knees
And lie so still I hear your rustling comb
Modulate the autumn in the trees.

And all the countless things I shall remember
10 Lay mummy-cloths[7] of silence round my head;
I fill the carafe with a drink of water;
You say "We paid a guinea[8] for this bed,"

And then, "We'll leave some gas, a little warmth
For the next resident, and these dry flowers,"
15 And turn your face away, afraid to speak
The big word, that Eternity is ours.

Your kisses close my eyes and yet you stare
As though God struck a child with nameless fears;
Perhaps the water glitters and discloses
20 Time's chalice and its limpid useless tears.

Everything we renounce except our selves;
Selfishness is the last of all to go;

6. Gas fire, the fuel supply of which is controlled by a meter that must be fed with shilling coins.
7. Bandages wrapped around an Egyptian mummy.
8. Old British currency: one pound and one shilling (105p.).

Our sighs are exhalations of the earth,
Our footprints leave a track across the snow.

25 We made the universe to be our home,
Our nostrils took the wind to be our breath,
Our hearts are massive towers of delight,
We stride across the seven seas of death.

Yet when all's done you'll keep the emerald
30 I placed upon your finger in the street;
And I will keep the patches[9] that you sewed
On my old battledress tonight, my sweet.

1945

MARGARET WALKER
1915–1998

Since 1619[1]

How many years since 1619 have I been singing Spirituals?
How long have I been praising God and shouting hallelujahs?
How long have I been hated and hating?
How long have I been living in hell for heaven?

5 When will I see my brother's face wearing another color?
When will I be ready to die in a honest fight?
When will I be conscious of the struggle—now to do or die?
When will these scales fall away from my eyes?[2]

What will I say when days of wrath[3] descend:
10 When the money-gods take all my life away;
When the death knell sounds
And peace is a flag of far-flung blood and filth?

When will I understand the cheated and the cheaters;
Their paltry pittances and cold concessions to my pride?
15 When will I burst from my kennel an angry mongrel,
Lean and hungry and tired of my dry bones and years?

1942

9. Cloth badges of rank attached to a soldier's uniform.
1. The year that the first African slaves arrived in Jamestown, Virginia, aboard a Dutch frigate.
2. Cf. the account of Saul's conversion in Acts 9.18: "And immediately there fell from his eyes as it had been scales: and he received sight forthwith, and arose, and was baptized."
3. According to the Bible (e.g., Zephaniah 1.1.15), days of God's judgment.

Childhood

When I was a child I knew red miners dressed raggedly and wearing carbide lamps.
I saw them come down red hills to their camps
dyed with red dust from old Ishkooda[4] mines.
5 Night after night I met them on the roads,
or on the streets in town I caught their glance;
the swing of dinner buckets in their hands,
and grumbling undermining all their words.

I also lived in low cotton country
10 where moonlight hovered over ripe haystacks, or stumps of trees, and croppers' rotting shacks with famine, terror, flood, and plague near by;
where sentiment and hatred still held sway
and only bitter land was washed away.

1942

JUDITH WRIGHT
1915–2000

Woman to Man

The eyeless labourer in the night,
the selfless, shapeless seed I hold,
builds for its resurrection day—
silent and swift and deep from sight
5 foresees the unimagined light.

This is no child with a child's face;
this has no name to name it by:
yet you and I have known it well.
This is our hunter and our chase,
10 the third who lay in our embrace.

This is the strength that your arm knows,
the arc of flesh that is my breast,
the precise crystals of our eyes.
This is the blood's wild tree that grows
15 the intricate and folded rose.

This is the maker and the made;
this is the question and reply;

4. South of Birmingham, Alabama, where Walker's family lived until she was five. The sestet of this sonnet shifts to her second childhood home, near New Orleans.

the blind head butting at the dark,
the blaze of light along the blade.
20 Oh hold me, for I am afraid.

1949

Train Journey

Glassed with cold sleep and dazzled by the moon,
out of the confused hammering dark of the train
I looked and saw under the moon's cold sheet
your delicate dry breasts, country that built my heart;

5 and the small trees on their uncoloured slope like poetry moved, articulate and sharp and purposeful under the great dry flight of air,
under the crosswise currents of wind and star.

Clench down your strength, box-tree and ironbark.[1]
10 Break with your violent root the virgin rock.
Draw from the flying dark its breath of dew
till the unliving come to life in you.

Be over the blind rock a skin of sense,
under the barren height a slender dance . . .

15 I woke and saw the dark small trees that burn suddenly into flowers more lovely than the white moon.

1953

Request to a Year

If the year is meditating a suitable gift,
I should like it to be the attitude of my great-great-grandmother,
legendary devotee of the arts,

5 who, having had eight children and little opportunity for painting pictures, sat one day on a high rock
beside a river in Switzerland and from a difficult distance viewed 10 her second son, balanced on a small ice-floe, drift down the current towards a waterfall

that struck rock-bottom eighty feet below,

1. Australian eucalyptus tree.

while her second daughter, impeded,
no doubt, by the petticoats of the day,
15 stretched out a last-hope alpenstock[2]
(which luckily later caught him on his way).

Nothing, it was evident, could be done;
and with the artist's isolating eye
my great-great-grandmother hastily sketched the scene.
20 The sketch survives to prove the story by.

Year, if you have no Mother's day present planned;
reach back and bring me the firmness of her hand.

1953

Eve[3] to Her Daughters

It was not I who began it.
Turned out into draughty caves,
hungry so often, having to work for our bread,
hearing the children whining,
5 I was nevertheless not unhappy.
Where Adam went I was fairly contented to go.
I adapted myself to the punishment: it was my life.

But Adam, you know . . . !
He kept on brooding over the insult,
10 over the trick They had played on us, over the scolding.
He had discovered a flaw in himself and he had to make up for it.

Outside Eden the earth was imperfect,
the seasons changed, the game was fleet-footed,
15 he had to work for our living, and he didn't like it.
He even complained of my cooking
(it was hard to compete with Heaven).

So he set to work.
The earth must be made a new Eden
20 with central heating, domesticated animals, mechanical harvesters, combustion engines,
escalators, refrigerators,
and modern means of communication and multiplied opportunities for safe investment 25 and higher education for Abel and Cain and the rest of the family.
You can see how his pride had been hurt.

2. Staff used in mountain climbing.
3. According to Genesis, the first woman, wife of Adam.

In the process he had to unravel everything,
because he believed that mechanism
30 was the whole secret—he was always mechanical-minded.
He got to the very inside of the whole machine
exclaiming as he went, So this is how it works!
And now that I know how it works, why, I must have invented it.
As for God and the Other, they cannot be demonstrated, 35 and what cannot be demonstrated doesn't exist.
You see, he had always been jealous.

Yes, he got to the centre
where nothing at all can be demonstrated.
40 And clearly he doesn't exist; but he refuses to accept the conclusion.
You see, he was always an egotist.

It was warmer than this in the cave;
there was none of this fall-out.
45 I would suggest, for the sake of the children,
that it's time you took over.

But you are my daughters, you inherit my own faults of character;
you are submissive, following Adam even beyond existence.
50 Faults of character have their own logic
and it always works out.
I observed this with Abel and Cain.

Perhaps the whole elaborate fable right from the beginning
55 is meant to demonstrate this; perhaps it's the whole secret.
Perhaps nothing exists but our faults?
At least they can be demonstrated.

But it's useless to make such a suggestion to Adam.
60 He has turned himself into God,
who is faultless, and doesn't exist.

1966

DAVID GASCOYNE
1916–2001

Yves Tanguy[1]

The worlds are breaking in my head
Blown by the brainless wind

1. American (French-born) Surrealist painter (1900–1955).

That comes from afar
Swollen with dusk and dust
5 And hysterical rain

The fading cries of the light
Awaken the endless desert
Engrossed in its tropical slumber
Enclosed by the dead grey oceans
10 Enclasped by the arms of the night

The worlds are breaking in my head
Their fragments are crumbs of despair
The food of the solitary damned
Who await the gross tumult of turbulent
15 Days bringing change without end.

The worlds are breaking in my head
The fuming future sleeps no more
For their seeds are beginning to grow
To creep and to cry midst the 20 Rocks of the deserts to come

Planetary seed
Sown by the grotesque wind
Whose head is so swollen with rumours
Whose hands are so urgent with tumours
25 Whose feet are so deep in the sand.

1936

Ecce Homo[2]

Whose is this horrifying face,
This putrid flesh, discoloured, flayed,
Fed on by flies, scorched by the sun?
Whose are these hollow red-filmed eyes
5 And thorn-spiked head and spear-stuck side?
Behold the Man: He is Man's Son.

Forget the legend, tear the decent veil
That cowardice or interest devised
To make their mortal enemy a friend,
10 To hide the bitter truth all His wounds tell,
Lest the great scandal be no more disguised:
He is in agony till the world's end,

2. Behold the man (Latin); Pilate's words when presenting Christ, beaten and crowned with thorns before his Crucifixion, to the people (John 19.5).

And we must never sleep during that time!
He is suspended on the cross-tree now
15 And we are onlookers at the crime,
Callous contemporaries of the slow
Torture of God. Here is the hill
Made ghastly by His spattered blood

Whereon He hangs and suffers still:
20 See, the centurions wear riding-boots,
Black shirts and badges and peaked caps,
Greet one another with raised-arm salutes;
They have cold eyes, unsmiling lips;
Yet these His brothers know not what they do.[3]

25 And on his either side hang dead
A labourer and a factory hand,
Or one is maybe a lynched Jew
And one a Negro or a Red,
Coolie or Ethiopian, Irishman,
30 Spaniard or German democrat.

Behind His lolling head the sky
Glares like a fiery cataract
Red with the murders of two thousand years
Committed in His name and by 35 Crusaders, Christian warriors
Defending faith and property.

Amid the plain beneath His transfixed hands,
Exuding darkness as indelible
As guilty stains, fanned by funereal
40 And lurid airs, besieged by drifting sands
And clefted° landslides our about-to-be — cloven, split
Bombed and abandoned cities stand.

He who wept for Jerusalem
Now sees His prophecy extend 45 Across the greatest cities of the world,
A guilty panic reason cannot stem
Rising to raze° them all as He foretold; — knock down
And He must watch this drama to the end.

Though often named, He is unknown
50 To the dark kingdoms at His feet
Where everything disparages His words,
And each man bears the common guilt alone
And goes blindfolded to his fate,
And fear and greed are sovereign lords.

3. "Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do" (Luke 23.34).

55 The turning point of history
Must come. Yet the complacent and the proud
And who exploit and kill, may be denied—
Christ of Revolution and of Poetry—
The resurrection and the life[4]
60 Wrought by your spirit's blood.

Involved in their own sophistry
The black priest and the upright man
Faced by subversive truth shall be struck dumb,
Christ of Revolution and of Poetry,
65 While the rejected and condemned become Agents of the divine.

Not from a monstrance[5] silver-wrought
But from the tree of human pain
Redeem our sterile misery,
70 Christ of Revolution and of Poetry,
That man's long journey through the night
May not have been in vain.

1943

P. K. PAGE
b. 1916

Stories of Snow

Those in the vegetable rain retain an area behind their sprouting eyes held soft and rounded with the dream of snow precious and reminiscent as those globes—
5 souvenir of some never-nether land—which hold their snow-storms circular, complete,
high in a tall and teakwood cabinet.

In countries where the leaves are large as hands where flowers protrude their fleshy chins 10 and call their colors, an imaginary snow-storm sometimes falls
among the lilies.
And in the early morning one will waken
to think the glowing linen of his pillow 15 a northern drift, will find himself mistaken and lie back weeping.

4. "Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life" (John 11.25).
5. Open or transparent box in which the Host (sanctified bread or wafer) is carried in the Roman Catholic service known as the Mass.

And there the story shifts from head to head,
of how in Holland, from their feather beds hunters arise and part the flakes and go 20 forth to the frozen lakes in search of swans—
the snow-light falling white along their guns, their breath in plumes.
While tethered in the wind like sleeping gulls ice-boats wait the raising of their wings 25 to skim the electric ice at such a speed
they leap jet strips of naked water, and how these flying, sailing hunters feel air in their mouths as terrible as ether.
And on the story runs that even drinks
30 in that white landscape dare to be no color;
how flasked and water clear, the liquor slips
silver against the hunters' moving hips.
And of the swan in death these dreamers tell of its last flight and how it falls, a plummet, 35 pierced by the freezing bullet and how three feathers, loosened by the shot, descend like snow upon it.
While hunters plunge their fingers in its down deep as a drift, and dive their hands 40 up to the neck of the wrist in that warm metamorphosis of snow
as gentle as the sort that woodsmen know who, lost in the white circle, fall at last and dream their way to death.

45 And stories of this kind are often told in countries where great flowers bar the roads with reds and blues which seal the route to snow—as if, in telling, raconteurs unlock the color with its complement and go 50 through to the area behind the eyes where silent, unrefractive whiteness lies.

1946

Deaf-Mute in the Pear Tree

His clumsy body is a golden fruit
pendulous in the pear tree

Blunt fingers among the multitudinous buds

Adriatic[1] blue the sky above and through 5 the forking twigs

1. Adriatic Sea, part of the Mediterranean Sea.

Sun ruddying tree's trunk, his trunk his massive head thick-nobbed with burnished curls tight-clenched in bud

(Painting by Generalić.[2] Primitive.)

10 I watch him prune with silent secateurs° pruning shears

Boots in the crotch of branches shift their weight heavily as oxen in a stall

Hear small inarticulate mews from his locked mouth
a kitten in a box

15 Pear clippings fall
soundlessly on the ground
Spring finches sing
soundlessly in the leaves

A stone. A stone in ears and on his tongue

20 Through palm and fingertip he knows the tree's quick springtime pulse

Smells in its sap the sweet incipient pears

Pale sunlight's choppy water glistens on his mutely snipping blades

25 and flags and scraps of blue above him make regatta° of the day boat race

But when he sees his wife's foreshortened shape sudden and silent in the grass below uptilt its face to him

30 then air is kisses, kisses

stone dissolves

his locked throat finds a little door and through it feathered joy flies screaming like a jay

1985

2. Ivan Generalić (1914–1992), Croatian painter in a "naive," or "primitive," style.

GWENDOLYN BROOKS
1917–2000

kitchenette building

We are things of dry hours and the involuntary plan,
Grayed in, and gray. "Dream" makes a giddy sound, not strong
Like "rent," "feeding a wife," "satisfying a man."

But could a dream send up through onion fumes
5 Its white and violet, fight with fried potatoes
And yesterday's garbage ripening in the hall,
Flutter, or sing an aria down these rooms

Even if we were willing to let it in,
Had time to warm it, keep it very clean,
10 Anticipate a message, let it begin?

We wonder. But not well! not for a minute!
Since Number Five is out of the bathroom now,
We think of lukewarm water, hope to get in it.

1945

my dreams, my works, must wait till after hell

I hold my honey and I store my bread
In little jars and cabinets of my will.
I label clearly, and each latch and lid
I bid, Be firm till I return from hell.
5 I am very hungry. I am incomplete.
And none can tell when I may dine again.
No man can give me any word but Wait,
The puny light. I keep eyes pointed in;
Hoping that, when the devil days of my hurt
10 Drag out to their last dregs and I resume
On such legs as are left me, in such heart
As I can manage, remember to go home,
My taste will not have turned insensitive
To honey and bread old purity could love.

1945

the birth in a narrow room

Weeps out of western country something new.
Blurred and stupendous. Wanted and unplanned.

Winks. Twines, and weakly winks
Upon the milk-glass fruit bowl, iron pot,
5 The bashful china child tipping forever
Yellow apron and spilling pretty cherries.

Now, weeks and years will go before she thinks
"How pinchy is my room! how can I breathe!
I am not anything and I have got 10 Not anything, or anything to do!"—
But prances nevertheless with gods and fairies
Blithely about the pump and then beneath
The elms and grapevines, then in darling endeavor
By privy foyer, where the screenings stand
15 And where the bugs buzz by in private cars
Across old peach cans and old jelly jars.

1949

the rites for Cousin Vit

Carried her unprotesting out the door.
Kicked back the casket-stand. But it can't hold her,
That stuff and satin aiming to enfold her,
The lid's contrition nor the bolts before.
5 Oh oh. Too much. Too much. Even now, surmise,
She rises in the sunshine. There she goes,
Back to the bars she knew and the repose
In love-rooms and the things in people's eyes.
Too vital and too squeaking. Must emerge.
10 Even now she does the snake-hips with a hiss,
Slops the bad wine across her shantung,[1] talks
Of pregnancy, guitars and bridgework, walks
In parks or alleys, comes haply on the verge Of happiness, haply hysterics. Is.

1949

The Bean Eaters

They eat beans mostly, this old yellow pair.
Dinner is a casual affair.
Plain chipware on a plain and creaking wood,
Tin flatware.

5 Two who are Mostly Good.
Two who have lived their day,

1. Silk of an uneven texture.

But keep on putting on their clothes
And putting things away.

And remembering . . .
10 Remembering, with twinklings and twinges,
As they lean over the beans in their rented back room that is full of beads and receipts and dolls and clothes, tobacco crumbs, vases and fringes.

1960

We Real Cool

THE POOL PLAYERS. SEVEN AT THE GOLDEN SHOVEL.

We real cool. We Left school. We

Lurk late. We Strike straight. We

5 Sing sin. We Thin gin. We

Jazz June. We Die soon.

1960

Medgar Evers[2]

For Charles Evers

The man whose height his fear improved he arranged to fear no further. The raw intoxicated time was time for better birth or a final death.

5 Old styles, old tempos, all the engagement of the day—the sedate, the regulated fray—
the antique light, the Moral rose, old gusts, tight whistlings from the past, the mothballs
in the Love at last our man forswore.

10 Medgar Evers annoyed confetti and assorted brands of businessmen's eyes.

2. Prominent black civil rights activist (1925–1963). The first field secretary of the NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People) in Mississippi, he was murdered by a white supremacist.

The shows came down: to maxims and surprise.
And palsy.

Roaring no rapt arise-ye to the dead, he 15 leaned across tomorrow. People said that he was holding clean globes in his hands.

1968

Boy Breaking Glass

To Marc Crawford From Whom the Commission

Whose broken window is a cry of art (success, that winks aware as elegance, as a treasonable faith)
is raw: is sonic: is old-eyed première.
5 Our beautiful flaw and terrible ornament.
Our barbarous and metal little man.

"I shall create! If not a note, a hole.
If not an overture, a desecration."

Full of pepper and light
10 and Salt and night and cargoes.

"Don't go down the plank
if you see there's no extension.
Each to his grief, each to his loneliness and fidgety revenge.

15 Nobody knew where I was and now I am no longer there."

The only sanity is a cup of tea.
The music is in minors.

Each one other is having different weather.

20 "It was you, it was you who threw away my name!
And this is everything I have for me."

Who has not Congress, lobster, love, luau,
the Regency Room, the Statue of Liberty, runs. A sloppy amalgamation.
25 A mistake.
A cliff.
A hymn, a snare, and an exceeding sun.

1968

CHARLES CAUSLEY
1917–2003

Armistice Day[1]

I stood with three comrades in Parliament Square
November her freights of grey fire unloading,
No sound from the city upon the pale air,
Above us the sea-bell eleven exploding.

5 Down by the bands and the burning memorial
Beats all the brass in a royal array,
But at our end we are not so sartorial:
Out of (as usual) the rig of the day.

Starry is wearing a split pusser's flannel[2]
10 Rubbed, as he is, by the regular tide;
Oxo the ducks[3] that he ditched in the Channel
In June, 1940 (when he was inside).

Kitty recalls his abandon-ship station,
Running below at the Old Man's salute
15 And (with a deck-watch) going down for duration
Wearing his oppo's pneumonia-suit.[4]

Comrades, for you the black captain of carracks
Writes in Whitehall[5] his appalling decisions,
But as was often the case in the Barracks
20 Several ratings are not at Divisions.[6]

Into my eyes the stiff sea-horses stare,
Over my head sweeps the sun like a swan.
As I stand alone in Parliament Square
A cold bugle calls, and the city moves on.

1957

At the British War Cemetery, Bayeux[7]

I walked where in their talking graves
And shirts of earth five thousand lay,

1. November 11, when, at the eleventh hour (of the eleventh day of the eleventh month), church services throughout Britain commemorate the dead of the two world wars. A "Remembrance Day" service held at London's Parliament Square includes two minutes of silence.
2. A torn naval-issue shirt.
3. Suit made of white duck (a canvaslike material).
4. Canvas suit worn while painting the ship. Oppo's: friend, comrade (from opposite number).
5. London street on which navy headquarters is located. Carracks: large merchant ships equipped for warfare.
6. I.e., noncommissioned sailors have skipped the parade (religious service) of the ship's company.
7. Town in northern France where many British soldiers killed in Normandy and Flanders during World War II are buried.

When history with ten feasts of fire
Had eaten the red air away.

5 "I am Christ's boy," I cried. "I bear
In iron hands the bread, the fishes.[8]
I hang with honey and with rose
This tidy wreck of all your wishes.

"On your geometry of sleep
10 The chestnut and the fir-tree fly,
And lavender and marguerite
Forge with their flowers an English sky.

"Turn now towards the belling town
Your jigsaws of impossible bone,
15 And rising read your rank of snow
Accurate as death upon the stone."

About your easy heads my prayers
I said with syllables of clay.
"What gift," I asked, "shall I bring now
20 Before I weep and walk away?"

Take, they replied, the oak and laurel.
Take our fortune of tears and live
Like a spendthrift lover. All we ask
Is the one gift you cannot give.

1957

Eden Rock

They are waiting for me somewhere beyond Eden Rock:
My father, twenty-five, in the same suit
Of Genuine Irish Tweed, his terrier Jack
Still two years old and trembling at his feet.

5 My mother, twenty-three, in a sprigged° dress — floral
Drawn at the waist, ribbon in her straw hat,
Has spread the stiff white cloth over the grass.
Her hair, the colour of wheat, takes on the light.

She pours tea from a Thermos, the milk straight
10 From an old H.P. sauce[9] bottle, a screw
Of paper for a cork; slowly sets out
The same three plates, the tin cups painted blue.

8. Allusion to Christ's feeding of the five thousand (John 6, Matthew 14).

9. A brand of steak sauce.

The sky whitens as if lit by three suns.
My mother shades her eyes and looks my way
15 Over the drifted stream. My father spins
A stone along the water. Leisurely,

They beckon to me from the other bank.
I hear them call, "See where the stream-path is!
Crossing is not as hard as you might think."

20 I had not thought that it would be like this.

1988

ROBERT LOWELL
1917–1977

The Quaker Graveyard in Nantucket

(FOR WARREN WINSLOW,[1] DEAD AT SEA)

Let man have dominion over the fishes of the sea and the fowls of the air and the beasts and the whole earth, and every creeping creature that moveth upon the earth.[2]

1

A brackish reach of shoal off Madaket[3]
The sea was still breaking violently and night
Had steamed into our North Atlantic Fleet,
When the drowned sailor clutched the drag-net. Light
5 Flashed from his matted head and marble feet,
He grappled at the net
With the coiled, hurdling muscles of his thighs:
The corpse was bloodless, a botch of reds and whites,
Its open, staring eyes
10 Were lusterless dead-lights° — porthole covers
Or cabin-windows on a stranded hulk
Heavy with sand.[4] We weight the body, close
Its eyes and heave it seaward whence it came,
Where the heel-headed dogfish barks its nose
15 On Ahab's[5] void and forehead; and the name
Is blocked in yellow chalk.
Sailors, who pitch this portent at the sea
Where dreadnaughts° shall confess — battleships

1. Lowell's cousin, who died when his naval vessel was sunk during World War II.
2. Cf. Genesis 1.26.
3. Small settlement on Nantucket Island, Massachusetts. Nantucket was a center of the American whaling industry.
4. Lines 1–12 are based on the opening chapter of Cape Cod, by the American writer Henry David Thoreau (1817–1862; see pp. 1045–46).
5. Captain Ahab, protagonist of the novel Moby-Dick, by the American writer Herman Melville (1819–1891; see pp. 1054–57), and a recurring presence in this sequence of poems, sailed from Nantucket on the Pequod in obsessive pursuit of the white whale.

Its hell-bent deity,
20 When you are powerless
To sand-bag this Atlantic bulwark, faced
By the earth-shaker, green, unwearied, chaste
In his steel scales: ask for no Orphean lute
To pluck life back.[6] The guns of the steeled fleet
25 Recoil and then repeat
The hoarse salute.

2

Whenever winds are moving and their breath
Heaves at the roped-in bulwarks of this pier,
The terns and sea-gulls tremble at your death
30 In these home waters. Sailor, can you hear
The Pequod's sea wings, beating landward, fall
Headlong and break on our Atlantic wall
Off 'Sconset, where the yawing S-boats[7] splash
The bellbuoy, with ballooning spinnakers,° sails
35 As the entangled, screeching mainsheet clears
The blocks: off Madaket, where lubbers° lash landlubbers
The heavy surf and throw their long lead squids
For blue-fish? Sea-gulls blink their heavy lids Seaward. The winds' wings beat upon the stones,
40 Cousin, and scream for you and the claws rush
At the sea's throat and wring it in the slush
Of this old Quaker graveyard where the bones
Cry out in the long night for the hurt beast
Bobbing by Ahab's whaleboats in the East.

3

45 All you recovered from Poseidon died
With you, my cousin, and the harrowed brine
Is fruitless on the blue beard of the god,
Stretching beyond us to the castles in Spain,
Nantucket's westward haven. To Cape Cod
50 Guns, cradled on the tide,
Blast the eelgrass about a waterclock
Of bilge and backwash, roil the salt and sand
Lashing earth's scaffold, rock
Our warships in the hand
55 Of the great God, where time's contrition blues
Whatever it was these Quaker sailors lost
In the mad scramble of their lives. They died
When time was open-eyed,
Wooden and childish; only bones abide
60 There, in the nowhere, where their boats were tossed

6. In Greek mythology, the musician Orpheus used song to win his wife, Eurydice, back from the underworld (though he lost her again before he reached the surface). Earth-shaker: Poseidon, Greek god of the sea.

7. Racing sailboats. 'Sconset: Siasconset, a town on Nantucket. Yawing: moving from side to side in a heavy sea.

Sky-high, where mariners had fabled news
Of IS,[8] the whited monster. What it cost
Them is their secret. In the sperm-whale's slick
I see the Quakers drown and hear their cry:
65 "If God himself had not been on our side,
If God himself had not been on our side,
When the Atlantic rose against us, why,
Then it had swallowed us up quick."

4

This is the end of the whaleroad[9] and the whale
70 Who spewed Nantucket bones on the thrashed swell
And stirred the troubled waters to whirlpools
To send the Pequod packing off to hell:
This is the end of them, three-quarters fools,
Snatching at straws to sail
75 Seaward and seaward on the turntail whale,
Spouting out blood and water as it rolls,
Sick as a dog to these Atlantic shoals:
Clamavimus, O depths.[1] Let the sea-gulls wail

For water, for the deep where the high tide
80 Mutters to its hurt self, mutters and ebbs.
Waves wallow in their wash, go out and out,
Leave only the death-rattle of the crabs,
The beach increasing, its enormous snout
Sucking the ocean's side.
85 This is the end of running on the waves;
We are poured out like water. Who will dance
The mast-lashed master of Leviathans[2]
Up from this field of Quakers in their unstoned graves?

5

When the whale's viscera go and the roll
90 Of its corruption overruns this world
Beyond tree-swept Nantucket and Wood's Hole[3]
And Martha's Vineyard, Sailor, will your sword
Whistle and fall and sink into the fat?
In the great ash-pit of Jehoshaphat[4]
95 The bones cry for the blood of the white whale,
The fat flukes arch and whack about its ears,
The death-lance churns into the sanctuary, tears
The gun-blue swingle,[5] heaving like a flail,
And hacks the coiling life out: it works and drags

8. Cf. God's naming of himself to Moses as "I AM" (Exodus 3.14).
9. An Anglo-Saxon epithet for the sea.
1. Adaptation of the Vulgate opening of Psalm 130: "Out of the depths have I cried unto thee, O Lord" (here, "we have cried").
2. In various biblical accounts, Leviathan is a sea monster defeated by God.
3. On the coast of Massachusetts, near the island of Martha's Vineyard, which lies to the west of Nantucket.
4. "The valley of judgment. The world, according to some prophets, and scientists, will end in fire" [Lowell's note to the American scholars Kimon Friar and John Malcolm Brinnin]. Ahab, king of Israel, persuaded Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, to go to war (Joel 3.12).
5. Rod for beating flax.

100 And rips the sperm-whale's midriff into rags,
Gobbets of blubber spill to wind and weather,
Sailor, and gulls go round the stoven timbers
Where the morning stars sing out together
And thunder shakes the white surf and dismembers
105 The red flag hammered in the mast-head.[6] Hide,
Our steel, Jonas Messias,[7] in Thy side.

6. Our Lady of Walsingham[8]

There once the penitents took off their shoes
And then walked barefoot the remaining mile;
And the small trees, a stream and hedgerows file
110 Slowly along the munching English lane,
Like cows to the old shrine, until you lose
Track of your dragging pain.
The stream flows down under the druid tree,[9]
Shiloah's[1] whirlpools gurgle and make glad 115 The castle of God. Sailor, you were glad
And whistled Sion by that stream. But see:

Our Lady, too small for her canopy,
Sits near the altar. There's no comeliness
At all or charm in that expressionless
120 Face with its heavy eyelids. As before,
This face, for centuries a memory,
Non est species, neque decor,[2]
Expressionless, expresses God: it goes
Past castled Sion. She knows what God knows,
125 Not Calvary's Cross nor crib at Bethlehem
Now, and the world shall come to Walsingham.

7

The empty winds are creaking and the oak
Splatters and splatters on the cenotaph,[3]
The boughs are trembling and a gaff° spar
130 Bobs on the untimely stroke
Of the greased wash exploding on a shoal-bell° bell buoy
In the old mouth of the Atlantic. It's well;
Atlantic, you are fouled with the blue sailors,
Sea-monsters, upward angel, downward fish:[4]

6. As was the flag in the concluding chapter of Moby-Dick.
7. The prophet Jonah (also called Jonas), who emerged alive from the whale, is often linked with the Messiah as a figure of salvation. Here he is pierced by a harpoon as Jesus was pierced by a Roman soldier's spear (cf. Matthew 12.39–41).
8. Walsingham is a small town in Norfolk, England; a shrine to the Virgin Mary, built in the eleventh century, was an object of pilgrimage until it was destroyed during the Reformation. Lowell adapted this section from the description in E. I. Watkin's Catholic Art and Culture (1942).
9. The Druids were an order of ancient Celts of Gaul and Britain who served as priests, teachers, and magicians; their beliefs and practices are associated with trees.
1. According to Isaiah 8.6, the stream that flows past God's Temple on Mt. Sion. In Isaiah 51.11, the redeemed come "singing into Zion," the heavenly city.
2. There is no beauty or charm (Latin); quoted from Watkin.
3. An empty tomb or monument erected to the dead but not containing their remains.
4. Cf. Milton, Paradise Lost 1.462–63: "Dagon his name, sea monster, upward man / And downward fish."

135 Unmarried and corroding, spare of flesh
Mart° once of supercilious, wing'd clippers, market
Atlantic, where your bell-trap guts its spoil
You could cut the brackish winds with a knife
Here in Nantucket, and cast up the time
140 When the Lord God formed man from the sea's slime
And breathed into his face the breath of life,
And blue-lung'd combers lumbered to the kill.
The Lord survives the rainbow of His will.[5]

1946

Mr. Edwards[6] and the Spider

I saw the spiders marching through the air,
Swimming from tree to tree that mildewed day
In latter August when the hay Came creaking to the barn. But where 5 The wind is westerly,
Where gnarled November makes the spiders fly
Into the apparitions of the sky,
They purpose nothing but their ease and die
Urgently beating east to sunrise and the sea;

10 What are we in the hands of the great God?
It was in vain you set up thorn and briar
In battle array against the fire
And treason crackling in your blood;
For the wild thorns grow tame
15 And will do nothing to oppose the flame;
Your lacerations tell the losing game
You play against a sickness past your cure.
How will the hands be strong? How will the heart endure?[7]

A very little thing, a little worm,
20 Or hourglass-blazoned spider,[8] it is said,
Can kill a tiger. Will the dead
Hold up his mirror and affirm
To the four winds the smell
And flash of his authority? It's well
25 If God who holds you to the pit of hell,

5. The rainbow symbolizes God's covenant with Noah never again to destroy the earth by flood (see Genesis 9.11–17).
6. Jonathan Edwards (1703–1758), Puritan theologian and preacher whose works are alluded to throughout. The first stanza draws upon a paper, "On Insects," probably written ca. 1719–20, in which Edwards records his observations of the behavior of spiders. The poem is also heavily indebted to Edwards's most famous sermon, "Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God," which compares humans to spiders: "The God that holds you over the pit of Hell, much as one holds a spider or some loathsome insect, over the fire, abhors you, and is dreadfully provoked; his wrath towards you burns like fire."
7. Cf. Ezekiel 22.14 (the point of departure of "Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God"): "Can thine heart endure, or can thine hands be strong, in the days that I shall be strong, in the days that I shall deal with thee?"
8. The black widow spider, common in North America, is marked with a red hourglass pattern on its abdomen.

Much as one holds a spider, will destroy,
Baffle and dissipate your soul. As a small boy

On Windsor Marsh,[9] I saw the spider die
When thrown into the bowels of fierce fire:
30 There's no long struggle, no desire
To get up on its feet and fly—
It stretches out its feet
And dies. This is the sinner's last retreat;
Yes, and no strength exerted on the heat
35 Then sinews the abolished will, when sick
And full of burning, it will whistle on a brick.

But who can plumb the sinking of that soul?
Josiah Hawley,[1] picture yourself cast
Into a brick-kiln where the blast
40 Fans your quick vitals to a coal—
If measured by a glass,
How long would it seem burning! Let there pass
A minute, ten, ten trillion; but the blaze
Is infinite, eternal: this is death,
45 To die and know it. This is the Black Widow, death.

1946

My Last Afternoon with Uncle Devereux Winslow

1922: THE STONE PORCH OF MY GRANDFATHER'S SUMMER HOUSE

1

"I won't go with you. I want to stay with Grandpa!"
That's how I threw cold water on my Mother and Father's watery martini pipe dreams at Sunday dinner.
5 . . . Fontainebleau, Mattapoisett, Puget Sound. . . . [2]
Nowhere was anywhere after a summer
at my Grandfather's farm.
Diamond-pointed, athirst and Norman,[3]
its alley of poplars
10 paraded from Grandmother's rose garden to a scary stand of virgin pine, scrub, and paths forever pioneering.

One afternoon in 1922,
I sat on the stone porch, looking through 15 screens as black-grained as drifting coal.

9. Near East Windsor, Connecticut, Edwards's childhood home.
1. Edwards's uncle, Joseph Hawley, who killed himself in 1735.
2. Desirable places to visit (in France, Massachusetts, and Washington State, respectively).
3. A version of Romanesque architecture developed in the French province of Normandy in the tenth century.

Tockytock, tockytock clumped our Alpine, Edwardian cuckoo clock, slung with strangled, wooden game.
Our farmer was cementing a root-house[4] under the hill.
20 One of my hands was cool on a pile of black earth, the other warm on a pile of lime. All about me were the works of my Grandfather's hands:
snapshots of his Liberty Bell silver mine;
25 his high school at Stuttgart am Neckar;[5]
stogie-brown beams; fools'-gold nuggets;
octagonal red tiles,
sweaty with a secret dank, crummy with ant-stale;
a Rocky Mountain chaise longue,
30 its legs, shellacked saplings.
A pastel-pale Huckleberry Finn[6] fished with a broom straw in a basin hollowed out of a millstone.
Like my Grandfather, the décor 35 was manly, comfortable, overbearing, disproportioned.

What were those sunflowers? Pumpkins floating shoulder-high?
It was sunset, Sadie and Nellie bearing pitchers of ice-tea, 40 oranges, lemons, mint, and peppermints,
and the jug of shandygaff,
which Grandpa made by blending half and half yeasty, wheezing homemade sarsaparilla with beer.
The farm, entitled Char-de-sa
45 in the Social Register, was named for my Grandfather's children:
Charlotte, Devereux, and Sarah.
No one had died there in my lifetime . . .
Only Cinder, our Scottie puppy
50 paralyzed from gobbling toads.
I sat mixing black earth and lime.

2

I was five and a half.
My formal pearl gray shorts
had been worn for three minutes.
55 My perfection was the Olympian poise of my models in the imperishable autumn display windows of Rogers Peet's boys' store below the State House in Boston. Distorting drops of water
60 pinpricked my face in the basin's mirror.

4. Small building, partly underground, used for storing root vegetables, bulbs, etc.
5. German city on the Neckar River.
6. Boy hero of the novel The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn, by the American writer Mark Twain (1835–1910).

I was a stuffed toucan with a bibulous, multicolored beak.

3

Up in the air
by the lakeview window in the billiards-room, 65 lurid in the doldrums of the sunset hour,
my Great Aunt Sarah was learning Samson and Delilah.[7]
She thundered on the keyboard of her dummy piano, with gauze curtains like a boudoir table,
70 accordionlike yet soundless.
It had been bought to spare the nerves
of my Grandmother,
tone-deaf, quick as a cricket,
now needing a fourth for "Auction,"° auction bridge
75 and casting a thirsty eye on Aunt Sarah, risen like the phoenix[8] from her bed of troublesome snacks and Tauchnitz[9] classics.

Forty years earlier,
twenty, auburn headed,
80 grasshopper notes of genius!
Family gossip says Aunt Sarah tilted her archaic Athenian nose and jilted an Astor.[1]
Each morning she practiced
85 on the grand piano at Symphony Hall, deathlike in the off-season summer—
its naked Greek statues draped with purple like the saints in Holy Week. . . .
On the recital day, she failed to appear.

4

90 I picked with a clean finger nail at the blue anchor on my sailor blouse washed white as a spinnaker.
What in the world was I wishing?
. . . A sail-colored horse browsing in the bullrushes . . .
A fluff of the west wind puffing
95 my blouse, kiting me over our seven chimneys, troubling the waters. . . .
As small as sapphires were the ponds: Quittacus, Snippituit,
and Assawompset, halved by "the Island,"
where my Uncle's duck blind
100 floated in a barrage of smoke-clouds.

7. Piano arrangement of an opera by the French composer Camille Saint-Saëns (1835–1921).
8. A long-lived mythological bird that consumed itself in flames and was then reborn from its ashes. Aunt Sarah: Sarah Stark Winslow, Robert Lowell's mother's aunt.
9. German publisher of inexpensive paperbacks, including many English and American works in English.
1. In the nineteenth century, three generations of Astors in New York accumulated one of the largest fortunes in the world.

Double-barreled shotguns stuck out like bundles of baby crow-bars.
A single sculler° in a camouflaged kayak — rower
was quacking to the decoys. . . .

105 At the cabin between the waters,
the nearest windows were already boarded.
Uncle Devereux was closing camp for the winter.
As if posed for "the engagement photograph,"
he was wearing his severe
110 war-uniform of a volunteer Canadian officer.
Daylight from the doorway riddled his student posters,
tacked helter-skelter on walls as raw as a boardwalk.
Mr. Punch,[2] a water melon in hockey tights, was tossing off a decanter of Scotch.
115 La Belle France in a red, white and blue toga was accepting the arm of her "protector," the ingenu and porcine Edward VII.[3]
The pre-war music hall belles had goose necks, glorious signatures, beauty-moles, 120 and coils of hair like rooster tails.
The finest poster was two or three young men in khaki kilts being bushwhacked on the veldt[4]—
They were almost life-size. . . .

My Uncle was dying at twenty-nine.
125 "You are behaving like children," said my Grandfather,
when my Uncle and Aunt left their three baby daughters,
and sailed for Europe on a last honeymoon . . .
I cowered in terror.
130 I wasn't a child at all—unseen and all-seeing, I was Agrippina[5]
in the Golden House of Nero. . . .
Near me was the white measuring-door
my Grandfather had penciled with my Uncle's heights.
135 In 1911, he had stopped growing at just six feet.
While I sat on the tiles,
and dug at the anchor on my sailor blouse,
Uncle Devereux stood behind me.
He was as brushed as Bayard, our riding horse.
140 His face was putty.
His blue coat and white trousers grew sharper and straighter.
His coat was a blue jay's tail,
his trousers were solid cream from the top of the bottle.

2. A cartoon figure used as emblem for the English humor magazine Punch.
3. Edward VII, king of England from 1901 to 1910, helped initiate the era of good feeling between England and France known as "L'Entente Cordiale." On a poster, he is pictured with an arm around the waist of Marianne, "La Belle France," the traditional emblem for France.
4. Open country in South Africa. The Boer War (1899–1902) was fought by the British against the descendants of Dutch settlers in South Africa.
5. Mother of Nero (first century); her scheming helped make him Roman emperor. He later had her murdered.

145 He was animated, hierarchical, like a ginger snap man in a clothes-press.
He was dying of the incurable Hodgkin's disease. . . .
My hands were warm, then cool, on the piles
of earth and lime,
150 a black pile and a white pile. . . .
Come winter,
Uncle Devereux would blend to the one color.

1959

Skunk Hour

(FOR ELIZABETH BISHOP)[6]

Nautilus Island's[7] hermit
heiress still lives through winter in her Spartan cottage;
her sheep still graze above the sea.
Her son's a bishop. Her farmer
5 is first selectman[8] in our village;
she's in her dotage.

Thirsting for the hierarchic privacy of Queen Victoria's century, 10 she buys up all the eyesores facing her shore,
and lets them fall.

The season's ill—
we've lost our summer millionaire,
15 who seemed to leap from an L. L. Bean[9] catalogue. His nine-knot yawl was auctioned off to lobstermen.
A red fox stain covers Blue Hill.

And now our fairy
20 decorator brightens his shop for fall;
his fishnet's filled with orange cork,
orange, his cobbler's bench and awl;
there is no money in his work,
he'd rather marry.

25 One dark night,
my Tudor Ford climbed the hill's skull;
I watched for love-cars. Lights turned down,
they lay together, hull to hull,

6. Lowell said that he modeled this poem on Bishop's "The Armadillo" (see p. 1519).
7. In Castine, Maine, where Lowell had a summer house.
8. Many New England towns are administered by an elected board of selectmen.
9. A mail-order company in Maine, originally specializing in hunting, fishing, and camping gear.

where the graveyard shelves on the town. . . .
30 My mind's not right.

A car radio bleats,
"Love, O careless Love. . . ."[1] I hear my ill-spirit sob in each blood cell,
as if my hand were at its throat. . . .
35 I myself am hell;[2]
nobody's here—

only skunks, that search
in the moonlight for a bite to eat.
They march on their soles up Main Street:
40 white stripes, moonstruck eyes' red fire under the chalk-dry and spar° spire mastlike
of the Trinitarian Church.

I stand on top of our back steps and breathe the rich air—
45 a mother skunk with her column of kittens swills the garbage pail.
She jabs her wedge-head in a cup of sour cream, drops her ostrich tail,
and will not scare.

1957 1959

Water

It was a Maine lobster town—
each morning boatloads of hands pushed off for granite quarries on the islands,

5 and left dozens of bleak
white frame houses stuck like oyster shells
on a hill of rock,

and below us, the sea lapped
10 the raw little match-stick mazes of a weir,
where the fish for bait were trapped.

Remember? We sat on a slab of rock.
From this dance in time,
15 it seems the color
of iris, rotting and turning purpler,

1. From a popular song of the time, "Careless Love," which includes the lines "Now you see what careless love will do . . . / Make you kill yourself and your sweetheart too."
2. Cf. Satan in Milton's Paradise Lost 4.75: "Which way I fly is Hell; myself am Hell."

but it was only the usual gray rock
turning the usual green
20 when drenched by the sea.

The sea drenched the rock
at our feet all day,
and kept tearing away
flake after flake.

25 One night you dreamed you were a mermaid clinging to a wharf-pile, and trying to pull off the barnacles with your hands.

We wished our two souls
30 might return like gulls to the rock. In the end,
the water was too cold for us.

1964

For the Union Dead[3]

"Relinquunt Omnia Servare Rem Publicam."

The old South Boston Aquarium stands
in a Sahara of snow now. Its broken windows are boarded.
The bronze weathervane cod has lost half its scales.
The airy tanks are dry.

5 Once my nose crawled like a snail on the glass;
my hand tingled
to burst the bubbles
drifting from the noses of the cowed, compliant fish.

My hand draws back. I often sigh still 10 for the dark downward and vegetating kingdom of the fish and reptile. One morning last March,
I pressed against the new barbed and galvanized fence on the Boston Common. Behind their cage, yellow dinosaur steamshovels were grunting 15 as they cropped up tons of mush and grass to gouge their underworld garage.

3. At the edge of Boston Common, across from the Massachusetts State House, stands a monument to Colonel Robert Gould Shaw (1837–1863) and the first all-black Civil War regiment, the 54th Massachusetts; Shaw and many of his troops were killed in the assault on Fort Wagner, South Carolina. The bronze relief, by the American (Irish-born) sculptor Augustus Saint-Gaudens (1848–1907), was dedicated in 1897. In the upper right it bears the Latin motto of the Society of the Cincinnati, Omnia relinquit servare rem publicam ("He gives up everything to serve the republic"). Lowell's epigraph changes "he gives" to "they give."

Parking spaces luxuriate like civic sandpiles in the heart of Boston.
A girdle of orange, Puritan-pumpkin colored girders
20 braces the tingling Statehouse, shaking over the excavations, as it faces Colonel Shaw and his bell-cheeked Negro infantry on St. Gaudens' shaking Civil War relief, propped by a plank splint against the garage's earthquake.

25 Two months after marching through Boston, half the regiment was dead;
at the dedication,
William James[4] could almost hear the bronze Negroes breathe.

Their monument sticks like a fishbone
30 in the city's throat.
Its Colonel is as lean
as a compass-needle.

He has an angry wrenlike vigilance,
a greyhound's gentle tautness;
35 he seems to wince at pleasure,
and suffocate for privacy.

He is out of bounds now. He rejoices in man's lovely, peculiar power to choose life and die—
when he leads his black soldiers to death,
40 he cannot bend his back.

On a thousand small town New England greens,
the old white churches hold their air of sparse, sincere rebellion; frayed flags quilt the graveyards of the Grand Army of the Republic.

45 The stone statues of the abstract Union Soldier grow slimmer and younger each year—wasp-waisted, they doze over muskets and muse through their sideburns . . .

Shaw's father wanted no monument
50 except the ditch, where his son's body was thrown and lost with his "niggers."

The ditch is nearer.
There are no statues for the last war here;
55 on Boylston Street,[5] a commercial photograph shows Hiroshima boiling

4. Philosopher and psychologist (1842–1910), who taught at Harvard University.

5. A major street in Boston. Last war: World War II.

over a Mosler Safe, the "Rock of Ages" that survived the blast. Space is nearer.
When I crouch to my television set,
60 the drained faces of Negro school-children rise like balloons.[6]

Colonel Shaw
is riding on his bubble,
he waits
for the blessèd break.

65 The Aquarium is gone. Everywhere, giant finned cars nose forward like fish;
a savage servility
slides by on grease.

1964

Harriet[7]

A repeating fly, blueback, thumbthick—so gross,
it seems apocalyptic in our house—
whams back and forth across the nursery bed manned by a madhouse of stuffed animals,
5 not one a fighter. It is like a plane dusting apple orchards or Arabs on the screen—
one of the mighty . . . one of the helpless. It bumbles and bumps its brow on this and that,
making a short, unhealthy life the shorter.
10 I kill it, and another instant's added to the horrifying mortmain[8] of ephemera: keys, drift, sea-urchin shells, you packrat off with joy . . . a dead fly swept under the carpet, wrinkling to fulfillment.

1970 1973

Epilogue

Those blessèd structures, plot and rhyme—
why are they no help to me now
I want to make something imagined, not recalled?
5 I hear the noise of my own voice:
The painter's vision is not a lens,
it trembles to caress the light.

6. The struggles to integrate public schools (first in the South, and later in the North) were frequently featured in television newscasts.
7. The poet's daughter, born January 4, 1945.
8. A legal term ("dead hand") referring to perpetual ownership; more generally, the influence of the past on the present.

But sometimes everything I write with the threadbare art of my eye 10 seems a snapshot, lurid, rapid, garish, grouped,
heightened from life,
yet paralyzed by fact.
All's misalliance.
15 Yet why not say what happened?
Pray for the grace of accuracy
Vermeer[9] gave to the sun's illumination stealing like the tide across a map to his girl solid with yearning.
20 We are poor passing facts, warned by that to give each figure in the photograph
his living name.

1977

LAWRENCE FERLINGHETTI
b. 1919

Sometime During Eternity . . .

Sometime during eternity
some guys show up and one of them
who shows up real late 5 is a kind of carpenter[1]
from some square-type place like Galilee[2]
and he starts wailing and claiming he is hip
10 to who made heaven and earth
and that the cat
who really laid it on us is his Dad

15 And moreover he adds
It's all writ down on some scroll-type parchments
which some henchmen
20 leave lying around the Dead Sea[3] somewheres

9. Jan Vermeer (1632–1675), Dutch painter known for his treatment of light.
1. Jesus was a carpenter.
2. Region in northern Israel, home of Jesus.
3. Sea between the West Bank and Jordan, where the Dead Sea Scrolls, fragments of the Jewish Essene order's library dating back to 130 B.C.E., were found in 1947.

a long time ago
and which you won't even find for a coupla thousand years or so or at least for 25 nineteen hundred and fortyseven of them to be exact and even then nobody really believes them 30 or me
for that matter

You're hot they tell him

And they cool him

35 They stretch him on the Tree to cool

And everybody after that is always making models of this Tree
with Him hung up 40 and always crooning His name and calling Him to come down and sit in on their combo
as if he is the king cat
45 who's got to blow[4]
or they can't quite make it

Only he don't come down from His Tree

Him just hang there
50 on His Tree
looking real Petered out[5]
and real cool
and also according to a roundup
55 of late world news from the usual unreliable sources real dead

1958

4. Play. King cat: slang for leader (Jesus was also called king of the Jews). Combo: group of musicians, particularly jazz players.
5. Pun referring both to a sense of defeat or exhaustion and to St. Peter, who denied being a disciple three times after Jesus' arrest (John 18.17–27).

WILLIAM MEREDITH
b. 1919

The Illiterate

Touching your goodness, I am like a man
Who turns a letter over in his hand
And you might think this was because the hand
Was unfamiliar but, truth is, the man
5 Has never had a letter from anyone;
And now he is both afraid of what it means
And ashamed because he has no other means
To find out what it says than to ask someone.

His uncle could have left the farm to him,
10 Or his parents died before he sent them word,
Or the dark girl changed and want him for beloved.
Afraid and letter-proud, he keeps it with him.
What would you call his feeling for the words
That keep him rich and orphaned and beloved?

1958

Rhode Island

Here at the seashore they use the clouds over & over again, like the rented animals in Aïda.[1]
In the late morning the land breeze turns and now the extras are driving
5 all the white elephants the other way.
What language are the children shouting in?
He[2] is lying on the beach listening.

The sand knocks like glass, struck by bare heels.
He tries to remember snow noise.
10 Would powder snow ping like that?
But you don't lie with your ear to powder snow.
Why doesn't the girl who takes care of the children, a Yale girl without flaw, know the difference between lay and lie?

15 He tries to remember snow, his season.
The mind is in charge of things then.
Summer is for animals, the ocean is erotic,
all that openness and swaying.

1. During a triumphal procession in this opera by the Italian composer Giuseppe Verdi (1813–1901), the victorious Egyptian forces return to Memphis with their captives; major companies often hire horses and elephants to augment the spectacle.
2. Hazard, the Painter (title character of the volume from which this poem comes); cf. line 25.

No matter how often you make love
20 in August you're always aware of genitalia, your own and the half-naked others'.
Even with the gracefulest bathers
you're aware of their kinship with porpoises, mammals disporting themselves in a blue element, 25 smelling slightly of fish. Porpoise Hazard watches himself awhile, like a blue movie.

In the other hemisphere now people are standing up, at work at their easels.
There they think about love at night
30 when they take off their serious clothes and go to bed sandlessly, under blankets.

Today the children, his own among them,
are apparently shouting fluently in Portuguese,
using the colonial dialect of Brazil.
35 It is just as well, they have all been changed into small shrill marginal animals,
he would not want to understand them again until after Labor Day. He just lays there.

1975

AMY CLAMPITT
1920–1994

Beach Glass

While you walk the water's edge,
turning over concepts
I can't envision, the honking buoy serves notice that at any time
5 the wind may change,
the reef-bell clatters
its treble monotone, deaf as Cassandra[1]
to any note but warning. The ocean, cumbered by no business more urgent 10 than keeping open old accounts that never balanced,
goes on shuffling its millenniums
of quartz, granite, and basalt.
It behaves
15 toward the permutations of novelty—driftwood and shipwreck, last night's beer cans, spilt oil, the coughed-up

1. In Greek mythology, the daughter of Priam (last king of Troy), and a prophetess who predicted the fall of Troy. Her gift of prophecy was marred by the curse of never being believed.

residue of plastic—with random impartiality, playing catch or tag 20 or touch-last like a terrier, turning the same thing over and over,
over and over. For the ocean, nothing is beneath consideration.
The houses
25 of so many mussels and periwinkles° mollusks, snails have been abandoned here, it's hopeless to know which to salvage. Instead I keep a lookout for beach glass—
amber of Budweiser, chrysoprase[2]
30 of Almadén and Gallo, lapis[3]
by way of (no getting around it,
I'm afraid) Phillips'
Milk of Magnesia, with now and then a rare
translucent turquoise or blurred amethyst
35 of no known origin.
The process
goes on forever: they came from sand,
they go back to gravel,
along with the treasuries
40 of Murano,[4] the buttressed astonishments of Chartres,[5]
which even now are readying for being turned over and over as gravely and gradually as an intellect 45 engaged in the hazardous redefinition of structures
no one has yet looked at.

1983

Beethoven, Opus 111[6]

FOR NORMAN CAREY

There are epochs . . . when mankind, not content with the present, longing for time's deeper layers, like the plowman, thirsts for the virgin soil of time.

—OSIP MANDELSTAM[7]

—Or, conversely, hungers
for the levitations of the concert hall:
the hands like rafts of putti[8]

2. The green color of chalcedony quartz.
3. The deep-blue color of lapis lazuli, a mineral.
4. An island near Venice, famous for manufacturing fine glass.
5. The cathedral of Notre Dame de Chartres, in France, celebrated for its stained-glass windows.
6. Piano Sonata No. 32 in C Minor, Opus 111, the last work in the form, as Clampitt's note remarks, by the German composer Ludwig van Beethoven (1770–1827). An exemplar of Romanticism and revolution, Beethoven had become deaf by the time he wrote this piece, in 1821–22.
7. Russian poet and critic (1891–1938), who was arrested for a poem on Joseph Stalin and later died in a transit camp.
8. "The stylized infant cherubs that appear to soar, plunge or hover in some Italian and Spanish paintings on Christian themes" [Clampitt's note].

out of a region where the dolorous stars
5 are fixed in glassy cerements of Art;
the ancien régime's diaphanous plash[9]
athwart the mounting throb of hobnails—shod squadrons of vibration mining the air, its struck ores hardening 10 into a plowshare, a downward wandering disrupting every formal symmetry:
from the supine harp-case, the strung-foot tendons under the mahogany, the bulldozer
in the bass unearths a Piranesian[1] 15 catacomb: Beethoven ventilating, with a sound he cannot hear, the cave-in
of recurring rage.
In the tornado country
of mid-America, my father
20 might have been his twin—a farmer hacking at sourdock, at the strangleroots of thistles and wild morning glories, setting out rashly, one October,
to rid the fencerows of poison ivy:
25 livid seed-globs turreted in trinities of glitter, ripe with the malefic glee no farmer doubts lives deep down things.[2] My father was naïve enough—by nature 30 revolutionary, though he'd have disowned the label—to suppose he might in some way, minor but radical, disrupt the givens of existence: set his neighbors' thinking straight, undo 35 the stranglehold of reasons nations send their boys off to war. That fall, after the oily fireworks had cooled down to trellises of hairy wicks,
he dug them up, rootstocks and all,
40 and burned them. Do-gooder!
The well-meant holocaust became a mist of venom, sowing itself along the sculptured hollows of his overalls, braceleting wrists and collarbone—
45 a mesh of blisters spreading to a shirt worn like a curse. For weeks he writhed inside it. Awful.
High art
with a stiff neck: an upright Steinway[3]
50 bought in Chicago; a chromo of a Hobbema

9. I.e., the extremely delicate splash of France's political and social system before the revolution in 1789. Cerements: shrouds for the dead.
1. As in the work of Giambattista Piranesi (1720–1778), Italian architect, painter, and engraver.
2. An allusion to Gerard Manley Hopkins, "God's Grandeur" (p. 1166), in which "There lives the dearest freshness deep down things." Malefic: malignant, malicious.
3. Meindert Hobbema (1638–1709), Dutch painter. Chromo: chromolithograph, print. Steinway: one of the best brands of pianos.

tree-avenue, or of Millet's imagined peasant, the lark she listens to invisible,[4] perhaps irrelevant: harpstrings and fripperies of air congealed into an object nailed against the wall, 55 its sole ironic function (if it has any) to demonstrate that one, though he may grunt and sweat at work, is not a clod.
Beethoven might declare the air
his domicile, the winds kin,[5] the tornado 60 a kind of second cousin; here, his labor merely shimmers—a deracinated album leaf, a bagatelle, the "Moonlight" rendered with a dying fall[6] (the chords subside, disintegrate, regroup 65 in climbing sequences con brio);[7] there's no dwelling on the sweet past here, there being no past to speak of other than the setbacks: typhoid in the wells, half the first settlers 70 dead of it before a year was out; diphtheria and scarlet fever
every winter; drought, the Depression, a mortgage on the mortgage. High art as a susurrus,° the silk and perfume whisper
75 of unsullied hands. Those hands!— driving the impressionable wild with anguish for another life entirely: the Lyceum[8] circuit, the doomed diving bell of Art.
Beethoven
80 in his workroom: ear trumpet, conversation book and pencil, candlestick, broken crockery, the Graf piano wrecked by repeated efforts to hear himself—out of a humdrum squalor the levitations, 85 the shakes and triplets, the Adagio
molto semplice e cantabile,[9] the Arietta° little air
a disintegrating surf of blossom opening along the keyboard, along the fencerows
the astonishment of sweetness. My father, 90 driving somewhere in Kansas or Colorado, in dustbowl country, stopped the car to dig up by the roots a flower he'd never seen before—a kind of prickly poppy most likely, its luminousness
95 wounding the blank plains like desire.

4. Because the European skylark sings in flight, often too high to be seen, as in the famous painting of the listening peasant, by the French painter Jean-François Millet (1814–1875).
5. "In a letter to Count Brunswick dated February 13, 1814, Beethoven wrote: 'As regards me, great heavens! my dominion is in the air; the tones whirl like the wind, and often there is a whirl in my soul' " [Clampitt's note].
6. Cf. Shakespeare, Twelfth Night 1.1.1–4: ". . . that strain again! It had a dying fall." "Moonlight": Beethoven's Piano Sonata in C Sharp Minor (Moonlight), Opus 27, No. 2.
7. With vigor (Italian); musical direction.
8. A building used for cultural activities, such as concerts.
9. A slow movement, played very simply and in a songlike manner (Italian).

He mentioned in a letter the disappointment of his having hoped it might transplant—
an episode that brings me near tears, still, as even his dying does not—100 that awful dying, months-long, hunkered, irascible. From a clod no plowshare could deliver, a groan for someone (because he didn't want to look at anything) to take away the flowers, 105 a bawling as of slaughterhouses, slogans of a general uprising: Freiheit![1]
Beethoven, shut up with the four walls of his deafness, rehearsing the unhearable
semplice e cantabile, somehow reconstituting
110 the blister shirt of the intolerable into these shakes and triplets, a hurrying into flowering along the fencerows: dying, for my father, came to be like that finally—in its messages the levitation 115 of serenity, as though the spirit might aspire, in its last act,
to walk on air.

1983

The Sun Underfoot Among the Sundews[2]

An ingenuity too astonishing to be quite fortuitous is this bog full of sundews, sphagnum-° moss- lined and shaped like a teacup.
5 A step down and you're into it; a wilderness swallows you up:
ankle-, then knee-, then midriffto-shoulder-deep in wetfooted 10 understory, an overhead spruce-tamarack horizon hinting
you'll never get out of here.
But the sun
among the sundews, down there,
15 is so bright, an underfoot
webwork of carnivorous rubies,
a star-swarm thick as the gnats they're set to catch, delectable double-faced cockleburs, each 20 hair-tip a sticky mirror afire with sunlight, a million of them and again a million,

1. Freedom! (German).

2. Carnivorous bog plants.

each mirror a trap set to unhand unbelieving,
25 that either a First Cause said once, "Let there be sundews,"[3] and there were, or they've made their way here unaided other than by that backhand, round-30 about refusal to assume responsibility known as Natural Selection.[4]
But the sun
underfoot is so dazzling down there among the sundews, 35 there is so much light in the cup that, looking,
you start to fall upward.

1983

The Cormorant in Its Element

That bony potbellied arrow, wing-pumping along implacably, with a ramrod's rigid adherence, airborne, to the horizontal, discloses talents
one would never have guessed at. Plummeting

5 waterward, big black feet splayed for a landing gear, slim head turning and turning, vermilionstrapped, this way and that, with a lightning glance over the shoulder, the cormorant astounding-ly, in one sleek involuted arabesque, a vertical 10 turn on a dime, goes into that inimitable vanishing-and-emerging-from-under-the-brinydeep act which, unlike the works of Homo Houdini,[5] is performed for reasons having nothing at all to do with ego, guilt, ambition, or even money.

1983

Syrinx[6]

Like the foghorn that's all lung,
the wind chime that's all percussion,

3. See Genesis 1.14: "And God said, Let there be lights in the firmament of the heaven."
4. The theory of evolution as formulated by the English naturalist Charles Darwin (1809–1882).
5. An invented term conflating the Latin Homo sapiens, or humankind, with the American magician Harry Houdini (1874–1926).
6. The vocal organ of birds, named after the Arcadian mountain nymph in Greek mythology who, to protect her chastity from the god Pan, was transformed into a reed. From that reed Pan made the pan-pipe, also called the syrinx. Pastoral poets considered Pan a patron of their art.

like the wind itself, that's merely air in a terrible fret,[7] without so much 5 as a finger to articulate what ails it, the aeolian[8] syrinx, that reed
in the throat of a bird, when it comes to the shaping of 10 what we call consonants, is too imprecise for consensus about what it even seems to be saying: is it o-ka-lee or con-ka-ree, is it really jug jug, 15 is it cuckoo for that matter?—
much less whether a bird's call means anything in particular, or at all.

Syntax comes last, there can be 20 no doubt of it: came last, can be thought of (is thought of by some) as a higher form of expression:
is, in extremity, first to 25 be jettisoned: as the diva onstage, all soaring pectoral breathwork, takes off, pure vowel
breaking free of the dry, 30 the merely fricative husk of the particular, rises past saying anything, any more than the wind in the trees, waves breaking,
35 or Homer's gibbering
Thespesiae iachē:[9]

those last-chance vestiges above the threshold, the all-but dispossessed of breath.

1994

7. In the double sense of 1) worried agitation, and 2) a ridge set across the fingerboard of a stringed instrument to help the fingers stop the strings correctly.
8. Producing a windlike moaning or sighing sound.
9. Clampitt's oblique commentary, in a note, is a quotation from Homer's Odyssey 10.34–43, as translated by A. T. Murray: "Then there gathered from out of Erebus the spirits of those that are dead, brides, and unwedded youths, and toil-worn old men, and tender maidens with hearts yet new to sorrow, and many, too, that had been wounded with bronze-tipped spears, men slain in fight, wearing their blood-stained armour. These came thronging in crowds about the pit from every side, with a wondrous cry . . ."

BARBARA GUEST
b. 1920

Roses

"painting has no air . . ."
—GERTRUDE STEIN[1]

That there should never be air
in a picture surprises me.
It would seem to be only a picture of a certain kind, a portrait in paper
5 or glued, somewhere a stickiness as opposed to a stick-to-it-ness of another genre. It might be quite new to do without that air, or to find oxygen
10 on the landscape line like a boat which is an object or a shoe which never floats and is stationary.

Still there
15 are certain illnesses that require air, lots of it. And there are nervous people who cannot manufacture enough air and must seek for it when they don't have plants, 20 in pictures. There is the mysterious traveling that one does outside the cube and this takes place in air.

It is why one develops
25 an attitude toward roses picked in the morning air, even roses without sun shining on them.
The roses of Juan Gris[2] from which we learn the selflessness of roses
30 existing perpetually without air,
the lid being down, so to speak,
a 1912 fragrance sifting to the left corner where we read
"The Marvelous" and escape.

1973

1. American writer (1874–1946; see pp. 1248–50), whose Paris home was a salon for leading artists and writers between the two world wars.
2. Spanish Cubist painter (1887–1927).

Twilight Polka Dots

The lake was filled with distinguished fish purchased at much expense in their prime. It was a curious lake, half salt, wishing to set a tone of solitude edged with poetry.
This was a conscious body aware of shelves and wandering
5 rootlings, duty suggested it provide a scenic atmosphere of content, a solicitude for the brooding emotions.

It despised the fish who enriched the waters. Fish with their lithesome bodies, and their disagreeable concern with feeding. They disturbed the water which preferred 10 the cultivated echoes of a hunting horn. Inside a mercantile heart the lake dwelt on boning and deboning, skin and sharpened eyes, a ritual search through dependable deposits for slimier luxuries. The surface presented an appeal to meditation and surcease.

15 Situated below the mountain, surrounded by aged trees, the lake offered a picture appealing both to young and mature romance. At last it was the visual choice of two figures who in the fixity of their shared glance were admired by the lake. Tactfully they ignored the lacustrine[3] 20 fish, their gaze faltered lightly on the lapping margins, their thoughts flew elsewhere, even beyond the loop of her twisted hair and the accent of his poised tie-pin.

The scene supplied them with theatre, it was an evening performance and the water understood and strained its 25 source for bugling echoes and silvered laments. The couple referred to the lake without speech, by the turn of a head, a hand waved, they placed a dignity upon the lake brow causing an undercurrent of physical pleasure to shake the water.

30 Until the letter fell. Torn into fragments the man tossed it on the water, and the wind spilled the paper forward, the cypress bent, the mountain sent a glacial flake.
Fish leapt. Polka dots now stippled the twilight water and a superannuated gleam like a browned 35 autumnal stalk followed the couple where they shied in the lake marsh grass like two eels who were caught.

1989

3. Of or pertaining to a lake.

EDWIN MORGAN
b. 1920

Strawberries

There were never strawberries
like the ones we had that sultry afternoon sitting on the step 5 of the open french window facing each other your knees held in mine
the blue plates in our laps
the strawberries glistening
10 in the hot sunlight
we dipped them in sugar
looking at each other not hurrying the feast for one to come 15 the empty plates laid on the stone together with the two forks crossed and I bent towards you sweet in that air
20 in my arms abandoned like a child from your eager mouth
the taste of strawberries
in my memory
25 lean back again
let me love you

let the sun beat on our forgetfulness
one hour of all 30 the heat intense and summer lightning on the Kilpatrick hills[1]

let the storm wash the plates

1965

King Billy

Grey over Riddrie[2] the clouds piled up, dragged their rain through the cemetery trees.
The gates shone cold. Wind rose

1. Upland plateau in the county of West Dunbartonshire, Scotland.

2. A district of Glasgow.

flaring the hissing leaves, the branches
5 swung, heavy, across the lamps.
Gravestones huddled in drizzling shadow, flickering streetlight scanned the requiescats,[3]
a name and an urn, a date, a dove picked out, lost, half regained.
10 What is this dripping wreath, blown from its grave
red, white, blue, and gold
"To Our Leader of Thirty years Ago"—

Bareheaded, in dark suits, with flutes and drums, they brought him here, in procession 15 seriously, King Billy of Brigton, dead, from Bridgeton Cross: a memory of violence,
brooding days of empty bellies,
billiard smoke[4] and a sour pint,
boots or fists, famous sherrickings,[5] 20 the word, the scuffle, the flash, the shout, bloody crumpling in the close,
bricks for papish° windows, get Roman Catholic the Conks[6] next time, the Conks ambush
the Billy Boys, the Billy Boys the Conks till 25 Sillitoe scuffs the razors down the stank°— drain
No, but it isn't the violence they remember but the legend of a violent man born poor, gang-leader in the bad times of idleness and boredom, lost in better days, 30 a bouncer in a betting club,
quiet man at last, dying
alone in Bridgeton in a box bed.
So a thousand people stopped the traffic for the hearse of a folk hero and the flutes 35 threw "Onward Christian Soldiers" to the winds from unironic lips, the mourners kept in step, and there were some who wept.

Go from the grave. The shrill flutes are silent, the march dispersed.
40 Deplore what is to be deplored,
and then find out the rest.

1968

The Dowser[7]

With my forked branch of Lebanese cedar
I quarter the dunes like downs and guide

3. Requiescat in pace is Latin for "Rest in peace" (often shortened to R.I.P. on gravestones).
4. Cigarette smoke from a billiard saloon.
5. Fusses over nothing (Scottish slang).
6. Name of a Roman Catholic gang.
7. Someone who searches for underground streams by holding a forked branch of cedar or hazel, which twitches when it is above water. A "water-table" (line 10) is the level to which underground water rises.

an invisible plough far over the sand.
But how to quarter such shifting acres
5 when the wind melts their shapes, and shadows mass where all was bright before, and landmarks walk like wraiths° at noon? ghosts
All I know is that underneath,
how many miles no one can say,
10 an unbroken water-table waits like a lake; it has seen no bird or sail in its long darkness, and no man;
not even pharaohs dug so far
for all their thirst, or thirst of glory,
15 or thrust-power of ten thousand slaves.
I tell you I can smell it though, that water. I am old and black and I know the manners of the sun which makes me bend, not break. I lose 20 my ghostly footprints without complaint.
I put every mirage in its place.
I watch the lizard make its lace.
Like one not quite blind I go feeling for the sunken face.
25 So hot the days, the nights so cold,
I gather my white rags and sigh
but sighing step so steadily that any vibrance in so deep a lake would never fail to rise
30 towards the snowy cedar's bait.
Great desert, let your sweetness wake.

1986 1988

KEITH DOUGLAS
1920–1944

Vergissmeinnicht[1]

Three weeks gone and the combatants gone returning over the nightmare ground we found the place again, and found the soldier sprawling in the sun.

5 The frowning barrel of his gun overshadowing. As we came on that day, he hit my tank with one like the entry of a demon.

1. Forget me not (German).

Look. Here in the gunpit spoil
10 the dishonoured picture of his girl who has put: Steffi. Vergissmeinnicht
in a copybook gothic script.

We see him almost with content,
abased, and seeming to have paid
15 and mocked at by his own equipment
that's hard and good when he's decayed.

But she would weep to see today how on his skin the swart° flies move; black
the dust upon the paper eye
20 and the burst stomach like a cave.

For here the lover and killer are mingled who had one body and one heart.
And death who had the soldier singled has done the lover mortal hurt.

1943 1944

Aristocrats

The noble horse with courage in his eye,
clean in the bone, looks up at a shellburst:
away fly the images of the shires[2]
but he puts the pipe back in his mouth.

5 Peter was unfortunately killed by an 88:[3]
it took his leg away, he died in the ambulance.
I saw him crawling on the sand; he said
It's most unfair, they've shot my foot off.

How can I live among this gentle
10 obsolescent breed of heroes, and not weep?
Unicorns, almost,
for they are falling into two legends in which their stupidity and chivalry are celebrated. Each, fool and hero, will be an immortal.

15 The plains were their cricket pitch[4]
and in the mountains the tremendous drop fences[5] brought down some of the runners. Here then under the stones and earth they dispose themselves,
I think with their famous unconcern.
20 It is not gunfire I hear, but a hunting horn.[6]

Tunisia, 1943 1946

2. Counties. Cf. Wilfred Owen, "Anthem for Doomed Youth," line 8 (p. 1386).
3. A German tank fitted with an eighty-eight-millimeter gun.
4. Field on which the game of cricket is played.
5. Fences in the course of a steeplechase horse race.
6. See note 7 below.

Gallantry

The Colonel[7] in a casual voice spoke into the microphone a joke
Which through a hundred earphones broke into the ears of a doomed race.[8]

5 Into the ears of the doomed boy, the fool whose perfectly mannered flesh fell in opening the door for a shell
as he had learnt to do at school.

Conrad luckily survived the winter:
10 he wrote a letter to welcome the auspicious spring: only his silken intentions severed with a single splinter.

Was George fond of little boys?
We always suspected it,
15 but who will say: since George was hit
we never mention our surmise.

It was a brave thing the Colonel said,
but the whole sky turned too hot and the three heroes never heard what 20 it was, gone deaf with steel and lead.

But the bullets cried with laughter,
the shells were overcome with mirth,
plunging their heads in steel and earth—
(the air commented in a whisper).

April 1943 1949

On a Return from Egypt

To stand here in the wings of Europe
disheartened, I have come away from the sick land where in the sun lay the gentle sloe-eyed[9] murderers
5 of themselves, exquisites under a curse;
here to exercise my depleted fury.

7. "Lt. Col. J. D. Player, killed in Tunisia, Enfidaville, February 1943, left £3,000 to the Beaufort Hunt, and directed that the incumbent of the living in his gift [i.e., the church whose vicar he was entitled to appoint] should be a 'man who approves of hunting, shooting, and all manly sports, which are the backbone of the nation' " [Douglas's note on one of the manuscripts of "Aristocrats"; Player was in fact killed in April].
8. Cf. Wilfred Owen, "Anthem for Doomed Youth" (p. 1386).
9. Dark-eyed: a sloe is the dark fruit of the blackthorn.

For the heart is a coal, growing colder when jewelled cerulean[1] seas change into grey rocks, grey water-fringe, 10 sea and sky altering like a cloth till colour and sheen are gone both:
cold is an opiate of the soldier.

And all my endeavours are unlucky explorers
come back, abandoning the expedition;
15 the specimens, the lilies of ambition
still spring in their climate, still unpicked:
but time, time is all I lacked to find them, as the great collectors before me.

The next month, then, is a window
20 and with a crash I'll split the glass.
Behind it stands one I must kiss, person of love or death
a person or a wraith,
I fear what I shall find.

March–April 1944? 1944

HOWARD NEMEROV
1920–1991

The Goose Fish

On the long shore, lit by the moon
To show them properly alone,
Two lovers suddenly embraced
So that their shadows were as one.
5 The ordinary night was graced
For them by the swift tide of blood
That silently they took at flood,
And for a little time they prized
Themselves emparadised.

10 Then, as if shaken by stage-fright
Beneath the hard moon's bony light,
They stood together on the sand
Embarrassed in each other's sight
But still conspiring hand in hand,
15 Until they saw, there underfoot,
As though the world had found them out,
The goose fish turning up, though dead,
His hugely grinning head.

1. Dark blue or green.

There in the china light he lay,
20 Most ancient and corrupt and gray
They hesitated at his smile,
Wondering what it seemed to say
To lovers who a little while
Before had thought to understand,
25 By violence upon the sand,
The only way that could be known
To make a world their own.

It was a wide and moony grin
Together peaceful and obscene;
30 They knew not what he would express,
So finished a comedian
He might mean failure or success,
But took it for an emblem of
Their sudden, new and guilty love
35 To be observed by, when they kissed,
That rigid optimist.

So he became their patriarch,
Dreadfully mild in the half-dark.
His throat that the sand seemed to choke,
40 His picket teeth, these left their mark
But never did explain the joke
That so amused him, lying there
While the moon went down to disappear
Along the still and tilted track
45 That bears the zodiac.

1955

A Primer of the Daily Round

A peels an apple, while B kneels to God,
C telephones to D, who has a hand
On E's knee, F coughs, G turns up the sod
For H's grave, I do not understand
5 But J is bringing one clay pigeon down
While K brings down a nightstick on L's head,
And M takes mustard, N drives into town,
O goes to bed with P, and Q drops dead,
R lies to S, but happens to be heard
10 By T, who tells U not to fire V
For having to give W the word
That X is now deceiving Y with Z,
Who happens just now to remember A
Peeling an apple somewhere far away.

1958

The Blue Swallows

Across the millstream below the bridge
Seven blue swallows divide the air
In shapes invisible and evanescent,
Kaleidoscopic beyond the mind's
5 Or memory's power to keep them there.

"History is where tensions were,"
"Form is the diagram of forces."
Thus, helplessly, there on the bridge,
While gazing down upon those birds—
10 How strange, to be above the birds!—
Thus helplessly the mind in its brain
Weaves up relation's spindrift web,
Seeing the swallows' tails as nibs
Dipped in invisible ink, writing . . .

15 Poor mind, what would you have them write?
Some cabalistic° history — occult
Whose authorship you might ascribe
To God? to Nature? Ah, poor ghost,
You've capitalized your Self enough.
20 That villainous William of Occam[1]
Cut out the feet from under that dream
Some seven centuries ago.
It's taken that long for the mind
To waken, yawn and stretch, to see
25 With opened eyes emptied of speech
The real world where the spelling mind
Imposes with its grammar book
Unreal relations on the blue Swallows. Perhaps when you will have 30 Fully awakened, I shall show you
A new thing: even the water
Flowing away beneath those birds
Will fail to reflect their flying forms,
And the eyes that see become as stones
35 Whence never tears shall fall again.

O swallows, swallows,[2] poems are not
The point. Finding again the world,
That is the point, where loveliness
Adorns intelligible things
40 Because the mind's eye lit the sun.

1967

1. Fourteenth-century scholastic philosopher; his central principle ("Occam's razor") was that the simplest, most economical explanation is always preferable over one that introduces unnecessary complications.
2. Cf. T. S. Eliot, The Waste Land, line 429 (p. 1356).

Boy with Book of Knowledge[3]

He holds a volume open in his hands:
Sepia portraits of the hairy great,
The presidents and poets in their beards
Alike, simplified histories of the wars,
5 Conundrums, quizzes, riddles, games and poems,

"Immortal Poems"; at least he can't forget them,
Barbara Fritchie and the Battle Hymn,
And best of all America the Beautiful,[4]
Whose platitudinous splendors ended with 10 "From sea to shining sea," and made him cry

And wish to be a poet, only to say such things,
From sea to shining sea. Could that have been
Where it began? the vast pudding of knowledge,
With poetry rare as raisins in the midst
15 Of those gold-lettered volumes black and green?

Mere piety to think so. But being now
As near his deathday as his birthday then,
He would acknowledge all he will not know,
The silent library brooding through the night
20 With all its lights continuing to burn

Insomniac, a luxury liner on what sea
Unfathomable of ignorance who could say?
And poetry, as steady, still, and rare
As the lighthouses now unmanned and obsolete
25 That used to mark America's dangerous shores.

1975

Strange Metamorphosis of Poets

From epigram to epic is the course
For riders of the American wingéd horse.[5]
They change both size and sex over the years,
The voice grows deeper and the beard appears;
5 Running for greatness they sweat away their salt,
They start out Emily and wind up Walt.[6]

1975

3. A type of reference book once used in schools.
4. "America the Beautiful" was often, and sometimes still is, sung in classrooms. "Barbara Frietchie" (Nemerov misspelled it), by the American abolitionist John Greenleaf Whittier (1807–1892; see pp. 957–60), and the "Battle-Hymn of the Republic," by the American suffragist Julia Ward Howe (1819–1910; see p. 1054), were popular patriotic poems of the Civil War.
5. Pegagus, the winged horse of Greek mythology, bore poets in flights of genius.
6. Emily Dickinson (1830–1886; see pp. 1110–27) and Walt Whitman (1819–1892; see pp. 1060–86), American poets known for their epigrammatic and epic styles, respectively.

A Cabinet of Seeds Displayed

These are the original monies of the earth,
In which invested, as the spark in fire,
They will produce a green wealth toppling tall,
A trick they do by dying, by decay,
5 In burial becoming each his kind
To rise in glory and be magnified
A million times above the obscure grave.

Reader, these samples are exhibited
For contemplation, locked in potency
10 And kept from act for reverence's sake.
May they remind us while we live on earth
That all economies are primitive;
And by their reservations may they teach
Our governors, who speak of husbandry
15 And think the hurricane, where power lies.

1975

GEORGE MACKAY BROWN
1921–1996

The Old Women

Go sad or sweet or riotous with beer
Past the old women gossiping by the hour,
They'll fix on you from every close and pier
An acid look to make your veins run sour.

5 "No help," they say, "his grandfather that's dead
Was troubled with the same dry-throated curse,
And many a night he made the ditch his bed.
This blood comes welling from the same cracked source."

On every kind of merriment they frown.
10 But I have known a gray-eyed sober boy
Sail to the lobsters in a storm, and drown.
Over his body dripping on the stones
Those same old hags would weave into their moans
An undersong of terrible holy joy.

1959

MONA VAN DUYN
b. 1921

Letters from a Father

I

Ulcerated tooth keeps me awake, there is such pain, would have to go to the hospital to have
it pulled or would bleed to death from the blood thinners,
but can't leave Mother, she falls and forgets her salve
5 and her tranquilizers, her ankles swell so and her bowels
are so bad, she almost had a stoppage and sometimes what she passes is green as grass. There are big holes in my thigh where my leg brace buckles the size of dimes.
My head pounds from the high pressure. It is awful
10 not to be able to get out, and I fell in the bathroom
and the girl could hardly get me up at all.
Sure thought my back was broken, it will be next time.
Prostate is bad and heart has given out,
feel bloated after supper. Have made my peace
15 because am just plain done for and have no doubt that the Lord will come any day with my release.
You say you enjoy your feeder, I don't see why
you want to spend good money on grain for birds
and you say you have a hundred sparrows, I'd buy 20 poison and get rid of their diseases and turds.

II

We enjoyed your visit, it was nice of you to bring the feeder but a terrible waste of your money
for that big bag of feed since we won't be living more than a few weeks longer. We can see 25 them good from where we sit, big ones and little ones
but you know when I farmed I used to like to hunt
and we had many a good meal from pigeons
and quail and pheasant but these birds won't be good for nothing and are dirty to have so near 30 the house. Mother likes the redbirds though.
My bad knee is so sore and I can't hardly hear and Mother says she is hoarse from yelling but I know it's too late for a hearing aid. I belch up all the time and have a sour mouth and of course with my heart
35 it's no use to go to a doctor. Mother is the same.
Has a scab she thinks is going to turn to a wart.

III

The birds are eating and fighting, Ha! Ha! All shapes and colors and sizes coming out of our woods
but we don't know what they are. Your Mother hopes

MONA VAN DUYN
b. 1921

Letters from a Father

I

Ulcerated tooth keeps me awake, there is such pain, would have to go to the hospital to have
it pulled or would bleed to death from the blood thinners,
but can't leave Mother, she falls and forgets her salve
5 and her tranquilizers, her ankles swell so and her bowels
are so bad, she almost had a stoppage and sometimes
what she passes is green as grass. There are big holes
in my thigh where my leg brace buckles the size of dimes.
My head pounds from the high pressure. It is awful
10 not to be able to get out, and I fell in the bathroom
and the girl could hardly get me up at all.
Sure thought my back was broken, it will be next time.
Prostate is bad and heart has given out,
feel bloated after supper. Have made my peace
15 because am just plain done for and have no doubt that the Lord will come any day with my release.
You say you enjoy your feeder, I don't see why
you want to spend good money on grain for birds
and you say you have a hundred sparrows, I'd buy 20 poison and get rid of their diseases and turds.

II

We enjoyed your visit, it was nice of you to bring the feeder but a terrible waste of your money
for that big bag of feed since we won't be living
more than a few weeks longer. We can see
25 them good from where we sit, big ones and little ones
but you know when I farmed I used to like to hunt
and we had many a good meal from pigeons
and quail and pheasant but these birds won't be good for nothing and are dirty to have so near 30 the house. Mother likes the redbirds though.
My bad knee is so sore and I can't hardly hear
and Mother says she is hoarse from yelling but I know
it's too late for a hearing aid. I belch up all the time and have a sour mouth and of course with my heart
35 it's no use to go to a doctor. Mother is the same.
Has a scab she thinks is going to turn to a wart.

III

The birds are eating and fighting, Ha! Ha! All shapes
and colors and sizes coming out of our woods
but we don't know what they are. Your Mother hopes

40 you can send us a kind of book that tells about birds.
There is one the folks called snowbirds, they eat on the ground,
we had the girl sprinkle extra there, but say,
they eat something awful. I sent the girl to town to buy some more feed, she had to go anyway.

IV

45 Almost called you on the telephone but it costs so much to call thought better write.
Say, the funniest thing is happening, one day we had so many birds and they fight and get excited at their feed you know 50 and it's really something to watch and two or three flew right at us and crashed into our window and bang, poor little things knocked themselves silly.
They come to after awhile on the ground and flew away.
And they been doing that. We felt awful 55 and didn't know what to do but the other day a lady from our Church drove out to call and a little bird knocked itself out while she sat and she brought it in her hands right into the house, it looked like dead. It had a kind of hat 60 of feathers sticking up on its head, kind of rose or pinky color, don't know what it was,
and I petted it and it come to life right there in her hands and she took it out and it flew. She says they think the window is the sky on a fair 65 day, she feeds birds too but hasn't got so many. She says to hang strips of aluminum foil in the window so we'll do that. She raved about our birds. P.S. The book just come in the mail.

V

Say, that book is sure good, I study
70 in it every day and enjoy our birds.
Some of them I can't identify for sure, I guess they're females, the Latin words
I just skip over. Bet you'd never guess the sparrows I've got here, House Sparrows you wrote, 75 but I have Fox Sparrows, Song Sparrows, Vesper Sparrows, Pine Woods and Tree and Chipping and White Throat and White Crowned Sparrows. I have six Cardinals, three pairs, they come at early morning and night,
the males at the feeder and on the ground the females.
80 Juncos, maybe 25, they fight for the ground, that's what they used to call snowbirds. I miss the Bluebirds since the weather warmed. Their breast is the color of a good ripe muskmelon. Tufted Titmouse is sort of blue with a little tiny crest.
85 And I have Flicker and Red-Bellied and Red-

Headed Woodpeckers, you would die laughing to see Red-Bellied, he hangs on with his head flat on the board, his tail braced up under, wing out. And Dickcissel and Ruby Crowned Ringlet 90 and Nuthatch stands on his head and Veery on top the color of a bird dog and Hermit Thrush with spot on breast, Blue Jay so funny, he will hop right on the backs of the other birds to get the grain.
We bought some sunflower seeds just for him.
95 And Purple Finch I bet you never seen, color of a watermelon, sits on the rim
of the feeder with his streaky wife, and the squirrels,
you know, they are cute too, they sit tall and eat with their little hands, they eat bucketfuls.
100 I pulled my own tooth, it didn't bleed at all.

VI

It's sure a surprise how well Mother is doing,
she forgets her laxative but bowels move fine.
Now that windows are open she says our birds sing
all day. The girl took a Book of Knowledge[1] on loan 105 from the library and I am reading up on the habits of birds, did you know some males have three wives, some migrate some don't. I am going to keep feeding all spring, maybe summer, you can see they expect it. Will need thistle seed for Goldfinch and Pine 110 Siskin next winter. Some folks are going to come see us from Church, some bird watchers, pretty soon.
They have birds in town but nothing to equal this.

So the world woos its children back for an evening kiss.

1982

Falling in Love at Sixty-Five

It is like the first and last time I tried a Coleman° lamp for reading in bed in Maine. Too early the camp went dark for fossil habits, no longer could candleflame convince my eyes, and I lit that scary lamp.
5 Instant outcry came from the savage white light of the mantles,[2] as if a star had been brought down out of space and trapped by the unchinked logs of the bedroom, roaring its threat to explode the walls and be gone,
or as if the lamp could tell time and knew that one tongue 10 was no longer enough to speak with, it must double its blare, overwhelm two senses at once, that the jaded heart might burst into ravished applause for its son et lumière.[3]

1. A general reference book.
2. Incandescent cloth hoods of gaslight jets.
3. Sound and light show (French).

Perched on a pile of books on the seat of a chair drawn to the head of the bed, the lamp called out 15 the guilty years and shamed them for cracks and shrivels that bent the patient, scabbed logs of the walls and ceiling.
Then I opened a book whose every radiant page was illuminated in colors of lightning and thunder
by the quick-witted lamp in its artistry of rage.
20 The book and the lamp fused to one voice, whose sense became mine, strokes of a slow, rhythmic broom swept a dusty pith that seemed to lie still until some other sense told me that there were wings in the room.

In one much earlier year I had fallen asleep
25 in the meadow, head near bright heights of fireweed, fireweed strewn on my chest from a hand that let go its bouquet, and had wakened at eyelash touches, the delicate need of five blue butterflies that found me in bloom.
Now, striking my neck and cheeks, came the first 30 wave of this late invasion, three flying bugs that hit me, lit, flew again, hit, an outburst the lamp had called for through log-gaps and screenholes, then more entered the air, winged in gray, brown, dun, and more, as I tried to read on, in the muted shades
35 brushed on by sundown's dimming imagination.

Beetle-bodied or light as moths they came and, big and small, bombed the lit skin of face, arms, shoulders, rested, crawled, unfurled, and sent the blind wanting that stuffed full each one's carapace 40 in a clicking crash at the lampglass, then crazily flew back to me, the bared part of me becoming a plan for plates of an insect book whose specimens rearranged themselves fiercely over and over again.
For as long as the lantern lasted they would have kept coming,
45 as if the grave darkness had smiled at that tiny dawn and had hurled them in fistfuls straight at the speaking light in answer to what was being insisted upon.

1990

RICHARD WILBUR
b. 1921

First Snow in Alsace[1]

The snow came down last night like moths
Burned on the moon; it fell till dawn,
Covered the town with simple cloths.

1. Region of northern France.

Absolute snow lies rumpled on 5 What shellbursts scattered and deranged,
Entangled railings, crevassed lawn.

As if it did not know they'd changed,
Snow smoothly clasps the roofs of homes
Fear-gutted, trustless and estranged.

10 The ration stacks are milky domes;
Across the ammunition pile
The snow has climbed in sparkling combs.

You think: beyond the town a mile
Or two, this snowfall fills the eyes
15 Of soldiers dead a little while.

Persons and persons in disguise,
Walking the new air white and fine,
Trade glances quick with shared surprise.

At children's windows, heaped, benign,
20 As always, winter shines the most,
And frost makes marvelous designs.

The night guard coming from his post,
Ten first-snows back in thought, walks slow
And warms him with a boyish boast:

25 He was the first to see the snow.

1947

Love Calls Us to the Things of This World[2]

The eyes open to a cry of pulleys,
And spirited from sleep, the astounded soul
Hangs for a moment bodiless and simple
As false dawn.
Outside the open window
5 The morning air is all awash with angels.

Some are in bed-sheets, some are in blouses,
Some are in smocks: but truly there they are.
Now they are rising together in calm swells
Of halcyon feeling, filling whatever they wear
10 With the deep joy of their impersonal breathing;

Now they are flying in place, conveying
The terrible speed of their omnipresence, moving

2. A quotation from St. Augustine (354–430), author of works such as the Confessions.

And staying like white water; and now of a sudden
They swoon down into so rapt a quiet
15 That nobody seems to be there.
The soul shrinks

From all that it is about to remember,
From the punctual rape of every blessèd day,
And cries,
"Oh, let there be nothing on earth but laundry,
Nothing but rosy hands in the rising steam
20 And clear dances done in the sight of heaven."

Yet, as the sun acknowledges
With a warm look the world's hunks and colors,
The soul descends once more in bitter love
To accept the waking body, saying now
25 In a changed voice as the man yawns and rises,

"Bring them down from their ruddy gallows;
Let there be clean linen for the backs of thieves;
Let lovers go fresh and sweet to be undone,
And the heaviest nuns walk in a pure floating 30 Of dark habits,
keeping their difficult balance."

1956

Piazza di Spagna,[3] Early Morning

I can't forget
How she stood at the top of that long marble stair
Amazed, and then with a sleepy pirouette
Went dancing slowly down to the fountain-quieted square;

5 Nothing upon her face
But some impersonal loneliness,—not then a girl,
But as it were a reverie of the place,
A called-for falling glide and whirl;

As when a leaf, petal, or thin chip
10 Is drawn to the falls of a pool and, circling a moment above it,
Rides on over the lip—
Perfectly beautiful, perfectly ignorant of it.

1956

3. Plaza in Rome, famous for its long, curved stairway.

A Plain Song for Comadre[4]

Though the unseen may vanish, though insight fails
And doubter and downcast saint
Join in the same complaint,
What holy things were ever frightened off
5 By a fly's buzz, or itches, or a cough?
Harder than nails

They are, more warmly constant than the sun,
At whose continual sign
The dimly prompted vine
10 Upbraids itself to a green excellence.
What evening, when the slow and forced expense
Of sweat is done,

Does not the dark come flooding the straight furrow
Or filling the well-made bowl?
15 What night will not the whole
Sky with its clear studs and steady spheres
Turn on a sound chimney? It is seventeen years
Come tomorrow

That Bruna Sandoval has kept the church
20 Of San Ysidro,[5] sweeping
And scrubbing the aisles, keeping
The candlesticks and the plaster faces bright,
And seen no visions but the thing done right
From the clay porch

25 To the white altar. For love and in all weathers
This is what she has done.
Sometimes the early sun
Shines as she flings the scrubwater out, with a crash
Of grimy rainbows, and the stained suds flash
30 Like angel-feathers.

1956

A Baroque Wall-Fountain in the Villa Sciarra[6]

For Dore and Adja

Under the bronze crown
Too big for the head of the stone cherub whose feet

4. Peasant woman (Spanish); also, midwife, godmother, neighbor. Plain song: or plainsong; the unisonous vocal music of the early Christian Church; also, any simple melody.

5. Village in San Diego County, near the Mexican border.

6. A large public park in Rome.

A serpent has begun to eat,
Sweet water brims a cockle[7] and braids down

5 Past spattered mosses, breaks
On the tipped edge of a second shell, and fills
The massive third below. It spills
In threads then from the scalloped rim, and makes

A scrim or summery tent
10 For a faun-ménage[8] and their familiar goose.
Happy in all that ragged, loose
Collapse of water, its effortless descent

And flatteries of spray,
The stocky god upholds the shell with ease,
15 Watching, about his shaggy knees,
The goatish innocence of his babes at play;

His fauness all the while
Leans forward, slightly, into a clambering mesh
Of water-lights, her sparkling flesh
20 In a saecular[9] ecstasy, her blinded smile

Bent on the sand floor
Of the trefoil° pool, where ripple-shadows come — three-leaved
And go in swift reticulum,° — netlike form
More addling to the eye than wine, and more

25 Interminable to thought
Than pleasure's calculus. Yet since this all
Is pleasure, flash, and waterfall,
Must it not be too simple? Are we not

More intricately expressed
30 In the plain fountains that Maderna[1] set Before St. Peter's—the main jet Struggling aloft until it seems at rest

In the act of rising, until
The very wish of water is reversed,
35 That heaviness borne up to burst
In a clear, high, cavorting head, to fill

With blaze, and then in gauze
Delays, in a gnatlike shimmering, in a fine
Illumined version of itself, decline,
40 And patter on the stones its own applause?

7. Shell-shaped basin, part of the fountain.
8. Group surrounding the faun, in classical mythology a lusty rural god usually pictured with a goat's legs and tail.
9. Lasting for ages (punning on secular, worldly).

1. Carlo Maderno (1556–1629), Italian architect and designer responsible for giving St. Peter's Basilica, in Rome, the shape of a cross and for completing the facade.

If that is what men are
Or should be, if those water-saints display
The pattern of our areté,[2]
What of these showered fauns in their bizarre,

45 Spangled, and plunging house?
They are at rest in fulness of desire
For what is given, they do not tire
Of the smart of the sun, the pleasant water-douse

And riddled pool below,
50 Reproving our disgust and our ennui
With humble insatiety.
Francis,[3] perhaps, who lay in sister snow

Before the wealthy gate
Freezing and praising, might have seen in this 55 No trifle, but a shade of bliss—
That land of tolerable flowers, that state

As near and far as grass
Where eyes become the sunlight, and the hand
Is worthy of water: the dreamt land
60 Toward which all hungers leap, all pleasures pass.

1956

Advice to a Prophet

When you come, as you soon must, to the streets of our city,
Mad-eyed from stating the obvious,
Not proclaiming our fall but begging us
In God's name to have self-pity,

5 Spare us all word of the weapons, their force and range,
The long numbers that rocket the mind;
Our slow, unreckoning hearts will be left behind,
Unable to fear what is too strange.

Nor shall you scare us with talk of the death of the race.
10 How should we dream of this place without us?—
The sun mere fire, the leaves untroubled about us,
A stone look on the stone's face?

Speak of the world's own change. Though we cannot conceive
Of an undreamt thing, we know to our cost
15 How the dreamt cloud crumbles, the vines are blackened by frost,
How the view alters. We could believe,

2. "A Greek word meaning roughly 'virtue' " [Wilbur's note].

3. I.e., St. Francis of Assisi (1182–1226), known for his vow of poverty and love of nature.

If you told us so, that the white-tailed deer will slip
Into perfect shade, grown perfectly shy,
The lark avoid the reaches of our eye,
20 The jack-pine lose its knuckled grip

On the cold ledge, and every torrent burn
As Xanthus[4] once, its gliding trout Stunned in a twinkling. What should we be without
The dolphin's arc, the dove's return,

25 These things in which we have seen ourselves and spoken?
Ask us, prophet, how we shall call
Our natures forth when that live tongue is all
Dispelled, that glass obscured or broken

In which we have said the rose of our love and the clean
30 Horse of our courage, in which beheld
The singing locust of the soul unshelled,
And all we mean or wish to mean.

Ask us, ask us whether with the worldless rose
Our hearts shall fail us; come demanding
35 Whether there shall be lofty or long standing
When the bronze annals of the oak-tree close.

1961

Junk

Huru Welandes
worc ne geswiceð
monna ænigum ðara ðe Mimming can heardne gehealdan.
—Waldere[5]

An axe angles
from my neighbor's ashcan;
It is hell's handiwork,
the wood not hickory,
5 The flow of the grain
not faithfully followed.
The shivered shaft
rises from a shellheap
Of plastic playthings,
10 paper plates,
And the sheer shards
of shattered tumblers

4. "Haphaestus, invoked by Achilles, scalded the river Xanthus (Scamander) in Iliad, xxi" [Wilbur's note].
5. "The epigraph, taken from a fragmentary Anglo-Saxon poem, concerns the legendary smith Wayland, and may roughly be translated: 'Truly, Wayland's handiwork—the sword Mimming which he made—will never fail any man who knows how to use it bravely' " [Wilbur's note].

That were not annealed
for the time needful.
15 At the same curbside,
a cast-off cabinet
Of wavily-warped
unseasoned wood
Waits to be trundled
20 in the trash-man's truck.
Haul them off! Hide them!
The heart winces
For junk and gimcrack,
for jerrybuilt things
25 And the men who make them for a little money, Bartering pride
like the bought boxer
Who pulls his punches,
30 or the paid-off jockey
Who in the home stretch holds in his horse.
Yet the things themselves
in thoughtless honor
35 Have kept composure, like captives who would not Talk under torture.
Tossed from a tailgate
Where the dump displays
40 its random dolmens,[6]
Its black barrows
and blazing valleys,
They shall waste in the weather toward what they were.
45 The sun shall glory
in the glitter of glass-chips, Foreseeing the salvage
of the prisoned sand,
And the blistering paint
50 peel off in patches,
That the good grain
be discovered again.
Then burnt, bulldozed,
they shall all be buried 55 To the depth of diamonds, in the making dark
Where halt Hephaestus[7] keeps his hammer
And Wayland's work
60 is worn away.

1961

6. Prehistoric monuments of horizontal stone slabs supported by upright stones; believed to be tombs.
7. Greek god of fire and the forge.

Cottage Street, 1953

Framed in her phoenix fire-screen, Edna Ward[8]
Bends to the tray of Canton,[9] pouring tea
For frightened Mrs. Plath;[1] then, turning toward
The pale, slumped daughter, and my wife, and me,

5 Asks if we would prefer it weak or strong.
Will we have milk or lemon, she enquires?
The visit seems already strained and long.
Each in his turn, we tell her our desires.

It is my office to exemplify
10 The published poet in his happiness,
Thus cheering Sylvia, who has wished to die;
But half-ashamed, and impotent to bless,

I am a stupid life-guard who has found,
Swept to his shallows by the tide, a girl
15 Who, far from shore, has been immensely drowned,
And stares through water now with eyes of pearl.

How large is her refusal; and how slight
The genteel chat whereby we recommend Life, of a summer afternoon, despite 20 The brewing dusk which hints that it may end.

And Edna Ward shall die in fifteen years,
After her eight-and-eighty summers of
Such grace and courage as permit no tears,
The thin hand reaching out, the last word love,

25 Outliving Sylvia who, condemned to live,
Shall study for a decade, as she must,
To state at last her brilliant negative
In poems free and helpless and unjust.

1976

Zea[2]

Once their fruit is picked,
The cornstalks lighten, and though Keeping to their strict

8. Wilbur's mother-in-law.
9. Porcelain named after the city in China.
1. Mother of Sylvia Plath, the American poet (1932–1963; see pp. 1836–45), who by 1953 had already attempted suicide and eventually took her own life.
2. Indian corn.

Rows, begin to be 5 The tall grasses that they are—
Lissom, now, and free

As canes that clatter
In island wind, or plumed reeds
Rocked by lake water.

10 Soon, if not cut down,
Their ranks grow whistling-dry, and Blanch to lightest brown,

So that, one day, all
Their ribbon-like, down-arcing
15 Leaves rise up and fall

In tossed companies,
Like goose-wings beating southward
Over the changed trees.

Later, there are days
20 Full of bare expectancy,
Downcast hues, and haze,

Days of an utter
Calm, in which one white corn-leaf,
Oddly aflutter,

25 Its fabric sheathing
A gaunt stem, can seem to be
The sole thing breathing.

2000

DONALD DAVIE
1922–1995

Remembering the 'Thirties

I

Hearing one saga, we enact the next.
We please our elders when we sit enthralled;
But then they're puzzled; and at last they're vexed
To have their youth so avidly recalled.

5 It dawns upon the veterans after all
That what for them were agonies, for us
Are high-brow thrillers, though historical;
And all their feats quite strictly fabulous.

This novel written fifteen years ago,
10 Set in my boyhood and my boyhood home,
These poems about "abandoned workings", show
Worlds more remote than Ithaca[1] or Rome.

The Anschluss, Guernica[2]—all the names
At which those poets thrilled or were afraid
15 For me mean schools and schoolmasters and games;
And in the process some-one is betrayed.

Ourselves perhaps. The Devil for a joke
Might carve his own initials on our desk,
And yet we'd miss the point because he spoke 20 An idiom too dated, Audenesque.[3]

Ralegh's Guiana also killed his son.[4]
A pretty pickle if we came to see
The tallest story really packed a gun,
The Telemachiad[5] an Odyssey.

II

25 Even to them the tales were not so true
As not to be ridiculous as well;
The ironmaster met his Waterloo,
But Rider Haggard[6] rode along the fell.

"Leave for Cape Wrath tonight!" They lounged away
30 On Fleming's trek or Isherwood's ascent.[7]
England expected every man that day
To show his motives were ambivalent.

They played the fool, not to appear as fools
In time's long glass. A deprecating air
35 Disarmed, they thought, the jeers of later schools;
Yet irony itself is doctrinaire,

And curiously, nothing now betrays
Their type to time's derision like this coy
Insistence on the quizzical, their craze
40 For showing Hector[8] was a mother's boy.

1. Greek island; home of Odysseus, the story of whose wandering and eventual return to his wife, Penelope, and son, Telemachus, is told in Homer's Odyssey.
2. Spanish town bombed by German aircraft in the Spanish Civil War, an event commemorated by the Spanish expatriate artist Pablo Picasso's painting Guernica (1937). Anschluss: union (German); name given to the German seizure of Austria in March 1938.
3. In the style of the American (English-born) poet W. H. Auden (1907–1973; see pp. 1465–81).
4. In search of gold, the English courtier-poet Sir Walter Ralegh (ca. 1552–1618; see pp. 151–58) led a military expedition to Guiana, in South America, on which his son was killed in 1617.
5. The first four books of the Odyssey, which center on Telemachus.
6. English writer (1856–1925), famous for boys' adventure stories and novels such as King Solomon's Mines (1885). Waterloo: battle of 1815, in Belgium, in which Napoleon was finally defeated.
7. Reference to the play The Ascent of F6 (1936), by W. H. Auden and the American (English-born) writer Christopher Isherwood (1904–1986), both of whom met the English explorer and travel writer Peter Fleming (1907–1971) on a trip to China. The quoted line, from Auden's 1929 poem "Missing," refers to the northernmost point of mainland Scotland.
8. In Homer's Iliad, leader of the Trojans at the siege of Troy.

A neutral tone is nowadays preferred.
And yet it may be better, if we must,
To praise a stance impressive and absurd
Than not to see the hero for the dust.

45 For courage is the vegetable king,
The sprig of all ontologies, the weed
That beards the slag-heap with his hectoring,
Whose green adventure is to run to seed.

1955

The Fountain

Feathers up fast, and steeples; then in clods
Thuds into its first basin; thence as surf
Smokes up and hangs; irregularly slops
Into its second, tattered like a shawl;
5 There, chill as rain, stipples a danker green,
Where urgent tritons[9] lob their heavy jets.

For Berkeley[1] this was human thought, that mounts
From bland assumptions to inquiring skies,
There glints with wit, fumes into fancies, plays
10 With its negations, and at last descends,
As by a law of nature, to its bowl
Of thus enlightened but still common sense.

We who have no such confidence must gaze
With all the more affection on these forms,
15 These spires, these plumes, these calm reflections, these Similitudes of surf and turf and shawl,
Graceful returns upon acceptances.
We ask of fountains only that they play,

Though that was not what Berkeley meant at all.

1957

Time Passing, Beloved

Time passing, and the memories of love
Coming back to me, carissima,[2] no more mockingly
Than ever before; time passing, unslackening,
Unhastening, steadily; and no more

9. I.e., statues depicting the Greek demigod of the sea, Triton, whose lower body was that of a fish.
1. George Berkeley (1685–1753), Irish bishop and philosopher, who maintained that the world is not an independent entity of which our minds may be an effect, but, rather, depends on our sensory perception for its existence.
2. Darling (Italian).

5 Bitterly, beloved, the memories of love
Coming into the shore.

How will it end? Time passing and our passages of love
As ever, beloved, blind
As ever before; time binding, unbinding
10 About us; and yet to remember
Never less chastening, nor the flame of love
Less like an ember.

What will become of us? Time
Passing, beloved, and we in a sealed
15 Assurance unassailed
By memory. How can it end,
This siege of a shore that no misgivings have steeled,
No doubts defend?

1957

SIDNEY KEYES
1922–1943

Elegy

(In memoriam S. K. K.)[1]

April again, and it is a year again
Since you walked out and slammed the door
Leaving us tangled in your words. Your brain
Lives in the bank-book, and your eyes look up
5 Laughing from the carpet on the floor:
And we still drink from your silver cup.

It is a year again since they poured
The dumb ground into your mouth:
And yet we know, by some recurring word
10 Or look caught unawares, that you still drive
Our thoughts like the smart cobs[2] of your youth—
When you and the world were alive.

A year again, and we have fallen on bad times
Since they gave you to the worms.
15 I am ashamed to take delight in these rhymes
Without grief; but you need no tears.
We shall never forget nor escape you, nor make terms
With your enemies, the swift departing years.

1938 1945

1. Keyes was sixteen when he wrote this elegy for his grandfather.
2. Stocky, short-legged riding horses.

From The Foreign Gate

The moon is a poor woman.
The moon returns to weep with us. The crosses
Burn raw and white upon the night's stiff banners.
The wooden crosses and the marble trees
5 Shrink from the foreign moon.
The iron gate glitters. Here the soldiers lie.
Fold up the flags, muffle the soldier's drum;
Silence the calling fife.° O drape small flute
The soldier's drum with heavy crêpe;
10 With mourning weeds muffle the soldier's girl.
It's a long way and a long march
To the returning moon and to the soil
No time at all.
O call
15 The soldier's glory by another name:
Shroud up the soldier's common shame
And drape the soldier's drum, but spare
The steel-caged brain, the feet that walk to war.

Once striding under a horsehair plume
20 Once beating the taut drums for war
The sunlight rang from brass and iron;
History was an angry play—
The boy grew tall and rode away;
The door hung slack; the pale girl wept
25 And cursed the company he kept.
And dumb men spoke
Through the glib mouths of smoke;
The servile learned to strike
The proud to shriek;
30 And strangled in their lovers' lips
The young fell short of glory in the sand
Raking for graves among the scattered sand;
The tattered flags strained at the wind
Scaring the thrifty kite, mocking the dead.
35 But muffle the soldier's drum, hide his pale head,
His face a spider's web of blood. O fold
The hands that grip a splintered gun.
The glittering gate
Baffles him still, his starvecrow[3] soul. O drape
40 The soldier's drum and cry, who never dare
Defy the ironbound brain, the feet that walk to war.

The cold hand clenches. The stupid mouth
Writhes like a ripple. Now the field is full Of noises and dead voices . . .
45 "My rags flap

3. Cursed (from the Australian slang Gawd starve the crows!).

Though the great flags are trampled . . ."
"My mouth speaks
Terror and truth, instead of hard command."
"Remember the torn lace, the fine coats slashed
50 With steel instead of velvet. Künersdorf[4]
Fought in the shallow sand was my relief."
"I rode to Naseby" . . . "And the barren land
Of Tannenberg drank me. Remember now
The grey and jointed corpses in the snow,
55 The struggle in the drift, the numb hands freezing
Into the bitter iron . . ."
"At Dunkirk I
Rolled in the shallows, and the living trod
Across me for a bridge . . ."
60 "Let me speak out
Against this sham of policy, for pain
Alone is true. I was a general
Who fought the cunning Africans, returned
Crowned with harsh laurel,[5] frantically cheered 65 Through Roman streets. I spoke of fame and glory.
Women grabbed at my robe. Great poets praised me.
I died of cancer, screaming, in a year."
"I fell on a black Spanish hillside
Under the thorn-hedge, fighting for a dream
70 That troubled me in Paris; vomited
My faith and courage out among the stones . . ."
"I was a barb of light, a burning cross
Of wood and canvas, falling through the night."
"I was shot down at morning, in a yard."

75 The moon regards them without shame. The wind Rises and twitters through the wreck of bone . . .
"It is so hard to be alone
Continually, watching the great stars march
Their circular unending route; sharp sand
80 Straying about the eyes, blinding the quick-eyed spirit."
A soldier's death is hard;
There's no prescribed or easy word
For dissolution in the Army books.
The uniform of pain with pain put on is straiter
85 Than any lover's garment; yet the death
Of these is different, and their glory greater.
Once men, then moving figures on a map,
Patiently giving time and strength and vision
Even identity
90 Into the future's keeping;
Nourished on wounds and weeping
Faces and laughing flags and pointed laurels,
Their pain cries down the noise of poetry.

4. Lines 50–57 refer to famous battles from different periods of history.

5. In ancient Greece and Rome, crowns of laurel leaves were awarded as honors.

So muffle the soldier's drum, forget the battles;
95 Remember only fame's a way of living:
The writing may be greater than the speaking
And every death for something different
From time's compulsion, is a written word.
Whatever gift, it is the giving
100 Remains significant: whatever death
It is the dying matters.
Emblematic
Bronze eagle or bright banner or carved name
Of fighting ancestor; these never pardon
105 The pain and sorrow. It is the dying pardons,
For something different from man or emblem.
Then drape the soldier's drum
And carry him down
Beyond the moon's inspection, and the noise
110 Of bands and banners and the striking sun.
Scatter the soldier's emblems and his fame:
Shroud up the shattered face, the empty name;
Speak out the word and drape the drum and spare
The captive brain, the feet that walk to war
115 The ironbound brain, the hand unskilled in war
The shrinking brain, sick of an inner war.

1942 1942

War Poet

I am the man who looked for peace and found
My own eyes barbed.
I am the man who groped for words and found
An arrow in my hand.
5 I am the builder whose firm walls surround
A slipping land.
When I grow sick or mad
Mock me not nor chain me:
When I reach for the wind
10 Cast me not down:
Though my face is a burnt book
And a wasted town.

1942 1943

PHILIP LARKIN
1922–1985

For Sidney Bechet[1]

That note you hold, narrowing and rising, shakes
Like New Orleans reflected on the water,
And in all ears appropriate falsehood wakes,

Building for some a legendary Quarter
5 Of balconies, flower-baskets and quadrilles,[2]
Everyone making love and going shares—

Oh, play that thing! Mute glorious Storyvilles[3]
Others may license, grouping round their chairs
Sporting-house girls like circus tigers (priced

10 Far above rubies)[4] to pretend their fads,
While scholars manqués[5] nod around unnoticed
Wrapped up in personnels° like old plaids. band members

On me your voice falls as they say love should,
Like an enormous yes. My Crescent City
15 Is where your speech alone is understood,

And greeted as the natural noise of good,
Scattering long-haired grief and scored pity.

1954 1964

Born Yesterday

for Sally Amis[6]

Tightly-folded bud,
I have wished you something
None of the others would:
Not the usual stuff
5 About being beautiful,
Or running off a spring
Of innocence and love—
They will all wish you that,
And should it prove possible,
10 Well, you're a lucky girl.

1. American jazz clarinetist and saxophonist (1897–1959), born in New Orleans ("Crescent City," line 14), where he spent his teenage years playing in the dance halls and brothels of the Storyville (line 7) Quarter (line 4), or district.
2. Square dance for couples.
3. Cf. Thomas Gray, "Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard," line 59 (p. 671): "Some mute inglorious Milton here may rest."
4. Cf. Proverbs 31.10: "Who can find a virtuous woman? For her price is far above rubies."
5. Would-be scholars.
6. Daughter (1954–2000) of Larkin's friend the English novelist Kingsley Amis and Amis's wife, Hilary. Cf. W. B. Yeats, "A Prayer for my Daughter" (p. 1196).

But if it shouldn't, then
May you be ordinary;
Have, like other women,
An average of talents:
15 Not ugly, not good-looking,
Nothing uncustomary
To pull you off your balance,
That, unworkable itself,
Stops all the rest from working.
20 In fact, may you be dull—
If that is what a skilled,
Vigilant, flexible,
Unemphasised, enthralled
Catching of happiness is called.

1954 1955

Church Going

Once I am sure there's nothing going on
I step inside, letting the door thud shut.
Another church: matting, seats, and stone,
And little books; sprawlings of flowers, cut
5 For Sunday, brownish now; some brass and stuff
Up at the holy end; the small neat organ;
And a tense, musty unignorable silence,
Brewed God knows how long. Hatless, I take off
My cycle-clips[7] in awkward reverence,

10 Move forward, run my hand around the font.
From where I stand, the roof looks almost new—Cleaned, or restored? Someone would know: I don't.
Mounting the lectern, I peruse a few
Hectoring large-scale verses,[8] and pronounce 15 "Here endeth" much more loudly than I'd meant.
The echoes snigger briefly. Back at the door
I sign the book, donate an Irish sixpence,[9]
Reflect the place was not worth stopping for.

Yet stop I did: in fact I often do,
20 And always end much at a loss like this,
Wondering what to look for; wondering, too,
When churches fall completely out of use
What we shall turn them into, if we shall keep
A few cathedrals chronically on show,
25 Their parchment, plate and pyx[1] in locked cases,
And let the rest rent-free to rain and sheep.
Shall we avoid them as unlucky places?

7. Devices worn below the knee to keep trouser legs from getting caught in a bicycle chain.
8. I.e., biblical verses printed in large type for reading aloud.
9. An Irish sixpence has no value in England.
1. Box, often made of gold or silver, in which communion wafers are kept.

Or, after dark, will dubious women come
To make their children touch a particular stone;
30 Pick simples° for a cancer; or on some — medicinal herbs
Advised night see walking a dead one?
Power of some sort or other will go on
In games, in riddles, seemingly at random;
But superstition, like belief, must die,
35 And what remains when disbelief has gone?
Grass, weedy pavement, brambles, buttress, sky,

A shape less recognisable each week,
A purpose more obscure. I wonder who Will be the last, the very last, to seek 40 This place for what it was; one of the crew
That tap and jot and know what rood-lofts[2] were?
Some ruin-bibber, randy for antique,
Or Christmas-addict, counting on a whiff
Of gown-and-bands and organ-pipes and myrrh?[3]
45 Or will he be my representative,

Bored, uninformed, knowing the ghostly silt
Dispersed, yet tending to this cross of ground
Through suburb scrub because it held unspilt
So long and equably what since is found
50 Only in separation—marriage, and birth,
And death, and thoughts of these—for which was built
This special shell? For, though I've no idea
What this accoutred frowsty barn is worth,
It pleases me to stand in silence here;

55 A serious house on serious earth it is,
In whose blent air all our compulsions meet,
Are recognized, and robed as destinies.
And that much never can be obsolete,
Since someone will forever be surprising
60 A hunger in himself to be more serious,
And gravitating with it to this ground,
Which, he once heard, was proper to grow wise in,
If only that so many dead lie round.

1954 — 1955

An Arundel Tomb[4]

Side by side, their faces blurred,
The earl and countess lie in stone,

2. In churches, galleries on top of carved screens separating the naves, or main halls, from the choirs, or areas where services are performed (rood: cross).
3. Gum resin, from trees of eastern Africa and Arabia, used to make incense; one of three presents given to the infant Jesus (Matthew 2, Luke 2). Gown-and-bands: gown and decorative collar worn by clergymen.
4. Fourteenth-century table tomb of Richard Fitzalan III, thirteenth earl of Arundel, and his wife, Eleanor, in Chichester Cathedral, Sussex.

Their proper habits° vaguely shown — clothing
As jointed armour, stiffened pleat,
5 And that faint hint of the absurd—
The little dogs under their feet.

Such plainness of the pre-baroque Hardly involves the eye, until
It meets his left-hand gauntlet, still 10 Clasped empty in the other; and
One sees, with a sharp tender shock
His hand withdrawn, holding her hand.

They would not think to lie so long.
Such faithfulness in effigy
15 Was just a detail friends would see:
A sculptor's sweet commissioned grace
Thrown off in helping to prolong
The Latin names around the base.

They would not guess how early in 20 Their supine stationary voyage
The air would change to soundless damage,
Turn the old tenantry away;
How soon succeeding eyes begin
To look, not read. Rigidly they

25 Persisted, linked, through lengths and breadths
Of time. Snow fell, undated. Light
Each summer thronged the glass. A bright
Litter of birdcalls strewed the same
Bone-riddled ground. And up the paths
30 The endless altered people came,

Washing at their identity.
Now, helpless in the hollow of
An unarmorial age, a trough
Of smoke in slow suspended skeins
35 Above their scrap of history,
Only an attitude remains:

Time has transfigured them into Untruth. The stone fidelity
They hardly meant has come to be 40 Their final blazon,° and to prove — record of virtue
Our almost-instinct almost true:
What will survive of us is love.

1956 1964

The Whitsun[5] Weddings

That Whitsun, I was late getting away:
  Not till about
One-twenty on the sunlit Saturday
Did my three-quarters-empty train pull out,
5 All windows down, all cushions hot, all sense
Of being in a hurry gone. We ran
Behind the backs of houses, crossed a street
Of blinding windscreens, smelt the fish-dock; thence
The river's level drifting breadth began,
10 Where sky and Lincolnshire and water meet.

All afternoon, through the tall heat that slept
  For miles inland,
A slow and stopping curve southwards we kept.
Wide farms went by, short-shadowed cattle, and 15 Canals with floatings of industrial froth;
A hothouse flashed uniquely: hedges dipped
And rose: and now and then a smell of grass
Displaced the reek of buttoned carriage-cloth
Until the next town, new and nondescript,
20 Approached with acres of dismantled cars.

At first, I didn't notice what a noise
  The weddings made
Each station that we stopped at: sun destroys
The interest of what's happening in the shade,
25 And down the long cool platforms whoops and skirls° shrill cries
I took for porters larking with the mails,
And went on reading. Once we started, though,
We passed them, grinning and pomaded, girls
In parodies of fashion, heels and veils,
30 All posed irresolutely, watching us go,

As if out on the end of an event
  Waving goodbye
To something that survived it. Struck, I leant
More promptly out next time, more curiously,
35 And saw it all again in different terms:
The fathers with broad belts under their suits
And seamy foreheads; mothers loud and fat;
An uncle shouting smut; and then the perms,
The nylon gloves and jewellery-substitutes,
40 The lemons, mauves, and olive-ochres that

Marked off the girls unreally from the rest.
  Yes, from cafés
And banquet-halls up yards, and bunting-dressed

5. Or Whitsunday, the seventh Sunday after Easter, commemorating the day of Pentecost, when converts to the early Christian Church wore white robes. In the 1950s, British tax law made the Whitsun weekend a financially advantageous time to be married.

Coach-party annexes, the wedding-days
45 Were coming to an end. All down the line
Fresh couples climbed aboard: the rest stood round;
The last confetti and advice were thrown,
And, as we moved, each face seemed to define
Just what it saw departing: children frowned
50 At something dull; fathers had never known

Success so huge and wholly farcical;
The women shared
The secret like a happy funeral;
While girls, gripping their handbags tighter, stared 55 At a religious wounding. Free at last,
And loaded with the sum of all they saw,
We hurried towards London, shuffling gouts of steam.
Now fields were building-plots, and poplars cast
Long shadows over major roads, and for 60 Some fifty minutes, that in time would seem

Just long enough to settle hats and say
I nearly died,
A dozen marriages got under way.
They watched the landscape, sitting side by side
65 —An Odeon went past, a cooling tower,[6]
And someone running up to bowl[7]—and none
Thought of the others they would never meet
Or how their lives would all contain this hour.
I thought of London spread out in the sun,
70 Its postal districts packed like squares of wheat:

There we were aimed. And as we raced across Bright knots of rail
Past standing Pullmans,[8] walls of blackened moss
Came close, and it was nearly done, this frail
75 Travelling coincidence; and what it held
Stood ready to be loosed with all the power
That being changed can give. We slowed again,
And as the tightened brakes took hold, there swelled
A sense of falling, like an arrow-shower
80 Sent out of sight, somewhere becoming rain.

1958 1964

MCMXIV[9]

Those long uneven lines
Standing as patiently
As if they were stretched outside

6. Industrial structure for cooling hot water before reuse. Odeon: one in a chain of movie theaters.
7. In the sport of cricket, to pitch the ball to the batsman.
8. Railway saloons or sleeping cars first made in the United States by George M. Pullman.
9. 1914, in roman numerals, as incised on stone memorials to the dead of World War I.

The Oval or Villa Park,[1]
5 The crowns of hats, the sun
On moustached archaic faces
Grinning as if it were all
An August Bank Holiday lark;

And the shut shops, the bleached,
10 Established names on the sunblinds,
The farthings and sovereigns,[2]
And dark-clothed children at play
Called after kings and queens,
The tin advertisements
15 For cocoa and twist,° and the pubs — tobacco
Wide open all day;[3]

And the countryside not caring:
The place-names all hazed over
With flowering grasses, and fields
20 Shadowing Domesday lines[4]
Under wheat's restless silence;
The differently-dressed servants
With tiny rooms in huge houses,
The dust behind limousines;

25 Never such innocence,
Never before or since,
As changed itself to past
Without a word—the men
Leaving the gardens tidy,
30 The thousands of marriages
Lasting a little while longer:
Never such innocence again.

1960 — 1964

Talking in Bed

Talking in bed ought to be easiest,
Lying together there goes back so far,
An emblem of two people being honest.

Yet more and more time passes silently.
5 Outside, the wind's incomplete unrest
Builds and disperses clouds about the sky,

1. I.e., outside a (London) cricket ground or a (Birmingham) soccer field. The lines consist of men waiting to enlist.
2. At that time, the least valuable and the most valuable British coins, respectively.
3. A 1915 law restricted the business hours of public houses ("pubs").
4. The still-visible boundaries of medieval farmers' long and narrow plots, ownership of which is recorded in William the Conqueror's Domesday Book (1085–86).

And dark towns heap up on the horizon.
None of this cares for us. Nothing shows why
At this unique distance from isolation

10 It becomes still more difficult to find
Words at once true and kind,
Or not untrue and not unkind.

1960 1964

Ambulances

Closed like confessionals,[5] they thread
Loud noons of cities, giving back
None of the glances they absorb.
Light glossy grey, arms on a plaque,
5 They come to rest at any kerb:
All streets in time are visited.

Then children strewn on steps or road,
Or women coming from the shops
Past smells of different dinners, see
10 A wild white face that overtops
Red stretcher-blankets momently
As it is carried in and stowed,

And sense the solving emptiness
That lies just under all we do,
15 And for a second get it whole,
So permanent and blank and true.
The fastened doors recede. Poor soul,
They whisper at their own distress;

For borne away in deadened air
20 May go the sudden shut of loss
Round something nearly at an end,
And what cohered in it across
The years, the unique random blend
Of families and fashions, there

25 At last begin to loosen. Far
From the exchange of love to lie
Unreachable inside a room
The traffic parts to let go by Brings closer what is left to come,
30 And dulls to distance all we are.

1961 1964

5. Enclosed stalls in Roman Catholic churches, in which priests hear confession.

The Trees

The trees are coming into leaf
Like something almost being said;
The recent buds relax and spread,
Their greenness is a kind of grief.

5 Is it that they are born again
And we grow old? No, they die too.
Their yearly trick of looking new
Is written down in rings of grain.

Yet still the unresting castles thresh
10 In fullgrown thickness every May.
Last year is dead, they seem to say,
Begin afresh, afresh, afresh.

1967 1974

Sad Steps[6]

Groping back to bed after a piss
I part thick curtains, and am startled by
The rapid clouds, the moon's cleanliness.

Four o'clock: wedge-shadowed gardens lie
5 Under a cavernous, a wind-picked sky.
There's something laughable about this,

The way the moon dashes through clouds that blow
Loosely as cannon-smoke to stand apart
(Stone-coloured light sharpening the roofs below)

10 High and preposterous and separate—
Lozenge of love! Medallion of art!
O wolves of memory! Immensements! No,

One shivers slightly, looking up there.
The hardness and the brightness and the plain
15 Far-reaching singleness of that wide stare

Is a reminder of the strength and pain
Of being young; that it can't come again,
But is for others undiminished somewhere.

1968 1974

6. Cf. Sir Philip Sidney, Astrophil and Stella 31.1: "With how sad steps, O Moon, thou climb'st the skies" (p. 214).

The Explosion

On the day of the explosion
Shadows pointed towards the pithead.
In the sun the slagheap[7] slept.

Down the lane came men in pitboots
5 Coughing oath-edged talk and pipe-smoke,
Shouldering off the freshened silence.

One chased after rabbits; lost them;
Came back with a nest of lark's eggs;
Showed them; lodged them in the grasses.

10 So they passed in beards and moleskins,[8]
Fathers, brothers, nicknames, laughter,
Through the tall gates standing open.

At noon, there came a tremor; cows
Stopped chewing for a second; sun,
15 Scarfed as in a heat-haze, dimmed.

The dead go on before us, they
Are sitting in God's house in comfort,
We shall see them face to face—

Plain as lettering in the chapels
20 It was said, and for a second
Wives saw men of the explosion

Larger than in life they managed—
Gold as on a coin, or walking
Somehow from the sun towards them,

25 One showing the eggs unbroken.

1970 1974

This Be The Verse[9]

They fuck you up, your mum and dad.
  They may not mean to, but they do.
They fill you with the faults they had
  And add some extra, just for you.

7. Pile of debris. Pithead: entrance to a coal mine.
8. Clothes made of heavy, durable cotton fabric.
9. Cf. Robert Louis Stevenson, "Requiem," esp. line 5: "This be the verse you grave for me."

5 But they were fucked up in their turn
By fools in old-style hats and coats,
Who half the time were soppy-stern
And half at one another's throats.

Man hands on misery to man.
10 It deepens like a coastal shelf.
Get out as early as you can,
And don't have any kids yourself.

1971 1974

Aubade[1]

I work all day, and get half-drunk at night.
Waking at four to soundless dark, I stare.
In time the curtain-edges will grow light.
Till then I see what's really always there:
5 Unresting death, a whole day nearer now,
Making all thought impossible but how
And where and when I shall myself die.
Arid interrogation: yet the dread
Of dying, and being dead,
10 Flashes afresh to hold and horrify.

The mind blanks at the glare. Not in remorse
—The good not done, the love not given, time
Torn off unused—nor wretchedly because
An only life can take so long to climb
15 Clear of its wrong beginnings, and may never;
But at the total emptiness for ever,
The sure extinction that we travel to
And shall be lost in always. Not to be here,
Not to be anywhere,
20 And soon; nothing more terrible, nothing more true.

This is a special way of being afraid
No trick dispels. Religion used to try,
That vast moth-eaten musical brocade
Created to pretend we never die,
25 And specious stuff that says No rational being
Can fear a thing it will not feel, not seeing
That this is what we fear—no sight, no sound,
No touch or taste or smell, nothing to think with,
Nothing to love or link with,
30 The anaesthetic from which none come round.

1. Music or poem announcing dawn.

And so it stays just on the edge of vision,
A small unfocused blur, a standing chill
That slows each impulse down to indecision.
Most things may never happen: this one will,
35 And realisation of it rages out
In furnace-fear when we are caught without People or drink. Courage is no good:
It means not scaring others. Being brave
Lets no one off the grave.
40 Death is no different whined at than withstood.

Slowly light strengthens, and the room takes shape.
It stands plain as a wardrobe, what we know,
Have always known, know that we can't escape,
Yet can't accept. One side will have to go.
45 Meanwhile telephones crouch, getting ready to ring
In locked-up offices, and all the uncaring
Intricate rented world begins to rouse.
The sky is white as clay, with no sun.
Work has to be done.
50 Postmen like doctors go from house to house.

1977

HOWARD MOSS
1922–1987

The Persistence of Song

Although it is not yet evening,
The secretaries have changed their frocks
As if it were time for dancing,
And locked up in the scholars' books
5 There is a kind of rejoicing,
There is a kind of singing
That even the dark stone canyon makes
As though all fountains were going
At once, and the color flowed from bricks
10 In one wild, lit upsurging.

What is the weather doing?
And who arrived on a scallop shell
With the smell of the sea this morning?[1]
—Creating a small upheaval
15 High above the scaffolding
By saying, "All will be well.
There is a kind of rejoicing."

1. Venus, Roman goddess of love and beauty, was said to have been born from a shell in the sea.

Is there a kind of rejoicing
In saying, "All will be well"?
20 High above the scaffolding,
Creating a small upheaval,
The smell of the sea this morning
Arrived on a scallop shell.
What was the weather doing

25 In one wild, lit upsurging?
At once, the color flowed from bricks
As though all fountains were going,
And even the dark stone canyon makes
Here a kind of singing,
30 And there a kind of rejoicing,
And locked up in the scholars' books
There is a time for dancing
When the secretaries have changed their frocks,
And though it is not yet evening,

35 There is the persistence of song.

1968

Tourists

Cramped like sardines on the Queens,[2] and sedated,
The sittings all first, the roommates mismated,

Three nuns at the table, the waiter a barber,
Then dumped with their luggage at some frumpish harbor,

5 Veering through rapids in a vapid rapido
To view the new moon from a ruin on the Lido,[3]

Or a sundown in London from a rundown Mercedes,
Then high-borne to Glyndebourne for Orfeo in Hades,[4]

Embarrassed in Paris in Harris tweed, dying to 10 Get to the next museum piece that they're flying to,

Finding, in Frankfurt, that one indigestible
Comestible makes them too ill for the Festival,

Footloose in Lucerne, or taking a pub in in Stratford or Glasgow, or maudlin in Dublin, in-

2. Ocean liner.
3. A chain of islands between the Lagoon of Venice and the Adriatic Sea. Rapido: Italian term for an express passenger boat in Venice.
4. Reference to the opera Orphée aux Enfers, by the French composer Jacques Offenbach (1819–1880).

15 sensitive, garrulous, querulous, audible,
Drunk in the Dolomites, tuning a portable,

Homesick in Stockholm, or dressed to toboggan
At the wrong time of year in too dear° Copenhagen, expensive

Generally being too genial or hostile—
20 Too grand at the Grand, too old at the Hostel—

Humdrum conundrums, what's to become of them?
Most will come home, but there will be some of them

Subsiding like Lawrence in Florence,[5] or crazily
Ending up tending shop up in Fiesole.[6]

1976

JAMES DICKEY
1923–1997

The Lifeguard

In a stable of boats I lie still,
From all sleeping children hidden.
The leap of a fish from its shadow
Makes the whole lake instantly tremble.
5 With my foot on the water, I feel
The moon outside

Take on the utmost of its power.
I rise and go out through the boats.
I set my broad sole upon silver,
10 On the skin of the sky, on the moonlight,
Stepping outward from earth onto water
In quest of the miracle

This village of children believed
That I could perform as I dived
15 For one who had sunk from my sight.
I saw his cropped haircut go under.
I leapt, and my steep body flashed
Once, in the sun.

Dark drew all the light from my eyes.
20 Like a man who explores his death

5. The English writer D. H. Lawrence (1885–1930; see pp. 1284–95) lived in Italy several times.

6. Town in Italy, near Florence.

By the pull of his slow-moving shoulders,
I hung head down in the cold,
Wide-eyed, contained, and alone
Among the weeds,

25 And my fingertips turned into stone
From clutching immovable blackness.
Time after time I leapt upward
Exploding in breath, and fell back
From the change in the children's faces
30 At my defeat.

Beneath them I swam to the boathouse
With only my life in my arms
To wait for the lake to shine back
At the risen moon with such power
35 That my steps on the light of the ripples
Might be sustained.

Beneath me is nothing but brightness
Like the ghost of a snowfield in summer.
As I move toward the center of the lake,
40 Which is also the center of the moon,
I am thinking of how I may be
The savior of one

Who has already died in my care.
The dark trees fade from around me.
45 The moon's dust hovers together.
I call softly out, and the child's Voice answers through blinding water.
Patiently, slowly,

He rises, dilating to break
50 The surface of stone with his forehead.
He is one I do not remember
Having ever seen in his life.
The ground I stand on is trembling
Upon his smile.

55 I wash the black mud from my hands.
On a light given off by the grave
I kneel in the quick of the moon
At the heart of a distant forest
And hold in my arms a child
60 Of water, water, water.

1962

Buckdancer's[1] Choice

So I would hear out those lungs,
The air split into nine levels,
Some gift of tongues of the whistler

In the invalid's bed: my mother,
5 Warbling all day to herself
The thousand variations of one song;

It is called Buckdancer's Choice.
For years, they have all been dying
Out, the classic buck-and-wing men

10 Of traveling minstrel shows;
With them also an old woman
Was dying of breathless angina,

Yet still found breath enough
To whistle up in my head
15 A sight like a one-man band,

Freed black, with cymbals at heel,
An ex-slave who thrivingly danced
To the ring of his own clashing light

Through the thousand variations of one song
20 All day to my mother's prone music,
The invalid's warbler's note,

While I crept close to the wall
Sock-footed, to hear the sounds alter,
Her tongue like a mockingbird's break

25 Through stratum after stratum of a tone
Proclaiming what choices there are
For the last dancers of their kind,

For ill women and for all slaves
Of death, and children enchanted at walls
30 With a brass-beating glow underfoot,

Not dancing but nearly risen
Through barnlike, theaterlike houses
On the wings of the buck and wing.

1965

1. Performer of the buck-and-wing, a solo tap dance invented by black entertainers.

Sled Burial, Dream Ceremony

While the south rains, the north
Is snowing, and the dead southerner
Is taken there. He lies with the top of his casket
Open, his hair combed, the particles in the air
5 Changing to other things. The train stops

In a small furry village, and men in flap-eared caps
And others with women's scarves tied around their heads
And business hats over those, unload him,
And one of them reaches inside the coffin and places
10 The southerner's hand at the center

Of his dead breast. They load him onto a sled,
An old-fashioned sled with high-curled runners,
Drawn by horses with bells, and begin
To walk out of town, past dull red barns
15 Inching closer to the road as it snows

Harder, past an army of gunny-sacked bushes,
Past horses with flakes in the hollows of their sway-backs,
Past round faces drawn by children
On kitchen windows, all shedding basic-shaped tears.
20 The coffin top still is wide open;

His dead eyes stare through his lids,
Not fooled that the snow is cotton. The woods fall
Slowly off all of them, until they are walking
Between rigid little houses of ice-fishers
25 On a plain which is a great plain of water

Until the last rabbit track fails, and they are
At the center. They take axes, shovels, mattocks,
Dig the snow away, and saw the ice in the form
Of his coffin, lifting the slab like a door
30 Without hinges. The snow creaks under the sled

As they unload him like hay, holding his weight by ropes.
Sensing an unwanted freedom, a fish
Slides by, under the hole leading up through the snow
To nothing, and is gone. The coffin's shadow
35 Is white, and they stand there, gunny-sacked bushes,

Summoned from village sleep into someone else's dream
Of death, and let him down, still seeing the flakes in the air
At the place they are born of pure shadow
Like his dead eyelids, rocking for a moment like a boat 40 On utter foreignness, before he fills and sails down.

1965

PETER KANE DUFAULT
b. 1923

A Letter for All-Hallows[1] (1949)

I am still hurt, Plin,
by your desertion. Now and again, between rains, or among sagged syllables on a page,
5 I am stopped suddenly by your grinning lantern-jawed, monkey-eared beautiful face—and I am hurt because you went to war and died right in the middle of your letters and never said goodbye.

10 And then your father followed you,
at a respectful distance,
and the high house on the hill went for a Trappist monkery.[2] . . . I hope those monks have veneration for the juniper
15 and the blackberries and the frogpond and the dust of toy-soldiers in the attic where we warred long November afternoons.—
Above all, for the black road that, if I listen on All-Souls' Eve,[3] will clatter 20 to the gait of you riding home from the white woods on Diamond, your horse.

The glue is long since dry
they made of him. Yet we mark well:
He was the last of the historic horses.
25 Revere rode him, and Sheridan, and Sitting Bull.[4] . . .

I hope those monks treat you gently, shades
galloping alongside the emptying meadows, from Concord and Lexington,
30 from the fords of the Shenandoah,
the forks of the Little Bighorn.[5]

Surely they would not be unmerciful and frighten away with signs and bells and torches

1. Or All Saints' Day, a church festival celebrated November 1 in honor of all saints.
2. The Trappist monks are members of a branch of the austere Cistercian order.
3. Evening of November 1, before All Souls' Day (a day of prayer for all the dead).
4. Native American warrior, victor at the Battle of the Little Big Horn (1876). Paul Revere (1735–1818), American patriot famous for a horseback ride on the evening of April 18, 1775, in which he warned Massachusetts colonists of the arrival of British troops. Philip Henry Sheridan (1831–1888), Union general in the American Civil War.
5. Scenes of the battles associated with Revere, Sheridan, and Sitting Bull.

so young an old-soldier and his friend 35 who, one way or another, were made ghosts in all their country's wars.

1949 1978

A First Night

It's the first night, I suppose,
in more than eighty year
Hattie has slept alone. . . .
And outdoors, in the falling
5 snow, without bedclothes or night light and none near but the deaf sunken stone were one to awake calling.

What could old Hattie have done
10 wrong, anyway?—Made raw-milk cheese, rubbed eggs, admired her rose-red Christmas cactus, and rocked, looking out at one more mid-February thaw, 15 drifts melting and dungwagon mired—
that now like a reprimand

she might have heard sixty-eight or seventy years ago,
(such as "Hattie thinks she is clever,
20 but will go to bed with boxed ears and no supper") she is told: "Tonight you'll sleep with shoes on in the snow in the cemetery and never never wake up in a million years."

1978

Burden

I called you because I could not stand alone
looking north to that skyline-tree globed with its yellow apples balancing like a fountain of planets
5 in the bright light and the blue air.

And because on the way there
I looked at a smooth cirque° circle
the brook had worn in a stone;

and nothing as soft as water
10 could, by taking care, have so pestled° and polished pounded that granite mortar; only by a thousand years of indifference, of aiming elsewhere.

15 I wish we might do—or no,
look back and find we had done—
some un-advertized thing, overwhelming and un-self-aware as water streamlining a stone, or a tree's 20 kindling in an empty meadow its casual Hesperides.[6]

1976 1978

ANTHONY HECHT
1923–2004

A Hill

In Italy, where this sort of thing can occur,
I had a vision once—though you understand
It was nothing at all like Dante's,[1] or the visions of saints,
And perhaps not a vision at all. I was with some friends,
5 Picking my way through a warm sunlit piazza
In the early morning. A clear fretwork of shadows
From huge umbrellas littered the pavement and made
A sort of lucent shallows in which was moored
A small navy of carts. Books, coins, old maps,
10 Cheap landscapes and ugly religious prints
Were all on sale. The colors and noise
Like the flying hands were gestures of exultation,
So that even the bargaining
Rose to the ear like a voluble godliness.
15 And then, when it happened, the noises suddenly stopped,
And it got darker; pushcarts and people dissolved
And even the great Farnese Palace[2] itself
Was gone, for all its marble; in its place
Was a hill, mole-colored and bare. It was very cold, 20 Close to freezing, with a promise of snow.
The trees were like old ironwork gathered for scrap
Outside a factory wall. There was no wind,
And the only sound for a while was the little click
Of ice as it broke in the mud under my feet.
25 I saw a piece of ribbon snagged on a hedge,

6. In Greek mythology, a garden where golden apples were grown.

1. As in the Italian poet's Divine Comedy.
2. Palace in Rome.

But no other sign of life. And then I heard
What seemed the crack of a rifle. A hunter, I guessed;
At least I was not alone. But just after that Came the soft and papery crash
30 Of a great branch somewhere unseen falling to earth.

And that was all, except for the cold and silence
That promised to last forever, like the hill.

Then prices came through, and fingers, and I was restored
To the sunlight and my friends. But for more than a week
35 I was scared by the plain bitterness of what I had seen.
All this happened about ten years ago,
And it hasn't troubled me since, but at last, today,
I remembered that hill; it lies just to the left
Of the road north of Poughkeepsie;[3] and as a boy
40 I stood before it for hours in wintertime.

1967

The Dover Bitch

A Criticism of Life

FOR ANDREWS WANNING

So there stood Matthew Arnold[4] and this girl
With the cliffs of England crumbling away behind them,
And he said to her, "Try to be true to me,
And I'll do the same for you, for things are bad
5 All over, etc., etc."[5]
Well now, I knew this girl. It's true she had read
Sophocles in a fairly good translation
And caught that bitter allusion to the sea,[6]
But all the time he was talking she had in mind
10 The notion of what his whiskers would feel like
On the back of her neck. She told me later on
That after a while she got to looking out
At the lights across the channel, and really felt sad,
Thinking of all the wine and enormous beds
15 And blandishments in French and the perfumes.
And then she got really angry. To have been brought
All the way down from London, and then be addressed
As a sort of mournful cosmic last resort
Is really tough on a girl, and she was pretty.
20 Anyway, she watched him pace the room
And finger his watch-chain and seem to sweat a bit,
And then she said one or two unprintable things.

3. Town in upstate New York.
4. English poet (1822–1888; see pp. 1087–1101), whose most famous poem, "Dover Beach" (p. 1101), is set on the southern coast of England.
5. Cf. "Dover Beach," lines 29–37: "Ah, love, let us be true / To one another! . . ."
6. Cf. "Dover Beach," lines 15–18 and note 9 there.

But you mustn't judge her by that. What I mean to say is,
She's really all right. I still see her once in a while 25 And she always treats me right. We have a drink
And I give her a good time, and perhaps it's a year
Before I see her again, but there she is,
Running to fat, but dependable as they come.
And sometimes I bring her a bottle of Nuit d'Amour.[7]

1968

The Ghost in the Martini[8]

Over the rim of the glass
Containing a good martini with a twist
I eye her bosom and consider a pass,
Certain we'd not be missed

5 In the general hubbub.
Her lips, which I forgot to say, are superb,
Never stop babbling once (Aye, there's the rub)[9]
But who would want to curb

Such delicious, artful flattery?
10 It seems she adores my work, the distinguished grey
Of my hair. I muse on the salt and battery[1]
Of the sexual clinch, and say

Something terse and gruff
About the marked disparity in our ages.
15 She looks like twenty-three, though eager enough.
As for the famous wages

Of sin,[2] she can't have attained
Even to union scale, though you never can tell.
Her waist is slender and suggestively chained,
20 And things are going well.

The martini does its job,
God bless it, seeping down to the dark old id.
("Is there no cradle, Sir, you would not rob?"
Says ego, but the lid

25 Is off. The word is Strike
While the iron's hot.) And now, ingenuous and gay,
She is asking me about what I was like
At twenty. (Twenty, eh?)

7. Night of love (French).
8. Alludes to the expression the ghost in the machine, a way of describing the mind/body opposition.
9. Cf. Hamlet 3.1.64, where the phrase refers to a quite different double bind of the speaker, Prince Hamlet, who is considering suicide.
1. A play on assault and battery.
2. Cf. Romans 6.23: "For the wages of sin is death."

You wouldn't have liked me then,
30 I answer, looking carefully into her eyes.
I was shy, withdrawn, awkward, one of those men
That girls seemed to despise,

Moody and self-obsessed,
Unhappy, defiant, with guilty dreams galore,
35 Full of ill-natured pride, an unconfessed
Snob and a thorough bore.

Her smile is meant to convey
How changed or modest I am, I can't tell which,
When I suddenly hear someone close to me say,
40 "You lousy son-of-a-bitch!"

A young man's voice, by the sound,
Coming, it seems, from the twist in the martini.
"You arrogant, elderly letch, you broken-down
Brother of Apeneck Sweeney![3]

45 Thought I was buried for good
Under six thick feet of mindless self-regard?
Dance on my grave, would you, you galliard° stud, lively
Silenus[4] in leotard?

Well, summon me you did,
50 And I come unwillingly, like Samuel's ghost.[5]
'All things shall be revealed that have been hid.'[6]
There's something for you to toast!

You only got where you are
By standing upon my ectoplasmic° shoulders, ghostly
55 And wherever that is may not be so high or far
In the eyes of some beholders.

Take, for example, me.
I have sat alone in the dark, accomplishing little,
And worth no more to myself, in pride and fee,
60 Than a cup of luke-warm spittle.

But honest about it, withal . . ."
("Withal," forsooth!) "Please not to interrupt.
And the lovelies went by, 'the long and the short and the tall,'[7]
Hankered for, but untupped.[8]

3. Cf. T. S. Eliot, "Sweeney Among the Nightingales": "Apeneck Sweeney spreads his knees / Letting his arms hang down to laugh."
4. In Greek mythology, foster father and companion of the wine god, Dionysus; of human form, with a horse's ears and tail. Generally old, bald, and bearded. A famous legend relates that Midas made Silenus drunk to learn his secrets.
5. Saul, fearful of the army of the Philistines, found his prayers for guidance unanswered, and so consulted a medium to raise the unwilling Samuel from the dead (1 Samuel 28).
6. A rewriting of a recurrent theme in the Gospels, as in Luke 12.2 or Matthew 10.26.
7. As in the 1940 popular song by Jimmy Hughes and Frank Lake, "Bless 'Em All."
8. Not copulated with (as a ewe is tupped by a ram).

65 Bloody monastic it was.
A neurotic mixture of self-denial and fear;
The verse halting, the cataleptic pause,
No sensible pain, no tear,

But an interior drip
70 As from an ulcer, where, in the humid deep
Center of myself, I would scratch and grip
The wet walls of the keep,

Or lie on my back and smell
From the corners the sharp, ammoniac, urine stink.
75 'No light, but rather darkness visible.'[9]
And plenty of time to think.

In that thick, fetid air
I talked to myself in giddy recitative:
'I have been studying how I may compare
80 This prison where I live

Unto the world . . .'[1] I learned
Little, and was awarded no degrees.
Yet all that sunken hideousness earned
Your negligence and ease.

85 Nor was it wholly sick,
Having procured you a certain modest fame;
A devotion, rather, a grim device to stick
To something I could not name."

Meanwhile, she babbles on 90 About men, or whatever, and the juniper juice
Shuts up at last, having sung, I trust, like a swan.[2]
Still given to self-abuse!

Better get out of here;
If he opens his trap again it could get much worse.
95 I touch her elbow, and, leaning toward her ear,
Tell her to find her purse.

1977

Still Life

Sleep-walking vapor, like a visitant ghost,
Hovers above a lake
Of Tennysonian[3] calm just before dawn.

9. Cf. Milton, Paradise Lost 1.61–63, where Satan views hell: "A Dungeon horrible, on all sides round / As one great Furnace flam'd, yet from those flames / No light, but rather darkness visible."
1. Cf. Shakespeare, Richard II 5.5.1 ff. (the poetic, self-absorbed King Richard's soliloquy in prison).
2. A swan is said to sing before it dies. Juniper juice is an ingredient used in flavoring gin.
3. As in the work of the English poet Alfred, Lord Tennyson (1809–1892; see pp. 982–1009).

Inverted trees and boulders waver and coast
5 In polished darkness. Glints of silver break
Among the liquid leafage, and then are gone.

Everything's doused and diamonded with wet.
A cobweb, woven taut
On bending stanchion° frames of tentpole grass, upright prop
10 Sags like a trampoline or firemen's net
With all the glitter and riches it has caught,
Each drop a paperweight of Steuben glass.[4]

No birdsong yet, no cricket, nor does the trout Explode in water-scrolls
15 For a skimming fly. All that is yet to come.
Things are as still and motionless throughout
The universe as ancient Chinese bowls,
And nature is magnificently dumb.

Why does this so much stir me, like a code
20 Or muffled intimation
Of purposes and preordained events?
It knows me, and I recognize its mode
Of cautionary, spring-tight hesitation,
This silence so impacted and intense.

25 As in a water-surface I behold
The first, soft, peach decree
Of light, its pale, inaudible commands.
I stand beneath a pine-tree in the cold,
Just before dawn, somewhere in Germany,
30 A cold, wet, Garand rifle in my hands.

1979

The Book of Yolek

Wir haben ein Gesetz,
Und nach dem Gesetz soll er sterben.[5]

The dowsed coals fume and hiss after your meal
Of grilled brook trout, and you saunter off for a walk Down the fern trail, it doesn't matter where to,
Just so you're weeks and worlds away from home,
5 And among midsummer hills have set up camp
In the deep bronze glories of declining day.

4. Brand of handmade, heavy lead crystal.
5. From the German translation of John 19.7 ("We have a law, and by that law he ought to die") by the theologian Martin Luther (1483–1546), leader in Germany of the Protestant Reformation. Hecht's poem is inspired by "Yanosz Korezak's Last Walk," by the Polish poet Hannah Mortkowicz-Olczakowa (1905–1968)—in Jacob Glatstein and Israel Knox, eds., Anthology of Holocaust Literature (1973), 134–37—which recounts a historical event in Germany.

You remember, peacefully, an earlier day
In childhood, remember a quite specific meal:
A corn roast and bonfire in summer camp.
10 That summer you got lost on a Nature Walk;
More than you dared admit, you thought of home;
No one else knows where the mind wanders to.

The fifth of August, 1942.
It was morning and very hot. It was the day
15 They came at dawn with rifles to The Home
For Jewish Children, cutting short the meal
Of bread and soup, lining them up to walk
In close formation off to a special camp.

How often you have thought about that camp,
20 As though in some strange way you were driven to,
And about the children, and how they were made to walk,
Yolek who had bad lungs, who wasn't a day
Over five years old, commanded to leave his meal
And shamble between armed guards to his long home.

25 We're approaching August again. It will drive home
The regulation torments of that camp
Yolek was sent to, his small, unfinished meal,
The electric fences, the numeral tattoo,
The quite extraordinary heat of the day
30 They all were forced to take that terrible walk.

Whether on a silent, solitary walk
Or among crowds, far off or safe at home,
You will remember, helplessly, that day,
And the smell of smoke, and the loudspeakers of the camp.
35 Wherever you are, Yolek will be there, too.
His unuttered name will interrupt your meal.

Prepare to receive him in your home some day.
Though they killed him in the camp they sent him to,
He will walk in as you're sitting down to a meal.

1990

Death the Painter[6]

Snub-nosed, bone-fingered, deft with engraving tools,
I have alone been given
The powers of Joshua, who stayed the sun
In its traverse of heaven.[7]

6. From The Presumptions of Death, a series of twenty-two poems written from the perspective of Death, to accompany woodcuts by the American artist Leonard Baskin (1922–2000).

7. Cf. Joshua 10.12–13; when Joshua asked the sun and the moon to stand still, "the sun stood still, and the moon stayed, until the people had avenged themselves upon their enemies."

5 Here in this Gotham[8] of unnumbered fools
I have sought out and arrested everyone.

Under my watchful eye all human creatures
    Convert to a still life,
As with unique precision I apply
10   White lead and palette knife.
A model student of remodelled features,
The final barber, the last beautician, I.

You lordlings, what is Man, his blood and vitals,[9]
    When all is said and done?
15 A poor forked animal,[1] a nest of flies.
    Tell us, what is this one
Once shorn of all his dignities and titles,
Divested of his testicles and eyes?

1995

RICHARD HUGO
1923–1982

The Way a Ghost Dissolves

Where she lived the close remained the best.
The nearest music and the static cloud,
sun and dirt were all she understood.
She planted corn and left the rest
5 to elements, convinced that God with giant faucets regulates the rain and saves the crops from frost or foreign wind.

Fate assisted her with special cures.
Rub a half potato on your wart
10 and wrap it in a damp cloth. Close your eyes and whirl three times and throw.
Then bury rag and spud exactly where they fall. The only warts that I have now are memories or comic on my nose.

8. Proverbial town (in England) known for its foolish inhabitants.
9. Cf. Psalm 8.4: "What is man, that thou art mindful of him?"
1. Cf. King Lear 3.4.101 ff., where Lear encounters Edgar, disguised in rags as a madman, laments, "Is man no more than this?" and says, "unaccommodated man is no more but such a poor, bare, fork'd animal as thou art."

15 Up at dawn. The earth provided food if worked and watered, planted green with rye grass every fall. Or driven wild by snakes that kept the carrots clean,
she butchered snakes and carrots with a hoe.
20 Her screams were sea birds in the wind,
her chopping—nothing like it now.

I will garden on the double run,
my rhythm obvious in ringing rakes,
and trust in fate to keep me poor and kind 25 and work until my heart is short,
then go out slowly with a feeble grin,
my fingers flexing but my eyes gone gray
from cramps and the lack of oxygen.

Forget the tone. Call the neighbor's trumpet
30 golden as it grates. Exalt the weeds.
Say the local animals have class or help me say that ghost has gone to seed.
And why attempt to see the cloud again—
the screaming face it was before it cracked
35 in wind from Asia and a wanton rain.

1961

The Lady in Kicking Horse Reservoir[1]

Not my hands but green across you now.
Green tons hold you down, and ten bass curve teasing in your hair. Summer slime will pile deep on your breast. Four months of ice 5 will keep you firm. I hope each spring to find you tangled in those pads pulled not quite loose by the spillway pour,
stars in dead reflection off your teeth.

Lie there lily still. The spillway's closed.
10 Two feet down most lakes are common gray.
This lake is dark from the black blue Mission range climbing sky like music dying Indians once wailed.
On ocean beaches, mystery fish are offered to the moon. Your jaws go blue.
15 Your hands start waving every wind.
Wave to the ocean where we crushed a mile of foam.

1. Both Kicking Horse Reservoir and the Mission mountain range (line 11) are on the Flathead Indian Reservation, in Montana.

We still love there in thundering foam and love. Whales fall in love with gulls and tide reclaims the Dolly skeletons[2]
20 gone with a blast of aching horns to China.
Landlocked in Montana here
the end is limited by light, the final note will trail off at the farthest point we see,
already faded, lover, where you bloat.

25 All girls should be nicer. Arrows rain above us in the Indian wind. My future should be full of windy gems, my past will stop this roaring in my dreams.
Sorry. Sorry. Sorry. But the arrows sing:
30 no way to float her up. The dead sink from dead weight. The Mission range turns this water black late afternoons.

One boy slapped the other. Hard.
The slapped boy talked until his dignity
35 dissolved, screamed a single "stop"
and went down sobbing in the company pond.
I swam for him all night. My only suit got wet and factory hands went home.
No one cared the coward disappeared.
40 Morning then: cold music I had never heard.

Loners like work best on second shift.
No one liked our product and the factory closed.
Off south, the bison multiply so fast
a slaughter's mandatory every spring
45 and every spring the creeks get fat and Kicking Horse fills up. My hope is vague.
The far blur of your bones in May may be nourished by the snow.

The spillway's open and you spill out
50 into weather, lover down the bright canal and mother, irrigating crops dead Indians forgot to plant.
I'm sailing west with arrows to dissolving foam
where waves strand naked Dollys.
55 Their eyes are white as oriental mountains and their tongues are teasing oil from whales.

1973

2. Specifically, here, skeletons of the Dolly Varden trout (but see also line 54).

DENISE LEVERTOV
1923–1997

Scenes from the Life of the Peppertrees

1

The peppertrees, the peppertrees!

Cats are stretching in the doorways, sure of everything. It is morning.
    But the peppertrees
5 stand aside in diffidence, with berries of modest red.
            Branch above branch, an air of lightness; of shadows scattered lightly.
10   A cat
closes upon its shadow.
Up and up goes the sun,
sure of everything.
    The peppertrees
15   shiver a little.
Robust
and soot-black, the cat leaps to a low branch. Leaves close about him.

2

20 The yellow moon dreamily tipping buttons of light down among the leaves. Marimba, marimba—from beyond the black street.
25   Somebody dancing, somebody getting the hell outta here. Shadows of cats weave round the tree trunks,
30 the exposed knotty roots.

3

The man on the bed sleeping defenseless. Look—his bare long feet together sideways, keeping each other 35 warm. And the foreshortened shoulders, the head barely visible.   He is good.

let him sleep.
But the third peppertree
40 is restless, twitching thin leaves in the light of afternoon. After a while it walks over and taps
on the upstairs window with a bunch
45 of red berries. Will he wake?

1958

Triple Feature

Innocent decision: to enjoy.
And the pathos
of hopefulness, of his solicitude:

—he in mended serape,
5 she having plaited carefully
magenta ribbons into her hair,
the baby a round half-hidden shape
slung in her rebozo,° and the young son steadfastly shawl gripping a fold of her skirt, 10 pale and severe under a handed-down sombrero—

all regarding the stills with full attention, preparing to pay and go in—

15 to worlds of shadow-violence, half-familiar, warm with popcorn, icy with strange motives, barbarous splendors!

1959

O Taste and See

The world is not with us enough.[1]
O taste and see

the subway Bible poster said,
5 meaning The Lord,[2] meaning
if anything all that lives to the imagination's tongue,

1. Cf. William Wordsworth's sonnet "The World Is Too Much with Us" (p. 802).

2. "O taste and see that the Lord is good" (Psalms 34.8).

grief, mercy, language, tangerine, weather, to 10 breathe them, bite, savor, chew, swallow, transform into our flesh our deaths, crossing the street, plum, quince, living in the orchard and being

15 hungry, and plucking
the fruit.

1964

Tenebrae[3]

(Fall of 1967)[4]

Heavy, heavy, heavy, hand and heart.
We are at war,
bitterly, bitterly at war.

And the buying and selling 5 buzzes at our heads, a swarm of busy flies, a kind of innocence.

Gowns of gold sequins are fitted,
sharp-glinting. What harsh rustlings of silver moiré° there are, watered silk
10 to remind me of shrapnel splinters.

And weddings are held in full solemnity not of desire but of etiquette,
the nuptial pomp of starched lace;
a grim innocence.

15 And picnic parties return from the beaches burning with stored sun in the dusk;
children promised a TV show when they get home
fall asleep in the backs of a million station wagons, sand in their hair, the sound of waves
20 quietly persistent at their ears.
They are not listening.

Their parents at night
dream and forget their dreams.
They wake in the dark
25 and make plans. Their sequin plans

3. Darkness (Latin); church service observed during the final part of Holy Week to commemorate the sufferings and death of Christ.

4. Time of a march on the Pentagon to protest the continuing presence of American troops in Vietnam.

glitter into tomorrow.
They buy, they sell.

They fill freezers with food.
Neon signs flash their intentions
30 into the years ahead.

And at their ears the sound of the war. They are not listening, not listening.

1972

Caedmon[5]

All others talked as if talk were a dance.
Clodhopper I, with clumsy feet would break the gliding ring.
5 Early I learned to hunch myself
close by the door:
then when the talk began
I'd wipe my 10 mouth and wend
unnoticed back to the barn
to be with the warm beasts, dumb among body sounds of the simple ones.
15 I'd see by a twist of lit rush[6] the motes of gold moving from shadow to shadow
slow in the wake
20 of deep untroubled sighs.
The cows munched or stirred or were still. I was at home and lonely, both in good measure. Until 25 the sudden angel affrighted me—light effacing
my feeble beam,
a forest of torches, feathers of flame, sparks upflying:
but the cows as before
were calm, and nothing was burning,

5. The earliest known English Christian poet (fl. 658–680), an unlettered cowherd who, the legend goes, received a divine call to praise in verse. (Cf. Cædmon's "Hymn," p. 1.) "The story comes, of course, from the Venerable Bede's History of the English Church and People, but I first read it as a child in John Richard Green's History of the English People, 1855" [Levertov's note].
6. Rush plants were lit to serve as candlewicks.

30 nothing but I, as that hand of fire touched my lips and scorched my tongue and pulled my voice into the ring of the dance.

1987

JOHN ORMOND
1923–1990

Cathedral Builders

They climbed on sketchy ladders towards God,
With winch and pulley hoisted hewn rock into heaven,
Inhabited sky with hammers, defied gravity,
Deified stone, took up God's house to meet Him,

5 And came down to their suppers and small beer;
Every night slept, lay with their smelly wives,
Quarrelled and cuffed[1] the children, lied,
Spat, sang, were happy or unhappy,

And every day took to the ladders again;
10 Impeded the rights of way of another summer's Swallows, grew greyer, shakier, became less inclined
To fix a neighbour's roof of a fine evening,

Saw naves sprout arches, clerestories[2] soar,
Cursed the loud fancy glaziers° for their luck, glass cutters
15 Somehow escaped the plague, got rheumatism,
Decided it was time to give it up,

To leave the spire to others; stood in the crowd
Well back from the vestments at the consecration,
Envied the fat bishop his warm boots,
20 Cocked up a squint eye and said, "I bloody did that."

1969

Lament for a Leg

Near the yew tree under which the body of Dafydd ap Gwilym[3] is buried in Strata Florida, Cardiganshire, there stands a stone with the following inscription: "The left leg and part of the thigh of Henry Hughes, Cooper, was cut off and interr'd here, June 18, 1756". Later the rest of Henry Hughes set off across the Atlantic in search of better fortune.

1. Struck, especially with the palm of the hand.
2. Upper stories with their own windows. Naves: main sections of churches.
3. Fourteenth-century Welsh poet.

A short service, to be sure,
With scarcely half a hymn they held,
Over my lost limb, suitable curtailment.
Out-of-tune notes a crow cawed
5 By the yew tree, and me,
My stump still tourniqued,
Awkward on my new crutch,
Being snatched towards the snack
Of a funeral feast they made.
10 With seldom a dry eye, for laughter,
They jostled me over the ale
I'd cut the casks for, and the mead.
"Catch me falling under a coach",
Every voice jested, save mine,
15 Henry Hughes, cooper. A tasteless caper!
Soon with my only, my best, foot forward
I fled, quiet, to far America:

Where, with my two tried hands, I plied
My trade and, true, in time made good
20 Though grieving for Pontrhydfendigaid.[4]
Sometimes, all at once, in my tall cups,
I'd cry in hiraeth[5] for my remembered thigh
Left by the grand yew in Ystrad Fflur's
Bare ground, near the good bard.
25 Strangers, astonished at my high
Beer-flush, would stare, not guessing,
Above the bar-board, that I, of the starry eye,
Had one foot in the grave; thinking me,
No doubt, a drunken dolt in whom a whim
30 Warmed to madness, not knowing a tease
Of a Welsh worm was tickling my distant toes.

"So I bequeath my leg", I'd say and sigh,
Baffling them, "my unexiled part, to Dafydd
The pure poet who, whole, lies near and far 35 From me, still pining for Morfudd's heart",[6]
Giving him, generous to a fault
With what was no more mine to give,
Out of that curt plot, my quarter grave,
Good help, I hope. What will the great God say 40 At Dafydd's wild-kicking-climbing extra leg,
Jammed hard in heaven's white doorway
(I'll limp unnimble round the narrow back)
Come the quick trumpet of the Judgement Day?

1973

4. Welsh place-name, as is Ystrad Fflur (line 23).
5. Longing, nostalgia (Welsh). In my tall cups: very drunk.
6. The love of Morfudd.

JAMES SCHUYLER
1923–1991

Freely Espousing

a commingling sky

a semi-tropic night
that cast the blackest shadow of the easily torn, untrembling banana leaf

5 or Quebec! what a horrible city so Steubenville[1] is better?
the sinking sensation
when someone drowns thinking, "This can't be happening to me!"
the profit of excavating the battlefield where Hannibal whomped the Romans[2] 10 the sinuous beauty of words like allergy the tonic resonance of pill when used as in
"she is a pill"
on the other hand I am not going to espouse any short stories in which lawn mowers clack.
15 No, it is absolutely forbidden for words to echo the act described; or try to. Except very directly as in bong. And tickle. Oh it is inescapable kiss.
Marriages of the atmosphere
20 are worth celebrating where Tudor City[3] catches the sky or the glass side of a building lit up at night in fog
"What is that gold green tetrahedron down the river?"
25 "You are experiencing a new sensation."

if the touch-me-nots are not in bloom
neither are the chrysanthemums

the bales of pink cotton candy 30 in the slanting light are ornamental cherry trees.
The greens around them, and the browns, the grays, are the park.
It's. Hmm. No.
35 Their scallop shell of quiet is the S.S. United States.
It is not so quiet and they

1. Town in Ohio.
2. In 217–216 B.C.E., the Carthaginian general Hannibal crossed the Alps and defeated Roman armies, using brilliant military tactics.
3. Large apartment complex on the east side of Manhattan.

are a medium-size couple who when they fold each other up
40 well, thrill. That's their story.

1979

Shimmer

The pear tree that last year was heavy laden this year bears little fruit. Was it that wet spring we had?
5 All the pear tree leaves go shimmer, all at once. The August sun blasts down into the coolness from the ocean. The New York Times 10 is on strike. My daily fare! I'll starve! Not quite. On my sill, balls of twine wrapped up in cellophane glitter. The 15 brown, the white, and one
I think you'd call écru.° beige
The sunlight falls partly in a cup: it has a blue transfer of two boys, a 20 dog and a duck and says,
"Come Away Pompey." I like that cup, half full of sunlight. Today you could take up the 25 tattered shadows off the grass. Roll them and stow them. And collect the shimmerings in a cup, like the coffee
30 here at my right hand.

1974

DONALD JUSTICE
1925–2004

Counting the Mad[1]

This one was put in a jacket,
This one was sent home,

1. This poem plays on the nursery rhyme that begins "this little pig went to market."

This one was given bread and meat
But would eat none,
5 And this one cried No No No No
All day long.

This one looked at the window
As though it were a wall,
This one saw things that were not there,
10 This one things that were,
And this one cried No No No No
All day long.

This one thought himself a bird,
This one a dog,
15 And this one thought himself a man,
An ordinary man,
And cried and cried No No No No
All day long.

1960

Men at Forty

Men at forty
Learn to close softly
The doors to rooms they will not be Coming back to.

5 At rest on a stair landing,
They feel it moving
Beneath them now like the deck of a ship,
Though the swell is gentle.

And deep in mirrors
10 They rediscover
The face of the boy as he practices tying
His father's tie there in secret,

And the face of that father,
Still warm with the mystery of lather.
15 They are more fathers than sons themselves now.
Something is filling them, something

That is like the twilight sound
Of the crickets, immense,
Filling the woods at the foot of the slope
20 Behind their mortgaged houses.

1967

Nostalgia of the Lakefronts

Cities burn behind us; the lake glitters.
A tall loudspeaker is announcing prizes;
Another, by the lake, the times of cruises.
Childhood, once vast with terrors and surprises,
5 Is fading to a landscape deep with distance—
And always the sad piano in the distance,

Faintly in the distance, a ghostly tinkling
(O indecipherable blurred harmonies)
Or some far horn repeating over water
10 Its high lost note, cut loose from all harmonies.
At such times, wakeful, a child will dream the world,
And this is the world we run to from the world.

Or the two worlds come together and are one
On dark, sweet afternoons of storm and of rain,
15 And stereopticons° brought out and dusted, slide projectors
Stacks of old Geographics,[2] or, through the rain,
A mad wet dash to the local movie palace
And the shriek, perhaps, of Kane's[3] white cockatoo.
(Would this have been summer, 1942?)

20 By June the city always seems neurotic.
But lakes are good all summer for reflection,
And ours is famed among painters for its blues,
Yet not entirely sad, upon reflection.
Why sad at all? Is their wish so unique—
25 To anthropomorphize the inanimate
With a love that masquerades as pure technique?

O art and the child were innocent together!
But landscapes grow abstract, like aging parents.
Soon now the war will shutter the grand hotels,
30 And we, when we come back, will come as parents.
There are no lanterns now strung between pines—
Only, like history, the stark bare northern pines.

And after a time the lakefront disappears
Into the stubborn verses of its exiles
35 Or a few gifted sketches of old piers.
It rains perhaps on the other side of the heart;
Then we remember, whether we would or no.
—Nostalgia comes with the smell of rain, you know.

1987

2. Issues of National Geographic.
3. Charles Foster Kane, the fictional newspaper magnate in Orson Welles's 1941 film, Citizen Kane.

Pantoum[4] of the Great Depression

Our lives avoided tragedy
Simply by going on and on,
Without end and with little apparent meaning.
Oh, there were storms and small catastrophes.

5 Simply by going on and on
We managed. No need for the heroic.
Oh, there were storms and small catastrophes.
I don't remember all the particulars.

We managed. No need for the heroic.
10 There were the usual celebrations, the usual sorrows.
I don't remember all the particulars.
Across the fence, the neighbors were our chorus.

There were the usual celebrations, the usual sorrows
Thank god no one said anything in verse.
15 The neighbors were our only chorus,
And if we suffered we kept quiet about it.

At no time did anyone say anything in verse.
It was the ordinary pities and fears consumed us,
pnpAnd if we suffered we kept quiet about it.
20 No audience would ever know our story.

It was the ordinary pities and fears consumed us.
We gathered on porches; the moon rose; we were poor.
What audience would ever know our story?
Beyond our windows shone the actual world.

25 We gathered on porches; the moon rose; we were poor.
And time went by, drawn by slow horses.
Somewhere beyond our windows shone the world.
The Great Depression had entered our souls like fog.

And time went by, drawn by slow horses.
30 We did not ourselves know what the end was.
The Great Depression had entered our souls like fog.
We had our flaws, perhaps a few private virtues.

But we did not ourselves know what the end was.
People like us simply go on.
35 We have our flaws, perhaps a few private virtues,
But it is by blind chance only that we escape tragedy.

And there is no plot in that; it is devoid of poetry.

1995

4. Verse form in which alternating lines repeat in the following stanza (see "Versification," p. 2046).

CAROLYN KIZER
b. 1925

The Erotic Philosophers

Part Five of "Pro Femina"[1]

It's a spring morning; sun pours in the window
As I sit here drinking coffee, reading Augustine.[2]
And finding him, as always, newly minted
From when I first encountered him in school.
5 Today I'm overcome with astonishment
At the way we girls denied all that was mean
In those revered philosophers we studied;
Who found us loathsome, loathsomely seductive;
Irrelevant, at best, to noble discourse
10 Among the sex, the only sex that counted.
Wounded, we pretended not to mind it
And wore tight sweaters to tease our shy professor.

We sat in autumn sunshine "as the clouds arose
From slimy desires of the flesh, and from 15 Youth's seething spring." Thank you, Augustine.
Attempting to seem blasé, our cheeks on fire,
It didn't occur to us to rush from the room.
Instead we brushed aside "the briars of unclean desire"
And struggled on through mires of misogyny
20 Till we arrived at Kierkegaard,[3] and began to see
That though Saint A. and Søren had much in common
Including fear and trembling before women,
The Saint scared himself, while Søren was scared of us.
Had we, poor girls, been flattered by their thralldom?

25 Yes, it was always us, the rejected feminine
From whom temptation came. It was our flesh
With its deadly sweetness that led them on.
Yet how could we not treasure Augustine,
"Stuck fast in the bird-lime of pleasure"?
30 That roomful of adolescent poets manqué° unsuccessful
Assuaged, bemused by music, let the meaning go.
Swept by those psalmic cadences, we were seduced!
Some of us tried for a while to be well-trained souls
And pious seekers, enmeshed in the Saint's dialectic:
35 Responsible for our actions, yet utterly helpless.
A sensible girl would have barked like a dog before God.

1. A five-part poem, dealing variously with the lives of women, written over several decades.
2. St. Augustine (354–430), author of works such as the Confessions.
3. Søren Kierkegaard (1813–1855), Danish philosopher. His works include Fear and Trembling and Either/Or (both 1843), in the latter of which he sets out two ways of life, the ethical and the aesthetic. In the aesthetic, the lowest and most purely sensory figure is the legendary libertine Don Juan, also known as Don Giovanni in the opera by the Austrian composer Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart (1756–1791) discussed later in Kizer's poem.

We students, children still, were shocked to learn
The children these men desired were younger than we!
Augustine fancied a girl about eleven,
40 The age of Adeodatus, Augustine's son.
Søren, like Poe,[4] eyed his girl before she was sixteen,
To impose his will on a malleable child, when
She was not equipped to withstand or understand him.
Ah, the Pygmalion[5] instinct! Mold the clay!
45 Create the compliant doll that can only obey,
Expecting to be abandoned, minute by minute.
It was then I abandoned philosophy,
A minor loss, although I majored in it.

But we were a group of sunny innocents.
50 I don't believe we knew what evil meant.
Now I live with a well-trained soul who deals with evil,
Including error, material or spiritual,
Easily, like changing a lock on the kitchen door.
He prays at set times and in chosen places
55 (At meals, in church), while I
Pray without thinking how or when to pray,
In a low mumble, several times a day,
Like running a continuous low fever;
The sexual impulse for the most part being over.
60 Believing I believe. Not banking on it ever.

It's afternoon. I sit here drinking kir° cocktail
And reading Kierkegaard: "All sin begins with fear."
(True. We lie first from terror of our parents.)
In, I believe, an oblique crack at Augustine,
65 Søren said by denying the erotic
It was brought to the attention of the world.
The rainbow curtain rises on the sensual:
Christians must admit it before they can deny it.
He reflected on his father's fierce repression
70 Of the sexual, which had bent him out of shape;
Yet he had to pay obeisance to that power:
He chose his father when he broke with his Regina.[6]

Søren said by denying the erotic
It is brought to the attention of the world.
75 You must admit it before you can deny it.
So much for "Repetition"—another theory[7]
Which some assume evolved from his belief
He could replay his courtship of Regina
With a happy ending. Meanwhile she'd wait for him,

4. Edgar Allan Poe (1809–1849; see pp. 975–81), American writer.
5. In Greek mythology, a sculptor who fell in love with his own creation, the beautiful Galatea.
6. Regine Olsen (1822–1904), to whom Kierkegaard became engaged in 1840, though he later decided that he could "become happier in my unhappiness without her than with her." Kierkegaard's obsession with sacrificing Regine is in the background of Fear and Trembling, which discusses the faith of Abraham in offering to sacrifice his son Isaac to God.
7. The theory appears in Kierkegaard's book Repetition (1843).

80 Eternally faithful, eternally seventeen.
Instead, within two years, the bitch got married.
In truth, he couldn't wait till he got rid of her,
To create from recollection, not from living;
To use the material, not the material girl.

85 I sip my kir, thinking of Either / Or,
Especially Either, starring poor Elvira.[8]
He must have seen Giovanni a score of times,
And Søren knew the score.
He took Regina to the opera only once,
90 And as soon as Mozart's overture was over,
Kierkegaard stood up and said, "Now we are leaving.
You have heard the best: the expectation of pleasure."
In his interminable aria on the subject
S.K. insisted the performance was the play.
95 Was the overture then the foreplay? Poor Regina
Should have known she'd be left waiting in the lurch.

Though he chose a disguise in which to rhapsodize,
It was his voice too: Elvira's beauty
Would perish soon; the deflowered quickly fade:
100 A night-blooming cereus° after Juan's one-night stand. cactus
Søren, eyes clouded by romantic mist,
Portrayed Elvira always sweet sixteen.
S.K.'s interpretation seems naive.
He didn't seem to realize that innocent sopranos
105 Who are ready to sing Elvira, don't exist.
His diva may have had it off with Leporello[9]
Just before curtain time, believing it freed her voice
(So backstage legend has it), and weakened his.

I saw La Stupenda[1] sing Elvira once.
110 Her cloak was larger than an army tent.
Would Giovanni be engulfed when she inhaled?
Would the boards shiver when she stamped her foot?
Her voice of course was great. Innocent it was not.
Søren, long since, would have fallen in a faint.
115 When he, or his doppelgänger,° wrote double
That best-seller, "The Diary of a Seducer,"[2]
He showed how little he knew of true Don Juans:
Those turgid letters, machinations, and excursions,
Those tedious conversations with dull aunts,
120 Those convoluted efforts to get the girl!

Think of the worldly European readers
Who took Søren seriously, did not see
His was the cynicism of the timid virgin.

8. Donna Elvira in Don Giovanni, one of the women the dissolute seducer has betrayed.
9. Don Giovanni's servant.
1. The stupendous one (Italian); nickname for the Australian soprano Joan Sutherland (b. 1926).
2. A famous section of Either/Or, it presents one man's romantic exploits as "an attempt to realize the task of living poetically."

Once in my youth I knew a real Don Juan 125 Or he knew me. He didn't need to try,
The characteristic of a true seducer.
He seems vulnerable, shy; he hardly speaks.
Somehow, you know he will never speak of you.
You trust him—and you thrust yourself at him.
130 He responds with an almost absentminded grace.
Even before the consummation he's looking past you
For the next bright yearning pretty face.

Relieved at last of anxieties and tensions
When your terrible efforts to capture him are over,
135 You overflow with happy/unhappy languor.
But S.K.'s alter-ego believes the truly terrible
Is for you to be consoled by the love of another.
We women, deserted to a woman, have a duty
To rapidly lose our looks, decline, and die,
140 Our only chance of achieving romantic beauty.
So Augustine was sure, when Monica, his mother,[3]
Made him put aside his nameless concubine
She'd get her to a nunnery, and pine.[4]
He chose his mother when he broke with his beloved.

145 In Søren's long replay of his wrecked romance,
"Guilty/Not Guilty,"[5] he says he must tear himself away
From earthly love, and suffer to love God.
Augustine thought better: love, human therefore flawed,
Is the way to the love of God. To deny this truth
150 Is to be "left outside, breathing into the dust, Filling the eyes with earth." We women,
Outside, breathing dust, are still the Other.
The evening sun goes down; time to fix dinner.
"You women have no major philosophers." We know.
155 But we remain philosophic, and say with the Saint,
"Let me enter my chamber and sing my songs of love."

2001

KENNETH KOCH
1925–2002

Permanently

One day the Nouns were clustered in the street.
An Adjective walked by, with her dark beauty.

3. St. Monica (322–387), credited with helping convert her son from a wayward life.
4. Allusion to Hamlet 3.1.122, in which Hamlet rejects Ophelia: "Get thee to a nunnery."
5. A section of his book Stages on Life's Way (1845).

The Nouns were struck, moved, changed.
The next day a Verb drove up, and created the Sentence.

5 Each Sentence says one thing—for example. "Although it was a dark rainy day when the Adjective walked by, I shall remember the pure and sweet expression on her face until the day I perish from the green, effective earth."
Or, "Will you please close the window, Andrew?"
Or, for example, "Thank you, the pink pot of flowers on the window sill has changed color recently to a light yellow, due to the heat from the boiler factory which exists nearby."

In the springtime the Sentences and the Nouns lay silently on the grass.
A lonely Conjunction here and there would call, "And! But!"
10 But the Adjective did not emerge.

As the adjective is lost in the sentence,
So I am lost in your eyes, ears, nose, and throat—
You have enchanted me with a single kiss
Which can never be undone
15 Until the destruction of language.

1962

You Were Wearing

You were wearing your Edgar Allan Poe printed cotton blouse.
In each divided up square of the blouse was a picture of Edgar Allan Poe.
Your hair was blonde and you were cute. You asked me, "Do most boys think that most girls are bad?"
I smelled the mould of your seaside resort hotel bedroom on your hair held in place by a John Greenleaf Whittier clip.
5 "No," I said, "it's girls who think that boys are bad." Then we read Snowbound together.
And ran around in an attic, so that a little of the blue enamel was scraped off my George Washington, Father of His Country, shoes.

Mother was walking in the living room, her Strauss Waltzes comb in her hair.
We waited for a time and then joined her, only to be served tea in cups painted with pictures of Herman Melville
As well as with illustrations from his book Moby Dick and from his novella, Benito Cereno.
10 Father came in wearing his Dick Tracy necktie: "How about a drink, everyone?"
I said, "Let's go outside a while." Then we went onto the porch and sat on the Abraham Lincoln swing.

You sat on the eyes, mouth, and beard part, and I sat on the knees.
In the yard across the street we saw a snowman holding a garbage can lid smashed into a likeness of the mad English king, George the Third.

1962

Variations on a Theme by William Carlos Williams[1]

1

I chopped down the house that you had been saving to live in next summer.
I am sorry, but it was morning, and I had nothing to do and its wooden beams were so inviting.

2

We laughed at the hollyhocks together
5 and then I sprayed them with lye.
Forgive me. I simply do not know what I am doing.

3

I gave away the money that you had been saving to live on for the next ten years.
The man who asked for it was shabby and the firm March wind on the porch was so juicy and cold.

4

10 Last evening we went dancing and I broke your leg.
Forgive me. I was clumsy, and
I wanted you here in the wards, where I am the doctor!

1962

Energy in Sweden

Those were the days
When there was so much energy in and around me
I could take it off and put it back on, like clothes
That one has bought only for a ski trip
5 But then finds that one is using every day
Because every day is like a ski trip—
I think that's how I was at twenty-three.

Seeing those six young women in a boat I was on a ski trip.
They said, We are all from Minneapolis. This was in Stockholm.

1. American poet (1883–1963; see pp. 1272–83) and physician (see line 12). This poem parodies Williams's "This Is Just to Say" (p. 1274).

10 The melding of American and Swedish-American female looks was a ski trip
Although I had no particular reason at that time to put all my energy on
Yet there it was, I had it, the way a giant has the hegemony of his nerves
In case he needs it, or the way a fisherman has all his poles and lines and lures, and a scholar all his books
The way a water heater has all its gas
15 Whether it is being used or not, I had all that energy.
Really, are you all from Minneapolis? I said, almost bursting with force.
And yes, one of them, about the second prettiest, replied. We are here for several days.

I thought about this moment from time to time
For eight or ten years. It seemed to me I should have done something at the time, 20 To have used all that energy. Lovemaking is one way to use it and writing is another.
Both maybe are overestimated, because the relation is so clear.
But that is probably human destiny and I'm not going to go against it here.
Sometimes there are the persons and not the energy, sometimes the energy and not the persons.
When the gods give both, a man shouldn't complain.

1994

To My Twenties

How lucky that I ran into you
When everything was possible
For my legs and arms, and with hope in my heart
And so happy to see any woman—
5 O woman! O my twentieth year!
Basking in you, you
Oasis from both growing and decay
Fantastic unheard of nine- or ten-year oasis
A palm tree, hey! And then another
10 And another—and water!
I'm still very impressed by you. Whither,
Midst falling decades, have you gone? Oh in what lucky fellow,
Unsure of himself, upset, and unemployable
For the moment in any case, do you live now?
15 From my window I drop a nickel
By mistake. With
You I race down to get it
But I find there on
The street instead, a good friend,

20 X—— N——, who says to me
Kenneth do you have a minute?
And I say yes! I am in my twenties!
I have plenty of time! In you I marry,
In you I first go to France; I make my best friends
25 In you, and a few enemies. I
Write a lot and am living all the time
And thinking about living. I loved to frequent you
After my teens and before my thirties.
You three together in a bar
30 I always preferred you because you were midmost
Most lustrous apparently strongest
Although now that I look back on you
What part have you played?
You never, ever, were stingy.
35 What you gave me you gave whole
But as for telling
Me how best to use it
You weren't a genius at that.
Twenties, my soul
40 Is yours for the asking
You know that, if you ever come back.

2000

A. R. AMMONS
1926–2001

Corsons Inlet[1]

I went for a walk over the dunes again this morning
to the sea,
then turned right along the surf
5   rounded a naked headland and returned

  along the inlet shore:

it was muggy sunny, the wind from the sea steady and high,
crisp in the running sand,
10   some breakthroughs of sun
  but after a bit
continuous overcast:

the walk liberating, I was released from forms,
from the perpendiculars,

1. Located on the southern New Jersey shore.

15 straight lines, blocks, boxes, binds of thought into the hues, shadings, rises, flowing bends and blends
of sight:

I allow myself eddies of meaning:
20 yield to a direction of significance running
like a stream through the geography of my work:
you can find in my sayings
25 swerves of action
like the inlet's cutting edge:
there are dunes of motion,
organizations of grass, white sandy paths of remembrance
in the overall wandering of mirroring mind:

30 but Overall is beyond me: is the sum of these events
I cannot draw, the ledger I cannot keep, the accounting beyond the account:

in nature there are few sharp lines: there are areas of primrose
35 more or less dispersed;
disorderly orders of bayberry; between the rows
of dunes,
irregular swamps of reeds,
though not reeds alone, but grass, bayberry, yarrow, all . . .
40 predominantly reeds:

I have reached no conclusions, have erected no boundaries, shutting out and shutting in, separating inside from outside: I have drawn no lines:
45 as

manifold events of sand change the dune's shape that will not be the same shape
tomorrow,

so I am willing to go along, to accept 50 the becoming thought, to stake off no beginnings or ends, establish no walls:

by transitions the land falls from grassy dunes to creek to undercreek: but there are no lines, though 55 change in that transition is clear as any sharpness: but "sharpness" spread out, allowed to occur over a wider range than mental lines can keep:

the moon was full last night: today, low tide was low:
60 black shoals of mussels exposed to the risk of air
and, earlier, of sun,
waved in and out with the waterline, waterline inexact,
caught always in the event of change:
65 a young mottled gull stood free on the shoals and ate
to vomiting: another gull, squawking possession, cracked a crab, picked out the entrails, swallowed the soft-shelled legs, a ruddy turnstone° running in to snatch leftover bits: a shorebird

70 risk is full: every living thing in siege: the demand is life, to keep life: the small white blacklegged egret, how beautiful, quietly stalks and spears
the shallows, darts to shore to stab—what? I couldn't 75 see against the black mudflats—a frightened fiddler crab?

the news to my left over the dunes and reeds and bayberry clumps was fall: thousands of tree swallows 80 gathering for flight:
an order held
in constant change: a congregation rich with entropy: nevertheless, separable, noticeable
as one event,
85 not chaos: preparations for flight from winter,
cheet, cheet, cheet, cheet, wings rifling the green clumps, beaks
at the bayberries
90 a perception full of wind, flight, curve, sound:
the possibility of rule as the sum of rulelessness:
the "field" of action
with moving, incalculable center:

95 in the smaller view, order tight with shape:
blue tiny flowers on a leafless weed: carapace of crab:
snail shell:
pulsations of order
in the bellies of minnows: orders swallowed, 100 broken down, transferred through membranes to strengthen larger orders: but in the large view, no lines or changeless shapes: the working in and out, together and against, of millions of events: this, so that I make 105 no form
formlessness:

orders as summaries, as outcomes of actions override or in some way result, not predictably (seeing me gain
the top of a dune,
110 the swallows could take flight—some other fields of bayberry could enter fall
berryless) and there is serenity:

no arranged terror: no forcing of image, plan, 115 or thought:
no propaganda, no humbling of reality to precept:

terror pervades but is not arranged, all possibilities of escape open: no route shut, except in the sudden loss of all routes:

120 I see narrow orders, limited tightness, but will not run to that easy victory:
still around the looser, wider forces work:
I will try to fasten into order enlarging grasps of disorder, widening 125 scope, but enjoying the freedom that
Scope eludes my grasp, that there is no finality of vision, that I have perceived nothing completely,
that tomorrow a new walk is a new walk.

1965

The City Limits

When you consider the radiance, that it does not withhold itself but pours its abundance without selection into every nook and cranny not overhung or hidden; when you consider that birds' bones make no awful noise against the light but 5 lie low in the light as in a high testimony; when you consider the radiance, that it will look into the guiltiest

swervings of the weaving heart and bear itself upon them, not flinching into disguise or darkening; when you consider the abundance of such resource as illuminates the glow-blue

10 bodies and gold-skeined wings of flies swarming the dumped guts of a natural slaughter or the coil of shit and in no way winces from its storms of generosity; when you consider that air or vacuum, snow or shale, squid or wolf, rose or lichen, each is accepted into as much light as it will take, then 15 the heart moves roomier, the man stands and looks about, the leaf does not increase itself above the grass, and the dark work of the deepest cells is of a tune with May bushes and fear lit by the breadth of such calmly turns to praise.

1971

The Arc Inside and Out

For Harold Bloom

If, whittler and dumper, gross carver into the shadiest curvings, I took branch and meat from the stalk of life, threw away the monies of the treasured, 5 treasurable mind, cleaved memory free of the instant, if I got right down

shucking off periphery after periphery to the glassy vague gray parabolas and swoops of unnailable perception,

10 would I begin to improve the purity, would I essentialize out the distilled form, the glitter-stone that whether the world comes or goes clicks gleams and chinks of truth self-making, never 15 to be shuttered, the face-brilliant core stone: or if I, amasser, heap shoveler, depth pumper, took in all springs and oceans, paramoecia and moons, massive buttes and summit slants, rooted trunks 20 and leafages, anthologies of wise words, schemata, all grasses (including the tidal Spartinas,[2] marginal, salty broadsweeps) would I finally come on a suasion, large, fully-informed, restful

25 scape, turning back in on itself, its periphery enclosing our system with its bright dot and allowing in nonparlant quantities at the edge void, void, and void, would I then feel plenitude

30 brought to center and extent, a sweet

2. Genus of various swamp grasses.

easing away of all edge, evil, and surprise:
these two ways to dream! dreaming them's
the bumfuzzlement—the impoverished

diamond, the heterogeneous abundance
35 starved into oneness: ultimately, either way, which is our peace, the little arc-line appears, inside which is nothing, outside which is nothing—however big,

nothing beyond: however small, nothing

40 within: neither way to go's to stay, stay here, the apple an apple with its own hue or streak, the drink of water, the drink,

the falling into sleep, restfully ever the falling into sleep, dream, dream, and 45 every morning the sun comes, the sun.

1972

Pet Panther

My attention is a wild animal: it will if idle make trouble where there was no harm: it will

5 sniff and scratch at the breath's sills:
it will wind itself tight around the pulse or, undistracted by 10 verbal toys, pommel the heart frantic: it will pounce on a stalled riddle

and wrestle the mind numb:
attention, fierce animal 15 I cry, as it coughs in my face, dislodges boulders

in my belly, lie down, be still, have mercy, here is song, coils of song, play
20 it out, run with it.

1983

All's All

A construed entity too
lessened to syllabify;
a mite or more dimpling
5 domy° generalization; domelike
a vague locus
(the flow of air through prisons)

a puff of 10 the whiff of a snail falling asleep;
stringy recollections of fruitflies cruising rosy bowlsful of 15 mangoes ripening mild:

ghostly leavings leaving ghosts leave: retinal worms empurpling light scars
20 behind today's views:
bits of

retrenched nothings:
so much so,
little and all 25 alternately disappear:
the tiniest kiss
at the world's end
ends the world.

1996

JAMES K. BAXTER
1926–1972

Wild Bees

Often in summer, on a tarred bridge plank standing,
Or downstream between willows, a safe Ophelia drifting[1]
In a rented boat—I had seen them come and go,
Those wild bees swift as tigers, their gauze wings a-glitter

1. Ophelia, the young heroine of Shakespeare's Hamlet, goes mad, then drowns while drifting down a river (Hamlet 4.7.137–55).

5 In passionless industry, clustering black at the crevice
Of a rotten cabbage tree, where their hive was hidden low.

But never strolled too near. Till one half-cloudy evening
Of ripe January, my friends and I
Came, gloved and masked to the eyes like plundering desperadoes,
10 To smoke them out. Quiet beside the stagnant river
We trod wet grasses down, hearing the crickets chitter
And waiting for light to drain from the wounded sky.

Before we reached the hive their sentries saw us
And sprang invisible through the darkening air,
15 Stabbed, and died in stinging. The hive woke. Poisonous fuming
Of sulphur filled the hollow trunk, and crawling
Blue flame sputtered—yet still their suicidal
Live raiders dived and clung to our hands and hair.

O it was Carthage under the Roman torches,
20 Or loud with flames and falling timber, Troy![2]
A job well botched. Half of the honey melted
And half the rest young grubs. Through earth-black smoldering ashes
And maimed bees groaning, we drew out our plunder.
Little enough their gold, and slight our joy.

25 Fallen then the city of instinctive wisdom.
Tragedy is written distinct and small:
A hive burned on a cool night in summer.
But loss is a precious stone to me, a nectar
Distilled in time, preaching the truth of winter
30 To the fallen heart that does not cease to fall.

1953

East Coast Journey

About twilight we came to the whitewashed pub
On a knuckle of land above the bay

Where a log was riding and the slow
Bird-winged breakers cast up spray.

5 One of the drinkers round packing cases had
The worn face of a kumara[3] god,

2. References to the destruction by fire of two great cities of classical times—Carthage by the Romans in 146 B.C.E. and Troy by the Greeks at the end of the Trojan War.
3. Sweet potato (Maori); a staple food of the Maori, the Polynesian natives of New Zealand.

Or so it struck me. Later on Lying awake in the veranda bedroom

In great dryness of mind I heard the voice of the sea
10 Reverberating, and thought: As a man

Grows older he does not want beer, bread, or the prancing flesh,
But the arms of the eater of life, Hine-nui-te-po,[4]

With teeth of obsidian and hair like kelp
Flashing and glimmering at the edge of the horizon.

1966

New Zealand

(For Monte Holcroft)

These unshaped islands, on the sawyer's[5] bench,
Wait for the chisel of the mind,
Green canyons to the south, immense and passive,
Penetrated rarely, seeded only
5 By the deer-culler's[6] shot, or else in the north
Tribes of the shark and the octopus,
Mangroves, black hair on a boxer's hand.

The founding fathers with their guns and bibles,
Botanist, whaler, added bones and names
10 To the land, to us a bridle
As if the id were a horse: the swampy towns
Like dreamers that struggle to wake,

Longing for the poet's truth
And the lover's pride. Something new and old 15 Explores its own pain, hearing
The rain's choir on curtains of gray moss
Or fingers of the Tasman[7] pressing
On breasts of hardening sand, as actors
Find their own solitude in mirrors,

20 As one who has buried his dead,
Able at last to give with an open hand.

1969

4. Maori goddess of death.
5. One who saws.
6. A kind of game warden, an agent of the government who controls the herds of deer.
7. The Tasman Sea, to the west of New Zealand.

ROBERT BLY
b. 1926

Waking from Sleep

Inside the veins there are navies setting forth,
Tiny explosions at the water lines,
And seagulls weaving in the wind of the salty blood.

It is the morning. The country has slept the whole winter.
5 Window seats were covered with fur skins, the yard was full
Of stiff dogs, and hands that clumsily held heavy books.

Now we wake, and rise from bed, and eat breakfast!—
Shouts rise from the harbor of the blood,
Mist, and masts rising, the knock of wooden tackle in the sunlight.

10 Now we sing, and do tiny dances on the kitchen floor.
Our whole body is like a harbor at dawn;
We know that our master has left us for the day.

1962

Johnson's Cabinet[1] Watched by Ants

1

It is a clearing deep in a forest: overhanging boughs
Make a low place. Here the citizens we know during the day,
The ministers, the department heads,
Appear changed: the stockholders of large steel companies
5 In small wooden shoes: here are the generals dressed as gamboling lambs.

2

Tonight they burn the rice-supplies; tomorrow
They lecture on Thoreau;[2] tonight they move around the trees,
Tomorrow they pick the twigs from their clothes;
Tonight they throw the fire-bombs, tomorrow 10 They read the Declaration of Independence; tomorrow they are in church.

3

Ants are gathered around an old tree.
In a choir they sing, in harsh and gravelly voices,
Old Etruscan[3] songs on tyranny.

1. Advisors of U.S. President Lyndon B. Johnson (1908–1973), whose term was dominated by the Vietnam War and by protests against it.
2. Henry David Thoreau (1817–1862; see pp. 1045–46), American Transcendentalist philosopher, essayist, and poet.
3. An early Italian people and culture, originating in Etruria; one of its city-states became Rome.

Toads nearby clap their small hands, and join
15 The fiery songs, their five long toes trembling in the soaked earth.

1967

ROBERT CREELEY
b. 1926

Heroes

In all those stories the hero is beyond himself into the next thing, be it those labors of Hercules, or Aeneas[1] going into death.

5 I thought the instant of the one humanness in Virgil's plan of it was that it was of course human enough to die, yet to come back, as he said, hoc opus, hic labor est.[2]

That was the Cumaean Sibyl speaking.
10 This is Robert Creeley, and Virgil is dead now two thousand years, yet Hercules and the Aeneid, yet all that industrious wisdom lives in the way the mountains and the desert are waiting 15 for the heroes, and death also can still propose the old labors.

1959

I Know a Man

As I sd to my friend, because I am always talking,—John, I sd, which was not his 5 name, the darkness surrounds us, what

1. Trojan hero whose adventures and travails are recorded in Virgil's epic poem, the Aeneid. Hercules: legendary Greek hero of superhuman strength, best-known for his twelve labors.
2. Aeneid 6.129. When Aeneas asks the Sibyl, a priestess and prophet, how he might visit his dead father in the underworld, she answers that the descent is easy, but to return—"That is the task, that is the labor."

can we do against it, or else, shall we &
why not, buy a goddamn big car,

10 drive, he sd, for christ's sake, look out where yr going.

1962

The World

I wanted so ably
to reassure you, I wanted
the man you took to be me, to comfort you, and got 5 up, and went to the window, pushed back, as you asked me to,

the curtain, to see the outline of the trees
in the night outside.

10 The light, love,
the light we felt then,
grayly, was it, that came in, on us, not merely my hands or yours,

15 or a wetness so comfortable,

but in the dark then as you slept, the gray
figure came so close

and leaned over,
20 between us, as you slept, restless, and my own face had to see it, and be seen by it,

the man it was, your

25 gray lost tired bewildered brother, unused, untaken—hated by love, and dead,

but not dead, for an instant, saw me, myself
30 the intruder, as he was not.

I tried to say, it is all right, she is happy, you are no longer needed. I said,

35 he is dead, and he went as you shifted and woke, at first afraid, then knew by my own knowing what had happened—

40 and the light then of the sun coming for another morning
in the world.

1969

Bresson's[3] Movies

A movie of Robert
Bresson's showed a yacht,
at evening on the Seine,[4]
all its lights on, watched

5 by two young, seemingly poor people, on a bridge adjacent,
the classic boy and girl
of the story, any one

one cares to tell. So 10 years pass, of course, but I identified with the young,
embittered Frenchman,

knew his almost complacent anguish and the distance
15 he felt from his girl.
Yet another film

of Bresson's has the aging Lancelot[5] with his awkward armor standing
20 in a woods, of small trees,

3. Robert Bresson (1907–1999), French director and screenwriter, known for his austere style.
4. River in northern France. The movie is Quatre Nuits d'Un Rêveur (Four Nights of a Dreamer), 1971.
5. Lancelot du Lac (Lancelot of the Lake), 1974.

dazed, bleeding, both he and his horse are, trying to get back to the castle, itself of no great size. It (25) moved me, that life was after all like that. You are in love. You stand in the woods, with (30)

a horse, bleeding.
The story is true.

1982

ALLEN GINSBERG
1926–1997

From Howl

For Carl Solomon[1]

I

I saw the best minds of my generation destroyed by madness, starving hysterical naked, dragging themselves through the negro streets at dawn looking for an angry fix, angelheaded hipsters burning for the ancient heavenly connection to the starry dynamo in the machinery of night, who poverty and tatters and hollow-eyed and high sat up smoking in the supernatural darkness of cold-water flats floating across the tops of cities contemplating jazz, who bared their brains to Heaven under the El[2] and saw Mohammedan angels staggering on tenement roofs illuminated (5)
who passed through universities with radiant cool eyes hallucinating Arkansas and Blake-light[3] tragedy among the scholars of war, who were expelled from the academies for crazy & publishing obscene odes on the windows of the skull, who cowered in unshaven rooms in underwear, burning their money in wastebaskets and listening to the Terror through the wall, who got busted in their pubic beards returning through Laredo[4] with a belt of marijuana for New York,

1. Ginsberg met Solomon (b. 1928) while both were patients in the Columbia Psychiatric Institute in 1949. Many details in Howl come from the "apocryphal history" that Solomon then told him, while other details refer to experiences of Ginsberg and his fellow Beat writers of the 1950s.

2. Elevated railway in New York City; also, Hebrew for God.

3. In 1948, Ginsberg had a vision/hallucination of the English poet and artist William Blake (1757–1827; see pp. 732–47).

4. City in Texas, on the Mexican border.

10 who ate fire in paint hotels or drank turpentine in Paradise Alley,[5] death, or purgatoried their torsos night after night with dreams, with drugs, with waking nightmares, alcohol and cock and endless balls, incomparable blind streets of shuddering cloud and lightning in the mind leaping toward poles of Canada & Paterson,[6] illuminating all the motionless world of Time between,
Peyote solidities of halls, backyard green tree cemetery dawns, wine drunkenness over the rooftops, storefront boroughs of teahead joyride neon blinking traffic light, sun and moon and tree vibrations in the roaring winter dusks of Brooklyn, ashcan rantings and kind king light of mind, who chained themselves to subways for the endless ride from Battery to holy Bronx[7] on benzedrine until the noise of wheels and children brought them down shuddering mouth-wracked and battered bleak of brain all drained of brilliance in the drear light of Zoo, 15 who sank all night in submarine light of Bickford's floated out and sat through the stale beer afternoon in desolate Fugazzi's,[8] listening to the crack of doom on the hydrogen jukebox, who talked continuously seventy hours from park to pad to bar to Bellevue[9] to museum to the Brooklyn Bridge, a lost battalion of platonic conversationalists jumping down the stoops off fire escapes off windowsills off Empire State out of the moon, yacketayakking screaming vomiting whispering facts and memories and anecdotes and eyeball kicks and shocks of hospitals and jails and wars, whole intellects disgorged in total recall for seven days and nights with brilliant eyes, meat for the Synagogue cast on the pavement, 20 who vanished into nowhere Zen New Jersey leaving a trail of ambiguous picture postcards of Atlantic City Hall, suffering Eastern sweats and Tangerian bone-grindings and migraines of China under junk-withdrawal in Newark's bleak furnished room, who wandered around and around at midnight in the railroad yard wondering where to go, and went, leaving no broken hearts, who lit cigarettes in boxcars boxcars boxcars racketing through snow toward lonesome farms in grandfather night, who studied Plotinus Poe St. John of the Cross[1] telepathy and bop kaballa[2] because the cosmos instinctively vibrated at their feet in Kansas, 25 who loned it through the streets of Idaho seeking visionary indian angels, who were visionary indian angels,

5. Then a tenement courtyard in New York's Lower East Side; the setting of The Subterraneans, a 1958 novel by the American writer Jack Kerouac (1922–1969).
6. City in New Jersey where Ginsberg was born.
7. The south and north extremes of one set of New York subway lines; the zoo is in the Bronx.
8. A bar near Greenwich Village, then New York's bohemian center. Bickford's: one of a chain of cafeterias open twenty-four hours a day.
9. A public hospital in New York serving as a receiving center for mental patients.
1. Spanish poet and mystic (1542–1591), who wrote The Dark Night of the Soul. Plotinus (205–270), Roman mystic philosopher. Edgar Allan Poe (1809–1894; see pp. 975–81), American poet and author of supernatural tales as well as the cosmological Eureka.
2. A tradition of mystical interpretation of the Hebrew Scriptures. Bop: jazz style especially influential in the 1940s and 1950s.

who thought they were only mad when Baltimore gleamed in supernatural ecstasy, who jumped in limousines with the Chinaman of Oklahoma on the impulse of winter midnight streetlight smalltown rain, who lounged hungry and lonesome through Houston seeking jazz or sex or soup, and followed the brilliant Spaniard to converse about America and Eternity, a hopeless task, and so took ship to Africa, who disappeared into the volcanoes of Mexico leaving behind nothing but the shadow of dungarees and the lava and ash of poetry scattered in fireplace Chicago, 30 who reappeared on the West Coast investigating the F.B.I. in beards and shorts with big pacifist eyes sexy in their dark skin passing out incomprehensible leaflets, who burned cigarette holes in their arms protesting the narcotic tobacco haze of Capitalism, who distributed Supercommunist pamphlets in Union Square weeping and undressing while the sirens of Los Alamos[3] wailed them down, and wailed down Wall,[4] and the Staten Island ferry also wailed, who broke down crying in white gymnasiums naked and trembling before the machinery of other skeletons, who bit detectives in the neck and shrieked with delight in policecars for committing no crime but their own wild cooking pederasty and intoxication, 35 who howled on their knees in the subway and were dragged off the roof waving genitals and manuscripts, who let themselves be fucked in the ass by saintly motorcyclists, and screamed with joy, who blew and were blown by those human seraphim,[5] the sailors, caresses of Atlantic and Caribbean love, who balled in the morning in the evenings in rosegardens and the grass of public parks and cemeteries scattering their semen freely to whomever come who may,
who hiccupped endlessly trying to giggle but wound up with a sob behind a partition in a Turkish Bath when the blonde & naked angel came to pierce them with a sword,[6] 40 who lost their loveboys to the three old shrews of fate[7] the one eyed shrew of the heterosexual dollar the one eyed shrew that winks out of the womb and the one eyed shrew that does nothing but sit on her ass and snip the intellectual golden threads of the craftsman's loom,
who copulated ecstatic and insatiate with a bottle of beer a sweetheart a package of cigarettes a candle and fell off the bed, and continued along the floor and down the hall and ended fainting on the wall with a vision of ultimate cunt and come eluding the last gyzym of consciousness,

3. Laboratory in New Mexico where the development of the atomic bomb was completed. Union Square: site of radical demonstrations in New York in the 1930s.
4. Wall Street, the center of New York's financial district; but also, Jerusalem's Wailing Wall, a place of prayer and lamentation.
5. The highest order of angels.
6. An allusion to The Ecstasy of St. Teresa, a sculpture by Lorenzo Bernini (1598–1680) based on St. Teresa's (1515–1582) distinctly erotic description of a religious vision.
7. In Greek mythology, the three Fates spun, wove, and finally cut the thread of every mortal life.

who sweetened the snatches of a million girls trembling in the sunset, and were red eyed in the morning but prepared to sweeten the snatch of the sunrise, flashing buttocks under barns and naked in the lake, who went out whoring through Colorado in myriad stolen night-cars, N.C.,[8] secret hero of these poems, cocksman and Adonis of Denver—joy to the memory of his innumerable lays of girls in empty lots & diner backyards, moviehouses' rickety rows, on mountaintops in caves or with gaunt waitresses in familiar roadside lonely petticoat upliftings & especially secret gas-station solipsisms of johns, & hometown alleys too, who faded out in vast sordid movies, were shifted in dreams, woke on a sudden Manhattan, and picked themselves up out of basements hungover with heartless Tokay and horrors of Third Avenue[9] iron dreams & stumbled to unemployment offices,

45 who walked all night with their shoes full of blood on the snowbank docks waiting for a door in the East River to open to a room full of steamheat and opium, who created great suicidal dramas on the apartment cliff-banks of the Hudson under the wartime blue floodlight of the moon & their heads shall be crowned with laurel[1] in oblivion, who ate the lamb stew of the imagination or digested the crab at the muddy bottom of the rivers of Bowery,[2] who wept at the romance of the streets with their pushcarts full of onions and bad music, who sat in boxes breathing in the darkness under the bridge, and rose up to build harpsichords in their lofts,

50 who coughed on the sixth floor of Harlem crowned with flame under the tubercular sky surrounded by orange crates of theology, who scribbled all night rocking and rolling over lofty incantations which in the yellow morning were stanzas of gibberish, who cooked rotten animals lung heart feet tail borsht & tortillas dreaming of the pure vegetable kingdom, who plunged themselves under meat trucks looking for an egg, who threw their watches off the roof to cast their ballot for Eternity outside of Time, & alarm clocks fell on their heads every day for the next decade,

55 who cut their wrists three times successively unsuccessfully, gave up and were forced to open antique stores where they thought they were growing old and cried,

who were burned alive in their innocent flannel suits on Madison Avenue[3] amid blasts of leaden verse & the tanked-up clatter of the iron regiments of fashion & the nitroglycerine shrieks of the fairies of advertising & the mustard gas of sinister intelligent editors, or were run down by the drunken taxicabs of Absolute Reality,

8. Neal Cassady (1926–1968), a friend and lover of Ginsberg. Also a friend of Jack Kerouac, he is the hero of Kerouac's novel On the Road (1957).
9. In Manhattan. Tokay: a Hungarian wine.
1. In classical Greece, victors in the Pythian games were crowned with laurel. Hudson: the Hudson River, between Manhattan and New Jersey.
2. Lower end of Third Avenue; traditional haunt of alcoholics and derelicts.
3. The center of New York's advertising industry. Cf. The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit, a best-selling 1955 novel by the American writer Sloan Wilson (b. 1920).

who jumped off the Brooklyn Bridge this actually happened and walked away unknown and forgotten into the ghostly daze of Chinatown soup alleyways & firetrucks, not even one free beer, who sang out of their windows in despair, fell out of the subway window, jumped in the filthy Passaic,[4] leaped on negroes, cried all over the street, danced on broken wineglasses barefoot smashed phonograph records of nostalgic European 1930's German jazz finished the whiskey and threw up groaning into the bloody toilet, moans in their ears and the blast of colossal steamwhistles, who barreled down the highways of the past journeying to each other's hotrod-Golgotha jail-solitude watch or Birmingham[5] jazz incarnation,
60 who drove crosscountry seventytwo hours to find out if I had a vision or you had a vision or he had a vision to find out Eternity, who journeyed to Denver, who died in Denver, who came back to Denver & waited in vain, who watched over Denver & brooded & loned in Denver and finally went away to find out the Time, &
now Denver is lonesome for her heroes, who fell on their knees in hopeless cathedrals praying for each other's salvation and light and breasts, until the soul illuminated its hair for a second,
who crashed through their minds in jail waiting for impossible criminals with golden heads and the charm of reality in their hearts who sang sweet blues to Alcatraz, who retired to Mexico to cultivate a habit, or Rocky Mount to tender Buddha or Tangiers to boys or Southern Pacific to the black locomotive or Harvard to Narcissus to Woodlawn[6] to the daisychain or grave,
65 who demanded sanity trials accusing the radio of hypnotism & were left with their insanity & their hands & a hung jury, who threw potato salad at CCNY lecturers on Dadaism[7] and subsequently presented themselves on the granite steps of the madhouse with shaven heads and harlequin speech of suicide, demanding instantaneous lobotomy,
and who were given instead the concrete void of insulin metrasol electricity hydrotherapy psychotherapy occupational therapy pingpong & amnesia,
who in humorless protest overturned only one symbolic pingpong
table, resting briefly in catatonia, returning years later truly bald except for a wig of blood, and tears and fingers, to the visible madman doom of the wards of the madtowns of the East,
70 Pilgrim State's Rockland's and Greystone's[8] foetid halls, bickering with the echoes of the soul, rocking and rolling in the midnight solitude-bench dolmen-realms[9] of love, dream of life a nightmare, bodies turned to stone as heavy as the moon,

4. The river that flows through Paterson.
5. In Alabama. Golgotha: hill near Jerusalem where Jesus was crucified.
6. Cemetery in the Bronx. Kerouac was then living in Rocky Mount, North Carolina. Ginsberg and the American writer William Burroughs (1914–1997) had lived in Tangiers. Cassady worked as a brakeman for the Southern Pacific Railroad.
7. An artistic movement based on absurdity and accident; it flourished during World War I. CCNY: City College of New York.
8. Three mental hospitals near New York. Carl Solomon was an inmate at Pilgrim State and Rockland, and Ginsberg's mother was institutionalized at Greystone.
9. Dolmens are prehistoric monuments of hori-with mother finally * * * * * *, and the last fantastic book flung out of the tenement window, and the last door closed at 4 AM and the last telephone slammed at the wall in reply and the last furnished room emptied down to the last piece of mental furniture, a yellow paper rose twisted on a wire hanger in the closet, and even that imaginary, nothing but a hopeful little bit of hallucination—ah, Carl, while you are not safe I am not safe, and now you're really in the total animal soup of time—and who therefore ran through the icy streets obsessed with a sudden flash of the alchemy of the use of the ellipse the catalog the meter & the vibrating plane, who dreamt and made incarnate gaps in Time & Space through images juxtaposed, and trapped the archangel of the soul between 2 visual images and joined the elemental verbs and set the noun and dash of consciousness together jumping with sensation of Pater Omnipotens Aeterna Deus[1]

75 to recreate the syntax and measure of poor human prose and stand before you speechless and intelligent and shaking with shame, rejected yet confessing out the soul to conform to the rhythm of thought in his naked and endless head, the madman bum and angel beat in Time, unknown, yet putting down here what might be left to say in time come after death, and rose reincarnate in the ghostly clothes of jazz in the goldhorn shadow of the band and blew the suffering of America's naked mind for love into an eli eli lamma lamma sabacthani[2] saxophone cry that shivered the cities down to the last radio with the absolute heart of the poem of life butchered out of their own bodies good to eat a thousand years.

San Francisco 1955 1956

A Supermarket in California

What thoughts I have of you tonight, Walt Whitman,[3] for I walked down the sidestreets under the trees with a headache self-conscious looking at the full moon.
In my hungry fatigue, and shopping for images, I went into the neon fruit supermarket, dreaming of your enumerations!
What peaches and what penumbras!° Whole families shadows shopping at night! Aisles full of husbands! Wives in the avocados, babies in the tomatoes!—and you, García Lorca,[4] what were you doing down by the watermelons?

zontal stone slabs supported by upright stones, found in Britain and France and believed to be tombs.

1. All-powerful Father, Eternal God (Latin; "Aeterna" is feminine, the nouns are masculine). Paul Cézanne (1839–1906), the French Impressionist painter, used this phrase to describe the effects of nature on him.

2. My God, my God, why have you forsaken me? (Hebrew). These are Jesus' last words from the cross (Matthew 27.46, Mark 15.34, Psalm 22.1).

3. American poet (1819–1892; see pp. 1060–86), of great influence on Ginsberg.

4. Federico García Lorca (1898–1936), Spanish poet and dramatist.

I saw you, Walt Whitman, childless, lonely old grubber, poking among the meats in the refrigerator and eyeing the grocery boys.

5 I heard you asking questions of each: Who killed the pork chops? What price bananas? Are you my Angel?

I wandered in and out of the brilliant stacks of cans following you, and followed in my imagination by the store detective.

We strode down the open corridors together in our solitary fancy tasting artichokes, possessing every frozen delicacy, and never passing the cashier.

Where are we going, Walt Whitman? The doors close in an hour. Which way does your beard point tonight?

(I touch your book and dream of our odyssey in the supermarket and feel absurd.)

10 Will we walk all night through solitary streets? The trees add shade to shade, lights out in the houses, we'll both be lonely.

Will we stroll dreaming of the lost America of love past blue automobiles in driveways, home to our silent cottage?

Ah, dear father, graybeard, lonely old courage-teacher, what America did you have when Charon quit poling his ferry and you got out on a smoking bank and stood watching the boat disappear on the black waters of Lethe?[5]

1956

To Aunt Rose

Aunt Rose—now—might I see you with your thin face and buck tooth smile and pain of rheumatism—and a long black heavy shoe for your bony left leg
5 limping down the long hall in Newark on the running carpet past the black grand piano in the day room where the parties were and I sang Spanish loyalist songs[6]
10 in a high squeaky voice
(hysterical) the committee listening while you limped around the room collected the money—
Aunt Honey, Uncle Sam, a stranger with a cloth arm 15 in his pocket and huge young bald head of Abraham Lincoln Brigade[7]

5. In Greek mythology, a river of Hades, signifying forgetfulness; Charon ferried the dead across it.
6. During the Spanish Civil War (1936–39), Spanish loyalists fought against the Fascists, whose eventual triumph led to the dictatorship of Francisco Franco (1892–1975). Ginsberg's relatives in Newark, New Jersey, were among the many left-wing Americans who supported the loyalists.
7. A group of American volunteers in the Spanish Civil War.

—your long sad face
your tears of sexual frustration 20 (what smothered sobs and bony hips under the pillows of Osborne Terrace)
—the time I stood on the toilet seat naked and you powdered my thighs with Calomine against the poison ivy—my tender 25 and shamed first black curled hairs what were you thinking in secret heart then knowing me a man already—and I an ignorant girl of family silence on the thin pedestal of my legs in the bathroom—Museum of Newark.
30 Aunt Rose
Hitler is dead, Hitler is in Eternity; Hitler is with Tamburlane and Emily Brontë[8]

Though I see you walking still, a ghost on Osborne Terrace down the long dark hall to the front door 35 limping a little with a pinched smile in what must have been a silken flower dress
welcoming my father, the Poet, on his visit to Newark
—see you arriving in the living room
40 dancing on your crippled leg and clapping hands his book had been accepted by Liveright[9]

Hitler is dead and Liveright's gone out of business
The Attic of the Past and Everlasting Minute are out of print
45 Uncle Harry sold his last silk stocking
Claire quit interpretive dancing school
Buba[1] sits a wrinkled monument in Old Ladies Home blinking at new babies

last time I saw you was the hospital
50 pale skull protruding under ashen skin blue veined unconscious girl in an oxygen tent
the war in Spain has ended long ago
Aunt Rose

Paris 1958 1961

8. English poet and novelist (1818–1848), whose novel Wuthering Heights is in part a ghost story. Tamburlane: E. Timur (1336–1405), Turkic conqueror; the bloodthirsty hero of Christopher Marlowe's tragedy Tambulaine the Great (1587).
9. Company (now a subsidiary of W. W. Norton) that published The Everlasting Minute, a 1937 book of poems by Ginsberg's father, Louis, whose first book, The Attic of the Past, was published in 1920.
1. Grandmother (Yiddish).

JAMES MERRILL
1926–1995

The Broken Home[1]

Crossing the street,
I saw the parents and the child
At their window, gleaming like fruit
With evening's mild gold leaf.

In a room on the floor below, 5
Sunless, cooler—a brimming
Saucer of wax, marbly and dim—
I have lit what's left of my life.

I have thrown out yesterday's milk
And opened a book of maxims. 10
The flame quickens. The word stirs.

Tell me, tongue of fire,
That you and I are as real
At least as the people upstairs.

My father, who had flown in World War I, 15
Might have continued to invest his life
In cloud banks well above Wall Street and wife.[2]
But the race was run below, and the point was to win.

Too late now, I make out in his blue gaze
(Through the smoked glass of being thirty-six) 20
The soul eclipsed by twin black pupils, sex
And business; time was money in those days.

Each thirteenth year he married. When he died
There were already several chilled wives
In sable orbit—rings, cars, permanent waves. 25
We'd felt him warming up for a green bride.

He could afford it. He was "in his prime"
At three score ten. But money was not time.

When my parents were younger this was a popular act:
A veiled woman would leap from an electric, wine-dark car 30

1. This poem is composed of sonnets, some "broken" into unconventional proportions and rhyme schemes.
2. Charles Merrill, the poet's father, was a cofounder of the investment firm Merrill Lynch. Wall Street is the hub of the financial industry in New York City.

To the steps of no matter what—the Senate or the Ritz Bar—
And bodily, at newsreel speed, attack

No matter whom—Al Smith or José Maria Sert
Or Clemenceau[3]—veins standing out on her throat
35 As she yelled War mongerer! Pig! Give us the vote!,
And would have to be hauled away in her hobble skirt.[4]

What had the man done? Oh, made history.
Her business (he had implied) was giving birth,
Tending the house, mending the socks.

40 Always that same old story—
Father Time and Mother Earth,[5]
A marriage on the rocks.

One afternoon, red, satyr-thighed[6]
Michael, the Irish setter, head
45 Passionately lowered, led
The child I was to a shut door. Inside,

Blinds beat sun from the bed.
The green-gold room throbbed like a bruise.
Under a sheet, clad in taboos
50 Lay whom we sought, her hair undone, outspread,

And of a blackness found, if ever now, in old
Engravings where the acid bit.
I must have needed to touch it
Or the whiteness—was she dead?
55 Her eyes flew open, startled strange and cold.
The dog slumped to the floor. She reached for me. I fled.

Tonight they have stepped out onto the gravel.
The party is over. It's the fall
Of 1931. They love each other still.

60 She: Charlie, I can't stand the pace.
He: Come on, honey—why, you'll bury us all!

A lead soldier guards my windowsill:
Khaki rifle, uniform, and face.
Something in me grows heavy, silvery, pliable.

3. Georges Clemenceau (1841–1929), premier of France during World War I, visitor to the United States in 1922. Alfred Smith (1873–1944), governor of New York and 1928 candidate for the U.S. presidency. José Maria Sert y Badia (1876–1945), Spanish painter and muralist, who decorated New York's Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in 1930.
4. Long, straight skirt.
5. A reference to the Greek mythological figures Cronus (ruler of the Titans; his name means "Time") and Rhea (his wife; an Earth deity known as Mother of the Gods).
6. In Greek mythology, the satyrs were minor nature deities, their upper halves resembling men, their lower halves resembling goats or horses.

65 How intensely people used to feel!
Like metal poured at the close of a proletarian novel,[7]
Refined and glowing from the crucible,
I see those two hearts, I'm afraid,
Still. Cool here in the graveyard of good and evil,
70 They are even so to be honored and obeyed.

. . . Obeyed, at least, inversely. Thus
I rarely buy a newspaper, or vote.
To do so, I have learned, is to invite
The tread of a stone guest[8] within my house.

75 Shooting this rusted bolt, though, against him,
I trust I am no less time's child than some
Who on the heath impersonate Poor Tom[9]
Or on the barricades risk life and limb.

Nor do I try to keep a garden, only 80 An avocado in a glass of water—
Roots pallid, gemmed with air. And later,
When the small gilt leaves have grown
Fleshy and green, I let them die, yes, yes,
And start another. I am earth's no less.

85 A child, a red dog roam the corridors,
Still, of the broken home. No sound. The brilliant
Rag runners halt before wide-open doors.
My old room! Its wallpaper—cream, medallioned
With pink and brown—brings back the first nightmares,
90 Long summer colds, and Emma, sepia-faced,
Perspiring over broth carried upstairs
Aswim with golden fats I could not taste.

The real house became a boarding school.
Under the ballroom ceiling's allegory
95 Someone at last may actually be allowed
To learn something; or, from my window, cool
With the unstiflement of the entire story,
Watch a red setter stretch and sink in cloud.

1966

7. Type of socialist novel that romanticized workers and sometimes, as here, industry.
8. In the play The Stone Feast, by the French dramatist Jean-Baptiste Molière (1622–1673), a stone statue of the commander of Seville drags his murderer, Don Juan, down to hell. A version of this story appears in the opera Don Giovanni, by the Austrian composer Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart (1756–1791).
9. The nickname that Edgar, the disowned son of Gloucester in Shakespeare's King Lear, gives to himself when he wanders the heath in disguise as a disheveled madman.

The Victor Dog[1]

For Elizabeth Bishop

Bix to Buxtehude to Boulez,
The little white dog on the Victor label
Listens long and hard as he is able.
It's all in a day's work, whatever plays.

5 From judgment, it would seem, he has refrained.
He even listens earnestly to Bloch,
Then builds a church upon our acid rock.[2]
He's man's—no—he's the Leiermann's best friend,[3]

Or would be if hearing and listening were the same.
10 Does he hear? I fancy he rather smells Those lemon-gold arpeggios in Ravel's
"Les jets d'eau du palais de ceux qui s'aiment."[4]

He ponders the Schumann Concerto's tall willow hit
By lightning, and stays put. When he surmises
15 Through one of Bach's eternal boxwood mazes[5]
The oboe pungent as a bitch in heat,

Or when the calypso decants its raw bay rum
Or the moon in Wozzeck[6] reddens ripe for murder,
He doesn't sneeze or howl; just listens harder.
20 Adamant° needles bear down on him from diamond

Whirling of outer space, too black, too near—
But he was taught as a puppy not to flinch,
Much less to imitate his bête noire Blanche
Who barked, fat foolish creature, at King Lear.[7]

25 Still others fought in the road's filth over Jezebel,[8]
Slavered° on hearths of horned and pelted barons. drooled
His forebears lacked, to say the least, forbearance.
Can nature change in him? Nothing's impossible.

1. Long a trademark of RCA, the dog "Nipper"—here, called "Victor" (line 38)—was on the label of RCA Victor records, listening intently to a gramophone, with the caption "His master's voice." In the poem, passing reference is made to the jazz trumpeter Bix Beiderbecke (1903–1931), to the classical composers Dietrich Buxtehude (1637–1707), Johann Sebastian Bach (1685–1750), George Frederick Handel (1685–1759), Franz Schubert (1797–1828), and Robert Schumann (1810–1856), and to the modernists Pierre Boulez (b. 1925), Ernest Bloch (1880–1959), Maurice Ravel (1875–1937), and Alban Berg (1885–1935).
2. Cf. Matthew 16.18: ". . . upon this rock I will build my church . . ."
3. In Schubert's song "Der Leiermann" ("The Organ-Grinder"), an old man cranks his barrel-organ in the winter cold to an audience of snarling dogs.
4. The palace fountains of those who are in love with each other (French).
5. The composer's works are compared to labyrinths executed in living boxwood plants, popular in eighteenth-century formal gardens.
6. An opera by Berg in which the protagonist murders his unfaithful wife beneath a rising moon.
7. In King Lear, the mad king says, "The little dogs and all. / Tray, Blanch, and Sweet-heart, see, they bark at me" (3.6.57–58). Bête noire: a person or thing detested or avoided; in French, its literal meaning is "black beast," whereas blanche means "white."
8. The proverbial wicked woman, she was killed in the street; when the body was recovered for burial, dogs had eaten most of it, as had been prophesied earlier by Elijah (1 Kings 21, 2 Kings 9.30–37).

The last chord fades. The night is cold and fine.
30 His master's voice rasps through the grooves' bare groves.
Obediently, in silence like the grave's
He sleeps there on the still-warm gramophone

Only to dream he is at the première of a Handel
Opera long thought lost—Il Cane Minore.[9]
35 Its allegorical subject is his story!
A little dog revolving round a spindle

Gives rise to harmonies beyond belief,
A cast of stars. . . . Is there in Victor's heart
No honey for the vanquished? Art is art.
40 The life it asks of us is a dog's life.

1972

Lost in Translation

for Richard Howard

Diese Tage, die leer dir scheinen und wertlos für das All,
haben Wurzeln zwischen den Steinen
und trinken dort überall.[1]

A card table in the library stands ready
To receive the puzzle which keeps never coming.
Daylight shines in or lamplight down
Upon the tense oasis of green felt.
5 Full of unfulfillment, life goes on,
Mirage arisen from time's trickling sands
Or fallen piecemeal into place:
German lesson, picnic, see-saw, walk
With the collie who "did everything but talk"—
10 Sour windfalls of the orchard back of us.
A summer without parents is the puzzle,
Or should be. But the boy, day after day,
Writes in his Line-a-Day° No puzzle. diary

He's in love, at least. His French Mademoiselle,
15 In real life a widow since Verdun,[2]
Is stout, plain, carrot-haired, devout.
She prays for him, as does a curé in Alsace,[3]

9. The little dog (Italian).
1. These days which seem empty and entirely fruitless to you have roots between the stones and drink from everywhere (German). From the translation by the Austrian poet Rainer Maria Rilke (1875–1926) of "Palme," by the French poet Paul Valéry (1871–1945). Ironically, the epigraph provides the very translation Merrill claims, within the poem, to be "lost"—or difficult to find. Though the expression lost in translation is in common use, Merrill may have meant to refer also to Robert Frost's definition of poetry as that which is lost in translation. The American poet Richard Howard (b. 1929; see pp. 1778–83) is also well known as a translator.
2. His French-speaking governess, called Mademoiselle, widowed since the battle of Verdun in World War I.
3. Region of France on the border of Germany. Curé: priest (French).

Sews costumes for his marionettes,
Helps him to keep behind the scene
20 Whose sidelit goosegirl, speaking with his voice,
Plays Guinevere as well as Gunmoll Jean.[4]
Or else at bedtime in his tight embrace
Tells him her own French hopes, her German fears,
Her—but what more is there to tell?
25 Having known grief and hardship, Mademoiselle
Knows little more. Her languages. Her place.
Noon coffee. Mail. The watch that also waited Pinned to her heart, poor gold, throws up its hands—
No puzzle! Steaming bitterness
30 Her sugars draw pops back into his mouth, translated:
"Patience, chéri. Geduld, mein Shatz."[5]
(Thus, reading Valéry the other evening
And seeming to recall a Rilke version of "Palme,"
That sunlit paradigm° whereby the tree pattern
35 Taps a sweet wellspring of authority,
The hour came back. Patience dans l'azur.
Geduld im . . . Himmelblau? Mademoiselle.)

Out of the blue, as promised, of a New York Puzzle-rental shop the puzzle comes—
40 A superior one, containing a thousand hand-sawn, Sandal°-scented pieces. Many take sandalwood
Shapes known already—the craftsman's repertoire
Nice in its limitation—from other puzzles:
Witch on broomstick, ostrich, hourglass,
45 Even (surely not just in retrospect)
An inchling, innocently branching palm.
These can be put aside, made stories of
While Mademoiselle spreads out the rest face-up,
Herself excited as a child; or questioned
50 Like incoherent faces in a crowd,
Each with its scrap of highly colored
Evidence the Law must piece together.
Sky-blue ostrich? Likely story.
Mauve of the witch's cloak white, severed fingers
55 Pluck? Detain her. The plot thickens
As all at once two pieces interlock.

Mademoiselle does borders—(Not so fast.
A London dusk, December last.
Chatter silenced in the library
60 This grown man reenters, wearing grey.
A medium. All except him have seen
Panel slid back, recess explored,
An object at once unique and common

4. Term for a gangster's female accomplice. Goosegirl: as in the fairy tale "The Goosegirl"; i.e., an impersonating voice. Guinevere: in English legend, wife of King Arthur.

5. Patience, my dear (French and German). Merrill is reminded, in the lines to follow, of Valéry's "Palme" and Rilke's translation, "Patience in the Blue," which refers to the palm tree's patience in growth. The "blue" of the German "Himmelblau" provides Merrill with his own "Out of the blue."

Displayed, planted in a plain tole° coated-metal
65 Casket the subject now considers Through shut eyes, saying in effect:
"Even as voices reach me vaguely
A dry saw-shriek drowns them out,
Some loud machinery—a lumber mill?
70 Far uphill in the fir forest
Trees tower, tense with shock,
Groaning and cracking as they crash groundward.
But hidden here is a freak fragment
Of a pattern complex in appearance only.
75 What it seems to show is superficial
Next to that long-term lamination
Of hazard and craft, the karma that has Made it matter in the first place.
Plywood, Piece of a puzzle." Applause
80 Acknowledged by an opening of lids
Upon the thing itself. A sudden dread—
But to go back. All this lay years ahead.)

Mademoiselle does borders. Straight-edge pieces
Align themselves with earth or sky
85 In twos and threes, naive cosmogonists[6]
Whose views clash. Nomad inlanders meanwhile
Begin to cluster where the totem
Of a certain vibrant egg-yolk yellow
Or pelt of what emerging animal
90 Acts on the straggler like a trumpet call
To form a more sophisticated unit.
By suppertime two ragged wooden clouds
Have formed. In one, a Sheik with beard
And flashing sword hilt (he is all but finished)
95 Steps forward on a tiger skin. A piece
Snaps shut, and fangs gnash out at us!
In the second cloud—they gaze from cloud to cloud
With marked if undecipherable feeling—
Most of a dark-eyed woman veiled in mauve
100 Is being helped down from her camel (kneeling)
By a small backward-looking slave or page-boy
(Her son, thinks Mademoiselle mistakenly) Whose feet have not been found. But lucky finds
In the last minutes before bed
105 Anchor both factions to the scene's limits
And, by so doing, orient
Them eye to eye across the green abyss.
The yellow promises, oh bliss,
To be in time a sumptuous tent.

110 Puzzle begun I write in the day's space,
Then, while she bathes, peek at Mademoiselle's
Page to the curé: ". . . cette innocente mère,

6. Theorists about the universe's origin.

Ce pauvre enfant, que deviendront-ils?"[7]
Her azure script is curlicued like pieces
115 Of the puzzle she will be telling him about.
(Fearful incuriosity of childhood!
"Tu as l'accent allemand,"[8] said Dominique.
Indeed. Mademoiselle was only French by marriage.
Child of an English mother, a remote
120 Descendant of the great explorer Speke,[9]
And Prussian father. No one knew. I heard it Long afterwards from her nephew, a UN
Interpreter. His matter-of-fact account
Touched old strings. My poor Mademoiselle,
125 With 1939[1] about to shake
This world where "each was the enemy, each the friend"
To its foundations, kept, though signed in blood,
Her peace a shameful secret to the end.)
"Schlaf wohl, chéri."[2] Her kiss. Her thumb
130 Crossing my brow against the dreams to come.

This World that shifts like sand, its unforeseen Consolidations and elate routine,
Whose Potentate had lacked a retinue?
Lo! it assembles on the shrinking Green.

135 Gunmetal-skinned or pale, all plumes and scars,
Of Vassalage the noblest avatars—[3]
The very coffee-bearer in his vair° fur-trimmed
Vest is a swart Highness, next to ours.

Kef[4] easing Boredom, and iced syrups, thirst,
140 In guessed-at glooms old wives who know the worst Outsweat that virile fiction of the New:
"Insh'Allah,[5] he will tire—" "—or kill her first!"

(Hardly a proper subject for the Home,
Work of—dear Richard, I shall let you comb
145 Archives and learned journals for his name—
A minor lion attending on Gérôme.[6])

While, thick as Thebes[7] whose presently complete
Gates close behind them, Houri and Afreet[8]
Both claim the Page.[9] He wonders whom to serve,
150 And what his duties are, and where his feet,

7. This innocent mother, this poor child, what will become of them? (French).
8. You have a German accent (French).
9. John Hanning Speke (1827–1864), English explorer; possible pun on speak.
1. When World War II began.
2. Sleep well, darling (German, French).
3. The noblest incarnations of slavery.
4. Narcotic made from hemp.
5. As Allah wills (Arabic).
6. Jean Léon Gérôme (1824–1940), French painter; also, an allusion to Saint Jerome, who, the legend goes, pulled a thorn from the paw of a lion, which then befriended him.
7. Capital of ancient Upper Egypt; pun on thick as thieves.
8. Evil demon in Arabian mythology. Houri: one of the beautiful virgins who live with the blessed in the Islamic paradise.
9. The servant, with a suggestion too of the printed page.

And if we'll find, as some before us did,
That piece of Distance deep in which lies hid
Your tiny apex sugary with sun,
Eternal Triangle, Great Pyramid!

155 Then Sky alone is left, a hundred blue
Fragments in revolution, with no clue
To where a Niche will open. Quite a task,
Putting together Heaven, yet we do.

It's done. Here under the table all along 160 Were those missing feet. It's done.

The dog's tail thumping. Mademoiselle sketching
Costumes for a coming harem drama
To star the goosegirl. All too soon the swift Dismantling. Lifted by two corners,
165 The puzzle hung together—and did not.
Irresistibly a populace
Unstitched of its attachments, rattled down.
Power went to pieces as the witch
Slithered easily from Virtue's gown.
170 The blue held out for time, but crumbled, too.
The city had long fallen, and the tent,
A separating sauce mousseline,[1]
Been swept away. Remained the green
On which the grown-ups gambled. A green dusk.
175 First lightning bugs. Last glow of west
Green in the false eyes of (coincidence)
Our mangy tiger safe on his bared hearth.

Before the puzzle was boxed and readdressed
To the puzzle shop in the mid-Sixties,[2]
180 Something tells me that one piece contrived
To stay in the boy's pocket. How do I know?
I know because so many later puzzles
Had missing pieces—Maggie Teyte's[3] high notes
Gone at the war's end, end of the vogue for collies,
185 A house torn down; and hadn't Mademoiselle
Kept back her pitiful bit of truth as well?
I've spent the last days, furthermore,
Ransacking Athens for that translation of "Palme."
Neither the Goethehaus[4] nor the National Library
190 Seems able to unearth it. Yet I can't Just be imagining. I've seen it. Know
How much of the sun-ripe original
Felicity Rilke made himself forego
(Who loved French words—verger, mûr, parfumer[5])
195 In order to render its underlying sense.
Know already in that tongue of his

1. A white, creamy sauce.
2. The streets numbered in the mid-Sixties in Manhattan.
3. English soprano (1888–1976), known for her repertoire in French.
4. A German library.
5. Orchard, ripe, to scent (French).

What Pains, what monolithic Truths
Shadow stanza to stanza's symmetrical
Rhyme-rutted pavement. Know that ground plan left 200 Sublime and barren, where the warm Romance
Stone by stone faded, cooled; the fluted nouns
Made taller, lonelier than life
By leaf-carved capitals in the afterglow.
The owlet umlaut[6] peeps and hoots
205 Above the open vowel. And after rain
A deep reverberation fills with stars.

Lost, is it, buried? One more missing piece?

But nothing's lost. Or else: all is translation
And every bit of us is lost in it
210 (Or found—I wander through the ruin of S[7]
Now and then, wondering at the peacefulness)
And in that loss a self-effacing tree,
Color of context, imperceptibly
Rustling with its angel,[8] turns the waste
215 To shade and fiber, milk and memory.

1976

From The Book of Ephraim[9]

Correct but cautious, that first night, we asked
Our visitor's name, era, habitat.
EPHRAIM came the answer. A Greek Jew
Born AD 8 at XANTHOS Where was that?
5 In Greece WHEN WOLVES & RAVENS WERE IN ROME
(Next day the classical dictionary yielded
A Xanthos on the Asia Minor Coast.)
NOW WHO ARE U We told him. ARE U XTIANS
We guessed so. WHAT A COZY CATACOMB
10 Christ had WROUGHT HAVOC in his family,
ENTICED MY FATHER FROM MY MOTHERS BED
(I too had issued from a broken home[1]—
The first of several facts to coincide.)
Later a favorite of TIBERIUS[2] Died

6. German accent mark (¨), the two high dots of which resemble an owl's eyes.
7. Initial of a former lover.
8. Pun on wrestling with its angel. Jacob wrestled with an angel, saying, "I will not let thee go, except thou bless me" (Genesis 32.26).
9. The first part of an epic trilogy, The Changing Light at Sandover, which also includes Mirabell: Books of Number and Scripts for the Pageant. The Book of Ephraim originally appeared in the volume Divine Comedies, which made explicit Merrill's debt to Dante's tripartite Divine Comedy. Merrill (JM) records encounters through the Ouija board that he and his companion, David Jackson (DJ), have with spirits from the other world, who illuminate a system of reincarnation and purification as well as suggest theories about the creation and future of the universe. Merrill models the structure of each part of the trilogy on the design of the Ouija board; thus Ephraim is in twenty-six parts, one for each letter of the alphabet. In "C" (identified by the large initial letter), the spirit guide Ephraim introduces himself; uppercase letters indicate the "speech" of the Ouija board.
1. Cf. Merrill's poem "The Broken Home" (p. 1716).
2. Roman emperor (42 B.C.E.–37 C.E.)

15 AD 36 on CAPRI throttled
By the imperial guard for having LOVED
THE MONSTERS NEPHEW (sic) CALIGULA[3]
Rapidly he went on—changing the subject?
A long incriminating manuscript
20 Boxed in bronze lay UNDER PORPHYRY° — rock
Beneath the deepest excavations. He Would help us find it, but we must please make haste
Because Tiberius wanted it destroyed.
Oh? And where, we wondered of the void,
25 Was Tiberius these days? STAGE THREE

Why was he telling us? He'd overheard us
Talking to SIMPSON Simpson? His LINK WITH EARTH
His REPRESENTATIVE A feeble nature
All but bestial, given to violent
30 Short lives—one ending lately among flames
In an Army warehouse. Slated for rebirth
But not in time, said Ephraim, to prevent
The brat from wasting, just now at our cup,[4]
Precious long distance minutes—don't hang up!

35 So much facetiousness—well, we were young
And these were matters of life and death—dismayed us.
Was he a devil? His reply MY POOR
INNOCENTS left the issue hanging fire.
As it flowed on, his stream-of-consciousness
40 Deepened. There was a buried room, a BED
WROUGHT IN SILVER I CAN LEAD U THERE
IF If? U GIVE ME What? HA HA YR SOULS
(Another time he'll say that he misread
Our innocence for insolence that night,
45 And meant to scare us.) Our eyes met. What if . . .
The blood's least vessel hoisted jet-black sails.
Five whole minutes we were frightened stiff
—But after all, we weren't that innocent.
The Rover Boys[5] at thirty, still red-blooded
50 Enough not to pass up an armchair revel
And pure enough at heart to beat the devil,
Entered into the spirit, so to speak,
And said they'd leave for Capri[6] that same week.

Pause. Then, as though we'd passed a test,
55 Ephraim's whole manner changed. He brushed aside
Tiberius and settled to the task
Of answering, like an experienced guide,
Those questions we had lacked the wit to ask.

Here on Earth—huge tracts of information
60 Have gone into these capsules flavorless

3. Roman emperor (12–41 C.E.).
4. JM and DJ place hands on a teacup to "read" the Ouija board.
5. Heroes of a popular series of children's books.
6. Italian island, in the Bay of Naples.

And rhymed for easy swallowing—on Earth
We're each the REPRESENTATIVE of a PATRON
—Are there that many patrons? YES O YES
These secular guardian angels fume and fuss
65 For what must seem eternity over us.
It is forbidden them to INTERVENE
Save, as it were, in the entr'acte° between intermission
One incarnation and another. Back To school from the disastrously long vac° summer vacation
70 Goes the soul its patron crams yet once
Again with savoir vivre.[7] Will the dunce
Never—by rote, the hundredth time round—learn
What ropes make fast that point of no return,
A footing on the lowest of NINE STAGES
75 Among the curates and the minor mages?° priests, magicians
Patrons at last ourselves, an upward notch
Our old ones move THEYVE BORNE IT ALL FOR THIS
And take delivery from the Abyss
Of brand-new little savage souls to watch.
80 One difference: with every rise in station
Comes a degree of PEACE FROM REPRESENTATION
—Odd phrase, more like a motto for abstract
Art—or for Autocracy—In fact
Our heads are spinning—From the East a light—
85 BUT U ARE TIRED MES CHERS[8] SWEET DREAMS TOMORROW NIGHT

1976

Arabian Night[9]

Features unseen embers and tongs once worried bright as brass, cool, trim, of a depth to light his way at least who, trusting mirages, finds in them the oasis,

5 what went wrong? You there in the mirror, did our freshest page get sent to the Hall of Cobwebs?
Or had Rime's Emir[1] all along been merely after your body?

No reply. Then ("there" of course, also) insight's
10 dazzle snaps at gloom, like a wick when first lit.
Look! on one quick heartstring glissando,[2] stranger
kindles to father

7. Knowledge of how to live (French).
8. My dears (French).
9. The Arabian Nights, also known as One Thousand and One Nights, is a collection of tales of unknown date (but referred to by the tenth century) and of mixed origins, including Indian, Persian, and Arabic. Compiled in its "original" form in Egypt by the fifteenth century, it is united by a framework in which the newly married Scheherazade preserves her life by telling tales.
1. An Arab prince, provincial governor, or military commander. Also, the word is a mirror image of rime, rare spelling for rhyme, which here is synonymous with poetry. The "page" of the previous line thus connotes not only the emir's servant but a page of poetry.
2. Italian term for a rapid series of consecutive notes played by sliding fingers over keys or a string.

thirty years a shade, yet whose traits (plus others not so staring—loyalty, cynicism, 15 neophyte's pure heart in erotic mufti[3] straight out of Baghdad)

solve the lifelong riddle: a face no longer sought in dreams but worn as my own. Aladdin[4] rubs his lamp—youth? age?—and the rival two beam 20 forth in one likeness.

1988

FRANK O'HARA
1926–1966

The Day Lady[1] Died

It is 12:20 in New York a Friday
three days after Bastille day,[2] yes it is 1959 and I go get a shoeshine
because I will get off the 4:19 in Easthampton[3] 5 npat 7:15 and then go straight to dinner and I don't know the people who will feed me

I walk up the muggy street beginning to sun and have a hamburger and a malted and buy an ugly NEW WORLD WRITING to see what the poets
10 in Ghana are doing these days
I go on to the bank and Miss Stillwagon (first name Linda I once heard) doesn't even look up my balance for once in her life and in the GOLDEN GRIFFIN[4] I get a little Verlaine 15 for Patsy with drawings by Bonnard although I do think of Hesiod, trans. Richmond Lattimore or Brendan Behan's new play or Le Balcon or Les Nègres of Genet, but I don't, I stick with Verlaine
after practically going to sleep with quandariness

20 and for Mike I just stroll into the PARK LANE Liquor Store and ask for a bottle of Strega and then I go back where I came from to 6th Avenue and the tobacconist in the Ziegfeld Theatre and casually ask for a carton of Gauloises and a carton
25 of Picayunes, and a NEW YORK POST with her face on it

3. Civilian clothes worn by someone usually in military uniform.
4. Boy in "The Story of Aladdin and the Magic Lamp," popularly believed to be collected in the original Arabian Nights but actually an eighteenth-century addition. In it, Aladdin has a magic lamp whose genie promises to grant any wish.
1. Billie Holiday (1915–1959), American jazz and blues singer, called Lady Day.
2. July 14, the French national holiday that celebrates the storming of the Bastille prison in 1789.
3. One of "the Hamptons," towns on eastern Long Island, popular, especially in the summer, with New York City artists and writers.
4. An avant-garde bookshop near the Museum of Modern Art, where O'Hara was a curator.

and I am sweating a lot by now and thinking of leaning on the john door in the 5 SPOT while she whispered a song along the keyboard to Mal Waldron[5] and everyone and I stopped breathing

1959 1964

How to Get There

White the October air, no snow, easy to breathe
beneath the sky, lies, lies everywhere writhing and gasping clutching and tangling, it is not easy to breathe lies building their tendrils into dim figures 5 who disappear down corridors in west-side[6] apartments into childhood's proof of being wanted, not abandoned, kidnaped betrayal staving off loneliness, I see the fog lunge in and hide it where are you?
10 here I am on the sidewalk under the moonlike lamplight thinking how precious moss is so unique and greenly crushable if you can find it on the north side of the tree where the fog binds you and then, tearing apart into soft white lies, spreads its disease 15 through the primal night of an everlasting winter which nevertheless has heat in tubes, west-side and east-side and its intricate individual pathways of white accompanied by the ringing of telephone bells beside which someone sits in silence denying their own number, never given out! nameless 20 like the sound of troika[7] bells rushing past suffering in the first storm, it is snowing now, it is already too late the snow will go away, but nobody will be there police cordons for lying political dignitaries ringing too

the world becomes a jangle
25 from the index finger to the vast empty houses filled with people, their echoes of lies and the tendrils of fog trailing softly around their throats now the phone can be answered, nobody calling, only an echo all can confess to be home and waiting, all is the same 30 and we drift into the clear sky enthralled by our disappointment never to be alone again never to be loved sailing through space: didn't I have you once for my self? West Side?
for a couple of hours, but I am not that person

1960 1964

5. Billie Holiday's accompanist (1926–2002).
6. "West-side" and "east-side" in the poem refer to areas in Manhattan (west or east of Fifth Avenue).
7. A Russian vehicle drawn by three horses abreast.

Ave Maria[8]

Mothers of America
let your kids go to the movies!
get them out of the house so they won't know what you're up to it's true that fresh air is good for the body
5 but what about the soul that grows in darkness, embossed by silvery images and when you grow old as grow old you must they won't hate you
they won't criticize you they won't know
10 they'll be in some glamorous country they first saw on a Saturday afternoon or playing hookey
they may even be grateful to you for their first sexual experience which only cost you a quarter
15 and didn't upset the peaceful home they will know where candy bars come from and gratuitous bags of popcorn as gratuitous as leaving the movie before it's over with a pleasant stranger whose apartment is in the Heaven on Earth
Bldg
20 near the Williamsburg Bridge[9]
oh mothers you will have made the little tykes so happy because if nobody does pick them up in the movies
they won't know the difference and if somebody does it'll be sheer gravy 25 and they'll have been truly entertained either way instead of hanging around the yard or up in their room
hating you
prematurely since you won't have done anything horribly mean yet 30 except keeping them from the darker joys it's unforgivable the latter so don't blame me if you won't take this advice and the family breaks up and your children grow old and blind in front of a TV set 35 seeing movies you wouldn't let them see when they were young

1960 1964

Why I Am Not a Painter

I am not a painter, I am a poet.
Why? I think I would rather be a painter, but I am not. Well,

8. Hail Mary (Latin); the Catholic prayer addressed to the Virgin Mary, mother of Jesus.

9. Bridge connecting lower Manhattan with the Williamsburg section of Brooklyn.

for instance, Mike Goldberg[1] 5 is starting a painting. I drop in.
"Sit down and have a drink" he says. I drink; we drink. I look up. "You have SARDINES in it."
"Yes, it needed something there."
10 "Oh." I go and the days go by and I drop in again. The painting is going on, and I go, and the days go by. I drop in. The painting is finished. "Where's SARDINES?" 15 All that's left is just letters, "It was too much," Mike says.

But me? One day I am thinking of a color: orange. I write a line about orange. Pretty soon it is a 20 whole page of words, not lines.
Then another page. There should be so much more, not of orange, of words, of how terrible orange is and life. Days go by. It is even in 25 prose, I am a real poet. My poem is finished and I haven't mentioned orange yet. It's twelve poems, I call it ORANGES. And one day in a gallery
I see Mike's painting, called SARDINES.

1971

W. D. SNODGRASS
b. 1926

From Heart's Needle[1]

For Cynthia

" 'Your father is dead.' 'That grieves me,' said he. 'Your mother is dead,' said the lad. 'Now all pity for me is at an end,' said he. 'Your brother is dead,' said Loingsechan. 'I am sorely wounded by that,' said Suibne. 'Your daughter is dead,' said Loingsechan. 'And an only daughter is the needle of the heart,' said Suibne. 'Dear is your son who used to call you "Father," ' said Loingsechan. 'Indeed,' said he, 'that is the drop that brings a man to the ground.' "

FROM AN OLD IRISH STORY,
The Frenzy of Suibne,
AS TRANSLATED BY MYLES DILLON

1. New York painter (b. 1924), whose silk-screen prints appear in O'Hara's Odes (1960).

1. Snodgrass's long poem for his daughter, after a divorce, is written in ten sections.

2

Late April and you are three; today
  We dug your garden in the yard.
To curb the damage of your play,
Strange dogs at night and the moles tunneling,
5 Four slender sticks of lath° stand guard — wood
  Uplifting their thin string.

So you were the first to tramp it down.
  And after the earth was sifted close
You brought your watering can to drown
10 All earth and us. But these mixed seeds are pressed
With light loam in their steadfast rows.
  Child, we've done our best.

Someone will have to weed and spread
  The young sprouts. Sprinkle them in the hour
15 When shadow falls across their bed.
You should try to look at them every day
Because when they come to full flower
  I will be away.

3

The child between them on the street
Comes to a puddle, lifts his feet
  And hangs on their hands. They start
At the live weight and lurch together,
5 Recoil to swing him through the weather,
  Stiffen and pull apart.

We read of cold war[2] soldiers that Never gained ground, gave none, but sat
  Tight in their chill trenches.
10 Pain seeps up from some cavity
Through the ranked teeth in sympathy;
  The whole jaw grinds and clenches

Till something somewhere has to give.
It's better the poor soldiers live
15 In someone else's hands
Than drop where helpless powers fall
On crops and barns, on towns where all
  Will burn. And no man stands.

2. The post–World War II rivalry between the Soviet Union and the United States.

7

Here in the scuffled dust
  is our ground of play.
I lift you on your swing and must shove you away,
5 see you return again,
  drive you off again, then stand quiet till you come.

  You, though you climb higher, farther from me, longer,
10 will fall back to me stronger.
Bad penny, pendulum,
  you keep my constant time to bob in blue July where fat goldfinches fly

15 over the glittering, fecund reach of our growing lands.
Once more now, this second,
  I hold you in my hands.

10

The vicious winter finally yields
  the green winter wheat;
the farmer, tired in the tired fields
  he dare not leave will eat.

5 Once more the runs come fresh; prevailing piglets, stout as jugs,
harry their old sow to the railing
  to ease her swollen dugs

and game colts trail the herded mares 10 that circle the pasture courses;
our seasons bring us back once more like merry-go-round horses.

With crocus mouths, perennial hungers,
  into the park Spring comes;
15 we roast hot dogs on old coat hangers
  and feed the swan bread crumbs,

pay our respects to the peacocks, rabbits,
  and leathery Canada goose who took, last Fall, our tame white habits
20 and now will not turn loose.

In full regalia, the pheasant cocks
  march past their dubious hens;

the porcupine and the lean, red fox
trot around bachelor pens

25 and the miniature painted train
wails on its oval track:
you said, I'm going to Pennsylvania!
and waved. And you've come back.

If I loved you, they said, I'd leave
30 and find my own affairs.
Well, once again this April, we've come around to the bears;

punished and cared for, behind bars,
the coons° on bread and water — raccoons
35 stretch thin black fingers after ours.
And you are still my daughter.

1959

Mementos, 1

Sorting out letters and piles of my old
Canceled checks, old clippings, and yellow note cards
That meant something once, I happened to find
Your picture. That picture. I stopped there cold,
5 Like a man raking piles of dead leaves in his yard
Who has turned up a severed hand.

Still, that first second, I was glad: you stand
Just as you stood—shy, delicate, slender,
In that long gown of green lace netting and daisies
10 That you wore to our first dance. The sight of you stunned Us all. Well, our needs were different, then,
And our ideals came easy.

Then through the war[3] and those two long years
Overseas, the Japanese dead in their shacks
15 Among dishes, dolls, and lost shoes; I carried
This glimpse of you, there, to choke down my fear,
Prove it had been, that it might come back.
That was before we got married.

—Before we drained out one another's force
20 With lies, self-denial, unspoken regret
And the sick eyes that blame; before the divorce
And the treachery. Say it: before we met. Still,
I put back your picture. Someday, in due course,
I will find that it's still there.

1968

3. World War II.

ELIZABETH JENNINGS
1926–2001

My Grandmother

She kept an antique shop—or it kept her.
Among Apostle spoons and Bristol glass,[1]
The faded silks, the heavy furniture,
She watched her own reflection in the brass
5 Salvers° and silver bowls, as if to prove — round trays
Polish was all, there was no need of love.

And I remember how I once refused
To go out with her, since I was afraid.
It was perhaps a wish not to be used
10 Like antique objects. Though she never said
That she was hurt, I still could feel the guilt
Of that refusal, guessing how she felt.

Later, too frail to keep a shop, she put
All her best things in one long narrow room.
15 The place smelt old, of things too long kept shut,
The smell of absences where shadows come
That can't be polished. There was nothing then
To give her own reflection back again.

And when she died I felt no grief at all,
20 Only the guilt of what I once refused.
I walked into her room among the tall
Sideboards and cupboards—things she never used
But needed: and no finger-marks were there,
Only the new dust falling through the air.

1961

One Flesh

Lying apart now, each in a separate bed,
He with a book, keeping the light on late,
She like a girl dreaming of childhood,
All men elsewhere—it is as if they wait
5 Some new event: the book he holds unread,
Her eyes fixed on the shadows overhead.

Tossed up like flotsam from a former passion,
How cool they lie. They hardly ever touch,
Or if they do it is like a confession

1. Prized glassware of a deep blue color. Apostle spoons: set of teaspoons, the handles of which are in the form of male figures, supposedly the Apostles.

10 Of having little feeling—or too much.
Chastity faces them, a destination
For which their whole lives were a preparation.

Strangely apart, yet strangely close together,
Silence between them like a thread to hold 15 And not wind in. And time itself's a feather
Touching them gently. Do they know they're old,
These two who are my father and my mother
Whose fire from which I came, has now grown cold?

1966

JOHN ASHBERY
b. 1927

The Painter

Sitting between the sea and the buildings
He enjoyed painting the sea's portrait.
But just as children imagine a prayer
Is merely silence, he expected his subject
5 To rush up the sand, and, seizing a brush,
Plaster its own portrait on the canvas.

So there was never any paint on his canvas
Until the people who lived in the buildings
Put him to work: "Try using the brush
10 As a means to an end. Select, for a portrait,
Something less angry and large, and more subject
To a painter's moods, or, perhaps, to a prayer."

How could he explain to them his prayer
That nature, not art, might usurp the canvas?
15 He chose his wife for a new subject,
Making her vast, like ruined buildings,
As if, forgetting itself, the portrait
Had expressed itself without a brush.

Slightly encouraged, he dipped his brush
20 In the sea, murmuring a heartfelt prayer:
"My soul, when I paint this next portrait
Let it be you who wrecks the canvas."
The news spread like wildfire through the buildings:
He had gone back to the sea for his subject.

25 Imagine a painter crucified by his subject!
Too exhausted even to lift his brush,
He provoked some artists leaning from the buildings

To malicious mirth: "We haven't a prayer
Now, of putting ourselves on canvas,
30 Or getting the sea to sit for a portrait!"

Others declared it a self-portrait.
Finally all indications of a subject
Began to fade, leaving the canvas
Perfectly white. He put down the brush.
35 At once a howl, that was also a prayer,
Arose from the overcrowded buildings.

They tossed him, the portrait, from the tallest of the buildings;
And the sea devoured the canvas and the brush
As though his subject had decided to remain a prayer.

1956

Soonest Mended[1]

Barely tolerated, living on the margin
In our technological society, we were always having to be rescued
On the brink of destruction, like heroines in Orlando Furioso[2]
Before it was time to start all over again.
5 There would be thunder in the bushes, a rustling of coils,
And Angelica, in the Ingres painting,[3] was considering
The colorful but small monster near her toe, as though wondering whether forgetting
The whole thing might not, in the end, be the only solution.
And then there always came a time when 10 Happy Hooligan[4] in his rusted green automobile Came plowing down the course, just to make sure everything was
O.K.,
Only by that time we were in another chapter and confused
About how to receive this latest piece of information.
Was it information? Weren't we rather acting this out 15 For someone else's benefit, thoughts in a mind
With room enough and to spare for our little problems (so they began to seem),
Our daily quandary about food and the rent and bills to be paid?
To reduce all this to a small variant,
To step free at last, minuscule on the gigantic plateau—
20 This was our ambition: to be small and clear and free.
Alas, the summer's energy wanes quickly,
A moment and it is gone. And no longer
May we make the necessary arrangements, simple as they are.
Our star was brighter perhaps when it had water in it.

1. Allusion to the expression Least said, soonest mended.
2. Epic by the Italian poet Ludovico Ariosto (1474–1533); his much-rescued heroine is Angelica.
3. Roger Delivering Angelica (1819), painting depicting Ariosto's heroine by the French artist Jean-Auguste-Dominique Ingres (1780–1867).
4. Character in a comic strip of the 1920s and 1930s.

25 Now there is no question even of that, but only
Of holding on to the hard earth so as not to get thrown off,
With an occasional dream, a vision: a robin flies across
The upper corner of the window, you brush your hair away
And cannot quite see, or a wound will flash
30 Against the sweet faces of the others, something like:
This is what you wanted to hear, so why
Did you think of listening to something else? We are all talkers
It is true, but underneath the talk lies
The moving and not wanting to be moved, the loose
35 Meaning, untidy and simple like a threshing floor.[5]

These then were some hazards of the course,
Yet though we knew the course was hazards and nothing else
It was still a shock when, almost a quarter of a century later,
The clarity of the rules dawned on you for the first time.
40 They were the players, and we who had struggled at the game
Were merely spectators, though subject to its vicissitudes
And moving with it out of the tearful stadium, borne on shoulders, at last.
Night after night this message returns, repeated
In the flickering bulbs of the sky, raised past us, taken away from us, 45 Yet ours over and over until the end that is past truth,
The being of our sentences, in the climate that fostered them,
Not ours to own, like a book, but to be with, and sometimes
To be without, alone and desperate.
But the fantasy makes it ours, a kind of fence-sitting 50 Raised to the level of an esthetic ideal. These were moments, years,
Solid with reality, faces, namable events, kisses, heroic acts,
But like the friendly beginning of a geometrical progression
Not too reassuring, as though meaning could be cast aside some day
When it had been outgrown. Better, you said, to stay cowering
55 Like this in the early lessons, since the promise of learning
Is a delusion, and I agreed, adding that
Tomorrow would alter the sense of what had already been learned,
That the learning process is extended in this way, so that from this standpoint
None of us ever graduates from college,
60 For time is an emulsion, and probably thinking not to grow up
Is the brightest kind of maturity for us, right now at any rate.
And you see, both of us were right, though nothing
Has somehow come to nothing; the avatars° incarnations
Of our conforming to the rules and living
65 Around the home have made—well, in a sense, "good citizens" of us,
Brushing the teeth and all that, and learning to accept
The charity of the hard moments as they are doled out,
For this is action, this not being sure, this careless
Preparing, sowing the seeds crooked in the furrow,
70 Making ready to forget, and always coming back
To the mooring of starting out, that day so long ago.

1970

5. On which, at harvest time, wheat is separated from chaff (debris).

Ode to Bill

Some things we do take up a lot more time
And are considered a fruitful, natural thing to do.
I am coming out of one way to behave
Into a plowed cornfield. On my left, gulls,
5 On an inland vacation. They seem to mind the way I write.

Or, to take another example: last month
I vowed to write more. What is writing?
Well, in my case, it's getting down on paper
Not thoughts, exactly, but ideas, maybe:
10 Ideas about thoughts. Thoughts is too grand a word.
Ideas is better, though not precisely what I mean.
Someday I'll explain. Not today though.

I feel as though someone had made me a vest
Which I was wearing out of doors into the countryside
15 Out of loyalty to the person, although
There is no one to see, except me
With my inner vision of what I look like.
The wearing is both a duty and a pleasure
Because it absorbs me, absorbs me too much.

20 One horse stands out irregularly against
The land over there. And am I receiving
This vision? Is it mine, or do I already owe it
For other visions, unnoticed and unrecorded
On the great, relaxed curve of time,
25 All the forgotten springs, dropped pebbles,
Songs once heard that then passed out of light
Into everyday oblivion? He moves away slowly,
Looks up and pumps the sky, a lingering
Question. Him too we can sacrifice
30 To the end progress, for we must, we must be moving on.

1975

Paradoxes and Oxymorons

This poem is concerned with language on a very plain level.
Look at it talking to you. You look out a window
Or pretend to fidget. You have it but you don't have it.
You miss it, it misses you. You miss each other.

5 The poem is sad because it wants to be yours, and cannot.
What's a plain level? It is that and other things,
Bringing a system of them into play. Play?
Well, actually, yes, but I consider play to be

A deeper outside thing, a dreamed role-pattern,
10 As in the division of grace these long August days
Without proof. Open-ended. And before you know
It gets lost in the steam and chatter of typewriters.

It has been played once more. I think you exist only
To tease me into doing it, on your level, and then you aren't there 15 Or have adopted a different attitude. And the poem
Has set me softly down beside you. The poem is you.

1981

Brute Image

It's a question of altitude, or latitude,
Probably. I see them leaving their offices.
By seven they are turning smartly into the drive
To spend the evening with small patterns and odd,
5 Oblique fixtures. Authentic what? Did I say,
Or more likely did you ask is there any Deliverance from any of this? Why yes,
One boy says, one can step for a moment
Out into the hall. Spells bring some relief
10 And antique shrieking into the night
That was not here before, not like this.
This is only a stand-in for the more formal,
More serious side of it. There is partial symmetry here.
Later one protests: How did we get here
15 This way, unable to stop communicating?
And is it all right for the children to listen,
For the weeds slanting inward, for the cold mice
Until dawn? Now every yard has its tree,
Every heart its valentine, and only we 20 Don't know how to occupy the tent of night
So that what must come to pass shall pass.

1992

GALWAY KINNELL
b. 1927

First Song

Then it was dusk in Illinois, the small boy
After an afternoon of carting dung
Hung on the rail fence, a sapped thing
Weary to crying. Dark was growing tall

5 And he began to hear the pond frogs all
Calling on his ear with what seemed their joy.

Soon their sound was pleasant for a boy
Listening in the smoky dusk and the nightfall
Of Illinois, and from the fields two small 10 Boys came bearing cornstalk violins
And they rubbed the cornstalk bows with resins
And the three sat there scraping of their joy.

It was now fine music the frogs and the boys
Did in the towering Illinois twilight make 15 And into dark in spite of a shoulder's ache
A boy's hunched body loved out of a stalk
The first song of his happiness, and the song woke
His heart to the darkness and into the sadness of joy.

1960

The Correspondence School Instructor Says Goodbye to His Poetry Students

Goodbye, lady in Bangor, who sent me
snapshots of yourself, after definitely hinting
you were beautiful; goodbye,
Miami Beach urologist, who enclosed plain 5 brown envelopes for the return of your very
"Clinical Sonnets"; goodbye, manufacturer of brassieres on the Coast, whose eclogues give the fullest treatment in literature yet to the sagging breast motif; goodbye, you in San Quentin,[1] 10 who wrote, "Being German my hero is Hitler," instead of "Sincerely yours," at the end of long, neat-scripted letters demolishing
the pre-Raphaelites:[2]

I swear to you, it was just my way
15 of cheering myself up, as I licked
the stamped, self-addressed envelopes, the game I had
of trying to guess which one of you, this time, had poisoned his glue. I did care.
20 I did read each poem entire.

1. Prison in California.
2. A group of nineteenth-century English painters and poets, who wished to restore the methods and spirit of the arts before the Italian painter Raphael (1483–1520).

I did say what I thought was the truth in the mildest words I knew. And now, in this poem, or chopped prose, not any better,
I realize, than those troubled lines
25 I kept sending back to you,
I have to say I am relieved it is over:
at the end I could feel only pity for that urge toward more life your poems kept smothering in words, the smell 30 of which, days later, would tingle in your nostrils as new, God-given impulses to write.

Goodbye,
you who are, for me, the postmarks again
35 of shattered towns—Xenia, Burnt Cabins, Hornell—their loneliness
given away in poems, only their solitude kept.

1968

After Making Love We Hear Footsteps

For I can snore like a bullhorn
or play loud music or sit up talking with any reasonably sober Irishman and Fergus will only sink deeper 5 into his dreamless sleep, which goes by all in one flash, but let there be that heavy breathing or a stifled come-cry anywhere in the house and he will wrench himself awake and make for it on the run—as now, we lie together, 10 after making love, quiet, touching along the length of our bodies, familiar touch of the long-married,
and he appears—in his baseball pajamas, it happens, the neck opening so small he has to screw them on—
and flops down between us and hugs us and snuggles himself to sleep, 15 his face gleaming with satisfaction at being this very child.

In the half darkness we look at each other and smile
and touch arms across this little, startlingly muscled body—this one whom habit of memory propels to the ground of his making, 20 sleeper only the mortal sounds can sing awake,
this blessing love gives again into our arms.

1980, 1993

W. S. MERWIN
b. 1927

The Drunk in the Furnace

For a good decade
The furnace stood in the naked gully, fireless
And vacant as any hat. Then when it was
No more to them than a hulking black fossil
5 To erode unnoticed with the rest of the junk-hill
By the poisonous creek, and rapidly to be added
To their ignorance.

They were afterwards astonished
To confirm, one morning, a twist of smoke like a pale 10 Resurrection, staggering out of its chewed hole,
And to remark then other tokens that someone,
Cozily bolted behind the eye-holed iron
Door of the drafty burner, had there established
His bad castle.

15 Where he gets his spirits
It's a mystery. But the stuff keeps him musical:
Hammer-and-anviling with poker and bottle
To his jugged bellowings, till the last groaning clang
As he collapses onto the rioting
20 Springs of a litter of car-seats ranged on the grates,
To sleep like an iron pig.[1]

In their tar-paper church
On a text about stoke-holes[2] that are sated never
Their Reverend lingers. They nod and hate trespassers.
25 When the furnace wakes, though, all afternoon
Their witless offspring flock like piped rats[3] to its siren
Crescendo, and agape on the crumbling ridge
Stand in a row and learn.

1960

Odysseus[4]

For George Kirstein

Always the setting forth was the same,
Same sea, same dangers waiting for him
As though he had got nowhere but older.

1. A crude block poured from a smelting furnace.
2. Furnace mouths.
3. As in the German folktale about the Pied Piper of Hamelin, whose playing lured first the rats and then the children out of town.
4. Hero of Homer's Odyssey, in which, after the Trojan War, he wanders for ten years, attempting to return to his home island, Ithaca.

Behind him on the receding shore
5 The identical reproaches, and somewhere
Out before him, the unraveling patience
He was wedded to. There were the islands
Each with its woman and twining welcome
To be navigated, and one to call "home."[5]
10 The knowledge of all that he betrayed
Grew till it was the same whether he stayed
Or went. Therefore he went. And what wonder
If sometimes he could not remember
Which was the one who wished on his departure
15 Perils that he could never sail through,
And which, improbable, remote, and true,
Was the one he kept sailing home to?

1960

Separation

Your absence has gone through me
Like thread through a needle.
Everything I do is stitched with its color.

1973

Losing a Language

A breath leaves the sentences and does not come back
yet the old still remember something that they could say but they know now that such things are no longer believed and the young have fewer words

5 many of the things the words were about no longer exist

the noun for standing in mist by a haunted tree the verb for I

the children will not repeat 10 the phrases their parents speak

somebody has persuaded them that it is better to say everything differently

so that they can be admired somewhere farther and farther away

5. Alluding to Odysseus's encounters with the sorceress Circe and the nymph Calypso, and to his wife, Penelope, waiting for him on Ithaca.

15 where nothing that is here is known we have little to say to each other

we are wrong and dark
in the eyes of the new owners

the radio is incomprehensible
20 the day is glass

when there is a voice at the door it is foreign everywhere instead of a name there is a lie

nobody has seen it happening
nobody remembers

25 this is what the words were made to prophesy

here are the extinct feathers here is the rain we saw

1988

Whoever You Are

By now when you say I stop somewhere waiting for you[6]
who is the I and who come to that is you

there are those words that were written a long time ago
by someone I have read about who they assure me is you

5 the handwriting is still running over the pages
but the one who has disappeared from the script is you

I wonder what age you were when those words came to you though I think it is not any age at all that is you stopping and waiting under the soles of my feet 10 this morning this waking this looking up is you but nothing has stopped in fact and I do not know what is waiting and surely that also is you every time you say it you seem to be speaking through me to some me not yet there who I suppose is you

15 you said you were stopping and waiting before I was here
maybe the one I heard say it then is you

1999

6. Final line of Walt Whitman's "Song of Myself" (see p. 1066).

CHARLES TOMLINSON
b. 1927

Farewell to Van Gogh[1]

The quiet deepens. You will not persuade
One leaf of the accomplished, steady, darkening
Chestnut-tower to displace itself
With more of violence than the air supplies
5 When, gathering dusk, the pond brims evenly
And we must be content with stillness.

Unhastening, daylight withdraws from us its shapes
Into their central calm. Stone by stone
Your rhetoric is dispersed until the earth
10 Becomes once more the earth, the leaves
A sharp partition against cooling blue.

Farewell, and for your instructive frenzy
Gratitude. The world does not end tonight
And the fruit that we shall pick tomorrow
15 Await us, weighing the unstripped bough.

1960

The Picture of J.T. in a Prospect of Stone[2]

What should one wish a child
and that, one's own emerging
5 from between the stone lips
of a sheep-stile[3]
that divides village graves 10 and village green?
—Wish her
the constancy of stone.
—But stone
is hard.
15 —Say, rather it resists
the slow corrosives
and the flight

1. Vincent Van Gogh (1853–1890), Dutch Post-impressionist painter, who suffered bouts of insanity and finally killed himself.
2. Cf. Andrew Marvell, "The Picture of Little T. C. in a Prospect of Flowers" (p. 481).
3. Steps that enable a person to climb over a fence or wall.

of time
20 and yet it takes the play, the fluency
from light.
—How would you know
the gift you'd give 25 was the gift
she'd wish to have?
—Gift is giving,
gift is meaning:
first 30 I'd give then let her live with it to prove its quality the better and 35 thus learn to love what (to begin with)
she might spurn.
—You'd
40 moralize a gift?
—I'd have her understand
the gift I gave her.
—And so she shall 45 but let her play her innocence away
emerging as she does between 50 her doom (unknown),
her unmown green.

1963

Mr. Brodsky

I had heard before, of an American who would have preferred
to be an Indian;
5 but not until Mr. Brodsky, of one whose professed and long pondered-on passion
was to become a Scot,
10 who even sent for haggis[4] and oatcakes

4. Traditional Scottish dish, consisting of minced heart, lungs, and liver of a sheep or calf, boiled in an artificial bag (or the animal's stomach) with oatmeal.

across continent.
Having read him
in Cambridge English
a verse or two 15 from MacDiarmid,[5]
I was invited to repeat the reading before a Burns Night Gathering[6]
where the Balmoral Pipers 20 of Albuquerque would play in the haggis
out of its New York tin.
Of course, I said
No. No. I could not go
25 and then half-regretted I had not been.
But to console
and cure the wish, came
Mr. Brodsky, bringing 30 his pipes and played until the immense, distended bladder of leather seemed it could barely contain its water—tears (idle
35 tears) for the bridal of Annie Laurie[7]
and Morton J. Brodsky.
A bagpipe in a dwelling is a resonant instrument and there he stood 40 lost in the gorse
the heather or whatever six thousand miles and more
from the infection's source,
45 in our neo–New Mexican parlour where I had heard
before of an American who would have preferred
to be merely an Indian.

1966

Ararat[8]

We shall sleep-out together through the dark
The earth's slow voyage across centuries

5. Hugh MacDiarmid, pen name of the Scottish poet Christopher Murray Grieve (1892–1978; see pp. 1376–80).
6. Meeting devoted to Scottish culture, on the evening of January 25, birthday of the Scottish poet Robert Burns (1759–1796; see pp. 747–60).
7. Subject of an anonymous Scottish folk song. "Tears, idle tears" are the first words of a song in Alfred, Lord Tennyson's narrative poem The Princess (see p. 995).
8. The mountain on which Noah's ark came to rest (Genesis 6–10).

Towards whatever Ararat its ark
Is steering for. Our atoms then will feel
5 The jarring and arrival of that keel
In timelessness, and rise through galaxies,
Motes starred by the first and final light to show
Whether those shores are habitable or no.

1987

JAMES WRIGHT
1927–1980

A Note Left in Jimmy Leonard's Shack

Near the dry river's water-mark we found
Your brother Minnegan,
Flopped like a fish against the muddy ground.
Beany, the kid whose yellow hair turns green,
5 Told me to find you, even in the rain,
And tell you he was drowned.

I hid behind the chassis on the bank,
The wreck of someone's Ford:
I was afraid to come and wake you drunk:
10 You told me once the waking up was hard,
The daylight beating at you like a board.
Blood in my stomach sank.

Besides, you told him never to go out
Along the river-side
15 Drinking and singing, clattering about.
You might have thrown a rock at me and cried
I was to blame, I let him fall in the road
And pitch down on his side.

Well, I'll get hell enough when I get home
20 For coming up this far,
Leaving the note, and running as I came.
I'll go and tell my father where you are.
You'd better go find Minnegan before
Policemen hear and come.

25 Beany went home, and I got sick and ran,
You old son of a bitch.
You better hurry down to Minnegan;
He's drunk or dying now, I don't know which,
Rolled in the roots and garbage like a fish.
30 The poor old man.

1959

A Blessing

Just off the highway to Rochester, Minnesota,
Twilight bounds softly forth on the grass.
And the eyes of those two Indian ponies
Darken with kindness.
5 They have come gladly out of the willows
To welcome my friend and me.
We step over the barbed wire into the pasture
Where they have been grazing all day, alone.
They ripple tensely, they can hardly contain their happiness
10 That we have come.
They bow shyly as wet swans. They love each other.
There is no loneliness like theirs.
At home once more,
They begin munching the young tufts of spring in the darkness.
15 I would like to hold the slenderer one in my arms,
For she has walked over to me
And nuzzled my left hand.
She is black and white,
Her mane falls wild on her forehead,
20 And the light breeze moves me to caress her long ear
That is delicate as the skin over a girl's wrist.
Suddenly I realize
That if I stepped out of my body I would break
Into blossom.

1963

Speak

To speak in a flat voice
Is all that I can do.
I have gone every place
Asking for you.
5 Wondering where to turn
And how the search would end
And the last streetlight spin
Above me blind.

Then I returned rebuffed
10 And saw under the sun
The race not to the swift
Nor the battle won.[1]
Liston[2] dives in the tank,
Lord, in Lewiston, Maine,

1. As in Ecclesiastes 9.11: "I returned, and saw under the sun, that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong. . . ."

2. In a controversial bout for the heavyweight boxing title in 1965, Cassius Clay knocked out Sonny Liston in one minute.

15 And Ernie Doty's drunk
In hell again.

And Jenny, oh my Jenny
Whom I love, rhyme be damned,
Has broken her spare beauty
20 In a whorehouse old.
She left her new baby
In a bus-station can,
And sprightly danced away
Through Jacksontown.[3]

25 Which is a place I know,
One where I got picked up
A few shrunk years ago
By a good cop.
Believe it, Lord, or not.
30 Don't ask me who he was.
I speak of flat defeat
In a flat voice.

I have gone forward with
Some, few lonely some.
35 They have fallen to death.
I die with them.
Lord, I have loved Thy cursed,
The beauty of Thy house:
Come down. Come down. Why dost
40 Thou hide thy face?[4]

1968

PETER DAVISON
b. 1928

Equinox 1980

In the stillness after dawn we two paddled a noiseless boat before wakefall across a bay smooth as a mirror,
5 changeless as its glass.
Not a whisper of passage.
Hardly a single stir inside the horizon
except for the rippling
10 wrinkles pushed by our prow

3. Town in central Ohio.
4. As in Job 13.24: "Wherefore hidest thou thy face, and holdest me for thine enemy?"

and the faraway swoop and flurry of a squadron of terns.
The tide at its landward edge ignited a smudge of commotion, 15 skittering sandpipers
    along the farther shore.
In all the days of our marriage
    we had never seen
so unruffled a morning:
20 never had any event
shimmered with so costly a light as we ascended the meandering creek in our sweet boat, surprising no one except 25 a bright-eyed otter.
    Pushed by mere hints
from our paddles,
    we rode up the thickening tide
among heavy wands
30 of ripe marsh grass that wagged seed-bundles
    high above our heads.

Neither one speaking,
    we rose to go ashore
35 and lugged away
    our featherweight kayak
to winter quarters,
    knowing as we stowed it
that this would be the last time, 40 that we would never set out to sea together again.

1989

Peaches

A mouthful of language to swallow:
stretches of beach, sweet clinches,
breaches in walls, pleached° branches; plaited
britches hauled over haunches;
5 hunched leeches, wrenched teachers.
What English can do: ransack
the warmth that chuckles beneath fuzzed surfaces, smooth velvet richness, plashy° juices. splashy
10 I beseech you, peach, clench me into the sweetness of your reaches.

1989

DONALD HALL
b. 1928

Exile[1]

A boy who played and talked and read with me
Fell from a maple tree.

I loved her, but I told her I did not,
And wept, and then forgot.

5 I walked the streets where I was born and grew,
And all the streets were new.

1951–55 1969

From The One Day[2]

Prophecy

I will strike down wooden houses; I will burn aluminum clapboard skin; I will strike down garages where crimson Toyotas sleep side by side; I will explode palaces of gold, silver, and alabaster: — the summer
5 great house and its folly together. Where shopping malls spread plywood and plaster out, and roadhouses serve steak and potatoskins beside Alaska king crab;
where triangular flags proclaim tribes of identical campers;
where airplanes nose to tail exhale kerosene,
10 weeds and ashes will drowse in continual twilight.

I reject the old house and the new car; I reject
Tory and Whig[3] together; I reject the argument that modesty of ambition is sensible because the bigger they are the harder they fall; I reject Waterford;[4]
15 I reject the five and dime; I reject Romulus and Remus;[5]
I reject Martha's Vineyard and the slamdunk contest;
I reject leaded panes; I reject the appointment made

1. Many versions of this poem exist; cf. a much longer one, written earlier but published later (in Hall's 1990 Old and New Poems).
2. A three-part, book-length poem written over several decades. "Prophecy" is the first of the "Four Classic Texts" within the poem's central section, which is introduced with two epigraphs: "Of the opposites that which tends to birth or creation is called war or strife. That which tends to destruction by fire is called concord or peace" (Heraclitus) and "Poetry is preparation for death" (Nadezhda Mandelstam). The two principal voices of the poem, a female sculptor and the author, are set aside here for a "general consciousness that narrates. . . . There are many borrowings and allusions" [Hall's note]. The tone of "Prophecy" suggests particularly an indebtedness to Heraclitus (ca. 540–ca. 480 B.C.E.), the Greek philosopher who argued that the essential stuff of the universe is pure fire, and to the first part of the book of Isaiah, who in a vision saw the vain and the wicked destroyed by fire. Nadezhda Mandelstam (1899–1980), memoirist, was married to the Russian poet Osip Mandelstam (1891–1938).
3. Historically, opposing parties in British politics.
4. Brand of crystal made in Waterford, Ireland.
5. In Roman mythology, twin sons of the god Mars and the mortal Rhea Silvia; descendants of the hero Aeneas; founders of the city of Rome.

at the tennis net or on the seventeenth green; I reject
the Professional Bowlers Tour; I reject matchboxes;
20 I reject purple bathrooms with purple soap in them.

Men who lie awake worrying about taxes, vomiting
at dawn, whose hands shake as they administer Valium, — skin will peel from the meat of their thighs.
Armies that march all day with elephants past pyramids 25 and roll pulling missiles past generals weary of saluting and past president-emperors splendid in cloth-of-gold, — soft rumps of armies will dissipate in rain. Where square miles of corn waver in Minnesota, where tobacco ripens in Carolina and apples in New Hampshire, where wheat 30 turns Kansas green, where pulpmills stink in Oregon, — dust will blow in the darkness and cactus die before it flowers. Where skiers wait for chairlifts, wearing money, low raspberries will part rib bones.

Where the drive-in church raises a chromium cross,
35 dandelions and milkweed will straggle through blacktop.
I will strike from the ocean with waves afire;
I will strike from the hill with rainclouds of lava;
I will strike from darkened air with melanoma in the shape of decorative hexagonals.
40 I will strike down embezzlers and eaters of snails.

I reject Japanese smoked oysters, potted chrysanthemums allowed to die, Tupperware parties, Ronald McDonald, Kaposi's sarcoma, the Taj Mahal, Holsteins wearing electronic necklaces, the Algonquin, Tunisian aqueducts, 45 Phi Beta Kappa keys, the Hyatt Embarcadero, carpenters jogging on the median, and betrayal that engorges
the corrupt heart longing for criminal surrender.
I reject shadows in the corner of the atrium
where Phyllis or Phoebe speaks with Billy or Marc 50 who says that afternoons are best although not reliable.

Your children will wander looting the shopping malls
for forty years, suffering for your idleness,
until the last dwarf body rots in a parking lot.
I will strike down lobbies and restaurants in motels
55 carpeted with shaggy petrochemicals from Maine to Hilton Head, from the Skagit[6] to Tucson.
I will strike down hang gliders, wiry adventurous boys;

6. A bay and county in Washington State. Hilton Head: resort in South Carolina.

their thigh bones will snap, their brains slide from their skulls. I will strike down 60 families cooking wildboar in New Mexico backyards.

Then landscape will clutter with incapable machinery, acres of vacant airplanes and schoolbuses, ploughs with seedlings sprouting and turning brown through colters.[7]
Unlettered dwarves will burrow for warmth and shelter
65 in the caves of dynamos and Plymouths, dying of old age at seventeen. Tribes wandering in the wilderness of their ignorant desolation, who suffer from your idleness, will burn your illuminated
missals to warm their rickety bodies.
70 Terrorists assemble plutonium because you are idle and industrious. The whip-poor-will shrivels and the pickerel chokes under the government of self-love.

Vacancy burns air so that you strangle without oxygen like rats in a biologist's bell jar. The living god sharpens 75 the scythe of my prophecy to strike down red poppies and blue cornflowers. When priests and policemen strike my body's match, Jehovah will flame out;
Jehovah will suck air from the vents of bombshelters.
Therefore let the Buick swell until it explodes;
80 therefore let anorexia starve and bulimia engorge.

When Elzira leaves the house wearing her tennis dress and drives her black Porsche to meet Abraham, quarrels, returns to husband and children, and sobs asleep, drunk, unable to choose among them, — 85 lawns and carpets will turn into tar together with lovers, husbands, and children.
Fat will boil in the sacs of children's clear skin.
I will strike down the nations astronauts and judges;
I will strike down Babylon,[8] I will strike acrobats,
90 I will strike algae and the white birches.

Because professors of law teach ethics in dumbshow, let the colonel become president; because chief executive officers and commissars collect down for pillows,
let the injustice of cities burn city and suburb;
95 let the countryside burn; let the pineforests of Maine explode like a kitchenmatch and the Book of Kells[9] turn

7. Cutting tools attached to plows.
8. The city to which the Jews were carried in captivity (2 Kings 24–25); also, a great but fallen city, epitomizing sinfulness (Revelation 18).
9. An ornately illustrated manuscript of the Gospels of the Christian Scriptures, produced by Scot-ash in a microsecond; let oxen and athletes flash into grease:—I return to Appalachian rocks;

I shall eat bread; I shall prophesy through millennia
100 of Jehovah's day until the sky reddens over cities:

Then houses will burn, even houses of alabaster;
the sky will disappear like a scroll rolled up and hidden in a cave from the industries of idleness.
Mountains will erupt and vanish, becoming deserts,
105 and the sea wash over the sea's lost islands and the earth split open like a corpse's gassy stomach and the sun turn as black as a widow's skirt and the full moon grow red with blood swollen inside it and stars fall from the sky like wind-blown apples, —
110 while Babylon's managers burn in the rage of the Lamb.[1]

1988

Independence Day Letter

Five A.M., the Fourth of July.
I walk by Eagle Pond[2] with the dog, wearing my leather coat
against the clear early chill,
5 looking at water lilies that clutch
cool yellow fists together, as I undertake another day twelve weeks after the Tuesday
we learned that you would die.

10 This afternoon I'll pay bills and write a friend about her book and watch Red Sox baseball.
I'll walk Gussie again.
I'll microwave some Stouffer's.[3]
15 A woman will drive from Bristol to examine your mother's Ford parked beside your Saab
in the dead women's used car lot.

Tonight the Andover fireworks
20 will have to go on without me as I go to bed early, reading
The Man Without Qualities[4] with insufficient attention

tish and Irish monks and completed in Kells, Ireland, in the ninth century.
1. The Lamb of God; i.e., Jesus. This stanza is a freely reconceived paraphrase of Revelation 6.12–16.
2. Pond near Hall's home in New Hampshire. Bristol and Andover are nearby towns.
3. Brand of frozen meals.
4. Unfinished, massive novel by the Austrian author Robert Musil (1880–1942).

because I keep watching you die.
25 Tomorrow I will wake at five to the tenth Wednesday
after the Wednesday we buried you.

1998

THOMAS KINSELLA
b. 1928

Another September

Dreams fled away, this country bedroom, raw
With the touch of the dawn, wrapped in a minor peace,
Hears through an open window the garden draw
Long pitch black breaths, lay bare its apple trees,
5 Ripe pear trees, brambles, windfall-sweetened soil,
Exhale rough sweetness against the starry slates.
Nearer the river sleeps St. John's,[1] all toil
Locked fast inside a dream with iron gates.

Domestic Autumn, like an animal
10 Long used to handling by those countrymen,
Rubs her kind hide against the bedroom wall
Sensing a fragrant child come back again
—Not this half-tolerated consciousness,
Its own cold season never done,
15 But that unspeaking daughter, growing less
Familiar where we fell asleep as one.

Wakeful moth-wings blunder near a chair,
Toss their light shell at the glass, and go
To inhabit the living starlight. Stranded hair 20 Stirs on the still linen. It is as though
The black breathing that billows her sleep, her name,
Drugged under judgment, waned and—bearing daggers
And balances—down the lampless darkness they came,
Moving like women: Justice, Truth, such figures.

1958

Ancestor

I was going up to say something,
and stopped. Her profile against the curtains was old, and dark like a hunting bird's.

1. Church dedicated to St. John the Evangelist.

It was the way she perched on the high stool,
5 staring into herself, with one fist gripping the side of the barrier around her desk
—or her head held by something, from inside.
And not caring for anything around her or anyone there by the shelves.
10 I caught a faint smell, musky and queer.

I may have made some sound—she stopped rocking and pressed her fist in her lap; then she stood up and shut down the lid of the desk, and turned the key.
She shoved a small bottle under her aprons
15 and came toward me, darkening the passageway.

Ancestor . . . among sweet- and fruit-boxes.
Her black heart . . .
Was that a sigh?
—brushing by me in the shadows,
20 with her heaped aprons, through the red hangings to the scullery, and down to the back room.

1973

Tear

I was sent in to see her.
A fringe of jet drops
chattered at my ear
as I went in through the hangings.

5 I was swallowed in chambery dusk.
My heart shrank
at the smell of disused organs and sour kidney.

The black aprons I used to 10 bury my face in were folded at the foot of the bed in the last watery light from the window

(Go in and say goodbye to her) and I was carried off
15 to unfathomable depths.
I turned to look at her.

She stared at the ceiling and puffed her cheek, distracted, propped high in the bed
20 resting for the next attack.

The covers were gathered close up to her mouth,
that the lines of ill-temper still marked. Her grey hair

25 was loosened out like a young woman's all over the pillow, mixed with the shadows criss-crossing her forehead and at her mouth and eyes,

30 like a web of strands tying down her head and tangling down toward the shadow eating away the floor at my feet.

I couldn't stir at first, nor wished to,
for fear she might turn and tempt me 35 (my own father's mother) with open mouth

—with some fierce wheedling whisper—to hide myself one last time against her, and bury my 40 self in her drying mud.

Was I to kiss her? As soon kiss the damp that crept in the flowered walls of this pit.

45 Yet I had to kiss.
I knelt by the bulk of the death bed and sank my face in the chill and smell of her black aprons.

Snuff and musk, the folds against my eyelids,
50 carried me into a derelict place smelling of ash: unseen walls and roofs rustled like breathing.

I found myself disturbing dead ashes for any trace 55 of warmth, when far off in the vaults a single drop splashed. And I found what I was looking for

—not heat nor fire,
60 not any comfort,

but her voice, soft, talking to someone about my father: "God help him, he cried big tears over there by the machine for the poor little thing." Bright

65 drops on the wooden lid for my infant sister. My own wail of child-animal grief was soon done, with any early guess

at sad dullness and tedious pain
70 and lives bitter with hard bondage.
How I tasted it now—
her heart beating in my mouth!

She drew an uncertain breath and pushed at the clothes
75 and shuddered tiredly.
I broke free

and left the room promising myself
when she was really dead
80 I would really kiss.

My grandfather half looked up from the fireplace as I came out, and shrugged and turned back with a deaf stare to the heat.

85 I fidgeted beside him for a minute and went out to the shop.
It was still bright there and I felt better able to breathe.

Old age can digest
90 anything: the commotion at Heaven's gate—the struggle in store for you all your life.

How long and hard it is before you get to Heaven, 95 unless like little Agnes you vanish with early tears.

1973

PHILIP LEVINE
b. 1928

They Feed They Lion

Out of burlap sacks, out of bearing butter,
Out of black bean and wet slate bread,
Out of the acids of rage, the candor of tar,
Out of creosote, gasoline, drive shafts, wooden dollies,
5 They Lion grow.
Out of the gray hills
Of industrial barns, out of rain, out of bus ride,
West Virginia to Kiss My Ass, out of buried aunties,
Mothers hardening like pounded stumps, out of stumps,
10 Out of the bones' need to sharpen and the muscles' to stretch,
They Lion grow.
Earth is eating trees, fence posts,
Gutted cars, earth is calling in her little ones,
"Come home, Come home!" From pig balls,
15 From the ferocity of pig driven to holiness,
From the furred ear and the full jowl come
The repose of the hung belly, from the purpose
They Lion grow.
From the sweet glues of the trotters[1]
20 Come the sweet kinks of the fist, from the full flower
Of the hams the thorax[2] of caves,
From "Bow Down" come "Rise Up,"
Come they Lion from the reeds of shovels,
The grained arm that pulls the hands,
25 They Lion grow.
From my five arms and all my hands,
From all my white sins forgiven, they feed,
From my car passing under the stars,
They Lion, from my children inherit,
30 From the oak turned to a wall, they Lion,
From they sack and they belly opened
And all that was hidden burning on the oil-stained earth
They feed they Lion and he comes.

1972

You Can Have It

My brother comes home from work
and climbs the stairs to our room.
I can hear the bed groan and his shoes drop one by one. You can have it, he says.

1. Cooked pigs' feet.

2. Chest cavity.

5 The moonlight streams in the window and his unshaven face is whitened like the face of the moon. He will sleep long after noon and waken to find me gone.

Thirty years will pass before I remember
10 that moment when suddenly I knew each man has one brother who dies when he sleeps and sleeps when he rises to face this life, and that together they are only one man sharing a heart that always labors, hands 15 yellowed and cracked, a mouth that gasps for breath and asks, Am I gonna make it?

All night at the ice plant he had fed the chute its silvery blocks, and then I stacked cases of orange soda for the children 20 of Kentucky, one gray boxcar at a time with always two more waiting. We were twenty for such a short time and always in the wrong clothes, crusted with dirt and sweat. I think now we were never twenty.

25 In 1948 in the city of Detroit, founded by de la Mothe Cadillac for the distant purposes of Henry Ford,[3] no one wakened or died,
no one walked the streets or stoked a furnace,

for there was no such year, and now 30 that year has fallen off all the old newspapers, calendars, doctors' appointments, bonds,
wedding certificates, drivers licenses.

The city slept. The snow turned to ice.
The ice to standing pools or rivers
35 racing in the gutters. Then bright grass rose between the thousands of cracked squares, and that grass died. I give you back 1948.

I give you all the years from then to the coming one. Give me back the moon
40 with its frail light falling across a face.

3. American automobile manufacturer (1863–1947), associated with Detroit. Antoine Laumet de la Mothe Cadillac (1658–1730), born in France, established a fur-trade post, later the city of Detroit; Cadillac cars are named for him.

Give me back my young brother, hard and furious, with wide shoulders and a curse for God and burning eyes that look upon all creation and say, You can have it.

1979

The Simple Truth

I bought a dollar and a half's worth of small red potatoes, took them home, boiled them in their jackets and ate them for dinner with a little butter and salt.
Then I walked through the dried fields
5 on the edge of town. In middle June the light hung on in the dark furrows at my feet,
and in the mountain oaks overhead the birds were gathering for the night, the jays and mockers squawking back and forth, the finches still darting 10 into the dusty light. The woman who sold me the potatoes was from Poland; she was someone out of my childhood in a pink spangled sweater and sunglasses praising the perfection of all her fruits and vegetables at the road-side stand and urging me to taste 15 even the pale, raw sweet corn trucked all the way, she swore, from New Jersey. "Eat, eat," she said,
"Even if you don't I'll say you did."
Some things
you know all your life. They are so simple and true 20 they must be said without elegance, meter and rhyme, they must be laid on the table beside the salt shaker,
the glass of water, the absence of light gathering in the shadows of picture frames, they must be naked and alone, they must stand for themselves.
25 My friend Henri and I arrived at this together in 1965
before I went away, before he began to kill himself, and the two of us to betray our love. Can you taste what I'm saying? It is onions or potatoes, a pinch of simple salt, the wealth of melting butter, it is obvious, 30 it stays in the back of your throat like a truth
you never uttered because the time was always wrong,
it stays there for the rest of your life, unspoken,
made of that dirt we call earth, the metal we call salt,
in a form we have no words for, and you live on it.

1994

ANNE SEXTON
1928–1974

The Truth the Dead Know

For my mother, born March 1902, died March 1959, and my father, born February 1900, died June 1959

Gone, I say and walk from church,
refusing the stiff procession to the grave,
letting the dead ride alone in the hearse.
It is June. I am tired of being brave.

5 We drive to the Cape. I cultivate myself where the sun gutters from the sky,
where the sea swings in like an iron gate and we touch. In another country people die.

My darling, the wind falls in like stones
10 from the whitehearted water and when we touch
we enter touch entirely. No one's alone.
Men kill for this, or for as much.

And what of the dead? They lie without shoes in their stone boats. They are more like stone 15 than the sea would be if it stopped. They refuse to be blessed, throat, eye and knucklebone.

1962

And One for My Dame[1]

A born salesman,
my father made all his dough
by selling wool to Fieldcrest, Woolrich and Faribo.

A born talker,
5 he could sell one hundred wet-down bales of that white stuff. He could clock the miles and sales and make it pay.

At home each sentence he would utter had first pleased the buyer who'd paid him off in butter.

10 Each word
had been tried over and over, at any rate, on the man who was sold by the man who filled my plate.

1. Allusion to the nursery rhyme "Baa Baa Black Sheep," which ends "One for the master / And one for the dame, / And one for the little boy / Who lives down the lane."

My father hovered
over the Yorkshire pudding and the beef:
15 a peddler, a hawker, a merchant and an Indian chief.

Roosevelt! Willkie! and war![2]
How suddenly gauche I was with my old-maid heart and my funny teenage applause.

Each night at home
20 my father was in love with maps
while the radio fought its battles with Nazis and Japs.

Except when he hid
in his bedroom on a three-day drunk,
he typed out complex itineraries, packed his trunk,

25 his matched luggage and pocketed a confirmed reservation, his heart already pushing over the red routes of the nation.

I sit at my desk
each night with no place to go,
30 opening the wrinkled maps of Milwaukee and Buffalo,

the whole U.S., its cemeteries, its arbitrary time zones,
through routes like small veins, capitals like small stones.

He died on the road,
35 his heart pushed from neck to back,
his white hanky signaling from the window of the Cadillac.

My husband,
as blue-eyed as a picture book, sells wool:
boxes of card waste, laps and rovings he can pull

40 to the thread and say Leicester, Rambouillet, Merino,[3]
a half-blood, it's greasy and thick, yellow as old snow.

And when you drive off, my darling,
Yes, sir! Yes, sir! It's one for my dame, 45 your sample cases branded with my father's name,

your itinerary open,
its tolls ticking and greedy,
its highways built up like new loves, raw and speedy.

1966

2. Franklin Delano Roosevelt (1882–1945), U.S. president during World War II, was opposed by Wendell Lewis Willkie (1892–1944).
3. Types of wool.

L. E. SISSMAN
1928–1976

From Dying: An Introduction[1]

IV. Path. Report

Bruisingly cradled in a Harvard chair
Whose orange arms cramp my pink ones, and whose black Back stamps my back with splat marks, I receive
The brunt of the pathology report,
5 Bitingly couched in critical terms of my
Tissue of fabrications, which is bad.
That Tyrian° specimen on the limelit stage — purplish
Surveyed by Dr. Cyclops,[2] magnified
Countless diameters on its thick slide,
10 Turns out to end in -oma.[3] "But be glad
These things are treatable today," I'm told.
"Why, fifteen years ago—" a dark and grave-
Shaped pause. "But now, a course of radiation, and—"
Sun rays break through. "And if you want X-ray, 15 You've come to the right place." A history,
A half-life of the hospital. Marie
Curie must have endowed it. Cyclotrons,[4]
Like missile silos, lurk within its walls.
It's reassuring, anyway. But bland
20 And middle-classic as these environs are,
And sanguine as his measured words may be,
And soft his handshake, the webbed, inky hand
Locked on the sill, and the unshaven face
Biding outside the window still appall
25 Me as I leave the assignation place.

V. Outbound

Outside, although November by the clock,
Has a thick smell of spring,
And everything—
The low clouds lit
5 Fluorescent green by city lights;
The molten, hissing stream
Of white car lights, cooling
To red and vanishing;
The leaves,
10 Still running from last summer, chattering
Across the pocked concrete;
The wind in trees;
The ones and twos,

1. A long poem in five parts.
2. Title character of a 1940 science fiction/horror movie, a "mad scientist" who shrinks people; named for the one-eyed giants of Greek myth.
3. I.e., a cancer.
4. Accelerators in which particles are propelled in spiral paths. Half-life: time required for half the atoms of a radioactive substance to disintegrate. Marie Curie (1867–1934), Polish physicist in France, codiscoverer of radium.

The twos and threes
15 Of college girls,
Each shining in the dark,
Each carrying
A book or books,
Each laughing to her friend
20 At such a night in fall;
The two-and-twos
Of boys and girls who lean
Together in an A and softly walk
Slowly from lamp to lamp,
25 Alternatively lit
And nighted; Autumn Street,
Astonishingly named, a rivulet
Of asphalt twisting up and back
To some spring out of sight—and everything
30 Recalls one fall
Twenty-one years ago, when I,
A freshman, opening
A green door just across the river,
Found the source
35 Of spring in that warm night,
Surprised the force
That sent me on my way
And set me down
Today. Tonight. Through my 40 Invisible new veil
Of finity, I see
November's world—
Low scud, slick street, three giggling girls—
As, oddly, not as sombre
45 As December,
But as green
As anything:
As spring.

1968

A Deathplace

Very few people know where they will die,
But I do: in a brick-faced hospital,
Divided, not unlike Caesarean Gaul,[5]
Into three parts: the Dean Memorial
5 Wing, in the classic cast of 1910,
Green-grated in unglazed, Aeolian
Embrasures:[6] the Maud Wiggin Building, which Commemorates a dog-jawed Boston bitch
Who fought the brass[7] down to their whipcord knees

5. Roman emperor Julius Caesar (100–44 B.C.E.) conquered Gaul and divided it into three parts.
6. Recesses of doors or windows in the shape of an Aeolian harp.
7. High-ranking military officers.

10 In World War I, and won enlisted men
Some decent hospitals, and, being rich,
Donated her own granite monument;
The Mandeville Pavilion, pink-brick tent
With marble piping, flying snapping flags
15 Above the entry where our bloody rags
Are rolled in to be sponged and sewn again.
Today is fair; tomorrow, scourging rain
(If only my own tears) will see me in Those jaundiced and distempered corridors
20 Off which the five-foot-wide doors slowly close.
White as my skimpy chiton,° I will cringe gown
Before the pinpoint of the least syringe;
Before the buttered catheter goes in;
Before the I.V.'s lisp and drip begins
25 Inside my skin; before the rubber hand
Upon the lancet takes aim and descends
To lay me open, and upon its thumb
Retracts the trouble, a malignant plum;
And finally, I'll quail before the hour
30 When the authorities shut off the power
In that vast hospital, and in my bed
I'll feel my blood go thin, go white, the red,
The rose all leached away, and I'll go dead.
Then will the business of life resume:
35 The muffled trolley wheeled into my room,
The off-white blanket blanking off my face,
The stealing, secret, private, largo° race slow
Down halls and elevators to the place
I'll be consigned to for transshipment, cased
40 In artificial air and light: the ward
That's underground; the terminal; the morgue.
Then one fine day when all the smart flags flap,
A booted man in black with a peaked cap
Will call for me and troll me down the hall
45 And slot me into his black car. That's all.

1969

THOM GUNN
1929–2004

On the Move

"Man, you gotta Go."

The blue jay scuffling in the bushes follows
Some hidden purpose, and the gust of birds
That spurts across the field, the wheeling swallows,

Have nested in the trees and undergrowth.
5 Seeking their instinct, or their poise, or both,
One moves with an uncertain violence
Under the dust thrown by a baffled sense
Or the dull thunder of approximate words.

On motorcycles, up the road, they come:
10 Small, black, as flies hanging in heat, the Boys,
Until the distance throws them forth, their hum
Bulges to thunder held by calf and thigh.
In goggles, donned impersonality,
In gleaming jackets trophied with the dust,
15 They strap in doubt—by hiding it, robust—
And almost hear a meaning in their noise.

Exact conclusion of their hardiness
Has no shape yet, but from known whereabouts
They ride, direction where the tyres press.
20 They scare a flight of birds across the field:
Much that is natural, to the will must yield.
Men manufacture both machine and soul,
And use what they imperfectly control
To dare a future from the taken routes.

25 It is a part solution, after all.
One is not necessarily discord
On earth; or damned because, half animal,
One lacks direct instinct, because one wakes
Afloat on movement that divides and breaks.
30 One joins the movement in a valueless world,
Choosing it, till, both hurler and the hurled,
One moves as well, always toward, toward.

A minute holds them, who have come to go:
The self-defined, astride the created will 35 They burst away; the towns they travel through
Are home for neither bird nor holiness,
For birds and saints complete their purposes.
At worst, one is in motion; and at best,
Reaching no absolute, in which to rest,
40 One is always nearer by not keeping still.

California 1957

A Map of the City

I stand upon a hill and see
A luminous country under me,
Through which at two the drunk must weave;
The transient's pause, the sailor's leave.

5 I notice, looking down the hill,
Arms braced upon a window sill;
And on the web of fire escapes
Move the potential, the grey shapes.

I hold the city here, complete:
10 And every shape defined by light
Is mine, or corresponds to mine,
Some flickering or some steady shine.

This map is ground of my delight.
Between the limits, night by night,
15 I watch a malady's advance,
I recognize my love of chance.

By the recurrent lights I see
Endless potentiality,
The crowded, broken, and unfinished!
20 I would not have the risk diminished.

1961

Black Jackets

In the silence that prolongs the span
Rawly of music when the record ends,
The red-haired boy who drove a van
In weekday overalls but, like his friends,

5 Wore cycle boots and jacket here
To suit the Sunday hangout he was in,
Heard, as he stretched back from his beer,
Leather creak softly round his neck and chin.

Before him, on a coal-black sleeve
10 Remote exertion had lined, scratched, and burned
Insignia that could not revive
The heroic fall or climb where they were earned.

On the other drinkers bent together,
Concocting selves for their impervious kit,
15 He saw it as no more than leather
Which, taut across the shoulders grown to it,

Sent through the dimness of a bar
As sudden and anonymous hints of light
As those that shipping give, that are 20 Now flickers in the Bay,[1] now lost in night.

1. San Francisco Bay.

He stretched out like a cat, and rolled
The bitterish taste of beer upon his tongue,
And listened to a joke being told:
The present was the things he stayed among.

25 If it was only loss he wore,
He wore it to assert, with fierce devotion,
Complicity and nothing more.
He recollected his initiation,

And one especially of the rites.
30 For on his shoulders they had put tattoos:
The group's name on the left, The Knights,
And on the right the slogan Born To Lose.

1961

My Sad Captains

One by one they appear in the darkness: a few friends, and a few with historical names. How late they start to shine!
5 but before they fade they stand perfectly embodied, all the past lapping them like a cloak of chaos. They were men who, I thought, lived only to 10 renew the wasteful force they spent with each hot convulsion.

They remind me, distant now.

True, they are not at rest yet,
but now that they are indeed 15 apart, winnowed° from failures, separated
they withdraw to an orbit and turn with disinterested hard energy, like the stars.

1961

From the Wave

It mounts at sea, a concave wall
Down-ribbed with shine,
And pushes forward, building tall
Its steep incline.

5 Then from their hiding rise to sight
Black shapes on boards
Bearing before the fringe of white
It mottles towards.

Their pale feet curl, they poise their weight
10 With a learn'd skill.
It is the wave they imitate
Keeps them so still.

The marbling bodies have become
Half wave, half men,
15 Grafted it seems by feet of foam
Some seconds, then,

Late as they can, they slice the face
In timed procession:
Balance is triumph in this place,
20 Triumph possession.

The mindless heave of which they rode
A fluid shelf
Breaks as they leave it, falls and, slowed,
Loses itself.

25 Clear, the sheathed bodies slick as seals
Loosen and tingle;
And by the board the bare foot feels
The suck of shingle.[2]

They paddle in the shallows still;
30 Two splash each other;
Then all swim out to wait until
The right waves gather.

1971

"All Do Not All Things Well"[3]

Implies that some therefore
Do well, for its own sake,
One thing they undertake,
Because it has enthralled them.

5 I used to like the two
Auto freaks as I called them
Who laboured in their driveway,

2. Coarse, rounded pebbles and stones at the seashore.

3. Thomas Campion, "Now Winter Nights Enlarge," line 17 (see p. 281).

Its concrete black with oil,
In the next block that year.

10 One, hurt in jungle war,
Had a false leg, the other
Raised a huge beard above
A huge Hell's Angel belly.

They seemed to live on beer
15 And corn chips from the deli.

Always with friends, they sprawled
Beneath a ruined car
In that inert but live way
Of scrutinizing innards.
20 And one week they extracted
An engine to examine,
Transplant shining like tar
Fished out into the sun.

"It's all that I enjoy,"
25 Said the stiff-legged boy.
That was when the officious
Realtor had threatened them
For brashly operating
A business on the street
30 —An outsider, that woman
Who wanted them evicted,
Wanted the neighbourhood neat
To sell it. That was when
The boy from Viet Nam told me
35 That he'd firebomb her car.
He didn't of course, she won.

I am sorry that they went.
Quick with a friendly greeting,
They were gentle joky men
40 —Certainly not ambitious,
Perhaps not intelligent
Unless about a car,
Their work one thing they knew
They could for certain do
45 With a disinterest
And passionate expertise
To which they gave their best
Desires and energies.
Such oily-handed zest
50 By-passed the self like love.
I thought that they were good
For any neighbourhood.

1992

The Missing

Now as I watch the progress of the plague,[4]
The friends surrounding me fall sick, grow thin,
And drop away. Bared, is my shape less vague
—Sharply exposed and with a sculpted skin?

5 I do not like the statue's chill contour,
Not nowadays. The warmth investing me
Let outward through mind, limb, feeling, and more
In an involved increasing family.

Contact of friend led to another friend,
10 Supple entwinement through the living mass
Which for all that I knew might have no end,
Image of an unlimited embrace.

I did not just feel ease, though comfortable:
Aggressive as in some ideal of sport,
15 With ceaseless movement thrilling through the whole,
Their push kept me as firm as their support.

But death—Their deaths have left me less defined:
It was their pulsing presence made me clear.
I borrowed from it, I was unconfined,
20 Who tonight balance unsupported here,

Eyes glaring from raw marble, in a pose
Languorously part-buried in the block,
Shins perfect and no calves, as if I froze
Between potential and a finished work.

25 —Abandoned incomplete, shape of a shape,
In which exact detail shows the more strange,
Trapped in unwholeness, I find no escape
Back to the play of constant give and change.

1987 1992

4. AIDS.

JOHN HOLLANDER
b. 1929

Swan and Shadow

Dusk
Above the water hang the loud flies
Here
O so gray
then
What A pale signal will appear
When Soon before its shadow fades
Where Here in this pool of opened eye
In us No Upon us As at the very edges of where we take shape in the dark air
this object bares its image awakening ripples of recognition that will brush darkness up into light even after this bird this hour both drift by atop the perfect sad instant now already passing out of sight toward yet-untroubled reflection
this image bears its object darkening into memorial shades Scattered bits of light No of water Or something across water Breaking up No Being regathered soon Yet by then a swan will have gone Yes out of mind into what vast pale hush of a place past sudden dark as if a swan sang

1969

Adam's Task

"And Adam gave names to all cattle, and to the fowl of the air, and to every beast of the field . . ."

—Gen. 2:20

Thou, paw-paw-paw; thou, glurd; thou, spotted Glurd; thou, whitestap, lurching through
The high-grown brush; thou, pliant-footed,
Implex; thou, awagabu.

5 Every burrower, each flier
Came for the name he had to give:
Gay, first work, ever to be prior,
Not yet sunk to primitive.

Thou, verdle; thou, McFleery's pomma;
10 Thou; thou; thou—three types of grawl;
Thou, flisket; thou, kabasch; thou, comma-
Eared mashawk; thou, all; thou, all.

Were, in a fire of becoming,
Laboring to be burned away,
15 Then work, half-measuring, half-humming,
Would be as serious as play.

Thou, pambler; thou, rivarn; thou, greater
Wherret, and thou, lesser one;
Thou, sproal; thou, zant; thou, lily-eater.
20 Naming's over. Day is done.

1971

An Old-Fashioned Song

(Nous n'irons plus au bois)[1]

No more walks in the wood:
The trees have all been cut
Down, and where once they stood
Not even a wagon rut
5 Appears along the path
Low brush is taking over.

No more walks in the wood;
This is the aftermath
Of afternoons in the clover
10 Fields where we once made love

1. " 'Nous n'irons plus au bois / Les lauriers sont coupés' (We'll go no more to the woods / The laurels have been cut down)—from a French children's round dance" [Hollander's note].

Then wandered home together
Where the trees arched above,
Where we made our own weather
When branches were the sky.
15 Now they are gone for good,
And you, for ill, and I Am only a passer-by.

We and the trees and the way
Back from the fields of play
20 Lasted as long as we could.
No more walks in the wood.

1993

Variations on a Fragment by Trumbull Stickney[2]

I hear a river thro' the valley wander
Whose water runs, the song alone remaining.
A rainbow stands and summer passes under,

Flowing like silence in the light of wonder.
5 In the near distances it is still raining
Where now the valley fills again with thunder,

Where now the river in her wide meander,
Losing at each loop what she had been gaining,
Moves into what one might as well call yonder.

10 The way of the dark water is to ponder
The way the light sings as of something waning.
The far-off waterfall can sound asunder

Stillness of distances, as if in blunder,
Tumbling over the rim of all explaining.
15 Water proves nothing, but can only maunder.[3]

Shadows show nothing, but can only launder
The lovely land that sunset had been staining,
Long fields of which the falling light grows fonder.

Here summer stands while all its songs pass under,
20 A riverbank still time runs by, remaining.
I will remember rainbows as I wander.

1993

2. Cf. Stickney's "Fragments," IX (p. 1252). The three-line poem provides Hollander's first stanza.

3. Move aimlessly; also, mutter.

RICHARD HOWARD
b. 1929

Nikolaus Mardruz to his Master Ferdinand, Count of Tyrol, 1565[1]

A tribute to Robert Browning and in celebration of the 65th birthday of Harold Bloom,[2] who made such tribute only natural.

My Lord recalls Ferrara?[3] How walls rise out of water yet appear to recede identically into it, as if
5 built in both directions: soaring and sinking . . .
Such mirroring was my first dismay—my next, having crossed the moat, was making out that, for all its grandeur, the great 10 pile, observed close to, is close to a ruin!
(Even My Lord's most unstinting dowry
may not restore these wasted precincts to what their deteriorating state demands.)
15 Queasy it made me, glancing first down there at swans in the moat apparently feeding on their own doubled image, then up at the citadel,
20 so high—or so deep,
and everywhere those carved effigies of men and women, monsters among them crowding the ramparts and seeming at home
25 in the dingy water that somehow held them up as if for our surveillance—ours?
anyone's who looked!
All that pretension
of marble display, the whole improbable 30 menagerie with but one purpose:
having to be seen.
Such was the matter
of Ferrara, and such the manner,
when at last we met, of the Duke in greeting 35 My Lordship's Envoy: life in fallen stone!

1. This poem is in the voice of the envoy of the Count of Tyrol, upon returning home to Austria from the visit to the Duke of Ferrara portrayed in "My Last Duchess," by the English poet Robert Browning (1812–1899). Browning's poem implies that the Duke ordered his first wife's death; the possibility of marriage between himself and the Count's niece closes the poem and provides the occasion for Howard's poem. Cf. footnote 4 to "My Last Duchess" (p. 1012) for Browning's blending of fact and fiction.
2. American literary critic (b. 1930).
3. City in northern Italy.

Several hours were to elapse, in the keeping of his lackeys, before the Envoy of My Lord the Count
40 of Tyrol might see or even be seen to by His Grace the Duke of Ferrara, though from such neglect no deliberate
slight need be inferred:
45 now that I have had an opportunity —have had, indeed, the obligation—to fix on His Grace that perlustration° thorough inspection or power of scrutiny for which 50 (I believe) My Lord holds his Envoy's service in some favor still,
I see that the Duke,
by his own lights or, perhaps, more properly said, by his own tenebrosity,° obscurity
55 could offer some excuse for such cunctation° . . . tardiness
Appraising a set of cameos
just brought from Cairo by a Jew in his trust,
His Grace had been rapt
60 in connoisseurship, that study which alone can distract him from his wonted courtesy; he was affability itself, once his mind
65 could be deflected from mere objects.

At last I presented (with those documents which in some detail describe and define the duties of both signators) the portrait 70 of your daughter the Countess, observing the while his countenance. No fault was found with our contract, of which each article had been so correctly framed 75 (if I may say so) as to ascertain a pre-nuptial alliance which must persuade and please the most punctilious (and impecunious)
80 of future husbands.
Principally, or (if I may be allowed the amendment) perhaps Ducally,
His Grace acknowledged himself beguiled by 85 Cranach's[4] portrait of our young Countess, praising the design, the hues, the glaze—the frame!

4. Lucas Cranach the Younger (1515–1586), German painter and graphic artist.

and appeared averse,
for a while, even
to letting the panel leave his hands!
90 Examining those same hands, I was convinced that no matter what the result of our
(at this point, promising) negotiations, your daughter's likeness must now remain
95 "for good," as we say, among Ferrara's treasures, already one more trophy in His Grace's multifarious holdings, like those marble busts
100 lining the drawbridge, like those weed-stained statues grinning up at us from the still moat, and—inside as well as out—those grotesque figures and faces
105 fastened to the walls. So be it!

Real bother (after all, one painting, for Cranach —and My Lord—need be no great forfeiture)
110 commenced only when the Duke himself led me out of the audience-chamber and laboriously
(he is no longer
a young man) to a secret penthouse 115 high on the battlements where he can indulge those despotic tastes
he denominates,
half smiling over the heartless words,
"the relative consolations of semblance."
120 "Sir, suppose you draw that curtain," smiling
in earnest now, and so I sought—but what appeared a piece of drapery proved a painted deceit!
125 My embarrassment
afforded a cue for audible laughter, and only then His Grace, visibly relishing his trick,
turned the thing around,
130 whereupon appeared, on the reverse,
the late Duchess of Ferrara to the life!
Instanter the Duke praised the portrait
so readily provided by one Pandolf[5]— 135 a monk by some profane article attached to the court,

5. Fra (i.e., Brother) Pandolph, an artist invented by Browning.

hence answerable
for taking likenesses as required
in but a day's diligence, so it was claimed . . .
140 Myself I find it but a mountebank's° charlatan's proficiency—another chicane, like that illusive curtain, a waxwork sort of nature called forth:
145 cold legerdemain!° sleight of hand
Though extranea such as the hares (copulating!), the doves, and a full-blown rose were showily limned,
I could not discern
150 aught to be loved in that countenance itself, likely to rival, much less to excel
the life illumined
in Cranach's image
of our Countess, which His Grace had set 155 beside the dead woman's presentment . . . And took, so evident was
the supremacy,
no further pains to assert Fra Pandolf's skill.
One last hard look, whereupon the Duke
160 resumed his discourse in an altered tone,
now some unintelligible rant
of stooping—His Grace chooses "never to stoop" when he makes reproof . . .
165 My Lord will take this as but a figure: not only is the Duke no longer young, his body is so queerly misshapen
that even to speak
170 of "not stooping" seems absurdity:
the creature is stooped, whether by cruel or impartial cause—say
Time or the Tempter°— Devil
I shall not venture to hypothecate. Cause 175 or no cause, it would appear he marked some motive for his
"reproof," a mortal chastisement in fact inflicted on his poor Duchess, put away (I take it so) 180 for smiling—at whom?
Brother Pandolf? or some visitor to court during the sitting?
—too generally, if I construe
the Duke's clue rightly,
185 to survive the terms of his . . . severe protocol. My Lord, at the time it was delivered to me thus,
the admonition

if indeed it was 190 any such thing, seemed no more of a menace than the rest of his rodomontade;° boasting item, he pointed,
as we toiled downstairs,
to that bronze Neptune by our old Claus 195 (there must be at least six of them cluttering
the Summer Palace at Innsbruck), claiming it was "cast in bronze for me."[6] Nonsense, of course.

But upon reflection, I suppose 200 we had better take the old reprobate at his unspeakable word . . . Why, even assuming his boasts should be as plausible
as his avarice,
205 no "cause" for dismay:
once ensconced here as the Duchess, your daughter need no more apprehend the Duke's murderous temper
than his matchless taste.
210 For I have devised a means whereby the dowry so flagrantly pursued by our insolvent Duke ("no
just pretense of mine be disallowed"[7] indeed!), instead of being 215 paid as he pleads in one globose° sum, globe-shaped should drip into his coffers by degrees—
say, one fifth each year—then after five such years, the dowry itself to be doubled, 220 always assuming that Her Grace enjoys her usual smiling health. The years are her ally in such an arbitrament, and with confidence
225 My Lord can assure the new Duchess (assuming her Duke abides by these stipulations and his own propensity for accumulating
230 "semblances") the long devotion (so long as he lasts) of her last Duke . . . Or more likely, if I guess aright
your daughter's intent, of that young lordling I might make so 235 bold as to designate her next Duke, as well . . .

6. Cf. "My Last Duchess," lines 54–56. Claus of Innsbruck is also fictional.

7. Cf. "My Last Duchess," lines 50–51.

Ever determined in
My Lordship's service,
I remain his Envoy
to Ferrara as to the world.
240 Nikolaus Mardruz.

1995

JOHN MONTAGUE
b. 1929

Like Dolmens[1] Round My Childhood, the Old People

Like dolmens round my childhood, the old people.

Jamie MacCrystal sang to himself,
A broken song without tune, without words;
He tipped me a penny every pension day.
5 Fed kindly crusts to winter birds.
When he died, his cottage was robbed,
Mattress and money box torn and searched.
Only the corpse they didn't disturb.

Maggie Owens was surrounded by animals,
10 A mongrel bitch and shivering pups,
Even in her bedroom a she-goat cried.
She was a well of gossip defiled,[2]
Fanged chronicler of a whole countryside;
Reputed a witch, all I could find
15 Was her lonely need to deride.

The Nialls lived along a mountain lane
Where heather bells bloomed, clumps of foxglove.
All were blind, with Blind Pension and Wireless,[3]
Dead eyes serpent-flicked as one entered
20 To shelter from a downpour of mountain rain.
Crickets chirped under the rocking hearthstone
Until the muddy sun shone out again.

Mary Moore lived in a crumbling gatehouse,
Famous as Pisa[4] for its leaning gable.
25 Bag-apron and boots, she tramped the fields
Driving lean cattle from a miry stable.
A by-word for fierceness, she fell asleep
Over love stories, Red Star and Red Circle,[5]
Dreamed of gypsy love rites, by firelight sealed.

1. Ancient standing stones.
2. Cf. Edmund Spenser, Faerie Queene 4.2.32: "Dan [i.e., 'Sir'] Chaucer," well of English undefiled."
3. Radio. Blind Pension: state-provided income for sightless people.
4. The Leaning Tower of Pisa.
5. Cheap-magazine romances.

30 Wild Billy Eagleson married a Catholic servant girl
When all his Loyal[6] family passed on:
We danced round him shouting "To Hell with King Billy",[7]
And dodged from the arc of his flailing blackthorn.° knobbed cane
Forsaken by both creeds, he showed little concern
35 Until the Orange° drums banged past in the summer Protestant
And bowler and sash aggressively shone.

Curate and doctor trudged to attend them,
Through knee-deep snow, through summer heat,
From main road to lane to broken path,
40 Gulping the mountain air with painful breath.
Sometimes they were found by neighbours,
Silent keepers of a smokeless hearth,
Suddenly cast in the mould of death.

Ancient Ireland, indeed! I was reared by her bedside,
45 The rune and the chant, evil eye and averted head,
Fomorian[8] fierceness of family and local feud.
Gaunt figures of fear and of friendliness,
For years they trespassed on my dreams,
Until once, in a standing circle of stones,[9]
50 I felt their shadows pass

Into that dark permanence of ancient forms.

1959

Old Mythologies

And now, at last, all proud deeds done,
Mouths dust-stopped, dark they embrace
Suitably disposed, as urns, underground.
Cattle munching soft spring grass
5 —Epicures of shamrock and the four-leaved clover—
Hear a whimper of ancient weapons,
As a whole dormitory of heroes turn over,
Regretting their butchers' days.
This valley cradles their archaic madness
10 As once, on an impossibly epic morning,
It upheld their savage stride:
To bagpiped battle marching,
Wolfhounds, lean as models,
At their urgent heels.

1961

6. Loyalist, Protestant.
7. A Roman Catholic taunt to Protestant coreligionists of King William III of England, who at the Battle of the Boyne (1690) defeated his predecessor, the Roman Catholic King James II, thereby establishing the Protestant domination of Ireland.
8. The Fomorians were demons or evil gods in Irish pagan mythology.
9. Prehistoric ring of large blocks of stone set upright in the ground.

The Trout

Flat on the bank I parted
Rushes to ease my hands
In the water without a ripple
And tilt them slowly downstream
5 To where he lay, light as a leaf,
In his fluid sensual dream.

Bodiless lord of creation
I hung briefly above him
Savouring my own absence
10 Senses expanding in the slow
Motion, the photographic calm
That grows before action.

As the curve of my hands
Swung under his body
15 He surged, with visible pleasure.
I was so preternaturally close
I could count every stipple
But still cast no shadow, until

The two palms crossed in a cage
20 Under the lightly pulsing gills.
Then (entering my own enlarged Shape, which rode on the water)
I gripped. To this day I can Taste his terror on my hands.

1966

All Legendary Obstacles

All legendary obstacles lay between Us, the long imaginary plain,
The monstrous ruck of mountains
And, swinging across the night,
5 Flooding the Sacramento, San Joaquin,[1]
The hissing drift of winter rain.

All day I waited, shifting
Nervously from station to bar
As I saw another train sail
10 By, the San Francisco Chief or Golden Gate, water dripping
From great flanged° wheels. ribbed

1. River in central California that flows northwest into the Sacramento River.

At midnight you came, pale
Above the negro porter's lamp.
15 I was too blind with rain
And doubt to speak, but Reached from the platform
Until our chilled hands met.

You had been travelling for days
20 With an old lady, who marked
A neat circle on the glass
With her glove, to watch us
Move into the wet darkness
Kissing, still unable to speak.

1966

PETER PORTER
b. 1929

A Consumer's Report

The name of the product I tested is Life,
I have completed the form you sent me
and understand that my answers are confidential.

I had it as a gift,
5 I didn't feel much while using it,
in fact I think I'd have liked to be more excited.
It seemed gentle on the hands
but left an embarrassing deposit behind.
It was not economical
10 and I have used much more than I thought (I suppose I have about half left but it's difficult to tell)— although the instructions are fairly large there are so many of them
15 I don't know which to follow, especially as they seem to contradict each other.
I'm not sure such a thing should be put in the way of children—
It's difficult to think of a purpose
20 for it. One of my friends says it's just to keep its maker in a job.
Also the price is much too high.
Things are piling up so fast,
after all, the world got by 25 for a thousand million years without this, do we need it now?
(Incidentally, please ask your man to stop calling me "the respondent",

I don't like the sound of it.)
30 There seems to be a lot of different labels, sizes and colours should be uniform,
the shape is awkward, it's waterproof but not heat resistant, it doesn't keep yet it's very difficult to get rid of:
35 whenever they make it cheaper they seem to put less in—if you say you don't want it, then it's delivered anyway.
I'd agree it's a popular product,
it's got into the language; people
40 even say they're on the side of it.
Personally I think it's overdone,
a small thing people are ready to behave badly about. I think we should take it for granted. If its 45 experts are called philosophers or market researchers or historians, we shouldn't care. We are the consumers and the last law makers. So finally, I'd buy it.
But the question of a "best buy"
50 I'd like to leave until I get the competitive product you said you'd send.

1970

An Angel in Blythburgh Church[1]

Shot down from its enskied formation,
This stern-faced plummet rests against the wall;
Cromwell's soldiers peppered it[2] and now the death-
watch beetle has it in thrall.[3]

5 If you make fortunes from wool, along
The weeping winter foreshores of the tide,
You build big churches with clerestories[4]
And place angels high inside.

Their painted faces guard and guide. Now or 10 Tomorrow or whenever is the promise—
The resurrection comes: fix your eyes halfway
Between Heaven and Diss.[5]

1. Medieval statue in Blythburgh, a small village in northeast Suffolk, England.
2. The English general and statesman Oliver Cromwell (1599–1658) led the anti-Royalist "Roundheads," who defeated the "Cavaliers" loyal to King Charles I in the English Civil War. Largely Puritan, they defaced many church decorations that they considered idolatrous.
3. Cf. Keats, "La Belle Dame sans Merci," lines 39–40 (p. 918). Death-watch beetle: a bug that eats wood.
4. Upper stories with their own windows.
5. A town in Norfolk, near Blythburgh; also, as Dis, the Roman god of the underworld.

The face is crudely carved, simplified by wind;
It looks straight at God and waits for orders,
15 Buffeted by the organ militant, and blasted
By choristers and recorders.

Faith would have our eyes as wooden and as certain.
It might be worth it, to start the New Year's hymn
Allowing for death as a mere calculation,
20 A depreciation, entered in.

Or so I fancy looking at the roof beams
Where the dangerous beetle sails. What is it Turns an atheist's mind to prayer in almost Any church on a country visit?

25 Greed for love or certainty or forgiveness?
High security rising with the sea birds?
A theology of self looking for precedents?
A chance to speak old words?

Rather, I think of a woman lying on her bed[6]
30 Staring for hours up to the ceiling where Nothing is projected—death the only angel
To shield her from despair.

1978

An Exequy[7]

In wet May, in the months of change,
In a country you wouldn't visit, strange
Dreams pursue me in my sleep,
Black creatures of the upper deep—
5 Though you are five months dead, I see
You in guilt's iconography,
Dear Wife, lost beast, beleaguered child,
The stranded monster with the mild
Appearance, whom small waves tease,
10 (Andromeda[8] upon her knees
In orthodox deliverance)
And you alone of pure substance,
The unformed form of life, the earth
Which Piero's[9] brushes brought to birth
15 For all to greet as myth, a thing
Out of the box of imagining.

6. Porter's wife, who committed suicide in 1974.
7. Funeral rite. See note 6 above.
8. In Greek mythology, an Ethiopian princess. Her mother, Cassiopeia, claimed to be more beautiful than the Nereids, sea nymphs who then persuaded the god Neptune to send a sea monster to her homeland. An oracle demanded that Andromeda be sacrificed to the monster in expiation, but she was saved by Perseus. After her death, she was placed among the stars.
9. Piero della Francesca (ca. 1420–1492), Italian painter.

This introduction serves to sing
Your mortal death as Bishop King[1]
Once hymned in tetrametric rhyme
20 His young wife, lost before her time;
Though he lived on for many years
His poem each day fed new tears
To that unreaching spot, her grave,
His lines a baroque architrave[2]
25 The Sunday poor with bottled flowers
Would by-pass in their mourning hours,
Esteeming ragged natural life
("Most dearly loved, most gentle wife"),
Yet, looking back when at the gate
30 And seeing grief in formal state
Upon a sculpted angel group,
Were glad that men of god could stoop
To give the dead a public stance
And freeze them in their mortal dance.

35 The words and faces proper to
My misery are private—you
Would never share your heart with those Whose only talent's to suppose,
Nor from your final childish bed
40 Raise a remote confessing head—
The channels of our lives are blocked,
The hand is stopped upon the clock,
No one can say why hearts will break
And marriages are all opaque:
45 A map of loss, some posted cards,
The living house reduced to shards,
The abstract hell of memory,
The pointlessness of poetry—
These are the instances which tell
50 Of something which I know full well,
I owe a death to you—one day
The time will come for me to pay
When your slim shape from photographs
Stands at my door and gently asks
55 If I have any work to do
Or will I come to bed with you.
O scala enigmatica,[3]
I'll climb up to that attic where
The curtain of your life was drawn
60 Some time between despair and dawn—
I'll never know with what halt steps
You mounted to this plain eclipse
But each stair now will station me

1. Bishop Henry King (1592–1669), English poet, author of "An Exequy to His Matchless, Never-to-Be-Forgotten Friend" (see p. 363).
2. Lintel or other molding around a door.
3. O enigmatic stairs (Latin); an allusion to the stairs leading to the attic in which Porter's wife died.

A black responsibility
65 And point me to that shut-down room,
"This be your due appointed tomb."

I think of us in Italy:
Gin-and-chianti-fuelled, we
Move in a trance through Paradise,
70 Feeding at last our starving eyes,
Two people of the English blindness
Doing each masterpiece the kindness
Of discovering it—from Baldovinetti[4]
To Venice's most obscure jetty.
75 A true unfortunate traveller, I
Depend upon your nurse's eye
To pick the altars where no Grinner° grotesque fiend
Puts us off our tourists' dinner
And in hotels to bandy words
80 With Genevan girls and talking birds,
To wear your feet out following me
To night's end and true amity,
And call my rational fear of flying
A paradigm of Holy Dying—
85 And, oh my love, I wish you were Once more with me, at night somewhere
In narrow streets applauding wines,
The moon above the Apennines° mountain chain
As large as logic and the stars,
90 Most middle-aged of avatars,
As bright as when they shone for truth
Upon untried and avid youth.

The rooms and days we wandered through
Shrink in my mind to one—there you
95 Lie quite absorbed by peace—the calm
Which life could not provide is balm
In death. Unseen by me, you look
Past bed and stairs and half-read book
Eternally upon your home,
100 The end of pain, the left alone.
I have no friend, or intercessor,
No psychopomp[5] or true confessor
But only you who know my heart
In every cramped and devious part—
105 Then take my hand and lead me out,
The sky is overcast by doubt,
The time has come, I listen for
Your words of comfort at the door,
O guide me through the shoals of fear—
110 "Fürchte dich nicht, ich bin bei dir."[6]

1978

4. Alessio Baldovinetti (1425–1499), Italian painter.
5. Someone who acts as a guide of the soul; also, a conductor of souls to the place of the dead.
6. Fear not, I am with you (German); opening lyrics of Bach's motet BMV 228.

ADRIENNE RICH
b. 1929

Aunt Jennifer's Tigers

Aunt Jennifer's tigers prance across a screen,
Bright topaz denizens of a world of green.
They do not fear the men beneath the tree;
They pace in sleek chivalric certainty.

5 Aunt Jennifer's fingers fluttering through her wool
Find even the ivory needle hard to pull.
The massive weight of Uncle's wedding band
Sits heavily upon Aunt Jennifer's hand.

When Aunt is dead, her terrified hands will lie
10 Still ringed with ordeals she was mastered by.
The tigers in the panel that she made
Will go on prancing, proud and unafraid.

1951

Snapshots of a Daughter-in-Law

1

You, once a belle in Shreveport,[1]
with henna-colored hair, skin like a peachbud, still have your dresses copied from that time,
and play a Chopin prelude 5 called by Cortot: "Delicious recollections float like perfume through the memory."[2]

Your mind now, moldering like wedding-cake, heavy with useless experience, rich with suspicion, rumor, fantasy, 10 crumbling to pieces under the knife-edge of mere fact. In the prime of your life.

Nervy, glowering, your daughter wipes the teaspoons, grows another way.

2

Banging the coffee-pot into the sink
15 she hears the angels chiding, and looks out

1. City in Louisiana.
2. A remark made by the French pianist Alfred Cortot (1877–1962) in his book Chopin: 24 Preludes (1930); he is referring specifically to Prelude No. 7, Andantino, A Major, by Frederic Chopin (1810–1849), Polish composer and piano virtuoso, who settled in Paris in 1831.

past the raked gardens to the sloppy sky.
Only a week since They said: Have no patience.

The next time it was: Be insatiable.
Then: Save yourself; others you cannot save.
20 Sometimes she's let the tapstream scald her arm,
a match burn to her thumbnail,

or held her hand above the kettle's snout right in the woolly steam. They are probably angels, since nothing hurts her anymore, except
25 each morning's grit blowing into her eyes.

3

A thinking woman sleeps with monsters.
The beak that grips her, she becomes.[3] And Nature, that sprung-lidded, still commodious steamer-trunk of tempora and mores[4] 30 gets stuffed with it all: the mildewed orange-flowers, the female pills,[5] the terrible breasts of Boadicea[6] beneath flat foxes' heads and orchids.

Two handsome women, gripped in argument,
each proud, acute, subtle, I hear scream
35 across the cut glass and majolica like Furies[7] cornered from their prey:
The argument ad feminam,[8] all the old knives that have rusted in my back, I drive in yours, ma semblable, ma soeur![9]

4

40 Knowing themselves too well in one another:
their gifts no pure fruition, but a thorn,
the prick filed sharp against a hint of scorn . . .
Reading while waiting for the iron to heat,
45 writing, My Life had stood—a Loaded Gun—[1]
in that Amherst pantry while the jellies boil and scum, or, more often,

3. A reference to W. B. Yeats's "Leda and the Swan" (p. 1200), in which Zeus in the shape of a swan rapes Leda and then lets her drop from "the indifferent beak."
4. Literally, times and customs—from the ancient Roman orator Cicero's famous phrase, "O tempora! O mores!"
5. Remedies for menstrual pain.
6. British queen (d. 60 C.E.), who led her people in a large though ultimately unsuccessful revolt against Roman rule.
7. Greek goddesses of vengeance. Majolica: a glazed earthenware.
8. Feminine version of the Latin phrase ad hominem (to the man), referring to an argument directed not to reason but to personal prejudices and emotions.
9. The last line of "Au lecteur" ("To the Reader"), by the French poet Charles Baudelaire (1821–1867), addresses "Hypocrite lecteur!—mon semblable—mon frère!" ("Hypocrite reader!—my likeness!—my brother!"); Rich here instead addresses "ma soeur" (my sister). See also T. S. Eliot, The Waste Land, line 76 (p. 1346).
1. "Emily Dickinson, Complete Poems, ed. T. H. Johnson, 1960, p. 369" [Rich's note]; see p. 1115. Amherst, referred to in the next line, is the town in Massachusetts where Dickinson lived her entire life (1830–1886).

iron-eyed and beaked and purposed as a bird,
dusting everything on the whatnot every day of life.

5

50 Dulce ridens, dulce loquens,[2]
she shaves her legs until they gleam like petrified mammoth-tusk.

6

When to her lute Corinna sings[3]
neither words nor music are her own;
55 only the long hair dipping over her cheek, only the song of silk against her knees and these adjusted in reflections of an eye.

60 Poised, trembling and unsatisfied, before an unlocked door, that cage of cages, tell us, you bird, you tragical machine—is this fertilisante douleur?[4] Pinned down by love, for you the only natural action, 65 are you edged more keen to prise the secrets of the vault? has Nature shown her household books to you, daughter-in-law, that her sons never saw?

7

"To have in this uncertain world some stay 70 which cannot be undermined, is of the utmost consequence."[5]
Thus wrote
a woman, partly brave and partly good,
who fought with what she partly understood.
75 Few men about her would or could do more,
hence she was labeled harpy, shrew and whore.

8

"You all die at fifteen," said Diderot,[6]
and turn part legend, part convention.
Still, eyes inaccurately dream

2. Sweetly laughing, sweetly speaking (Latin); from Horace, Odes 22.23–24.
3. First line of a lyric by Thomas Campion (see p. 280).
4. Fertilizing (i.e., life-giving) sorrow (French).
5. "From Mary Wollstonecraft, Thoughts on the Education of Daughters, London, 1787" [Rich's note]. Wollstonecraft (1759–1797), one of the first feminist thinkers, is best-known for her Vindication of the Rights of Woman (1792).
6. Denis Diderot (1713–1784), French philosopher, encyclopedist, playwright, and critic. " 'You all die at fifteen': 'Vous mourez toutes a quinze ans,' from the Lettres à Sophie Volland, quoted by Simone de Beauvoir in Le Deuxième Sexe, Vol. II, pp. 123–24" [Rich's note].

80 behind closed windows blankening with steam.
Deliciously, all that we might have been,
all that we were—fire, tears,
wit, taste, martyred ambition—
stirs like the memory of refused adultery
85 the drained and flagging bosom of our middle years.

9

Not that it is done well, but that it is done at all?[7] Yes, think of the odds! or shrug them off forever.
This luxury of the precocious child,
90 Time's precious chronic invalid,— would we, darlings, resign it if we could?
Our blight has been our sinecure:
mere talent was enough for us—
glitter in fragments and rough drafts.

95 Sigh no more, ladies.
Time is male
and in his cups[8] drinks to the fair.
Bemused by gallantry, we hear our mediocrities over-praised, 100 indolence read as abnegation, slattern thought styled intuition,
every lapse forgiven, our crime only to cast too bold a shadow or smash the mold straight off.

105 For that, solitary confinement,
tear gas, attrition shelling.
Few applicants for that honor.

10

Well,
she's long about her coming, who must be 110 more merciless to herself than history.
Her mind full to the wind, I see her plunge breasted and glancing through the currents, taking the light upon her at least as beautiful as any boy
115 or helicopter,[9]

7. "Sir, a woman's preaching is like a dog's walking on his hinder legs. It is not done well; but you are surprised to find it done at all": the English writer Samuel Johnson (1709–1784), to his friend and biographer, James Boswell (1740–1795).
8. While drinking. "Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more, / Men were deceivers ever": Shakespeare, Much Ado About Nothing 2.3.56–57.
9. "She comes down from the remoteness of ages, from Thebes, from Crete, from Chichén-Itzá; and she is also the totem set deep in the African jungle; she is a helicopter and she is a bird; and there is this, the greatest wonder of all: under her tinted hair the forest murmur becomes a thought, and words issue from her breasts" (Simone de Beauvoir, The Second Sex, trans. H. M. Parshley [1953], p. 729). (A translation of the passage from Le Deuxième Sexe, Vol. II, p. 574, cited in French by Rich.)

poised, still coming,
her fine blades making the air wince

but her cargo
no promise then:
120 delivered palpable ours.

1958–60 1963

Orion[1]

Far back when I went zig-zagging
through tamarack pastures
you were my genius,° you attendant spirit
my cast-iron Viking, my helmed
5 lion-heart king in prison.[2]
Years later now you're young my fierce half-brother, staring down from that simplified west your breast open, your belt dragged down 10 by an oldfashioned thing, a sword the last bravado you won't give over though it weighs you down as you stride

and the stars in it are dim and maybe have stopped burning.
15 But you burn, and I know it;
as I throw back my head to take you in an old transfusion happens again:
divine astronomy is nothing to it.

Indoors I bruise and blunder,
20 break faith, leave ill enough alone, a dead child born in the dark.
Night cracks up over the chimney, pieces of time, frozen geodes[3]
come showering down in the grate.

25 A man reaches behind my eyes and finds them empty
a woman's head turns away from my head in the mirror children are dying my death
30 and eating crumbs of my life.

1. Constellation of the winter sky that appears as a warrior with belt and sword; named after a giant hunter in Greek mythology.
2. Alluding to the English king Richard the Lion-Hearted (1157–1199), imprisoned in Austria on his return from the Crusades.
3. Small, spheroid stones, with a cavity often lined with crystals.

Pity is not your forte.
Calmly you ache up there pinned aloft in your crow's nest,[4]
my speechless pirate!
35 You take it all for granted and when I look you back

it's with a starlike eye shooting its cold and egotistical[5] spear
where it can do least damage.
40 Breathe deep! No hurt, no pardon out here in the cold with you you with your back to the wall.

1965 1969

A Valediction Forbidding Mourning[6]

My swirling wants. Your frozen lips.
The grammar turned and attacked me.
Themes, written under duress.
Emptiness of the notations.

5 They gave me a drug that slowed the healing of wounds.

I want you to see this before I leave:
the experience of repetition as death
the failure of criticism to locate the pain
the poster in the bus that said:
10 my bleeding is under control.

A red plant in a cemetery of plastic wreaths.

A last attempt: the language is a dialect called metaphor.
These images go unglossed: hair, glacier, flashlight.
When I think of a landscape I am thinking of a time.
15 When I talk of taking a trip I mean forever.
I could say: those mountains have a meaning but further than that I could not say.

To do something very common, in my own way.

1970 1971

4. Lookout post on the masts of old ships.
5. "One of two phrases suggested by Gottfried Benn's essay, Artists and Old Age in Primal Vision, edited by E. B. Ashton, New Directions" [Rich's note]. Benn (1886–1956), German poet and critic, advises the modern artist: "Don't lose sight of the cold and egotistical element in your mission. . . . With your back to the wall, careworn and weary, in the gray light of the void, read Job and Jeremiah and keep going."
6. The title of a poem by John Donne (see p. 306), in which he forbids his wife to lament his departure on a trip to the Continent.

Diving into the Wreck

First having read the book of myths,
and loaded the camera,
and checked the edge of the knife-blade,
I put on
5 the body-armor of black rubber the absurd flippers
the grave and awkward mask.
I am having to do this not like Cousteau[7] with his 10 assiduous team aboard the sun-flooded schooner
but here alone.

There is a ladder.
The ladder is always there
15 hanging innocently close to the side of the schooner.
We know what it is for,
we who have used it.
Otherwise
20 it is a piece of maritime floss
some sundry equipment.

I go down.
Rung after rung and still the oxygen immerses me
25 the blue light
the clear atoms
of our human air.
I go down.
My flippers cripple me,
30 I crawl like an insect down the ladder and there is no one to tell me when the ocean will begin.

First the air is blue and then 35 it is bluer and then green and then black I am blacking out and yet my mask is powerful it pumps my blood with power
the sea is another story
40 the sea is not a question of power
I have to learn alone to turn my body without force in the deep element.

7. Jacques-Yves Cousteau (1910–1997), French underwater explorer, photographer, and author.

And now: it is easy to forget 45 what I came for among so many who have always lived here
swaying their crenellated[8] fans between the reefs
50 and besides you breathe differently down here.

I came to explore the wreck.
The words are purposes.
The words are maps.
55 I came to see the damage that was done and the treasures that prevail.
I stroke the beam of my lamp slowly along the flank of something more permanent 60 than fish or weed

the thing I came for:
the wreck and not the story of the wreck
the thing itself and not the myth
the drowned face[9] always staring 65 toward the sun
the evidence of damage worn by salt and sway into this threadbare beauty
the ribs of the disaster curving their assertion
70 among the tentative haunters.

This is the place.
And I am here, the mermaid whose dark hair streams black, the merman in his armored body
We circle silently
75 about the wreck
we dive into the hold.
I am she: I am he whose drowned face sleeps with open eyes whose breasts still bear the stress 80 whose silver, copper, vermeil[1] cargo lies obscurely inside barrels half-wedged and left to rot

we are the half-destroyed instruments that once held to a course 85 the water-eaten log the fouled compass

We are, I am, you are by cowardice or courage
the one who find our way

8. With repeated indentations.
9. I.e., one of the female figureheads that ornamented old sailing ships' bows.
1. Gilded silver or bronze.

90 back to this scene carrying a knife, a camera
a book of myths in which our names do not appear.

1973

From Eastern War Time[2]

1

Memory lifts her smoky mirror: 1943,
single isinglass window kerosene stove in the streetcar barn halfset moon
8:15 a.m. Eastern War Time dark
5 Number 29 clanging in and turning looseleaf notebook Latin for Americans
Breasted's History of the Ancient World
on the girl's lap
money for lunch and war-stamps in her pocket 10 darkblue wool wet acrid on her hands three pools of light weak ceiling bulbs a schoolgirl's hope-spilt terrified sensations wired to smells of kerosene wool and snow
15 and the sound of the dead language praised as key torchlight of the great dead
Grey spreading behind still-flying snow
the lean and sway of the streetcar she must ride to become one of a hundred girls
20 rising white-cuffed and collared in a study hall to sing For those in peril on the sea[3]
under plaster casts of the classic frescoes chariots horses draperies certitudes.

8

A woman wired in memories
stands by a house collapsed in dust her son beaten in prison grandson shot in the stomach daughter 5 organizing the camps an aunt's unpublished poems grandparents' photographs a bridal veil phased into smoke up the obliterate air
With whom shall she let down and tell her story
Who shall hear her to the end
10 standing if need be for hours in wind

2. Rich's invented term conflating Eastern Standard Time, the time zone in which she grew up (in Baltimore), with the time of World War II. The poem, in ten parts, juxtaposes Rich's childhood memories, as an American Jew, with facts of the Holocaust, in Europe.
3. A hymn, also known as "Eternal Father, Strong to Save" and the "Navy Hymn."

that swirls the levelled dust in sun that beats through their scarfed hair at the lost gate by the shattered prickly pear
Who must hear her to the end
15 but the woman forbidden to forget the blunt groats° freezing in the wooden ladle hulled grain old winds dusting the ovens with light snow?

1995

Modotti[4]

Your footprints of light on sensitive paper
that typewriter you made famous my footsteps following you up stairwells of scarred oak and shredded newsprint
5 these windowpanes smeared with stifled breaths corridors of tile and jaundiced plaster
if this is where I must look for you then this is where I'll find you

From a streetlamp's wet lozenge bent
10 on a curb plastered with newsprint the headlines aiming straight at your eyes to a room's dark breath-smeared light these footsteps I'm following you with down tiles of a red corridor 15 if this is a way to find you of course this is how I'll find you

Your negatives pegged to dry in a darkroom rigged up over a bathtub's lozenge
your footprints of light on sensitive paper
20 stacked curling under blackened panes the always upstairs of your hideout the stern exposure of your brows
—these footsteps I'm following you with aren't to arrest you

25 The bristling hairs of your eyeflash that typewriter you made famous your enormous will to arrest and frame what was, what is, still liquid, flowing your exposure of manifestos, your 30 lightbulb in a scarred ceiling well if this is how I find you
Modotti so I find you

4. "Tina Modotti (1896–1942): photographer, political activist, revolutionary. Her most significant work was done in Mexico in the 1920s, including a study of the typewriter belonging to her lover, the Cuban revolutionary Julio Antonio Mella. Framed for his murder by the fascists in 1929, she was expelled from Mexico in 1930. After some years of political activity in Berlin, she returned incognito to Mexico, where she died in 1942" [Rich's note].

In the red wash of your darkroom from your neighborhood of volcanoes 35 to the geranium nailed in a can on the wall of your upstairs hideout in the rush of breath a window of revolution allowed you on this jaundiced stair in this huge lashed eye these 40 footsteps I'm following you with

1996 1999

A. K. RAMANUJAN
1929–1993

Snakes

No, it does not happen
when I walk through the woods.
But, walking in museums of quartz or the aisles of bookstacks,
5 looking at their geometry without curves
and the layers of transparency that make them opaque, dwelling on the yellower vein
10 in the yellow amber or touching a book that has gold on its spine,
I think of snakes.

The twirls of their hisses
15 rise like the tiny dust-cones on slow-noon roads winding through the farmers' feet.
Black lorgnettes[1] are etched on their hoods, ridiculous, alien, like some terrible aunt,
a crest among tiles and scales 20 that moult with the darkening half of every moon.

A basketful of ritual cobras comes into the tame little house,
their brown-wheat glisten ringed with ripples.
25 They lick the room with their bodies, curves uncurling, writing a sibilant[2] alphabet of panic on my floor. Mother gives them milk in saucers. She watches them suck and bare the black-line design
30 etched on the brass of the saucer.

1. Eyeglasses or opera glasses with a handle.
2. Having or producing the sound of s or sh.

The snakeman wreathes their writhing round his neck
for father's smiling money. But I scream.

35 Sister ties her braids with a knot of tassel.
But the weave of her knee-long braid has scales,
their gleaming held by a score of clean new pins.
I look till I see her hair again.
40 My night full of ghosts from a sadness in a play, my left foot listens to my right footfall, a clockwork clicking in the silence
within my walking.
The clickshod heel suddenly strikes
45 and slushes on a snake: I see him turn,
the green white of his belly measured by bluish nodes, a water-bleached lotus stalk plucked by a landsman hand. Yet panic rushes my body to my feet, my spasms wring 50 and drain his fear and mine. I leave him sealed, a flat-head whiteness on a stain.
Now
frogs can hop upon this sausage rope,
flies in the sun will mob the look in his eyes,

55 and I can walk through the woods.

1966

Breaded Fish

Specially for me, she had some breaded fish; even thrust a blunt-headed smelt into my mouth;

and looked hurt when I could 5 neither sit nor eat, as a hood of memory like a coil on a heath opened in my eyes: a dark half-naked length of woman, dead

on the beach in a yard of cloth,

10 dry, rolled by the ebb, breaded by the grained indifference of sand. I headed for the shore, my heart beating in my mouth.

1966

Self-Portrait

I resemble everyone
but myself, and sometimes see in shop-windows,
  despite the well-known laws
5 of optics,
the portrait of a stranger,
date unknown,
often signed in a corner
by my father.

1966

EDWARD KAMAU BRATHWAITE
b. 1930

From The Arrivants: A New World Triology

New World A-Comin'

1

Helpless like this leader-
less like this,
heroless,
5 we met you: lover,
warrior, hater,
coming through the files of the forest soft foot 10 to soft soil
of silence:
we met in the soiled tunnel of leaves.

Click lock 15 your fire-lock forearm firearm flashed fire and our firm
20 fleshed, flame warm, fly bitten warriors fell.

How long
25 how long
O Lord
O devil
O fire
O flame
30 have we walked have we journeyed to this place
to this meeting this shock
35 and shame in the soiled silence.

How long have we travelled down
40 valleys down slopes, silica glinted, stones
dry as water,
to this flash
45 of flame in the forest.
O who now will help us, helpless, horseless, leader-50 less, no hope, no
Hawkins, no
Cortez[1] to come.
Prempeh imprisoned,
55 Tawiah dead,
Asantewa[2] bridled
and hung.
O who now can help us: Geronimo, Tackie,
60 Montezuma[3] to come.

And the fire, our fire, fashioning locks,
rocks darker than iron;

1. Hernando Cortez (1485–1547), the Spanish conqueror of Mexico. Hawkins: Sir John Hawkins (1532–1595), the first Englishman to traffic in slaves.
2. Yaa Asentewaa (1850–1921), the queen mother who, in Ghana, led Ashanti opposition against the British. Captured in 1901, she was exiled to the Seychelles. Prempeh: last king of the Ashanti (1888–1931). He reigned from 1894 until 1896, when he was deposed by the British and exiled to the Seychelles. Tawiah: probably Nii Takie Tawiah (1862–1902), king of Accra, Ghana.
3. Montezuma II (1480?–1520), the last Mexican emperor, was killed in the resistance against Cortez's conquest of Mexico. Geronimo: a chief of the Chiricahwa group of Apache Indians (ca. 1829–1909). His forces terrorized New Mexico and Arizona from 1875 until 1885, but surrendered to General George Cook in 1886. Tackie: Tacky, a Caribbean priest/leader. The 1760 Tacky Rebellion in Jamaica was fomented and in places led by obeah men (spiritual leaders).

fire betrayed us once 65 in our village; now in the forest, fire falls us like birds, hot pods in our belly. Fire falls walls, fashions 70 these fire-
locks darker than iron,
and we filed down the path linked in a new clinked silence of iron.

2

75 It will be a long long time before we see this land again, these trees again, drifting inland with the sound of surf, smoke rising

It will be a long long time before we see 80 these farms again, soft wet slow green again: Aburi, Akwamu,[4]
mist rising

Watch now these hard men, cold clear eye'd like the water we ride,
85 skilful with sail and the rope and the tackle

Watch now these cold men, bold
as the water banging the bow in a sudden wild tide, indifferent, it seems, to the battle of wind in the water;

90 for our blood, mixed soon with their passion in sport,

in indifference, in anger,
will create new soils, new souls, new ancestors; will flow like this tide fixed

95 to the star by which this ship floats to new worlds, new waters, new harbours, the pride of our ancestors mixed with the wind and the water the flesh and the flies, the whips and the fixed 100 fear of pain in this chained and welcoming port.

1967

4. Towns in the Akan-speaking area of Ghana.

Ancestors

1

Every Friday morning my grandfather
left his farm of canefields, chickens, cows, and rattled in his trap down to the harbour town to sell his meat. He was a butcher.
5 Six-foot-three and very neat: high collar, winged, a grey cravat,° a waistcoat, watch- scarf chain just above the belt, thin narrow-bottomed trousers, and the shoes his wife would polish every night. He drove the trap 10 himself: slap of the leather reins along the horse's back and he'd be off with a top-hearted homburg[5] on his head:
black English country gentleman.

Now he is dead. The meat shop burned, 15 his property divided. A doctor bought the horse. His mad alsatians killed it.
The wooden trap was chipped and chopped
by friends and neighbours and used to stopgap fences and for firewood. One yellow 20 wheel was rolled across the former cowpen gate.
Only his hat is left. I "borrowed" it.
I used to try it on and hear the night wind man go battering through the canes, cocks waking up and thinking it was dawn throughout the clinking country night.
25 Great caterpillar tractors clatter down
the broken highway now; a diesel engine grunts where pigs once hunted garbage.
A thin asthmatic cow shares the untrashed garage.

2

All that I can remember of his wife,
30 my father's mother, is that she sang us songs
("Great Tom Is Cast"[6] was one), that frightened me.
And she would go chug chugging with a jar of milk until its white pap turned to yellow butter. And in the basket underneath the stairs 35 she kept the polish for grandfather's shoes.

All that I have of her is voices:
laughing me out of fear because a crappaud° toad jumped and splashed the dark where I was huddled in the galvanized tin bath; telling us stories
40 round her fat white lamp. It was her Queen
Victoria lamp, she said; although the stamp

5. Old-fashioned, tall, felt hat.

6. Song about the making (or "casting") of a bell.

read Ever Ready. And in the night, I listened to her singing in a Vicks and Vapour Rub-like voice what you would call the blues

3

Come-a look
45 come-a look see wha' happen

come-a look
come-a look
see wha' happen

50 Sookey dead
Sookey dead
Sookey dead-o

Sookey dead
Sookey dead
55 Sookey dead-o.

Him a-wuk
him a-wuk
till 'e bleed-o

him a-wuk
60 him a-wuk
till 'e bleed-o

Sookey dead
Sookey dead
Sookey dead-o

65 Sookey dead
Sookey dead
Sookey dead-o . . .

1969

GREGORY CORSO
1930–2001

Marriage

Should I get married? Should I be good?
Astound the girl next door with my velvet suit and faustus hood?[1]
Don't take her to movies but to cemeteries

1. The legendary Faust, a medieval alchemist, sold his soul to the Devil. He gained not only knowledge and power but renewed youth and attractiveness to young women.

tell all about werewolf bathtubs and forked clarinets 5 then desire her and kiss her and all the preliminaries and she going just so far and I understanding why not getting angry saying You must feel! It's beautiful to feel!
Instead take her in my arms lean against an old crooked tombstone and woo her the entire night the constellations in the sky—

10 When she introduces me to her parents back straightened, hair finally combed, strangled by a tie, should I sit knees together on their 3rd degree sofa
and not ask Where's the bathroom?
How else to feel other than I am,
15 often thinking Flash Gordon[2] soap—
O how terrible it must be for a young man seated before a family and the family thinking
We never saw him before! He wants our Mary Lou!
After tea and homemade cookies they ask What do you do for a living?

20 Should I tell them? Would they like me then?
Say All right get married, we're losing a daughter but we're gaining a son—
And should I then ask Where's the bathroom?

O God, and the wedding! All her family and her friends 25 and only a handful of mine all scroungy and bearded just wait to get at the drinks and food—
And the priest! he looking at me as if I masturbated asking me Do you take this woman for your lawful wedded wife?
And I trembling what to say say Pie Glue!
30 I kiss the bride all those corny men slapping me on the back
She's all yours, boy! Ha-ha-ha!
And in their eyes you could see some obscene honeymoon going on—
Then all that absurd rice and clanky cans and shoes
Niagara Falls! Hordes of us! Husbands! Wives! Flowers! Chocolates!
35 All streaming into cozy hotels
All going to do the same thing tonight
The indifferent clerk he knowing what was going to happen
The lobby zombies they knowing what
The whistling elevator man he knowing
40 The winking bellboy knowing
Everybody knowing! I'd be almost inclined not to do anything!
Stay up all night! Stare that hotel clerk in the eye!
Screaming: I deny honeymoon! I deny honeymoon!
running rampant into those almost climactic suites
45 yelling Radio belly! Cat shovel!
O I'd live in Niagara forever! in a dark cave beneath the Falls
I'd sit there the Mad Honeymooner devising ways to break marriages, a scourge of bigamy
a saint of divorce—

2. A 1930s science fiction "space opera" that first appeared as a comic strip, then as popular radio and movie serials.

50 But I should get married I should be good
How nice it'd be to come home to her and sit by the fireplace and she in the kitchen aproned young and lovely wanting my baby and so happy about me she burns the roast beef 55 and comes crying to me and I get up from my big papa chair saying Christmas teeth! Radiant brains! Apple deaf!
God what a husband I'd make! Yes, I should get married!
So much to do! like sneaking into Mr Jones' house late at night and cover his golf clubs with 1920 Norwegian books 60 Like hanging a picture of Rimbaud[3] on the lawnmower like pasting Tannu Tuva postage stamps[4] all over the picket fence like when Mrs Kindhead comes to collect for the Community Chest grab her and tell her There are unfavorable omens in the sky!
And when the mayor comes to get my vote tell him
65 When are you going to stop people killing whales!
And when the milkman comes leave him a note in the bottle
Penguin dust, bring me penguin dust, I want penguin dust—

Yet if I should get married and it's Connecticut and snow and she gives birth to a child and I am sleepless, worn, 70 up for nights, head bowed against a quiet window, the past behind
me,
finding myself in the most common of situations a trembling man
knowledged with responsibility not twig-smear nor Roman coin soup—
O what would that be like!
Surely I'd give it for a nipple a rubber Tacitus[5]
75 For a rattle a bag of broken Bach records
Tack Della Francesca[6] all over its crib
Sew the Greek alphabet on its bib
And build for its playpen a roofless Parthenon

No, I doubt I'd be that kind of father
80 Not rural not snow no quiet window but hot smelly tight New York City seven flights up, roaches and rats in the walls
a fat Reichian[7] wife screeching over potatoes Get a job!
And five nose running brats in love with Batman 85 And the neighbors all toothless and dry haired like those hag masses of the 18th century
all wanting to come in and watch TV
The landlord wants his rent
Grocery store Blue Cross Gas & Electric Knights of Columbus
90 Impossible to lie back and dream Telephone snow, ghost parking—
No! I should not get married I should never get married!
But—imagine If I were married to a beautiful sophisticated woman

3. Arthur Rimbaud (1854–1891), French Symbolist poet.
4. Collector's items issued by this Siberian republic located on the border between Russia and Mongolia.
5. Cornelius Tacitus (ca. 56–120), Roman historian; punning on tacitus, Latin for "silent."
6. Piero della Francesca (ca. 1420–1492), Italian painter. Johann Sebastian Bach (1685–1750), German composer.
7. Wilhelm Reich (1897–1957) founded a controversial school of psychiatry that emphasized love and sexual pleasure as the basis of mental health.

tall and pale wearing an elegant black dress and long black gloves holding a cigarette holder in one hand and a highball in the other 95 and we lived high up in a penthouse with a huge window from which we could see all of New York and ever farther on clearer days
No, can't imagine myself married to that pleasant prison dream—

O but what about love? I forget love not that I am incapable of love
100 it's just that I see love as odd as wearing shoes—
I never wanted to marry a girl who was like my mother
And Ingrid Bergman[8] was always impossible
And there's maybe a girl now but she's already married
And I don't like men and—
105 but there's got to be somebody!
Because what if I'm 60 years old and not married, all alone in a furnished room with pee stains on my underwear and everybody else is married! All the universe married but me!

Ah, yet well I know that were a woman possible as I am possible
110 then marriage would be possible—
Like SHE in her lonely alien gaud[9] waiting her Egyptian lover so I wait—bereft of 2,000 years and the bath of life.

1960

TED HUGHES
1930–1998

The Thought-Fox

I imagine this midnight moment's forest:
Something else is alive
Beside the clock's loneliness
And this blank page where my fingers move.

5 Through the window I see no star:
Something more near
Though deeper within darkness
Is entering the loneliness:

Cold, delicately as the dark snow,
10 A fox's nose touches twig, leaf;
Two eyes serve a movement, that now
And again now, and now, and now

8. Swedish actor (1915–1982) in American films, known for her beauty.
9. Showy clothing. In H. Rider Haggard's 1887 novel of this title, "She" gains eternal youth by bathing in a pillar of flame and waits thousands of years for the return of her lover.

Sets neat prints into the snow
Between trees, and warily a lame
15 Shadow lags by stump and in hollow
Of a body that is bold to come

Across clearings, an eye,
A widening deepening greenness,
Brilliantly, concentratedly,
20 Coming about its own business

Till, with a sudden sharp hot stink of fox
It enters the dark hole of the head.
The window is starless still; the clock ticks,
The page is printed.

1957

Wind

This house has been far out at sea all night,
The woods crashing through darkness, the booming hills,
Winds stampeding the fields under the window
Floundering black astride and blinding wet

5 Till day rose; then under an orange sky
The hills had new places, and wind wielded
Blade-light, luminous and emerald,
Flexing like the lens of a mad eye.

At noon I scaled along the house-side as far as 10 The coal-house door. I dared once to look up—
Through the brunt wind that dented the balls of my eyes
The tent of the hills drummed and strained its guyrope,

The fields quivering, the skyline a grimace,
At any second to bang and vanish with a flap:
15 The wind flung a magpie away and a black-
Back gull bent like an iron bar slowly. The house

Rang like some fine green goblet in the note
That any second would shatter it. Now deep
In chairs, in front of the great fire, we grip
20 Our hearts and cannot entertain book, thought,

Or each other. We watch the fire blazing,
And feel the roots of the house move, but sit on,
Seeing the window tremble to come in,
Hearing the stones cry out under the horizons.

1957

Pike

Pike, three inches long, perfect
Pike in all parts, green tigering the gold.
Killers from the egg: the malevolent aged grin.
They dance on the surface among the flies.

5 Or move, stunned by their own grandeur,
Over a bed of emerald, silhouette
Of submarine delicacy and horror.
A hundred feet long in their world.

In ponds, under the heat-struck lily pads—
10 Gloom of their stillness:
Logged on last year's black leaves, watching upwards.
Or hung in an amber cavern of weeds

The jaws' hooked clamp and fangs
Not to be changed at this date;
15 A life subdued to its instrument;
The gills kneading quietly, and the pectorals.

Three we kept behind glass,
Jungled in weed: three inches, four,
And four and a half: fed fry° to them— young fish
20 Suddenly there were two. Finally one

With a sag belly and the grin it was born with.
And indeed they spare nobody.
Two, six pounds each, over two feet long,
High and dry and dead in the willow-herb—

25 One jammed past its gills down the other's gullet:
The outside eye stared: as a vice locks—
The same iron in this eye
Though its film shrank in death.

A pond I fished, fifty yards across,
30 Whose lilies and muscular tench[1]
Had outlasted every visible stone
Of the monastery that planted them—

Stilled legendary depth:
It was as deep as England. It held
35 Pike too immense to stir, so immense and old
That past nightfall I dared not cast

1. Variety of freshwater fish.

But silently cast and fished
With the hair frozen on my head
For what might move, for what eye might move.
40 The still splashes on the dark pond,

Owls hushing the floating woods
Frail on my ear against the dream
Darkness beneath night's darkness had freed,
That rose slowly towards me, watching.

1959, 1960

Theology

No, the serpent did not
Seduce Eve to the apple.[2]
All that's simply Corruption of the facts.

5 Adam ate the apple.
Eve ate Adam.
The serpent ate Eve.
This is the dark intestine.

The serpent, meanwhile,
10 Sleeps his meal off in Paradise—
Smiling to hear
God's querulous calling.

1967

Examination at the Womb-Door[3]

Who owns these scrawny little feet? Death.
Who owns this bristly scorched-looking face? Death.
Who owns these still-working lungs? Death.
Who owns this utility coat of muscles? Death.
5 Who owns these unspeakable guts? Death.
Who owns these questionable brains? Death.
All this messy blood? Death.
These minimum-efficiency eyes? Death.
This wicked little tongue? Death.
10 This occasional wakefulness? Death.

Given, stolen, or held pending trial?
Held.

2. Cf. Genesis 3.
3. The demonic hero of the Crow myth is interrogated by an unidentified questioner.

Who owns the whole rainy, stony earth? Death.
Who owns all of space? Death.

15 Who is stronger than hope? Death.
Who is stronger than the will? Death.
Stronger than love? Death.
Stronger than life? Death.

But who is stronger than death?
Me, evidently.
20 Pass, Crow.

1970

Daffodils

Remember how we[4] picked the daffodils?
Nobody else remembers, but I remember.
Your daughter came with her armfuls, eager and happy.
Helping the harvest. She has forgotten.
5 She cannot even remember you. And we sold them.
It sounds like sacrilege, but we sold them.
Were we so poor? Old Stoneman, the grocer,
Boss-eyed, his blood-pressure purpling to beetroot[5]
(It was his last chance,
10 He would die in the same great freeze as you),
He persuaded us. Every Spring
He always bought them, sevenpence a dozen,
"A custom of the house".

Besides, we still weren't sure we wanted to own
15 Anything. Mainly we were hungry
To convert everything to profit.
Still nomads—still strangers
To our whole possession. The daffodils
Were incidental gilding of the deeds.[6]
20 Treasure trove. They simply came,
And they kept on coming.
As if not from the sod but falling from heaven.
Our lives were still a raid on our own good luck.
We knew we'd live for ever. We had not learned
25 What a fleeting glance of the everlasting
Daffodils are. Never identified
The nuptial flight of the rarest ephemera[7]—
Our own days!
We thought they were a windfall.
30 Never guessed they were a last blessing.
So we sold them. We worked at selling them

4. Hughes is addressing his first wife, the American poet Sylvia Plath (1932–1963; see pp. 1836–45), who committed suicide during London's coldest winter in the twentieth century.
5. A beet with edible, purplish-red roots.
6. Documents establishing legal possession of a house.
7. Insect that lives only a few days.

As if employed on somebody else's
Flower-farm. You bent at it
In the rain of that April—your last April.
35 We bent there together, among the soft shrieks
Of their jostled stems, the wet shocks shaken
Of their girlish dance-frocks—
Fresh-opened dragonflies, wet and flimsy,
Opened too early.

40 We piled their frailty lights on a carpenter's bench,
Distributed leaves among the dozens—
Buckling blade-leaves, limber, groping for air, zinc-silvered—
Propped their raw butts in bucket water,
Their oval, meaty butts,
45 And sold them, sevenpence a bunch—

Wind-wounds, spasms from the dark earth,
With their odourless metals,
A flamy purification of the deep grave's stony cold
As if ice had a breath—

50 We sold them, to wither.
The crop thickened faster than we could thin it.
Finally, we were overwhelmed
And we lost our wedding-present scissors.

Every March since they have lifted again
55 Out of the same bulbs, the same
Baby-cries from the thaw,
Ballerinas too early for music, shiverers
In the draughty wings of the year.
On that same groundswell of memory, fluttering
60 They return to forget you stooping there
Behind the rainy curtains of a dark April,
Snipping their stems.

But somewhere your scissors remember. Wherever they are.
Here somewhere, blades wide open,
65 April by April
Sinking deeper
Through the sod—an anchor, a cross of rust.

1998

Platform One[8]

Holiday squeals, as if all were scrambling for their lives,
Panting aboard the "Cornish Riviera".[9]

8. On platform number one of London's Paddington Station, Charles Sargeant Jagger's larger-than-life-size bronze statue of the soldier described in this poem stands as a memorial to the "Men and Women of the Great Western Railway who gave their Lives for King and Country" in the World Wars of 1914–18 and 1939–45.
9. Coastal resort of south Cornwall. Here, the name of a steam locomotive.

Then overflow of relief and luggage and children,
Then ducking to smile out as the station moves.

5 Out there on the platform, under the rain,
Under his rain-cape, helmet and full pack,
Somebody, head bowed reading something,
Doesn't know he's missing his train.

He's completely buried in that book.
10 He's forgotten utterly where he is.
He's forgotten Paddington, forgotten
Timetables, forgotten the long, rocking

Cradle of a journey into the golden West,
The coach's soft wingbeat—as light
15 And straight as a dove's flight.
Like a graveyard statue sentry cast

In blackened old bronze. Is he reading poems?
A letter? The burial service? The raindrops
Beaded along his helmet rim are bronze.
20 The words on his page are bronze. Their meanings bronze.

Sunk in his bronze world he stands, enchanted.
His bronze mind is deep among the dead.
Sunk so deep among the dead that, much
As he would like to remember us all, he cannot.

1996

GARY SNYDER
b. 1930

Above Pate Valley[1]

We finished clearing the last
Section of trail by noon,
High on the ridge-side
Two thousand feet above the creek
5 Reached the pass, went on
Beyond the white pine groves,
Granite shoulders, to a small
Green meadow watered by the snow,
Edged with Aspen—sun
10 Straight high and blazing
But the air was cool.

1. In Yosemite National Park.

Ate a cold fried trout in the Trembling shadows. I spied
A glitter, and found a flake
15 Black volcanic glass-obsidian—
By a flower. Hands and knees
Pushing the Bear grass, thousands
Of arrowhead leavings over a Hundred yards. Not one good
20 Head, just razor flakes
On a hill snowed all but summer,
A land of fat summer deer,
They came to camp. On their Own trails. I followed my own
25 Trail here. Picked up the cold-drill,
Pick, singlejack,[2] and sack
Of dynamite.
Ten thousand years.

1959

Four Poems for Robin

Siwashing it out once in Siuslaw Forest[3]

I slept under rhododendron
All night blossoms fell
Shivering on a sheet of cardboard
Feet stuck in my pack
5 Hands deep in my pockets
Barely able to sleep.
I remembered when we were in school
Sleeping together in a big warm bed
We were the youngest lovers
10 When we broke up we were still nineteen.
Now our friends are married
You teach school back east
I dont mind living this way
Green hills the long blue beach
15 But sometimes sleeping in the open
I think back when I had you.

A spring night in Shokoku-ji[4]

Eight years ago this May
We walked under cherry blossoms
At night in an orchard in Oregon.

2. Short-handled hammer used, with the other tools, to cut holes in solid rock for dynamite.
3. West of Eugene, Oregon. Siwashing: camping with light equipment, roughing it.
4. Fourteenth-century Zen monastery in Kyoto (once the capital of Japan).

20 All that I wanted then
Is forgotten now, but you.
Here in the night
In a garden of the old capital
I feel the trembling ghost of Yugao[5]
25 I remember your cool body
Naked under a summer cotton dress.

An autumn morning in Shokoku-ji

Last night watching the Pleiades,[6]
Breath smoking in the moonlight,
Bitter memory like vomit
30 Choked my throat.
I unrolled a sleeping bag
On mats on the porch
Under thick autumn stars.
In dream you appeared
35 (Three times in nine years)
Wild, cold, and accusing.
I woke shamed and angry:
The pointless wars of the heart.
Almost dawn. Venus and Jupiter.[7] 40 The first time I have Ever seen them close.

December at Yase[8]

You said, that October,
In the tall dry grass by the orchard
When you chose to be free,
45 "Again someday, maybe ten years."
After college I saw you
One time. You were strange.
And I was obsessed with a plan.

Now ten years and more have 50 Gone by: I've always known where you were—
I might have gone to you
Hoping to win your love back.
You still are single.

5. In the Japanese novel Genji monogatori (The Tale of Genji), written between 1001 and 1006, Murasaki-no-Shikibu (Lady Murasaki) recounts the amorous exploits of the young Prince Genji. Genji has a brief liaison with a young woman, Yugao, who dies suddenly and mysteriously. After happening upon a dress of hers, he writes a poem.

6. A cluster of stars in the constellation Taurus; named after the seven daughters of Atlas, in Greek mythology.

7. Snyder both names the plants and alludes to the Roman gods (Venus, goddess of love and beauty; Jupiter, ruler of all the gods).

8. Near northeast Kyoto.

55 I didn't.
I thought I must make it alone. I Have done that.

Only in dream, like this dawn,
Does the grave, awed intensity
60 Of our young love
Return to my mind, to my flesh.

We had what the others
All crave and seek for;
We left it behind at nineteen.

65 I feel ancient, as though I had Lived many lives.

And may never now know
If I am a fool
Or have done what my 70 karma demands.

1968

Instructions

Fuel filler cap
—haven't I seen this before? The sunlight under the eaves, mottled shadow, on the knurled° rim of — milled
5 dull silver metal.

Oil filler cap
bright yellow,
horns like a snail
—the oil's down there—10 amber, clean, it falls back to its pit.

Oil drain plug
so short, from in to out. Best let it drain when it is hot.

15 Engine switch off, on. Off, on. Just two places. Forever, or, not even one.

1996

DEREK WALCOTT
b. 1930

A Far Cry from Africa

A wind is ruffling the tawny pelt
Of Africa. Kikuyu,[1] quick as flies,
Batten upon the bloodstreams of the veldt.[2]
Corpses are scattered through a paradise.
5 Only the worm, colonel of carrion, cries:
"Waste no compassion on these separate dead!"
Statistics justify and scholars seize
The salients of colonial policy.
What is that to the white child hacked in bed?
10 To savages, expendable as Jews?

Threshed out by beaters,[3] the long rushes break
In a white dust of ibises whose cries
Have wheeled since civilization's dawn
From the parched river or beast-teeming plain.
15 The violence of beast on beast is read
As natural law, but upright man
Seeks his divinity by inflicting pain.
Delirious as these worried beasts, his wars
Dance to the tightened carcass of a drum,
20 While he calls courage still that native dread
Of the white peace contracted by the dead.

Again brutish necessity wipes its hands
Upon the napkin of a dirty cause, again
A waste of our compassion, as with Spain,[4]
25 The gorilla wrestles with the superman.
I who am poisoned with the blood of both,
Where shall I turn, divided to the vein?
I who have cursed
The drunken officer of British rule, how choose 30 Between this Africa and the English tongue I love?
Betray them both, or give back what they give?
How can I face such slaughter and be cool?
How can I turn from Africa and live?

1962

1. An east African tribe whose members, as Mau Mau fighters, conducted an eight-year campaign of violent resistance against British colonial settlers in Kenya.
2. Grassland, usually with some trees and shrubs. Batten: feed gluttonously.
3. In big-game hunting, people are hired to beat the brush, driving birds—such as ibises (line 12)—and other animals into the open.
4. The Spanish Civil War (1936–39).

Nights in the Gardens of Port of Spain[5]

Night, the black summer, simplifies her smells into a village; she assumes the impenetrable musk of the negro, grows secret as sweat,

her alleys odorous with shucked oyster shells,

5 coals of gold oranges, braziers of melon.
Commerce and tambourines increase her heat.

Hellfire or the whorehouse: crossing Park Street,
a surf of sailors' faces crests, is gone

with the sea's phosphoresence; the boites-de-nuit[6]
10 tinkle like fireflies in her thick hair.

Blinded by headlamps, deaf to taxi klaxons,° horns
she lifts her face from the cheap, pitch oil flare towards white stars, like cities, flashing neon, burning to be the bitch she must become.

15 As daylight breaks the coolie turns his tumbril[7]
of hacked, beheaded coconuts towards home.

1964

The Glory Trumpeter

Old Eddie's face, wrinkled with river lights,
Looked like a Mississippi man's. The eyes,
Derisive and avuncular at once,
Swivelling, fixed me. They'd seen
5 Too many wakes, too many cathouse nights.
The bony, idle fingers on the valves
Of his knee-cradled horn could tear
Through "Georgia on My Mind" or "Jesus Saves"
With the same fury of indifference,
10 If what propelled such frenzy was despair.

Now, as the eyes sealed in the ashen flesh,
And Eddie, like a deacon at his prayer,
Rose, tilting the bright horn, I saw a flash
Of gulls and pigeons from the dunes of coal

5. Capital of Trinidad, British West Indies.
6. Nightclubs (French).
7. Open cart used during the French Revolution to carry condemned people to the guillotine.

15 Near my grandmother's barracks on the wharves,
I saw the sallow faces of those men
Who sighed as if they spoke into their graves
About the Negro in America. That was when
The Sunday comics sprawled out on her floor,
20 Sent from the States, had a particular odour,
A smell of money mingled with man's sweat.

And yet, if Eddie's features held our fate,
Secure in childhood I did not know then
A jesus-ragtime or gut-bucket blues
25 To the bowed heads of lean, compliant men
Back from the States in their funereal serge,
Black, rusty Homburgs[8] and limp waiters' ties
With honey accents and lard-coloured eyes
Was Joshua's ram's horn wailing for the Jews
30 Of patient bitterness or bitter siege.[9]

Now it was that as Eddie turned his back
On our young crowd out fêteing, swilling liquor,
And blew, eyes closed, one foot up, out to sea,
His horn aimed at those cities of the Gulf,
35 Mobile and Galveston and sweetly meted
The horn of plenty through a bitter cup,
In lonely exaltation blaming me
For all whom race and exile have defeated,
For my own uncle in America,
40 That living there I never could look up.

1964

The Gulf

[FOR JACK AND BARBARA HARRISON]

I

The airport coffee tastes less of America.
Sour, unshaven, dreading the exertion of tightening, racked nerves fuelled with liquor,

some smoky, resinous Bourbon,
5 the body, buckling at its casket hole,
a roar like last night's blast racing its engines,

watches the fumes of the exhausted soul
as the trans-Texas jet, screeching, begins its flight and friends diminish. So, to be aware

8. Old-fashioned, felt hats. Funereal serge: cheap, dark suits.

9. At the fall of the city of Jericho (Joshua 6.1–21).

10 of the divine union the soul detaches itself from created things.[1] "We're in the air,"
the Texan near me grins. All things: these matches from LBJ's[2] campaign hotel, this rose given me at dawn in Austin by a child, 15 this book of fables by Borges,[3] its prose

a stalking, moonlit tiger. What was willed on innocent, sun-streaked Dallas,[4] the beast's claw curled round that hairspring rifle is revealed

on every page as lunacy or feral law;
20 circling that wound we leave Love Field.[5]
Fondled, these objects conjure hotels,

quarrels, new friendships, brown limbs nakedly moulded as these autumn hills memory penetrates as the jet climbs

25 the new clouds over Texas; their home means an island suburb, forest, mountain water;
they are the simple properties for scenes whose joy exhausts like grief, scenes where we learn, exchanging the least gifts, this rose, this napkin, 30 that those we love are objects we return,

that this lens on the desert's wrinkled skin has priced our flesh, all that we love in pawn to that brass ball, that the gifts, multiplying clutter and choke the heart, and that I shall 35 watch love reclaim its things as I lie dying.

My very flesh and blood! Each seems a petal shrivelling from its core. I watch them burn, by the nerves' flare I catch their skeletal candour! Best never to be born

40 the great dead cry.[6] Their works shine on our shelves, by twilight tour their gilded gravestone spines,
and read until the lamplit page revolves

1. With reference to the Neoplatonic doctrine that earthly relationships and attachments contaminate the striving for spiritual union with God; in contrast to the teaching that divine love is manifested in the created world and in human relationships.
2. Lyndon Baines Johnson (1906–1973), thirty-sixth president of the United States.
3. Jorge Luis Borges (1899–1986), Argentinian man of letters, best-known for his short stories.
4. With an allusion to the assassination there of President John F. Kennedy, November 22, 1963.
5. The Dallas airport.
6. E.g., in Sophocles, Oedipus at Colonus: "Not to be born surpasses thought and speech. / The second best is to have seen the light / And then to go back quickly whence we came."

to a white stasis° whose detachment shines — stillness
like a propeller's rainbowed radiance.
45 Circling like us; no comfort for their loves!

II

The cold glass darkens. Elizabeth wrote once that we make glass the image of our pain;
I watch clouds boil past the cold, sweating pane above the Gulf. All styles yearn to be plain 50 as life. The face of the loved object under glass is plainer still. Yet, somehow, at this height, above this cauldron boiling with its wars,

our old earth, breaking to familiar light,
that cloud-bound mummy with self-healing scars

55 peeled of her cerements° again looks new; — grave clothes some cratered valley heals itself with sage,
through that grey, fading massacre a blue light-hearted creek flutes of some seige to the amnesia of drumming water.

60 Their cause is crystalline: the divine union of these detached, divided States, whose slaughter darkens each summer now, as one by one,

the smoke of bursting ghettos clouds the glass

down every coast where filling-station signs 65 proclaim the Gulf, an air, heavy with gas, sickens the state, from Newark to New Orleans.

III

Yet the South felt like home. Wrought balconies, the sluggish river with its tidal drawl,
the tropic air charged with the extremities

70 of patience, a heat heavy with oil, canebrakes, that legendary jazz. But fear thickened my voice, that strange, familiar soil

prickled and barbed the texture of my hair,
my status as a secondary soul.
75 The Gulf, your gulf, is daily widening,

each blood-red rose warns of that coming night
when there's no rock cleft to go hidin' in[7]
and all the rocks catch fire, when that black might,

7. A reference to the hymn that begins "Rock of Ages, cleft for me, / Let me hide myself in thee." The "rock" signifies Christ, "cleft" in his Crucifixion.

their stalking, moonless panthers turn from Him
80 whose voice they can no more believe, when the black X's[8] mark their passover with slain seraphim.[9]

IV

The Gulf shines, dull as lead. The coast of Texas glints like a metal rim. I have no home as long as summer bubbling to its head

85 boils for that day when in the Lord God's name the coals of fire are heaped upon the head of all whose gospel is the whip and flame,

age after age, the uninstructing dead.

1969

From The Schooner Flight

1 Adios, Carenage[1]

In idle August, while the sea soft,
and leaves of brown islands stick to the rim of this Caribbean, I blow out the light
by the dreamless face of Maria Concepcion
5 to ship as a seaman on the schooner Flight.
Out in the yard turning grey in the dawn,
I stood like a stone and nothing else move
but the cold sea rippling like galvanize and the nail holes of stars in the sky roof,
10 till a wind start to interfere with the trees.
I pass me dry neighbour sweeping she yard
as I went downhill, and I nearly said:
"Sweep soft, you witch, 'cause she don't sleep hard,"
but the bitch look through me like I was dead.
15 A route taxi pull up, park-lights still on.
The driver size up my bags with a grin:
"This time, Shabine, like you really gone!"
I ain't answer the ass, I simply pile in the back seat and watch the sky burn
20 above Laventille[2] pink as the gown
in which the woman I left was sleeping, and I look in the rearview and see a man exactly like me, and the man was weeping for the houses, the streets, the whole fucking island.
25 Christ have mercy on all sleeping things!
From that dog rotting down Wrightson Road

8. Such as Malcolm X, the Black Muslim leader, assassinated February 21, 1965, and the Black Panthers, a militant black organization.
9. Angels of the highest order.
1. Careening (French), or the pulling of a ship onto land, especially for cleaning or repairing; the name of a port in Trinidad, west of Port of Spain. Adios: goodbye (Spanish).
2. Hilly, low-income suburb east of Port of Spain.

to when I was a dog on these streets;
if loving these islands must be my load,
out of corruption my soul takes wings,
30 But they had started to poison my soul with their big house, big car, big-time bohbohl,[3] coolie, nigger, Syrian, and French Creole,
so I leave it for them and their carnival—
I taking a sea-bath, I gone down the road.
35 I know these islands from Monos to Nassau,
a rusty head sailor with sea-green eyes that they nickname Shabine, the patois° for — spoken dialect any red nigger, and I, Shabine, saw when these slums of empire was paradise.
40 I'm just a red nigger who love the sea,
I had a sound colonial education,
I have Dutch, nigger, and English in me,
and either I'm nobody, or I'm a nation.

But Maria Concepcion was all my thought 45 watching the sea heaving up and down as the port side of dories, schooners, and yachts was painted afresh by the strokes of the sun signing her name with every reflection;
I knew when dark-haired evening put on 50 her bright silk at sunset, and, folding the sea, sidled under the sheet with her starry laugh,
that there'd be no rest, there'd be no forgetting.
Is like telling mourners round the graveside about resurrection, they want the dead back, 55 so I smile to myself as the bow rope untied and the Flight swing seaward: "Is no use repeating that the sea have more fish. I ain't want her dressed in the sexless light of a seraph,° — angel
I want those round brown eyes like a marmoset,[4] and 60 till the day when I can lean back and laugh,
those claws that tickled my back on sweating
Sunday afternoons, like a crab on wet sand."
As I worked, watching the rotting waves come past the bow that scissor the sea like silk, 65 I swear to you all, by my mother's milk,
by the stars that shall fly from tonight's furnace,
that I loved them, my children, my wife, my home;
I loved them as poets love the poetry that kills them, as drowned sailors the sea.

70 You ever look up from some lonely beach and see a far schooner? Well, when I write this poem, each phrase go be soaked in salt;
I go draw and knot every line as tight
as ropes in this rigging; in simple speech

3. Or bobol: corruption by highly placed people (Eastern Caribbean English).

4. South American monkey.

75 my common language go be the wind,
my pages the sails of the schooner Flight.

1979

Midsummer

Certain things here[5] are quietly American—that chain-link fence dividing the absent roars of the beach from the empty ball park, its holes muttering the word umpire instead of empire;
5 the gray, metal light where an early pelican coasts, with its engine off, over the pink fire of a sea whose surface is as cold as Maine's.
The light warms up the sides of white, eager Cessnas[6]
parked at the airstrip under the freckling hills 10 of St. Thomas. The sheds, the brown, functional hangar, are like those of the Occupation in the last war.
The night left a rank smell under the casuarinas,[7]
the villas have fenced-off beaches where the natives walk, illegal immigrants from unlucky islands
15 who envy the smallest polyp its right to work.
Here the wetback crab and the mollusc are citizens, and the leaves have green cards. Bulldozers jerk and gouge out a hill, but we all know that the dust is industrial and must be suffered. Soon—20 the sea's corrugations are sheets of zinc soldered by the sun's steady acetylene. This drizzle that falls now is American rain, stitching stars in the sand. My own corpuscles are changing as fast. I fear what the migrant envies:
25 the starry pattern they make—the flag on the post office—
the quality of the dirt, the fealty changing under my foot.

1984

From Omeros[8]

Chapter XXXVIII

III

Who decrees a great epoch? The meridian of Greenwich.[9]
Who doles out our zeal, and in which way lies our hope? In the cobbles of sinister Shoreditch,[1]

5. I.e., in Trinidad.
6. Make of small aircraft.
7. Trees with jointed branches.
8. Omeros (the Greek name for Homer) is a book-length epic poem that transposes elements of Homer's Iliad and Odyssey from the Aegean to the Caribbean. Walcott's principal subject—like Homer's—is the history of his people, and in this chapter the poem's narrator questions British claims for the "great epoch" of their empire, bitterly juxtaposing "our" Caribbean experience of exploitation with the experience of the exploiting imperialists.
9. The system of geographic longitude was worked out in London's Royal Observatory, beside the river Thames at Greenwich. The prime meridian, or longitude 0°, passes through the Observatory.
1. District, for many centuries a slum, in London's in the widening rings of Big Ben's iron flower,[2]

5 in the barges chained like our islands to the Thames.
Where is the alchemical corn and the light it yields?

Where, in which stones of the Abbey, are incised our names?[3]
Who defines our delight? St. Martin-in-the-Fields.[4]
After every Michaelmas,[5] its piercing soprano steeple

10 defines our delight. Within whose palatable vault will echo the Saints' litany of our island people?
St. Paul's salt shaker,[6] when we are worth their salt.

Stand by the tilted crosses of well-quiet Glen-da-Lough.[7]
Follow the rook's crook'd finger to the ivied grange.[8]
15 As black as the rook is, it comes from a higher stock.

Who screams out our price? The crows of the Corn Exchange.[9]
Where are the pleasant pastures? A green baize-table.[1]
Who invests in our happiness? The Chartered Tour.

Who will teach us a history of which we too are capable?
20 The red double-decker's view of the Bloody Tower.[2]
When are our brood, like the sparrows, a public nuisance?

When they screech at the sinuous swans on the Serpentine.[3]
The swans are royally protected,[4] but in whose hands are the black crusts of our children? In the pointing sign

25 under the harps of the willows, to the litter of Margate Sands.[5]
What has all this to do with the price of fish, our salary
tidally scanned with the bank-rate by waxworks tellers?[6]

Where is the light of the world?[7] In the National Gallery.
In Palladian Wren. In the City[8] that can buy and sell us 30 the packets of tea stirred with our crystals of sweat.

East End.
2. Famous bell in the Clock Tower of London's Houses of Parliament.
3. Many British poets are commemorated in the Poets' Corner of Westminster Abbey.
4. Church, famous for its music, at the edge of London's Trafalgar Square.
5. The feast of St. Michael, September 29.
6. The great dome of London's St. Paul's Cathedral may be said to resemble a salt shaker (or an onion, as in line 32).
7. Celtic crosses of the monastic community, founded in the seventh century, in the Wicklow Hills of southern Ireland.
8. Country house with attached farm buildings.
9. Handsome building in London's Mark Lane, erected in 1828 to be the center of the city's wholesale corn trade.
1. Imitation-felt-covered table for playing bridge, craps, roulette, etc.
2. From the upper deck of a London bus one can see the Bloody Tower (reputedly the site of the murder of the little princes, Edward V and Richard, duke of York) in the larger complex of the Tower of London.
3. Lake in London's Hyde Park.
4. Swans in England are, by tradition, owned by the Crown.
5. Popular seaside resort on the Thames Estuary, or lower end, where it meets the North Sea.
6. I.e, bank clerks working mechanically.
7. Reference to the Pre-Raphaelite painter William Holman Hunt's famous picture of Christ, The Light of the World.
8. London's financial district. Palladian Wren: Sir Christopher Wren (1632–1723), architect of St. Paul's Cathedral and many lesser London churches, was a leading exponent of the neoclassical style inaugurated by the Italian architect Andrea Palladio (1508–1580).

Where is our sublunar[9] peace? In that sickle sovereign peeling the gilt from St. Paul's onion silhouette.
There is our lunar peace: in the glittering grain of the coined estuary, our moonlit, immortal wheat,[1] 35 its white sail cresting the gradual swell of the Downs,[2] startling the hare from the pillars on Salisbury Plain,[3] sharpening the grimaces of thin-lipped market towns, whitewashing the walls of Brixton,[4] darkening the grain

when coal-shadows cross it. Dark future down darker street.

1990

ALAN BROWNJOHN
b. 1931

Common Sense[1]

An agricultural labourer, who has
A wife and four children, receives 20*s*[2] a week.
¾ buys food, and the members of the family
Have three meals a day.
5 How much is that per person per meal?
—From Pitman's Common Sense Arithmetic, 1917

A gardener, paid 24*s* a week, is Fined ⅓ if he comes to work late.
At the end of 26 weeks, he receives
10 £30.5.3. How Often was he late?
—From Pitman's Common Sense Arithmetic, 1917

A milk dealer buys milk at 3*d* a quart. He Dilutes it with 3% water and sells 15 124 gallons of the mixture at 4*d* per quart. How much of his profit is made by Adulterating the milk?
—From Pitman's Common Sense Arithmetic, 1917

9. Of the terrestrial world.
1. Cf. Thomas Treherne, Centuries of Meditations 3.3: "The corn was orient and immortal wheat."
2. The South Downs, an area of rolling upland on the English south coast.
3. Stonehenge, prehistoric circle of gigantic standing stones set in the middle of Salisbury Plain, on the Downs.
4. District of south London.
1. Brownjohn writes of this "found poem" (see "Versification," p. 2050): "The book and its date are real, and so are the 'sum' stanzas, but I shortened, adapted the phrasing to make manageable lines. Occasionally, the math doesn't make sense as a result of my adaptation."
2. s: abbreviation of shilling, coin worth 12*d*—abbreviation of denarii (Latin), pennies—of former British currency. £30.5.3 (line 10) = 30 pounds, 5 shillings, and 3 pennies.

The table printed below gives the number 20 Of paupers in the United Kingdom, and
The total cost of poor relief.[3]
Find the average number
Of paupers per ten thousand people.
—From Pitman's Common Sense Arithmetic, 1917

25 An army had to march to the relief of
A besieged town, 500 miles away, which
Had telegraphed that it could hold out for 18 days.
The army made forced marches at the rate of 18
Miles a day. Would it be there in time?
30 —From Pitman's Common Sense Arithmetic, 1917

Out of an army of 28,000 men, 15% were Killed, 25% were Wounded. Calculate
35 How many men there were left to fight.
—From Pitman's Common Sense Arithmetic, 1917

These sums are offered to
That host of young people in our Elementary Schools, who Are so ardently desirous of setting
40 Foot upon the first rung of the Educational ladder . . .
—From Pitman's Common Sense Arithmetic, 1917

1989

JAY MACPHERSON
b. 1931

The Swan

White-habited, the mystic Swan
Walks her rank° cloister as the night draws down, overgrown
In sweet communion with her sister shade,
Matchless and unassayed.

5 The tower of ivory sways,
Gaze bends to mirrored gaze:
This perfect arc embraces all her days.
And when she comes to die,
The treasures of her silence patent lie:
10 "I am all that is and was and shall be,
My garment may no man put by."

1957

3. Welfare payments.

A Lost Soul

Some are plain lucky—we ourselves among them:
Houses with books, with gardens, all we wanted,
Work we enjoy, with colleagues we feel close to—
    Love we have, even:

5 True love and candid, faithful, strong as gospel,
Patient, untiring, fond when we are fretful.
Having so much, how is it that we ache for Those darker others?

Some days for them we could let slip the whole damn
10 Soft bed we've made ourselves, our friends in Heaven
Let slip away, buy back with blood our ancient Vampires and demons.

First loves and oldest, what names shall I call you?
Older to me than language, old as breathing,
15 Born with me, in this flesh: by now I know you're Greed, pride and envy.

Too long I've shut you out, denied acquaintance,
Favoured less barefaced vices, hoped to pass for Reasonable, rate with those who more inclined to 20   Self-hurt than murder.

You were my soul: in arrogance I banned you.
Now I recant—return, possess me, take my Hands, bind my eyes, infallibly restore my Share in perdition.

1981

GEOFFREY HILL
b. 1932

The Distant Fury of Battle

Grass resurrects to mask, to strangle
Words glossed on stone, lopped stone-angel;
But the dead maintain their ground—
That there's no getting round—

5 Who in places vitally rest,
Named, anonymous; who test
Alike the endurance of yews
Laurels, moonshine, stone, all tissues;

With whom, under licence and duress,
10 There are pacts made, if not peace.
Union with the stone-wearing dead
Claims the born leader, the prepared

Leader, the devourers and all lean men.
Some, finally, learn to begin.
15 Some keep to the arrangement of love
(Or similar trust) under whose auspices move

Most subjects, toward the profits of this Combine of doves and witnesses.
Some, dug out of hot-beds, are brought bare,
20 Not past conceiving but past care.

1955 1959

The Guardians

The young, having risen early, had gone,
Some with excursions beyond the bay-mouth,
Some toward lakes, a fragile reflected sun.
Thunder-heads drift, awkwardly, from the south;

5 The old watch them. They have watched the safe
Packed harbours topple under sudden gales,
Great tides irrupt, yachts burn at the wharf
That on clean seas pitched their effective sails.

There are silences. These, too, they endure:
10 Soft comings-on; soft aftershocks of calm.
Quietly they wade the disturbed shore;
Gather the dead as the first dead scrape home.

1956 1959

September Song

Born 19.6.32—Deported 24.9.42[1]

Undesirable you may have been, untouchable
you were not. Not forgotten or passed over at the proper time.

As estimated, you died. Things marched,
10 sufficient, to that end.

1. Hill was born on June 18, 1932, one day before the birthdate given here.

Just so much Zyklon[2] and leather, patented terror, so many routine cries.

(I have made an elegy for myself it
10 is true)

September fattens on vines. Roses flake from the wall. The smoke of harmless fires drifts to my eyes.

This is plenty. This is more than enough.

1968

From Mercian Hymns[3]

VI

The princes of Mercia were badger and raven. Thrall[4] to their freedom, I dug and hoarded. Orchards fruited above clefts. I drank from honeycombs of chill sandstone.

5 "A boy at odds in the house, lonely among brothers."
But I, who had none, fostered a strangeness; gave myself to unattainable toys.

Candles of gnarled resin, apple-branches, the tacky mistletoe. "Look" they said and again "look." But 10 I ran slowly; the landscape flowed away, back to its source.

In the schoolyard, in the cloakrooms, the children boasted their scars of dried snot; wrists and knees garnished with impetigo.[5]

VII

Gasholders, russet among fields. Milldams, marlpools[6] that lay unstirring. Eel-swarms. Coagulations of frogs; once, with branches and half-bricks, he battered a ditchful; then sidled away from the 5 stillness and silence.

2. Hydrocyanic acid, used in fumigation; also (Zyklon-B) used in the gas chambers of the Nazi concentration camps.
3. "The historical Offa reigned over Mercia (and the greater part of England south of the Humber) in the years A.D. 757–796. During early medieval times he was already becoming a creature of legend. The Offa who figures in this sequence might perhaps most usefully be regarded as the presiding genius of the West Midlands, his dominion enduring from the middle of the eighth century until the middle of the twentieth (and possibly beyond). The indication of such a timespan will, I trust, explain and to some extent justify a number of anachronisms" [Hill's note].
4. Slave.
5. Skin disease.
6. Pools in deposits of crumbling clay and chalk. Gasholders: or gasometers, large metal receptacles for gas.

Ceolred[7] was his friend and remained so, even after the day of the lost fighter: a biplane, already obsolete and irreplaceable, two inches of heavy snub silver. Ceolred let it spin through a hole 10 in the classroom-floorboards, softly, into the rat droppings and coins.

After school he lured Ceolred, who was sniggering with fright, down to the old quarries, and flayed him. Then, leaving Ceolred, he journeyed for hours, 15 calm and alone, in his private derelict sandlorry named Albion.[8]

VIII

The mad are predators. Too often lately they harbour against us. A novel heresy exculpates all maimed souls. Abjure it! I am the King of Mercia, and I know.

5 Threatened by phone-calls at midnight, venomous letters, forewarned I have thwarted their imminent devices.

Today I name them; tomorrow I shall express the new law. I dedicate my awakening to this matter.

1971

From Lachrimae[9]

OR

SEVEN TEARS FIGURED IN SEVEN PASSIONATE PAVANS

> Passions I allow, and loves I approve, onely
> I would wish that men would alter their > object and better their intent.
> —ST. ROBERT SOUTHWELL,[1] Mary Magdalen's Funeral Tears, 1591

1. Lachrimae Verae

Crucified Lord, you swim upon your cross and never move. Sometimes in dreams of hell
the body moves but moves to no avail and is at one with that eternal loss.

7. A ninth-century bishop of Leicester, but the name is here used as a characteristic Anglo-Saxon Mercian name.
8. An old Celtic name for England; also, the name of a famous make of British truck. Sandlorry: sand truck.
9. Tears (Latin). Hill takes his title from the sixteenth-century composer John Dowland's piece for viols and lutes. Dowland's "Lachrimae" is divided into seven parts: "Antiquae," "Novae," "Genentes," "Tristes," "Coactae," "Amantis," and "Verae" ("true"). A pavan is a stately dance or the music for this.
1. English Jesuit priest and poet (1561–1595).

5 You are the castaway of drowned remorse,
you are the world's atonement on the hill.
This is your body twisted by our skill into a patience proper for redress.

I cannot turn aside from what I do;
10 you cannot turn away from what I am.
You do not dwell in me nor I in you however much I pander to your name or answer to your lords of revenue, surrendering the joys that they condemn.

1978

From An Apology for the Revival of Christian Architecture in England

the spiritual, Platonic old England . . . [2]
—STC, Anima Poetae

"Your situation," said Coningsby, looking up the green and silent valley, "is absolutely poetic."
"I try sometimes to fancy," said Mr. Millbank, with a rather fierce smile, "that I am in the New World."
—BENJAMIN DISRAELI,[3] Coningsby

9. The Laurel Axe

Autumn resumes the land, ruffles the woods with smoky wings, entangles them. Trees shine out from their leaves, rocks mildew to moss-green;
the avenues are spread with brittle floods.

5 Platonic England, house of solitudes, rests in its laurels and its injured stone,
replete with complex fortunes that are gone,
beset by dynasties of moods and clouds.

It stands, as though at ease with its own world,
10 the mannerly extortions, languid praise,
all that devotion long since bought and sold,

the rooms of cedar and soft-thudding baize,[4] tremulous boudoirs where the crystals kissed in cabinets of amethyst and frost.

1978

2. I.e., an idealized orderly rural England. STC: the English poet and philosopher Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1772–1834; see pp. 805–31).
3. British novelist and statesman (1804–1881); the "New World" referred to is that of an idealized rural America.
4. I.e., billiard rooms in great old British homes; the "soft-thudding baize" refers to the soft green cloth covering billiard tables as well as to the "green-baize door" traditionally dividing the family quarters in a grand house from the servants' quarters.

Veni Coronaberis[5]

A Garland for Helen Waddell[6]

The crocus armies from the dead rise up; the realm of love renews the battle it was born to lose, though for a time the snows have fled

5 and old stones blossom in the south with sculpted vine and psaltery[7] and half-effaced adultery
the bird-dung dribbling from its mouth;

and abstinence crowns all our care
10 with martyr-laurels[8] for this day.
Towers and steeples rise away into the towering gulfs of air.

1978

SYLVIA PLATH
1932–1963

The Colossus[1]

I shall never get you put together entirely,
Pieced, glued, and properly jointed.
Mule-bray, pig-grunt and bawdy cackles
Proceed from your great lips.
5 It's worse than a barnyard.

Perhaps you consider yourself an oracle,
Mouthpiece of the dead, or of some god or other.
Thirty years now I have labored
To dredge the silt from your throat.
10 I am none the wiser.

Scaling little ladders with gluepots and pails of lysol
I crawl like an ant in mourning
Over the weedy acres of your brow
To mend the immense skull plates and clear
15 The bald, white tumuli[2] of your eyes.

5. Come and you will be crowned (Latin).
6. British scholar (1889–1965), who translated several volumes of Latin poems, most notably Medieval Latin Lyrics.
7. Ancient and medieval stringed instrument.
8. Laurels were a classical symbol of victory, achievement.
1. Alluding to the gigantic statue of this name that stood at the entrance of the harbor to Rhodes, Greece, in the third century B.C.E.
2. I.e., grave mounds.

A blue sky out of the Oresteia[3]
Arches above us. O father, all by yourself
You are pithy and historical as the Roman Forum.
I open my lunch on a hill of black cypress.
20 Your fluted bones and acanthine[4] hair are littered

In their old anarchy to the horizon-line.
It would take more than a lightning-stroke
To create such a ruin.
Nights, I squat in the cornucopia
25 Of your left ear, out of the wind,

Counting the red stars and those of plum-color.
The sun rises under the pillar of your tongue.
My hours are married to shadow.
No longer do I listen for the scrape of a keel
30 On the blank stones of the landing.

1959 1960

Morning Song

Love set you going like a fat gold watch.
The midwife slapped your footsoles, and your bald cry
Took its place among the elements.

Our voices echo, magnifying your arrival. New statue.
5 In a drafty museum, your nakedness
Shadows our safety. We stand round blankly as walls.

I'm no more your mother
Than the cloud that distills a mirror to reflect its own slow
Effacement at the wind's hand.

10 All night your moth-breath
Flickers among the flat pink roses. I wake to listen:
A far sea moves in my ear.

One cry, and I stumble from bed, cow-heavy and floral
In my Victorian nightgown.
15 Your mouth opens clean as a cat's. The window square

Whitens and swallows its dull stars. And now you try
Your handful of notes;
The clear vowels rise like balloons.

1961 1965

3. Trilogy of plays by the Greek dramatist Aeschylus (525–456 B.C.E.) that recounts Orestes' and Electra's efforts to avenge the murder of their father, Agamemnon, by their mother, Clytemnestra.
4. I.e., curved like the acanthus leaves depicted atop some Greek columns.

Tulips

The tulips are too excitable, it is winter here.
Look how white everything is, how quiet, how snowed-in.
I am learning peacefulness, lying by myself quietly
As the light lies on these white walls, this bed, these hands.
5 I am nobody; I have nothing to do with explosions.
I have given my name and my day-clothes up to the nurses
And my history to the anaesthetist and my body to surgeons.

They have propped my head between the pillow and the sheet-cuff
Like an eye between two white lids that will not shut.
10 Stupid pupil, it has to take everything in.
The nurses pass and pass, they are no trouble,
They pass the way gulls pass inland in their white caps,
Doing things with their hands, one just the same as another,
So it is impossible to tell how many there are.

15 My body is a pebble to them, they tend it as water
Tends to the pebbles it must run over, smoothing them gently.
They bring me numbness in their bright needles, they bring me sleep.
Now I have lost myself I am sick of baggage—
My patent leather overnight case like a black pillbox,
20 My husband and child smiling out of the family photo;
Their smiles catch onto my skin, little smiling hooks.

I have let things slip, a thirty-year-old cargo boat
Stubbornly hanging on to my name and address.
They have swabbed me clear of my loving associations.
25 Scared and bare on the green plastic-pillowed trolley
I watched my tea-set, my bureaus of linen, my books
Sink out of sight, and the water went over my head.
I am a nun now, I have never been so pure.

I didn't want any flowers, I only wanted
30 To lie with my hands turned up and be utterly empty.
How free it is, you have no idea how free—
The peacefulness is so big it dazes you,
And it asks nothing, a name tag, a few trinkets.
It is what the dead close on, finally; I imagine them
35 Shutting their mouths on it, like a Communion tablet.

The tulips are too red in the first place, they hurt me.
Even through the gift paper I could hear them breathe
Lightly, through their white swaddlings, like an awful baby.
Their redness talks to my wound, it corresponds.
40 They are subtle: they seem to float, though they weigh me down,
Upsetting me with their sudden tongues and their color,
A dozen red lead sinkers round my neck.

Nobody watched me before, now I am watched.
The tulips turn to me, and the window behind me

45 Where once a day the light slowly widens and slowly thins,
And I see myself, flat, ridiculous, a cut-paper shadow
Between the eye of the sun and the eyes of the tulips,
And I have no face, I have wanted to efface myself.
The vivid tulips eat my oxygen.

50 Before they came the air was calm enough,
Coming and going, breath by breath, without any fuss.
Then the tulips filled it up like a loud noise.
Now the air snags and eddies round them the way a river
Snags and eddies round a sunken rust-red engine.
55 They concentrate my attention, that was happy
Playing and resting without committing itself.

The walls, also, seem to be warming themselves.
The tulips should be behind bars like dangerous animals;
They are opening like the mouth of some great African cat,
60 And I am aware of my heart: it opens and closes
Its bowl of red blooms out of sheer love of me.
The water I taste is warm and salt, like the sea,
And comes from a country far away as health.

1961 1965

Elm

For Ruth Fainlight

I know the bottom, she says. I know it with my great tap root:
It is what you fear.
I do not fear it: I have been there.

Is it the sea you hear in me,
5 Its dissatisfactions?
Or the voice of nothing, that was your madness?

Love is a shadow.
How you lie and cry after it.
Listen: these are its hooves: it has gone off, like a horse.

10 All night I shall gallop thus, impetuously,
Till your head is a stone, your pillow a little turf,
Echoing, echoing.

Or shall I bring you the sound of poisons?
This is rain now, this big hush.
15 And this is the fruit of it: tin-white, like arsenic.

I have suffered the atrocity of sunsets.
Scorched to the root
My red filaments burn and stand, a hand of wires.

Now I break up in pieces that fly about like clubs.
20 A wind of such violence
Will tolerate no bystanding: I must shriek.

The moon, also, is merciless: she would drag me
Cruelly, being barren.
Her radiance scathes me. Or perhaps I have caught her.

25 I let her go. I let her go
Diminished and flat, as after radical surgery.
How your bad dreams possess and endow me.

I am inhabited by a cry.
Nightly it flaps out
30 Looking, with its hooks, for something to love.

I am terrified by this dark thing
That sleeps in me;
All day I feel its soft, feathery turnings, its malignity.

Clouds pass and disperse.
35 Are those the faces of love, those pale irretrievables?
Is it for such I agitate my heart?

I am incapable of more knowledge.
What is this, this face
So murderous in its strangle of branches?——

40 Its snaky acids kiss.
It petrifies the will. These are the isolate, slow faults
That kill, that kill, that kill.

1962 1965

Daddy

You do not do, you do not do
Any more, black shoe
In which I have lived like a foot
For thirty years, poor and white,
5 Barely daring to breathe or Achoo.

Daddy, I have had to kill you.
You died before I had time——
Marble-heavy, a bag full of God,
Ghastly statue with one grey toe[5]
10 Big as a Frisco seal

5. Plath's father's toe turned black from gangrene.

And a head in the freakish Atlantic
Where it pours bean green over blue
In the waters off beautiful Nauset.
I used to pray to recover you.
15 Ach, du.[6]

In the German tongue, in the Polish town[7]
Scraped flat by the roller
Of wars, wars, wars.
But the name of the town is common.
20 My Polack friend

Says there are a dozen or two.
So I never could tell where you
Put your foot, your root,
I never could talk to you.
25 The tongue stuck in my jaw.

It stuck in a barb wire snare.
Ich, ich, ich, ich,[8]
I could hardly speak.
I thought every German was you.
30 And the language obscene

An engine, an engine
Chuffing me off like a Jew.
A Jew to Dachau, Auschwitz, Belsen.[9]
I began to talk like a Jew.
35 I think I may well be a Jew.

The snows of the Tyrol,[1] the clear beer of Vienna
Are not very pure or true.
With my gypsy ancestress and my weird luck
And my Taroc pack and my Taroc pack[2]
40 I may be a bit of a Jew.

I have always been scared of you,
With your Luftwaffe,[3] your gobbledygoo.
And your neat moustache
And your Aryan eye, bright blue.
45 Panzer[4]-man, panzer-man, O You——

Not God but a swastika
So black no sky could squeak through.
Every woman adores a Fascist,
The boot in the face, the brute
50 Brute heart of a brute like you.

6. Ah, you (German).
7. Grabów, Poland, Otto Plath's birthplace.
8. I, I, I, I (German).
9. German concentration camps, where millions of Jews were murdered during World War II.
1. Austrian Alpine region.
2. Tarot cards, used for fortune-telling.
3. The German air force.
4. Armor (German), especially, during World War II, referring to the German armored tank corps.

You stand at the blackboard, daddy,
In the picture I have of you,
A cleft in your chin instead of your foot
But no less a devil for that, no not 55 Any less the black man who

Bit my pretty red heart in two.
I was ten when they buried you.
At twenty I tried to die
And get back, back, back to you.
60 I thought even the bones would do.

But they pulled me out of the sack,
And they stuck me together with glue,[5]
And then I knew what to do.
I made a model of you,
65 A man in black with a Meinkampf[6] look

And a love of the rack and the screw.
And I said I do, I do.
So daddy, I'm finally through.
The black telephone's off at the root,
70 The voices just can't worm through.

If I've killed one man, I've killed two——
The vampire who said he was you
And drank my blood for a year,
Seven years, if you want to know.
75 Daddy, you can lie back now.

There's a stake in your fat black heart
And the villagers never liked you.
They are dancing and stamping on you.
They always knew it was you.
80 Daddy, daddy, you bastard, I'm through.

1962 1965

Ariel[7]

Stasis in darkness.
Then the substanceless blue
Pour of tor° and distances. craggy hill

God's lioness,
5 How one we grow,
Pivot of heels and knees!—The furrow

5. An allusion to Plath's first suicide attempt.
6. Mein Kampf (My Struggle) is Hitler's political autobiography and Nazi polemic, published before his rise to power.
7. Lion of God (Hebrew); the name of a horse Plath often rode; also, the airy spirit in Shakespeare's Tempest.

Splits and passes, sister to
The brown arc
Of the neck I cannot catch,

10 Nigger-eye
Berries cast dark Hooks—

Black sweet blood mouthfuls,
Shadows.
15 Something else

Hauls me through air—
Thighs, hair;
Flakes from my heels.

White
20 Godiva,[8] I unpeel—
Dead hands, dead stringencies.

And now I
Foam to wheat, a glitter of seas.
The child's cry

25 Melts in the wall.
And I Am the arrow,

The dew that flies
Suicidal, at one with the drive
30 Into the red

Eye, the cauldron of morning.

1962 1965

Lady Lazarus[9]

I have done it again.
One year in every ten
I manage it—

A sort of walking miracle, my skin
5 Bright as a Nazi lampshade,[1]
My right foot

8. According to legend, Lady Godiva (ca. 1010–1067) rode naked through the streets of Coventry, England, to persuade her husband, the local lord, to lower taxes.
9. Lazarus was raised from the dead by Jesus (John 11.1–44).
1. In the Nazi death camps, the skins of victims were sometimes used to make lampshades and the bodies to make soap.

A paperweight,
My face a featureless, fine
Jew linen.

10 Peel off the napkin
O my enemy.
Do I terrify?—

The nose, the eye pits, the full set of teeth?
The sour breath
15 Will vanish in a day.

Soon, soon the flesh
The grave cave ate will be
At home on me

And I a smiling woman.
20 I am only thirty.
And like the cat I have nine times to die.

This is Number Three.
What a trash
To annihilate each decade.

25 What a million filaments.
The peanut-crunching crowd
Shoves in to see

Them unwrap me hand and foot—
The big strip tease.
30 Gentleman, ladies,

These are my hands,
My knees.
I may be skin and bone,

Nevertheless, I am the same, identical woman.
35 The first time it happened I was ten.
It was an accident.

The second time I meant
To last it out and not come back at all.
I rocked shut

40 As a seashell.
They had to call and call
And pick the worms off me like sticky pearls.

Dying
Is an art, like everything else.
45 I do it exceptionally well.

I do it so it feels like hell.
I do it so it feels real.
I guess you could say I've a call.

It's easy enough to do it in a cell.
50 It's easy enough to do it and stay put.
It's the theatrical

Comeback in broad day
To the same place, the same face, the same brute
Amused shout:

55 "A miracle!"
That knocks me out.
There is a charge

For the eyeing of my scars, there is a charge
For the hearing of my heart—
60 It really goes.

And there is a charge, very large charge,
For a word or a touch
Or a bit of blood

Or a piece of my hair or my clothes.
65 So, so, Herr Doktor.
So, Herr Enemy.

I am your opus,
I am your valuable,
The pure gold baby

70 That melts to a shriek.
I turn and burn.
Do not think I underestimate your great concern.

Ash, ash—
You poke and stir.
75 Flesh, bone, there is nothing there—

A cake of soap,
A wedding ring,
A gold filling.

Herr God, Herr Lucifer,
80 Beware
Beware.

Out of the ash[2]
I rise with my red hair
And I eat men like air.

1962 1965

2. An allusion to the phoenix, the mythical bird that dies in flames and is reborn from its own ashes. Beware / Beware: cf. Samuel Taylor Coleridge, "Kubla Khan," line 49 (p. 810).

JOHN UPDIKE
b. 1932

V. B. Nimble, V. B. Quick

Science, Pure and Applied, by V. B. Wigglesworth, F.R.S.,[1] Quick Professor of Biology in the University of Cambridge.
—a talk listed in the B.B.C.'s Radio Times

V. B. Wigglesworth wakes at noon,
Washes, shaves, and very soon
Is at the lab; he reads his mail,
Tweaks a tadpole by the tail,
5 Undoes his coat, removes his hat,
Dips a spider in a vat
Of alkaline, phones the press,
Tells them he is F.R.S.,
Subdivides six protocells,
10 Kills a rat by ringing bells,
Writes a treatise, edits two Symposia on "Will Man Do?,"
Gives a lecture, audits three,
Has the Sperm Club in for tea,
15 Pensions off an aging spore,
Cracks a test tube, takes some pure
Science and applies it, finds
His hat, adjusts it, pulls the blinds,
Instructs the jellyfish to spawn,
20 And, by one o'clock, is gone.

1954

I Missed His Book, but I Read His Name

"The Silver Pilgrimage," by M. Anantanarayanan . . . 160 pages. Criterion. $3.95.
—The New York Times

Though authors are a dreadful clan
To be avoided if you can,
I'd like to meet the Indian,
M. Anantanarayanan.

5 I picture him as short and tan.
We'd meet, perhaps, in Hindustan.[2]
I'd say, with admirable élan,° — zest
"Ah, Anantanarayanan—

1. Fellow of the Royal Society.

2. Predominantly Hindu area of India.

I've heard of you. The Times once ran 10 A notice on your novel, an Unusual tale of God and Man."
And Anantanarayanan

Would seat me on a lush divan
And read his name—that sumptuous span 15 Of "a"s and "n"s more lovely than
"In Xanadu did Kubla Khan"[3]—

Aloud to me all day. I plan
Henceforth to be an ardent fan
Of Anantanarayanan—
20 M. Anantanarayanan.

1963

ANNE STEVENSON
b. 1933

Temporarily in Oxford

Where they will bury me
I don't know.
Many places might not be sorry to store me.

5 The Midwest has right of origin.
Already it has welcomed my mother to its flat sheets.

The English fens that bore me have been close curiously often.
10 It seems I can't get away from dampness and learning.

If I stay where I am
I could sleep in this educated earth.

But if they are kind 15 they'll burn me and send me to Vermont.

I'd be an education for the trees and would relish, really, flaring into maple each October—
20 my scarlet letter to you.

3. First line of Samuel Taylor Coleridge's "Kubla Khan" (p. 809).

Your stormy north is possible.
You will be there, engrossed in its peat.

It would be handy not to have to cross the whole Atlantic 25 each time I wanted to lift up the turf
and slip in beside you.

1977

Arioso Dolente[1]

(for my grandchildren when they become grandparents)

Mother, who read and thought and poured herself into me;
she was the jug and I was the two-eared cup.
How she would scorn today's "show-biz inanity, democracy twisted, its high ideals sold up!"
5 Cancer filched her voice, then cut her throat.
Why is it
none of the faces in this family snapshot looks upset?

Father, who ran downstairs as I practised the piano;
10 barefooted, buttoning his shirt, he shouted "G,
D-natural, C-flat! Dolente, arioso.
Put all the griefs of the world in that change of key."
Who then could lay a finger on his sleeve to distress him with 15 "One day, Steve, two of your well-taught daughters will be deaf."

Mother must be sitting, left, on the porch-set,
you can just see her. My sister's on her lap.
And that's Steve confiding to his cigarette
20 something my mother's mother has to laugh at.
The screened door twangs, slamming
on its sprung hinge.
Paint blisters on the steps; iced tea, grasscuttings,
elm flowers, mock orange . . .

25 A grand June evening, like this one, not too buggy, unselfquestioning midwestern, maybe 1951.
And, of course, there in my grandmother's memory lives just such another summer—1890 or 91.
Though it's not on her mind now/then.
30 No, she's thinking of the yeast-ring rising, in the oven. Or how any shoes irritate her bunion.

1. A sorrowful melodic passage (Italian); here, "from Beethoven's piano sonata, opus 110, third movement; introduction to the fugue" [Stevenson's note].

Paper gestures, pictures, newsprint laughter.
And after the camera winks and makes its catch,
35 the decibels drain away for ever and ever.
No need to say "Look!" to these smilers on the porch,
"Grandmother will have her stroke,
and you, mother, will nurse her."
Or to myself, this woman died paralysed-dumb, and that one 40 dumb from cancer.

Sufficient unto the day . . . [2] Grandmother, poor and liturgical, whose days were duties, stitches in the tea-brown blanket
she for years crocheted, its zigzag of yellow wool,
her grateful offering, her proof of goodness to present, 45 gift-wrapped, to Our Father in Heaven. "Accept,
O Lord, this best-I-can-make-it soul."
And He: "Thou good and faithful sevant, lose thyself and be whole."

Consciousness walks on tiptoe through what happens.
50 So much is felt, so little of it said.
But ours is the breath on which the past depends.
"What happened" is what the living teach the dead,
who, smilingly lost to their lost concerns,
in grey on grey,
55 are all of them deaf, blind, unburdened
by today.

As if our recording selves, our mortal identities,
could be cupped in a concave universe or lens,
ageless at all ages, cleansed of memories, 60 not minding that meaningful genealogy extends no further than mind's flash images reach back.
As for what happens next,
let all the griefs of the world
find keys for that.

2000

FLEUR ADCOCK
b. 1934

The Ex-Queen Among the Astronomers

They serve revolving saucer eyes, dishes of stars; they wait upon huge lenses hung aloft to frame
the slow procession of the skies.

2. Matthew 6.34: "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

5 They calculate, adjust, record, watch transits, measure distances.
They carry pocket telescopes to spy through when they walk abroad.

Spectra[1] possess their eyes; they face
10 upwards, alert for meteorites, cherishing little glassy worlds:
receptacles for outer space.

But she, exile, expelled, ex-queen,
swishes among the men of science
15 waiting for cloudy skies, for nights
when constellations can't be seen.

She wears the rings he let her keep;
she walks as she was taught to walk
for his approval, years ago.
20 His bitter features taunt her sleep.

And so when these have laid aside their telescopes, when lids are closed between machine and sky, she seeks terrestrial bodies to bestride.

25 She plucks this one or that among the astronomers, and is become his canopy, his occultation;[2]
she sucks at earlobe, penis, tongue

mouthing the tubes of flesh; her hair
30 crackles, her eyes are comet-sparks.
She brings the distant briefly close above his dreamy abstract stare.

1979

Poem Ended by a Death

They will wash all my kisses and fingerprints off you and my tearstains—I was more inclined to weep
in those wild-garlicky days—and our happier stains, thin scales of papery silk . . . Fuck that for a cheap 5 opener; and false too—any such traces you pumiced away yourself, those years ago when you sent my letters back, in the week I married that anecdotal ape. So start again. So:

1. Images retained for a time on the retina of the eye when it is turned away after gazing fixedly at bright objects.

2. Concealment of a heavenly body behind the body of Earth.

They will remove the tubes and drips and dressings
10 which I censor from my dreams. They will, it is true, wash you; and they will put you into a box.
After which whatever else they may do won't matter. This is my laconic° style. terse
You praised it, as I praised your intricate pearled 15 embroideries; these links laced us together, plain and purl[3] across the ribs of the world . . .

1979

The Soho Hospital for Women

1

Strange room, from this angle:
white door open before me,
strange bed, mechanical hum, white lights.
There will be stranger rooms to come.

5 As I almost slept I saw the deep flower opening and leaned over into it, gratefully.
It swimmingly closed in my face. I was not ready.
It was not death, it was acceptance.

*

Our thin patient cat died purring,
10 her small triangular head tilted back,
the nurse's fingers caressing her throat,
my hand on her shrunken spine; the quick needle.

That was the second death by cancer.
The first is not for me to speak of.
15 It was telephone calls and brave letters and a friend's hand bleeding under the coffin.

*

Doctor, I am not afraid of a word.
But neither do I wish to embrace that visitor, to engulf it as Hine-Nui-te-Po
20 engulfed Maui;[4] that would be the way of it.

And she was the winner there: her womb crushed him.
Goddesses can do these things.
But I have admitted the gloved hands and the speculum[5]
and must part my ordinary legs to the surgeon's knife.

3. Stitch in knitting with needle moved in opposite to normal (plain) direction.
4. Supernatural hero in Polynesian mythology, Maui the sun-snarer, fire-stealer, monster-slayer, entered the womb of Hine, sleeping goddess of the underworld, in search of immortality. He intended to depart through her mouth, but when his bird companion laughed at the sight, Hine awoke and crushed Maui to death.
5. Surgical instrument for dilating orifices of the body to facilitate examination or operation.

2

25 Nellie has only one breast ample enough to make several.
Her quilted dressing-gown softens to semi-doubtful this imbalance and there's no starched vanity 30 in our abundant ward-mother:
her silvery hair's in braids, her slippers
loll, her weathered smile holds true.
When she dresses up in her black with her glittering marcasite brooch[6] on 35 to go for the weekly radium treatment she's the bright star of the taxi-party—
whatever may be growing under her ribs.

*

Doris hardly smokes in the ward—
and hardly eats more than a dreamy spoonful—40 but the corridors and bathrooms reek of her Players Number 10,[7]
and the drug-trolley pauses for long minutes by her bed.
Each week for the taxi-outing
45 she puts on her skirt again and has to pin the slack waistband more tightly over her scarlet sweater.
Her face, a white shadow through smoked glass,
lets Soho display itself unregarded.

*

50 Third in the car is Mrs Golding who never smiles. And why should she?

3

The senior consultant on his rounds murmurs in so subdued a voice to the students marshalled behind 55 that they gather in, forming a cell,
a cluster, a rosette around him
as he stands at the foot of my bed going through my notes with them,
half-audibly instructive, grave.

60 The slight ache as I strain forward to listen still seems imagined.

Then he turns his practised smile on me:
"How are you this morning?" "Fine,
very well, thank you." I smile too.

6. Cheap brooch made of crystallized iron pyrites. 7. Brand and type of cigarette.

65 And possibly all that murmurs within me is the slow dissolving of stitches.

4

I am out in the supermarket choosing—this very afternoon, this day—
picking up tomatoes, cheese, bread,

70 things I want and shall be using to make myself a meal, while they eat their stodgy suppers in bed:

Janet with her big freckled breasts,
her prim Scots voice, her one friend,
75 and never in hospital before,

who came in to have a few tests
and now can't see where they'll end;
and Coral in the bed by the door

who whimpered and gasped behind a screen
80 with nurses to and fro all night and far too much of the day;

pallid, bewildered, nineteen.
And Mary, who will be all right but gradually. And Alice, who may.

85 Whereas I stand almost intact,
giddy with freedom, not with pain.
I lift my light basket, observing how little I needed in fact;

and move to the checkout, to the rain,
90 to the lights and the long street curving.

1979

POPULAR BALLADS OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY

Pete Seeger (b. 1919) • Where Have All the Flowers Gone?[1]

Where have all the flowers gone?—long time passing
Where have all the flowers gone?—long time ago

1. With additional verse by Joe Hickerson. Cf. Jean Elliot, "The Flowers of the Forest" (p. 677).

Where have all the flowers gone?—girls have picked them every one
When will they ever learn? When will they ever learn?

5 Where have all the young girls gone?—long time passing
Where have all the young girls gone?—long time ago
Where have all the young girls gone?—they've taken husbands every one
When will they ever learn? When will they ever learn?

Where have all the young men gone?—long time passing
10 Where have all the young men gone?—long time ago
Where have all the young men gone?—gone for soldiers every one
When will they ever learn? When will they ever learn?

Where have all the soldiers gone?—long time passing
Where have all the soldiers gone?—long time ago
15 Where have all the soldiers gone?—gone to graveyards everyone
When will they ever learn? When will they ever learn?

Where have all the graveyards gone?—long time passing
Where have all the graveyards gone?—long time ago
Where have all the graveyards gone?—gone to flowers everyone 20 When will they ever learn? When will they ever learn?

1961

Bob Dylan (b. 1941) • Boots of Spanish Leather

Oh, I'm sailin' away my own true love,
I'm sailin' away in the morning.
Is there something I can send you from across the sea,
From the place that I'll be landing?

5 No, there's nothin' you can send me, my own true love,
There's nothin' I wish to be ownin'.
Just carry yourself back to me unspoiled,
From across that lonesome ocean.

Oh, but I just thought you might want something fine
10 Made of silver or of golden,
Either from the mountains of Madrid
Or from the coast of Barcelona.

Oh, but if I had the stars from the darkest night
And the diamonds from the deepest ocean,
15 I'd forsake them all for your sweet kiss
For that's all I'm wishin' to be ownin'.

That I might be gone a long time
And it's only that I'm askin',
Is there something I can send you to remember me by,
20 To make your time more easy passin'.

Oh, how can, how can you ask me again,
It only brings me sorrow.
The same thing I want from you today,
I would want again tomorrow.

25 I got a letter on a lonesome day,
It was from her ship a-sailin',
Saying I don't know when I'll be comin' back again,
It depends on how I'm a-feelin'.

Well, if you, my love, must think that-a-way,
30 I'm sure your mind is roamin'.
I'm sure your heart is not with me,
But with the country to where you're goin'.

So take heed, take heed of the western wind,
Take heed of the stormy weather.
35 And yes, there's something you can send back to me,
Spanish boots of Spanish leather.

1963

Dudley Randall (b. 1914) • Ballad of Birmingham

(On the bombing of a church in Birmingham, Alabama, 1963)[2]

"Mother dear, may I go downtown
Instead of out to play,
And march the streets of Birmingham
In a Freedom March today?"

5 "No, baby, no, you may not go,
For the dogs are fierce and wild,
And clubs and hoses, guns and jails
Aren't good for a little child."

"But, mother, I won't be alone.
10 Other children will go with me,
And march the streets of Birmingham
To make our country free."

"No, baby, no, you may not go,
For I fear those guns will fire.
15 But you may go to church instead
And sing in the children's choir."

2. Two weeks after Martin Luther King's August 23rd March on Washington; in Birmingham, King had led nonviolent civil rights demonstrations that were met with attack dogs, tear gas, cattle prods, and firehoses.

She has combed and brushed her night-dark hair,
And bathed rose petal sweet,
And drawn white gloves on her small brown hands,
20 And white shoes on her feet.

The mother smiled to know her child
Was in the sacred place,
But that smile was the last smile
To come upon her face.

25 For when she heard the explosion,
Her eyes grew wet and wild.
She raced through the streets of Birmingham
Calling for her child.

She clawed through bits of glass and brick,
30 Then lifted out a shoe.
"O, here's the shoe my baby wore,
But, baby, where are you?"

1969

AMIRI BARAKA (LEROI JONES)
b. 1934

In Memory of Radio

Who has ever stopped to think of the divinity of Lamont Cranston?[1]
(Only Jack Kerouac,[2] that I know of: & me.
The rest of you probably had on WCBS and Kate Smith,
Or something equally unattractive.)

5 What can I say?
It is better to have loved and lost
Than to put linoleum in your living rooms?[3]

Am I a sage or something?
Mandrake's hypnotic gesture of the week?
10 (Remember, I do not have the healing powers of Oral Roberts . . .
I cannot, like F. J. Sheen, tell you how to get saved & rich!
I cannot even order you to gaschamber satori[4] like Hitler or Goody
Knight

1. The hero's alter ego on the 1930–50s radio serial "The Shadow." The poem refers to prominent characters (Mandrake) and personalities that Jones would have heard on the radio as a boy: Kate Smith (1907–1986), a popular American singer, best-known for her frequent performances of "God Bless America"; Oral Roberts (b. 1918), evangelist; Fulton J. Sheen (1895–1979), Roman Catholic popularizer of religion; Goodwin Knight (1896–1970), one of the first politicians to exploit radio and television—as governor of California in the 1950s, he wanted University of California teachers to sign a loyalty oath as a condition of employment.
2. American writer (1922–1969), affiliated, as was Baraka (loosely), with the Beat movement.
3. Cf. Alfred, Lord Tennyson, "In Memoriam A. H. H.," 28.15–16, 85.3–4: " 'Tis better to have loved and lost / than never to have loved at all."
4. The state of spiritual enlightenment sought in Zen Buddhism.

& Love is an evil word.
Turn it backwards / see, what I mean?
15 An evol word. & besides
Who understands it?
I certainly wouldn't like to go out on that kind of limb.

Saturday mornings we listened to Red Lantern & his undersea folk.
At 11, Let's Pretend / & we did / & I, the poet, still do, Thank God!

20 What was it he used to say (after the transformation, when he was safe
& invisible & the unbelievers couldn't throw stones?) "Heh, heh, heh,
Who knows what evil lurks in the hearts of men? The Shadow knows."

O, yes he does
O, yes he does.
25 An evil word it is,
This Love.

1961

An Agony. As Now.

I am inside someone who hates me. I look out from his eyes. Smell what fouled tunes come in 5 to his breath. Love his wretched women.

Slits in the metal, for sun. Where my eyes sit turning, at the cool air
the glance of light, or hard flesh
10 rubbed against me, a woman, a man, without shadow, or voice, or meaning.

This is the enclosure (flesh, where innocence is a weapon. An abstraction. Touch. (Not mine.
15 Or yours, if you are the soul I had and abandoned when I was blind and had my enemies carry me as a dead man
(if he is beautiful, or pitied.

It can be pain. (As now, as all his 20 flesh hurts me.) It can be that. Or pain. As when she ran from me into that forest.
Or pain, the mind
silver spiraled whirled against the 25 sun, higher than even old men thought

God would be. Or pain. And the other. The yes. (Inside his books, his fingers. They are withered yellow flowers and were never beautiful.) The yes. You will, lost soul, say 30 "beauty." Beauty, practiced, as the tree. The slow river. A white sun in its wet sentences.

Or, the cold men in their gale. Ecstasy. Flesh or soul. The yes. (Their robes blown. Their bowls empty. They chant at my heels, not at yours.) Flesh 35 or soul, as corrupt. Where the answer moves too quickly.
Where the God is a self, after all.)

Cold air blown through narrow blind eyes. Flesh, white hot metal. Glows as the day with its sun.
It is a human love. I live inside. A bony skeleton 40 you recognize as words or simple feeling.

But it has no feeling. As the metal, is hot, it is not,
given to love.

It burns the thing
inside it. And that thing
45 screams.

1964

AUDRE LORDE
1934–1992

Coal

I
is the total black, being spoken
from the earth's inside.
There are many kinds of open
5 how a diamond comes into a knot of flame how sound comes into a word, colored by who pays what for speaking.

Some words are open like a diamond on glass windows
10 singing out within the passing crash of sun
Then there are words like stapled wagers in a perforated book—buy and sign and tear apart—and come whatever wills all chances the stub remains
15 an ill-pulled tooth with a ragged edge.
Some words live in my throat breeding like adders. Others know sun seeking like gypsies over my tongue to explode through my lips

20 like young sparrows bursting from shell.
Some words
bedevil me.

Love is a word, another kind of open.
As the diamond comes into a knot of flame
25 I am Black because I come from the earth's inside now take my word for jewel in the open light.

1968, 1976

From the House of Yemanjá[1]

My mother had two faces and a frying pot
where she cooked up her daughters into girls
before she fixed our dinner.
5 My mother had two faces and a broken pot
where she hid out a perfect daughter who was not me
I am the sun and moon and forever hungry
10 for her eyes.

I bear two women upon my back one dark and rich and hidden in the ivory hungers of the other mother
15 pale as a witch
yet steady and familiar brings me bread and terror
in my sleep
her breasts are huge exciting anchors
20 in the midnight storm.

All this has been before in my mother's bed
time has no sense
25 I have no brothers and my sisters are cruel.

1. "Mother of the other Orisha [the goddesses and gods . . . of the Yoruba peoples of Western Nigeria], Yemanjá is also the goddess of oceans. Rivers are said to flow from her breasts. One legend has it that a son tried to rape her. She fled until she collapsed, and from her breasts, the rivers flowed. Another legend says that a husband insulted Yemanjá's long breasts, and when she fled with her pots he knocked her down. From her breasts flowed the rivers, and from her body then sprang forth all the other Orisha. River-smooth stones are Yemanjá's symbol, and the sea is sacred to her followers. Those who please her are blessed with many children" [Lorde's note].

Mother I need
mother I need
mother I need your blackness now
30 as the august earth needs rain.

I am
the sun and moon and forever hungry
the sharpened edge
where day and night shall meet 35 and not be one.

1978

Echoes

There is a timbre of voice that comes from not being heard and knowing   you are not being heard   noticed only 5 by others   not heard for the same reason.

The flavor of midnight fruit   tongue calling your body through dark light piercing the allure of safety 10 ripping the glitter of silence around you dazzle me with color and perhaps I won't notice
till after you're gone 15 your hot grain smell tattooed into each new poem   resonant beyond escape   I am listening in that fine space between desire and always 20 the grave stillness before choice.

As my tongue unravels
in what pitch
will the scream hang unsung 25 or shiver like lace on the borders of never   recording which dreams heal   which dream can kill stabbing a man and burning his body
30 for cover   being caught making love to a woman
I do not know.

1993

N. SCOTT MOMADAY
b. 1934

Headwaters

Noon in the intermountain plain:
There is scant telling of the marsh—
A log, hollow and weather-stained.
An insect at the mouth, and moss—
5 Yet waters rise against the roots,
Stand brimming to the stalks. What moves?
What moves on this archaic force
Was wild and welling at the source.

1976

The Eagle-Feather Fan

The eagle is my power,
And my fan is an eagle.
It is strong and beautiful
In my hand. And it is real.
5 My fingers hold upon it
As if the beaded handle
Were the twist of bristlecone.
The bones of my hand are fine
And hollow; the fan bears them.
10 My hand veers in the thin air
Of the summits. All morning
It scuds on the cold currents;
All afternoon it circles
To the singing, to the drums.

1976

The Gift

For Bobby Jack Nelson

Older, more generous,
We give each other hope.
The gift is ominous:
Enough praise, enough rope.

1976

Two Figures

These figures moving in my rhyme,
Who are they? Death and Death's dog, Time.

1976

WOLE SOYINKA
b. 1934

Telephone Conversation

The price seemed reasonable, location
Indifferent. The landlady swore she lived Off premises. Nothing remained
But self-confession. "Madam," I warned,
5 "I hate a wasted journey—I am African."
Silence. Silenced transmission of Pressurized good-breeding. Voice, when it came,
Lipstick coated, long gold-rolled
Cigarette-holder pipped. Caught I was, foully.
10 "HOW DARK?" . . . I had not misheard . . . "ARE YOU LIGHT
OR VERY DARK?" Button B. Button A.[1] Stench
Of rancid breath of public hide-and-speak.
Red booth. Red pillar-box.° Red double-tiered — mailbox
Omnibus squelching tar. It was real! Shamed
15 By ill-mannered silence, surrender
Pushed dumbfoundment to beg simplification.
Considerate she was, varying the emphasis—
"ARE YOU DARK? OR VERY LIGHT?" Revelation came.
"You mean—like plain or milk chocolate?"
20 Her assent was clinical, crushing in its light
Impersonality. Rapidly, wave-length adjusted,
I chose. "West African sepia"[2]—and as afterthought,
"Down in my passport." Silence for spectroscopic[3]
Flight of fancy, till truthfulness clanged her accent
25 Hard on the mouthpiece. "WHAT'S THAT?" conceding
"DON'T KNOW WHAT THAT IS." "Like brunette."
"THAT'S DARK, ISN'T IT?" "Not altogether.
Facially, I am brunette, but, madam, you should see
The rest of me. Palm of my hand, soles of my feet 30 Are a peroxide blond. Friction, caused—Foolishly, madam—by sitting down, has turned
My bottom raven black—One moment, madam!"—sensing
Her receiver rearing on the thunderclap

1. Buttons to be pressed by caller who has inserted a coin into an old type of British public pay phone.
2. Reddish brown.
3. Related to study of the color spectrum.

About my ears—"Madam," I pleaded, "wouldn't you rather 35 See for yourself?"

1962

MARK STRAND
b. 1934

The Prediction

That night the moon drifted over the pond, turning the water to milk, and under the boughs of the trees, the blue trees,
a young woman walked, and for an instant

5 the future came to her:
rain falling on her husband's grave, rain falling on the lawns of her children, her own mouth filling with cold air, strangers moving into her house,

a man in her room writing a poem, the moon drifting into it,
10 a woman strolling under its trees, thinking of death, thinking of him thinking of her, and the wind rising and taking the moon and leaving the paper dark.

1970

Always

for Charles Simic

Always so late in the day
In their rumpled clothes, sitting Around a table lit by a single bulb,
The great forgetters were hard at work.
5 They tilted their heads to one side, closing their eyes.
Then a house disappeared, and a man in his yard
With all his flowers in a row.
The great forgetters wrinkled their brows.
Then Florida went and San Francisco
10 Where tugs and barges leave
Small gleaming scars across the Bay.
One of the great forgetters struck a match.
Gone were the harps of beaded lights
That vault the rivers of New York.
15 Another filled his glass
And that was it for crowds at evening
Under sulphur yellow streetlamps coming on.

And afterwards Bulgaria was gone, and then Japan.
"Where will it stop?" one of them said.
20 "Such difficult work, pursuing the fate
Of everything known," said another.
"Down to the last stone," said a third,
"And only the cold zero of perfection Left for the imagination." And gone
25 Were North and South America,
And gone as well the moon.
Another yawned, another gazed at the window:
No grass, no trees . . .
The blaze of promise everywhere.

1990

From DARK HARBOR[1]

XVI

It is true, as someone has said, that in
A world without heaven all is farewell.[2]
Whether you wave your hand or not,

It is farewell, and if no tears come to your eyes
5 It is still farewell, and if you pretend not to notice,
Hating what passes, it is still farewell.

Farewell no matter what. And the palms as they lean
Over the green, bright lagoon, and the pelicans
Diving, and the glistening bodies of bathers resting,

10 Are stages in an ultimate stillness, and the movement
Of sand, and of wind, and the secret moves of the body
Are part of the same, a simplicity that turns being

Into an occasion for mourning, or into an occasion
Worth celebrating, for what else does one do,
15 Feeling the weight of the pelicans' wings,

The density of the palms' shadows, the cells that darken
The backs of bathers? These are beyond the distortions
Of chance, beyond the evasions of music. The end

Is enacted again and again. And we feel it 20 In the temptations of sleep, in the moon's ripening,
In the wine as it waits in the glass.

1. A forty-five-section, book-length poem in which Strand recounts a spiritual quest while paying homage to several guiding influences in poetry. Among the most important are Dante (whose three-line stanzas he borrows, though not Dante's terza rima rhyme scheme) and William Wordsworth (1770–1850; see pp. 763–805).
2. Cf. Wallace Stevens, "Waving Adieu, Adieu, Adieu," lines 5–8 (p. 1266).

XX

Is it you standing among the olive trees
Beyond the courtyard? You in the sunlight
Waving me closer with one hand while the other

Shields your eyes from the brightness that turns
5 All that is not you dead white? Is it you Around whom the leaves scatter like foam?

You in the murmuring night that is scented
With mint and lit by the distant wilderness
Of stars? Is it you? Is it really you

10 Rising from the script of waves, the length
Of your body casting a sudden shadow over my hand
So that I feel how cold it is as it moves

Over the page? You leaning down and putting
Your mouth against mine so I should know
15 That a kiss is only the beginning

Of what until now we could only imagine?
Is it you or the long compassionate wind
That whispers in my ear: alas, alas?

1993

CHARLES WRIGHT
b. 1935

Homage to Claude Lorraine[1]

I had a picture by him—a print, I think—on my bedroom wall
In Verona in 1959,
via Anzani n. 3.[2]
Or maybe a drawing, a rigged ship in a huge sea,
5 Storm waves like flames above my bed.
It's lost between there and here now,
and has been for years,
Trapped in the past's foliage, as so much else is
In spite of our constancy, or how 10 We rattle the branches and keep our lights on the right place.

The room had a vaulted ceiling and faced east.
The living room was a tower with skylights on four sides.

1. Or Claude Lorrain, pseudonym of Claude Gellée (1600–1682), French painter.
2. Address in Verona, Italy.

A third room sloped with the roof until it was two feet high at the far wall,
15 All of this part of a reconstructed attic, and washed white.

I lived there for two years,
one block from the Adige[3]
Where seagulls, like little loaves of fresh bread,
Drifted and turned on its grey coils.
20 Between the sea fires of Claude Lorraine and the curled sheets of the river,
I burned on my swivel stool
Night after night,
looking into the future, its charred edges
25 Holding my life like a frame
I'd hope to fit into one day, unsigned and rigged for the deeps.

1984

Chinese Journal

In 1935, the year I was born,
Giorgio Morandi[4]
Penciled these bottles in by leaving them out, letting
The presence of what surrounds them increase the presence
5 Of what is missing,
keeping its distance and measure.

The purple-and-white spike plants stand upright and spine-laced,
As though poised to fight by keeping still.
10 Inside their bristly circle,
The dwarf boxwood
flashes its tiny shields at the sun.

Under the skylight, the Pothos° plant climbing shrub
Dangles its fourteen arms
15 into the absence of its desire.
Like a medusa in the two-ply, celadon[5] air,
Its longing is what it grows on,
heart-leaves in the nothingness.

---

3. River that runs through Verona.
4. Italian painter (1890–1964).
5. Grayish yellow-green. Medusa: in Greek mythology, one of three snake-haired Gorgons who turned those who looked at them into stone; also, a kind of jellyfish.

To shine but not to dazzle.
20 Falling leaves, falling water, everything comes to rest.

What can anyone know of the sure machine that makes all things work?
To find one word and use it correctly,
providing it is the right word,
25 Is more than enough:
An inch of music is an inch and a half of dust.

1988

As Our Bodies Rise, Our Names Turn into Light

The sky unrolls like a rug,
unwelcoming, gun-grey,
Over the Blue Ridge.[6]
Mothers are calling their children in,
5 mellifluous syllables, floating sounds.
The traffic shimmies and settles back.

The doctor has filled his truck with leaves
Next door, and a pair of logs.
Salt stones litter the street.
10 The snow falls and the wind drops.
How strange to have a name, any name, on this poor earth.

January hunkers down,
the icicle deep in her throat—
The days become longer, the nights ground bitter and cold, 15 Single grain by single grain
Everything flows toward structure,
last ache in the ache for God.

1995

Quotations

Renoir,[7] whose paintings I don't much like,
Says what survives of the artist is the feeling he gives by means of objects.

6. Eastern ridge of the Appalachian Mountains, ranging from Pennsylvania into Georgia.

7. Pierre-Auguste Renoir (1841–1919), French painter.

I do like that, however,
The feeling put in as much as the feeling received 5 To make a work distinctive,
Though I'm not sure it's true,
or even it's workable.

When Chekhov[8] died, he died at dawn,
a large moth circling the lamp,
10 Beating its pressed wings.
Placed in a zinc casket, the corpse, labeled Fresh Oysters,
Was sent to Moscow in a freight car from Germany.
His last words were, Has the sailor left?
I am dying, Ich sterbe.[9]

---

15 My breath is corrupt, my days are extinct, the graves are ready for me,
Job[1] says. They change the night into day—
The light is short because of darkness . . .
I have said to corruption,
thou art my father, to the worm,
20 Thou art my mother and my sister—
They shall go down to the bars of the pit,
when our rest together is in the dust.

That's all. There's nothing left after that.
As Meng Chiao[2] says,
25 For a while the dust weighs lightly on my cloak.

1998

DARYL HINE
b. 1936

Letting Go

I loved you first the time I saw you last,
I knew you best before I let you go.
All the misapprehensions of the past
Dissipated in an hour or so,

8. Anton Chekhov (1860–1904), Russian fiction writer and playwright.
9. I am dying (German).
1. In the Hebrew Scriptures, a virtuous man tested by God with many forms of suffering. These quotations are taken from Job 17.
2. Chinese poet (751–814).

5 Naked to the human eye you lay
Candid as a cadaver on the couch
I could have slept on, but I went away
Ashamed to stay, afraid almost to touch.

Lost, you seemed the only vivid thing
10 In a world made moribund and flat
By worldliness. Renunciations bring Their own reward, apparently, like that
Last look of yours, ironical or tender,
A valediction and a benediction,
15 Which endless reruns will not soon surrender,
The indispensable, improper fiction
Of your unforgettable perfection.

1990

Riddle

Invisible, chimerical
Revolution of the air,
Fickle, hyperactive, fair,
Impulsive, unpredictable
5 Flibbertigibbet capable
Of never settling anywhere;
Fortuitously musical
Condition of the atmosphere,
Zephyr, monsoon, hurricane,
10 Tempest, typhoon, gust or gale—
When will inspiration fail?—
Accomplice of the hail and rain,
Blind but palpable as braille

Wind animates the weathervane.

1990

C. K. WILLIAMS
b. 1936

Repression

More and more lately, as, not even minding the slippages yet, the aches and sad softenings,
I settle into my other years, I notice how many of what I once thought were evidences of repression, sexual or otherwise, now seem, in other people anyway, to be varieties of dignity, withholding, tact, and sometimes even in myself, certain patiences I would have once called lassitude, indifference, 5 now seem possibly to be if not the rewards then at least the unsuspected, undreamed-of conclusions to many of the even-then-preposterous self-evolved disciplines, rigors, almost mortifications

I inflicted on myself in my starting-out days, improvement days, days when the idea alone of psychic peace, of intellectual, of emotional quiet, the merest hint, would have meant inconceivable capitulation.

1987

Snow: II

It's very cold, Catherine is bundled in a coat, a poncho on top of that,
high boots, gloves,
a long scarf around her neck, and she's sauntering up the middle of the snowed-in street, eating, of all things, an apple, the blazing redness of which shocks against the world of white.
No traffic yet, the crisp crisp of her footsteps keeps reaching me until she turns the corner.
5 I write it down years later, and the picture still holds perfectly, precise,
unwanting,
and so too does the sense of being suddenly bereft as she passes abruptly from my sight, the quick wash of desolation, the release again into the memory of affection, and then affection, as the first trucks blundered past, chains pounding, the first delighted children rushed out with sleds.

1987

The Question

The middle of the night, she's wide awake, carefully lying as far away as she can from him.
He turns in his sleep and she can sense him realizing she's not in the place she usually is, then his sleep begins to change, he pulls himself closer, his arm comes comfortably around her.
"Are you awake?" she says, then, afraid that he might think she's asking him for sex,
5 she hurries on, "I want to know something; last summer, in Cleveland, did you have someone else?"

She'd almost said—she was going to say—"Did you have a lover?" but she'd caught herself;
she'd been frightened by the word, she realized; it was much too definite, at least for now.
Even so, it's only after pausing that he answers, "No," with what feeling she can't tell.
He moves his hand on her, then with a smile in his voice asks, "Did you have somebody in Cleveland?"
10 "That's not what I was asking you," she says crossly. "But that's what I asked you," he answers.
She's supposed to be content now, the old story, she knows that she's supposed to be relieved, but she's not relieved, her tension hasn't eased the slightest bit, which doesn't surprise her.
She's so confused that she can't really even say now if she wants to believe him or not.
Anyway, what about that pause? Was it because in the middle of the night and six months later 15 he wouldn't have even known what she was talking about, or was it because he needed that moment to frame an answer which would neutralize what might after all have been a shocking thrust with a reasonable deflection, in this case, his humor: a laugh that's like a lie and is.
"When would I have found the time?" he might have said, or, "Who in Cleveland could I love?"
Or, in that so brief instant, might he have been finding a way to stay in the realm of truth, 20 as she knew he'd surely want to, given how self-righteously he esteemed his ethical integrities?
It comes to her with a start that what she most deeply and painfully suspects him of is a renunciation.
She knows that he has no one now; she thinks she knows there's been no contact from Cleveland, but she still believes that there'd been something then, and if it was as important as she thinks, it wouldn't be so easily forgotten, it would still be with him somewhere as a sad regret, 25 perhaps a precious memory, but with that word, renunciation, hooked to it like a price tag.
Maybe that was what so rankled her, that she might have been the object of his charity, his goodness.
That would be too much; that he would have wronged her, then sacrificed himself for her.
Yes, "Lover," she should have said it, "Lover, lover," should have made him try to disavow it.
She listens to his breathing; he's asleep again, or has he taught himself to feign that, too?
30 "No, last summer in Cleveland I didn't have a lover, I have never been to Cleveland, I love you.
There is no Cleveland, I adore you, and, as you'll remember, there was no last summer:

the world last summer didn't yet exist, last summer still was universal darkness, chaos, pain."

1992

TONY HARRISON
b. 1937

On Not Being Milton

for Sergio Vieira & Armando Guebuza (Frelimo)[1]

Read and committed to the flames, I call these sixteen lines that go back to my roots
my Cahier d'un retour au pays natal,[2]
my growing black enough to fit my boots.

5 The stutter of the scold out of the branks[3]
of condescension, class and counter-class thickens with glottals to a lumpen[4] mass of Ludding morphemes[5] closing up their ranks.
Each swung cast-iron Enoch of Leeds stress[6]
10 clangs a forged music on the frames of Art,
the looms of owned language smashed apart!

Three cheers for mute ingloriousness![7]

Articulation is the tongue-tied's fighting.
In the silence round all poetry we quote
15 Tidd the Cato Street conspirator[8] who wrote:

Sir, I Ham a very Bad Hand at Righting.

1978

1. Mozambique freedom-fighters.
2. Notebook of a return to one's land of birth (French). The title of a poem by the Martinican poet, historian, and politician Aimé Césaire (b. 1913). Published in 1939, Cahier d'un retour au pays natal is a seminal work in the literature of négritude, describing the condition of colonized black (in Césaire's case West Indian) people, and charting a literal and physical journey back from exile to the homeland.
3. "Bridles," or gagging devices put over the mouths of "scolds," people who habitually complain and nag. As the old northern word for poet is scald, the line could refer to poets who speak out in defiance of the society that silences them, as well as to political agitators and revolutionaries.
4. Lower-class. Glottals: sounds made by opening and closing the larynx. The Leeds dialect uses glottal stops, the sound made when the word butter is pronounced as two syllables without an intervening t.
5. Smallest meaningful language units. Ludding: Luddites were reactionary groups opposed to the mechanization of mills and factories, a change that led to unemployment and starvation.
6. Forceful or prominent syllable or sound. "An 'Enoch' is an iron sledge-hammer used by the Luddites to smash the frames which were also made by the same Enoch Taylor of Marsden. The cry was: 'Enoch made them, Enoch shall break them!' " [Harrison's note].
7. A reference to Thomas Gray, "Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard," line 59: "Some mute inglorious Milton here may rest" (p. 671).
8. Participant in a failed early nineteenth-century plot to assassinate the British cabinet. The conspirators met in a loft on Cato Street, near London's Edgware Road.

Classics Society

(Leeds Grammar School 1552–1952)[9]

The grace of Tullies eloquence doth excell
any Englishmans tongue . . . my barbarous stile . . . [1]

The tongue our leaders use to cast their spell was once denounced as "rude", "gross", "base" and "vile".

5 How fortunate we are who've come so far!

We boys can take old Hansards[2] and translate the British Empire into SPQR[3]
but nothing demotic° or too up-to-date, slangy
and not the English that I speak at home, 10 not Hansard standards, and if Antoninus[4] spoke like delinquent Latin back in Rome
he'd probably get gamma double minus.[5]

And so the lad who gets the alphas works
the hardest in his class at his translation
15 and finds good Ciceronian for Burke's:

a dreadful schism in the British nation.[6]

1978

Them & [uz]

for Professors Richard Hoggart & Leon Cortez[7]

I

αἰαῖ, ay, ay! . . . stutterer Demosthenes[8]
gob° full of pebbles outshouting seas— mouth

9. Harrison won a scholarship to Leeds Grammar School, a highly academic school for pupils aged eleven to eighteen, otherwise for fee-paying students.
1. A quotation from Robert Recorde's preface to his Ground of Arts (1543), a textbook that expresses the ethos of Leeds Grammar School in preferring the (now defunct) language of "Tully," the Roman statesman, orator, and writer Marcus Tullius Cicero (106–43 B.C.E.), to contemporary English.
2. Printed reports of debates in the British Houses of Parliament.
3. Senatus Populusque Romanus: the senate and people of Rome (Latin).
4. A third-century Roman emperor. As Harrison's first name, Tony, has been wrongly taken to be a diminutive of Anthony (see "Them & [uz]," below), this could be a humorous reference to an imaginary self in ancient Rome.
5. Marking in British schools and universities is often based on the Greek alphabet. Thus alpha would be A, beta B, and gamma double minus C− −, or fail.
6. Edmund Burke (1729–1797), an Irishman, became one of Britain's foremost political thinkers. His writings advocated a sound constitutional statesmanship in a time of misgovernment and corruption. Though he was against the concept of inalienable human rights, he supported the notion of the "social contract." He warned that the "dreadful schism" in British society could lead to revolution and regicide as in France, and he called for the suppression of free opinions.
7. Richard Hoggart (b. 1918) is an academic and, like Tony Harrison, from a working-class, north-of-England background. "Professor" Leon Cortez (1898–1970) was a music-hall comedian, whose act included recitations of Shakespeare's Macbeth in Cockney (working-class London) English.
8. Athenian orator (385?–322 B.C.E.)

4 words only of mi 'art aches[9] and . . . "Mine's broken, you barbarian, T.W.!"[1] He was nicely spoken.
5 "Can't have our glorious heritage done to death!"

I played the Drunken Porter in Macbeth.

"Poetry's the speech of kings. You're one of those Shakespeare gives the comic bits to: prose!
All poetry (even Cockney Keats?) you see
10 's been dubbed by [vs][2] into RP,
Received Pronunciation, please believe [vs]
your speech is in the hands of the Receivers."

"We say [vs] not [uz], T.W.!" That shut my trap.
I doffed my flat a's (as in "flat cap")
15 my mouth all stuffed with glottals,[3] great lumps to hawk up and spit out . . . E-nun-ci-ate!

II

So right, yer buggers, then! We'll occupy your lousy leasehold Poetry.

I chewed up Littererchewer and spat the bones
20 into the lap of dozing Daniel Jones,[4] dropped the initials I'd been harried as and used my name and own voice: [uz] [uz] [uz], ended sentences with by, with, from,
and spoke the language that I spoke at home.
25 RIP RP, RIP T.W.
I'm Tony Harrison no longer you!

You can tell the Receivers where to go
(and not aspirate it) once you know
Wordsworth's matter / water are full rhymes,
30 [uz] can be loving as well as funny.

My first mention in the Times[5] automatically made Tony Anthony!

1978

9. Cf. John Keats, "Ode to a Nightingale," line 1 (p. 935). To the despair of his teacher, the young Harrison, speaking the Leeds dialect, says "mi 'art" instead of "my heart."
1. Harrison's first names are Tony William. His first work was published under the name T. W. Harrison.
2. Phonetic transcription representing the Received Pronunciation form of us. The northern dialect form is uz.
3. Sounds made by opening and closing the larynx. The Leeds dialect uses glottal stops, the sound made when the word butter is pronounced as two syllables without an intervening t.
4. English phonetician (1881–1967), whose Outline of English Phonetics (1918) is considered the first comprehensive description of Received Pronunciation.
5. A London "quality" newspaper.

A Kumquat for John Keats

Today I found the right fruit for my prime,
not orange, not tangelo, and not lime, nor moon-like globes of grapefruit that now hang outside our bedroom, nor tart lemon's tang 5 (though last year full of bile and self-defeat
I wanted to believe no life was sweet) nor the tangible sunshine of the tangerine, and no incongruous citrus ever seen at greengrocers' in Newcastle or Leeds 10 mis-spelt by the spuds° and mud-caked swedes,° potatoes / Swedish turnips
a fruit an older poet might substitute for the grape John Keats thought fit to be Joy's fruit, when, two years before he died, he tried to write how Melancholy dwelled inside Delight,[6] 15 and if he'd known the citrus that I mean that's not orange, lemon, lime or tangerine,
I'm pretty sure that Keats, though he had heard
"of candied apple, quince and plum and gourd"[7]
instead of "grape against the palate fine"[8] 20 would have, if he'd known it, plumped for mine, this Eastern citrus scarcely cherry size he'd bite just once and then apostrophize and pen one stanza how the fruit had all the qualities of fruit before the Fall,[9] 25 but in the next few lines be forced to write how Eve's apple tasted at the second bite, and if John Keats had only lived to be,
because of extra years, in need like me, at 42 he'd help me celebrate 30 that Micanopy[1] kumquat that I ate whole, straight off the tree, sweet pulp and sour skin—or was it sweet outside, and sour within?
For however many kumquats that I eat
I'm not sure if it's flesh or rind that's sweet,
35 and being a man of doubt at life's mid-way
I'd offer Keats some kumquats and I'd say:
You'll find that one part's sweet and one part's tart:
say where the sweetness or the sourness start.

I find I can't, as if one couldn't say 40 exactly where the night became the day, which makes for me the kumquat taken whole best fruit, and metaphor, to fit the soul of one in Florida at 42 with Keats
crunching kumquats, thinking, as he eats

6. Cf. John Keats, "Ode on Melancholy," lines 25–26 (p. 938).
7. Cf. Keats, "The Eve of St. Agnes," line 265 (p. 913).
8. Cf. Keats, "Ode on Melancholy," line 28 (p. 938).
9. Cf. Genesis 2–3.
1. Place in southern Florida.

45 the flesh, the juice, the pith, the pips,° the peel, seeds that this is how a full life ought to feel,
its perishable relish prick the tongue,
when the man who savours life 's no longer young,
the fruits that were his futures far behind.
50 Then it's the kumquat fruit expresses best how days have darkness round them like a rind, life has a skin of death that keeps its zest.

History, a life, the heart, the brain flow to the taste buds and flow back again.
55 That decade or more past Keats's span makes me an older not a wiser man, who knows that it's too late for dying young,
but since youth leaves some sweetnesses unsung,
he's granted days and kumquats to express
60 Man's Being ripened by his Nothingness.
And it isn't just the gap of sixteen years,
a bigger crop of terrors, hopes and fears,
but a century of history on this earth
between John Keats's death and my own birth—65 years like an open crater, gory, grim, with bloody bubbles leering at the rim;[2]
a thing no bigger than an urn explodes and ravishes all silence, and all odes,
Flora° asphyxiated by foul air Roman goddess of flowers
70 unknown to either Keats or Lemprière,[3] dehydrated Naiads, Dryad amputees[4] dragging themselves through slagscapes with no trees, a shirt of Nessus fire that gnaws and eats[5]
children half the age of dying Keats . . .

75 Now were you twenty five or six years old when that fevered brow at last grew cold?
I've got no books to hand to check the dates.
My grudging but glad spirit celebrates that all I've got to hand 's the kumquats, John, 80 the fruit I'd love to have your verdict on,
but dead men don't eat kumquats, or drink wine,
they shiver in the arms of Proserpine,[6]
not warm in bed beside their Fanny Brawne,[7]
nor watch her pick ripe grapefruit in the dawn 85 as I did, waking, when I saw her twist, with one deft movement of a sunburnt wrist,
the moon, that feebly lit our last night's walk past alligator swampland, off its stalk.
I thought of moon-juice juleps[8] when I saw,

2. Cf. Keats, "Ode to a Nightingale," line 17 (p. 935).
3. John Lemprière (ca. 1765–1824), English classical scholar and author of The Classical Dictionary—for many years a standard work.
4. Landscapes dominated by heaps of rubble, refuse from mines. Dryad: wood nymph. Naiads: water nymphs.
5. A magical shirt, named for the centaur Nessus in Greek mythology, that once donned cannot be removed and that consumes the wearer in flames.
6. In Greek mythology, queen of the underworld.
7. A young woman loved by Keats.
8. Drinks made from spirits, sugar, ice, and mint.

90 as if I'd never seen the moon before,
the planet glow among the fruit, and its pale light make each citrus on the tree its satellite.

Each evening when I reach to draw the blind stars seem the light zest squeezed through night's black rind;
95 the night's peeled fruit the sun, juiced of its rays,
first stains, then streaks, then floods the world with days,
days, when the very sunlight made me weep,
days, spent like the nights in deep, drugged sleep,
days in Newcastle by my daughter's bed,
100 wondering if she, or I, weren't better dead,
days in Leeds, grey days, my first dark suit,
my mother's wreaths stacked next to Christmas fruit,
and days, like this in Micanopy. Days!

As strong sun burns away the dawn's grey haze
105 I pick a kumquat and the branches spray cold dew in my face to start the day.
The dawn's molasses make the citrus gleam still in the orchards of the groves of dream.

The limes, like Galway after weeks of rain,
110 glow with a greenness that is close to pain,
the dew-cooled surfaces of fruit that spent all last night flaming in the firmament.
The new day dawns. O days! My spirit greets
the kumquat with the spirit of John Keats.
115 O kumquat, comfort for not dying young,
both sweet and bitter, bless the poet's tongue!
I burst the whole fruit chilled by morning dew against my palate. Fine, for 42!

I search for buzzards as the air grows clear
120 and see them ride fresh thermals overhead.
Their bleak cries were the first sound I could hear when I stepped at the start of sunrise out of doors, and a noise like last night's bedsprings on our bed
from Mr Fowler sharpening farmers' saws.

1981

The Heartless Art

in memoriam S.T., died 4 April 1985

Death is in your house, but I'm out here
sackclothing kumquats against the forecast freeze, filling the hole you took two days to clear of briars, beercans, and bleached, barkless trees,
5 with hackberry leaves, pine needles, stuff like that.

Next spring, when you're no longer here
we'll have the land grassed over and quite flat.

When the Southern sun starts setting it sets fast.
I've time to tip one more load if I run.
10 Because I know this light could be your last
I drain the day of every drop of sun.
The barrow wheel spins round with a clock's tick.
I hear, three fields away, a hunter's gun,
you, in the silence after, being sick.

15 I watched you, very weak, negotiate
the childproof pill jar, panting to draw breath, and when you managed it you poured your hate more on the poured-out contents than on death, and, like Baptists uttering Beelzebub° the Devil
20 syllable by syllable, spat Meth-
a-done,[9] and there's also the poetic rub!

I've often heard my fellow poets (or those who write in metres something like my own with rhyme and rhythm, not in chopped-up prose 25 and brood on man's mortality) bemoan the insufficiency of rhymes for death—
hence my syllabifying Methadone
instead of just saying that you fought for breath.

Maybe the main but not the only cause;
30 a piece of engineering I'll explain.
Each syllable was followed by a pause
for breathlessness, and scorn of drugs for pain.
Another reason, though, was to delay
the use of one more rhyme stored in my brain
35 that, alas, I'll have a use for any day.

I'd stored away this rhyme when we first met.
Knowing you crawled on hands and knees to prime our water pump, I'll expiate one debt
by finally revealing that stored rhyme
40 that has the same relentlessness as death and comes to every one of us in time and comes to you this April full moon, SETH!

In return for all those oily working parts
you took the time and trouble to explain,
45 the pump that coughs, the saw that never starts,
I'll show you to distract you from the pain
you feel, except when napping, all the time because you won't take drugs that dull the brain,
a bit about my metre, line and rhyme.

9. Drug used as substitute for morphine or heroin.

50 In Arthur Symons' St Teresa[1] Nazaréth is stressed on the last against its spoken flow to engineer the contrast Jesus/Death.
Do I endorse that contrast? I don't, no!
To have a life on Earth and then want Heaven
55 seems like that all-night bar sign down below that says that Happy Hour's from 4 to 7.

Package lounges[2] are like ambulances:
the Bourbon-bibber° stares at us and glowers — -drinker
at what he thinks are pained or pitying glances.
60 We don't see his face but he sees ours.
The non-dying don't see you but you see them passing by to other rooms with flowers
as you fill the shining kidney with red phlegm.

I've left some spaces ( )[3]
65 benumbed by morphia° and Methadone — painkilling drug until the ( )[4] of April, ( )[5]
When I began these lines could I have known that the nurse's registration of the time you let your spirit go with one last groan
70 would help complete the first and third line rhyme?

Those bits I added later. Them apart
I wrote this in memoriam for Seth, meant to show him something of my art,
almost a whole week before his death.
75 The last thing the dying want to read,
I thought, 's a poem, and didn't show it,
and you, not dying yet, why should you need to know the final failure of the poet?

1985

ELEANOR WILNER
b. 1937

Reading the Bible Backwards[1]

All around the altar, huge lianas
curled, unfurled the dark green of their leaves to complement the red

1. The poetry of the Spanish nun and mystic St. Teresa of Ávila (1515–1582), translated by the English poet and critic Arthur Symons (1865–1945).
2. Bars (Floridian colloquialism).
3. "how you stayed alive" [Harrison's note].
4. "4th" [Harrison's note].
5. "10.05" [Harrison's note].

1. Or from the Apocalypse in Revelation, the final book of the Christian Scriptures, to the Creation in Genesis, the first book of the Hebrew Scriptures. Wilner fuses details from both Christian and Hebrew Scriptures throughout the poem.

of blood spilled there—a kind of Christmas
5 decoration, overhung with heavy vines and over them, the stars.
When the angels came, messengers like birds
but with the oiled flesh of men, they hung over the scene with smoldering swords,[2] 10 splashing the world when they beat their rain-soaked wings against the turning sky.

The child was bright in his basket[3]
as a lemon, with a bitter smell from his wet swaddling clothes. His mother bent 15 above him, singing a lullaby in the liquid tongue invented for the very young—short syllables like dripping from an eave mixed with the first big drops of rain 20 that fell, like tiny silver pears, from the glistening fronds of palm. The three who gathered there—old kings uncrowned:
the cockroach, condor and the leopard, lords of the cracks below the ground, the mountain 25 pass and the grass-grown plain, were not adorned, did not bear gifts, had not come to adore; they were simply drawn to gawk at this recurrent, awkward son whom the wind had said would spell
30 the end of earth as it had been.

Somewhere north of this familiar scene the polar caps were melting, the water was advancing in its slow, relentless lines, swallowing the old 35 landmarks, swelling the seas that pulled the flowers and the great steel cities down.
The dolphins sport in the rising sea,
anemones wave their many arms like hair on a drowned gorgon's head,[4] her features
40 softened by the sea beyond all recognition.

On the desert's edge where the oasis dies in a wash of sand, the sphinx[5] seems to shift on her haunches of stone, and the rain, as it runs down, completes the ruin of her face. The Nile 45 merges with the sea, the waters rise and drown the noise of earth. At the forest's

2. Suggests the flaming sword of the cherubim stationed east of the Garden of Eden (Genesis 3.24).

3. Moses' mother hid him in a covered wicker basket, which she set in reeds by the Nile, to protect him from Pharoah's command to cast all sons into the river (Exodus 2.2–3). The lines following return to Christ's nativity and the gifts brought to him by the wise men (Matthew 2.1–12).

4. The water imagery suggests both the flood from which Noah escaped in the ark (Genesis 7) and the end of the Ice Age. In Greek mythology, the Gorgons were three sisters who had snakes for hair.

5. Wilner's sphinx evokes not the Egyptian but the Greek model, a winged creature with a woman's head and lion's body.

edge, where the child sleeps, the waters gather—as if a hand were reaching for the curtain to drop across the glowing, lit tableau.

50 When the waves closed over, completing the green sweep of ocean, there was no time for mourning.
No final trump,[6] no thunder to announce the silent steal of waters; how soundlessly
it all went under: the little family
55 and the scene so easily mistaken for an adoration. Above, more clouds poured in and closed their ranks across the skies;
the angels, who had seemed so solid, turned quicksilver in the rain.
60 Now, nothing but the wind moves on the rain-pocked face of the swollen waters, though far below
where giant squid lie hidden in shy tangles,
the whales, heavy-bodied as the angels,
65 their fins like vestiges of wings, sing some mighty epic of their own—
a great day when the ships would all withdraw, the harpoons fail of their aim, the land
dissolve into the waters, and they would swim 70 among the peaks of mountains, like eagles of the deep, while far below them, the old nightmares of earth would settle into silt among the broken cities, the empty basket of the child would float
75 abandoned in the seaweed until the work of water unraveled it in filaments of straw, till even that straw rotted in the planetary thaw the whales prayed for, sending their jets of water skyward
80 in the clear conviction they'd spill back to ocean with their will accomplished in the miracle of rain: And the earth
was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And 85 the Spirit moved upon the face of the waters.[7]

1989

High Noon at Los Alamos[8]

To turn a stone
with its white squirming underneath, to pry the disc

6. The final trumpet; image of the Last Judgment.
7. As in Genesis 1.2.
8. Los Alamos, New Mexico; a major site of the Manhattan Project to develop an atomic bomb (1942–45).

from the sun's eclipse—white heat
5 coiling in the blinded eye: to these malign necessities we come from the dim time of dinosaurs who crawled like breathing lava from the earth's cracked crust, and swung 10 their tiny heads above the lumbering tons of flesh, brains no bigger than a fist clenched to resist the white flash in the sky the day the sun-flares pared them down to relics for museums,
15 turned glaciers back, seared Sinai's meadows[9] black—the ferns withered, the swamps were melted down to molten mud, the cells uncoupled, recombined, and madly multiplied, huge trees toppled to the ground, 20 the slow life there abandoned hope,
a caterpillar stiffened in the grass.
Two apes, caught in the act of coupling,
made a mutant child who woke to sunlight wondering, his mother 25 torn by the huge new head that forced the narrow birth canal.[1]

As if compelled to repetition and to unearth again
white fire at the heart of matter—fire 30 we sought and fire we spoke,
our thoughts, however elegant, were fire from first to last—like sentries set to watch at Argos for the signal fire passed peak to peak from Troy
35 to Nagasaki,[2] triumphant echo of the burning city walls and prologue to the murders yet to come—we scan the sky
for that bright flash,
our eyes stared white from watching 40 for the signal fire that ends
the epic—a cursèd line with its caesura, a pause to signal peace, or a rehearsal for the silence.

1989

9. In the Sinai Peninsula, a triangular region linking Africa with Asia.
1. The effects of extreme radiation can include gene mutation.
2. Japanese city, site of the second atomic bomb explosion in 1945. Lines 32–34 refer to the beginning of Agamemnon, the first play in the Oresteia trilogy by the Greek dramatist Aeschylus (525–456 B.C.E.). The play opens with a watchman in Argos—a city on the lower peninsula of Greece, and the home of Agamemnon—looking for "the light, the signal-fire / breaking out of Troy" (i.e., signalling Greek victory in the Trojan War).

DOM MORAES
b. 1938

Kanheri Caves

Over these blunted, these tormented hills,
Hawks hail and wheel, glissading° down the sky: gliding
It seems this green ambiguous landscape tilts
And teeters the perspective of the eye.
5 Only two centuries after Christ, this cliff
Was colonized by a mild antique race,
Who left us, like a faded photograph,
Their memories that dry up in this place.

They left no ghosts. The rock alone endures.
10 Their drains and cisterns work: storms wrecked the stairs:
Blocks are fallen: sunlight cracks those floors
And fidgets in a courtyard where a pair
Of giant Buddhas smile and wait their crash;
Then temples, audience-halls, a lonely tomb.
15 I touch its side. The stone's worn smooth as flesh.
A stranger dangles peaceful in that womb.

Worm he will be, if born: blink in the sun.
I'll crawl into his dark: perhaps he'll climb
Beyond the trippers to the final stone
20 Flat of the hillock, there to grow in Time.
Dry pubic ferns prickle the bitter sand.
Hawks in a hot concentric ecstasy
Of flight and shriek will wake his vision. And,
When the clouds lift, he'll glimpse the miles-off sea.

1957

Snow on a Mountain

That dream, her eyes like rocks studded the high
Mountain of her body that I was to climb.
  One moment past my hands had swum
  The chanting streams of her thighs:
5 Then I was lost, breathless among the pines.

Alone, alone with the nervous noise of water,
Climbing, I hoped to emerge on a path, but I knew
  When the spurred trees were past
  I should go on no farther
10 But fall there, dazzled by the miles of snow.

My dream was broken by the knock of day.
Yet, within my mind, these pictures linger:

I touch her with my clumsy words of love
And sense snow in her eye,
15 Mists, and the winds that warn, Stranger, O stranger!

1957

From Two from Israel

Rendezvous

(for nathan altermann)[1]

Altermann, sipping wine, reads with a look
Of infinite patience and slight suffering.
When I approach him, he puts down his book,

Waves to the chair beside him like a king,
5 Then claps his hands, and an awed waiter fetches
Bread, kosher sausage, cake, a chicken's wing,

More wine, some English cigarettes, and matches.
"Eat, eat," Altermann says, "this is good food."
Through the awning over us the sunlight catches

10 His aquiline° sad head, till it seems hewed — eaglelike
From tombstone marble. I accept some bread.
I've lunched already, but would not seem rude.

When I refuse more, he feeds me instead,
Heaping my plate, clapping for wine, his eyes
15 —Expressionless inside the marble head—

Appearing not to notice how the flies
Form a black, sticky icing on the cake.
Thinking of my health now, I visualise

The Aryan snow floating, flake upon flake,
20 Over the ghetto wall where only fleas
Fed well, and they and hunger kept awake

Under sharp stars, those waiting for release.
Birds had their nests, but Jews nowhere to hide
When visited by vans and black police.

25 The shekinah° rose where a people died, — divine presence
A pillar of flame by night, of smoke by day.
From Europe then the starved and terrified

Flew. Now their mourner sits in this café,
Telling me how to scan a Hebrew line.
30 Though my attention has moved far away

1. Israeli poet (1910–1970).

His features stay marble and aquiline.
But the eternal gesture of his race
Flowing through the hands that offer bread and wine

Reveals the deep love sealed in the still face.

1965

LES MURRAY
b. 1938

Noonday Axeman

Axe-fall, echo and silence. Noonday silence.
Two miles from here, it is the twentieth century:
cars on the bitumen,[1] powerlines vaulting the farms.
Here, with my axe, I am chopping into the stillness.

5 Axe-fall, echo and silence. I pause, roll tobacco, twist a cigarette, lick it. All is still.
I lean on my axe. A cloud of fragrant leaves hangs over me moveless, pierced everywhere by sky.

Here, I remember all of a hundred years:
10 candleflame, still night, frost and cattle bells,
the draywheels'[2] silence final in our ears,
and the first red cattle spreading through the hills and my great-great-grandfather here with his first sons, who would grow old, still speaking with his Scots accent, 15 having never seen those highlands that they sang of.

A hundred years. I stand and smoke in the silence.

A hundred years of clearing, splitting, sawing,
a hundred years of timbermen, ringbarkers, fencers and women in kitchens, stoking loud iron stoves 20 year in, year out, and singing old songs to their children have made this silence human and familiar no farther than where the farms rise into foothills, and, in that time, how many have sought their graves or fled to the cities, maddened by this stillness?

25 Things are so wordless. These two opposing scarves° incisions
I have cut in my red-gum squeeze out jewels of sap

1. Name given to various inflammable mineral substances, here probably asphalt.

2. Wheels of a long, heavy cart.

and stare. And soon, with a few more axe-strokes,
the tree will grow troubled, tremble, shift its crown and, leaning slowly, gather speed and colossally 30 crash down and lie between the standing trunks.

And then, I know, of the knowledge that led my forebears to drink and black rage and wordlessness, there will be silence.

After the tree falls, there will reign the same silence
as stuns and spurs us, enraptures and defeats us, 35 as seems to some a challenge, and seems to others to be waiting here for something beyond imagining.

Axe-fall, echo and silence. Unhuman silence.
A stone cracks in the heat. Through the still twigs, radiance stings at my eyes. I rub a damp brow with a handkerchief 40 and chop on into the stillness. Axe-fall and echo.

The great mast murmurs now. The scarves in its trunk crackle and squeak now, crack and increase as the hushing weight of high branches heels outward, and commences tearing and falling, and the collapse is tremendous.

45 Twigs fly, leaves puff and subside. The severed trunk slips off its stump and drops along its shadow.
And then there is no more. The stillness is there as ever. And I fall to lopping branches.

Axe-fall, echo and silence. It will be centuries 50 before many men are truly at home in this country, and yet, there have always been some, in each generation, there have always been some who could live in the presence of silence.

And some, I have known them, men with gentle broad hands,
who would die if removed from these unpeopled places, 55 some again I have seen, bemused and shy in the cities,
you have built against silence, dumbly trudging through noise

past the railway stations, looking up through the traffic at the smoky halls, dreaming of journeys, of stepping down from the train at some upland stop to recover 60 the crush of dry grass underfoot, the silence of trees.

Axe-fall, echo and silence. Dreaming silence.
Though I myself run to the cities, I will forever be coming back here to walk, knee-deep in ferns,
up and away from this metropolitan century,

65 to remember my ancestors, axemen, dairymen, horse-breakers,
now coffined in silence, down with their beards and dreams,
who, unwilling or rapt, despairing or very patient,
made what amounts to a human breach in the silence,

made of their lives the rough foundation of legends—70 men must have legends, else they will die of strangeness—then died in their turn, each, after his own fashion, resigned or agonized, from silence into great silence.

Axe-fall, echo and axe-fall. Noonday silence.
Though I go to the cities, turning my back on these hills, 75 for the talk and dazzle of cities, for the sake of belonging for months and years at a time to the twentieth century, the city will never quite hold me. I will be always coming back here on the up-train, peering, leaning out of the window to see, on far-off ridges, 80 the sky between the trees, and over the racket

of the rails to hear the echo and the silence.

I shoulder my axe and set off home through the stillness.

1965

Once in a Lifetime, Snow

For Chris and Mary Sharah

Winters at home brought wind, black frost and raw grey rain in barbed-wire fields,
but never more

5 until the day my uncle rose at dawn
and stepped outside—to find his paddocks gone,

his cattle to their hocks
10 in ghostly ground and unaccustomed light for miles around.

And he stopped short, and gazed
lit from below,
15 and half his wrinkles vanished
murmuring Snow.

A man of farm and fact he stared to see the facts of weather raised 20 to a mystery

white on the world he knew and all he owned.

Snow? Here? he mused. I see.
High time I learned.

25 Here, guessing what he meant had much to do with that black earth dread old men are given to,

he stooped to break the sheer 30 crust with delight at finding the cold unknown
so deeply bright,

at feeling it take his prints
so softly deep,
35 as if it thought he knew enough to sleep,

or else so little he might seek to shift
its weight of wintry light 40 by a single drift, perceiving this much, he scuffed

his slippered feet
and scooped a handful up to taste, and eat

45 in memory of the fact that even he might not have seen the end of reality . . .

Then, turning, he tiptoed in 50 to a bedroom, smiled, and wakened a murmuring child and another child.

1969

The Quality of Sprawl

Sprawl is the quality of the man who cut down his Rolls-Royce into a farm utility truck, and sprawl is what the company lacked when it made repeated efforts
5 to buy the vehicle back and repair its image.

Sprawl is doing your farming by aeroplane, roughly,
or driving a hitchhiker that extra hundred miles home.

It is the rococo[3] of being your own still centre.
It is never lighting cigars with ten-dollar notes:
10 that's idiot ostentation and murder of starving people.
Nor can it be bought with the ash of million-dollar deeds.

Sprawl lengthens the legs; it trains greyhounds on liver and beer.
Sprawl almost never says Why not? with palms comically raised nor can it be dressed for, not even in running shoes worn 15 with mink and a nose ring. That is Society. That's Style.
Sprawl is more like the thirteenth banana in a dozen or anyway the fourteenth.

Sprawl is Hank Stamper in Never Give an Inch[4]
bisecting an obstructive official's desk with a chainsaw.
20 Not harming the official. Sprawl is never brutal though it's often intransigent. Sprawl is never Simon de Montfort[5] at a town-storming: Kill them all! God will know his own.
Knowing the man's name this was said to might be sprawl.

Sprawl occurs in art. The fifteenth to twenty-first 25 lines in a sonnet, for example. And in certain paintings;
I have sprawl enough to have forgotten which paintings.
Turner's glorious Burning of the Houses of Parliament[6] comes to mind, a doubling bannered triumph of sprawl—except, he didn't fire them.

30 Sprawl gets up the nose of many kinds of people
(every kind that comes in kinds) whose futures don't include it.
Some decry it as criminal presumption, silken-robed Pope Alexander[7] dividing the new world between Spain and Portugal.
If he smiled in petto[8] afterwards, perhaps the thing did have sprawl.

35 Sprawl is really classless, though. It's John Christopher Frederick Murray
asleep in his neighbours' best bed in spurs and oilskins
but not having thrown up:
sprawl is never Calum who, drunk, along the hallways of our house, reinvented the Festoon.[9] Rather 40 it's Beatrice Miles going twelve hundred ditto in a taxi,[1]

3. Style of architecture, decoration, and furniture prevalent in Louis XV's France. Characteristically asymmetrical, overornamented, and florid.
4. U.K. title of Paul Newman's movie Sometimes a Great Notion (1971), an adaptation of the Ken Kesey novel about Oregon logger Hank Stamper and his family.
5. Thirteenth-century earl of Leicester; leader of the barons in disaffection against Henry III, and so an archetypal "overmighty subject."
6. Famous landscape by the English artist Joseph Mallord William Turner (1775–1851), whose painting, in watercolor and, later, oil, foreshadowed Impressionism.
7. Eight popes took the name Alexander. Possibly Alexander VI, Rodrigo Borgia (1431–1503), father of Caesar, Lucretia, and other children. He secured the papal throne through blatant bribery.
8. To himself (Italian).
9. Chain of flowers, leaves, etc., hung in a curve between two points.
1. The Australian bohemian Beatrice Miles (1902–1973) was famous for, among other things, riding in taxis and taking public transport but refusing to pay the fares, for making a nineteen-day taxi journey from Sydney to Perth and paying the fare, and for reciting Shakespeare (line 42) from memory. Ditto: i.e., miles.

No Lewd Advances, No Hitting Animals, No Speeding, on the proceeds of her two-bob-a-sonnet Shakespeare readings.
An image of my country. And would that it were more so.

No, sprawl is full-gloss murals on a council-house° wall. town hall
45 Sprawl leans on things. It is loose-limbed in its mind.
Reprimanded and dismissed
it listens with a grin and one boot up on the rail of possibility. It may have to leave the Earth.
Being roughly Christian, it scratches the other cheek
50 and thinks it unlikely. Though people have been shot for sprawl.

1983

Morse

Tuckett. Bill Tuckett. Telegraph operator, Hall's Creek, which is way out back of the Outback, but he stuck it, quite likely liked it, despite heat, glare, dust and the lack of diversion or doctors. Come disaster you trusted to luck, 5 ingenuity and pluck. This was back when nice people said pluck,
the sleevelink and green eyeshade epoch.[2]
Faced, though, like Bill Tuckett with a man needing surgery right on the spot, a lot would have done their dashes. It looked hopeless (dot dot dot) 10 Lift him up on the table, said Tuckett, running the key hot till Head Office turned up a doctor who coolly instructed up a thousand miles of wire, as Tuckett advanced slit by slit with a safety razor blade, pioneering on into the wet, copper-wiring the rivers off, in the first operation conducted 15 along dotted lines, with rum drinkers gripping the patient:
d-d-dash it, take care, Tuck!
And the vital spark stayed unshorted.
Yallah![3] breathed the camelmen. Tuckett, you did it, you did it!
cried the spattered la-de-dah jodhpur[4]-wearing Inspector of Stock.
20 We imagine, some weeks later, a properly laconic convalescent averring Without you, I'd have kicked the bucket . . .

From Chungking to Burrenjuck,[5] morse keys have mostly gone silent and only old men meet now to chit-chat in their electric bygone dialect. The last letter many will forget 25 is dit-dit-dit-dah, V for Victory. The coders' hero had speed, resource and a touch. So ditditdit daah for Bill Tuckett.

1983

2. I.e., the nineteenth century. Sleevelink: cuff link.
3. God be praised! (Arabic).
4. Long breeches for riding, close-fitting from knee to ankle.
5. I.e., from southwest China to southeast Australia.

CHARLES SIMIC
b. 1938

Watch Repair

A small wheel
Incandescent,
Shivering like
A pinned butterfly.

5 Hands thrown up
In all directions:
The crossroads
One arrives at
In a nightmare.

10 Higher than that Number 12 presides
Like a beekeeper
Over the swarming honeycomb
Of the open watch.

15 Other wheels
That could fit
Inside a raindrop.

Tools
That must be splinters
20 Of arctic starlight.

Tiny golden mills
Grinding invisible
Coffee beans.

When the coffee's boiling
25 Cautiously,
So it doesn't burn us,
We raise it
To the lips
Of the nearest 30 Ear.

1974

Prodigy[1]

I grew up bent over
a chessboard.

I loved the word endgame.

All my cousins looked worried.

5 It was a small house near a Roman graveyard.
Planes and tanks
shook its windowpanes.

A retired professor of astronomy
10 taught me how to play.

That must have been in 1944.

In the set we were using,
the paint had almost chipped off
the black pieces.

15 The white King was missing and had to be substituted for.

I'm told but do not believe that that summer I witnessed men hung from telephone poles.

20 I remember my mother
blindfolding me a lot.
She had a way of tucking my head
suddenly under her overcoat.

In chess, too, the professor told me,
25 the masters play blindfolded,
the great ones on several boards
at the same time.

1980

A Book Full of Pictures

Father studied theology through the mail
And this was exam time.
Mother knitted. I sat quietly with a book
Full of pictures. Night fell.

1. This poem and "Cameo Appearance" (p. 1893) allude to the Nazi bombing of Belgrade, where Simic was born, in World War II.

5 My hands grew cold touching the faces
Of dead kings and queens.

There was a black raincoat
  in the upstairs bedroom
Swaying from the ceiling,
10 But what was it doing there?
Mother's long needles made quick crosses.
They were black
Like the inside of my head just then.

The pages I turned sounded like wings.
15 "The soul is a bird," he once said.
In my book full of pictures
A battle raged: lances and swords
Made a kind of wintry forest
With my heart spiked and bleeding in its branches.

1992

Cameo Appearance

I had a small, nonspeaking part
In a bloody epic. I was one of the Bombed and fleeing humanity.
In the distance our great leader
5 Crowded like a rooster from a balcony,
Or was it a great actor
Impersonating our great leader?

That's me there, I said to the kiddies.
I'm squeezed between the man
10 With two bandaged hands raised
And the old woman with her mouth open
As if she were showing us a tooth

That hurts badly. The hundred times
I rewound the tape, not once
15 Could they catch sight of me
In that huge gray crowd,
That was like any other gray crowd.

Trot off to bed, I said finally.
I know I was there. One take 20 Is all they had time for.
We ran, and the planes grazed our hair,
And then they were no more
As we stood dazed in the burning city,
But, of course, they didn't film that.

1997

MARGARET ATWOOD
b. 1939

This Is a Photograph of Me

It was taken some time ago.
At first it seems to be a smeared
print: blurred lines and gray flecks
5 blended with the paper;

then, as you scan
it, you see in the left-hand corner
a thing that is like a branch: part of a tree (balsam or spruce) emerging
10 and, to the right, halfway up what ought to be a gentle slope, a small frame house.

In the background there is a lake,
and beyond that, some low hills.

15 (The photograph was taken the day after I drowned.

I am in the lake, in the center of the picture, just under the surface.

It is difficult to say where 20 precisely, or to say how large or small I am:

the effect of water
on light is a distortion

but if you look long enough, 25 eventually you will be able to see me.)

1966

At the Tourist Center in Boston

There is my country under glass,
a white relief-
map with red dots for the cities, reduced to the size of a wall

5 and beside it 10 blownup snapshots
one for each province,
in purple-browns and odd reds,
the green of the trees dulled;
all blues however
10 of an assertive purity.

Mountains and lakes and more lakes
(though Quebec is a restaurant and Ontario the empty interior of the parliament buildings), with nobody climbing the trails and hauling out 15 the fish and splashing in the water but arrangements of grinning tourists—

look here, Saskatchewan is a flat lake, some convenient rocks where two children pose with a father 20 and the mother is cooking something in immaculate slacks by a smokeless fire, her teeth white as detergent.

Whose dream is this, I would like to know:
is this a manufactured
25 hallucination, a cynical fiction, a lure for export only?

I seem to remember people,
at least in the cities, also slush, machines and assorted garbage. Perhaps 30 that was my private mirage

which will just evaporate when I go back. Or the citizens will be gone, run off to the peculiarly-green forests
35 to wait among the brownish mountains for the platoons of tourists and plan their odd red massacres.

Unsuspecting window lady, I ask you:

40 Do you see nothing watching you from under the water?

Was the sky ever that blue?

Who really lives there?

1968

You Begin

You begin this way:
this is your hand,
this is your eye,
that is a fish, blue and flat 5 on the paper, almost the shape of an eye.
This is your mouth, this is an O or a moon, whichever you like. This is yellow.

10 Outside the window is the rain, green
because it is summer, and beyond that the trees and then the world, which is round and has only 15 the colors of these nine crayons.

This is the world, which is fuller
and more difficult to learn than I have said.
You are right to smudge it that way with the red and then 20 the orange: the world burns.

Once you have learned these words you will learn that there are more words than you can ever learn.
The word hand floats above your hand
25 like a small cloud over a lake.
The word hand anchors
your hand to this table,
your hand is a warm stone
I hold between two words.

30 This is your hand, these are my hands, this is the world, which is round but not flat and has more colors than we can see.

It begins, it has an end,
this is what you will
35 come back to, this is your hand.

1978

Flowers

Right now I am the flower girl.
I bring fresh flowers,

dump out the old ones, the greenish water that smells like dirty teeth
5 into the bathroom sink, snip off the stem ends with surgical scissors I borrowed from the nursing station,
put them into a jar
I brought from home, because they don't have vases
10 in this hotel for the ill, place them on the table beside my father
where he can't see them
because he won't open his eyes.

He lies flattened under the white sheet.
15 He says he is on a ship,
and I can see it—
the functional white walls, the minimal windows,
the little bells, the rubbery footsteps of strangers,
the whispering all around 20 of the air-conditioner, or else the ocean, and he is on a ship;
he's giving us up, giving up everything
but the breath going in and out of his diminished body;
25 minute by minute he's sailing slowly away, away from us and our waving hands that do not wave.

The women come in, two of them, in blue;
it's no use being kind, in here,
30 if you don't have hands like theirs—
large and capable, the hands of plump muscular angels,
the ones that blow trumpets and lift swords.
They shift him carefully, tuck in the corners.
35 It hurts, but as little as possible.
Pain is their lore. The rest of us are helpless amateurs.

A suffering you can neither cure nor enter—there are worse things, but not many.
40 After a while it makes us impatient.
Can't we do anything but feel sorry?

I sit there, watching the flowers in their pickle jar. He is asleep, or not.
I think: He looks like a turtle.
45 Or: He looks erased.
But somewhere in there, at the far end of the tunnel of pain and forgetting he's trapped in is the same father I knew before,
the one who carried the green canoe
50 over the portage, the painter trailing, myself with the fishing rods, slipping on the wet boulders and slapping flies.

That was the last time we went there.

There will be a last time for this also,
55 bringing cut flowers to this white room.
Sooner or later I too will have to give everything up, even the sorrow that comes with these flowers,
even the anger,
60 even the memory of how I brought them from a garden I will no longer have by then,
and put them beside my dying father,
hoping I could still save him.

1995

Up

You wake up filled with dread.
There seems no reason for it.
Morning light sifts through the window,
there is birdsong,
5 you can't get out of bed.

It's something about the crumpled sheets hanging over the edge like jungle foliage, the terry slippers gaping their dark pink mouths for your feet, 10 the unseen breakfast—some of it in the refrigerator you do not dare to open—you will not dare to eat.

What prevents you? The future. The future tense, immense as outer space.
15 You could get lost there.
No. Nothing so simple. The past, its density and drowned events pressing you down, like sea water, like gelatin filling your lungs instead of air.

20 Forget all that and let's get up.
Try moving your arm.
Try moving your head.
Pretend the house is on fire
and you must run or burn.
25 No, that one's useless.
It's never worked before.

Where is it coming from, this echo,
this huge No that surrounds you,

silent as the folds of the yellow
30 curtains, mute as the cheerful

Mexican bowl with its cargo of mummified flowers?
(You chose the colours of the sun,
not the dried neutrals of shadow.
35 God knows you've tried.)

Now here's a good one:
you're lying on your deathbed.
You have one hour to live.
Who is it, exactly, you have needed
40 all these years to forgive?

1995

SEAMUS HEANEY
b. 1939

Digging

Between my finger and my thumb
The squat pen rests; snug as a gun.

Under my window, a clean rasping sound
When the spade sinks into gravelly ground:
5 My father, digging. I look down

Till his straining rump among the flowerbeds
Bends low, comes up twenty years away
Stooping in rhythm through potato drills[1]
Where he was digging.

10 The coarse boot nestled on the lug, the shaft
Against the inside knee was levered firmly.
He rooted out tall tops, buried the bright edge deep
To scatter new potatoes that we picked
Loving their cool hardness in our hands.

15 By god, the old man could handle a spade.
Just like his old man.

My grandfather cut more turf[2] in a day
Than any other man on Toner's bog.
Once I carried him milk in a bottle
20 Corked sloppily with paper. He straightened up

1. Small furrows in which seeds are sown.
2. Slabs of peat that, when dried, are a common domestic fuel in Ireland.

To drink it, then fell to right away
Nicking and slicing neatly, heaving sods
Over his shoulder, going down and down
For the good turf. Digging.

25 The cold smell of potato mould, the squelch and slap
Of soggy peat, the curt cuts of an edge
Through living roots awaken in my head.
But I've no spade to follow men like them.

Between my finger and my thumb
30 The squat pen rests.
I'll dig with it.

1966

The Forge

All I know is a door into the dark.
Outside, old axles and iron hoops rusting;
Inside, the hammered anvil's short-pitched ring,
The unpredictable fantail of sparks
5 Or hiss when a new shoe toughens in water.
The anvil must be somewhere in the centre,
Horned as a unicorn, at one end square,
Set there immoveable: an altar
Where he expends himself in shape and music.
10 Sometimes, leather-aproned, hairs in his nose,
He leans out on the jamb, recalls a clatter
Of hoofs where traffic is flashing in rows;
Then grunts and goes in, with a slam and flick
To beat real iron out, to work the bellows.

1969

Punishment[3]

I can feel the tug
of the halter at the nape

3. In 1951, the peat-stained body of a young girl who lived in the late first century was recovered from a bog in Windeby, Germany. As P. V. Glob describes her in The Bog People (1969), she "lay naked in the hole in the peat, a bandage over the eyes and a collar round the neck. The band across the eyes was drawn tight and had cut into the neck and the base of the nose. We may feel sure that it had been used to close her eyes to this world. There was no mark of strangulation on the neck, so that it had not been used for that purpose." Her hair "had been shaved off with a razor on the left side of the head. . . . When the brain was removed the convolutions and folds of the surface could be clearly seen [Glob reproduces a photograph of her brain]. . . . This girl of only fourteen had had an inadequate winter diet. . . . To keep the young body under, some birch branches and a big stone were laid upon her." According to the Roman historian Tacitus (ca. 56–ca. 120), the Germanic peoples punished adulterous women by shaving off their hair and then scourging them out of the village or killing them. In more recent times, her "betraying sisters" (line 38) have sometimes been shaved, stripped, tarred, and handcuffed by the Irish Republican Army to the railings of Belfast in punishment for keeping company with British soldiers.

of her neck, the wind on her naked front.

5 It blows her nipples
to amber beads,
it shakes the frail rigging
of her ribs.

I can see her drowned
10 body in the bog,
the weighing stone,
the floating rods and boughs.

Under which at first
she was a barked sapling
15 that is dug up oak-bone, brain-firkin:° -small cask

her shaved head
like a stubble of black corn,
her blindfold a soiled bandage,
20 her noose a ring

to store
the memories of love.
Little adulteress,
before they punished you

25 you were flaxen-haired, undernourished, and your tar-black face was beautiful.
My poor scapegoat,

I almost love you
30 but would have cast, I know,
the stones of silence.
I am the artful voyeur

of your brain's exposed and darkened combs,[4] 35 your muscles' webbing
and all your numbered bones:

I who have stood dumb
when your betraying sisters,
cauled[5] in tar,
40 wept by the railings,

who would connive
in civilized outrage

4. Cellular structure, as in honeycomb.
5. Wrapped or enclosed. A caul is the inner fetal membrane that at birth, when it is unruptured, sometimes covers the infant's head.

yet understand the exact and tribal, intimate revenge.

1975

The Skunk

Up, black, striped and damasked like the chasuble[6]
At a funeral mass, the skunk's tail
Paraded the skunk. Night after night
I expected her like a visitor.

5 The refrigerator whinnied into silence.
My desk light softened beyond the verandah.
Small oranges loomed in the orange tree.
I began to be tense as a voyeur.

After eleven years I was composing
10 Love-letters again, broaching the word "wife"
Like a stored cask, as if its slender vowel
Had mutated into the night earth and air

Of California. The beautiful, useless
Tang of eucalyptus spelt your absence.
15 The aftermath of a mouthful of wine
Was like inhaling you off a cold pillow.

And there she was, the intent and glamorous,
Ordinary, mysterious skunk,
Mythologized, demythologized,
20 Snuffing the boards five feet beyond me.

It all came back to me last night, stirred
By the sootfall of your things at bedtime,
Your head-down, tail-up hunt in a bottom drawer
For the black plunge-line nightdress.

1979

A Dream of Jealousy

Walking with you and another lady
In wooded parkland, the whispering grass
Ran its fingers through our guessing silence
And the trees opened into a shady
5 Unexpected clearing where we sat down.
I think the candour of the light dismayed us.

6. Sleeveless vestment worn by the priest celebrating Mass, its color regulated by the feast of the day.

We talked about desire and being jealous,
Our conversation a loose single gown
Or a white picnic tablecloth spread out
10 Like a book of manners in the wilderness.
"Show me," I said to our companion, "what I have much coveted, your breast's mauve star."
And she consented. O neither these verses
Nor my prudence, love, can heal your wounded stare.

1979

From Station Island[7]

12

Like a convalescent, I took the hand stretched down from the jetty, sensed again an alien comfort as I stepped on ground to find the helping hand still gripping mine, 5 fish-cold and bony, but whether to guide or to be guided I could not be certain for the tall man in step at my side seemed blind, though he walked straight as a rush upon his ash plant,[8] his eyes fixed straight ahead.

10 Then I knew him in the flesh out there on the tarmac among the cars,
wintered hard and sharp as a blackthorn bush.

His voice eddying with the vowels of all rivers[9]
came back to me, though he did not speak yet, 15 a voice like a prosecutor's or a singer's, cunning,[1] narcotic, mimic, definite

as a steel nib's downstroke, quick and clean, and suddenly he hit a litter basket

with his stick, saying, "Your obligation
20 is not discharged by any common rite.
What you must do must be done on your own

7. "Station Island is a sequence of dream encounters with familiar ghosts, set on Station Island on Lough Derg in Co. Donegal. The island is also known as St. Patrick's Purgatory because of a tradition that Patrick was the first to establish the penitential vigil of fasting and praying which still constitutes the basis of the three-day pilgrimage. Each unit of the contemporary pilgrim's exercises is called a 'station,' and a large part of each station involves walking barefoot and praying round the 'beds,' stone circles which are said to be the remains of early medieval monastic cells" [Heaney's note]. In this last section of the poem, the familiar ghost is that of the Irish novelist James Joyce (1882–1941).

8. Walking stick made of ash. Joyce was almost blind.

9. The Anna Livia Plurabelle episode of Joyce's Finnegans Wake (1939) resounds with the names of many rivers.

1. "The only arms I allow myself to use—silence, exile, and cunning" (Joyce, Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man, 1916).

so get back in harness. The main thing is to write for the joy of it. Cultivate a work-lust that imagines its haven like your hands at night

25 dreaming the sun in the sunspot of a breast.
You are fasted now, light-headed, dangerous.
Take off from here. And don't be so earnest, let others wear the sackcloth and the ashes.[2]

Let go, let fly, forget.
30 You've listened long enough. Now strike your note."

It was as if I had stepped free into space alone with nothing that I had not known already. Raindrops blew in my face as I came to. "Old father, mother's son, 35 there is a moment in Stephen's[3] diary for April the thirteenth, a revelation set among my stars—that one entry has been a sort of password in my ears,

the collect of a new epiphany,[4]

40 the Feast of the Holy Tundish."[5] "Who cares," he jeered, "any more? The English language belongs to us. You are raking at dead fires,

a waste of time for somebody your age.
That subject° people stuff is a cod's° game, colonized / fool's
45 infantile, like your peasant pilgrimage.

You lose more of yourself than you redeem doing the decent thing. Keep at a tangent.
When they make the circle wide, it's time to swim out on your own and fill the element 50 with signatures on your own frequency, echo soundings, searches, probes, allurements,

elver-gleams[6] in the dark of the whole sea."
The shower broke in a cloudburst, the tarmac
fumed and sizzled. As he moved off quickly

55 the downpour loosed its screens round his straight walk.

1984

2. As worn by penitents in biblical times and later.
3. Stephen Dedalus: protagonist in Portrait of the Artist, major character in Joyce's Ulysses (1922), and Joyce's alter ego.
4. Manifestation of a superhuman being, as of the infant Jesus to the Magi (Matthew 2). In the Christian calendar, the Feast of the Epiphany is January 6. Collect: short prayer assigned to a particular day.
5. "See the end of James Joyce's Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man" [Heaney's note]: "13 April: That tundish [funnel] has been on my mind for a long time. I looked it up and find it English and good old blunt English too. Damn the dean of studies and his funnel! What did he come here for to teach us his own language or to learn it from us? Damn him one way or the other!"
6. Gleams as of young eels.

From Clearances[7]

IN MEMORIAM M.K.H.,[8] 1911–1984

She taught me what her uncle once taught her:
How easily the biggest coal block split
If you got the grain and hammer angled right.

The sound of that relaxed alluring blow,
5 Its co-opted and obliterated echo,
Taught me to hit, taught me to loosen,

Taught me between the hammer and the block
To face the music. Teach me now to listen,
To strike it rich behind the linear black.

III

When all the others were away at Mass
I was all hers as we peeled potatoes.
They broke the silence, let fall one by one
Like solder weeping off the soldering iron:
5 Cold comforts set between us, things to share
Gleaming in a bucket of clean water.
And again let fall. Little pleasant splashes
From each other's work would bring us to our senses.

So while the parish priest at her bedside
10 Went hammer and tongs at the prayers for the dying
And some were responding and some crying
I remembered her head bent towards my head,
Her breath in mine, our fluent dipping knives—
Never closer the whole rest of our lives.

VII

In the last minutes he said more to her
Almost than in all their life together.
"You'll be in New Row on Monday night
And I'll come up for you and you'll be glad 5 When I walk in the door . . . Isn't that right?"
His head was bent down to her propped-up head.
She could not hear but we were overjoyed.
He called her good and girl. Then she was dead,
The searching for a pulsebeat was abandoned
10 And we all knew one thing by being there.
The space we stood around had been emptied
Into us to keep, it penetrated
Clearances that suddenly stood open.
High cries were felled and a pure change happened.

7. Enforced depopulation (as of the Scottish Highlands).

8. Margaret Kathleen Heaney, the poet's mother.

VIII

I thought of walking round and round a space
Utterly empty, utterly a source
Where the decked chestnut tree had lost its place
In our front hedge above the wallflowers.
5 The white chips jumped and jumped and skited° high. shot
I heard the hatchet's differentiated
Accurate cut, the crack, the sigh
And collapse of what luxuriated
Through the shocked tips and wreckage of it all.
10 Deep-planted and long gone, my coeval° equally old
Chestnut from a jam jar in a hole,
Its heft and hush become a bright nowhere,
A soul ramifying and forever
Silent, beyond silence listened for.

1987

Casting and Gathering

FOR TED HUGHES[9]

Years and years ago, these sounds took sides:

On the left bank, a green silk tapered cast
Went whispering through the air, saying hush
And lush, entirely free, no matter whether 5 It swished above the hayfield or the river.

On the right bank, like a speeded-up corncrake,[1]
A sharp ratcheting went on and on Cutting across the stillness as another
Fisherman gathered line-lengths off his reel.

10 I am still standing there, awake and dreamy,
I have grown older and can see them both
Moving their arms and rods, working away,
Each one absorbed, proofed by the sounds he's making.

One sound is saying. "You are not worth tuppence, 15 But neither is anybody. Watch it! Be severe."
The other says, "Go with it! Give and swerve.
You are everything you feel beside the river."

I love hushed air. I trust contrariness.
Years and years go past and I do not move

9. English poet (1930–1998; see pp. 1810–16). 1. Bird with a distinctive cry.

20 For I see that when one man casts, the other gathers
And then vice versa, without changing sides.

1991

The Settle Bed[2]

Willed down,[3] waited for, in place at last and for good.
Trunk-hasped, cart-heavy, painted an ignorant brown.
And pew-strait, bin-deep, standing four-square as an ark.

If I lie in it, I am cribbed° in seasoned deal° confined / pine or fir wood
5 Dry as the unkindled boards of a funeral ship.
My measure has been taken, my ear shuttered up.

Yet I hear an old sombre tide awash in the headboard:
Unpathetic och ochs and och hohs,[4] the long bedtime
Sigh-life of Ulster,[5] unwilling, unbeaten,

10 Protestant, Catholic, the Bible, the beads,° rosary
Late talks at gables by moonlight, boots on the hearth,
The small hours chimed sweetly away so next thing it was

The cock on the ridge-tiles.[6]
And now this is "an inheritance"—
Upright, rudimentary, unshiftably planked
15 In the long long ago, yet willable forward

Again and again and again, cargoed with Its own dumb, tongue-and-groove[7] worthiness
And un-get-roundable weight. But to conquer that weight,

Imagine a dower[8] of settle beds tumbled from heaven
20 Like some nonsensical vengeance come on the people,
Then learn from that harmless barrage that whatever is given

Can always be reimagined, however four-square,
Plank-thick, hull-stupid and out of its time
It happens to be. You are free as the lookout,

25 That far-seeing joker posted high over the fog,
Who declared by the time that he had got himself down
The actual ship had stolen away from beneath him.

1991

2. A bed like a large wooden chest with a hinged ("hasped," line 2) lid that, when closed, can be used as a bench.
3. Inherited.
4. Expressions of mild regret (Irish).
5. The northernmost of Ireland's four provinces.
6. I.e., the rooster crows on the roof.
7. Carpenters' term for the interlocked joining of parallel planks.
8. Dowry, inheritance.

From Glanmore Revisited

6 Bedside Reading

The whole place airier. Big summer trees
Stirring at eye level when we waken
And little shoots of ivy creeping in Unless they've been trained out—like memories
5 You've trained so long now they can show their face
And keep their distance. White-mouthed depression
Swims out from its shadow like a dolphin
With wet, unreadable, unfurtive eyes.

I swim in Homer.[9] In Book Twenty-three.
10 At last Odysseus and Penelope
Waken together. One bedpost of the bed
Is the living trunk of an old olive tree
And is their secret. As ours could have been ivy,
Evergreen, atremble and unsaid.

7 The Skylight

You were the one for skylights. I opposed
Cutting into the seasoned tongue-and-groove[1]
Of pitch pine. I liked it low and closed,
Its claustrophobic, nest-up-in-the-roof
5 Effect. I liked the snuff-dry feeling,
The perfect, trunk-lid fit of the old ceiling.
Under there, it was all hutch and hatch.
The blue slates kept the heat like midnight thatch.[2]

But when the slates came off, extravagant
10 Sky entered and held surprise wide open.
For days I felt like an inhabitant
Of that house where the man sick of the palsy
Was lowered through the roof, had his sins forgiven,
Was healed, took up his bed and walked away.[3]

1991

Fosterling[4]

"That heavy greenness fostered by water"
John Montague[5]

At school I loved one picture's heavy greenness—
Horizons rigged with windmills' arms and sails.
The millhouses' still outlines. Their in-placeness

9. Homer's epic poem the Odyssey.
1. See note 7 above.
2. The roof tiles kept the house as warm at night as thatch famously does.
3. See Christ's miraculous cure, in John 5.8.
4. Foster child.
5. Irish (American-born) poet (b. 1929).

Still more in place when mirrored in canals.
5 I can't remember not ever having known
The immanent hydraulics of a land
Of glar° and glit° and floods at mud / oozing water
dailigone.° dusk
My silting hope. My lowlands of the mind.

Heaviness of being. And poetry
10 Sluggish in the doldrums of what happens.
Me waiting until I was nearly fifty
To credit marvels. Like the tree-clock of tin cans
The tinkers made. So long for air to brighten,
Time to be dazzled and the heart to lighten.

1991

From Squarings

Lightenings

VIII

The annals° say: when the monks of Clonmacnoise[6] histories
Were all at prayers inside the oratory
A ship appeared above them in the air.

The anchor dragged along behind so deep
5 It hooked itself into the altar rails
And then, as the big hull rocked to a standstill,

A crewman shinned and grappled down the rope
And struggled to release it. But in vain.
"This man can't bear our life here and will drown,"

10 The abbot said, "unless we help him." So
They did, the freed ship sailed, and the man climbed back
Out of the marvellous as he had known it.

1991

Two Lorries[7]

It's raining on black coal and warm wet ashes.
There are tyre-marks in the yard, Agnew's old lorry
Has all its cribs[8] down and Agnew the coalman
With his Belfast accent's sweet-talking my mother.
5 Would she ever go to a film in Magherafelt?[9]
But it's raining and he still has half the load

6. Famous monastic settlement beside the river Shannon, near Athlone, Ireland.
7. Trucks.
8. Hinged, wooden side-flaps.
9. Small town in County Tyrone, Northern Ireland.

To deliver farther on. This time the lode
Our coal came from was silk-black, so the ashes
Will be the silkiest white. The Magherafelt
10 (Via Toomebridge) bus goes by. The half-stripped lorry
With its emptied, folded coal-bags moves my mother:
The tasty ways of a leather-aproned coalman!

And films no less! The conceit of a coalman . . .
She goes back in and gets out the black lead
15 And emery paper,[1] this nineteen-forties mother,
All business round her stove, half-wiping ashes
With a backhand from her cheek as the bolted[2] lorry
Gets revved and turned and heads for Magherafelt

And the last delivery. Oh, Magherafelt!
20 Oh, dream of red plush and a city coalman
As time fastforwards and a different lorry
Groans into shot,° up Broad Street, with a payload view
That will blow the bus station to dust and ashes . . .
After that happened, I'd a vision of my mother,

25 A revenant° on the bench where I would meet her ghost
In that cold-floored waiting-room in Magherafelt,
Her shopping bags full up with shovelled ashes.
Death walked out past her like a dust-faced coalman
Refolding body-bags, plying his load
30 Empty upon empty, in a flurry

Of motes° and engine-revs, but which lorry dust
Was it now? Young Agnew's or that other,
Heavier, deadlier one, set to explode
In a time beyond her time in Magherafelt . . .
35 So tally° bags and sweet-talk darkness, coalman. keep a record of
Listen to the rain spit in new ashes

As you heft a load of dust that was Magherafelt,
Then reappear from your lorry as my mother's Dreamboat coalman filmed in silk-white ashes.

1996

MICHAEL LONGLEY
b. 1939

The Linen Industry

Pulling up flax[1] after the blue flowers have fallen
And laying our handfuls in the peaty water

1. Abrasive-coated paper, here used with a preparation of "black lead" to polish the stove.
2. With the sides folded up and locked in place.

1. Blue-flowered plant grown for its textile fiber and treated in water from the Irish peat bog.

To rot those grasses to the bone, or building stooks[2]
That recall the skirts of an invisible dancer,

5 We become a part of the linen industry
And follow its processes to the grubby town
Where fields are compacted into window-boxes
And there is little room among the big machines.

But even in our attic under the skylight
10 We make love on a bleach green, the whole meadow
Draped with material turning white in the sun
As though snow reluctant to melt were our attire.

What's passion but a battering of stubborn stalks,
Then a gentle combing out of fibres like hair
15 And a weaving of these into christening robes,
Into garments for a marriage or funeral?

Since it's like a bereavement once the labour's done
To find ourselves last workers in a dying trade,
Let flax be our matchmaker, our undertaker,
20 The provider of sheets for whatever the bed—

And be shy of your breasts in the presence of death,
Say that you look more beautiful in linen
Wearing white petticoats, the bow on your bodice
A butterfly attending the embroidered flowers.

1979

Gorse Fires

Cattle out of their byres° are dungy still, lambs cowsheds
Have stepped from last year as from an enclosure.
Five or six men stand gazing at a rusty tractor
Before carrying implements to separate fields.

5 I am travelling from one April to another.
It is the same train between the same embankments.
Gorse fires are smoking, but primroses burn
And celandines and white may and gorse flowers.

1991

Ghetto

I

Because you will suffer soon and die, your choices
Are neither right nor wrong: a spoon will feed you,

2. Sheaves standing together.

A flannel keep you clean, a toothbrush bring you back
To your bathroom's view of chimney-pots and gardens.
5 With so little time for inventory or leavetaking,
You are packing now for the rest of your life
Photographs, medicines, a change of underwear, a book,
A candlestick, a loaf, sardines, needle and thread.
These are your heirlooms, perishables, worldly goods.
10 What you bring is the same as what you leave behind,
Your last belonging a list of your belongings.

II

As though it were against the law to sleep on pillows
They have filled a cathedral with confiscated feathers:
Silence irrefrangible,° no room for angels' wings, unbreakable
15 Tons of feathers suffocating cherubim and seraphim.[3]

III

The little girl without a mother behaves like a mother
With her rag doll to whom she explains fear and anguish,
The meagreness of the bread ration, how to make it last,
How to get back to the doll's house and lift up the roof
20 And, before the flame-throwers and dynamiters destroy it,
How to rescue from their separate rooms love and sorrow,
Masterpieces the size of a postage stamp, small fortunes.

IV

From among the hundreds of thousands I can imagine one
Behind the barbed-wire fences as my train crosses Poland.
25 I see him for long enough to catch the sprinkle of snowflakes
On his hair and schoolbag, and then I am transported
Away from that world of broken hobby-horses and silent toys.
He turns into a little snowman and refuses to melt.

V

For street-singers in the marketplace, weavers, warp[4]-makers,
30 Those who suffer in sewing-machine repair shops, excrement-
Removal workers, there are not enough root vegetables,
Beetroots, turnips, swedes,[5] nor for the leather-stitchers
Who are boiling leather so that their children may eat;
Who are turning like a thick slice of potato-bread
35 This page, which is everything I know about potatoes,
My delivery of Irish Peace, Beauty of Hebron, Home
Guard, Arran Banners, Kerr's Pinks,[6] resistant to eelworm, Resignation, common scab, terror, frost, potato-blight.

3. Types of angels.
4. Thread stretched lengthwise in a weaver's loom.
5. Rutabagas.
6. Varieties of potatoes (lines 36–37).

VI

There will be performances in the waiting room, and time
40 To jump over a skipping rope, and time to adjust
As though for a dancing class the ribbons in your hair.[7]
This string quartet is the most natural thing in the world.

VII

Fingers leave shadows on a violin, harmonics,[8]
A blackbird fluttering between electrified fences.

VIII

45 Lessons were forbidden in that terrible school.
Punishable by death were reading and writing
And arithmetic, so that even the junior infants
Grew old and wise in lofts studying these subjects.
There were drawing lessons, and drawings of kitchens
50 And farms, farm animals, butterflies, mothers, fathers
Who survived in crayon until in pen and ink
They turned into guards at executions and funerals
Torturing and hanging even these stick figures.
There were drawings of barracks and latrines as well
55 And the only windows were the windows they drew.

1991

ROBERT PINSKY
b. 1940

From Essay on Psychiatrists

IV. A Lakeside Identification

Yes, crazy to suppose one could describe them—
And yet, there was this incident: at the local beach
Clouds of professors and the husbands of professors

Swam, dabbled or stood to talk with arms folded
5 Gazing at the lake . . . and one of the few townsfolk there,
With no faculty status—a matter-of-fact, competent,

Catholic woman of twenty-seven with five children
And a first-rate body—pointed her finger
At the back of one certain man and asked me,

7. Cf. T. S. Eliot, "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock" (p. 1340).

8. Tones produced by touching vibrating strings.

10 "Is that guy a psychiatrist?" and by god he was! "Yes,"
She said, "He looks like a psychiatrist."
Grown quiet, I looked at his pink back, and thought.

V. Physical Comparison With Professors And Others

Pink and a bit soft-bodied, with a somewhat jazzy
Middle-class bathing suit and sandy sideburns, to me
He looked from the back like one more professor.

And from the front, too—the boyish, unformed carriage
5 Which foreigners always note in American men, combined
As in a professor with that liberal, quizzical,

Articulate gaze so unlike the more focused, more Tolerant expression worn by a man of action (surgeon, Salesman, athlete). On closer inspection was there,

10 Perhaps, a self-satisfied or benign air, a studied
Gentleness toward the child whose hand he held loosely?
Absurd to speculate; but then—the woman saw something.

1975

A Long Branch[1] Song

Some days in May, little stars
Winked all over the ocean. The blue
Barely changed all morning and afternoon:

The chimes of the bank's bronze clock;
5 The hoarse voice of Cookie, hawking
The Daily Record for thirty-five years.

1984

The Street

Streaked and fretted with effort, the thick
Vine of the world, red nervelets
Coiled at its tips.

All roads lead from it.[2] All night
5 Wainwrights and upholsterers work finishing
The wheeled coffin

1. Long Branch, New Jersey, where Pinsky was born.

2. A twist on the expression All roads lead to Rome.

Of the dead favorite of the Emperor,
The child's corpse propped seated
On brocade, with yellow

10 Oiled curls, kohl on the stiff lids.
Slaves throw petals on the roadway
For the cortege, white

Languid flowers shooting from dark
Blisters on the vine, ramifying
15 Into streets. On mine,

Rockwell Avenue, it was embarrassing:
Trouble—fights, the police, sickness—
Seemed never to come

For anyone when they were fully dressed.
20 It was always underwear or dirty pyjamas,
Unseemly stretches

Of skin showing through a torn housecoat.
Once a stranger drove off in a car
With somebody's wife,

25 And he ran after them in his undershirt
And threw his shoe at the car. It bounced
Into the street

Harmlessly, and we carried it back to him;
But the man had too much dignity
30 To put it back on,

So he held it and stood crying in the street:
"He's breaking up my home," he said,
"The son of a bitch

Bastard is breaking up my home." The street
35 Rose undulant in pavement-breaking coils
And the man rode it,

Still holding his shoe and stiffly upright
Like a trick rider in the circus parade
That came down the street

40 Each August. As the powerful dragonlike
Hump swelled he rose cursing and ready
To throw his shoe—woven

Angular as a twig into the fabulous
Rug or brocade with crowns and camels,
45 Leopards and rosettes,

All riding the vegetable wave of the street
From the John Flock Mortuary Home
Down to the river.

It was a small place, and off the center,
50 But so much a place to itself, I felt Like a young prince

Or aspirant squire. I knew that Ivanhoe[3]
Was about race. The Saxons[4] were Jews,
Or even Coloreds,

55 With their low-ceilinged, unbelievably
Sour-smelling houses down by the docks.
Everything was written

Or woven, ivory and pink and emerald—
Nothing was too ugly or petty or terrible
60 To be weighed in the immense

Silver scales of the dead: the looming
Balances set right onto the live, dangerous
Gray bark of the street.

1984

ABC

Any body can die, evidently. Few
Go happily, irradiating joy,

Knowledge, love. Many Need oblivion, painkillers,
5 Quickest respite.

Sweet time unafflicted,
Various world:

X = your zenith.

2000

3. Historical novel by the Scottish writer Sir Walter Scott (1771–1832), considered the inventor of the form.
4. The Germanic peoples in ancient times, some of whom invaded Britain in the fifth and sixth centuries; here, used to mean an English person or Anglo-Saxon. In the first pages of Ivanhoe, Scott reflects on the social effects of the Norman Conquest of England in 1066: "Four generations had not sufficed to blend the hostile blood of the Normans and Anglo-Saxons, or to unite, by common language and mutual interests, two hostile races." The Saxons were dispossessed of both land and status.

BILLY COLLINS
b. 1941

Japan

Today I pass the time reading
a favorite haiku,
saying the few words over and over.

It feels like eating
5 the same small, perfect grape again and again.

I walk through the house reciting it and leave its letters falling through the air of every room.

10 I stand by the big silence of the piano and say it.
I say it in front of a painting of the sea.
I tap out its rhythm on an empty shelf.

I listen to myself saying it,
then I say it without listening,
15 then I hear it without saying it.

And when the dog looks up at me,
I kneel down on the floor and whisper it into each of his long white ears.

It's the one about the one-ton
20 temple bell
with the moth sleeping on its surface,[1]

and every time I say it, I feel the excruciating pressure of the moth
on the surface of the iron bell.

25 When I say it at the window,
the bell is the world
and I am the moth resting there.

When I say it into the mirror,
I am the heavy bell
30 and the moth is life with its papery wings.

And later, when I say it to you in the dark,
you are the bell,
and I am the tongue of the bell, ringing you,

1. Haiku by the Japanese poet and painter Taniguchi Buson (1715–1783): "On the one-ton temple bell / a moon-moth, folded into sleep, / sits still" (trans. X. J. Kennedy).

and the moth has flown
35 from its line
and moves like a hinge in the air above our bed.

1998

Litany

You are the bread and the knife,
The crystal goblet and the wine.
JACQUES CRICKILLON[2]

You are the bread and the knife,
the crystal goblet and the wine.
You are the dew on the morning grass,
and the burning wheel of the sun.
5 You are the white apron of the baker and the marsh birds suddenly in flight.

However, you are not the wind in the orchard,
the plums on the counter,
or the house of cards.
10 And you are certainly not the pine-scented air.
There is no way you are the pine-scented air.

It is possible that you are the fish under the bridge,
maybe even the pigeon on the general's head,
but you are not even close
15 to being the field of cornflowers at dusk.

And a quick look in the mirror will show that you are neither the boots in the corner nor the boat asleep in its boathouse.

It might interest you to know,
20 speaking of the plentiful imagery of the world,
that I am the sound of rain on the roof.

I also happen to be the shooting star,
the evening paper blowing down an alley,
and the basket of chestnuts on the kitchen table.

25 I am also the moon in the trees and the blind woman's teacup.
But don't worry, I am not the bread and the knife.
You are still the bread and the knife.
You will always be the bread and the knife,
30 not to mention the crystal goblet and—somehow—the wine.

2002

2. Belgian poet (b. 1940).

ROBERT HASS
b. 1941

Meditation at Lagunitas[1]

All the new thinking is about loss.
In this it resembles all the old thinking.
The idea, for example, that each particular erases
the luminous clarity of a general idea. That the clown-5 faced woodpecker probing the dead sculpted trunk of that black birch is, by his presence, some tragic falling off from a first world of undivided light. Or the other notion that, because there is in this world no one thing 10 to which the bramble of blackberry corresponds,
a word is elegy to what it signifies.
We talked about it late last night and in the voice of my friend, there was a thin wire of grief, a tone almost querulous. After a while I understood that, 15 talking this way, everything dissolves: justice,
pine, hair, woman, you and I. There was a woman
I made love to and I remembered how, holding her small shoulders in my hands sometimes,
I felt a violent wonder at her presence
20 like a thirst for salt, for my childhood river with its island willows, silly music from the pleasure boat, muddy places where we caught the little orange-silver fish called pumpkinseed. It hardly had to do with her.
Longing, we say, because desire is full
25 of endless distances. I must have been the same to her.
But I remember so much, the way her hands dismantled bread, the thing her father said that hurt her, what she dreamed. There are moments when the body is as numinous[2] as words, days that are the good flesh continuing.
30 Such tenderness, those afternoons and evenings, saying blackberry, blackberry, blackberry.

1979

Tahoe[3] in August

What summer proposes is simply happiness:
heat early in the morning, jays raucous in the pines. Frank and Ellen have a tennis game at nine, Bill and Cheryl sleep on the deck

1. Little lake (Spanish); a small town in California, near San Francisco.
2. Filled with a sense of divinity.
3. A lake in the Sierra Nevada Mountains, in both eastern California and western Nevada.

5 to watch a shower of summer stars. Nick and Sharon stayed in, sat and talked the dark on, drinking tea, and Jeanne walked into the meadow in a white smock to write in her journal
by a grazing horse who seemed to want the company.
10 Some of them will swim in the afternoon.
Someone will drive to the hardware store to fetch new latches for the kitchen door. Four o'clock;
the joggers jogging—it is one of them who sees down the flowering slope the woman with her notebook 15 in her hand beside the white horse, gesturing, her hair from a distance the copper color of the hummingbirds
the slant light catches on the slope; the hikers switchback down the canyon from the waterfall;
the readers are reading, Anna is about to meet Vronsky,[4] 20 that nice M. Swann is dining in Combray.
with the aunts, and Carrie has come to Chicago.[5]
What they want is happiness: someone to love them, children, a summer by the lake. The woman who sets aside her book blinks against the fuzzy dark, 25 re-entering the house. Her daughter drifts downstairs;
out late the night before, she has been napping,
and she's cross. Her mother tells her David telephoned.
"He's such a dear," the mother says, "I think
I made him nervous." The girl tosses her head as the horse 30 had done in the meadow while Jeanne read it her dream.
"You can call him now, if you want," the mother says,
"I've got to get the chicken started,
I won't listen." "Did I say you would?"
the girl says quickly. The mother who has been slapped 35 this way before and done the same herself another summer on a different lake says, "Ouch." The girl shrugs sulkily. "I'm sorry." Looking down: "Something about the way you said that pissed me off."
"Hannibal has wandered off," the mother says,
40 wryness in her voice, she is thinking it is August,
"why don't you see if he's at the Finleys' house again." The girl says, "God." The mother: "He loves small children. It's livelier for him there."
The daughter, awake now, flounces out the door,
45 which slams. It is for all of them the sound of summer.
The mother she looks like stands at the counter snapping beans.

1989

4. The lover of Anna Karenina, in the novel of the same name by the Russian novelist Leo Tolstoy (1828–1910).
5. In Sister Carrie, by the American novelist Theodore Dreiser (1871–1945), the heroine, Carrie Meeber, moves to Chicago. M. Swann: Charles Swann, a protagonist of Swann's Way, the first book in the seven-volume A la recherche du temps perdu (In Search of Lost Time), by the French novelist Marcel Proust (1871–1922). Swann visits the aunts of the narrator, Marcel, at Combray, a town based on Illiers, near Chartres.

DEREK MAHON
b. 1941

In Carrowdore Churchyard

(at the grave of Louis MacNeice)[1]

Your ashes will not stir, even on this high ground,
However the wind tugs, the headstones shake.
This plot is consecrated, for your sake,
To what lies in the future tense. You lie
5 Past tension now, and spring is coming round
Igniting flowers on the peninsula.

Your ashes will not fly, however the rough winds burst
Through the wild brambles and the reticent trees.
All we may ask of you we have; the rest
10 Is not for publication, will not be heard.
Maguire, I believe, suggested a blackbird
And over your grave a phrase from Euripides.[2]

Which suits you down to the ground, like this churchyard
With its play of shadow, its humane perspective.
15 Locked in the winter's fist, these hills are hard
As nails, yet soft and feminine in their turn
When fingers open and the hedges burn.
This, you implied, is how we ought to live—

The ironical, loving crush of roses against snow,
20 Each fragile, solving ambiguity. So
From the pneumonia of the ditch, from the ague° fever
Of the blind poet and the bombed-out town you bring
The all-clear to the empty holes of spring,
Rinsing the choked mud, keeping the colours new.

1968

A Disused Shed in Co. Wexford[3]

Let them not forget us, the weak souls among the asphodels.
—SEFERIS,[4] Mythistorema, tr. Keeley and Sherrard

(for J. G. Farrell)

Even now there are places where a thought might grow—
Peruvian mines, worked out and abandoned

1. Irish poet (1907–1963; see pp. 1485–91), buried in Carrowdore Churchyard, County Down, Northern Ireland.
2. Maguire is the name MacNeice gives his old friend the Belfast artist George McCann in his book-length poem Autumn Sequel (1954). The suggested phrase from the Greek dramatist Euripides (ca. 484–406 B.C.E.) was not carved on MacNeice's gravestone.
3. County in southeast Ireland.
4. George Seferis (1900–1971), Greek poet. Below, James Gordon Farrell (1935–1979), Anglo-Irish novelist.

To a slow clock of condensation,
An echo trapped for ever, and a flutter
5 Of wild-flowers in the lift-shaft,
Indian compounds where the wind dances
And a door bangs with diminished confidence,
Lime crevices behind rippling rain-barrels,
Dog corners for bone burials;
10 And in a disused shed in Co. Wexford,

Deep in the grounds of a burnt-out hotel,
Among the bathtubs and the washbasins
A thousand mushrooms crowd to a keyhole.
This is the one star in their firmament
15 Or frames a star within a star.
What should they do there but desire?
So many days beyond the rhododendrons
With the world waltzing in its bowl of cloud,
They have learnt patience and silence
20 Listening to the rooks querulous in the high wood.

They have been waiting for us in a foetor° fetid aura
Of vegetable sweat since civil war days,
Since the gravel-crunching, interminable departure
Of the expropriated mycologist.[5]
25 He never came back, and light since then
Is a keyhole rusting gently after rain.
Spiders have spun, flies dusted to mildew
And once a day, perhaps, they have heard something—
A trickle of masonry, a shout from the blue
30 Or a lorry° changing gear at the end of the lane. truck

There have been deaths, the pale flesh flaking
Into the earth that nourished it;
And nightmares, born of these and the grim
Dominion of stale air and rank moisture.
35 Those nearest the door grow strong—
"Elbow room! Elbow room!"
The rest, dim in a twilight of crumbling
Utensils and broken pitchers, groaning
For their deliverance, have been so long
40 Expectant that there is left only the posture.

A half century, without visitors, in the dark—
Poor preparation for the cracking lock
And creak of hinges. Magi,° moonmen, wise men
Powdery prisoners of the old regime,
45 Web-throated, stalked like triffids,[6] racked by drought
And insomnia, only the ghost of a scream

5. Someone who studies mushrooms.
6. Mobile, flesh-eating plants in John Wyndham's science fiction novel The Day of the Triffids (1951) and the 1962 movie based on it.

At the flash-bulb firing-squad we wake them with Shows there is life yet in their feverish forms.
Grown beyond nature now, soft food for worms,
50 They lift frail heads in gravity and good faith.

They are begging us, you see, in their wordless way,
To do something, to speak on their behalf
Or at least not to close the door again.
Lost people of Treblinka and Pompeii![7]
55 "Save us, save us," they seem to say,
"Let the god not abandon us
Who have come so far in darkness and in pain.
We too had our lives to live.
You with your light meter and relaxed itinerary,
60 Let not our naive labours have been in vain!"

1975

The Window

```
  woodwoodwoodwoodwoodwoodwoodwood
  io                            oo
  n o                          o w d  d                        w  i o  w                        o  n w  o                        o  d i  o                        d  o n  d                        w  w
  d  w                        o  i
  o  o                        o  n w  o                        d  d i  d                        w  o n  w         wind           o  w
  d  o                        o  i o  o                        d  n w  d                        w  d i  w                        o  o n  d                        w  w
  d o                          o i oo                            on
  woodwoodwoodwoodwoodwoodwoodwood
 dwoodwoodwoodwoodwoodwoodwoodwoodw odwoodwoodwoodwoodwoodwoodwoodwoodwo
```

1979

7. Roman city preserved under ash and lava after a volcanic eruption that killed most of its inhabitants. Treblinka: site, in northern Poland, of a principal Nazi concentration camp.

Girls on the Bridge

—Pykene na Brukken, Munch, 1900[8]

Audible trout,
Notional° midges.° Beds, imaginary / tiny flies
Lamplight and crisp linen wait
In the house there for the sedate
5 Limbs and averted heads
Of the girls out

Late on the bridge.
The dusty road that slopes
Past is perhaps the high road south,
10 A symbol of world-wondering youth,
Of adolescent hopes
And privileges;

But stops to find
The girls content to gaze
15 At the unplumbed, reflective lake,
Their plangent° conversational quack plaintive
Expressive of calm days
And peace of mind.

Grave daughters
20 Of time, you lightly toss
Your hair as the long shadows grow
And night begins to fall. Although Your laughter calls across
The dark waters,

25 A ghastly sun
Watches in pale dismay.
Oh, you may laugh, being as you are Fair sisters of the evening star,
But wait—if not today
30 A day will dawn

When the bad dreams
You scarcely know will scatter
The punctual increment of your lives.
The road resumes, and where it curves,
35 A mile from where you chatter,
Somebody screams.

8. Girls on a Bridge, title of a painting in Expressionist style by the Norwegian artist Edvard Munch (1863–1944), whose best-known painting is The Scream (lines 36 and 40).

The girls are dead,
The house and pond have gone.
Steel bridge and concrete highway gleam
40 And sing in the arctic dark; the scream
We started at is grown
The serenade

Of an insane
And monstrous age. We live
45 These days as on a different planet,
One without trout or midges on it,
Under the arc-lights of
A mineral heaven;

And we have come,
50 Despite ourselves, to no
True notion of our proper work,
But wander in the dazzling dark
Amid the drifting snow
Dreaming of some

55 Lost evening when
Our grandmothers, if grand
Mothers we had, stood at the edge
Of womanhood on a country bridge
And gazed at a still pond
60 And knew no pain.

1982

ERIC ORMSBY
b. 1941

Starfish

The stellar sea crawler, maw
Concealed beneath, with offerings of Prismed crimson now darkened, now like
The smile of slag,° a thing made rosy — volcanic rock
5 As poured ingots, or suddenly dimmed—

I appreciate the studious labour
Of your rednesses, the scholarly fragrance
Of your sex. To mirror tidal drifts
The light ripples across or to enhance darkness
10 With palpable tinctures, dense as salt.

You crumple like a puppet's fist
Or erect, bristling, your tender luring barbs.
Casual abandon, like a dropped fawn glove.
Tensile symmetries, like a hawk's claw.

15 You clutch the seafloor.

You taste what has fallen.

1990

Skunk Cabbage

The skunk cabbage with its smug and opulent smell
Opens in plump magnificence near the edge
Of garbage-strewn canals, or you see its shape
Arise near the wet roots of the marsh.
5 How vigilant it looks with its glossy leaves
Parted to disclose its bruised insides,
That troubled purple of its blossom!
It always seemed so squat, dumpy and rank,
A noxious efflorescence of the swamp,
10 Until I got down low and looked at it.
Now I search out its blunt totemic shape
And bow when I see its outer stalks
Drawn aside, like the frilly curtains of the ark,
For the foul magenta of its gorgeous heart.

1990

Origins

I wanted to go down to where the roots begin,
to find words nested in their almond-skin,
the seed-curls of their birth, their sprigs of origin.

At night the dead set words upon my tongue,
5 drew back their coverings, laid bare the long sheaths of their roots where the earth still clung.

I wanted to draw their words from the mouths of the dead,
I wanted to strip the coins from their heavy eyes,
I wanted the rosy breath to gladden their skins.

10 At night the dead remembered their origins,
at night they nested in the curve of my eyes,
and I tasted the savour of their seed-bed.

1993 1997

DOUGLAS DUNN
b. 1942

A Removal from Terry Street[1]

On a squeaking cart, they push the usual stuff,
A mattress, bed ends, cups, carpets, chairs,
Four paperback westerns. Two whistling youths
In surplus U.S. Army battle-jackets
5 Remove their sister's goods. Her husband
Follows, carrying on his shoulders the son
Whose mischief we are glad to see removed,
And pushing, of all things, a lawnmower.
There is no grass in Terry Street. The worms
10 Come up cracks in concrete yards in moonlight.
That man, I wish him well. I wish him grass.

1969

In the Grounds

Yorkshire, 1975

Barbarians in a garden, softness does
Approve of who we are as it does those
Who when we speak proclaim us barbarous
And say we have no business with the rose.

5 Gently the grass waves, and its green applauds
The justice, not of progress, but of growth.
We walk as people on the paths of gods
And in our minds we harmonize them both.

Disclosures of these grounds—a river view,
10 Two Irish wolfhounds watching on a lawn;
A spinster with her sewing stares at you,
And begs you leave her pretty world alone.

More books than prejudice in our young minds . . .
We could not harm her, would not, would prefer 15 A noise less military and more kind
Than our boots make across her wide parterre.[2]

We are intransigent, at odds with them.
They see our rabble-dreams as new contempt
For England's art of house and leaf. Condemn 20 Our clumsiness—you do not know, how, unkempt

1. In Hull, England.
2. French landscaping term for an arrangement of flower beds.

And coarse, we hurt a truth with truth, still true
To who we are: barbarians, whose chins
Drool with ale-stinking hair, whose horses chew
Turf owned by watching, frightened mandarins,° bureaucrats

25 Their surly nephews lounging at each gate,
Afraid we'll steal their family's treasured things,
Then hawk them—pictures, furniture and plate—
Round the encampments of our saddle-kings.

1979

From Elegies

Thirteen Steps and the Thirteenth of March

She sat up on her pillows, receiving guests.
I brought them tea or sherry like a butler,
Up and down the thirteen steps from my pantry.
I was running out of vases.

5 More than one visitor came down, and said,
"Her room's so cheerful. She isn't afraid."
Even the cyclamen and lilies were listening,
Their trusty tributes holding off the real.

Doorbells, shopping, laundry, post and callers,
10 And twenty-six steps up the stairs
From door to bed, two times thirteen's
Unlucky numeral in my high house.

And visitors, three, four, five times a day;
My wept exhaustions over plates and cups
15 Drained my self-pity in these days of grief
Before the grief. Flowers, and no vases left.

Tea, sherry, biscuits, cake, and whisky for the weak . . .
She fought death with an understated mischief—
"I suppose I'll have to make an effort"—
20 Turning down painkillers for lucidity.

Some sat downstairs with a hankie
Nursing a little cry before going up to her.
They came back with their fears of dying amended.
"Her room's so cheerful. She isn't afraid."

25 Each day was duty round the clock.
Our kissing conversations kept me going,
Those times together with the phone switched off,
Remembering our lives by candlelight.

John and Stuart brought their pictures round,
30 A travelling exhibition. Dying,
She thumbed down some, nodded at others,
An artist and curator to the last,

Honesty at all costs. She drew up lists,
Bequests, gave things away. It tore my heart out.
35 Her friends assisted at this tidying
In a conspiracy of women.

At night, I lay beside her in the unique hours.
There were mysteries in candle-shadows,
Birds, aeroplanes, the rabbits of our fingers,
40 The lovely, erotic flame of the candlelight.

Sad? Yes. But it was beautiful also.
There was a stillness in the world. Time was out Walking his dog by the low walls and privet.° hedge
There was anonymity in words and music.

45 She wanted me to wear her wedding ring.
It wouldn't fit even my little finger.
It jammed on the knuckle. I knew why.
Her fingers dwindled and her rings slipped off.

After the funeral, I had them to tea and sherry
50 At the Newland Park. They said it was thoughtful.
I thought it was ironic—one last time—
A mad reprisal for their loyalty.

1985

ALFRED CORN
b. 1943

Navidad, St. Nicholas Ave.[1]

An infant quirk of a pine with aerosol frosting, spangles, and bulbs that blink red-blue-gold.
Manolito, three days home, they've put

5 in his picket-fence crib, paper diaper cinched tight,
eyes squinted in a mask
that looks Chinese or in pain.

1. Street in the Harlem section of Manhattan; here, the name alludes to St. Nick, or Santa Claus. Navidad: nativity (Spanish).

Asleep. Trailing sighs and smiles
10 they tiptoe out to where the Magnavox screen extolls some producto[2]
whose logo's a crystal star.

She glances up at the window brimming with sodium light.
15 And, mira, snow begins to fall like manna[3] in the warming air

as from down the avenue a taxi beeps a brass triad. Then an offended wail summons mother, father,
20 todo el mundo[4] back to his side.

1988

A Conch from Sicily[5]

The Attic[6] once
My nursery is like
An early language no longer
5 Spoken, a babble too small ever
Again to house adults. Yet the spiral
Stair remains, Maestro Fibonacci[7] the builder,
Who made it pirouette downward like a clockwork
Calla.° In the Southern Hemisphere it would run lily
10 Counterclockwise, yet I as well as the conchs
Down under have a silhouette like South
America, and we all smooth the path
That clothes our foot with orange
Coral enamel paneling and floor,
15 As far down as this loosely
Furled calyx, one concave
Rondo's[8] calm finale—or,
If not the last, then
The next-to-last 20 Summing up, a Single word:
Il tempo[9]—
Weather,
Speed,
25 Time.

1997

2. Product (Spanish). Magnavox: brand of television.
3. The food that miraculously fell to the Israelites in the wilderness (Exodus 16.14–36). Mira: look (Spanish).
4. All the world, everybody (Spanish).
5. Island off the southern coast of Italy.
6. Dialect of ancient Athens, or Attica, as well as the upper floor of a house.
7. Leonardo Pisano Fibonacci (1170–1250), Italian mathematician, known for discovering a sequence of numbers that can be used in describing many forms in nature, including the spiral of a seashell.
8. Musical form with a recurring theme.
9. Weather, speed, time (Italian).

LOUISE GLÜCK
b. 1943

Gretel[1] in Darkness

This is the world we wanted.
All who would have seen us dead are dead. I hear the witch's cry break in the moonlight through a sheet
5 of sugar: God rewards.
Her tongue shrivels into gas. . . .

Now, far from women's arms and memory of women, in our father's hut
we sleep, are never hungry.
10 Why do I not forget?
My father bars the door, bars harm
from this house, and it is years.

No one remembers. Even you, my brother, summer afternoons you look at me as though 15 you meant to leave,
as though it never happened.
But I killed for you. I see armed firs,
the spires of that gleaming kiln—

Nights I turn to you to hold me
20 but you are not there.
Am I alone? Spies
hiss in the stillness, Hansel,
we are there still and it is real, real,
that black forest and the fire in earnest.

1975

The Garden

I couldn't do it again,
I can hardly bear to look at it—

in the garden, in light rain
the young couple planting
5 a row of peas, as though no one has ever done this before, the great difficulties have never as yet been faced and solved—

They cannot see themselves,
10 in fresh dirt, starting up

1. As in the fairy tale of Hansel and Gretel.

without perspective,
the hills behind them pale green, clouded with flowers—

She wants to stop;
he wants to get to the end,
15 to stay with the thing—

Look at her, touching his cheek to make a truce, her fingers
cool with spring rain;
in thin grass, bursts of purple crocus—

20 even here, even at the beginning of love, her hand leaving his face makes an image of departure and they think they are free to overlook

25 this sadness.

1992

Vita Nova[2]

You saved me, you should remember me.

The spring of the year; young men buying tickets for the ferryboats.
Laughter, because the air is full of apple blossoms.

When I woke up, I realized I was capable of the same feeling.

5 I remember sounds like that from my childhood,
laughter for no cause, simply because the world is beautiful,
something like that.

Lugano.[3] Tables under the apple trees.
Deckhands raising and lowering the colored flags.
10 And by the lake's edge, a young man throws his hat into the water;
perhaps his sweetheart has accepted him.

Crucial sounds or gestures like a track laid down before the larger themes

15 and then unused, buried.

Islands in the distance. My mother holding out a plate of little cakes—

2. New life (Latin). Glück takes for her book Vita Nova, and for two poems within it, the title of Dante's first major poem (ca. 1292).

3. Lake on the border between Switzerland and Italy.

as far as I remember, changed in no detail, the moment 20 vivid, intact, having never been exposed to light, so that I woke elated, at my age hungry for life, utterly confident—

By the tables, patches of new grass, the pale green pieced into the dark existing ground.

25 Surely spring has been returned to me, this time not as a lover but a messenger of death, yet it is still spring, it is still meant tenderly.

1999

MICHAEL ONDAATJE
b. 1943

Letters & Other Worlds

"for there was no more darkness for him and, no doubt like Adam before the fall, he could see in the dark"

My father's body was a globe of fear
His body was a town we never knew
He hid that he had been where we were going
His letters were a room he seldom lived in 5 In them the logic of his love could grow

My father's body was a town of fear
He was the only witness to its fear dance
He hid where he had been that we might lose him
His letters were a room his body scared

10 He came to death with his mind drowning.
On the last day he enclosed himself in a room with two bottles of gin, later fell the length of his body so that brain blood moved 15 to new compartments that never knew the wash of fluid and he died in minutes of a new equilibrium.

His early life was a terrifying comedy and my mother divorced him again and again.
20 He would rush into tunnels magnetized
by the white eye of trains and once, gaining instant fame, managed to stop a Perahara[1] in Ceylon

1. Or Anuradhapura Perahera, an annual religious festival of Sri Lanka (formerly Ceylon) commem-

—the whole procession of elephants dancers 25 local dignitaries—by falling dead drunk onto the street.

As a semi-official, and semi-white at that,
the act was seen as a crucial turning point in the Home Rule Movement
30 and led to Ceylon's independence in 1948.

(My mother had done her share too—her driving so bad
she was stoned by villagers whenever her car was recognized)

35 For 14 years of marriage each of them claimed he or she was the injured party.
Once on the Colombo[2] docks saying goodbye to a recently married couple 40 my father, jealous
at my mother's articulate emotion, dove into the waters of the harbour
and swam after the ship waving farewell.
My mother pretending no affiliation
45 mingled with the crowd back to the hotel.

Once again he made the papers though this time my mother with a note to the editor corrected the report—saying he was drunk
50 rather than broken hearted at the parting of friends.
The married couple received both editions of The Ceylon Times when their ship reached Aden.[3]

And then in his last years
he was the silent drinker, 55 the man who once a week disappeared into his room with bottles and stayed there until he was drunk and until he was sober.

There speeches, head dreams, apologies,
60 the gentle letters, were composed.
With the clarity of architects
he would write of the row of blue flowers his new wife had planted,
the plans for electricity in the house,
65 how my half-sister fell near a snake and it had awakened and not touched her.

---

orating the birth of Vishnu, one of the three primary Hindu gods. On its fifth and final day, the festival culminates in nocturnal processions such as that described here, the elephants bearing shrines and relics.

2. Port city, capital of Sri Lanka.
3. City and port in South Yemen.

Letters in a clear hand of the most complete empathy his heart widening and widening and widening to all manner of change in his children and friends 70 while he himself edged into the terrible acute hatred of his own privacy
till he balanced and fell the length of his body 75 the blood entering the empty reservoir of bones
the blood searching in his head without metaphor.

1979

Driving with Dominic in the Southern Province We See Hints of the Circus

The tattered Hungarian tent

A man washing a trumpet at a roadside tap

Children in the trees,

5 one falling into the grip of another

2000

House on a Red Cliff

There is no mirror in Mirissa[4]

the sea is in the leaves
the waves are in the palms

old languages in the arms
5 of the casuarina pine[5] parampara

parampara,[6] from generation to generation

The flamboyant[7] a grandfather planted 10 having lived through fire lifts itself over the roof

4. Town on the southern coast of Sri Lanka.
5. Indigenous tree of Sri Lanka with jointed, treeless branches.
6. One following the other, succession (Sanskrit); the Hindu method of transmitting knowledge through a guru's answering a disciple's questions.
7. Plant with flame-colored flowers.

unframed

the house an open net

where the night concentrates 15 on a breath
on a step
a thing or gesture
we cannot be attached to

The long, the short, the difficult minutes 20 of night

where even in darkness
there is no horizon without a tree

just a boat's light in the leaves

Last footstep before formlessness

2000

MICHAEL PALMER
b. 1943

Of this cloth doll which[1]

(Sarah's fourth)

Of this cloth doll which says Oh yes
and then its face changes to Once upon a time
5 to Wooden but alive to Like the real to Late into the night to There lived an old to Running across ice 10 (but shadows followed) to Finally it sneezed to The boat tipped over to Flesh and blood to Out of the whale's mouth

1984

1. The fractured sentence of this poem borrows phrases from fairy tales, and especially from the children's story The Adventures of Pinocchio, by the Italian writer Carlo Collodi (1826–1890).

I Do Not

"Je ne sais pas l'anglais."
GEORGES HUGNET[2]

I do not know English

I do not know English, and therefore I can have nothing to say about this latest war, flowering through a night scope in the evening sky.

I do not know English and therefore, when hungry, can do no more than point repeatedly to my mouth.

Yet such a gesture might be taken to mean any number of things.

5 I do not know English and therefore cannot seek the requisite permissions, as outlined in the recent protocol.

Such as: May I utter a term of endearment; may I now proceed to put my arm or arms around you and apply gentle pressure; may I now kiss you directly on the lips; now on the left tendon of the neck; now on the nipple of each breast? And so on.

Would not in any case be able to decipher her response.

I do not know English. Therefore I have no way of communicating that I prefer this painting of nothing to that one of something.

No way to speak of my past or hopes for the future, of my glasses mysteriously shattered in Rotterdam,[3] the statue of Eros and Psyche[4] in the Summer Garden, the sudden, shrill cries in the streets of São Paulo,[5] a watch abruptly stopping in Paris.

10 No way to tell the joke about the rabbi and the parrot, the bartender and the duck, the Pope and the porte-cochère.[6]

You will understand why you have received no letters from me and why yours have gone unread.

Those, that is, where you write so precisely of the confluence of the visible universe with the invisible, and of the lens of dark matter.[7]

No way to differentiate the hall of mirrors from the meadow of mullein, the beetlebung from the pinkletink, the kettlehole from the ventifact.

2. I do not know English (French). Hugnet (1906–1974), French poet, essayist, and publisher.
3. Dutch city bombed by the Allies during World War II.
4. Figures from Greek mythology: Psyche was so beautiful that envious Aphrodite, the goddess of love and beauty, sent Eros, the god of erotic love, to make her fall in love with an ugly creature; instead, Eros became her lover.
5. Capital city of Brazil.
6. Gateway for carriages, leading into a courtyard.
7. Matter indirectly detected by astronomers, who believe it accounts for gravitational effects.

Nor can I utter the words science, seance, silence, language and languish.

15 Nor can I tell of the arboreal shadows elongated and shifting along the wall as the sun's angle approaches maximum hibernal declination.

Cannot tell of the almond-eyed face that peered from the well, the ship of stone whose sail was a tongue.

And I cannot report that this rose has twenty-four petals, one slightly cancred.

Cannot tell how I dismantled it myself at this desk.

Cannot ask the name of this rose.[8]

20 I cannot repeat the words of the Recording Angel[9] or those of the Angle of Erasure.

Can speak neither of things abounding[1] nor of things disappearing.

Still the games continue. A muscular man waves a stick at a ball. A woman in white, arms outstretched, carves a true circle in space. A village turns to dust in the chalk hills.

Because I do not know English I have been variously called Mr. Twisted, The One Undone, The Nonrespondent, The Truly Lost Boy, and Laughed-At-By-Horses.

The war is declared ended, almost before it has begun.

25 They have named it The Ultimate Combat between Nearness and Distance.

I do not know English.

2000

EAVAN BOLAND
b. 1944

That the Science of Cartography[1] Is Limited

—and not simply by the fact that this shading of forest cannot show the fragrance of balsam,

8. Allusion to The Name of the Rose, by the Italian novelist Umberto Eco (b. 1932).
9. In Christian doctrine, the angel receiving the soul in heaven.
1. Cf. St. John Chrysostom, homily 4 on 1 Thessalonians 3.5–8: "If the fire of the Sun of Righteousness has touched our souls, it will leave nothing frozen, nothing hard, nothing burning, nothing unfruitful. It will bring out all things ripe, all things sweet, all things abounding with much pleasure."
1. Mapmaking.

the gloom of cypresses is what I wish to prove.

5 When you and I were first in love we drove to the borders of Connacht[2]
and entered a wood there.

Look down you said: this was once a famine road.

I looked down at ivy and the scutch grass 10 rough-cast stone had disappeared into as you told me in the second winter of their ordeal, in 1847, when the crop[3] had failed twice,

Relief Committees gave 15 the starving Irish such roads to build.

Where they died, there the road ended and ends still and when I take down the map of this island, it is never so

I can say here is 20 the masterful, the apt rendering of the spherical as flat, nor an ingenious design which persuades a curve into a plane,

but to tell myself again that

25 the line which says woodland and cries hunger and gives out among sweet pine and cypress, and finds no horizon

will not be there.

1994

The Dolls Museum in Dublin

The wounds are terrible. The paint is old.
The cracks along the lips and on the cheeks cannot be fixed. The cotton lawn[4] is soiled.
The arms are ivory dissolved to wax.

5 Recall the Quadrille. Hum the waltz.
Promenade on the yacht-club terraces.
Put back the lamps in their copper holders,
the carriage wheels on the cobbled quays.

2. Western province of Ireland.
3. Of potatoes, staple diet of Irish peasants in the nineteenth century.
4. Usually fine linen, but also, as here, fine cotton.

And recreate Easter in Dublin.[5]
10 Booted officers. Their mistresses.
Sunlight criss-crossing College Green.
Steam hissing from the flanks of horses.

Here they are. Cradled and cleaned, held close in the arms of their owners.
15 Their cold hands clasped by warm hands,
their faces memorized like perfect manners.

The altars are mannerly with linen.
The lilies are whiter than surplices.[6]
The candles are burning and warning:
20 Rejoice, they whisper. After sacrifice.

Horse-chestnuts hold up their candles.
The Green is vivid with parasols.
Sunlight is pastel and windless.
The bar of the Shelbourne[7] is full.

25 Laughter and gossip on the terraces.
Rumour and alarm at the barracks.
The Empire is summoning its officers.
The carriages are turning: they are turning back.

Past children walking with governesses,
30 Looking down, cossetting° their dolls, pampering
then looking up as the carriage passes, the shadow chilling them. Twilight falls.

It is twilight in the dolls' museum. Shadows remain on the parchment-coloured waists, 35 are bruises on the stitched cotton clothes,
are hidden in the dimples on the wrists.

The eyes are wide. They cannot address the helplessness which has lingered in the airless peace of each glass case:
40 to have survived. To have been stronger than a moment. To be the hostages ignorance takes from time and ornament from destiny. Both.

To be the present of the past. To infer the difference with a terrible stare. But not feel it. And not know it.

1994

5. What became known as the "Easter Rising" began on Easter Monday, 1916, when fifteen hundred Irish Nationalists seized key points in Dublin and an Irish Republic was proclaimed from the General Post Office. See W. B. Yeats, "Easter 1916" (p. 1194).
6. White linen vestments worn over cassocks.
7. Large Dublin hotel.

The Pomegranate

The only legend I have ever loved is the story of a daughter lost in hell.
And found and rescued there.
Love and blackmail are the gist of it.
5 Ceres and Persephone the names.[8]
And the best thing about the legend is
I can enter it anywhere. And have.
As a child in exile in a city of fogs and strange consonants, 10 I read it first and at first I was an exiled child in the crackling dusk of the underworld, the stars blighted. Later
I walked out in a summer twilight searching for my daughter at bed-time.
15 When she came running I was ready to make any bargain to keep her.
I carried her back past whitebeams° trees
and wasps and honey-scented buddleias.° bushes
But I was Ceres then and I knew 20 winter was in store for every leaf on every tree on that road.
Was inescapable for each one we passed.
And for me.
It is winter
25 and the stars are hidden.
I climb the stairs and stand where I can see my child asleep beside her teen magazines, her can of Coke, her plate of uncut fruit.
The pomegranate! How did I forget it?
30 She could have come home and been safe and ended the story and all our heart-broken searching but she reached out a hand and plucked a pomegranate.
She put out her hand and pulled down 35 the French sound for apple and the noise of stone and the proof that even in the place of death, at the heart of legend, in the midst of rocks full of unshed tears
40 ready to be diamonds by the time the story was told, a child can be hungry. I could warn her. There is still a chance.
The rain is cold. The road is flint-coloured.
The suburb has cars and cable television.
45 The veiled stars are above ground.

8. In Roman mythology, Ceres (Greek Demeter) was the goddess of agriculture. Her daughter, Proserpina (Greek Persephone), was carried off to Orcus (Greek Hades), the underworld, by its king. Ceres found her, but by then Proserpina had eaten six pomegranate seeds and was condemned to spend six months of each year in the underworld (when Earth mourns) and six aboveground (when Earth rejoices and fertility returns).

It is another world. But what else can a mother give her daughter but such beautiful rifts in time?
If I defer the grief I will diminish the gift.
50 The legend will be hers as well as mine.
She will enter it. As I have.
She will wake up. She will hold the papery flushed skin in her hand.
And to her lips. I will say nothing.

1994

CRAIG RAINE
b. 1944

The Onion, Memory

Divorced, but friends again at last,
we walk old ground together
in bright blue uncomplicated weather.
We laugh and pause
5 to hack to bits these tiny dinosaurs, prehistoric, crenellated,° cast — having battlements
between the tractor ruts in mud.

On the green, a junior Douglas Fairbanks,[1] swinging on the chestnut's unlit chandelier, 10 defies the corporation spears[2]—
a single rank° around the bole,° — row / tree trunk rusty with blood.
Green, tacky phalluses curve up, romance.
A gust—the old flag blazes on its pole.

15 In the village bakery
the pasty babies pass
from milky slump to crusty cadaver, from crib to coffin—without palaver.° — idle talk
All's over in a flash,
20 too silently . . .

Tonight the arum lilies fold back napkins monogrammed in gold, crisp and laundered fresh.
Those crustaceous gladioli, on the sly,
25 reveal the crimson flower-flesh
inside their emerald armour plate.

1. American actor (1883–1939) famous for his swashbuckling daredevil exploits in movies of the 1920s and 1930s.

2. I.e., spiked fence put up by the town corporation.

The uncooked herrings blink a tearful eye.
The candles palpitate.
The Oistrakhs bow and scrape
30 in evening dress, on Emi-tape.[3]

Outside the trees are bending over backwards to please the wind : the shining sword grass flattens on its belly.
The white-thorn's frillies[4] offer no resistance.
35 In the fridge, a heart-shaped jelly strives to keep a sense of balance.

I slice up the onions. You sew up a dress.
This is the quiet echo—flesh—
white muscle on white muscle, 40 intimately folded skin,
finished with a satin rustle.
One button only to undo, sewn up with shabby thread.
It is the onion, memory,
that makes me cry.

45 Because there's everything and nothing to be said,
the clock with hands held up before its face,
stammers softly on, trying to complete a phrase—
while we, together and apart,
repeat unfinished gestures got by heart.

50 And afterwards, I blunder with the washing on the line—headless torsos, faceless lovers, friends of mine.

1978

A Martian Sends a Postcard Home

Caxtons[5] are mechanical birds with many wings
and some are treasured for their markings—

they cause the eyes to melt or the body to shriek without pain.

5 I have never seen one fly, but sometimes they perch on the hand.

Mist is when the sky is tired of flight and rests its soft machine on ground:

3. A popular British brand of audiotape. David Oistrakh (1908–1974) and his son Igor (b. 1931), celebrated Russian violinists.
4. British colloquialism for frilled undergarments.
5. I.e., books, which William Caxton (ca. 1422–1491) was the first to print in English; in the next couplet, the Martian observes the effects of books on their readers, but does not know the words for cry or laugh.

then the world is dim and bookish
10 like engravings under tissue paper.

Rain is when the earth is television.
It has the property of making colours darker.

Model T[6] is a room with the lock inside—
a key is turned to free the world

15 for movement, so quick there is a film to watch for anything missed.

But time is tied to the wrist or kept in a box, ticking with impatience.

In homes, a haunted apparatus sleeps,
20 that snores when you pick it up.

If the ghost cries, they carry it to their lips and soothe it to sleep with sounds. And yet, they wake it up deliberately, by tickling with a finger.

25 Only the young are allowed to suffer openly. Adults go to a punishment room with water but nothing to eat.

They lock the door and suffer the noises alone. No one is exempt

30 and everyone's pain has a different smell.

At night, when all the colours die,
they hide in pairs

and read about themselves—
in colour, with their eyelids shut.

1979

For Hans Keller[7]

There will be more of this,
more of this than I had realised of finding our friends

6. I.e., automobiles; the "key" (next line) is the ignition key.

7. English (Austrian-born) musicologist (1919–1985).

irrevocably changed,

5 skewed like Guy Fawkes[8] in a chair because all the muscles have gone and talking as if nothing has happened

when nothing has happened.

There will be more of this,
10 more of coming to crematoria to learn that a life can come to an end

like a Haydn quartet,[9] without a repeat.

There will be too much and then more of this,
of hearing instruments negotiate with silence, 15 stating the case with gravitas° moral earnestness and anxious insect antennae.

We stand for the coffin at a word from the usher.
The speaker's hand feels for his pocket,
as his nerves die down

20 and the nerves take over.

That hand is alive and my feet are alive,
feeling the pinch of expensive new shoes,
and I am moved by being moved

as the coffin crawls to the fire.

25 Hans, there is still more of this,
more of undertakers locking the hearse and seeing the plastic safety bolts

slide, like suppositories, slowly away,

as we re-enter the sunshine alive
30 with eyes to see by Camden Lock[1] a bedstead, sleeping rough,

like dead beloved bodies everywhere.

1996

8. Conspirator (1570–1606) in the so-called Gunpowder Plot to blow up the British Parliament. When this failed, in 1605, Fawkes was arrested, tortured, and executed. Annually on November 5 ever since, his effigy has been burnt on bonfires across the U.K.
9. Composition for four instrumentalists by the Austrian composer Joseph Haydn (1732–1809).
1. London market.

KIT WRIGHT
b. 1944

Mantles[1]

White as the sacrament, in my grandmother's house the mantles
Were taught to flower in the dusk. On their soft weighbridge° platform
They balanced the light, on their milkmaid's yoke they carried it
Over mahogany mountains,
5 Till the room was breathing its secret to the ghost of the wind in the bay.

That radiant patience made a lake of the stern piano
Where she sang The Isle of Capri.[2] Such Beauty in the frail old voice, so long a river of widowhood
The light went running with through the banks of shadow . . .

10 It caught the little pointed breasts of brass
Nubian goddesses on the mantelpiece. It put in the shade
A mysterious cavern under the table
Where African butterflies, in the pinned tomb of their wooden boxes,
Spread their gorgeous wings that reeked of camphor.

15 In my grandmother's house there existed a borrowed shrimping net
And a maiden aunt, your best friend ever.
A peacock feather. An ostrich egg. A time
When the breathing of time was audible in gas mantles,
Conspiratorial and benign.

2000

A Love Song of Tooting[3]

In Tooting, the tomato
Hangs heavy on the vine
The blackbird's obbligato[4]
Fulfils its liquid line
5 On summertime allotments° vegetable plots
By lenient design.

Nine beanrows will I have there,[5]
Not ten, not eight, but nine,
And I shall build a pav° there, pavillion, hut

1. Incandescent cloth hoods of gaslight jets.
2. Hit song written in 1934.
3. District of south London.
4. In a musical composition, a necessary, generally melodic line accompanying a solo.
5. Cf. W. B. Yeats, "The Lake Isle of Innisfree," lines 2–3 (p. 1190).

10 Or shed of weathered pine,
And all shall be contentment
Down by the railway line.

My shed, beside a toolbox,
A coolbox° shall confine — cooler
15 And we from out the coolbox
Shall quaff the rare white wine.
The dove shall plight its truelove
And I shall sing to mine.

2000

My Version

I hear that since you left me
Things go from bad to worse,
That the Good Lord, quite rightly,
Has set a signal curse

5 On you, your house and lover.
(I learn, moreover, he Proves twice as screwed-up, selfish
And sodden, dear, as me.)

They say your days are tasteless,
10 Flattened, disjointed, thinned.
Across the waste my absence,
Love's skeleton, has grinned.

Perfect. I trust my sources
Of information are sound?
15 Or is it just some worthless rumour
I've been spreading round?

2000

WENDY COPE
b. 1945

Bloody Men

Bloody men are like bloody buses—
You wait for about a year
And as soon as one approaches your stop
Two or three others appear.

5 You look at them flashing their indicators,
Offering you a ride.
You're trying to read the destinations,
You haven't much time to decide.

If you make a mistake, there is no turning back.
10 Jump off, and you'll stand there and gaze
While the cars and the taxis and lorries° go by — trucks
And the minutes, the hours, the days.

1992

Flowers

Some men never think of it.
You did. You'd come along
And say you'd nearly brought me flowers
But something had gone wrong.

5 The shop was closed. Or you had doubts—
The sort that minds like ours
Dream up incessantly. You thought
I might not want your flowers.

It made me smile and hug you then.
10 Now I can only smile.
But, look, the flowers you nearly brought
Have lasted all this while.

1992

Valentine

My heart has made its mind up
And I'm afraid it's you.
Whatever you've got lined up,
My heart has made its mind up
5 And if you can't be signed up
This year, next year will do.
My heart has made its mind up
And I'm afraid it's you.

1992

Serious Concerns

"She is witty and unpretentious, which is both her strength and her limitation."

(ROBERT O'BRIEN in the Spectator,[1] 25.10.86)

I'm going to try and overcome my limitation—
Away with sloth!
Now should I work at being less witty? Or more pretentious?
Or both?

"They (Roger McGough and Brian Patten)[2] have something in common with her, in that they all write to amuse."

(IBID.)

5 Write to amuse? What an appalling suggestion!
I write to make people anxious and miserable and to worsen their indigestion.

1992

YUSEF KOMUNYAKAA
b. 1947

Facing It

My black face fades,
hiding inside the black granite.
I said I wouldn't dammit: No tears.
5 I'm stone. I'm flesh.
My clouded reflection eyes me like a bird of prey, the profile of night slanted against morning. I turn this way—the stone lets me go.
10 I turn that way—I'm inside the Vietnam Veterans Memorial[1] again, depending on the light to make a difference.
I go down the 58,022 names, 15 half-expecting to find my own in letters like smoke.
I touch the name Andrew Johnson;
I see the booby trap's white flash.
Names shimmer on a woman's blouse
20 but when she walks away

1. English magazine, in which O'Brien was writing about Cope.
2. Two of the so-called Liverpool poets, popular in the late 1960s and early 1970s.
1. In Washington, D.C.

the names stay on the wall.
Brushstrokes flash, a red bird's wings cutting across my stare.
The sky. A plane in the sky.
25 A white vet's image floats closer to me, then his pale eyes look through mine. I'm a window.
He's lost his right arm
inside the stone. In the black mirror
30 a woman's trying to erase names:
No, she's brushing a boy's hair.

1988

Banking Potatoes

Daddy would drop purple-veined vines
Along rows of dark loam
& I'd march behind him
Like a peg-legged soldier,
5 Pushing down the stick
With a V cut into its tip.

Three weeks before the first frost
I'd follow his horse-drawn plow
That opened up the soil & left
10 Sweet potatoes sticky with sap,
Like flesh-colored stones along a riverbed
Or diminished souls beside a mass grave.

They lay all day under the sun's
Invisible weight, & by twilight
15 We'd bury them under pine needles
& then shovel in two feet of dirt.
Nighthawks scalloped the sweaty air,
Their wings spread wide

As plowshares. But soon the wind
20 Knocked on doors & windows
Like a frightened stranger,
& by mid-winter we had tunneled
Back into the tomb of straw,
Unable to divide love from hunger.

1992

The Smokehouse

In the hickory scent
Among slabs of pork

Glistening with salt,
I played Indian
5 In a headdress of redbird feathers
& brass buttons
Off my mother's winter coat.
Smoke wove
A thread of fire through meat, into December
10 & January. The dead weight
Of the place hung around me,
Strung up with sweetgrass.
The hog had been sectioned,
A map scored into skin;
15 Opened like love,
From snout to tail,
The goodness
No longer true to each bone.
I was a wizard
20 In that hazy world,
& knew I could cut
Slivers of meat till my heart
Grew more human & flawed.

1992

Sunday Afternoons

They'd latch the screendoors
& pull venetian blinds,
Telling us not to leave the yard.
But we always got lost
5 Among mayhaw° & crabapple. berry tree

Juice spilled from our mouths,
& soon we were drunk & brave
As birds diving through saw° vines. saw palmetto
Each nest held three or four 10 Speckled eggs, blue as rage.

Where did we learn to be unkind,
There in the power of holding each egg
While watching dogs in June
Dust & heat, or when we followed
15 The hawk's slow, deliberate arc?

In the yard, we heard cries
Fused with gospel on the radio,
Loud as shattered glass
In a Saturday-night argument
20 About trust & money.

We were born between Oh Yeah
& Goddammit. I knew life

Began where I stood in the dark,
Looking out into the light,
25 & that sometimes I could see

Everything through nothing.
The backyard trees breathed
Like a man running from himself
As my brothers backed away
30 From the screendoor. I knew

If I held my right hand above my eyes
Like a gambler's visor, I could see
How their bedroom door halved
The dresser mirror like a moon
35 Held prisoner in the house.

1992

JANE SHORE
b. 1947

High Holy Days[1]

It was hot. A size too large,
my wool winter suit scratched.
Indian summer flaring up through fall.
The shul's[2] broken window
5 bled sunlight on the congregation; the Red Sea of the scarlet carpet parted the women from the men.[3]
Mother next to daughter, father next to son flipped through prayerbooks in unison trying to keep the place. Across the aisle, 10 my father wore a borrowed prayershawl.
A black yarmulke[4] covered his bald spot.

The rabbi unlocked the ark[5]
and slid the curtain open. Propped inside, two scrolls of the Torah[6] dressed like matching dolls, 15 each, a king and a queen. Ribbons hung down from their alabaster satin jackets;

1. Also called Days of Awe, combining Rosh Hashanah, the Jewish New Year, with Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement, ten days later; generally in September and October.
2. Synagogue's (Yiddish).
3. Men and women are seated separately in Orthodox Jewish congregations. Shore's "Red Sea" of carpet, acting as a divider, reverses the image in Exodus 14.21–22, where Moses parts the Red Sea, allowing the nation of Israel to escape pursuit by the Egyptians.
4. Skullcap worn, like the "prayershawl" (a garment), by Jewish men during services.
5. A large cabinet on the altar, in which the locked Torahs are kept; the Jewish equivalent of the ark of the Covenant (Exodus 25.10–22).
6. The five books of Moses (Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy), written in Hebrew. The scrolls, on two wooden rollers, are decorated with sterling-silver crowns and wrapped in fabric; called the "king's possessions" because of their centrality to Jewish religious life.

each one wore two silver crowns.
I wondered, could the ancient kings have been so small? So small,
20 and still have vanquished our enemies?

The cantor's voice rose like smoke over a sacrificial altar,
and lambs,[7] we rose to echo the refrain.
Each time we sat down
25 my mother rearranged her skirt.
Each time we stood up my head hurt from the heat, dizzy from tripping over the alphabet's
black spikes and lyres, 30 stick-figure batallions marching to defend the Second Temple of Jerusalem.[8]

Rocking on their heels, boats anchored in the harbor of devotion,
the temple elders davenned Kaddish,[9] mourning the dead.
35 Our neighbor who owned the laundry down the street covered his left wrist out of habit—numbers indelible as those he inked on my father's shirt collars.[1]
Once, I saw that whole arm disappear
40 into a tub of soapy shirts, rainbowed, buoyant as the pastel clouds
in The Illustrated Children's Bible, where God's enormous hand reached down and stopped a heathen army in its tracks.[2]
45 But on the white-hot desert of the page
I was reading, it was noon,
the marching letters swam, the regiments
wavered in the heat,
a red rain falling on their ranks.
50 I watched it fall one drop at a time.
I felt faint. And breathed out sharply, my nose spattering blood across the page.[3]

I watched it fall, and thought,
you are a Chosen One,[4]
55 the child to lead your tribe.
I looked around the swaying room.
Why would God choose me

7. Under a system instituted by Moses, sins were atoned for by the sacrificing of a lamb (or ox, goat, or bird) as a burnt offering to God. Cantor: religious official who sings or chants prayers.
8. Temple built after the Jews returned from captivity in Babylon in the sixth century B.C.E.; destroyed by the Romans in 70 C.E.
9. Recited prayers in memory of the dead.
1. Reference to the Nazi practice of tattooing registration numbers on the left arms of some prisoners before they were sent to concentration camps.
2. God's hand is commonly said to bring Israel deliverance from its enemies (e.g., 1 Samuel 7.13).
3. One of the three readings required on the morning of Yom Kippur (Leviticus 16.1–34) details how the priest is to consecrate the ark of the Covenant by sprinkling the blood of a sacrificed bull and goat on the cover.
4. Moses underscored the special role of the descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob as God's chosen people.

to lead this congregation of mostly strangers, defend them against the broken windows,
60 the spray-painted writing on the walls?[5]

Overhead, the red bulb of the everlasting light[6] was burning. As if God held me in His fist,
I stumbled down the synagogue stairs
just in time to hear 65 a cyclone of breath twist through the shofar,[7] a battle cry so powerful it blasted city walls to rubble.
And I reeled home through the dazed traffic of the business day—70 past shoppers, past my school,
in session as usual,
spat like Jonah from the whale[8]
back into the Jew-hating world.

1987

RICHARD KENNEY
b. 1948

Aubade

Cold snap. Five o'clock.
Outside, a heavy frost—dark footprints in the brittle grass; a cat's. Quick coffee,
5 jacket, watch-cap, keys.
Stars blaze across the black gap between horizons;
pickup somehow strikes
its own dim spark—an arc—10 starts. Inside, familiar metal cab, an icebox
full of lightless air, limns green with dash-light. Vinyl seat cracks, cold and brittle;
15 horn ring gleams, and chrome
cuts hard across the wrist

5. Reference to Kristallnacht (Night of the Broken Glass), November 9 and 10, 1938, when, in a pogrom throughout Germany and Austria, the Nazis committed violent acts such as breaking the windows of Jewish stores.
6. A red electric light, symbolic of God's eternal presence, is kept burning continuously in the ceiling of an Orthodox synagogue.
7. Trumpet made of ram's horn; blown in synagogues on the High Holy Days. In Joshua 6.20, when the people hear the priests blow a shofar, they raise such a great shout that the walls of Jericho fall.
8. After Jonah had been swallowed by a great fish, God spoke to it and it spew Jonah out (Jonah 2.10). The Book of Jonah is read in its entirety on Yom Kippur.

where the sleeve falls off the glove,
as moon-track curves its cool tiara somewhere underneath your sleep
20 this very moment, love—

1985

Apples on Champlain[1]

Oil-slick, slack shocks, ancient engine
smoking like a burning tire,
Augustus' old truck yaws and slews,[2]
its leaf-springs limp these centuries
5 suspending apples, somehow pulls the last hill past the bridge at Isle
La Motte.[3] I hear the iron arches groaning. Why not? Whole orchards rattling, empty racks behind us, 10 emptied into grain sacks, piled behind us—home ahead, we broach
the mile-long causeway cross from Grande Isle[4] back.
A blue heron's motionless
15 in marsh grass to my right, and pole and icepack at my left—one line,
two lanes, a roostertail of blue exhaust, we part the cooling waters of Champlain.
20 The moon's a pool of mercury. It's zero. Ice soon.
Steaming like a teacup, losing heat, the lake is tossing clouds up all around the truck; and tucked 25 so in its fragile ribcage creel, the cold heart thump accordions to keep alive, and fills, as apples interrupt this landscape's black-on-grey like heartbeats full of blood, 30 strung beads, a life of little suns gone rolling down the press and sump of memory and changing form as thump, horizon groans and ladles light, and the real sun comes up,
35 sudden, weightless, warm.

1985

1. Lake Champlain, which divides New York State and Vermont near the Canadian border.
2. Pivots, skids. Yaws: moves side to side, like a ship in a heavy sea.
3. Vermont town on one of the islands in Lake Champlain.
4. Group of four islands in Lake Champlain.

Sawmill

Snap tempered tooth chips
sawyer shouts steel in sawlog
lock engine off slack line carriage back echo
5 like a gunshot ricochets off galvanized tin roof the great blade ringing like a gong
and every man down low:
look, along the log's sheer face,
10 the bright metal shows itself:
a tap, a nail, a bit of buried wire, some wrong coordinate or undetected intercept exactly there—count the rings—
15 just forty years ago.

1985

ROBYN SARAH
b. 1949

Courtney, Mentioned in Passing, Years After

"The most beautiful girl in the college,
and she had to go move to Thailand!"
Then
he says her name, and it turns out 5 you knew her, years ago:

you remember her from when she was small,
decked out as Pharaoh's daughter in the Grade Two play, in an amazing dress her mother cut for her, designed 10 with the help of colour plates from the school encyclopaedia, Volume E.

You remember how she,
who lived to ride horses, who drew
(in ink) horses on every surface of her 15 fuchsia and mauve and turquoise and pink vinyl ring-binders, used to punish herself at recess when her team lost
at murder-ball°—

° dodge ball

20 how (almost weeping in her fury)
she would cry, "Oh—
I hate the horses now!"

For a moment, then, in Montreal,
25 in February slush, shifting from foot to foot in the bus-stop line, you think of Courtney in Thailand, hating the horses.
You see her there,
grown up, but still 30 in her Egyptian sleeves. Her sudden wake of colours.

1998

Relics

Digging a new cellar access you unearth

a cat's skull. Then 5 a metal stencil, rustencrusted. Then the small bottle in which ink has dried black

10 with the cap rusted on. And other bottles—small

vials, of coloured pharmacist's glass, 15 and—intact—

filled with packed dirt, its surface glazed
with rainbow patina—

the wide-lipped, plain 20 round thick-glassed pint of childhood gone,

that held—again
and again—fresh cream (thick too)

25 waiting, capped,
each morning
on the stoop.

1998

AGHA SHAHID ALI
1949–2001

The Dacca Gauzes[1]

. . . for a whole year he sought to accumulate the most exquisite Dacca gauzes.
—OSCAR WILDE / The Picture of Dorian Gray

Those transparent Dacca gauzes known as woven air, running water, evening dew:

a dead art now, dead over 5 a hundred years. "No one now knows," my grandmother says,

"what it was to wear or touch that cloth." She wore it once, an heirloom sari from 10 her mother's dowry, proved genuine when it was pulled, all six yards, through a ring.

Years later when it tore,
many handkerchiefs embroidered
15 with gold-thread paisleys were distributed among the nieces and daughters-in-law.

Those too now lost.

In history we learned: the hands
20 of weavers were amputated,
the looms of Bengal silenced, and the cotton shipped raw

by the British to England.
History of little use to her,

1. Thin, finely woven muslins once made in the Bangladeshi city of Dacca.

25 my grandmother just says
how the muslins of today seem so coarse and that only in autumn, should one wake up at dawn to pray, can one 30 feel that same texture again.

One morning, she says, the air was dew-starched: she pulled it absently through her ring.

1987

Lenox Hill[2]

(In Lenox Hill Hospital, after surgery, my mother said the sirens sounded like the elephants of Mihiragula when his men drove them off cliffs in the Pir Panjal Range.)[3]

The Hun so loved the cry, one falling elephant's,
he wished to hear it again. At dawn, my mother heard, in her hospital-dream of elephants, sirens wail through Manhattan like elephants
5 forced off Pir Panjal's rock cliffs in Kashmir:
the soldiers, so ruled, had rushed the elephant,
The greatest of all footprints is the elephant's,
said the Buddha.[4] But not lifted from the universe,
those prints vanished forever into the universe,
10 though nomads still break news of those elephants
as if it were just yesterday the air spread the dye ("War's annals will fade into night / Ere their story die"),[5]

the punishing khaki whereby the world sees us die out, mourning you, O massacred elephants!
15 Months later, in Amherst,[6] she dreamt: She was, with diamonds, being stoned to death. I prayed: If she must die, let it only be some dream. But there were times, Mother, while you slept, that I prayed, "Saints, let her die."
Not, I swear by you, that I wished you to die
20 but to save you as you were, young, in song in Kashmir, and I, one festival, crowned Krishna[7] by you, Kashmir listening to my flute. You never let gods die.

2. On the structure of this poem, which is a canzone, see "Versification," p. 2046. Ali's mother was treated for brain cancer at Lenox Hill Hospital, New York City, but died in a hospital in Northampton, Massachusetts, on April 27, 1997.
3. Himalayan mountains. Mihiragula, the early sixth-century White Hun invader of Kashmir, is said to have been so entranced by the scream of one of his elephants falling from a cliff that he ordered a hundred more to be driven over.
4. Sanskrit name, meaning Enlightened One, of Siddhartha Gautama (ca. 563–483 B.C.E.), founder of Buddhism.
5. Cf. Thomas Hardy, "In Time of 'The Breaking of Nations,'" lines 11–12 (p. 1161).
6. Town in Massachusetts, near Northampton.
7. Widely revered Indian deity.

Thus I swear, here and now, not to forgive the universe that would let me get used to a universe

25 without you. She, she alone, was the universe as she earned, like a galaxy, her right not to die, defying the Merciful of the Universe,
Master of Disease, "in the circle of her traverse"[8] of drug-bound time. And where was the god of elephants,[9] 30 plump with Fate, when tusk to tusk, the universe, dyed green, became ivory? Then let the universe, like Paradise, be considered a tomb. Mother, they asked me, So how's the writing? I answered My mother is my poem. What did they expect? For no verse 35 sufficed except the promise, fading, of Kashmir and the cries that reached you from the cliffs of Kashmir

(across fifteen centuries) in the hospital. Kashmir, she's dying! How her breathing drowns out the universe as she sleeps in Amherst. Windows open on Kashmir:
40 There, the fragile wood-shrines—so far away—of Kashmir!
O Destroyer,[1] let her return there, if just to die.
Save the right she gave its earth to cover her, Kashmir has no rights. When the windows close on Kashmir,
I see the blizzard-fall of ghost-elephants.
45 I hold back—she couldn't bear it—one elephant's story: his return (in a country far from Kashmir) to the jungle where each year, on the day his mother died, he touches with his trunk the bones of his mother.

"As you sit here by me, you're just like my mother," 50 she tells me. I imagine her: a bride in Kashmir, she's watching, at the Regal,[2] her first film with Father.
If only I could gather you in my arms, Mother,
I'd save you—now my daughter—from God. The universe opens its ledger. I write: How helpless was God's mother!
55 Each page is turned to enter grief's accounts. Mother,
I see a hand. Tell me it's not God's. Let it die.
I see it. It's filling with diamonds. Please let it die.
Are you somewhere alive, somewhere alive, Mother?
Do you hear what I once held back: in one elephant's 60 cry, by his mother's bones, the cries of those elephants that stunned the abyss? Ivory blots out the elephants.

I enter this: The Belovéd leaves one behind to die.
For compared to my grief for you, what are those of Kashmir, and what (I close the ledger) are the griefs of the universe
65 when I remember you—beyond all accounting—O my mother?

2002

8. Cf. Wallace Stevens, "The Paltry Nude Starts on a Spring Voyage," lines 15–16: "She touches the clouds, where she goes / In the circle of her traverse of the sea."
9. I.e., Ganesh, Hindu god with the head of an elephant, able to answer prayers and bring good fortune.
1. I.e., Shiva, Hindu god of, among other things, destruction and the Himalayan mountains.
2. Name of a movie theater.

JAMES FENTON

b. 1949

Dead Soldiers

When His Excellency Prince Norodom Chantaraingsey[1]
Invited me to lunch on the battlefield
I was glad of my white suit for the first time that day.
They lived well, the mad Norodoms, they had style.
5 The brandy and the soda arrived in crates.
Bricks of ice, tied around with raffia,° palm fibers
Dripped from the orderlies' handlebars.

And I remember the dazzling tablecloth
As the APCs[2] fanned out along the road,
10 The dishes piled high with frogs' legs,
Pregnant turtles, their eggs boiled in the carapace,° shell
Marsh irises in fish sauce
And inflorescence[3] of a banana salad.

On every bottle, Napoleon Bonaparte
15 Pleaded for the authenticity of the spirit.[4]
They called the empties Dead Soldiers
And rejoiced to see them pile up at our feet.

Each diner was attended by one of the other ranks[5]
Whirling a table-napkin to keep off the flies.
20 It was like eating between rows of morris dancers[6]—
Only they didn't kick.

On my left sat the prince;
On my right, his drunken aide.
The frogs' thighs leapt into the sad purple face
25 Like fish to the sound of a Chinese flute.
I wanted to talk to the prince. I wish now
I had collared his aide, who was Saloth Sar's brother.
We treated him as the club bore. He was always Boasting of his connections, boasting with a head-shake 30 Or by pronouncing of some doubtful phrase.
And well might he boast. Saloth Sar, for instance,
Was Pol Pot's[7] real name. The APCs
Fired into the sugar palms but met no resistance.

1. Military governor of Cambodia, uncle of King Norodom Sihanouk (b. 1922). Fenton was a war correspondent in Cambodia and Vietnam.
2. Armored personnel carriers: trucks for transporting troops.
3. Arrangement of flowers on an axis; blossoming.
4. Napoleon brandy (i.e., of high quality).
5. General infantrymen.
6. Performers of British folk dances, which include the waving of scarves, handkerchiefs, and sometimes wooden staves.
7. Kampuchean politician (1925–1998). Part of the anti-French resistance in the 1940s, he became leader of the pro-French Communist Party, and prime minister in 1976. His government was overthrown after the Vietnamese invasion of 1979.

In a diary, I refer to Pol Pot's brother as the Jockey Cap.
35 A few weeks later, I find him "in good form
And very skeptical about Chantaraingsey."
"But one eats well there," I remark.
"So one should," says the Jockey Cap:
"The tiger always eats well,
40 It eats the raw flesh of the deer,
And Chantaraingsey was born in the year of the tiger.
So, did they show you the things they do
With the young refugee girls?"

And he tells me how he will one day give me the gen.° inside information
45 He will tell me how the prince financed the casino
And how the casino brought Lon Nol[8] to power.
He will tell me this.
He will tell me all these things.
All I must do is drink and listen.

50 In those days, I thought that when the game was up
The prince would be far, far away—
In a limestone faubourg,° on the promenade at Nice,[9] suburb
Reduced in circumstances but well enough provided for.
In Paris, he would hardly require his private army.
55 The Jockey Cap might suffice for café warfare,
And matchboxes for APCs.

But we were always wrong in these predictions.
It was a family war. Whatever happened,
The principals were obliged to attend its issue.
60 A few were cajoled into leaving, a few were expelled,
And there were villains enough, but none of them
Slipped away with the swag.° loot

For the prince was fighting Sihanouk,[1] his nephew,
And the Jockey Cap was ranged against his brother
65 Of whom I remember nothing more Than an obscure reputation for virtue.
I have been told that the prince is still fighting
Somewhere in the Cardamoms or the Elephant Mountains.
But I doubt that the Jockey Cap would have survived his good connections.
70 I think the lunches would have done for him—
Either the lunches or the dead soldiers.

1981

8. General (1913–1985) and right-wing politician, who became president of Cambodia in 1970 after his faction overthrew Sihanouk (see note 8 below). He was overthrown by Pol Pot.

9. Resort city on the French Riviera.

1. Norodom Sihanouk was made king of Cambodia by the French in 1941. Overthrown by Lon Nol, he was reinstated in 1993.

A German Requiem[2]

(To T. J. G.-A.)

> For as at a great distance of place, that which wee look at, appears dimme, and without distinction of the smaller parts; and as Voyces grow weak, and inarticulate: so also after great distance of time, our imagination of the Past is weak; and wee lose (for example) of Cities wee have seen, many particular Streets; and of Actions, many particular circumstances. This decaying sense, when wee would express the thing it self, (I mean fancy it selfe,) wee call Imagination, as I said before: But when we would express the decay, and signifie that the Sense is fading, old, and past, it is called Memory. So that Imagination and Memory are but one thing . . .
>
> —HOBBES,[3] Leviathan

It is not what they built. It is what they knocked down.
It is not the houses. It is the spaces between the houses.
It is not the streets that exist. It is the streets that no longer exist.
It is not your memories which haunt you.
5 It is not what you have written down.
It is what you have forgotten, what you must forget.
What you must go on forgetting all your life.
And with any luck oblivion should discover a ritual.
You will find out that you are not alone in the enterprise.
10 Yesterday the very furniture seemed to reproach you.
Today you take your place in the Widow's Shuttle.[4]

*

The bus is waiting at the southern gate
To take you to the city of your ancestors
Which stands on the hill opposite, with gleaming pediments,[5]
15 As vivid as this charming square, your home.
Are you shy? You should be. It is almost like a wedding,
The way you clasp your flowers and give a little tug at your veil. Oh,
The hideous bridesmaids, it is natural that you should resent them
Just a little, on this first day.
20 But that will pass, and the cemetery is not far.
Here comes the driver, flicking a toothpick into the gutter,
His tongue still searching between his teeth.
See, he has not noticed you. No one has noticed you.
It will pass, young lady, it will pass.

*

25 How comforting it is, once or twice a year,
To get together and forget the old times.
As on those special days, ladies and gentlemen,
When the boiled shirts[6] gather at the graveside
And a leering waistcoat approaches the rostrum.

2. Mass or chant for the dead. Also, title of a piece by the German composer Johannes Brahms (1833–1897).
3. Thomas Hobbes (1588–1679), English philosopher.
4. Popular name for bus going to the cemetery.
5. Triangular structures crowning the fronts of buildings.
6. (Men wearing) dress shirts with starched fronts.

30 It is like a solemn pact between the survivors.
The mayor has signed it on behalf of the freemasonry.[7]
The priest has sealed it on behalf of all the rest.
Nothing more need be said, and it is better that way—

*

The better for the widow, that she should not live in fear of surprise, 35 The better for the young man, that he should move at liberty between the armchairs,
The better that these bent figures who flutter among the graves
Tending the nightlights and replacing the chrysanthemums
Are not ghosts,
That they shall go home.
40 The bus is waiting, and on the upper terraces
The workmen are dismantling the houses of the dead.

*

But when so many had died, so many and at such speed,
There were no cities waiting for the victims.
They unscrewed the name-plates from the shattered doorways
45 And carried them away with the coffins.
So the squares and parks were filled with the eloquence of young cemeteries:
The smell of fresh earth, the improvised crosses
And all the impossible directions in brass and enamel.

*

"Doctor Gliedschirm, skin specialist, surgeries 14–16 hours or by appointment."
50 Professor Sargnagel was buried with four degrees, two associate memberships
And instructions to tradesmen to use the back entrance.
Your uncle's grave informed you that he lived on the third floor, left.
You were asked please to ring, and he would come down in the lift[8]
To which one needed a key . . .

*

55 Would come down, would ever come down
With a smile like thin gruel, and never too much to say.
How he shrank through the years.
How you towered over him in the narrow cage.[9]
How he shrinks now . . .

*

60 But come. Grief must have its term? Guilt too, then.
And it seems there is no limit to the resourcefulness of recollection.
So that a man might say and think:
When the world was at its darkest,

7. Fraternity for mutual help, called "Free and Accepted Masons" and having elaborate secret rituals.

8. Elevator.

9. Of the wire-screened elevator.

When the black wings passed over the rooftops[1]
65 (And who can divine His purposes?) even then
There was always, always a fire in this hearth.
You see this cupboard? A priest-hole![2]
And in that lumber-room whole generations have been housed and fed.
Oh, if I were to begin, if I were to begin to tell you 70 The half, the quarter, a mere smattering of what we went through!

*

His wife nods, and a secret smile,
Like a breeze with enough strength to carry one dry leaf
Over two pavingstones, passes from chair to chair.
Even the enquirer is charmed.
75 He forgets to pursue the point.
It is not what he wants to know.
It is what he wants not to know.
It is not what they say.
It is what they do not say.

1982

God, A Poem

A nasty surprise in a sandwich,
A drawing-pin caught in your sock,
The limpest of shakes from a hand which
You'd thought would be firm as a rock,

5 A serious mistake in a nightie,
A grave disappointment all round
Is all that you'll get from th'Almighty,
Is all that you'll get underground.

Oh he said: "If you lay off the crumpet° — women
10 I'll see you alright in the end.
Just hang on until the last trumpet.
Have faith in me, chum—I'm your friend."

But if you remind him, he'll tell you:
"I'm sorry, I must have been pissed°— — drunk
15 Though your name rings a sort of a bell. You Should have guessed that I do not exist.

"I didn't exist at Creation,
I didn't exist at the Flood,
And I won't be around for Salvation
20 To sort out the sheep from the cud—

1. Cf. Exodus 12.27: "It is the sacrifice of the Lord's passover, who passed over the houses of the children of Israel in Egypt, when he smote the Egyptians, and delivered our houses."

2. One of the hiding places, for Roman Catholic priests, built in sixteenth-century England after the banning of Catholicism.

"Or whatever the phrase is. The fact is In soteriological° terms salvational
I'm a crude existential malpractice
And you are a diet° of° worms. food / for 25 "You're a nasty surprise in a sandwich.

You're a drawing-pin caught in my sock.
You're the limpest of shakes from a hand which
I'd have thought would be firm as a rock,

"You're a serious mistake in a nightie,
30 You're a grave disappointment all round—
That's all that you are," says th'Almighty,
"And that's all that you'll be underground."

1983

In Paris with You

Don't talk to me of love. I've had an earful
And I get tearful when I've downed a drink or two.
I'm one of your talking wounded.
I'm a hostage. I'm maroonded.
5 But I'm in Paris with you.

Yes I'm angry at the way I've been bamboozled
And resentful at the mess that I've been through.
I admit I'm on the rebound
And I don't care where are we bound.
10 I'm in Paris with you.

Do you mind if we do not go to the Louvre,
If we say sod[3] off to sodding Notre Dame,
If we skip the Champs Elysées
And remain here in this sleazy

15 Old hotel room
Doing this and that
To what and whom
Learning who you are,
Learning what I am.

20 Don't talk to me of love. Let's talk of Paris,
The little bit of Paris in our view.
There's that crack across the ceiling
And the hotel walls are peeling
And I'm in Paris with you.

25 Don't talk to me of love. Let's talk of Paris.
I'm in Paris with the slightest thing you do.

3. English slang, similar to but milder than bugger.

I'm in Paris with your eyes, your mouth,
I'm in Paris with . . . all points south.
Am I embarrassing you?
30 I'm in Paris with you.

1993

CHARLES BERNSTEIN
b. 1950

Of Time and the Line

George Burns[1] likes to insist that he always takes the straight lines; the cigar in his mouth is a way of leaving space between the lines for a laugh. He weaves lines together 5 by means of a picaresque narrative;
not so Hennie Youngman, whose lines are strictly paratactic.[2] My father pushed a line of ladies' dresses—not down the street in a pushcart but upstairs in a fact'ry
10 office. My mother has been more concerned with her hemline. Chairman Mao[3] put forward Maoist lines, but that's been abandoned (mostly) for the East-West line of malarkey
so popular in these parts. The prestige 15 of the iambic line has recently suffered decline, since it's no longer so clear who "I" am, much less who you are. When making a line, better be double sure what you're lining in & what you're lining 20 out & which side of the line you're on; the world is made up so (Adam didn't so much name as delineate).[4] Every poem's got a prosodic° lining, some of which will — metrical unzip for summer wear. The lines of an 25 imaginary are inscribed on the social flesh by the knifepoint of history.
Nowadays, you can often spot a work of poetry by whether it's in lines or no; if it's in prose, there's a good chance 30 it's a poem. While there is no lesson in the line more useful than that of the picket line, the line that has caused the most adversity is the bloodline. In Russia

1. American comedian and actor (1896–1996), always seen with a cigar.
2. Placed one after another without connectives, as in "Take my wife. Please"—the most famous one-liner delivered by Henry "Henny" Youngman (1906–1998), American comedian.
3. Mao Tse-tung (1893–1976), Communist leader of the People's Republic of China.
4. Cf. Genesis 1.19–20: ". . . and whatsoever Adam called every living creature, that was the name thereof."

everyone is worried about long lines;
35 back in the USA, it's strictly soup-lines. "Take a chisel to write," but for an actor a line's got to be cued. Or, as they say in math, it takes two lines to make an angle but only one lime to make 40 a Margarita.

1991 frequently unasked questions

I've a pile of memories on my other drive, just give me the word and I'll configure them for you. I've got the pearl blue organizer and the banquette
5 with double lacerators, but nothing floral like those diphthong transducers.
Was a time I'd arrive decked to the,
well that's no way to establish contagious proximity. It poured several 10 days in a row so that when the blimp finally appeared we were focussed elsewise. Later, much later, got to cash in my gold for those new chits—look so shiny over there.

2001

why we ask you not to touch

Human emotions and cognition

leave a projective film over the poems making them difficult to perceive.

Careful readers maintain a measured

5 distance from the works in order to allow distortion-free comprehension and to avoid damaging the meaning.

2001 this poem intentionally left blank

2001

ANNE CARSON
b. 1950

New Rule

A New Year's white morning of hard new ice.
High on the frozen branches I saw a squirrel jump and skid.
Is this scary? he seemed to say and glanced down at me, clutching his branch as it bobbed

5 in stiff recoil—or is it just that everything sounds wrong today?
The branches

clinked.
He wiped his small cold lips with one hand.
Do you fear the same things as 10 I fear? I countered, looking up.

His empire of branches slid against the air.
The night of hooks?

The man blade left open on the stair?
Not enough spin on it, said my true love
15 when he left in our fifth year.

The squirrel bounced down a branch and caught a peg of tears.
The way to hold on is afterwords

20 so clear.

2000

Sumptuous Destitution[1]

"Sumptuous destitution"
Your opinion gives me a serious feeling: I would like to be what you deem me.
(Emily Dickinson letter 319 to Thomas Higginson)[2]
is a phrase
5 You see my position is benighted.
(Emily Dickinson letter 268 to Thomas Higginson)

1. Phrase from poem (Franklin number 1404, Johnson number 1382) by the American poet Emily Dickinson (1830–1886; see pp. 1110–27), in which she remarks that joy "leaves a sumptuous Destitution- / Without a name."
2. All of the italicized quotations, except the last (line 23), are from letters written by Dickinson. The mentor she addresses explicitly in many letters is the American literary critic Thomas Wentworth Higginson (1823–1911). Carson makes evident her belief that some of the letters here, whose undisclosed recipient Dickinson called "Master," were to Higginson. "Master" 's identity continues to be disputed by scholars.

scholars use
She was much too enigmatical a being for me to solve in an hour's interview.
(Thomas Higginson letter 342a to Emily Dickinson)
10 of female
God made me [Sir] Master—I didn't be—myself.
(Emily Dickinson letter 233 to Thomas Higginson)
silence.
Rushing among my small heart—and pushing aside the blood—
15 (Emily Dickinson letter 248 to Thomas Higginson)
Save what you can, Emily.
And when I try to organize—my little Force explodes—and leaves me bare and charred.
(Emily Dickinson letter 271 to Thomas Higginson)

Save every bit of thread.
20 Have you a little chest to put the Alive in?
(Emily Dickinson letter 233 to Thomas Higginson)
One of them may be
By Cock, said Ophelia.[3]
(Emily Dickinson letter 268 to Thomas Higginson)
25 the way out of here.

2000

The Beauty of the Husband

IV. HE SHE WE THEY YOU YOU YOU I HER SO PRONOUNS BEGIN THE DANCE CALLED WASHING WHOSE NAME DERIVES FROM AN ALCHEMICAL FACT THAT AFTER A SMALL STILLNESS THERE IS A SMALL STIR AFTER GREAT STILLNESS A GREAT STIR[4]

Rotate the husband and expose a hidden side. A letter he wrote from Rio de Janeiro.[5]
Why Rio de Janeiro? is not a question worth asking.
We had been separated three years but not yet divorced.
He turned up anywhere.

5 Could be counted upon to lie if asked why. Otherwise could not be counted upon.
When I say hidden
I mean funny.
A husband's tears are never hidden.

3. Allusion to Shakespeare, Hamlet 4.5.59–60, where the mad Ophelia, spurned by Hamlet, implies he has "tumbled" her: "Young men will do't if they come to't, / By Cock, they are to blame."

4. Section of Carson's book-length poem The Beauty of the Husband: A Fictional Essay in 29 Tangos.

5. Former capital city of Brazil.

Rio, April 23
10 I don't understand this business of linguistics.
Make me cry.
Don't make me cry.
I cry. You cry. We make ourselves cry.

Travelling foolish work spending money is what I make myself do.
15 Carioca.[6]
I'm in an apartment in Rio with some Brazilians arguing over how to make a washing machine work.
In half an hour they'll forget about it and go out for dinner leaving the machine on fire.
20 They will come back from dinner to find their clothes burned up, slap each other on the head and decide they in fact bought a dryer which they don't know how to operate.
I have just gone to look at this machine. It is indeed a washer on fire.
25 So now what happens. You and I.

We have this deep sadness between us and its spells so habitual I can't tell it from love.
You want a clean life I live a dirty one old story. Well.

30 Not much use to you without you am I.
I still love you.
You make me cry.
There are three things to notice about this letter.

First
35 its symmetry:
Make me cry. . . . You make me cry.
Second
its casuistry:
cosmological[7] motifs, fire and water, placed right before talk of love 40 to ground it in associations of primordial eros and strife.
Third no return address.
I cannot answer. He wants no answer. What does he want.
Four things.
But from the fourth I flee
45 chaste and craftily.

2001

6. Spanish term for resident of Rio de Janeiro.
7. Related to metaphysical speculation about the nature of the universe. Casuistry: plausible but invalid reasoning.

1972

DANA GIOIA
b. 1950

Prayer

Echo of the clocktower, footstep
in the alleyway, sweep of the wind sifting the leaves.

Jeweller of the spiderweb, connoisseur
5 of autumn's opulence, blade of lightning harvesting the sky.

Keeper of the small gate, choreographer of entrances and exits, midnight
whisper travelling the wires.

10 Seducer, healer, deity or thief,
I will see you soon enough—
in the shadow of the rainfall,

in the brief violet darkening a sunset—
but until then I pray watch over him 15 as a mountain guards its covert ore and the harsh falcon its flightless young.

1991

The Next Poem

How much better it seems now than when it is finally done—
the unforgettable first line,
the cunning way the stanzas run.

5 The rhymes soft-spoken and suggestive are barely audible at first,
an appetite not yet acknowledged like the inkling of a thirst.

While gradually the form appears 10 as each line is coaxed aloud—
the architecture of a room seen from the middle of a crowd.

The music that of common speech
but slanted so that each detail
15 sounds unexpected as a sharp inserted in a simple scale.

No jumble box of imagery dumped glumly in the reader's lap or elegantly packaged junk
20 the unsuspecting must unwrap.

But words that could direct a friend precisely to an unknown place, those few unshakeable details that no confusion can erase.

25 And the real subject left unspoken but unmistakable to those who don't expect a jungle parrot in the black and white of prose.

How much better it seems now
30 than when it is finally written.
How hungrily one waits to feel the bright lure seized, the old hook bitten.

1991

NICHOLAS CHRISTOPHER
b. 1951

The Palm Reader

In her storefront living room—
overstuffed couch, oversized TV, a bowl of mints on the Plexiglas coffee table—
she watches Edge of Night[1] and files her nails.
5 The paraphernalia pertaining to her trade crowd a shelf beneath the large green hand painted onto the window: a Tarot deck, coins and obelisks, a chalky bust with numbered phrenological divisions on the skull.
10 Through the beaded curtain in the rear
some clues emerge as to her life:
two children trading insults,
a man calling out, "Eggs!"
as a frying pan clatters into a sink,
15 a dog running by with a wig in his mouth.
She herself is plump, heavily made up, wearing a red dress and a shawl imprinted with the signs of the zodiac.
A gold pyramid hangs from her throat

1. A soap opera.

20 and she has combed glittering silver stars through her black hair.
From a plush rocker she beckons you,
at the window, to a straight-back chair in which she will divine (according to the sign 25 on the door) "the roads into your future, and helpful information from the Beyond."
Though the latter, especially, tempts
you powerfully, you decline,
and she shrugs with a rueful smile.
30 And because it is close to noon,
and the sidewalk is empty, as you cross
the street she closes up for lunch.
Her living room in which matters of life and death—of human destiny laid bare—35 suddenly reverts to its other function:
husband slumped on the couch clutching a beer,
children sopping bread across paper plates,
the dog sprawled under the table.
All of them watching Edge of Night now.
40 The fate of whose characters, which keeps a faithful public tuning in day after day, year after year, is presumably known to this woman, lighting a cigarette and surveying that room, open to all passersby 45 yet utterly remote, as inescapable as the future itself, that jumps out at her from every stranger's hand.

1995

Far from Home

A broken-down hotel on an inhospitable sea,
and behind it, a field of thorns in which a man wearing white gloves is digging a hole with the exact proportions of a grave.

5 Down the hall, the young chambermaid is staring into a basin full of red water.
Her hair is white and her hands are wrinkled.
A shark tooth dangles from her ear.

In the evening she leaves a tray by my door:
10 a glass, a carafe of water, and a bottle containing liquor that swirls like mist.
Mornings she brings bitter tea and a map.

Always the same map—not of the island
we're on, but of one I left long ago.

15 (If it were this island, I wouldn't know, having never ventured from the hotel.)

There is a bowl of black seashells by my bed.
The maps—thirteen of them—are stacked between the lamp that flickers like a star
20 and the quartz lions veined with light.

The clerk at the front desk could be a statue.
His dark glasses reflect the bare lobby,
its leafless plants and shuttered windows.
At his fingertips is a tumbler filled with dust.

25 The day I check out, the other guests line
the balcony, wrapped in sheets, speaking a language I've never heard—sibilant as the sea, but with no two words sounding alike.

The man in white gloves appears, to carry 30 my suitcase, and pauses before a mirror in which I see, not his image, but towering iron waves, rising to mesh with an iron sky.

1995

JORIE GRAHAM
b. 1951

The Geese

Today as I hang out the wash I see them again, a code
as urgent as elegant,
tapering with goals.
For days they have been crossing. We live beneath these geese

5 as if beneath the passage of time, or a most perfect heading.
Sometimes I fear their relevance.
Closest at hand,
between the lines,

the spiders imitate the paths the geese won't stray from,
10 imitate them endlessly to no avail:
things will not remain connected,
will not heal,

and the world thickens with texture instead of history, texture instead of place.
15 Yet the small fear of the spiders binds and binds

the pins to the lines, the lines to the eaves, to the pincushion bush, as if, at any time, things could fall further apart[1]
and nothing could help them 20 recover their meaning. And if these spiders had their way, chainlink over the visible world, would we be in or out? I turn to go back in.

There is a feeling the body gives the mind of having missed something, a bedrock poverty, like falling

25 without the sense that you are passing through one world, that you could reach another anytime. Instead the real is crossing you,

your body an arrival
30 you know is false but can't outrun. And somewhere in between these geese forever entering and these spiders turning back,

this astonishing delay, the everyday, takes place.

1980

At Luca Signorelli's[2] Resurrection of the Body

See how they hurry
 to enter their bodies,
 these spirits.
5 Is it better, flesh, that they should hurry so?

 From above
the green-winged angels 10 blare down trumpets and light. But they don't care,

they hurry to congregate,
 they hurry
15 into speech, until it's a marketplace, it is humanity. But still we wonder

1. Cf. W. B. Yeats, "The Second Coming," line 3: "Things fall apart; the centre cannot hold" (p. 1196).

2. Italian painter (ca. 1450–1523), whose series on the Last Judgment is displayed in the gothic cathedral of Orvieto, Italy.

in the chancel[3] 20 of the dark cathedral,
is it better, back?
The artist has tried to make it so: each tendon
they press

25 to re-enter is perfect. But is it perfection
they're after,
pulling themselves up
30 through the soil

into the weightedness, the color, into the eye of the painter? Outside it is 1500,
35 all round the cathedral streets hurry to open through the wild

silver grasses. . . .
The men and women
40 on the cathedral wall
do not know how,
having come this far,

to stop their hurrying. They amble off 45 in groups, in couples. Soon
some are clothed, there is distance, there is perspective. Standing below them 50 in the church

in Orvieto, how can we tell them to be stern and brazen
and slow,

55 that there is no
entrance, only entering. They keep on arriving.
wanting names,
60 wanting happiness. In his studio

Luca Signorelli

3. Part of a church containing the altar.

in the name of God and Science
65 and the believable broke into the body

studying arrival.
      But the wall of the flesh
70 opens endlessly, its vanishing point so deep and receding

we have yet to find it,
      to have it
75 stop us. So he cut deeper,
graduating slowly from the symbolic to the beautiful. How far

80 is true?
When his one son
      died violently,
he had the body brought to him
      and laid it

85 on the drawing-table, and stood at a certain distance awaiting the best possible light, the best depth 90 of day,

then with beauty and care
      and technique
and judgment, cut into shadow, cut
95 into bone and sinew and every pocket

in which the cold light pooled.
It took him days,
100 that deep
caress, cutting,
      unfastening,

until his mind could climb into 105 the open flesh and mend itself.

1993

The Surface

It has a hole in it. Not only where I concentrate.
The river still ribboning, twisting up,
into its re-
5 arrangements, chill enlightenments, tight-knotted quickenings
and loosenings—whispered messages dissolving the messengers—
the river still glinting-up into its handfuls, heapings, 10 glassy
forgettings under the river of my attention—
and the river of my attention laying itself down—
bending,
15 reassembling—over the quick leaving-offs and windy obstacles—
and the surface rippling under the wind's attention—rippling over the accumulations, the slowed-down drifting permanences
20 of the cold
bed.
I say iridescent and I look down.
The leaves very still as they are carried.

1993

PAUL MULDOON
b. 1951

Why Brownlee Left

Why Brownlee left, and where he went,
Is a mystery even now.
For if a man should have been content
It was him; two acres of barley,
5 One of potatoes, four bullocks,
A milker, a slated farmhouse.
He was last seen going out to plough
On a March morning, bright and early.

By noon Brownlee was famous;
10 They had found all abandoned, with
The last rig[1] unbroken, his pair of black

1. Ridge between a pair of plow furrows.

Horses, like man and wife,
Shifting their weight from foot to Foot, and gazing into the future.

1980

Meeting the British[2]

We met the British in the dead of winter.
The sky was lavender

and the snow lavender-blue.
I could hear, far below,

5 the sound of two streams coming together
(both were frozen over) and, no less strange, myself calling out in French

across that forest-10 clearing. Neither General Jeffrey Amherst

nor Colonel Henry Bouquet[3] could stomach our willow-tobacco.

As for the unusual
scent when the Colonel shook out his hand-

15 kerchief: C'est la lavande, une fleur mauve comme le ciel.[4]

They gave us six fishhooks and two blankets embroidered with smallpox.

1987

Milkweed and Monarch

As he knelt by the grave of his mother and father
the taste of dill, or tarragon—
he could barely tell one from the other—

2. I.e., the British forces, met by Native Americans who were allied with France during the French and Indian War (1754–63).
3. British officer (1719–1766), who with the commander-in-chief, Amherst (1717–1797), devised and apparently executed a plan to spread smallpox among the Native Americans through infected blankets.
4. It is lavender, a flower as mauve as the sky (French).

filled his mouth. It seemed as if he might smother.
5 Why should he be stricken with grief, not for his mother and father,

but a woman slinking from the fur of a sea-otter
in Portland, Maine, or, yes, Portland, Oregon—
he could barely tell one from the other—

10 and why should he now savour
the tang of her, her little pickled gherkin,
as he knelt by the grave of his mother and father?

*

He looked about. He remembered her palaver° idle talk on how both earth and sky would darken—15 "You could barely tell one from the other—"

while the Monarch butterflies passed over in their milkweed-hunger: "A wing-beat, some reckon, may trigger off the mother and father of all storms, striking your Irish Cliffs of Moher 20 with the force of a hurricane."

Then: "Milkweed and Monarch 'invented' each other."

*

He looked about. Cow's-parsley in a samovar.[5]
He'd mistaken his mother's name, "Regan", for "Anger":

as he knelt by the grave of his mother and father
25 he could barely tell one from the other.

1994

Third Epistle to Timothy[6]

You made some mistake when you intended to favor me with some of the new valuable grass seed . . . for what you gave me . . . proves mere timothy.

A letter from Benjamin Franklin to Jared Eliot,[7]
July 16th, 1747

I

Midnight. June, 1923. Not a stir except for the brough and brouhaha[8] surrounding the taper or link[9]

5. Russian tea urn.
6. St. Paul writes two epistles to Timothy (Christian Scriptures books 1 Timothy and 2 Timothy). With a poem that often quotes St. Paul, Muldoon provides a third.
7. Early American minister, physician, and scientist (1685–1763). Timothy: a native British grass, introduced during the eighteenth century into North America.
8. Commotion. Brough: luminous ring around the moon.
9. A torch made of flax fiber and pitch (a resinous substance).

in which a louse
flares up and a shadow, my da's,
5 clatters against a wall of the six-by-eight-by-six-foot room
he sleeps in, eleven years old, a servant-boy at Hardy's of Carnteel.[1]
There's a boot-polish lid filled with turps or paraffin oil
under each cast-iron bed-leg, a little barrier
10 against bed-bugs under each bed-foot.

II

That knocking's the knocking against their stalls of a team of six black Clydesdales[2] mined in Coalisland
he's only just helped to unhitch from the cumbersome star of a hay-rake. Decently and in order[3] 15 he brought each whitewashed nose to its nosebag of corn, to its galvanized bucket.
One of the six black Clydesdale mares
he helped all day to hitch and unhitch was showing, on the near hock, what might be a bud of farcy[4] 20 picked up, no doubt, while on loan to Wesley Cummins.

III

"Decently and in order," Cummins would proclaim, "let all Inniskillings[5]
be done." A week ago my da helped him limber° up hook the team to a mowing machine as if to a gun carriage. "For no Dragoon° cavalry member can function without his measure of char."° tea
25 He patted his belly-band. "A measure, that is, against dysentery."
This was my da's signal to rush into the deep shade of the hedge to fetch such little tea as might remain in the tea urn. "Man does not live," Cummins would snort, "only by scraps
of wheaten farls and tea dregs.[6]
30 You watch your step or I'll see you're shipped back to Killeter."[7]

IV

"Kill*eeshill*," my da says, "I'm from Killeeshill." Along the cast-iron rainbow of his bed-end comes a line of chafers° or cheeselips° that have scaled beetles / cockchafers, wood lice
the bed-legs

1. Parish in County Tyrone, Northern Ireland, as is Coalisland (line 12).
2. A breed of horse used on farms.
3. Cf. St. Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians (1 Corinthians) 14.40: "Let all things be done decently and in order."
4. A disease that causes small tumors known as farcy buds. Hock: the joint between the knee and the fetlock on a horse.
5. Named after the town in County Fermanagh that it was established to defend, the Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers was a regiment of the British Army. Cummins rephrases St. Paul's "Let all things be done."
6. Cf. Deuteronomy 8.3: "man doth not live by bread only." Farls: small Scottish cakes or biscuits.
7. Village in County Tyrone, as is Killeeshill (line 31).

35 despite the boot-polish lids. Eleven years of age. A servant-boy on the point of falling asleep. The reek of paraffin or the pinewoods reek
of turpentine
good against roundworm in horses. That knocking against their stalls 40 of six Clydesdales, each standing at sixteen hands.

V

Building hay even now, even now drawing level with the team's headbrass,[8]
buoyed up by nothing more than the ballast of hay—meadow cat's-tail, lucerne,[9] the leaf upon trodden leaf of white clover and red—
45 drawing level now with the taper-blooms of a horse chestnut.
Already light in the head.
"Though you speak, young Muldoon . . ." Cummins calls up from trimming the skirt
of the haycock,° "though you speak with the tongue small pile of hay of an angel,[1] I see you for what you are . . . Malevolent.
50 Not only a member of the church malignant[2] but a malevolent spirit."

VI

Even now borne aloft by bearing down on lap-cocks and shake-cocks[3] from under one of which a ruddy face suddenly twists and turns upwards as if itself carried on a pitchfork and, meeting its gaze, 55 he sees himself, a servant-boy still, still ten or eleven, breathing upon a Clydesdale's near hock and finding a farcy-bud like a tiny glow in a strut° of charcoal. stick
"I see you," Cummins points at him with the pitchfork, "you little by-blow,° bastard
I see you casting your spells, your sorceries,
60 I see you coming as a thief in the night[4] to stab us in the back."

VII

A year since they kidnapped Anketell Moutray from his home at Favour Royal,[5]
dragging him, blindfolded, the length of his own gravel path, eighty years old, the Orange county grand master.[6] Four A-Specials[7] shot on a train

8. A team of horses pulling a plow, the head brass being the ornamental brass plaque attached to their bridle. Cf. Edward Thomas, "As the team's head brass" (p. 1255).
9. Plant resembling clover and cultivated for fodder. Meadow cat's-tail: another name for timothy grass in Britain and Ireland.
1. Cf. St. Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians 13.1: "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal."
2. Cummins attacks the servant boy's Roman Catholicism, thereby adding the "church malignant" to Catholicism's distinction between the church triumphant (souls in heaven), the church suffering (souls in purgatory), and the church militant (faithful on Earth).
3. Like lap-cocks, elaborate shapes made of hay.
4. Cf. St. Paul's First Epistle to the Thessalonians 5.2: "For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night."
5. Demesne (estate) in County Tyrone.
6. The Orange order is a Protestant fraternity founded in 1795. Often accused of sectarian bigotry, the order and its members have been the target of violent attacks.
7. As a response to sectarian violence, the British government established the Ulster Special Constabulary in 1920. Overwhelmingly Protestant, this new force was divided into three sections: the

in Clones. The Clogher valley[8]
65 a blaze of flax-mills and hay-sheds. Memories of the Land League.
Davitt and Biggar.[9]
Breaking the boycott at Lough Mask.[1]
The Land Leaguers beaten
at the second battle of Saintfield.[2] It shall be revealed . . . [3]
A year since they cut out the clapper° of a collabor . . . a collabor . . . tongue
70 a collaborator from Maguiresbridge.[4]

VIII

That knocking's the team's near-distant knocking on wood while my da breathes upon the blue-yellow flame on a fetlock, on a deep-feathered pastern[5] of one of six black Shires° . . . "Because it shall be revealed by fire," large farm horses
75 Cummins's last pitchfork is laden with thistles, "as the sparks fly upward man is born unto trouble.[6] For the tongue may yet be cut from an angel." The line of cheeselips and chafers along the bed-end. "Just wait till you come back down and I get a hold 80 of you, young Muldoon . . . We'll see what spells you'll cast."

IX

For an instant it seems no one else might scale
such a parapet of meadow cat's-tail, lucerne, red and white clovers, not even the line of chafers and cheeselips that overthrow as they undermine 85 when, light in the head, unsteady on his pegs as Anketell Moutray, he squints through a blindfold of clegs° horseflies
from his grass-capped, thistle-strewn vantage point,
the point where two hay-ropes cross,

A-Specials were full-time and paid as if regular policemen; the B-Specials were part-time and unpaid; and the C-Specials were a reserve force, also unpaid.

8. Rural area in County Tyrone, the scene of agrarian unrest. Clones: town in County Monaghan, Northern Ireland.

9. Michael Davitt (1846–1906) helped found the Land League, an organization of Irish tenant farmers founded in 1879 to resist the cruelties of landlords. Its campaign prompted the passing, in 1881, of a Land Act that provided a commission to fix fair rents. Joseph Biggar (1828–1890) was the Land League's treasurer.

1. In 1880, at Lough Mask in County Mayo, now part of the Irish Republic, Captain Charles Boycott, acting as agent for the landowner Lord Erne, so angered the tenant farmers that he was ostracized by all his employees (hence the modern term boycott). English soldiers were sent in to perform the household and agricultural tasks, but after poor treatment by Boycott they eventually sided with the tenants.

2. Saintfield in County Down, Northern Ireland, was the site of a battle in 1798 between the British Army and a group of United Irishmen fighting for independence. In 1880, Michael Davitt addressed an audience at Saintfield on the subject of land reform, calling for tenants to become proprietors.

3. Cf. St. Paul's First Epistle to the Corinthians 3.13: "Every man's work shall be made manifest: for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work what it is."

4. Parish in County Fermanagh, Northern Ireland. Collabor: Muldoon plays on the Irish clabaire, meaning an open-mouthed person.

5. Part of a horse's foot. Fetlock: part of a horse's leg.

6. Cf. Job 5.7: "Yet man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward."

where Cummins and his crew have left him, in a straw hat with a fraying brim, 90 while they've moved on to mark out the next haycock.

X

That next haycock already summoning itself from windrow[7] after wind-weary windrow while yet another brings itself to mind in the acrid stink of turpentine. There the image of Lizzie,
Hardy's last servant-girl, reaches out from her dais° platform
95 of salt hay, stretches out an unsunburned arm half in bestowal, half beseechingly, then turns away to appeal to all that spirit-troop of hay-treaders as far as the eye can see, the coil on coil of hay from which, in the taper's mild uproar, 100 they float out across the dark face of the earth, an earth without form, and void.[8]

1998

RITA DOVE
b. 1952

Parsley[1]

1. The Cane[2] Fields

There is a parrot imitating spring
in the palace, its feathers parsley green.
Out of the swamp the cane appears to haunt us, and we cut it down. El General 5 searches for a word; he is all the world

there is. Like a parrot imitating spring, we lie down screaming as rain punches through and we come up green. We cannot speak an R—out of the swamp, the cane appears

10 and then the mountain we call in whispers Katalina.[3]
The children gnaw their teeth to arrowheads.
There is a parrot imitating spring.

7. A row in which mown grass or hay is laid, to be dried by the wind before being made into heaps or cocks.
8. Cf. Genesis 1.1–2: "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep."
1. "On October 2, 1937, Rafael Trujillo (1891–1961), dictator of the Dominican Republic, ordered 20,000 blacks killed because they could not pronounce the letter r in perejil, the Spanish word for parsley" [Dove's note].
2. Sugar cane.
3. I.e., Katarina (since the people "cannot speak an R").

El General has found his word: perejil.
Who says it, lives. He laughs, teeth shining
15 out of the swamp. The cane appears in our dreams, lashed by wind and streaming.

And we lie down. For every drop of blood
there is a parrot imitating spring.
Out of the swamp the cane appears.

2. The Palace

20 The word the general's chosen is parsley.
It is fall, when thoughts turn to love and death; the general thinks of his mother, how she died in the fall and he planted her walking cane at the grave 25 and it flowered, each spring stolidly forming four-star blossoms. The general pulls on his boots, he stomps to her room in the palace, the one without curtains, the one with a parrot

30 in a brass ring. As he paces he wonders
Who can I kill today. And for a moment the little knot of screams is still. The parrot, who has traveled all the way from Australia in an ivory 35 cage, is, coy as a widow, practising spring. Ever since the morning his mother collapsed in the kitchen while baking skull-shaped candies for the Day of the Dead,[4] the general 40 has hated sweets. He orders pastries brought up for the bird; they arrive

dusted with sugar on a bed of lace.
The knot in his throat starts to twitch;
he sees his boots the first day in battle
45 splashed with mud and urine as a soldier falls at his feet amazed—how stupid he looked!—at the sound of artillery. I never thought it would sing
the soldier said, and died. Now

50 the general sees the fields of sugar cane, lashed by rain and streaming.
He sees his mother's smile, the teeth

4. All Souls' Day, November 2. An Aztec festival for the spirits of the dead that coincides with the Catholic calendar. In Latin America and the Caribbean, friends and relatives of the dead process into cemeteries, bearing candles, flowers, and food, all of which may be shaped to resemble symbols of death, such as skulls or coffins.

gnawed to arrowheads. He hears the Haitians sing without R's
55 as they swing the great machetes:
Katalina, they sing, Katalina,

mi madle, mi amol en muelte.[5] God knows his mother was no stupid woman; she could roll an R like a queen. Even 60 a parrot can roll an R! In the bare room the bright feathers arch in a parody of greenery, as the last pale crumbs disappear under the blackened tongue. Someone calls out his name in a voice

65 so like his mother's, a startled tear splashes the tip of his right boot.
My mother, my love in death.
The general remembers the tiny green sprigs men of his village wore in their capes 70 to honor the birth of a son. He will order many, this time, to be killed

for a single, beautiful word.

1983

Dusting[6]

Every day a wilderness—no shade in sight. Beulah patient among knicknacks,
the solarium a rage
5 of light, a grainstorm as her gray cloth brings dark wood to life.

Under her hand scrolls
and crests gleam 10 darker still. What was his name, that silly boy at the fair with the rifle booth? And his kiss and the clear bowl with one bright 15 fish, rippling wound!

5. I.e., mi madre, mi amor en muerte: my mother, my love in death.
6. Part of a book-length narrative, Thomas and Beulah, about which Dove writes in introduction, "These poems tell two sides of a story and are meant to be read in sequence." The main characters are African Americans born at the beginning of the twentieth century.

Not Michael—
something finer. Each dust stroke a deep breath and 20 the canary in bloom.
Wavery memory: home from a dance, the front door blown open and the parlor in snow, she rushed 25 the bowl to the stove, watched as the locket of ice dissolved and he swam free.

That was years before
30 Father gave her up with her name, years before her name grew to mean Promise, then
Desert-in-Peace.[7]
35 Long before the shadow and sun's accomplice, the tree.

Maurice.

1986

The Bistro Styx[8]

She was thinner, with a mannered gauntness
as she paused just inside the double glass doors to survey the room, silvery cape billowing dramatically behind her. What's this,

5 I thought, lifting a hand until she nodded and started across the parquet;
that's when I saw she was dressed all in gray,
from a kittenish cashmere skirt and cowl down to the graphite signature of her shoes.

10 "Sorry I'm late," she panted, though she wasn't, sliding into the chair, her cape

7. Beulah means "married, possessed" in Hebrew. In the Bible, it refers to the promised land.

8. Part of a sonnet sequence in Mother Love, a book-length modernization of the Greek myth of Persephone, the girl who is abducted to the underworld by Hades, and whose mother, Demeter, goddess of agriculture, is so grief-stricken she allows the crops to wither. "Before returning to the surface, the girl eats a few pomegranate seeds, not realizing that anyone who partakes of the food of the dead cannot be wholly restored to the living" [Dove's note]. Persephone spends half of each year with Hades thereafter, and her return to Earth heralds spring. In Dove's version, she resurfaces in modern Paris, in a restaurant named for the Styx, the river in the underworld over which dead souls were ferried.

tossed off in a shudder of brushed steel.
We kissed. Then I leaned back to peruse my blighted child, this wary aristocratic mole.

15 "How's business?" I asked, and hazarded
a motherly smile to keep from crying out:
Are you content to conduct your life
as a cliché and, what's worse,

an anachronism, the brooding artist's demimonde?
20 Near the rue Princesse[9] they had opened a gallery cum° souvenir shop which featured — with fuzzy off-color Monets[1] next to his acrylics, no doubt, plus bearded African drums and the occasional miniature gargoyle from Notre Dame[2] the Great Artist had 25 carved at breakfast with a pocket knife.

"Tourists love us. The Parisians, of course"— she blushed—"are amused, though not without a certain admiration . . ."
The Chateaubriand[3]

arrived on a bone-white plate, smug and absolute 30 in its fragrant crust, a black plug steaming like the heart plucked from the chest of a worthy enemy;
one touch with her fork sent pink juices streaming.

"Admiration for what?" Wine, a bloody Pinot Noir, brought color to her cheeks. "Why, 35 the aplomb with which we've managed to support our Art"—meaning he'd convinced her to pose nude for his appalling canvases, faintly futuristic landscapes strewn with carwrecks and bodies being chewed

40 by rabid cocker spaniels. "I'd like to come by the studio," I ventured, "and see the new stuff."
"Yes, if you wish . . ." A delicate rebuff before the warning: "He dresses all in black now. Me, he drapes in blues and carmine—45 and even though I think it's kinda cute,

in company I tend toward more muted shades."

She paused and had the grace to drop her eyes. She did look ravishing, spookily insubstantial, a lipstick ghost on tissue,
50 or as if one stood on a fifth-floor terrace

9. Street in Paris.
1. Reproductions of work by the French painter Claude Monet (1840–1926).
2. Notre Dame de Paris, the cathedral.
3. Elegant beef dish.

peering through a fringe of rain at Paris'
dreaming chimney pots, each sooty issue wobbling skyward in an ecstatic oracular spiral.

"And he never thinks of food. I wish 55 I didn't have to plead with him to eat. . . ." Fruit and cheese appeared, arrayed on leaf-green dishes.

I stuck with café crème. "This Camembert's so ripe," she joked, "it's practically grown hair," mucking a golden glob complete with parsley sprig 60 onto a heel of bread. Nothing seemed to fill her up: She swallowed, sliced into a pear, speared each tear-shaped lavaliere[4]

and popped the dripping mess into her pretty mouth.
Nowhere the bright tufted fields, weighted

65 vines and sun poured down out of the south.
"But are you happy?" Fearing, I whispered it quickly. "What? You know, Mother"—

she bit into the starry rose of a fig—
"one really should try the fruit here."
70 I've lost her, I thought, and called for the bill.

1995

DANIEL HALL
b. 1952

Love-Letter-Burning

The archivist in us shudders at such cold-blooded destruction of the word, but since we're only human, we commit our sins to the flames. Sauve qui peut;[1] fear makes us bold.

5 Tanka[2] was bolder: when the weather turned from fair to frigid, he saw his way clear to build a sacrificial fire
in which a priceless temple Buddha burned.

4. Jeweled pendant necklace; here, the jewel itself.
1. Save (yourself) if you can (French); also, a panic or stampede.
2. The Zen master Tan-hsai, or Tanka (738–824). "It was so cold at the temple . . . that he took one of the three images from the altar and burned it for firewood. When the horrified chief monk asked him . . . how he dared profane the sacred image of the Buddha, he replied that he was burning it to obtain its sarira (an indestructible substance believed to reside in the ashes of holy men)" [M. Conrad Hyers, Zen and the Comic Spirit]. Not finding sarira in one wooden Buddha, Tanka proposed burning the other two as well.

(The pretext? Simple: what he sought
10 was legendary Essence in the ash.
But if it shows up only in the flesh—?
He grinned and said, Let's burn the lot!)

Believers in the afterlife perform this purifying rite. At last 15 a match is struck: it's done. The past will shed some light, but never keep us warm.

1990

Mangosteens

These are the absolute top of the line,
I was telling him, they even surpass the Jiangsu peach and the McIntosh° — apple
for lusciousness and subtlety. . . . (He frowned:
5 McIntosh. How spelling.) We were eating our way through another kilogram of mangosteens, for which we'd both fallen hard. I'd read that Queen Victoria[3]
(no voluptuary) once offered a reward
10 for an edible mangosteen: I don't know how much, or whether it was ever claimed.
(But not enough, I'd guess, and no, I hope.)
Each thick skin yields to a counter-twist, splits like rotted leather. Inside, snug 15 as a brain in its cranium, half a dozen plump white segments, all but dry, part to the tip of the tongue like lips—they taste
like lips, before they're bitten, a saltiness washed utterly away; crushed, they release 20 a flood of unfathomable sweetness, gone in a trice. He lay near sleep, sunk back against a slope of heaped-up bedding, stroked slantwise by fingers of afternoon sun. McIntosh, he said again, 25 still chewing. I'd also been reading The Spoils of Poynton,[4] so slowly the plot seemed to unfold
in real-time. " 'Things' were of course the sum of the world," James tosses out in that mock-assertive, contradiction-baffling
30 way he has, quotation marks gripped like a tweezers

3. Queen of Great Britain from 1837 to 1901.
4. Novel by the British (American-born) writer Henry James (1843–1916). Mrs. Gereth, a recently widowed collector of beautiful things, is faced with giving up her house, Poynton, to her son, who has inherited it. She attempts unsuccessfully to make a match between him and an intense young woman friend. When Poynton is destroyed by fire, the cause is not given; here, Hall suspects Mrs. Gereth.

lest he soil his hands on things,
as if the only things that mattered
were that homage be paid to English widowhood, or whether another of his young virgins 35 would ever marry. (She wouldn't, but she would,
before the novel closed, endure one shattering embrace, a consummation.) I spent the day sleepwalking the halls of museums, a vessel trembling at the lip. Lunch was a packet 40 of rice cakes and an apple in a garden famed for its beauty, and deemed beautiful for what had been taken away. I can still hear it, still taste it, his quick gasp of astonishment caught in my own mouth. I can feel that house 45 going up with a shudder, a clockwise funnel howling to the heavens, while the things of her world explode or melt or shrivel to ash in the ecstatic emptying. The old woman set the fire herself, she must have, she had to. His letter, 50 tattooed with postmarks, was waiting for me back at the ryokan,[5] had overtaken me at last, half in Chinese, half in hard-won English, purer than I will ever write—

Please don't give up me in tomorrow

55 The skin was bitter. It stained the tongue.

I want with you more time

1993 1996

SEAN O'BRIEN
b. 1952

Cousin Coat

You are my secret coat. You're never dry.
You wear the weight and stink of black canals.
Malodorous companion, we know why
It's taken me so long to see we're pals,
5 To learn why my acquaintance never sniff
Or send me notes to say I stink of stiff.° the dead

But you don't talk, historical bespoke.° made-to-order
You must be worn, be intimate as skin,
And though I never lived what you invoke,

5. Inn (Japanese).

10 At birth I was already buttoned in.
Your clammy itch became my atmosphere,
An air made half of anger, half of fear.

And what you are is what I tried to shed
In libraries with Donne and Henry James.[1]
15 You're here to bear a message from the dead
Whose history's dishonoured with their names.
You mean the North, the poor, and troopers sent
To shoot down those who showed their discontent.[2]

No comfort there for comfy meliorists[3]
20 Grown weepy over Jarrow[4] photographs.
No comfort when the poor the state enlists
Parade before their fathers' cenotaphs.° war memorials
No comfort when the strikers all go back
To see which twenty thousand get the sack.

25 Be with me when they cauterize° the facts. deaden
Be with me to the bottom of the page,
Insisting on what history exacts.
Be memory, be conscience, will and rage,
And keep me cold and honest, cousin coat,
30 So if I lie, I'll know you're at my throat.

1987

Welcome, Major Poet!

We have sat here in too many poetry readings
Wearing the liberal rictus° and cursing our folly, gaping mouth
Watching the lightbulbs die and the curtains rot
And the last flies departing for Scunthorpe.[5]
5 Forgive us. We know all about you.
Autumn gives way to midwinter once more,
As states collapse, as hemlines rise, as we miss both,
And just as our teeth fall discreetly into our handkerchiefs,
Slowly the bones of our co-tormentees will emerge
10 Through their skins. QED and hic jacent.[6]
Except we are seated bolt upright on customized
"Chairs" of the torturers' school. Here it comes,
Any century now, the dread declaration:
And next I shall read something longer. Please
15 Rip out our nails and accept your applause!

1. English (American-born) novelist (1843–1916). John Donne (1572–1631; see pp. 293–322), English poet.
2. Possibly an allusion to the Peterloo Massacre (1819); see note 8, p. 872.
3. Those who believe the world may be made better by human effort.
4. Seaport in southeast England, from which, in the economic depression and high unemployment of the 1930s, a famous series of "hunger marches" headed for London.
5. Industrial town in northeast England. Flies: stagecoach.
6. Here lies (Latin); first words of an epitaph. QED: quod erat demonstrandum; as has been demonstrated (Latin).

Stretch-limo back to the Ritz and ring home:
Bore the arse off your nearest and dearest instead,
Supposing they haven't divorced you already
Or selfishly put themselves under a train.
20 Please call them, at length and at public expense.
Send flunkies for cold Stolichnaya,° an ox — brand of vodka
Or an acre of coke and a thousand-quid° hooker. — costing a thousand pounds
Why not make it three, in a chariot
Flown to your penthouse by eunuchs° on leopards? — harem attendants
25 Whatever you like, only spare us the details of when You were struck by your kinship with Dante and Vergil.[7]
And don't feel obliged to remind us just now
What it was Robert Lowell[8] appeared to be saying—
You'd read him the poem you mean to read us—
30 When the doors of the lift he was in and you weren't Began closing. Just leave us the screams
You could hear as the vehicle descended: Poor Cal.
Up to then he'd been perfectly normal. Ah, well.

2001

VIKRAM SETH
b. 1952

From The Golden Gate[1]

5.1

A week ago, when I had finished
Writing the chapter you've just read
And with avidity undiminished
Was charting out the course ahead,
5 An editor—at a plush party
(Well-wined, -provisioned, speechy, hearty)
Hosted by (long live!) Thomas Cook
Where my Tibetan travel book[2]
Was honored—seized my arm: "Dear fellow,
10 What's your next work?" "A novel . . ." "Great!
We hope that you, dear Mr. Seth—"
". . . In verse," I added. He turned yellow.

7. The greatest Roman poet (70–19 B.C.E.), as Dante (1265–1321) is the greatest Italian poet.
8. American poet (1917–1977; see pp. 1592–1606), known to close friends as Cal (line 32).
1. Strait in western California that connects San Francisco Bay with the Pacific Ocean. Set in San Francisco in the 1980s, this satirical romance consists of 690 sonnets written in the tetrameter verse (see "Versification," p. 2032) and stanza form of the Russian poet Alexander Pushkin's verse novel, Eugene Onegin (1833), which Seth read in the English translation of Sir Charles Johnston (1977).
2. Seth's From Heaven Lake: Travels through Sinkiang and Tibet (1983) won the Thomas Cook Travel Book Award for 1983.

"How marvelously quaint," he said,
And subsequently cut me dead.

5.2

Professor, publisher, and critic
Each voiced his doubts. I felt misplaced.
A writer is a mere arthritic
Among these muscular Gods of Taste.
5 As for that sad blancmange,° a poet— opaque jelly
The world is hard; he ought to know it.
Driveling in rhyme's all very well;
The question is, does spittle sell?
Since staggering home in deep depression,
10 My will's grown weak. My heart is sore.
My lyre is dumb. I have therefore Convoked a morale-boosting session
With a few kind if doubtful friends
Who've asked me to explain my ends.

5.3

How do I justify this stanza?
These feminine rhymes? My wrinkled muse?° source of inspiration
This whole passé extravaganza?
How can I (careless of time) use
5 The dusty bread molds of Onegin
In the brave bakery of Reagan?[3]
The loaves will surely fail to rise
Or else go stale before my eyes.
The truth is, I can't justify it.
10 But as no shroud of critical terms
Can save my corpse from boring worms,
I may as well have fun and try it.
If it works, good; and if not, well,
A theory won't postpone its knell.

5.4

Why, asks a friend, attempt tetrameter?
Because it once was noble, yet
Capers before the proud pentameter,
Tyrant of English. I regret
5 To see this marvelous swift meter
Demean its heritage, and peter
Into mere Hudibrastic tricks,[4]
Unapostolic[5] knacks and knicks.

3. Ronald Reagan (1911–2004), governor of California 1967–75, U.S. president 1981–89.
4. In the style of Samuel Butler's mock-heroic satirical poem, Hudibras (1663).
5. Unorthodox (literally, in a style of which Christ's twelve apostles would have disapproved).

But why take all this quite so badly?
10 I would not, had I world and time[6]
To wait for reason, rhythm, rhyme
To reassert themselves, but sadly
The time is not remote when I
Will not be here to wait. That's why.

5.5

Reader, enough of this apology;
But spare me if I think it best,
Before I tether my monology,° monologue
To stake a stanza to suggest
5 You spend some unfilled day of leisure
By that original spring of pleasure:
Sweet-watered, fluent, clear, light, blithe
(This homage merely pays a tithe° small part
Of what in joy and inspiration
10 It gave me once and does not cease
To give me)—Pushkin's masterpiece
In Johnston's luminous translation:
Eugene Onegin—like champagne
Its effervescence stirs my brain.

1986

GARY SOTO
b. 1952

The Soup

The lights off, the clock glowing 2:10,
And Molina is at the table drawing what he thinks is soup
And its carrots rising through a gray broth.

He adds meat and peppers it with pencil markings.
5 The onion has gathered the peas in its smile.
The surface is blurred with the cold oils squeezed from a lime.

He adds hominy and potato that bob
In a current of pork fat, from one rim to the other,
Crashing into the celery that has canoed such a long way.

10 Spoon handle that is a plank an ant climbs.
Saucer that is the slipped disk of a longhorn.
Napkin that is shredded into a cupful of snow.

1978

6. Cf. Andrew Marvell, "To His Coy Mistress," line 1 (p. 478).

Not Knowing

By then, by the time my brother
Was getting married, weeks before the old
Apartment was pulled down,
The evenings were warm and the sounds of 5 Freight trains absorbed by three oleanders,° evergreen shrubs
Whipped by wind and iron clanging.
By then, by the time I was nineteen
And the crickets were hauling their armor
Into the weeds and dusty bushes,
10 I was thinking that I would have to read more.
I had to put together the meaning of our neighbors
Fighting in bed, then loving in bed from 3:30 to 4:00.
I would have to read more. My other neighbor
Had painted his porch light blue, and the first 15 Black family on our college-poor street
Were so friendly that they disturbed my views
About trust and mistrust. And I was stymied
When my brother and I tried
To remove the refrigerator
20 Down a narrow flight of steps.
Now it was stuck, lodged between
The walls, an absurd physics for the wrecking crew
To solve. The beast of machinery would start up
And the old apartment would come down
25 The weekend my brother would pin
A carnation to his lapel, the ruffle of petal
Perfuming the air as he walked down the aisle.
By then, by the time my brother was ready
And the refrigerator was leaking
30 Its gray liquids and gases,
I would sit my sorrow on a lawn,
Flattening the grass with the heel of my palm.
The grass springing back from this kind of pressure,
Another physics I couldn't figure on paper
35 Or a blackboard of low math. The spin
Of light and wind
And the residue
Of an exhausted star told me nothing.
After my brother was gone
40 I sat with a book on the lawn,
The evening blood-red in the west
And my palm pressing the balance of solitary grass,
The world of unknowable forces stirring
Every live and dead tree.

1995

BRAD LEITHAUSER
b. 1953

The Buried Graves

From the pier, at dusk, the dim
Billowing arms of kelp
Seem the tops of trees, as though
Not long ago
5 A summer wood stood here, before a dam
Was built, a valley flooded.

Such a forest would release
Its color only slowly,
And the leafy branches sway, as they'd
10 More lightly swayed
Under a less distant sun and far less
Even weather. Now, deeper down,

Those glimmers of coral might
Be the lots of some hard-luck
15 Town, or—depositing on the dead
A second bed—
A submerged cemetery. . . . To this mute,
Envisioned, birdless wood would Come a kind of autumn, a tame

20 Sea-season, with foliage tumbling
Through a weighty, trancelike fall;
And come, as well,
Soon in the emptying fullness of time,
A mild but an endless winter.

1985

In Minako Wada's House

In old Minako Wada's house
Everything has its place,
And mostly out of sight:
Bedding folded away
5 All day, brought down
From the shelf at night,

Tea things underneath
Low tea table and tablecloth—
And sliding screen doors,
10 Landscape-painted, that hide

Her clothes inside a wash
Of mountains. Here, the floors

Are a clean-fitting mosaic,
Mats of a texture like
15 A broom's; and in a niche
In the tearoom wall
Is a shrine to all of her Ancestors, before which

She sets each day
20 A doll-sized cup of tea,
A doll-sized bowl of rice.
She keeps a glass jar
Of crickets that are fed fish
Shavings, an eggplant slice,

25 And whose hushed chorus,
Like the drowsy toss
Of a baby's rattle, moves in
On so tranquil a song
It's soon no longer heard.
30 The walls are thin

In Minako Wada's little house,
Open to every lifting voice
On the street—by day, the cries
Of the children, at night
35 Those excited, sweet,
Reiterated goodbyes

Of men full of beer who now
Must hurry home. Just to Wake in the night inside this nest,
40 Late, the street asleep (day done,
Day not yet begun), is what
Perhaps she loves best.

1985

Old Bachelor Brother

Here from his prominent but thankfully uncentral position at the head of the church—
a flanking member of the groom's large party—
he stands and waits to watch the women march

5 up the wide aisle, just the way they did at last night's long and leaden-joked rehearsal.

Only this time, it's all changed. There's now a crowd, of course, and walls of lit stained glass, and Purcell[1]

ringing from the rented organist, 10 and yet the major difference, the one that hits his throat as a sort of smoky thirst, is how, so far away, the church's main doors are flung back, uncovering a square of sun that streams into the narthex,° so that covered walkway

15 the women who materialize there do so in blinding silhouette, and these are not the women he has helloed

and kissed, and who have bored, ignored, or teased him, but girls—whose high, garlanded hair goes haloed
20 by the noon-light . . . The years have dropped from them.

One by one they're bodied forth, edged with flame,
as new as flame, destined to part the sea of faces on each side, and approaching him
in all their passionate anonymity.

1990

GJERTRUD SCHNACKENBERG
b. 1953

Darwin[1] in 1881

Sleepless as Prospero back in his bedroom
In Milan, with all his miracles
Reduced to sailors' tales,[2]
He sits up in the dark. The islands loom.
5 His seasickness upwells,
Silence creeps by in memory as it crept
By him on water,[3] while the sailors slept,
From broken eggs and vacant tortoise shells.
His voyage around the cape of middle age
10 Comes, with a feat of insight, to a close,
The same way Prospero's
Ended before he left the stage
To be led home across the blue-white sea,
When he had spoken of the clouds and globe,
15 Breaking his wand, and taking off his robe:[4]
Knowledge increases unreality.

1. Henry Purcell (ca. 1659–1695), English composer.

1. The English naturalist Charles Darwin (1809–1882), who developed a theory of evolution.

2. In Shakespeare's The Tempest, the magician Prospero is the usurped and exiled duke of Milan; at the play's end, he is restored to his dukedom.

3. Cf. The Tempest 1.2.395: "This music crept by me upon the waters."

4. Allusion to Prospero's words: "the great globe

He quickly dresses.
Form wavers like his shadow on the stair
As he descends, in need of air
20 To cure his dizziness,
Down past the ship-sunk emptiness
Of grownup children's rooms and hallways where
The family portraits stare,
All haunted by each other's likenesses.

25 Outside, the orchard and a piece of moon
Are islands, he an island as he walks,
Brushing against weed stalks.
By hook and plume
The seeds gathering on his trouser legs
30 Are archipelagoes, like nests he sees Shadowed in branching, ramifying trees,
Each with unique expressions in its eggs.
Different islands conjure
Different beings; different beings call 35 From different isles. And after all
His scrutiny of Nature
All he can see
Is how it will grow small, fade, disappear,
A coastline fading from a traveler
40 Aboard a survey ship. Slowly,
As coasts depart,
Nature had left behind a naturalist
Bound for a place where species don't exist,
Where no emergence has a counterpart.

45 He's heard from friends
About the other night, the banquet hall
Ringing with bravos—like a curtain call,
He thinks, when the performance ends,
Failing to summon from the wings
50 An actor who had lost his taste for verse,
Having beheld, in larger theaters,
Much greater banquet vanishings
Without the quaint device and thunderclap
Required in Act 3.[5]
55 He wrote, Let your indulgence set me free,[6]
To the Academy, and took a nap
Beneath a London Daily tent,
Then puttered on his hothouse walk
Watching his orchids beautifully stalk
60 Their unreturning paths, where each descendant
Is the last—
Their inner staircases itself, / Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve; / And, like this insubstantial pageant faded, / Leave not a rack behind" (4.1.153–55) and "But this rough magic / I here abjure. . . . I'll break my staff" (5.1.50–54).

5. Prospero conjures up a banquet and then makes it disappear with thunder and (as in the stage direction) "a quaint device" (3.3.52).

6. Prospero's final speech, the last line of the play (Epilogue 20). Academy: The Royal Society for the Improving of Natural Knowledge.

Haunted by vanished insect faces
So tiny, so intolerably vast.
65 And, while they gave his proxy the award,
He dined in Downe[7] and stayed up rather late
For backgammon with his beloved mate,
Who reads his books and is, quite frankly, bored.

Now, done with beetle jaws and beaks of gulls
70 And bivalve hinges, now, utterly done,
One miracle remains, and only one.
An ocean swell of sickness rushes, pulls,
He leans against the fence
And lights a cigarette and deeply draws,
75 Done with fixed laws,
Done with experiments
Within his greenhouse heaven where
His offspring, Frank, for half the afternoon
Played, like an awkward angel, his bassoon
80 Into the humid air
So he could tell
If sound would make a Venus's-flytrap close.
And, done for good with scientific prose,
That raging hell
85 Of tortured grammars writhing on their stakes,
He'd turned to his memoirs, chuckling to write
About his boyhood in an upright
Home: a boy preferring gartersnakes
To schoolwork, a lazy, strutting liar
90 Who quite provoked her aggravated look,
Shushed in the drawing room behind her book,
His bossy sister itching with desire
To tattletale—yes, that was good.
But even then, much like the conjurer
95 Grown cranky with impatience to abjure
All his gigantic works and livelihood
In order to immerse
Himself in tales where he could be the man
In Once upon a time there was a man,

100 He'd quite by chance beheld the universe:
A disregarded game of chess
Between two love-dazed heirs
Who fiddle with the tiny pairs
Of statues in their hands,[8] while numberless
105 Abstract unseen
Combinings on the silent board remain
Unplayed forever when they leave the game
To turn, themselves, into a king and queen.
Now, like the coming day,
110 Inhaled smoke illuminates his nerves.

7. Darwin's home.
8. That is, playing chess, as in The Tempest 5.1.173 ff.

He turns, taking the sandwalk as it curves
Back to the yard, the house, the entrance way
Where, not to waken her,

He softly shuts the door,
115 And leans against it for a spell before
He climbs the stairs, holding the banister,
Up to their room: there
Emma sleeps, moored
In illusion, blown past the storm he conjured
120 With his book,[9] into a harbor
Where it all comes clear,
Where island beings leap from shape to shape
As to escape
Their terrifying turns to disappear.
125 He lies down on the quilt,
He lies down like a fabulous-headed
Fossil in a vanished riverbed,
In ocean drifts, in canyon floors, in silt,
In lime, in deepening blue ice,
130 In cliffs obscured as clouds gather and float;
He lies down in his boots and overcoat,
And shuts his eyes.

1982

Supernatural Love

My father at the dictionary-stand
Touches the page to fully understand
The lamplit answer, tilting in his hand

His slowly scanning magnifying lens,
5 A blurry, glistening circle he suspends
Above the word "Carnation." Then he bends

So near his eyes are magnified and blurred,
One finger on the miniature word,
As if he touched a single key and heard

10 A distant, plucked, infinitesimal string,
"The obligation due to every thing
That's smaller than the universe." I bring

My sewing needle close enough that I
Can watch my father through the needle's eye,
15 As through a lens ground for a butterfly

9. Prospero's book of magic helped him conjure a tempest. Darwin's book On the Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection (1859) was equally powerful, culturally and scientifically.

Who peers down flower-hallways toward a room
Shadowed and fathomed as this study's gloom
Where, as a scholar bends above a tomb

To read what's buried there, he bends to pore
20 Over the Latin blossom. I am four,
I spill my pins and needles on the floor

Trying to stitch "Beloved" X by X.
My dangerous, bright needle's point connects Myself illiterate to this perfect text

25 I cannot read. My father puzzles why
It is my habit to identify Carnations as "Christ's flowers," knowing I

Can give no explanation but "Because."
Word-roots blossom in speechless messages
30 The way the thread behind my sampler does

Where following each X I awkward move
My needle through the word whose root is love.
He reads, "A pink variety of Clove, Carnatio, the Latin, meaning flesh."

35 As if the bud's essential oils brush
Christ's fragrance through the room, the iron-fresh

Odor carnations have floats up to me,
A drifted, secret, bitter ecstasy,
The stems squeak in my scissors, Child, it's me,

40 He turns the page to "Clove" and reads aloud:
"The clove, a spice, dried from a flower-bud."
Then twice, as if he hasn't understood,

He reads, "From French, for clou, meaning a nail."
He gazes, motionless. "Meaning a nail."
45 The incarnation blossoms, flesh and nail,

I twist my threads like stems into a knot
And smooth "Beloved," but my needle caught
Within the threads, Thy blood so dearly bought,

The needle strikes my finger to the bone.
50 I lift my hand, it is myself I've sewn,
The flesh laid bare, the threads of blood my own,

I lift my hand in startled agony
And call upon his name, "Daddy daddy"—
My father's hand touches the injury

55 As lightly as he touched the page before,
Where incarnation bloomed from roots that bore
The flowers I called Christ's when I was four.

1985

LOUISE ERDRICH
b. 1954

The Butcher's Wife

1

Once, my braids swung heavy as ropes.
Men feared them like the gallows.
Night fell
When I combed them out.
5 No one could see me in the dark.

Then I stood still
Too long and the braids took root.
I wept, so helpless.
The braids tapped deep and flourished.

10 A man came by with an ox on his shoulders.
He yoked it to my apron
And pulled me from the ground.
From that time on I wound the braids around my head
So that my arms would be free to tend him.

2

15 He could lift a grown man by the belt with his teeth.
In a contest, he'd press a whole hog, a side of beef.
He loved his highballs, his herring, and the attentions of women.
He died pounding his chest with no last word for anyone.

The gin vessels in his face broke and darkened. I traced them
20 Far from that room into Bremen on the Sea.[1]
The narrow streets twisted down to the piers.
And far off, in the black, rocking water, the lights of trawlers
Beckoned, like the heart's uncertain signals,
Faint, and final.

1984

1. Germany's oldest seaport, today the second largest after Hamburg.

I Was Sleeping Where the Black Oaks Move

We watched from the house
as the river grew, helpless and terrible in its unfamiliar body.
Wrestling everything into it,
5 the water wrapped around trees
until their life-hold was broken.
They went down, one by one,
and the river dragged off their covering.

Nests of the herons, roots washed to bones,
10 snags of soaked bark on the shoreline:
a whole forest pulled through the teeth of the spillway. Trees surfacing singly, where the river poured off into arteries for fields below the reservation.

15 When at last it was over, the long removal,
they had all become the same dry wood.
We walked among them, the branches
whitening in the raw sun.
Above us drifted herons,
20 alone, hoarse-voiced, broken,
settling their beaks among the hollows.

Grandpa said, These are the ghosts of the tree people,
moving above us, unable to take their rest.

Sometimes now, we dream our way back to the heron dance.
25 Their long wings are bending the air into circles through which they fall.
They rise again in shifting wheels.
How long must we live in the broken figures their necks make, narrowing the sky.

1984

Birth

When they were wild
When they were not yet human
When they could have been anything,
I was on the other side ready with milk to lure them,
5 And their father, too, each name a net in his hands.

1989

CAROL ANN DUFFY
b. 1955

Warming Her Pearls

Next to my own skin, her pearls. My mistress
bids me wear them, warm them, until evening when I'll brush her hair. At six, I place them round her cool, white throat. All day I think of her,

5 resting in the Yellow Room, contemplating silk or taffeta, which gown tonight? She fans herself whilst I work willingly, my slow heat entering each pearl. Slack on my neck, her rope.

She's beautiful. I dream about her 10 in my attic bed; picture her dancing with tall men, puzzled by my faint, persistent scent beneath her French perfume, her milky stones.

I dust her shoulders with a rabbit's foot,
watch the soft blush seep through her skin
15 like an indolent sigh. In her looking-glass my red lips part as though I want to speak.

Full moon. Her carriage brings her home. I see her every movement in my head. . . . Undressing, taking off her jewels, her slim hand reaching 20 for the case, slipping naked into bed, the way

she always does. . . . And I lie here awake, knowing the pearls are cooling even now in the room where my mistress sleeps. All night
I feel their absence and I burn.

1993

Prayer

Some days, although we cannot pray, a prayer
utters itself. So, a woman will lift her head from the sieve of her hands and stare at the minims° sung by a tree, a sudden gift. short notes

5 Some nights, although we are faithless, the truth enters our hearts, that small familiar pain;
then a man will stand stock-still, hearing his youth in the distant Latin chanting of a train.

Pray for us now. Grade I piano scales[1] 10 console the lodger looking out across a Midlands[2] town. Then dusk, and someone calls a child's name as though they named their loss.

Darkness outside. Inside, the radio's prayer—
Rockall. Malin. Dogger. Finisterre.[3]

1993

Anne Hathaway[4]

"Item I gyve unto my wief my second best bed . . ."
(from Shakespeare's will)

The bed we loved in was a spinning world
of forests, castles, torchlight, clifftops, seas where he would dive for pearls. My lover's words were shooting stars which fell to earth as kisses
5 on these lips; my body now a softer rhyme to his, now echo, assonance; his touch
a verb dancing in the centre of a noun.
Some nights, I dreamed he'd written me, the bed
a page beneath his writer's hands. Romance
10 and drama played by touch, by scent, by taste.
In the other bed, the best, our guests dozed on, dribbling their prose. My living laughing love—
I hold him in the casket of my widow's head
as he held me upon that next best bed.

1999

Little Red-Cap

At childhood's end, the houses petered out into playing fields, the factory, allotments° — vegetable plots kept, like mistresses, by kneeling married men,
the silent railway line, the hermit's caravan,
5 till you came at last to the edge of the woods.
It was there that I first clapped eyes on the wolf.

He stood in a clearing, reading his verse out loud
in his wolfy drawl, a paperback in his hairy paw, red wine staining his bearded jaw. What big ears
10 he had! What big eyes he had! What teeth!
In the interval, I made quite sure he spotted me,
sweet sixteen, never been, babe, waif, and bought me a drink,

1. Musical exercises for beginners.
2. Central counties in England.
3. Coastal regions named in British weather forecasts.
4. William Shakespeare's wife (1557?–1623).

my first. You might ask why. Here's why. Poetry.
The wolf, I knew, would lead me deep into the woods,
15 away from home, to a dark tangled thorny place lit by the eyes of owls. I crawled in his wake, my stockings ripped to shreds, scraps of red from my blazer snagged on twig and branch, murder clues. I lost both shoes but got there, wolf's lair, better beware. Lesson one that night, 20 breath of the wolf in my ear, was the love poem.

I clung till dawn to his thrashing fur, for what little girl doesn't dearly love a wolf?[5]
Then I slid from between his heavy matted paws and went in search of a living bird—white dove—

25 which flew, straight, from my hands to his open mouth.
One bite, dead. How nice, breakfast in bed, he said, licking his chops. As soon as he slept, I crept to the back of the lair, where a whole wall was crimson, gold, aglow with books.
Words, words were truly alive on the tongue, in the head,
30 warm, beating, frantic, winged; music and blood.

But then I was young—and it took ten years in the woods to tell that a mushroom stoppers the mouth of a buried corpse, that birds are the uttered thought of trees, that a greying wolf 35 howls the same old song at the moon, year in, year out, season after season, same rhyme, same reason. I took an axe to a willow to see how it wept. I took an axe to a salmon to see how it leapt. I took an axe to the wolf as he slept, one chop, scrotum to throat, and saw 40 the glistening, virgin white of my grandmother's bones.

I filled his old belly with stones. I stitched him up.
Out of the forest I come with my flowers, singing, all alone.

1999

DIONISIO D. MARTINEZ
b. 1956

In a Duplex Near the San Andreas Fault[1]

When she tells him about the lump in her breast, he kisses her on the shoulder for the first time—a natural reflex twenty-some years in the making. Suddenly,

5. Cf. Sylvia Plath, "Daddy," line 48 (p. 1841).
1. An active strike-slip fault extending from San Francisco to southern California.

their entire vocabulary revolves around benign
5 and malignant—words reserved for these occasions—though they will say very little now, then nothing for a long time. His hands are just as pale and nearly as fragile as rice paper, but she's not familiar with rice paper

10 and what she wants most desperately now is a point of reference. Calla lilies bloom like some glorious, abandoned music out on the lawn.

She takes one of his hands and thinks of the spathe, which has the responsibility 15 of being leaf and petal, content and shape: without it there would be no calla lily to remember, nothing to see when she closes

her eyes and places his hand on her breast.

1995

From What the Men Talk About When the Women Leave the Room

Stieglitz[2]

The room itself. The women. The absence of women in the room. What the absence of women does to a room. The sound of all those women getting up and leaving; all of them at once, like wild 5 birds or hunger. How the world can be conquered if only . . . Just don't tell the women.

What the absence of women will do to men eventually. Fears. Men talk about fears, bad dreams, women leaving, the room swelling with 10 the absence of women. Bad dreams have a way of walking in the room when the women leave.

Each dream is an afterimage of a woman leaving.

1995

2. Alfred Stieglitz (1864–1946), American photographer; husband of the artist Georgia O'Keeffe.

LI-YOUNG LEE
b. 1957

Persimmons

In sixth grade Mrs. Walker slapped the back of my head and made me stand in the corner for not knowing the difference
5 between persimmon and precision.
How to choose

persimmons. This is precision.
Ripe ones are soft and brown-spotted.
Sniff the bottoms. The sweet one 10 will be fragrant. How to eat:
put the knife away, lay down newspaper.
Peel the skin tenderly, not to tear the meat.
Chew the skin, suck it,
and swallow. Now, eat 15 the meat of the fruit,
so sweet,
all of it, to the heart.

Donna undresses, her stomach is white.
In the yard, dewy and shivering 20 with crickets, we lie naked, face-up, face-down.
I teach her Chinese.
Crickets: chiu chiu. Dew: I've forgotten.
Naked: I've forgotten.
25 Ni, wo: you and me.
I part her legs,
remember to tell her
she is beautiful as the moon.

Other words
30 that got me into trouble were fight and fright, wren and yarn.
Fight was what I did when I was frightened,
fright was what I felt when I was fighting.
Wrens are small, plain birds,
35 yarn is what one knits with.
Wrens are soft as yarn.
My mother made birds out of yarn.
I loved to watch her tie the stuff;
a bird, a rabbit, a wee man.

40 Mrs. Walker brought a persimmon to class and cut it up
so everyone could taste

a Chinese apple. Knowing it wasn't ripe or sweet, I didn't eat
45 but watched the other faces.

My mother said every persimmon has a sun inside, something golden, glowing,
warm as my face.

Once, in the cellar, I found two wrapped in newspaper,
50 forgotten and not yet ripe.
I took them and set both on my bedroom windowsill,
where each morning a cardinal
sang, The sun, the sun.

Finally understanding 55 he was going blind,
my father sat up all one night
waiting for a song, a ghost.
I gave him the persimmons,
swelled, heavy as sadness,
60 and sweet as love.

This year, in the muddy lighting of my parents' cellar, I rummage, looking for something I lost.
My father sits on the tired, wooden stairs,
65 black cane between his knees,
hand over hand, gripping the handle.
He's so happy that I've come home.
I ask how his eyes are, a stupid question.
All gone, he answers.

70 Under some blankets, I find a box.
Inside the box I find three scrolls.
I sit beside him and untie
three paintings by my father:
Hibiscus leaf and a white flower.
75 Two cats preening.
Two persimmons, so full they want to drop from the cloth.

He raises both hands to touch the cloth, asks, Which is this?

This is persimmons, Father.

80 Oh, the feel of the wolftail on the silk,
the strength, the tense
precision in the wrist.
I painted them hundreds of times eyes closed. These I painted blind.
85 Some things never leave a person:
scent of the hair of one you love,

the texture of persimmons,
in your palm, the ripe weight.

1986

Out of Hiding

Someone said my name in the garden,

while I grew smaller in the spreading shadow of the peonies,

grew larger by my absence to another,
5 grew older among the ants, ancient under the opening heads of the flowers,

new to myself, and stranger.

When I heard my name again, it sounded far,
like the name of the child next door,
10 or a favorite cousin visiting for the summer,

while the quiet seemed my true name,
a near and inaudible singing
born of hidden ground.

Quiet to quiet, I called back.
15 And the birds declared my whereabouts all morning.

2001

CYNTHIA ZARIN
b. 1959

The Ant Hill

Sand pyramid, size of a child, each September
  it was moved thirty feet back from the veranda's longest shadow, which stopped in its daily

violet slope near the withering yew. Moved gently, 5   with a wide flat shovel. From the kitchen, the wrecked hill was a slag heap, its mussel

color germinating in rain to brown, to velvet, to mica, so that after a time a reflection shone from it and scattered, and each June, Mother said aloud

10 that it seemed the house moved closer to the hill,
even though the hill was long moved back.
For the little girls who watched, who heard,

each tremble-leg was a signal in their own patois,
a wave good-bye, the whole a black bead curtain 15 like the one at Mrs. Hennessey's, where sometimes, of an afternoon, they were left—her doorway with its there, not there, its speechless partings, the dark italic hedge too small to read. A decade of exile: of school, of being sent to bed, of being 20 told to put the book down, as every year the ants were wrenched from their own tenacious fondness for the veranda pilings, for the black blossoms of old tires that clung to them like clematis until—a moving picture of transit—the ants crossed over again

25 for their mysterious attendance on the flagstones, the hill again grown pointed, night-colored, earth turned to mirror-water, a satellite by the fence post that was flattened, excavated, removed.

And then the white house was a flipped coin, 30 by and by deserted, its face showing not the sun but the moon, and the girls who drew with a stick under the yew and learned their letters now stood under its cracked limbs to bicker, to divide the world between them to say what Mother 35 said, to speak too subtly, about the ant hill now taller than the pilings, the veranda turned violet as its shadow.

1993

Song

My heart, my dove, my snail, my sail, my milktooth, shadow, sparrow, fingernail, flower-cat and blossom-hedge, mandrake

root now put to bed, moonshell, sea-swell, 5 manatee, emerald shining back at me,
nutmeg, quince, tea leaf and bone, zither, cymbal, xylophone; paper, scissors, then there's stone—Who doesn't come through the door to get home?

1993

LAVINIA GREENLAW
b. 1962

Skin Full

I laugh till my jaw unhinges,
we hold me in with ribboning fingers.
Moderation in moderation. Who said that?
It makes extraordinary sense to me.

5 You say that life is a three-legged race.
They show us the door and we have some difficulty,
bound like that from thigh to ankle.
The street is a blanket. We will sleep with you on your front, me on your back.

10 The night will be endless and we will be endless, layer on layer, infinitely warm.
I sing as we lie shoulder to shoulder and tell you there is no such thing as anything that is not a small circle. Now it is morning.

15 Can the bones we broke out of be mended?
My eyes . . . The sun picks over their embers.

1997

What's Going On

The demolition crew are petulant.
Swinging the ball, they could lay bets and lose.
We cannot help but stand in the street,
smile up at the light where half the roof
5 has fallen away and the sky comes at us from all three sides through a couple of windows, surprisingly large and somehow intact.

1997

A World Where News Travelled Slowly

It could take from Monday to Thursday and three horses. The ink was unstable, the characters° cramped, the paper tore where it creased. letters
Stained with the leather and sweat of its journey,
5 the envelope absorbed each climatic shift,
as well as the salt and grease of the rider who handed it over with a four-day chance that by now things were different and while the head had to listen, the heart could wait.

10 Semaphore[1] was invented at a time of revolution;
the judgement of swing in a vertical arm.
News travelled letter by letter, along a chain of towers,
each built within telescopic distance of the next.
The clattering mechanics of the six-shutter telegraph
15 still took three men with all their variables added to those of light and weather, to read, record and pass the message on.

Now words are faster, smaller, harder
. . . we're almost talking in one another's arms.
20 Coded and squeezed, what chance has my voice to reach your voice unaltered and to leave no trace?
Nets tighten across the sky and the sea bed.
When London made contact with New York,
there were such fireworks, City Hall caught light.
25 It could have burned to the ground.

1997

GLYN MAXWELL
b. 1962

From Letters to Edward Thomas[1]

for Derek Walcott[2]

*

Poem to Mr Thomas and Mr Frost,
Created by a dandelion you passed
As you in talk about a stanza crossed

1. Signaling apparatus, consisting of an upright post with a moveable arm or arms with lanterns attached, for use (especially on railways) by day or night.

1. (Philip) Edward Thomas (1878–1917; see pp. 1253–56), whose friendship with the American poet Robert Frost (1874–1963; see pp. 1227–45) was of central importance to the lives and work of both men.

2. West Indian poet (b. 1930; see pp. 1820–29).

Half Herefordshire,[3] till you sat at last 5 In silence. I'm the dandelion that saw
Two aspens shake and shed in a quick wind,
And tried to loose her own leaves to the floor
Like they did and did manage in the end,
When they were both long gone in the great storm.[4]
10 One to the west and one to the east, away
Towards the blood-commander in the dawn
And all his soldiers, pink becoming grey.
And you won't see this, if you live as long
As what you sent me: "As the team's head-brass"[5]
15 It starts but isn't titled. If I'm wrong
And your great hands one day are holding these Dandelion hairs,
The storm would not have come, the trees have kept
Their ground, and through the hearts of all the shires
20 Would Mr Thomas and Mr Frost have stepped
And war like a rough sky
Been overlooked in talk, and blown on by.

*

Poem for Mr Edward Eastaway,[6]
Who lives here care of me, so no one knows
25 His name is Rumplestiltskin[7] and by day
He rips your verse to pieces in great prose.
By night he turns his prose to poetry
Because a poet told him to who saw
A mighty fine recruit for poverty
30 And wrote the line that opened his front door.
They have rejected Edward Eastaway
Again: the letter came this afternoon.
One knows precisely what a fool will say
Somehow. We've many stars to the one moon
35 In our night sky, but all that makes a face
Of that recurring rock is the one sun
It likes, without which it must find its place
To hide behind, or make believe it's gone.
Edward Eastaway,
40 Whose name that isn't and whose time it ain't,
Who's living here or was just yesterday,
Or in Wales, Wiltshire, Oxfordshire or Kent,[8]
The rumour's that you crossed
The Channel. Stanza-break, sighs Mr Frost.

*

3. English county on the Welsh border.
4. World War I, also known as the Great War (1914–18).
5. The opening words of one of Thomas's poems (see p. 1255).
6. Thomas published his first poems under the pseudonym Edward Eastaway.
7. Malevolent dwarf in traditional fairy tale collected and transcribed from oral sources by the brothers Jacob and Wilhelm Grimm.
8. The latter three are English counties southeast of Herefordshire—stepping-stones toward the English channel (line 44).

45 Dear Father Thomas, every Christmas Eve
Good children of the world are quite as shy
As I am to write Dear and then believe
For twenty lines our goodness could be why
It's worth our time. Our faith turns to this thread
50 That shuttles downward while the mischievous
Need nothing but a coalsack by the bed,
And wake to the same carols. Each of us
Is writing, Edward, asking the great space
Below us what is missing still, what gift
55 Will make us whole again. We fold and place
Our answers in the chimney and are left
These pink embarrassed authors by the fire.
We all talk tommy-rot° we understand. nonsense
Somebody coughs, politely to enquire
60 Did they not kick a ball on No Man's Land
Two years ago?[9] "That's so,"
Smiles Peter, adding: "Not tonight, I fear."
And I hear George's voice say: "Cricket, though,
So Edward gets a knock."° But he's not here, opportunity to bat
65 George, he's where you are,
Restless tonight like all good children are.

*

One dead was sent a Valentine, so both
Were spared their lover's blushes. What I write
Is on its way nowhere, is less than breath, 70 So might be anything, as nothing might.
It's that there's nothing now that doesn't seem
As if it's where it ended. All the paths
Beyond this word or this become the same:
Thickets, or a handing-down of deaths
75 As by a school official, not a teacher,
A visiting official by one gate.
Now all the hope there is is in a picture
Of P. E. Thomas gone, because my fate
Is never to foresee, believed or no.
80 Is to be wrong. These words are packing up
And going. Words I mean you not to know
Don't see why they should move in any step
I fix them with. So go,
You English words,[1] while he's alive, and blow
85 Through all of him so Englishmen will know
You loved him and who cares how long ago,
And hide him from the light
He'll strike and hold until his clay's° alight. clay pipe

*

9. Preparing the men of his company for their part in the Allied assault on July 1, 1916, the first day of the Battle of the Somme, Captain Neville of the 8th East Surrey Regiment gave each of his four platoons a football and offered a prize for the first platoon to reach the German trenches. No Man's Land: unoccupied area between opposing armies.

1. Edward Thomas, "Words," lines 10–11: "Choose me / You English words?"

Dear Edward, when the war was over, you
90 Were standing where a wood had been, and though
Nothing was left for you to name or view
You waited till new trees had hidden you.
Then you came home and in a forest called
The Times your name was found, and not among 95 The officers but in a clearing filled
With verses, yours. Then your new name was sung
With all the old. And children leafing through
And old men staring and their daughters stilled
With admiration: all this happened too,
100 Or had already by the time you pulled
The book I hide this in from your top shelf
And blew its dust away. The year is what,
1930? '40? Please yourself,
But do remember as you smile and sit
105 That everything's foreseen
By a good reader, as I think I am
On David's Day of 1917,
Reaching for blotting-paper.[2] Now's the time
To fold the work away
110 And find me on this bleak or brilliant day.

*

Choose me, Sie deutsche Worte.[3] This is the first
Of all the letters you will never read,
Edward. I was shy in my own west
Always, so you never read a word
115 I sent, but this is written with as clear
A mind as has been opened like a shell.
"Greatly loved in the battery,"° writes this dear — artillery unit
Major Lushington, who says you fell
In early morning with some battle won
120 And all the soldiers dancing. You were loved
In the battery and in the morning sun
Brought out the blessed clay, when something moved
Like cloud perhaps. The Major asked us round
To tell us you knew nothing. That your book
125 Of Shakespeare's Sonnets that they knelt and found
Was strangely creased and the clay didn't break[4]
Which Helen[5] gave your son,
And Robert's North of Boston[6] in your kit
They gave to me, not needing it. And when 130 They reached you you were not marked, not hit,
Breeze blowing in your hair,
Chosen. What had stopped your heart was air.

2. Spongy paper for absorbing ink when writing. David's Day: March 1, feast day of St. David, patron saint of Wales.
3. You German words (German). See note 1 directly above.
4. Thomas was killed by the blast of a German shell on Easter Monday 1917. His body was unmarked and his clay pipe unbroken, but the vacuum created by the blast creased the pages of his book and stopped the watch in his pocket.
5. Thomas's wife (1877–1967).
6. Collection of Frost's poems (1914), favorably reviewed by Thomas.

*

Dear Edward, now there's no one at the end
There's nothing I can't say. Some eight or nine 135 I have by heart. Your farmer-poet friend[7]
Is flying around the world on a fine line
That starts in you, or grows out from the days
You passed together. England is the same,
Cheering to order, set in its new ways
140 It thinks are immemorial. The Somme[8]
Has trees beside it but some shovelwork
Will bring the dead to light. There's so much more
I want to say, because the quiet is dark,
And when the writing ends I reach a shore
145 Beyond which it's so cold and that's what changed,
Edward, on that Easter Monday.[9] You
Were land to me, where England unestranged,
Were what I thought it had amounted to,
But look at the fields now,
150 Look eyelessly at them, like the dug men
Still nodding out of Flanders.[1] Tell them how
You walked and how you saw, and how your pen
Did nothing more than that,
And, when it stopped, what you were gazing at.

*

155 Dear Edward Thomas, Frost died, I was born.
I am a father and you'd like the names
We gave our girl. I'm writing this at dawn
Where Robert lived, in Amherst,[2] and your poems
I keep by his, his housebrick to your tile.
160 I teach you to my students, and aloud
I wonder what you would have come to. While
I wonder they look out at a white cloud
And so we pass the time. Perhaps I'll guess
Which one will ask me what they always ask:
165 Whom do I write for? Anybody? Yes,
You. And I'll walk home in the great dusk
Of Massachusetts that extends away
Far west and north, the ways you meant to go
To save your life. A good end to the day, 170 That's going to be. It's going to be cool, though,
I see out in the town,
And start to turn the trees to what the world
Comes flocking here to see: eight shades of brown
Men never saw, and ninety-nine of gold,
175 More shades than can have names,
Or names to bring them back when the snow comes.

1998

7. Frost.
8. French river, site of the major battle mentioned in note 9 above.
9. See note 4, p. 2019.
1. Perhaps, "the dead" of line 142 still (at present) coming "to light" (142) in the fields of Flanders.
2. From 1917 until 1938, Frost taught at Amherst College (in Amherst, Massachusetts), where Maxwell teaches.

SIMON ARMITAGE
b. 1963

From Killing Time[1]

Meanwhile, somewhere in the state of Colorado, armed to the teeth with thousands of flowers, two boys entered the front door of their own high school and for almost four hours
5 gave floral tributes to fellow students and members of staff, beginning with red roses strewn amongst unsuspecting pupils during their lunch hour, followed by posies of peace lilies and wild orchids. Most thought the whole show 10 was one elaborate hoax using silk replicas of the real thing, plastic imitations, exquisite practical jokes,
but the flowers were no more fake than you or I,
and were handed out 15 as compliments returned, favours repaid, in good faith, straight from the heart.
No would not be taken for an answer. Therefore a daffodil was tucked behind the ear of a boy in a baseball hat, and marigolds and peonies 20 threaded through the hair of those caught on the stairs or spotted along corridors, until every pupil
who looked up from behind a desk could expect to be met with at least a petal 25 or a dusting of pollen, if not an entire daisy-chain, or the colour-burst
of a dozen foxgloves, flowering for all their worth,
or a buttonhole to the breast.
Upstairs in the school library, individuals were singled out 30 for special attention:
some were showered with blossom, others wore their blooms
like brooches or medallions;
even those who turned their backs or refused point-blank to accept such honours
35 were decorated with buds, unseasonable fruits and rosettes
the same as the others.
By which time a crowd had gathered outside the school,
drawn through suburbia
by the rumour of flowers in full bloom, drawn through the air 40 like butterflies to buddleia,[2] like honey bees to honeysuckle, like hummingbirds dipping their tongues in,

1. In what came to be known as the Columbine Massacre, two seniors of Columbine High School, Colorado, went to school on April 20, 1999, armed with guns, knives, and bombs. At the end of the day, twelve students, one teacher, and the two murderers were dead.
2. Also known as "butterfly bush."

some to soak up such over-exuberance of thought, others to savour the goings-on.
45 Finally, overcome by their own munificence or hay fever,
the flower-boys pinned
the last blooms on themselves, somewhat selfishly perhaps,
but had also planned
further surprises for those who swept through the aftermath 50 of broom and buttercup:
garlands and bouquets were planted in lockers and cupboards, timed to erupt
like the first day of spring into the arms of those who, during the first bout, 55 either by fate or chance had somehow been overlooked and missed out.
Experts are now trying to say how two apparently quiet kids from an apple-pie town could get their hands on a veritable rain-forest of plants 60 and bring down
a whole botanical digest of one species or another onto the heads of classmates and teachers, and where such fascination began, and why it should lead to an outpouring of this nature.
65 And even though many believe that flowers should be kept in expert hands only, or left to specialists in the field such as florists, the law of the land dictates that God, guts and gardening made the country 70 what it is today and for as long as the flower industry can see to it things are staying that way.
What they reckon is this: deny a person the right to carry flowers of his own
75 and he's liable to wind up on the business end of a flower somebody else has grown.
As for the two boys, it's back to the same old debate:
is it something in the mind that grows from birth, like a seed, or is it society 80 makes a person that kind?

1999

The Shout

We went out into the school yard together, me and the boy whose name and face

I don't remember. We were testing the range
5 of the human voice:
he had to shout for all he was worth,

I had to raise an arm
from across the divide to signal back that the sound had carried.

10 He called from over the park—I lifted an arm.
Out of bounds,
he yelled from the end of the road,

from the foot of the hill,
from beyond the look-out post of Fretwell's Farm—15 I lifted an arm.

He left town, went on to be twenty years dead with a gunshot hole in the roof of his mouth, in Western Australia.

Boy with the name and face I don't remember,
20 you can stop shouting now, I can still hear you.

2002

GREG WILLIAMSON
b. 1964

Outbound

We live life forwards and think about it backwards
Howard Nemerov[1]

We passengers ride backward on the train
And train our eyes on what has passed us by.
A cobalt blur composes
Into a woman picking roses,
5 Who is already fading in the pane
As in the failing hindsight of the eye.

A line of oaks comes into focus, fades,
Supplanted by the double-dagger poles
Of power companies,
10 Footnotes that redefine the trees.
An asterisk in glass, then window shades,
Graffiti, billboards, tattered banderoles° long scrolls

Of southbound birds. . . . Whatever comes to view
Corrects the view, but never will explain
15 The random next event

1. American poet (1920–1991; see pp. 1623–27).

Or anything but where we went,
Where long ago a woman wearing blue
Began forgetting someone on a train.

1995

From Double Exposures[2]

III. Visiting Couple Kissing and Halved Onion

Unjustly I've imposed upon my friends
This? It's an onion that's been cut in half
When they're (how shall I say?) making amends
Right in the middle of the photograph,
5 After a night of words, and here they stand
Less like those pure, textbook transparencies
Wrapped up in one another, hand in hand,
Than layered and opaque identities,
An arm around a shoulder, face to face,
10 Developed in the dark to this full kit
And captured in this rapturous embrace.
Which has so many tears inside of it.

XXV. Group Photo with Winter Trees

These were my neighbors. It's a big group pose:
On mist-gray skies, the stark, black branches etch
Horizon, lawn, in loose haphazard rows.
As if in tin, or as in some old sketch,
5 That's The Great Bob. And that's our good Queen Paul
Whose lines, whose every nuance was precise,
With Champagne Anne and Rick the dog. They're all
But faded now. I've seen the trees in ice,
Decked out (Liz, too, who helped me do the plumbing),
10 But I'll be gone when their spring blooms and scatters
Even the children. And, God, they're all becoming.
Shades, as the new leaves turn to other matters.

2001

New Year's: A Short Pantoum[3]

The sunlight was falling. A part
Played out in the deep snow.
We were all there. At the start
We knew how the year would go,

2. The title refers to a form invented by Williamson, in which three poems can be read in one: the bold type, the standard type, and the combination.
3. On this verse form, see "Versification," p. 2046.

5 Played out in the deep snow.
The sunlight was falling apart.
We knew how the year would go.
We were all there at the start.

2001

Versification

A poem is a composition written for performance by the human voice. What your eye sees on the page is the composer's verbal score, waiting for your voice to bring it alive as you read it aloud or hear it in your mind's ear. Unlike your reading of a newspaper, the best reading—that is to say, the most satisfying reading—of a poem involves a simultaneous engagement of eye and ear: the eye attentive not only to the meaning of words, but to their grouping and spacing as lines on a page; the ear attuned to the grouping and spacing of sounds. The more you understand of musical notation and the principles of musical composition, the more you will understand and appreciate a composer's score. Similarly, the more you understand of versification (the principles and practice of writing verse), the more you are likely to understand and appreciate poetry and, in particular, the intimate relationship between its form and its content. What a poem says or means is the result of how it is said, a fact that poets are often at pains to emphasize. "All my life," said W. H. Auden, "I have been more interested in technique than anything else." And T. S. Eliot claimed that "the conscious problems with which one is concerned in the actual writing are more those of a quasi-musical nature, in the arrangement of metric and pattern, than of a conscious exposition of ideas." Fortunately, the principles of versification are easier to explain than those of musical composition.

The oldest classification of poetry into three broad categories still holds:

1. Epic: a long narrative poem, frequently extending to several "books" (sections of several hundred lines), on a great and serious subject. See, for example, Spenser's The Faerie Queene (p. 165), Milton's Paradise Lost (p. 420), Wordsworth's The Prelude (p. 781), and Barrett Browning's Aurora Leigh (p. 948). With one notable exception, Merrill's The Changing Light at Sandover (p. 1725), the few poems of comparable length to have been written in the twentieth century—for example, Williams's Paterson and Pound's Cantos (p. 1306)—have a freer, less formal structure.

2. Dramatic: poetry, monologue or dialogue, written in the voice of a character assumed by the poet. Space does not permit the inclusion in this anthology of speeches from the many great verse dramas of English literature, but see such dramatic monologues as Tennyson's "Ulysses" (p. 992), Browning's "My Last Duchess" (p. 1012), and Howard's response to that poem, "Nikolaus Mardruz to his Master Ferdinand, Count of Tyrol, 1565" (p. 1778).

3. Lyric: originally, a song performed in ancient Greece to the accompaniment of a small harplike instrument called a lyre. The term is now used for any fairly short poem in the voice of a single speaker, although that speaker may sometimes quote others. The reader should be wary of identifying the lyric speaker with the poet, since the "I" of a poem will frequently be that of a fictional character invented by the poet. The majority of poems in this book are lyrics, and the principal types of lyric will be found set out under "Forms" (p. 2039).

Rhythm

Poetry is the most compressed form of language, and rhythm is an essential component of language. When we speak, we hear a sequence of syllables. These, the basic units of pronunciation, can consist of a vowel sound alone or a vowel with attendant consonants: oh; syl-la-ble. Sometimes m, n, and l are counted as vowel sounds, as in riddle (rid-dl) and prism (pri-zm). In words of two or more syllables, one is almost always given more emphasis or, as we say, is more heavily stressed than the others, so that what we hear in ordinary speech is a sequence of such units, variously stressed and unstressed as, for example:

> A poem is a composition written for performance by the > human voice.

We call such an analysis of stressed and unstressed syllables scansion (the action or art of scanning a line to determine its division into metrical feet); and a simple system of signs has been evolved to denote stressed and unstressed syllables and any significant pause between them. Adding such scansion marks will produce the following:

> Ă póĕm ĭs ă cómpŏsítiŏn || wríttĕn fŏr pĕrfórmănce by̆
> th̆e húmăn voíce.

The double bar, known as a caesura (from the Latin word for "cut"), indicates a natural pause in the speaking voice, which may be short (as here) or long (as between sentences); the ˘ sign indicates an unstressed syllable, and the ´ sign indicates one that is stressed.

The pattern of emphasis, stress, or accent can vary from speaker to speaker and situation to situation. If someone were to contradict my definition of a poem, I might reply:

> Ă póĕm ís ă cómpŏsítiŏn . . .

with a heavier stress on is than on any other syllable in the sentence. The signs ˘ and ´ make no distinction between varying levels of stress and unstress—it being left to the reader to supply such variations—but some analysts use the sign ` to indicate a stress falling between heavy and light.

Most people pay little or no attention to the sequence of stressed and unstressed syllables in their speaking and writing, but to a poet there may be no more important element of a poem.

Meter

If a poem's rhythm is structured into a recurrence of regular—that is, approximately equal—units, we call it meter (from the Greek word for "measure"). For many centuries after its origins were lost in the mists of antiquity, meter was the principal feature distinguishing poetry from prose. There are four metrical systems in English poetry: the accentual, the accentual-syllabic, the syllabic, and the quantitative. Of these, the second accounts for more poems in the English language—and in this anthology—than do the other three together.

Accentual meter, sometimes called strong-stress meter, is the oldest. The earliest recorded poem in the language—that is, the oldest of Old English or Anglo-Saxon poems, Cædmon's seventh-century "Hymn" (p. 1)—employs a line divided in two by a heavy caesura, each half dominated by the two strongly stressed syllables:

Hé aérĕst scĕŏp || aéldă béarnŭm
[He first created for men's sons]
héofŏn tŏ hrófĕ || hálĭg Scýppĕnd
[heaven as a roof holy creator]

Here, as in most Old English poetry, each line is organized by stress and by alliteration (the repetition of speech sounds—vowels or, more usually, consonants—in a sequence of nearby words). In a line structured by accentual meter, one and generally both of the stressed syllables in the first half-line alliterate with the first stressed syllable in the second half-line.

Accentual meter continued to be used into the late fourteenth century, as in Langland's Piers Plowman (p. 71), which begins:

Ĭn ă sómĕr sésŏn, || whăn sóft wăs thĕ sónnĕ,
[In a summer season when mild was the sun,]
Ĭ shóp mĕ ĭn shróuds, || ăs Í ă shépe wĕre . . .
[I clad myself in clothes as if I'd become a sheep . . .]

However, following the Saxons' conquest by the Normans in 1066, Saxon native meter was increasingly supplanted by the metrical patterns of Old French poetry brought to England in the wake of William the Conqueror, although the nonalliterative four-stress line would have a long and lively continuing life—structuring, for example, section 2 of Eliot's "The Dry Salvages." The Old English metrical system has been occasionally revived in more recent times, as for Heaney's translation of Beowulf (p. 2), or the four-stress lines of Coleridge's "Christabel" and Wilbur's "Junk" (p. 1638); and many English poets from Spenser onward have used alliteration in ways that recall the character of Old and Middle English verse.

Accentual-syllabic meter provided the metrical structure of the new poetry to emerge in the fourteenth century, and its basic unit was the foot, a combination of two or three stressed and/or unstressed syllables. The four most common metrical feet in English poetry are:

1. Iambic (the noun is iamb): an unstressed followed by a stressed syllable, as in "New York." Between the Renaissance and the rise of free verse (p. 2048) in the last century, iambic meter was the dominant rhythm of English poetry, considered by many writers in English as well as classical Latin the meter closest to that of ordinary speech. For this reason, iambic meter is also to be found occasionally in the work of prose writers. Dickens's novel A Tale of Two Cities, for example, begins:

Ĭt wăs | thĕ bést | ŏf tímes, || ĭt wăs | thĕ wórst | ŏf tímes . . .

2. Trochaic (the noun is trochee): a stressed followed by an unstressed syllable, as in the word London or the line from the nursery rhyme,

Lóndŏn | brídge ĭs | fállĭng | dówn . . .

Here, as in many other trochaic lines, the final unstressed syllable has been dropped. This shortening, which gives prominence to the stressed syllable necessary for rhyme (p. 2036), is called a catalectic line end.

The word London may be a trochee, but it does not have to appear in a trochaic line. Provided its natural stress is preserved, it can take its place comfortably in an iambic line, like that from Eliot's The Waste Land:

Ă crówd | flŏwed óv | ĕr Lón | dŏn brídge . . .

Whereas iambic meter has a certain gravity, making it a natural choice for poems on solemn subjects, the trochaic foot has a lighter, quicker, more buoyant movement. Hence, for example, its use in Milton's "L'Allegro" (lines 25–29, for example, on p. 403) and Blake's "Introduction" to Songs of Innocence (p. 733).

3. Anapestic (the noun is anapest): two unstressed syllables followed by a stressed syllable, as in Tennessee or the opening of Byron's "The Destruction of Sennacherib" (p. 834).

Thĕ Ăssýr | iăn căme dówn | lĭke thĕ wólf | ŏn thĕ fóld . . .

The last three letters of the word Assyrian should be heard as one syllable, a form of contraction known as elision.

4. Dactylic (the noun is dactyl): a stressed syllable followed by two unstressed syllables, as in Leningrad. This, like the previous "triple" (three-syllable) foot, the anapest, has a naturally energetic movement, making it suitable for poems with vigorous subjects, though not these only. See Hardy's "The Voice" (p. 1160), which begins:

> Wómăn mŭch | míssed, hŏw yŏu | cáll tŏ mĕ, | cáll tŏ mĕ . . .

Iambs and anapests, which have a strong stress on the last syllable, are said to constitute a rising meter, whereas trochees and dactyls, ending with an unstressed syllable, constitute a falling meter. In addition to these four standard metrical units, there are two other (two-syllable) feet that occur only as occasional variants of the others:

5. Spondaic (the noun is spondee): two successive syllables with approximately equal strong stresses, as on the words "draw back" in the second of these lines from Arnold's "Dover Beach" (p. 1101):

> Lístĕn! | yŏu héar | thĕ grát | ĭng róar
> Ŏf péb | blĕs whĭch | thĕ wáves | dráw báck, | ănd flíng . . .

6. Pyrrhic (the noun is also pyrrhic): two successive unstressed or lightly stressed syllables, as in the second foot of the second line above, where the succession of light syllables seems to mimic the rattle of light pebbles that the heavy wave slowly draws back.

Poets, who consciously or instinctively will select a meter to suit their subject, have also a variety of line lengths from which to choose:

1. Monometer (one foot): see the fifth and sixth lines of each stanza of Herbert's "Easter Wings" (p. 368), which reflect, in turn, the poverty and thinness of the speaker. Herrick's "Upon His Departure Hence" is a rare example of a complete poem in iambic monometer. The fact that each line is a solitary foot (˘ ´) suggests to the eye the narrow inscription of a gravestone, and to the ear the brevity and loneliness of life.

> Thus I > Pass by
> And die,
> As one,
> Unknown,
> And gone:
> I'm made
> A shade,
> And laid
> I'th grave,
> There have
> My cave.
> Where tell
> I dwell,
> Farewell.

2. Dimeter (two feet): iambic dimeter alternates with iambic pentameter in Donne's "A Valediction of Weeping" (p. 300); and dactylic dimeter (´ ˘ ˘ | ´ ˘ ˘) gives Tennyson's "The Charge of the Light Brigade" (p. 1005) its galloping momentum:

> Cannon to right of them,
> Cannon to left of them,
> Cannon in front of them
>   Volleyed and thundered;
> Stormed at with shot and shell,
> Boldly they rode and well,
> Into the jaws of Death,
> Into the mouth of hell
>   Rode the six hundred.

Lines 4 and 9, each lacking a final unstressed syllable, are catalectic, a common feature of dactylic as of trochaic poems.

3. Trimeter (three feet): Ralegh's "The Lie" (p. 154) and Roethke's "My Papa's Waltz" (p. 1494) are written in iambic trimeter; and all but the last line of each stanza of Shelley's "To a Skylark" (p. 876) in trochaic trimeter.

4. Tetrameter (four feet): Marvell's "To His Coy Mistress" (p. 478) is written in iambic tetrameter; and Shakespeare's "Fear No More the Heat o' the Sun" (p. 276) in trochaic tetrameter.

5. Pentameter (five feet): the most popular metrical line in English poetry, the iambic pentameter provides the basic rhythmical framework, or base rhythm, of countless poems from the fourteenth century to the twenty-first, from Chaucer's "General Prologue" to The Canterbury Tales (p. 19) and Shakespeare's sonnets (p. 257) to Hill's "Lachrimae" (p. 1834) and Schnackenberg's "Supernatural Love" (p. 2003). It even contributes to the stately prose of the Declaration of Independence:

W̆e hóld | thése trúths | tŏ b́e | sélf-év | ĭdeńt . . .

Anapestic pentameter is to be found in Browning's "Saul":

As̆ thy̆ lóve | is̆ dĭscóv | erĕd ălmíght | y̆, ălmíght | y̆, bĕ próved
Thy̆ poẃer, | thăt ĕxiśts | w̆ith an̆d fór | ĭt, ŏf b́e | in̆g bĕlov́ed!

A missing syllable in the first foot of the second line gives emphasis to the important word "power," which Browning (like many nineteenth-century Englishmen, but unlike most twenty-first-century Americans) probably pronounced as a single syllable.

6. Hexameter (six feet): The opening sonnet of Sidney's "Astrophil and Stella" (p. 213) and Dowson's "Non sum qualis eram bonae sub regno Cynarae" (p. 1211) are written in iambic hexameter, a line sometimes known as an alexandrine (probably after a twelfth-century French poem, the Roman d'Alexandre). A single alexandrine is often used to provide a resonant termination to a stanza of shorter lines, as, for example, the Spenserian stanza (p. 2042) or Hardy's "The Convergence of the Twain" (p. 1156), in which the shape of the stanza suggests the iceberg that is the poem's subject. Swinburne's "The Last Oracle" is written in trochaic hexameter:

Dáy bў | dáy thў | shádŏw | shínes ĭn | heáven bĕ | hóldĕn . . .

7. Heptameter (seven feet): Kipling's "Tommy" (p. 1181) is written in iambic heptameter (or fourteeners, as they are often called, from the number of their syllables), with an added initial syllable in three of the four lines that make up the second half of each stanza.

8. Octameter (eight feet): Browning's "A Toccata of Galuppi's" (p. 1017) is the most famous example of the rare trochaic octameter.

Poets who write in strict conformity to a single metrical pattern will achieve the music of a metronome and soon drive their listeners away. Variation, surprise, is the very essence of every artist's trade; and one of the most important sources of metrical power and pleasure is the perpetual tension between the regular and the irregular, between the expected and the unexpected, the base rhythm and the variation.

John Hollander has spoken of the "metrical contract" that poets enter into with their readers from the first few words of a poem. When Frost begins "The Gift Outright"—

Thĕ lańd | wăs oúrs | bĕfóre | wé wĕre | thĕ lańd's

—we expect what follows to have an iambic base meter, but the irregularity or variation in the fourth foot tells us that we are hearing not robot speech but human speech. The stress on "we" makes it, appropriately, one of the two most important words in the line, "we" being the most important presence in the "land."

Frost's poem will serve as an example of ways in which skillful poets will vary their base meter:

1. Thĕ lánd | wăs oúrs | bĕfóre | wé wĕre | thĕ lańd's.
2. Shé wăs | oúr lańd ‖ móre thăn | ă hún | drĕd yéars
3. Bĕfóre | wé wĕre | hér péo | plĕ. ‖ Shé | wăs oúrs
4. Iň Máss | ăchú | sĕtts, ‖ iň | Vírgin | iă,
5. Bŭt wé | wĕre Eńg | lańd's, ‖ stíll | cŏlón | iăls,
6. Pŏsséss | iňg whát | wĕ stíll | wĕre ún | pŏsséssed | bў.
7. Pŏsséssed | bў whát | wĕ nów | nó móre | pŏsséssed.
8. Sómething | wé wĕre | wĭthhóld | iňg máde | ŭs wéak
9. Uňtíl | wĕ foúnd | oút thăt | ít wăs | oŭrselv́es
10. Wé wĕre | wĭthhóld | iňg frŏm | oŭr lańd | ŏf lív | iňg,
11. Aňd fórth | with foúnd | sălvá | tiŏn iň | sŭrrén | dĕr.
12. Súch ăs | wĕ wére | wĕ gáve | oŭrsélves | oútright

13. (Thĕ déed | ŏf gíft | wăs mán | y̆ deéds | ŏf wár)
14. Tŏ thĕ lánd | vaguelў | réăl | iz̆iñg | wéstwărd,
15. Bŭt stíll | uñstór | iĕd, || árt | lĕss, || ún | ĕnhañced,
16. Súch ăs | sh̆e wás, || súch ăs | sh̆e would | bĕcóme.

The iambic pentameter gives the poem a stately movement appropriate to the unfolding history of the United States. In the trochaic "reversed feet" at the start of lines 2, 10, 12, and 16, the stress is advanced to lend emphasis to a key word or, in the case of line 8, an important syllable. Spondees in lines 2 ("our land") and 3 ("her people") bring into equal balance the two partners whose union is the theme of the poem. Such additional heavy stresses are counterbalanced by the light pyrrhic feet at the end of lines 4 and 5, in the middle of line 10, and toward the end of line 14. The multiple irregularities of that line give a wonderful impression of the land stretching westward into space, just as the variations of line 16 give a sense of the nation surging toward its destiny in time.

Frost's reading of this poem at President Kennedy's inauguration differed at a number of points from the above scansion, in that it was more colloquial, less emphatic, but authors cannot control others' reading of their work as they control its writing. Scansion is to some extent a matter of interpretation, in which the rhetorical emphasis a particular reader prefers alters the stress pattern. Other readers of "The Gift Outright" might—no less correctly—prefer the following rhetorical variations of the base meter:

7. . . . wé nŏw . . .
9. Uñtíl | wé foŭnd . . .

An important factor in varying the pattern of a poem is the placing of its pauses, or caesurae. One falling in the middle of a line—as in line 4 above—is known as a medial caesura; one falling near the start of a line, an initial caesura; and one falling near or at the end of a line, a terminal caesura. When a caesura occurs as in lines 13 and 14 above, those lines are said to be end-stopped. Lines 3 and 9, however, are called run-on lines (or, to use a French term, they exhibit enjambment—"a striding over"), because the thrust of the incompleted sentence carries on over the end of the verse line. Such transitions tend to increase the pace of the poem, as the end-stopping of lines 10 through 16 slows it down.

A strikingly original and influential blending of the Old English accentual and more modern accentual-syllabic metrical systems was sprung rhythm, conceived and pioneered by Gerard Manley Hopkins.

Finding the cadences of his Victorian contemporaries—what he called their "common rhythm"—too measured and mellifluous for his liking, he sought a stronger, more muscular verse movement. Strength he equated with stress, arguing that "even one stressed syllable may make a foot, and consequently two or more stresses may come running [one after the other], which in common rhythm can, regularly speaking, never happen." In his system of sprung rhythm, each foot began with a stress and could consist of a single stressed syllable (´), a trochee (´ ˘), a dactyl (´ ˘ ˘), or what he called a first paeon (´ ˘ ˘ ˘). His lines will, on occasion, admit other unstressed syllables, as in the sonnet "Felix Randal" (p. 1168):

> Félĭx | Rándăl, || thĕ | fárrĭĕr, || Ŏ ĭs hĕ | deád thĕn? || mȳ |
> dútў ăll | éndĕd,
> Whó hăve | watc̆hed hĭs | móuld ŏf măn, || bĭg- | bon̆ed
> an̆d | hárdў-| hándsom̆e
> Pínin̆g, || pínin̆g, || tĭll | tíme whĕn | réasŏn | ram̆blĕd ĭn ĭt |
> an̆d som̆e
> Fátăl | fóur dĭs | órdĕrs, || fléshed thĕre, || áll cŏn | téndĕd?

A poetry structured on the principle that strength is stress is particularly well suited to stressful subjects, and the sprung rhythm of what Hopkins called his "terrible sonnets" (pp. 1167–72), for example, gives them a dramatic urgency, a sense of anguished struggle that few poets have equalled in accentual-syllabic meter.

A number of other poets have experimented with two other metrical systems.

Syllabic meter measures only the number of syllables in a line, without regard to their stress. Being an inescapable feature of the English language, stress will of course appear in lines composed on syllabic principles, but will fall variously, and usually for rhetorical emphasis, rather than in any formal metrical pattern. When Marianne Moore wished to attack the pretentiousness of much formal "Poetry" (p. 1329), she shrewdly chose to do so in syllabics, as lines in syllabic meter are called. The effect is carefully informal and prosaic, and few unalerted readers will notice that there are 19 syllables in the first line of each stanza; 22 in the second; 11 in the third (except for the third line of the third stanza, which has 7); 5 in the fourth; 8 in the fifth; and 13 in the sixth. That the poem succeeds in deflating Poetry (with a capital P) while at once celebrating poetry and creating it is not to be explained by Moore's talent for arithmetic so much as by her unobtrusive skill in modulating the stresses and pauses of colloquial speech. The result is a music like that of good free verse (p. 2048).

Because stress plays virtually no role in Romance languages such as French and Italian and in Japanese, their poetry tends to be syllabic in construction. One Japanese form that has taken root in English poetry on both sides of the Atlantic and beyond is the haiku, a three-line poem of seventeen syllables (divided 5, 7, 5). The haiku traditionally offers an image from the natural world—a flower, a branch of cherry blossom—and this convention Paul Muldoon adopts and adapts in his series of 110 "Hopewell Haiku":

> Good Friday. At three, > a swarm of bees sets its heart
> on an apple tree.

Brilliantly, the Irish Roman Catholic grafts on to a form inextricably linked with the Japanese Shinto religion an image of Christ dying on the cross at three in the afternoon on the first Good Friday. Ezra Pound adapted the Japanese form in a poem whose title is an integral part of the whole:

In a Station of the Metro

The apparition of these faces in the crowd;
Petals on a wet, black bough.

The syllable count here (8, 12, 7) bears only a token relation to that of the strict Japanese pattern, but the poem succeeds largely because its internal rhymes (p. 2037)—Station / appar*ition; Met*ro / *pet*als / wet; crowd / bough—point up a series of distinct stressed syllables that suggest, in an impressionist fashion, a series of distinct white faces. Other American masters of this form are Richard Wright (p. 1502) and Richard Wilbur (p. 1632), whose poem "Zea" (p. 1640) is composed of stanzas of rhymed haiku like Muldoon's.

A number of modern poets—among them Auden, Dylan Thomas, and Gunn—have written notable poems in syllabics; their efforts to capture the spirit—if not the letter—of a foreign linguistic and poetic tradition may be compared with those of many poets since the Renaissance who have attempted to render Greek and Latin meters into English verse, using the fourth metrical system to be considered here.

Quantitative meter, which structures most Greek, Sanskrit, and later Latin poetry, is based on notions of a syllable's "quantity," its duration in time (or its length). This is determined by various conventions of spelling as well as by the type of vowel sound it contains. Complexities arise because Latin has more word-stress than does ancient Greek, and hence there is often an alignment of stress and quantity in foot-patterns of later Latin verse. This is ironic in light of the efforts, on the part of some Renaissance English poets, to "ennoble" the vernacular English tradition by following classical metrical models. Although poets like Spenser and Sidney devised elaborate rules for determining the "length" of English syllables according to ancient rules, the theoretical prescriptions often generated poems in which "long" syllables are in fact stressed syllables. Indeed, one defender of quantitative meter in English, Thomas Campion, explicitly recommended a metrical system aligning stress with quantity; he illustrated his theory with some highly successful poems such as "Rose-cheeked Laura" (p. 280). Although some Renaissance experiments in quantitative meter produced poems distinctly less pleasing to the ear than to the (highly educated) eye, others, such as those in Sidney's Arcadia, work well and remind us that experiments in cultural translation—some more successful than others—have been an enduring part of the English poetic tradition from the Anglo-Saxon era to the present.

Rhyme

Ever since the poetry of Chaucer sprang from the fortunate marriage of Old French and Old English, rhyme (the concurrence, in two or more lines, of the last stressed vowel and of all speech sounds following that vowel) has been closely associated with rhythm in English poetry. It is to be found in the early poems and songs of many languages. Most English speakers meet it first in nursery rhymes, many of which involve numbers ("One, two, / Buckle my shoe"), a fact supporting the theory that rhyme may have had its origin in primitive religious rites and magical spells. From such beginnings, poetry has been inextricably linked with music—Cædmon's "Hymn" (p. 1) and the earliest popular ballads (p. 97) were all composed to be sung—and rhyme has been a crucial element in the music of poetry. More than any other factor it has been responsible for making poetry memorable. Its function is a good deal more complicated than may at first appear, in that by associating one rhyme-word with another, poets may introduce a remote constellation of associations that may confirm, question, or on occasion deny the literal meaning of their words. Consider, for example, the opening eight lines, or octave (p. 2042), of Hopkins's sonnet "God's Grandeur" (p. 1166):

1. The world is charged with the grandeur of God.
2. It will flame out, like shining from shook foil;
3. It gathers to a greatness, like the ooze of oil
4. Crushed. Why do men then now not reck his rod?
5. Generations have trod, have trod, have trod;
6. And all is seared with trade; bleared, smeared with toil;
7. And wears man's smudge and shares man's smell: the soil
8. Is bare now, nor can foot feel, being shod.

The grand statement of the first line is illustrated not by the grand examples that the opening of lines 2 and 3 seem to promise, but by the surprising similes of shaken tin foil and olive oil oozing from its press. The down-to-earthiness that these objects have in common is stressed by the foil / oil rhyme that will be confirmed by the toil / soil of lines 6 and 7. At the other end of the cosmic scale, "The grandeur of God" no less appropriately rhymes with "his rod." But what of the implicit coupling of grand God and industrial humanity in the ensuing trod / shod rhymes of lines 5 and 8? These rhymes remind Hopkins's reader that Christ, too, was a worker, a walker of hard roads, and that "the grandeur of God" is manifest in the world through which the weary generations tread.

Rhymes appearing like these at the end of a line are known as end rhymes, but poets frequently make use of internal rhyme such as the then / men of Hopkins's line 4, the seared / bleared / smeared of line 6, or the wears / shares of line 7. Assonance (the repetition of identical or similar vowel sounds) is present in the not / rod of line 4. This sonnet also contains two examples of a related sound effect, onomatopoeia, sometimes called echoism, a combination of words whose sound seems to resemble the sound it denotes. So, in lines 3 and 4, the long, slow, alliterative vowels—"ooze of oil"—seem squeezed out by the crushing pressure of the heavily stressed verb that follows. So, too, the triple repetition of "have trod" in line 5 seems to echo the thudding boots of the laboring generations.

All the rhymes so far discussed have been what is known as masculine rhymes in that they consist of a single stressed syllable. Rhyme words in which a stressed syllable is followed by an unstressed syllable—chiming / rhyming—are known as feminine rhymes. Single (one-syllable) and double (two-syllable) rhymes are the most common, but triple and even quadruple rhymes are also to be found, usually in a comic context like that of Gilbert's

"I Am the Very Model of a Modern Major-General" (p. 1144) or Byron's Don Juan (p. 837):

> But—Oh! ye lords of ladies intell*ectual,*
> Inform us truly, have they not hen-pecked you all?

If the correspondence of rhyming sounds is exact, it is called perfect rhyme or else full or true rhyme. For many centuries, almost all English writers of serious poems confined themselves to rhymes of this sort, except for an occasional poetic license (or violation of the rules of versification) such as eye rhymes, words whose endings are spelled alike, and in most instances were pronounced alike, but have in the course of time acquired a different pronunciation: prove / love; daughter / laughter. Since the nineteenth century, however, an increasing number of poets have felt the confident chimes of perfect rhymes inappropriate for poems of doubt, frustration, and grief, and have used various forms of imperfect rhyme, including:

Off-rhyme (also known as half rhyme, near rhyme, or slant rhyme) differs from perfect rhyme in changing the vowel sound and/or the concluding consonants expected of perfect rhyme. See Byron's gone / alone rhyme in the second stanza of "On This Day I Complete My Thirty-sixth Year" (p. 862), or Dickinson's rhyming of Room / Storm; firm / Room; and be / Fly in "I heard a Fly buzz - when I died -" (p. 1121).

Vowel rhyme goes beyond off-rhyme to the point at which rhyme words have only their vowel sound in common. See, for example, the muted but musically effective rhymes of Dylan Thomas's "Fern Hill" (p. 1571): boughs / towns; green / leaves; starry / barley; climb / eyes / light.

Pararhyme, in which the stressed vowel sounds differ but are flanked by identical or similar consonants, is a term coined by Edmund Blunden to describe Wilfred Owen's pioneering use of such rhymes. Although they had occurred on occasion before—see trod / trade in lines 5 and 6 of "God's Grandeur"—Owen was the first to employ pararhyme consistently. In a poem such as "Strange Meeting" (p. 1389), the second rhyme is usually lower in pitch (has a deeper vowel sound) than the first, producing effects of dissonance, failure, and unfulfillment that subtly reinforce Owen's theme. The last stanza of his "Miners" shows a further refinement:

> The centuries will burn rich loads
>   With which we groaned,
> Whose warmth shall lull their dreaming lids,
>   While songs are crooned.
> But they will not dream of us poor lads,
>   Left in the ground.

Here, the pitch of the pararhyme rises to reflect the dream of a happier future—loads / lids—before plunging to the desolate reality of lads, a rise and fall repeated in groaned / crooned / ground.

The effect of rhyming—whether the chime is loud or muted—is to a large extent dictated by one rhyme's distance from another, a factor frequently dictated by the rhyme scheme of the poet's chosen stanza form. At one extreme stands the monorhyme, a poem of no predetermined meter, line-length, or number of lines; the sole requirement being its one rhyme. The greater the length of a monorhyme, the greater the difficulty of achieving the conversational fluency and ease of Dick Davis's "Monorhyme for the Shower":

> Lifting her arms to soap her hair
> Her pretty breasts respond—and there
> The movement of that buoyant pair
> Is like a spell to make me swear
> Twenty odd years have turned to air;
> Now she's the girl I didn't dare
> Approach, ask out, much less declare
> My love to, mired in young despair.
>
> Childbearing, rows, domestic care—
> All the prosaic wear and tear
> That constitute the life we share—
> Slip from her beautiful and bare
> Bright body as, made half aware
> Of my quick surreptitious stare,
> She wrings the water from her hair
> And turning smiles to see me there.

At the other end of the spectrum of rhyme stands Paul Muldoon's use of the same (or virtually the same) rhymes of the ninety-line poem, "Third Epistle to Timothy" (p. 1981), in the same order, in four other ninety-line poems: "Yarrow," "Incantata," "The Mud Room," and "The Bangle (Slight Return)." Only marginally less remarkable is Dylan Thomas's "Author's Prologue," a poem of 102 lines, in which line 1 rhymes with line 102, line 2 with 101, and so on, down to the central couplet of lines 51–52. Rhyme schemes, however, are seldom so taxing for poets (or their readers) and, as with their choice of meter, are likely to be determined consciously or subconsciously by their knowledge of earlier poems written in this or that form.

Forms

Basic Forms

Having looked at—and listened to—the ways in which metrical feet combine in a poetic line, one can move on to see—and hear—how such lines combine in the larger patterns of the dance, what are known as the forms of poetry.

1. Blank verse, at one end of the scale, consists of unrhymed (hence "blank") iambic pentameters. Introduced to England by Surrey in his translations from the Aeneid (1554), it soon became the standard meter for Elizabethan poetic drama. No verse form is closer to the natural rhythms of spoken English or more adaptive to different levels of speech. Following the example of Shakespeare, whose kings, clowns, and countryfolk have each their own voice when speaking blank verse, it has been used by dramatists from Marlowe to Eliot. Milton chose it for his religious epic Paradise Lost (p. 420), Wordsworth for his autobiographical epic The Prelude (p. 781), and Coleridge for his meditative lyric "Frost at Midnight" (p. 810). During the nineteenth century, it became a favorite form of dramatic monologues such as Tennyson's "Ulysses" (p. 992) and Browning's "Fra Lippo Lippi" (p. 1026), in which a single speaker (who is not the poet) addresses a dramatically defined listener in a specific situation and at a critical moment. All of these poems are divided into verse paragraphs of varying length, as distinct from the stanzas of equal length that make up Tennyson's "Tears, Idle Tears" (p. 995) or Stevens's "Sunday Morning" (p. 1257).

2. The couplet, two lines of verse, usually coupled by rhyme, has been a principal unit of English poetry since rhyme entered the language. The first of the anonymous thirteenth- and fourteenth-century lyrics in this anthology (p. 15) is in couplets, but the first poet to use the form consistently was Chaucer, whose "General Prologue" to The Canterbury Tales (p. 19) exhibits great flexibility. His narrative momentum tends to overrun line endings, and his pentameter couplets are seldom the self-contained syntactic units one finds in Jonson's "On My First Son" (p. 323). The sustained use of such closed couplets attained its ultimate sophistication in what came to be known as heroic couplets ("heroic" because of their use in epic poems or plays), pioneered by Denham in the seventeenth century and perfected by Dryden and Pope in the eighteenth. The Chaucerian energies of the iambic pentameter were reined in, and each couplet made a balanced whole within the greater balanced whole of its poem, "Mac Flecknoe" (p. 517), for example, or "The Rape of the Lock" (p. 604). As if in reaction against the elevated ("heroic" or "mock heroic") diction and syntactic formality of the heroic couplet, more-recent users of the couplet have tended to veer toward the other extreme of informality. Colloquialisms, frequent enjambment, and variable placing of the caesura mask the formal rhyming of Browning's "My Last Duchess" (p. 1012), as the speaker of that dramatic monologue seeks to mask its diabolical organization. Owen, with the pararhymes of "Strange Meeting" (p. 1389), and Yeats, with the off-rhymed tetrameters of "Under Ben Bulben" (p. 1208), achieve similarly informal effects.

3. The tercet is a stanza of three lines traditionally linked with a single rhyme, although the tercets of Williams's "Poem" (p. 1275) and those of some other modern poets are unrhymed. It may also be a three-line section of a larger poetic structure, as, for example, the sestet of a sonnet (p. 2042). Tercets can be composed of lines of equal length—iambic tetrameter in Herrick's "Upon Julia's Clothes" (p. 359), trochaic octameter in Browning's "A Toccata of Galuppi's" (p. 1017)—or of different length, as in Hardy's "The Convergence of the Twain" (p. 1156). An important variant of this form is the linked tercet, or terza rima, in which the second line of each stanza rhymes with the first and third lines of the next. A group of such stanzas is commonly concluded with a final line supplying the missing rhyme, as in Wilbur's "First Snow in Alsace" (p. 1632), although Shelley expanded the conclusion to a couplet in his "Ode to the West Wind" (p. 872). No verse form in English poetry is more closely identified with its inventor than is terza rima with Dante, who used it for his Divine Comedy. Shelley invokes the inspiration of his great predecessor in choosing the form for his "Ode" written on the outskirts of Dante's Florence, and T. S. Eliot similarly calls the Divine Comedy to mind with the tercets—unrhymed, but aligned on the page like Dante's—of a passage in part 2 of "Little Gidding" that ends:

> "From wrong to wrong the exasperated spirit
> Proceeds, unless restored by that refining fire
> Where you must move in measure, like a dancer."
> The day was breaking. In the disfigured street
> He left me, with a kind of valediction,
> And faded on the blowing of the horn.

4. The quatrain, a stanza of four lines, rhymed or unrhymed, is the most common of all English stanzaic forms. And the most common type of quatrain is the ballad stanza, in which lines of iambic tetrameter alternate with iambic trimeter, rhyming abcb (lines 1 and 3 being unrhymed) or, less commonly, abab. This, the stanza of popular ballads such as "Sir Patrick Spens" (p. 103), Coleridge's literary ballad "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner" (p. 812), and Dickinson's "I felt a Funeral, in my Brain" (p. 1115), also occurs in many hymns and is there called common meter. The expansion of lines 2 and 4 to tetrameters produces a quatrain known (particularly in hymnbooks) as long meter, the form of Hardy's "Channel Firing" (p. 1157). When, on the other hand, the first line is shortened to a trimeter, matching lines 2 and 4, the stanza is called short meter. Gascoigne uses it for "And If I Did, What Then?" (p. 144) and Hardy uses it for "I Look into My Glass" (p. 1153). Stanzas of iambic pentameter rhyming abab, as in Gray's "Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard" (p. 669), are known as heroic quatrains. The pentameter stanzas of FitzGerald's "Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám of Naishápúr" (p. 961) are rhymed aaba, a rhyme scheme that Frost elaborates in "Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening" (p. 1237), where the third line (unrhymed in the "Rubáiyát") rhymes with lines 1, 2, and 4 of the following stanza, producing an effect like that of terza rima. Quatrains can also be in monorhyme, as in Rossetti's "The Woodspurge" (p. 1105); composed of two couplets, as in "Now Go'th Sun under Wood" (p. 15); or rhymed abba, as in Tennyson's "In Memoriam A. H. H." (p. 996).

5. Rhyme royal, a seven-line iambic-pentameter stanza rhyming ababbcc, was introduced by Chaucer in Troilus and Criseide (p. 67), but its name is thought to come from its later use by King James I of Scotland in "The Kingis Quair." Later examples include Wyatt's "They Flee from Me" (p. 127) and those somber stanzas in Auden's "The Shield of Achilles" (p. 1479) that describe the twentieth century, as a contrast to the eight-line stanzas with a ballad rhythm that describe a mythic past.

6. Ottava rima is an eight-line stanza, as its Italian name indicates, and it rhymes abababcc. Like terza rima and the sonnet (below), it was introduced to English literature by Sir Thomas Wyatt. Byron put it to brilliant use in Don Juan (p. 837), frequently undercutting with a comic couplet the seeming seriousness of the six preceding lines. Yeats used ottava rima more gravely in "Sailing to Byzantium" (p. 1199) and "Among School Children" (p. 1200).

7. The Spenserian stanza has nine lines, the first eight being iambic pentameter and the last an iambic hexameter (an alexandrine), rhyming ababbcbcc. Chaucer had used two such quatrains, linked by three rhymes, as the stanza form of "The Monk's Tale," but Spenser's addition of a concluding alexandrine gave the stanza he devised for The Faerie Queene (p. 165) an inequality in its final couplet, a variation reducing the risk of monotony that can overtake a long series of iambic pentameters. Keats and Hopkins wrote their earliest known poems in this form, and Keats went on to achieve perhaps the fullest expression of its intricate harmonies in "The Eve of St. Agnes" (p. 907). Partly, no doubt, in tribute to that poem, Shelley used the Spenserian stanza in his great elegy for Keats, "Adonais" (p. 879); later, the form was a natural choice for the narcotic narrative of Tennyson's "The Lotos-Eaters"(p. 988).

Ottava rima and the Spenserian stanza each open with a quatrain and close with a couplet. These and other of the shorter stanzaic units similarly recur as component parts of certain lyrics with a fixed form.

8. The sonnet, traditionally a poem of fourteen iambic pentameters linked by an intricate rhyme scheme, is one of the oldest verse forms in English. Used by almost every notable poet in the language, it is the best example of how rhyme and meter can provide the imagination not with a prison but with a theater. The sonnet originated in Italy and, since being introduced to England by Sir Thomas Wyatt (see his "Whoso List to Hunt," p. 126) in the early sixteenth century, has been the stage for the soliloquies of countless lovers and for dramatic action ranging from a dinner party (p. 1108) to the rape of Leda and the fall of Troy (p. 1200). There are two basic types of sonnet—the Italian, or Petrarchan (named after the fourteenth-century Italian poet Petrarch), and the English, or Shakespearean—and a number of variant types, of which the most important is the Spenserian. They differ in their rhyme schemes, and consequently their structure, as shown on p. 2043.

The Italian sonnet, with its distinctive division into octave (an eight-line unit) and sestet (a six-line unit), is structurally suited to a statement followed by a counterstatement, as in Milton's "When I Consider How My Light Is Spent" (p. 418). The blind poet's questioning of divine justice is checked by the voice of Patience, whose haste "to prevent That murmur" is conveyed by the accelerated turn (change in direction of argument or narrative) on the word "but" in the last line of the octave, rather than the first of the sestet. Shelley's "Ozymandias" (p. 870) follows the same pattern of statement and counterstatement, except that its turn comes in the traditional position. Another pattern common to the Italian sonnet—observation (octave) and amplifying conclusion (sestet)—underlies Keats's "On First Looking into Chapman's Homer" (p. 905) and Hill's "The Laurel Axe" (p. 1835). Of these, only Milton's has a sestet conforming to the conventional rhyme scheme:

The Italian Sonnet

First quatrain	a b b a	Octave
Second quatrain	a b b a

Turn

First tercet	c d e	Sestet
Second tercet	c d e

The English Sonnet

First quatrain	a b a b
Second quatrain	c d c d
Third quatrain	e f e f

Turn

Couplet	g g

The Spenserian Sonnet

First quatrain	a b a b
	b b	couplet link
Second quatrain	b c b c
	c c	couplet link
Third quatrain	c d c d
Couplet	e e

others, such as Donne's "Holy Sonnets" (p. 318), end with a couplet, sometimes causing them to be mistaken for sonnets of the other type.

The English sonnet falls into three quatrains, with a turn at the end of line 12 and a concluding couplet often of a summary or epigrammatic character. M. H. Abrams has well described the unfolding of Drayton's "Since there's no help, come let us kiss and part" (p. 238): "The lover brusquely declares in the first two quatrains that he is glad the affair is cleanly broken off, pauses in the third quatrain as though at the threshold, and in the last two rhymed lines suddenly drops his swagger to make one last plea." Spenser, in the variant form that bears his name, reintroduced to the English sonnet the couplets characteristic of the Italian sonnet. This interweaving of the quatrains, as in sonnet 75 of his "Amoretti" (p. 194), makes possible a more musical and closely developed argument, and tends to reduce the sometimes excessive assertiveness of the final couplet. That last feature of the English sonnet is satirized by Brooke in his "Sonnet Reversed," which turns romantic convention upside down by beginning with the couplet:

> Hand trembling towards hand; the amazing lights
> Of heart and eye. They stood on supreme heights.

The three quatrains that follow record the ensuing anticlimax of suburban married life. Meredith in "Modern Love" (p. 1107) stretched the sonnet to sixteen lines; Hopkins cut it short in what he termed his curtal (a curtailed form of "curtailed") sonnet "Pied Beauty" (p. 1167); while Shakespeare concealed a sonnet in Romeo and Juliet (1.5.90–103). Shakespeare's 154 better-known sonnets form a carefully organized progression, or sonnet sequence, following the precedent of earlier sonneteers such as Sidney with his "Astrophil and Stella" (p. 213) and Spenser with his "Amoretti" (p. 190). In the nineteenth century, Elizabeth Barrett Browning's "Sonnets from the Portuguese" (p. 947) continued a tradition in which the author of "Berryman's Sonnets" has since, with that title, audaciously challenged the author of Shakespeare's sonnets.

The twentieth century saw the introduction to English poetry of a Russian sonnet, the stanza form of Alexander Pushkin's verse novel, Eugene Onegin (1823–31). This was successfully translated—preserving its original form—by Sir Charles Johnston in 1977; but it was not until 1986 that the Pushkinian stanza first entered English poetry, in its own right, in Vikram Seth's verse novel, The Golden Gate (p. 1994). Arguably the most technically demanding of all English poetic forms, the Pushkinian stanza is composed of fourteen tetrameter (not pentameter) lines rhyming as follows:

a feminine rhyme (p. 2037)
b masculine rhyme (p. 2037)
a feminine b masculine c feminine
c feminine d masculine

d masculine e feminine f masculine f masculine
e feminine g masculine
g masculine

9. The villanelle, a French verse form derived from an earlier Italian folk song, retains the circular pattern of a peasant dance. It consists of five tercets rhyming aba followed by a quatrain rhyming abaa, with the first line of the initial tercet recurring as the last line of the second and fourth tercets and the third line of the initial tercet recurring as the last line of the third and fifth tercets, these two refrains (lines of regular recurrence) being again repeated as the last two lines of the poem. If A^1 and A^2 may be said to represent the first and third lines of the initial tercet, the rhyme scheme of the villanelle will look like this:

tercet 1: A^1 B A^2
2: A B A^1
3: A B A^2
4: A B A^1
5: A B A^2
quatrain: A B A^1 A^2

The art of writing complicated forms like the villanelle and sestina (see below) is to give them the graceful momentum of good dancing, and the vitality of the dance informs triumphant examples such as Roethke's "The Waking" (p. 1500), Bishop's "One Art" (p. 1527), and Thomas's "Do Not Go Gentle into That Good Night" (p. 1572).

10. The sestina, the most complicated of the verse forms initiated by the twelfth-century wandering singers known as troubadours, is composed of six stanzas of six lines each, followed by an envoy, or concluding stanza, that incorporates lines or words used before: in this case the words (instead of rhymes) end each line in the following pattern:

stanza 1: A B C D E F
2: F A E B D C
3: C F D A B E
4: E C B F A D
5: D E A C F B
6: B D F E C A
envoy: E C A or A C E [these lines should contain the remaining three end words]

The earliest example in this anthology is, in fact a double sestina: Sidney's "Ye Goatherd Gods" (p. 208). Perhaps daunted by the intricate brilliance of this, few poets attempted the form for the next three centuries. It was re-introduced by Swinburne and Pound, who prepared the way for notable contemporary examples such as Bishop's "Sestina" (p. 1520), Hecht's "The Book of Yolek" (p. 1566), and Ashbery's "The Painter" (p. 1736).

11. The canzone, another verse form initiated by the twelfth-century troubadours, has a history of varying lengths and patterns. It often consists of five twelve-line stanzas and a five-line envoy, all employing the same five line-end words. A common pattern of repetition is that followed (with minor variations) by Agha Shahid Ali's "Lenox Hill" (p. 1959): abaacaadaee / eaeebeeccedd / deddaddbbcc / cdcceccaacbb / bcbbdbbeebaa / abcde.

12. The pantoum, a Malayan form in origin, entered English poetry by way of nineteenth-century French poetry. It may consist of any number of quatrains, lines 2 and 4 of which are repeated as lines 1 and 3 of the next quatrain. The poem rhymes abab / bcbc, and so on, and generally ends with a quatrain whose repetons (repeated lines) are lines 1 and 3 of the first stanza in reversed order, or in a repeton couplet consisting of lines 1 and 3 of the first stanza in reversed order. See Donald Justice's "Pantoum of the Great Depression" (p. 1687) and Greg Williamson's "New Year's: A Short Pantoum" (p. 2024).

13. The limerick (to end this section on the first of two lighter notes) is a five-line stanza thought to take its name from an old custom at convivial parties whereby each person was required to sing an extemporized "nonsense verse," which was followed by a chorus containing the words "Will you come up to Limerick?" The acknowledged Old Master of the limerick is Edward Lear (p. 1041), who required that the first and fifth lines end with the same word (usually a place-name), a restriction abandoned by many Modern Masters, though triumphantly retained by the anonymous author of this:

> There once was a man from Nantucket
> Who kept all his cash in a bucket;
>   But his daughter named Nan
>   Ran away with a man,
> And as for the bucket, Nantucket.

14. The clerihew, named after its inventor, Edmund Clerihew Bentley (1875–1956), is a short comic or nonsensical poem about a famous person, consisting of two rhymed couplets with lines of unequal length. Some of the best are to be found in W. H. Auden's "Academic Graffiti"—this, for example:

> John Milton
> Never stayed in a Hilton > Hotel,
> Which was just as well.

Composite Forms

Just as good poets have always varied their base rhythm, there have always been those ready to bend, stretch, or in some way modify a fixed form to suit the demands of a particular subject. The earliest systematic and successful pioneer of such variation was John Skelton, who gave his name to what has come to be called Skeltonic verse. His poems typically—see, for example, the extract from "Colin Clout" (p. 92)—have short lines of anything from three to seven syllables containing two or three stresses (though more of both are common), and exploit a single rhyme until inspiration and the resources of the language run out. The breathless urgency of this form has intrigued and influenced modern poets such as Graves and Auden.

Another early composite form employed longer lines: iambic hexameter (twelve syllables) alternating with iambic heptameter (fourteen syllables). This form, known as "poulter's measure"—from the poultryman's practice of giving twelve eggs for the first dozen and fourteen for the second—was used by sixteenth-century poets such as Wyatt (p. 126), Queen Elizabeth I (p. 142), and Sidney (p. 208), but has not proved popular since.

The element of the unexpected often accounts for much of the success of poems in a composite form such as Donne's "The Sun Rising" (p. 295). His stanza might be described as a combination of two quatrains (the first rhyming abba, the second cdcd), and a couplet (ee). That description would be accurate but inadequate in that it takes no account of the variation in line length, which is a crucial feature of the poem's structure. It opens explosively with the outrage of the interrupted lover:

> Busy old fool, unruly sun,
> Why dost thou thus
> Through windows and through curtains call on us?

Short lines, tetrameter followed by dimeter, suggest the speaker's initial shock and give place, as he begins to recover his composure, to the steadier pentameters that complete the first quatrain. Continuing irritation propels the brisk tetrameters that form the first half of the second quatrain. This, again, is completed by calmer pentameters, and the stanza rounded off like an English sonnet, with a summary pentameter couplet:

> Love, all alike, no season knows nor clime
> Nor hours, days, months, which are the rags of time.

This variation in line length achieves a different effect in the third stanza, where the brief trimeter suggests an absence contrasting with the royal presences in the preceding tetrameter:

> She's all states, and all princes, I,
> Nothing else is.

And these lines prepare, both rhetorically and visually, for the contraction and expansion so brilliantly developed in the poem's triumphant close. Similar structural considerations account for the composite stanza forms of Arnold's "The Scholar-Gypsy" (p. 1089) and Lowell's "Skunk Hour" (p. 1601), though variations of line length and rhyme scheme between the six-line stanzas of Lowell's poem bring it close to the line that divides composite form from the next category.

Irregular Forms

A poet writing in irregular form will use rhyme and meter but follow no fixed pattern. A classic example is Milton's "Lycidas" (p. 410), which is written in iambic pentameters interspersed with an occasional trimeter, probably modeled on the occasional half-lines that intersperse the hexameters of Virgil's Aeneid. Milton's rhyming in this elegy (a formal lament for a dead person) is similarly varied, and a few lines are unrhymed. The most extensive use of irregular form is to be found in one of the three types of ode.

Long lyric poems of elevated style and elaborate stanzaic structure, the original odes of the Greek poet Pindar were modeled on songs sung by the chorus in Greek drama. The three-part structure of the regular Pindaric ode has been attempted once or twice in English, but more common and more successful has been the irregular Pindaric ode, which has no three-part structure but sections of varying length, varying line length, and varying rhyme scheme. Each of Pindar's odes was written to celebrate someone, and celebration has been the theme of many English Pindaric odes, among them Dryden's "A Song for St. Cecilia's Day" (p. 524), Tate's "Ode to the Confederate Dead" (p. 1417), and Lowell's "The Quaker Graveyard in Nantucket" (p. 1592). The desire to celebrate someone or something has also prompted most English odes of the third type, those modeled on the subject matter, tone, and form of the Roman poet Horace. More meditative and restrained than the boldly irregular Pindaric ode, the Horatian ode is usually written in a repeated stanza form—Marvell's "An Horatian Ode (Upon Cromwell's Return from Ireland)" (p. 486) in quatrains, for example, and Keats's "To Autumn" (p. 939) in a composite eleven-line stanza.

Open Forms or Free Verse

At the opposite end of the formal scale from the fixed forms (or, as they are sometimes called, closed forms) of sonnet, villanelle, and sestina, we come to what was long known as free verse, poetry that makes little or no use of traditional rhyme and meter. The term is misleading, however, suggesting to some less thoughtful champions of open forms (as free-verse structures are now increasingly called) a false analogy with political freedom as opposed to slavery, and suggesting to traditionalist opponents the disorder or anarchy implied by Frost's in/famous remark that "writing free verse is like playing tennis with the net down." There was much unprofitable debate in the last century over the relative merits and "relevance" of closed and open forms, unprofitable because, as will be clear to any reader of this anthology, good poems continue to be written in both. It would be foolish to wish that Larkin wrote like Whitman, or Atwood like Dickinson. Poets must find forms and rhythms appropriate to their voices. When, around 1760, Smart chose an open form for "Jubilate Agno" (p. 678), that incantatory catalog of the attributes of his cat Jeoffry proclaimed its descent from the King James translation of the Hebrew Scriptures and, specifically, such parallel cadences as those of Psalm 150:

> Praise ye the Lord. Praise God in his sanctuary:
>   praise him in the firmament of his power.

Praise him for his mighty acts: praise him
  according to his excellent greatness.
Praise him with the sound of the trumpet: praise him with the psaltery and harp.

These rhythms and rhetorical repetitions, audible also in Blake's prophetic books, resurfaced in the work of the nineteenth-century founder of American poetry, as we know it today. Whitman's elegy for an unknown soldier, "Vigil Strange I Kept on the Field One Night" (p. 1071), may end with a traditional image of the rising sun, like Milton's "Lycidas" (p. 410), but its cadences are those of the Hebrew Scriptures he read as a boy:

And there and then and bathed by the rising sun, my son in his grave, in his rude-dug grave I deposited,
Ending my vigil strange with that, vigil of night and battle-field dim,
Vigil for boy of responding kisses, (never again on earth responding,) Vigil for comrade swiftly slain, vigil I never forget, how as day brighten'd,
I rose from the chill ground and folded my soldier well in his blanket,
And buried him where he fell.

Whitman's breakaway from the prevailing poetic forms of his time was truly revolutionary, but certain traditional techniques he would use for special effect: the concealed well / fell rhyme that gives his elegy its closing chord, for example, or the bounding anapests of an earlier line:

Óne lóok | Ĭ bŭt gáve | whĭch yŏur déar | ey̆es rĕtúrn'd |
  wĭth ă lóok | Ĭ shăll név | ĕr fŏrgét . . .

The poetic revolution that Whitman initiated was continued by Pound, who wrote of his predecessor:

It was you that broke the new wood,
Now is a time for carving.

Pound, the carver, unlike Whitman, the pioneer, came to open forms by way of closed forms, a progression reflected in the first four sections of Pound's partly autobiographical portrait of the artist, "Hugh Selwyn Mauberley" (p. 1298). Each section is less "literary," less formal than the last, quatrains with two rhymes yielding to quatrains with one rhyme and, in section 4, to Whitmanian free verse. A similar progression from the mastery of closed forms to the mastery of open forms can be seen in the development of poets such as Lawrence, Eliot, Auden, Lowell, Rich, and Plath (pp. 1284, 1340, 1465, 1592, 1791, 1836, respectively).

Pound may have called himself a carver, but he, too, proved a pioneer, opening up terrain that has been more profitably mined by his successors than the highlands, the rolling cadences explored by Smart, Blake, and Whitman. Pound recovered for poets territory then inhabited only by novelists, the low ground of everyday speech, a private rather than a public language. He was aided by Williams, who, in a poem such as "The Red Wheelbarrow," used the simplest cadences of common speech to reveal the extraordinary nature of "ordinary" things:

> so much depends > upon
>
> a red wheel
> barrow
>
> glazed with rain > water
>
> beside the white
> chickens.

Each line depends upon the next to complete it, indicating the interdependence of things in the poem and, by extension, in the world. "The Red Wheelbarrow" bears out the truth of Auden's statement that in free verse "you need an infallible ear to determine where the lines should end."

Other Forms of Poetry

Probably no century of the sixty since people began writing saw more experimentation in the arts generally, and in poetry particularly, than the last. The twentieth-century pioneers of what came to be known as the Confessional, Imagist, L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E, and Objectivist "schools" of poetry defined these modes by aesthetic or philosophic criteria, rather than by any distinct formal characteristics (that would qualify them for inclusion in this essay).

By contrast, the twentieth century witnessed the development of at least five other categories of experimental poetry that can be defined by their formal characteristics:

1. Prose poetry originated in nineteenth-century France, reaching perhaps its highest point in the work of Charles Baudelaire and Arthur Rimbaud. A prose poem may have any or all of the features of the lyric, except that it is set out on the page for the eye—though not the ear—as prose. Hill's "Mercian Hymns" may look like prose, but the poet insists that his lines are to be printed exactly as they appear on pp. 1833–34; and the reader's ear will detect musical cadences no less linked and flowing than in good free verse, with which prose poetry has much in common.

2. Found poetry, a twentieth-century offshoot of prose poetry, converts a passage or passages of someone else's prose—from a novel, a newspaper, even an advertisement—into a poem. This may involve some modification, like that described, for example, in Brownjohn's footnote to his poem "Common Sense" (p. 1829).

3. Shaped poetry has a distinguished lineage, extending from ancient Greece to modern England and America. Eye and ear together are never more dramatically engaged than in the reading of shaped poems such as Herbert's "Easter Wings" (p. 368), Hollander's "Swan and Shadow" (p. 1775), and Corn's "A Conch from Sicily" (p. 1930).

4. Concrete poetry is an exception to the generalization at the start of this essay: "A poem is a composition written for performance by the human voice." (All generalizations are false, as the French say, including this one.) The term concrete poetry was coined by a group of Brazilian poets in 1952 to cover a loose category of verbal explorations by avant-garde artists and poets around the world. These range from ingenious typographic structures that, unlike the shaped poems mentioned above, cannot be "voiced"—Mahon's "The Window" (p. 1923), for example—to Jonathan Williams's "Three ripples in Tuckasegee River," which can:

TSI KSI TSI
KSI TSI KSI
TSI KSI TSI

The poet's note to this says: "Tsiksitsi is a Cherokee onomatopoeia for the sound of running water."

5. Sound poetry, extending the latter, more abstract form of concrete poetry into a kind of music, has been called "the ultimate performance poetry." Its performative nature is engagingly demonstrated by Edwin Morgan's poem "Interview," which begins:

—When did you start writing sound-poetry?

—Vindaberry am hookshma tintöl ensa ar'er.
Vindashton hama haz temmi-bloozma töntek.

—I see. So you were really quite precocious.
And did your parents encourage you?

—Zivva mimtod enna parahashtom ganna,
spod zivva didtod quershpöt quindast volla!
Mindetta brooshch quarva tönch bot.
Spölva harabashtat su!

Suggestions for Further Reading

Poets have been making poems for as long as composers have been making music or carpenters furniture, and just as it would be unreasonable to expect to find the lore and language of music or carpentry distilled into one short essay, so there is more to be said about the making and appreciating of poems than is said here. The fullest treatment of the subject is to be found in A History of English Prosody from the Twelfth Century to the Present Day, by George Saintsbury (3 vols., New York, 1906–10), and the Princeton Ency- clopedia of Poetry and Poetics, edited by Alex Preminger, Frank J. Warnke, and O. B. Hardison, Jr. (Princeton, 1965; enl. ed., 1974). More suitable for students are The Making of a Poem: A Norton Anthology of Poetic Forms, edited by Mark Strand and Eavan Boland (New York, 2000), The Poem's Heartbeat, by Alfred Corn (Ashland, Ore., 1997), An Introduction to English Poetry, by James Fenton (London and New York, 2002), Poetic Meter and Poetic Form, by Paul Fussell (New York, 1965; rev. ed., 1979), The Structure of Verse, edited by Harvey Gross (New York, 1966; rev. ed., 1979), Rhyme's Reason: A Guide to English Verse, by John Hollander (New Haven, 1981; enl. ed., 1989), The Poetry Handbook: A Guide to Reading Poetry for Pleasure and Practical Criticism, by John Lennard (Oxford and New York, 1996), and the appropriate entries in A Glossary of Literary Terms, by M. H. Abrams (New York, 1957; 6th ed., 1990), and The Oxford Companion to Twentieth-Century Poetry, edited by Ian Hamilton (Oxford and New York, 1994). Each of these has its own more detailed suggestions for further reading.

JON STALLWORTHY

Poetic Syntax

In Alexander Pope's "The Rape of the Lock" (5.47; p. 619), there is a line few native speakers of English can grasp on first reading: " 'Gainst Pallas, Mars; Latona, Hermes arms." What do we make of such a line, which is punctuated as a self-contained unit of thought? And why does it occur in the work of a poet renowned for his elegance and clarity of expression? The answer, or at least one answer, is that Pope is using poetic syntax to mimic the hurried confusion that soldiers experience in battle. Describing a moment when two pairs of Greek gods are arming themselves to fight each other, as related in Homer's Iliad, Pope adapts a classic syntactic pattern with a Greek name—zeugma—for his own poetic purposes. Zeugma occurs when a single verb governs several parallel words or clauses (verbal units, discussed below on p. 2056). Using a pattern that some but not all of his English-speaking readers would have recognized, Pope makes a densely compressed line that slows any reader down, impeding easy comprehension. But perhaps that is part of Pope's aim, as he constructs a linguistic analogue for certain aspects of the imagined battle scene. In so doing, Pope uses syntax not only to communicate ideas but also to create certain dramatic and meaningful effects by the very structure of his lines.

What Is Syntax?

Syntax has been defined in many ways; we can begin our own inquiry into the theory and various historical practices of poetic syntax by saying that it concerns transactions between poets and their audiences—readers and listeners—about the meanings of certain sequences of words. The meanings emerge as words unroll in time and also—if we are reading the poem—in space. But meaning is also a function of how words and groups of words hark back to earlier ones, sometimes with the effect of suspending or even contesting time's forward motion.

The word syntax, from the Greek words syn (together) and tax (to arrange), denotes the "orderly or systematic arrangements of parts or elements." At the most general level, these elements involve symbols, including mathematical ones, that are arranged to create propositions or statements. The symbols that matter most for poetic syntax are words and groups of words; but punctuation marks, line shapes, stanza forms, metrical schemes, and rhyme patterns are also important for understanding poetic syntax as an arrangement of words that generates meaningful statements.

When we are discussing poetry, syntax may refer either to actual arrangements of words or to the rules of grammar and conventions of word order that are reflected—but also sometimes challenged—in such arrangements. We usually think of rules as governing behavior, and syntactic rules do govern the behavior of statements in various languages. In the domain of poetry, however, notions about governance, obedience, and order often exist in counterpoint to notions about the aesthetic as well as the social values of certain kinds of unruliness—those traditionally discussed under the rubric poetic license. Poetic syntax, therefore, is a slippery and even in some ways a contradictory topic, for while we are thinking about syntax as an orderly arrangement of verbal elements according to the conventions of a particular language, we also need to be thinking about poetic syntax as the making of significant disorder within a language—and often with allusions to other languages and their rules or practices of syntax. We can highlight a paradox inherent in any attempt to define poetic syntax by comparing poetic syntax to a game with complex rules that include—under certain circumstances—the option to break the rules.

Poets have played the syntactic game for a long time, often in competition with each other as well as with real and imagined audiences. In this game, some syntactic rules have changed; but many retain signs of the close historical links between English and Latin, two very different languages that nonetheless share many words as well as many ways of defining what constitutes syntactical "correctness." For students of poetic syntax, the most important difference between English and Latin is that in English, meaning depends on certain words being neighbors to one another, whereas in Latin, proximity and distance between words matters little for understanding most written statements. In Latin, a highly inflected language, endings of words (suffixes) tell us a great deal about which words in a given statement go with which other words; the endings of nouns, adjectives, and verbs change (are "inflected") according to their function in a given statement. English is a much less inflected language, although certain words need to "agree" with each other, as is true in Latin and many other languages too: singular nouns take singular verbs, for instance. In English, however, the most important determinant of meaning is the order of words, individually or in groups. The contrast can be summed up this way: in Latin you can tell your friend that she has hit the nail on the head by saying "rem acu tetigisti" or "tetigisti acu rem." But in English, you cannot perform the same linguistic operation without severe semantic consequences: there is a considerable difference between saying that you hit the nail and saying that the nail hit you.

Poets in English play incessantly with normal patterns of word order, thus creating a multitude of interesting, witty, logically subtle, and often surprising effects requiring us to ponder parallels between words and groups of words sometimes more widely separated from each other than they would be in an ordinary prose statement. Some poets in English use syntactic arrangements in ways that challenge the reader's expectations about word order; alternatively or additionally, some poets build sentences with multiple parts more complexly related to each other than they would be in most modern English speech or writing. To participate in the syntactic games poets typically play, we need some shared terms for describing the elements that poets arrange in orderly—but also apparently disorderly—fashion.

Parts of Syntax

Sentences and Words

The first rule of the poetic game of syntax as it is represented in an anthology like this one, which includes a wide range of poems written at many times in many forms of English, is that most poets use the grammatical unit called the sentence as a major unit of meaning, along with—but often in counterpoint to—the unit of the poetic line or the unit of the stanza (see "Versification," p. 2040). The sentence is the largest meaning-bearing unit of syntax, while the word is the smallest. Neither unit can be easily defined. This is so because both sentences and words can be compounded and divided in various ways that become more complex the more closely we look at them across the arc of history. (Because English has changed so much over time, in other words, we can't safely assume that modern rules apply in centuries-old texts; as best we can, we need to bring history into our readings.)

Sentences are sometimes defined as units that have subjects and predicates—in the simplest cases, a noun-subject and a predicate consisting only of a verb (Jill runs). In the most common type of English sentence, a noun working as a subject is followed by a verb, which leads to (and conceptually affects, acts on) a noun, which may or may not be modified and which is called a direct object: the bird eats the worm or, more elaborately, Edwin Muir's "The grasses threw straight shadows far away" ("Childhood"; p. 1337).

In a second very common sentence type, the subject is followed by a predicate that complements (refers back to) the subject. In this kind of sentence, the verb is usually a form of to be (or to seem) and there is no direct object; instead, a predicate complement tells us something about the subject, as in the first line of Dryden's "Mac Flecknoe" (p. 517): "All human beings are subject to decay"; another example is T. S. Eliot's line "I am not Prince Hamlet, nor was meant to be" ("The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock"; p. 1343); yet another is A. R. Ammons's wonderful opening to "Pet Panther" (p. 1700): "My attention is a wild / animal." This type of sentence lends itself to reflections about identity and to metaphor-making.

In yet a third type of sentence, the subject is followed by a verb that takes neither a direct object nor a predicate complement. Because they neither act on a direct object nor reflect back on the subject, such verbs are called intransitive: Money talks, for example, or Jill faints. A more elaborate example comes again from Eliot: "The winter evening settles down / With smell of steaks in passageways" ("Preludes"). Some verbs are always intransitive, while others can be either intransitive or transitive. If a duck flies overhead, the verb is intransitive; if I fly my plane to Reno, the verb is transitive. (When in doubt, check the dictionary.)

Some modern poets and philosophers prefer sentences with transitive verbs to all others. Indeed, early in the last century, a philosopher named Ernest Fenellosa, who was a student of Chinese poetry and a major influence on Ezra Pound, urged poets writing in English to strive for concreteness by avoiding the verb to be and intransitive verbs. Arguing that the "transfer of power" is a basic truth of nature, Fenellosa maintained that the proper work of poetic syntax is to show an agent (subject) performing an act (transitive verb) on an object, as in Farmer pounds rice (Davie, Articulate Energy, 36).

Fenellosa's theory can be contested on many counts, but it has the virtue of helping us understand why even those modern English-language poets who seem to wage war on the rules of grammar and punctuation nonetheless rely on the traditional subject/verb/direct object sentence as a basic building block of their poems. This is so, paradoxically, even in cases where the poem does not seem to include full sentences (see "Nominal Syntax" below, p. 2060). Because poets know that competent readers of English expect sentences, poets can assume that readers will work to create a sentence even when none seems to exist at first glance. Such work (which can also be seen as play) occurs when we reread the line by Pope quoted at the beginning of this essay: " 'Gainst Pallas, Mars; Latona, Hermes arms." Why do we eventually decide that "arms" is a verb and not a noun in this poetic sentence, which is chock-full of inert proper names and which doesn't give us a verb where we would normally expect it to be? The answer, or one answer, is that Pope expects us to resolve the "confusion" of his fighting gods into a kind of peace: the sense offered by the sentence. Aided by a knowledge of syntax, we can see not only that "arms" in this line functions as a verb, but also that it functions retroactively, as it were, serving as the intransitive verb for both parts of the statement. We can translate it into prose as Mars [arms] against Pallas; Hermes arms against Latona. Armed with a knowledge of syntax, and willing to expend time on translating or paraphrasing Pope's impacted statement, we can win meaning from his odd arrangement of words.

Although some poets (and English teachers) share Fenellosa's preference for sentences with a subject, an active verb, and a direct object, many poets vary their sentence structures to capture different shades of thought about action and passion—and to create subtly varied rhythms. Consider, for example, the opening stanza of Kenneth Koch's "Permanently" (p. 1691), which illustrates all three basic types of English sentence structure and concludes with special praise for one of them. Can you identify each type?

> One day the Nouns were clustered in the street.
> An Adjective walked by, with her dark beauty.
> The Nouns were struck, moved, changed.
> The next day a Verb drove up, and created the Sentence.*

As Koch's lines remind us, many sentences are little narratives; in them, something happens, a story is told, time passes in a consequential way. At the end, we pause, and that pause has been signaled, in writing since the late Middle Ages, with a period. This mark is the graphic equivalent of a drop in the voice or a time for breathing between thoughts. The word period has many historical meanings. One denotes the sentence itself; another denotes a particular kind of sentence, in which several subordinate clauses build toward a main clause.

Clauses

A clause is a verbal unit that may look like, may even be, a sentence because both contain subjects and predicates. Jill runs home is both a clause

*Line 1: subject + predicate complement (Nouns / were clustered).
Line 2: subject + intransitive verb (Adjective / walked by).
Line 3: subject + predicate complement (Nouns / were struck, moved, changed).
Line 4: subject + intransitive verb (Verb / drove up) and subject + transitive verb + direct object (Verb . . . / created / the Sentence).

and a sentence. But we understand the sentence to be the larger or "containing" unit and a clause to be the smaller or "component" unit. This is because a sentence may contain more than one clause. The "periodic" sentence, mentioned above, has one main (or independent) clause and any number of subordinate clauses (When she remembered the time, which she did when the bell rang, Jill ran home). Some sentences have two (or more) main clauses, although in such cases, the term main (again, or independent) loses some of its conventional meaning. Clauses in such sentences are coordinate and therefore, in truth, only semi-independent. They are sometimes connected by certain punctuation marks other than the period; today, independent clauses are usually yoked by the semicolon, but in older writing, the colon often connects clauses that are independent but nonetheless closely related. Alternatively, such clauses may be connected by coordinating conjunctions such as and, but, so, for. An example of such a conjunction occurs in Denise Levertov's poem "The Closed World":

> The house-snake dwells here still > under the threshold
> but for months I have not seen it. . . .

A subordinate clause has a subject and a predicate, but cannot stand alone in (or as) a sentence. Such clauses appear in various positions in complex sentences—some precede, others follow, a main clause, and some are embedded in main clauses in ways that blur the grammatical and conceptual distinction between independence and dependence. Subordinate clauses often elaborate, qualify, or even undermine an idea or image in the main clause. In many English poems, clauses are building blocks of thought that invite the reader to look back at the beginning of the sentence, to do a mental double take, in order to grasp the logical relations among a sentence's multiple parts.

Subordinate clauses play syntactic roles similar to those played by three parts of speech: the noun, the adverb, and the adjective. Modern handbooks of grammar will give you full lists of the "joining words" that typically introduce the different kinds of subordinate clauses; adverbial clauses, for instance, usually follow subordinating conjunctions such as after, although, as, as if, because, whether, while. Shakespeare's Sonnet 106 (p. 265) begins with such an adverbial clause: "When in the chronicle of wasted time / I see descriptions of the fairest wights. . . ." Adjectival clauses, modifying a noun or pronoun, are typically introduced by relative pronouns (that, which, who, whom, whose) or by relative adverbs (when, where, why). Shakespeare's Sonnet 116 ("Let me not to the marriage of true minds"; p. 266) uses an adjectival clause in its second main clause: "Love is not love," Shakespeare writes, "which alters when it alteration finds." Here, the subordinate clause follows and explains the contradictory proposition of the main clause (a good example, by the way, of the kind of predicate complement clause that Fenellosa thought poets should avoid).

The lines illustrate not only an adjectival clause at work but also the complex relation that can exist between main and subordinate clauses. When we read Shakespeare's lines carefully, we mentally reorder the syntactic elements to place the subordinate, or "dependent" (from the Latin pendere, hanging), clause between, rather than after, the subject and its predicate complement, which is of course also "love": the same word but different in syntactic function. If we visualize this main clause and its dependent one (only part of a much longer sentence in the sonnet), we could diagram the relationship this way:

Such diagramming, which reminds us that in Latin, sub means "beneath," can often be a useful tool for sorting out relations among syntactic parts of poems. (For a fine example of such diagramming, see James Winn's rendering of the opening sentence of Milton's Paradise Lost, which Linda Gregerson reproduces and trenchantly discusses in "Anatomizing Death," 105.)

Adjectival and adverbial clauses are fairly easy to discern because they modify a noun, pronoun, or verb in the main clause and can be diagrammed as hanging from (depending on) a word in the main clause. Noun clauses are harder to spot. They can be introduced by relative pronouns and also by other pronouns such as whoever, whomever, what, whatever, whichever. Moreover, noun clauses can follow many of the same subordinating conjunctions that signal adverbial clauses. The key to identifying noun clauses is to understand their syntactic functions in the poetic sentences with which we are working. Noun clauses may be subjects, direct objects, objects of prepositions, or predicate complements; but they always appear in statements that cannot stand alone. Sometimes, however, we have to excavate these clauses because the poet has omitted the joining or articulating words that would help us see the poem's syntactic skeleton clearly. If we know how the clauses are working syntactically, however, we can catch them; there are many rewards to doing so.

Let's consider Shakespeare's Sonnet 106 (p. 265) as an illustration of how a poet uses interplay among clauses to make meaning. In the version below, to clarify the poem's structure, we have put the beginnings of main clauses (introductory words followed by subjects and verbs) in bold; we have put the beginnings of subordinate clauses in italic.

When in the chronicle of wasted time
I see descriptions of the fairest wights,
And beauty making beautiful old rhyme
In praise of ladies dead and lovely knights,
5 Then, in the blazon of sweet beauty's best,
Of hand, of foot, of lip, of eye, of brow,
I see their antique pen would have expressed
Even such a beauty as you master now.
So all their praises are but prophecies
10 Of this our time, all you prefiguring;
And, for they looked but with divining eyes,
They had not skill enough your worth to sing:
For we, which now behold these present days,
Have eyes to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

Finding the main clause or clauses is the first step in analyzing this or any poem. Having found the poem's head and torso, as it were, we can proceed to finding the subordinate clauses, which can be compared to the poem's limbs. Whether the body arises into (new) life depends in part on who is reading it, how. In this sonnet, we have to wait patiently for a main clause to appear ("I see," in line 7); and when it does, we may not recognize it, for its thought as well as its syntax seem, paradoxically, to depend on those of the initial dependent clause. Although the "when . . . then" structure embodies a careful balance of ideas (each clause gets exactly four lines), the second clause is the main clause: "When" sets up expectations for the thought to be completed, and it is completed, albeit in a way that the rest of the sonnet elaborates and qualifies.

We've found the main subject and verb, and we may well expect to find a direct object too. We do, momentarily, in the phrase "their antique pen." But the syntax soon asks us to correct that idea, for the image of the pen is followed by a verb phrase that makes the pen the subject of a new little story: "I see [that] their antique pen would have expressed / Even such a beauty . . ." Experienced readers will add that (the missing relative pronoun) automatically, but even they will have to engage in some subliminal revision, reversing the usual forward motion of reading (left to right, on the page of a text in English).

What advantage is there to recognizing the first main clause's direct object as a subordinate (noun) clause? Doing so helps us see that the "object" the poet finally sees in his main clause is not really an object, a thing, at all; instead, what the Shakespearean speaker sees (here and elsewhere in his sonnets) is an amazing blending of past and present, of certainty and supposition: a constructed object rather than a natural one. The main clause and its exfoliating direct object thus work to tell us something about the speaker's way of seeing as well as about what he sees. This may interest us as readers, because what the speaker is seeing arises from his interpretation of meanings located in old books (they are to him as he is to us) considered in relation to his present and, by implication, his future.

In line 8, we need to excavate or cocreate another subordinate clause to make sense of the sonnet. As we needed to supply that to see the noun clause serving as the direct object of "I see," so we also need to supply missing words to line 8 to make it work: "Even such a beauty as [the one that] you master now." This subordinate clause, functioning both to rename and to describe the "beauty" that is the direct object of the noun clause functioning as a direct object of "I see," blurs the traditional distinction between adjectival and noun clause. Thus the syntax, particularly the interplay of main and subordinate clauses, contributes to the poem's larger meditation on themes of mastery, competition, and relations of interdependence between past and present, lover and beloved, writer and reader, subject and object of seeing.

In the last six lines, we have more main clauses than in the first eight, and they come more rapidly (and briefly) in the final couplet. They are introduced by coordinating conjunctions that, when singled out, help us see the logical skeleton of the poet's thought: "So," "And," "For." Note, finally, that the embedded subordinate clause in line 11 may fool us into thinking it a main clause ("for," after all, introduces a main clause just two lines later). Upon close analysis, however, we see that the group of words introduced by the first "for" works adverbially, to modify the verb phrase that comes in the next line. "For" is therefore glossed (translated as) "because" by this anthology's editors, not because they have access to some mysterious dictionary unavailable to readers but rather because they have decoded the poem's syntax and come to the conclusion—as you can too—that line 11, after "And," both interrupts and helps explain the poet's claim that his predecessors lacked the skill to praise the speaker's beloved because they could see him or her only by "divining," or imagining, him or her.

Distinguishing between main and subordinate clauses is not always easy; but it is an important skill for players of the syntax game. Equipped with terms for describing syntactic elements precisely, we turn now to other moves poets make with sentences—and with readers' expectations about them.

Moves in the Game

Syntax operates as a kind of promise or contract of expectation between poet and reader, so the use of subordinate clauses to delay a main verb can function as a kind of tease. Milton, for instance, at the opening of Paradise Lost (p. 421), and William Collins, at the opening of "Ode to Evening" (p. 675), give us many lines of complexly interrelated subordinate clauses to ponder—and remember—before we reach the main verb of the first poetic sentence. In Milton's epic, the imperative verb "sing" arrives after five lines; in Collins's ode, the imperative verb phrase "now teach me" arrives only in line 15, after a many-stranded subordinate clause (beginning "If aught . . .") in which the poet seems to attempt to prove to his addressee—the "Evening" personified as "Eve"—that his own "pastoral song" has the power "to soothe thy modest ear."

Poets' relations to their readers are often figured in terms of pleas and commands addressed to a muse, a source of inspiration traditionally gendered female and often addressed as thou. In both Milton's and Collins's poems, the exquisitely delayed arrival of the main verb challenges the reader to participate in the poet's game of call-and-response over a space of time epitomized by the sentence's prolonged unfolding. Milton's opening sentence points back to Genesis and forward to Christ's Second Coming; Collins's opening sentence points back to Milton while also mimicking the gradual coming of evening in a northern, English latitude. The Romantic poet Hannah More, meanwhile, provides an interesting variant on the syntactic pattern of the Miltonic invocation (the poem's opening address to a muse) by addressing an ungendered and plural set of muses ("Airy spirits") in line 1 of her "Inscription in a Beautiful Retreat Called Fairy Bower" (p. 707) while delaying her main verb ("come") to line 7. In other poems, the verb doesn't come at all.

Nominal Syntax

Consider, for example, this very short poem by Ezra Pound:

In a Station of the Metro

The apparition of these faces in the crowd;
Petals on a wet, black bough.

Giving us two noun phrases but no verb, Pound's poem illustrates what some critics have called nominal syntax: the use of noun phrases in a way that asks the reader to make a conceptual or emotional connection between the poem's syntactic parts (Cureton, 322). "In a Station of the Metro" derives from Pound's appropriation of the ancient Japanese haiku for the modern Imagist movement. But if we read these three lines carefully, and with some knowledge of syntactic traditions in English-language poetry, we see that Pound not only provides us with striking images but also plays creatively with the poetic tradition of the delayed opening verb, which is itself related to the oratorical tradition of periodic sentences aimed at keeping the audience in a state of suspense. Pound's poem figuratively has us wait—in a French subway station—for a verb that never arrives. If, however, we play the poet's syntactic game by supplying some conceptual or emotional link between the poems' two major images, which seem to come from two very different worlds—on the one hand that of the bustling city, on the other hand that of nature, or (perhaps) of nature as represented in Japanese art—we will have played a role traditionally ascribed to the poet's muse: that of setting the poet's train of thoughts in motion.

As Pound's poem suggests, even modern poets who use various techniques of sentence fragmentation to challenge poetic tradition as well as conventions of ordinary language-use presuppose that the reader knows sentence rules well enough to appreciate meanings created when expectations are not fulfilled. Such poets dramatize the notion mentioned above: of syntax as a kind of contract between poet and reader. Their shared knowledge of rules, like soccer players' knowledge of the moves of their game, is often barely conscious until it is analyzed (as in a slow-speed replay). And for readers as for athletes, new knowledge often comes when we feel that rules have been bent or broken, and we stop to ask what's wrong.

In the opening stanza of "since feeling is first" (p. 1394), E. E. Cummings seems to justify the breaking of syntactic and other language-use rules:

> since feeling is first
> who pays any attention
> to the syntax of things
> will never wholly kiss you;

But what is Cummings really saying here about paying (or not paying) attention to "the syntax of things"? He is using an old and important poetic technique—what the critic William Empson calls double syntax—to make two quite different statements in this four-line unit ending with a semicolon, a punctuation mark that, as we've seen, typically signals the end of a main clause.

Double Syntax

This occurs when a phrase, line, or group of lines can be read in two different ways in relation to the syntax that precedes and/or follows the unit. In many examples of double syntax, the poet gives us an apparently complete thought—in a syntactic unit that appears to be an independent clause—but then goes on to revise the thought, often in a witty or paradoxical way, by showing us that the unit we thought was complete is part of a larger (and usually more conceptually challenging) syntactic structure, often a sentence.

In Cummings's "since feeling is first," the first three lines can be interpreted as a complex sentence, with a subordinate adverbial clause followed by a main one. The statement emphasizes with a rhetorical question a consequence of an apparently logical opening premise. We can make sense of the first three lines by adding a question mark after line 3 and paraphrasing them thus: Because feeling comes first, that is, is most important in a scale of values, who in her or his right mind would pay any attention to the syntax (orderly or logical arrangement) of things? The question is rhetorical because it assumes a simple answer that everyone agrees on; such questions are often used to imply that everyone consents to an idea that might well merit questioning and even dissent.

Cummings undermines his own poem's rhetorical question (and also the coercive logic of its initial clause) when, in line 4, he offers a phrase that seems, at first, a sentence fragment jarringly unrelated to the first three lines. If, however, we pay attention to Cummings's syntax, we will go back and reread the first three lines in the light of the new thought given in line 4. We can then paraphrase the unit as a whole this way: Since feeling comes first (logically and, in this poem, temporally too), he or she who pays attention to the syntax of things will never kiss you fully or totally. The second, fuller reading requires us to supply a pronoun subject before the word "who"; that word thus becomes a relative pronoun as the opening lines change from asking a simple (and arguably simplistic) rhetorical question into making a more syntactically complex statement.

Word Order Inversions

Many poetic ambiguities, including many of those in examples of double syntax, arise from inversions of the basic transitive sentence, subject/verb/object. The most common of these changes places the direct object before the subject and verb: "A curious knot God made in paradise," Edward Taylor writes, for example, at the beginning of his "Upon Wedlock, and Death of Children" (p. 537). Had Taylor used normal word order for this opening clause—"God made a curious knot in paradise"—he would have lost the opportunity to establish a meaningful and visually striking parallel between his title's first noun, "wedlock," and the word "knot" in his opening line. By putting "wedding" and "knot" into parallel positions, Taylor sets the stage for the conceptual definition of "knot" as "marriage"; but by inverting normal word order to achieve the parallelism, he also subtly introduces another meaning of "knot" developed in the poem: knot as a puzzle, as something that challenges reason and even faith in God's providential plan (note the pun on "knot" and "not"). Here, as in many poems, word order inversion allows the poet to emphasize a certain idea or image by giving it pride of place. The inversion, often accompanied by interesting rhythms and rhymes, works to provoke thought.

In many of the older poems in this anthology, lines that may seem completely obscure at first become clear, even witty, when we unscramble a word order inversion. John Donne's famous poem commanding his mistress to undress and make love to him begins, for instance, with the following independent clause: "Come, Madam, come, all rest my powers defy . . ." If we try to read this as a sentence that uses the most common English pattern, subject/verb/direct object, we will be perplexed, for how can one's "rest" "defy" one's "powers"? If we work at the syntax, however, we will see that the verb form offers a clue that an "inversion" is occurring here. "Defy" goes ("agrees") with a plural subject, not a singular one (you wouldn't say, "My cat defy my dog"). Mentally rearranging Donne's word order, we arrive at a clause that is both grammatically correct and a brilliant introduction to the poem's bawdy, boasting humor: my powers defy all rest. "Rest," we see, turns out to be the direct object, not the subject, of the statement. The subject (in terms of grammar but also of theme) is the speaker's "powers," which, he says, "defy" or resist "rest," either as "sleep" or as masculine "slackness." The poem goes on to develop an intricate association (a curious knot?) between a man's sexual powers and his verbal powers of persuasion.

Edmund Spenser also uses word order inversion to create witty effects that have serious metaphysical implications. Early in his epic poem The Faerie Queene (1.1.8–9; p. 167), he describes his young, inexperienced hero this way:

> Full jolly knight he seemd, and faire did sitt,
> As one for knightly giusts and fierce encounters fit.

The first clause, we see, is a sentence of the type we've classified as a predicate complement; using normal English word order to make the same point, we could say that he seemed a very jolly [i.e., gallant or cheerful] knight. Putting the sentence this way—performing the operation known as "paraphrasing"—is critical to understanding not only Spenser's syntax but also some of the larger themes of his Protestant epic. Indeed, syntax—which in this case requires us to think twice about our first impression of how the hero looks as a soldier—is one of Spenser's main tools for warning the reader not to take appearances as the truth.

In Spenser's Protestant poem, syntax often works to dramatize the value of faith in an "invisible" reality; such faith is accompanied by, indeed grows from, a distrust of sensory impressions in general and of visual images in particular. Advancing his lesson in iconoclasm or distrust of images, Spenser crafts a sentence in which we first see (the words for) "jolly knight"; then we get the sentence's grammatical subject, "he"; and then we get a verb that creates irony at the hero's expense by retroactively questioning the "fit" between the hero's appearance and his inward state of readiness for religious battle. In the narrative that follows, the hero will repeatedly fall into error by believing first impressions.

In Spenser's poem as in many others in this anthology, syntactic inversion acquires resonance when considered along with historical, philosophical, religious, and other determinants of meaning. In his elegy "Adonais" (31–34; p. 880), for example, Percy Bysshe Shelley uses word order inversion in the course of raising some broad questions about theology, history, and politics—questions that require us to move from text to context to interpret syntactically difficult lines. In them, Shelley describes the poet John Milton as

> Blind, old, and lonely, when his country's pride,
> The priest, the slave, and the liberticide,
> Trampled and mocked with many a loathed rite . . .

Which of the nouns preceding the transitive verbs is the subject of the subordinate clause beginning with "when," and which is the object? Two patterns of poetic inversion—subject/object/verb or object/subject/verb—are most common in metrical English poetry. Is the pride of the country performing the actions of trampling and mocking the priest, the slave, and the "liberticide," that is, the killer of liberty? Or are the three figures mentioned in the passage's second line trampling and mocking the kind of pride in his country that Milton felt?

We can't solve this puzzle unless we go beyond the syntax just of these lines to learn something about Milton and about Shelley's views of his precursor, who was finally on the losing side of the English Civil War and who was denounced as a regicide (king killer) by some of his enemies. Once we know that Shelley shared Milton's love of liberty and his scorn for the "rites" of the established English Church and state, we can see that the second paraphrase given above is distinctly preferable to the first: the priest, slave, and liberticide trampled and mocked Milton's pride in his country. We can also now see another possible reading of the lines: the phrase "when his country's pride" can describe Milton, a meaning that shifts our understanding of what is a subordinate, what a main clause here. We can, that is, also paraphrase these lines as saying that the priest, the slave, and the liberticide trampled and mocked Milton when [he was] his country's pride, and they did so with many a loathed rite.

Shelley's syntax is famously fluid. Indeed, some have denounced it as incoherent. Others have defended it by arguing that Shelley's poetry creates "the vocabulary and syntax" of a new vision of reality (Simpson, 82). For both philosophical and political reasons, Shelley wanted to blur traditional distinctions between subjects and objects; his syntax reflects that interest. In the case we have just examined, the syntactic obstacles to (immediate) comprehension dramatize the ongoing competition between different political views of liberty in England and challenge the reader to resolve the competition in a way that rejects one possible reading to respect others more consonant with what we can glean from many sources about Shelley's—and Milton's—views of liberty.

Because the significant ambiguities in a poem's syntax may be historically motivated, they often send us to other poems by the same author, other poems by authors we know or suspect that our poet read, and even to the larger texts of history, which include ongoing political, theological, and literary debates. Ambiguities of poetic syntax also invite us to consider other meaningful aspects of poems such as rhythm, stanza forms, line breaks, and punctuation. These phenomena are no less important to poems we hear read aloud, or sung, than they are to poems we encounter primarily through the eye. But when we read poems on the page, we necessarily confront the myriad ways in which printers and editors, in tandem with the poems' original authors, shape what we see. Our very perception of some poetic ambiguities depends on the presence or absence of judgments by other readers about, for instance, punctuation marks and spelling. With older poems in particular, punctuation marks may represent a printer's or an editor's interpretation of a line. Conventions of punctuation have changed over time, and the meaning of punctuation is always open to interpretation whether or not we possess a material text thought to represent an author's intent—which, in any case, may have changed in his or her own lifetime as a reader of his or her own poems. In any case, it is appropriate to end this introduction to poetic syntax with some brief examples of syntactic analysis linked to questions about punctuation, about the poem's mode of being as a (reproducible) material object, and about acts of interpretation—including those of editors and other readers—as moves in a game without closure.

The Game of Interpretation

Emily Dickinson

When poems exist in multiple manuscript versions, editors necessarily make interpretive decisions about syntax simply by deciding which version to print. This is strikingly the case for editors of Emily Dickinson, since Dickinson published few of her poems during her life and left almost two thousand poems—in various groupings (including more than forty hand-bound booklets called "fascicles") and in various kinds of drafts (including scrawls on the backs of envelopes)—at her death. Many poems exist in several different forms (available at www.emilydickinson.org and in the variorum edition by R. H. Franklin). In some Dickinson poems, the presence or absence of a certain punctuation mark contributes to rich opportunities for interpretive debate. Compare, for example, two versions of her poem "A Bird, came down the Walk" (no. 359 [328]; p. 1116). In one version, printed in R. H. Franklin's reading edition of Dickinson's poems and in this anthology, the complex relation between the bird and the poem's speaker—an "I"/eye looking at the bird as the bird is looking at the speaker—is rendered as follows in the third stanza and the beginning of the fourth:

He glanced with rapid eyes,
That hurried all abroad -
They looked like frightened Beads, I thought,
He stirred his Velvet Head. -

Like one in danger, Cautious,
I offered him a Crumb . . .

In another version of this poem, however—a version printed in many modern anthologies—the transition between the third and fourth stanzas occurs without any punctuation. This editorial choice changes the poem's syntax and, in so doing, invites debate about how we perceive the relation between two creatures, the bird and the human speaker, caught in the act of looking at each other:

He stirred his Velvet Head

Like one in danger, Cautious,
I offered him a Crumb

The absence of punctuation between the stanzas in this version of the poem allows us initially to read the new stanza as part of the preceding clause, in which the subject is "he," the bird. Reading on, however, we see that the new stanza's opening line can also be understood as belonging to a new clause, one with "I," the speaker, as its subject. This ambiguity creates an unsettling effect, making the reader go back and forth between syntactic alternatives in a conceptual movement subtly likened—through the poet's craft—to the bird's head movements or to the dizzying exchanges of gazes, and of fears, between human and bird. Like the earlier example from Cummings's "since feeling is first," this version of Dickinson's poem gives us two readings that are equally plausible in syntactic terms; the second reading, however, which necessarily encompasses our consideration of the first, is more complex, in part because the idea of a human in danger when offering a crumb to a bird is less commonsensical than the idea of a bird feeling in danger when approaching a human. This bird, however, has been described earlier in the poem as biting a worm "in halves" and as eating "the fellow, raw," while not knowing he is being watched by the speaker. The poem as a whole creates a coolly terrifying atmosphere in which the possibility arises that the speaker is in no less danger from an unknown "watcher" than the bird is. Double syntax works to slow us down and make us aware of an unfamiliar world where some "hidden purpose," as the poet Thom Gunn calls it, causes such creatures as birds to look, by the poem's end, like butterflies leaping "off Banks of Noon" and landing without splashes in an alien element where they may live or die "as they swim."

In another poem by Dickinson, "On a Columnar Self" (no. 740 [789]; p. 1121), we have to intervene more actively to make the double syntax work; here, as is often the case in poetic interpretation, we must supply either a missing word or a punctuation mark to make sense of the lines:

On a Columnar Self—
How ample to rely
In Tumult—or Extremity—
How good the Certainty

That Lever cannot pry—
And Wedge cannot divide
Conviction—That Granitic Base—
Though none be on our side—

We can read the first stanza as an independent syntactic unit if we mentally supply a period after "Certainty"; then we take "That Lever" as the subject of a new sentence. Alternatively (and, as is typical for double syntax, in addition), we may take the absence of a period after "Certainty" as license to interpret "That Lever" as a relative clause modifying "Certainty": in this case, we supply the word which after "Certainty," conceptually bridging the stanza break and thus making the poem's first two stanzas into building blocks, it seems, for a "columnar" self that consists of yoked pieces. Read as a whole, however, the poem resists giving us a simple answer to the implied question of whether the self is divided or undivided, singular or plural. (Read on—see what you can make of the syntactic options created by the absence of a punctuation mark after "divide." Does the poem's third stanza resolve the question of what kind of "column" the "self" is? As you reread, note that the poem's variable metrical pattern of trimeter and tetrameter lines contributes to its questions about the shape and nature of a "columnar self.")

John Keats

Consider the famous opening line of John Keats's "Ode on a Grecian Urn" (p. 938): "Thou still unravished bride of quietness. . . ." Does the word "still" function as an adjective or an adverb? In other words, is the urn, here addressed as "thou" and thus given qualities of personhood, "still" in the sense of unmoving (the adjectival meaning), or is the urn "still unravished," with "still" in the adverbial sense of as yet, which, in connection with "unmoving," shades into not yet ravished?

To appreciate Keats's use of "still," we will need not only to recognize that ambiguous part of speech in the ode's first line but also to ponder it in relation to the rest of this ode, which goes on to explore the idea of "ravished" in two different senses: as ecstatically delighted; and as violated, raped. The poem is about an apparently timeless and inanimate painted object, which is personified as a bride and hence likened to the "maidens loath," struggling to escape pursuers, in one of the scenes painted on the urn; the urn is also likened to the heifer painted on the urn and described as "lowing," though the poet cannot hear her voice and cannot be sure whether or not she is being led to death as a victim of sacrifice. Keats's ode, like Shakespeare's Sonnet 106, uses syntactic ambiguity to slow us down as we ponder a poem about time's passing and the art that succeeds—but only partially and paradoxically—in escaping death.

Thomas Gray

Thomas Gray, who died some twenty years before Keats was born, also wrote an ode about a painted vase; and his poem too uses syntactic ambiguity to enrich a meditation on the relation between visual (unmoving) artifacts and poetry, an inherently temporal mode of art. In some versions, the "Ode (On the Death of a Favorite Cat, Drowned in a Tub of Goldfishes)" (p. 668) begins with the following lines:

'Twas on a lofty vase's side,
Where China's gayest art had dyed
  The azure flowers that blow;
Demurest of the tabby kind,
The pensive Selima reclined,
  Gazed on the lake below.

Upon first reading these lines, we probably take "reclined" as an intransitive verb telling us what the cat did. As we go on to read line 6, however, we encounter a fine instance of double syntax enabled by punctuation, for we must revise our understanding of the initial five lines to comprehend the syntax of line 6. Either we mentally supply and, taking "reclined" and "gazed" as a compound verb phrase; or we retroactively interpret "reclined" as a past participle—a verb used as an adjective—describing the cat's position and thus creating a witty but melancholy joke: the cat that will, we know from the title, fall into that "lofty" painted vase and drown is here caught, through the two possible interpretations of "reclined," between life and death. A cat that can recline is alive; a cat "reclined" is perhaps already dead. In yet a third alternative, suggested by poem as a whole, the cat may exist in that strange state of suspension between life and death that is created by art. This paradoxical state, implied by the pun on "dyed" and died, is neatly captured in the name of a certain genre of paintings: still life.

The ambiguity of "reclined" adds further shades of meaning to the poem's opening description of the cat on the side of a vase. What does that preposition mean? We might read it as suggesting that the cat is painted on the vase. We may firmly reject that possibility when we get to "gazed," in line 6, and stanza 2's description of the cat's tail "declaring" her "conscious joy"; this is (or was) evidently a real, moving cat, not a painted one—and hence her reclining can be pictured as a lively, comic, even wildly acrobat act of being at rest. And yet this poem is an ode that the title declares is "on the death" of a favorite cat; how does that "on" relate to the "on" of the opening line? The poem as a whole re-creates, reanimates, something long dead and still, exploring paradoxes of stillness and incipient movement similar to those in Keats's "Ode on a Grecian Urn." There, as we've seen, a scene painted on an old vase prompts the poet to reflect on the ways in which an artwork arrests time's passage while also testifying to time's power. Gray's ode also invites us to ponder the relations between artistic representations (verbal and visual), and (what counts) as reality, or life.

The tiny bit of double syntax at the end of Gray's opening stanza, which invites us to do a double take, to revise our understanding of the relation between verbs and adjectives, terms of motion and of stasis, disappears when modern editors add a comma to line 5, as many have done when reprinting Gray's poem for busy twentieth- and twenty-first-century readers. Consider the difference:

> Demurest of the tabby kind,
> The pensive Selima[,] reclined,
> Gazed on the lake below.

Does this difference matter? Many readers have chosen not to pause on this comma, or its absence, because interpretations based on the presence or absence of one mark of punctuation lead into territories where it's famously hard to be sure one is right. In many historical examples of double syntax, including, notoriously, Shakespeare's sonnets, we can never be certain whether a given punctuation mark—or the absence thereof—reflects the writer's original intention or a printer's interpretation (or error). Uncertainty about authorial intention need not bother us if we accept the idea that meanings are culturally conditioned and the game of interpretation often requires us to make informed guesses.

John Dryden

Like Gray, John Dryden exploits the syntactic ambiguities lurking in past participles. Verbs arrested to modify nouns, participles often help poets explore the relations between ideas of stillness and ideas of motion; when participles are used in such a way that they may also be interpreted as verbs in the past tense, they can help raise questions about bondage, freedom, and human agency. In lines 939–41 of his long poem Absalom and Achitophel, Dryden's character King David breaks a long silence with the following lines about how he plans to punish his rebellious son Absalom:

> Thus long have I by native mercy swayed
> My wrongs dissembled, my revenge delayed;
> So willing to forgive the offending age,
> So much the father did the king assuage. (my emphasis)

Modern editors—including those of this anthology (see p. 515)—often simplify this statement by adding explanatory commas around the phrase "by native mercy swayed," which makes it definitively into an adjectival modifier; the punctuation erases the possibility that David is saying that he has ruled for a long time in a merciful way while at the same time pretending not to see the wrongs done to him—or, in another reading allowed by the syntax, ruling in an apparently merciful way while dissembling the wrongs he does to others. In the form in which they were originally printed in 1681, the lines allow for several very different interpretations (the critic William Empson counts seven!), depending on whether the reader takes "swayed," "dissembled," or "delayed" as the main verb of the first clause. If we reread the clause aloud, trying out each possible main verb with the other two then becoming past participles, we see how subtly our perceptions of David's character change, along with our estimates of the harshness with which he is likely now to undertake the punishment of the rebel. Since Dryden's poem uses the biblical story to figure a contemporary drama of political power (David represents King Charles II of England, Absalom his illegitimate son Monmouth), syntactic ambiguity is a potentially important protective shield for the poet attempting to analyze the relations between what a ruler "shows" and what he "dissembles" as he contemplates "revenge." In removing syntactic ambiguities in some political poems of the past such as Dryden's, modern editors may, ironically, be blunting one of the weapons poets have traditionally used to avoid censorship.

William Blake

For a final example of interpretation enriched by attention to syntax and to punctuation, let's look at William Blake's "The Lamb." One of a series called Songs of Innocence, which Blake eventually combined with the Songs of Experience, this poem was originally published in an illuminated book, a form Blake devised; writing in 1793, he described his illuminated books as the result of a "method of Printing which combines the Painter and the Poet" (Prospectus, cited in Viscomi). Much has been written about Blake's beautiful books, which exist in multiple copies made during his lifetime from his etchings. For our purposes, one of these books' most interesting features is what they show about the interplay of punctuation and syntax in creating ambiguities of meaning. An illustrated poem like the one reproduced on p. 2071 allows us some access to Blake's thoughts about punctuation. The access is only partial, however, because eighteenth-century understandings of punctuation differ from modern ones and because Blake, as his great editor David Erdman observes, often uses punctuation for "rhetorical" purposes rather than to clarify syntax (787). In addition, different marks appear slightly differently in different copies of the illustrated poems; indeed, as Erdman also remarks, it is "impossible to copy Blake exactly" in print because the marks in the illuminated books sometimes "grade into each other" so that, for instance, a comma will be compounded with a question mark, or the difference between a comma and a period will be impossible to determine. Even trained scholars may therefore disagree about how to transcribe (rewrite, copy) a given Blake poem. Moreover, recognizing the gaps between eighteenth-century conventions of punctuation and modern ones, many modern editors feel that an attempt to follow Blake's punctuation exactly will distract readers rather than helping them appreciate the poems. One practical solution to this conundrum is to compare a "modernized" version of a poem by Blake (or by Dickinson or Shakespeare or other poets in this anthology) with a reproduction of a manuscript or early printed version of the text. Such a comparative practice, now much easier than it used to be because old versions of poems are readily viewable on the Web, allows us to see that editing, and even translating a text among different media, generates interpretations we can play with, and against which we can test our own understanding of a poem. A fascinating historical set of transcriptions and illustrations of Blake's poems is available for study at the innovative Web site of the Blake Archives (www.blakearchive.org).

In the case of "The Lamb," there are some interesting differences in punctuation among the more than twenty copies of the combined Songs made before Blake's death; the poem's penultimate line in Blake's version, for instance—"Little Lamb God bless thee"—is followed by a period in some transcriptions, a comma in others, and nothing—perhaps because the illustration's colors extended farther into the text—in still others. All of the illuminated copies, however, are very lightly punctuated, at least by today's standards and in striking contrast to most modern teaching editions of the poem, including the one in this anthology (p. 734). The difference is underscored by the absence of punctuation marks in the poem's opening lines as Blake printed them: "Little Lamb who made thee / Dost thou know who made thee" (see etching). Why is this significant? The presence or absence of punctuation marks in this poem gives us a glimpse into the ongoing history of reading as a process of trying to make sense of challenging poetic statements. The effort of making sense of syntax is, as we've seen, a key move in the game of interpretation. But so is the move of resisting premature submission to common sense. Blake invites us to tolerate, even relish, an experience of syntactic ambiguity abetted by the absence of punctuation and not unlike what John Keats called "negative capability," or "being in uncertainties, mysteries, doubts, without any irritable reaching after fact and reason."

When modern editors add question marks and commas to the opening of Blake's poem, they make sense of it by making it fit the type of English sentence we have so often discussed in this essay. Punctuating Blake's first line with a question mark at the end and (as is usually the case) a comma after the opening words, editors help us grasp the line as an independent (interrogative) clause beginning with an address (an apostrophe) to the lamb: "Little lamb, who made thee?" In this version, the speaker apostrophizes the lamb, and then the speaker poses a grammatically self-contained and immediately comprehensible question: "who" (subject) "made" (verb) "thee" (direct object, referring back to the lamb as initially addressed)?

"The Lamb": plate 8 from Songs of Innocence and of Experience (copy AA), ca. 1815–26 (etching, ink, and watercolor), William Blake (1757–1827) / Fitzwilliam Museum, University of Cambridge, U.K. / www.bridgeman.co.uk

The absence of punctuation marks in Blake's first two lines—an absence echoed, as it were, in the stanza's last two lines—makes the poem much less easily legible than it is in modern editions. Blake's etching leaves open several possible interpretations of the first lines, the first stanza, and the poem as a whole. In Blake's versions, the first line need not be read as a full interrogative sentence. It can also (or instead) be read as having a subject ("little lamb") followed by a subordinate (adjectival) clause describing the lamb as the one who made "thee." Reading the line thus, as part of a larger syntactic unit in which the main verb has yet to appear, we suddenly see the word "thee" in a new light: it could now refer to an addressee who is not the lamb but rather the lamb's creation, the child or adult reader being addressed as "thee" and "thou." But even as we consider this alternative reading, which is an alternative syntax for the poem, supported by different punctuation (a comma after the first line instead of a question mark, for instance), we cannot consider the traditional interpretation of the line or the poem wrong. Nor can we reject yet a third possible reading of the opening line or lines: as a prayerful address to Christ in his guise of lamb. In this reading, the referent for "thou" in the second line would be Christ, and the question the speaker is posing would shift back and forth from one about who made God's human and animal creatures to one about who made the Son of God. Thus the apparently "elementary" little poem opens toward sophisticated theological debates about the relation among God's different "persons": the Christian trinity, like the three pronouns in the poem ("thee," "He," and "I"), is three-in-one, one-in-three.

Our willingness to grant theological complexity to the poem goes hand in hand with a willingness to see its multiple syntactic possibilities as mutually illuminating rather than in competition with each other. The poem's final lines, which ring an echoing change on the opening ones, leave the theological and human questions of identity and origin teasingly open even as Blake chooses (for the first time) to end two lines with periods: one after "name," the other after the final "thee." If we join in this process of cocreating poetic meaning, we could imaginatively punctuate many lines in the poem in several different ways, none of which would conflict with the light punctuation Blake left for us. The poem quietly suggests that the reader is always cocreating the poem: our choices about syntax are choices about meaning. Fortunately, with this poem, making one syntactic choice at one time does not prevent us from making another later—and from attempting to hold all the possibilities in mind at once. The poem remains circular, fluid, teasing, and the final lines continue to solicit different interpretations, signaled here by the added commas:

> Little lamb[,] God bless thee,
> Little lamb God[,] bless thee.

Scorn Not Syntax

In the nineteenth century, one meaning of syntax was "a class in certain English Roman Catholic schools . . . below that called poetry" and often just above a class devoted to the subject of "grammar" (Oxford English Dictionary 2.c.). For modern students and their teachers, the relations among grammar, syntax, and poetry are rarely so orderly as such a curricular sequence suggests. Indeed, for many of us, the words syntax and grammar, like versification, conjure up associations with dryness and discipline: with the acts of scientific analysis that William Wordsworth, in "The Tables Turned" (p. 764), denounced as the work of a "meddling intellect" that "murder[s] to dissect." In this famous poem, part of a dialogue in which Wordsworth adopts different attitudes toward the old question of the relation between reason and emotion in poetry, the speaker seems to praise nature and the mind that is open to nature's gifts as superior to all things that the mind actively produces through science or through art. By allying mental labor with some kind of dissection practiced on the corpses of naturally lovely things, Wordsworth's speaker articulates a feeling many have had at the moment when the work of analyzing a poem (or a picture or a feeling of love) seems to destroy something simple, vital, and whole.

But there is another way to see the work of analyzing poems and, in particular, their syntactic bones. Playing on Wordsworth's title for another poem—"Scorn Not the Sonnet" (p. 804)—and harking back to Edward Taylor's phrase "the curious knot," we could argue for the value of untying syntactic knots as an intellectual exercise that teaches us something about our own relation to language. Analyzing poems, we need not think of ourselves as murderers, or even as surgeons performing an autopsy. Instead, we can think of ourselves as readers with the power to animate poetic meanings and test our cocreations in conversations with other readers. That group includes, of course, poets themselves, both the dead and the living.

Margaret Ferguson

Suggestions for Further Reading

Austin, Timothy R. Language Crafted: A Linguistic Theory of Poetic Syntax. Bloomington: Indiana University Press, 1984.

Borck, Jim S. "Blake's 'The Lamb': The Punctuation of Innocence." Tennessee Studies in Literature 19 (1974): 163–75.

Boroff, Marie. The Language and the Poet: Verbal Artistry in Frost, Stevens, and Moore. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1979.

Brooke Rose, Christine. A Grammar of Metaphor. London: Martin, Seeker, and Warburg, 1958.

Collins, Martha. "On Syntax in Poetry." Field (Spring 1999): 74–84.

Cureton, Richard. "Poetic Syntax and Aesthetic Form." Style 14 (Fall 1980): 318–409.

Davie, Donald. Articulate Energy. 1955. London, Boston: Routledge and Kegan Paul, 1976.

Dillon, George L. "Inversions and Deletions in English Poetry." Language and Style 8.3 (1975): 220–37.

Easthope, Anthony. Poetry as Discourse. London: Methuen, 1983.

Empson, William. Seven Types of Ambiguity. New York: New Directions, 1947.

Erdman, David, ed. "The Punctuation." In The Poetry and Prose of William Blake, rev. ed., 786–87. New York: Doubleday, 1982.

Fairley, Gene. E. E Cummings and Ungrammar. Searingtown, N.Y.: Watermill Publishers, 1975.

Francis, W. Nelson. "Syntax and Literary Interpretation." In S. Chatman and S. Levin, Essays in the Language of Literature, 209–16. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1967.

Franklin, R. H., ed. The Poems of Emily Dickinson, variorum ed. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press (Belknap), 1998.

———. The Poems of Emily Dickinson, reading ed. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press (Belknap), 1999.

Gregerson, Linda. "Anatomizing Death." In Imagining Death in Spenser and

Milton, 95–115. Ed. Elizabeth Jane Bellamy, Patrick Cheney, and Michael Schoenfeldt. New York: Palgrave Macmillan, 2003.

Huddleston, Rodney and Geoffrey K. Pullum, et al. Cambridge Grammar of the English Language. Cambridge, U.K., and New York: Cambridge University Press, 2002.

Kintgen, Eugene R. "Perceiving Poetic Syntax." College English 40.1 (Sept. 1978): 17–27.

Lanham, Richard. A Handlist of Rhetorical Terms. Berkeley: University of California Press, 1991.

Miller, Cristanne. Emily Dickinson: A Poet's Grammar. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 1987.

Nowottny, Winifred. The Language Poets Use. London: Athlon Press, 1962.

Oberhaus, Dorothy Huff. Emily Dickinson's Fascicles: Method and Meaning. University Park, Pa.: Pennsylvania State University Press, 1995.

Simpson, David. Irony and Authority in Romantic Poetry. New Jersey: Rowan and Littlefield, 1979.

Viscomi, Joseph. "Illuminated Printing." In "About Blake" at The Blake Archive <www.blakearchive.org>.

Wasserman, Earl R. The Subtler Language: Critical Readings of Neoclassic and Romantic Poems. 1959. Westport, Conn.: Greenwood Press, 1979.

Biographical Sketches

Fleur Adcock (b. 1934), pp. 1849–53
Fleur Adcock was born in New Zealand, but lived in England until 1947. She was educated at Victoria University, New Zealand, and taught Classics there and at Otago University. In 1963, she moved to London to become a librarian at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Since 1979, she has been a freelance writer based in London, though she has spent time at universities in the north of England, as a Northern Arts Fellow. She has translated works from Romanian and from medieval Latin, and edited the Faber Book of Twentieth-Century Women's Poetry. She was awarded an OBE in 1996, and her Poems 1960–2000 was published in 2000.

Conrad Aiken (1889–1973), pp. 1370–71
Conrad Aiken was born in Savannah, Georgia, and raised there until age eleven, when his father shot Aiken's mother and himself to death. Aiken was sent to live with relatives in Cambridge, Massachusetts. He was educated at Harvard University, where he and his classmate T. S. Eliot began a lifelong, troubled friendship. After traveling extensively in Europe, he settled into a career as a writer. During the 1920s and 1930s, he lived in New York, but he spent much time abroad, mostly in England. In his later years, he lived in Savannah and on Cape Cod, Massachusetts. An exceptionally prolific writer, Aiken published some thirty volumes of poetry, five novels, dozens of short stories, a multitude of essays and reviews, and an autobiography. His Senlin (1918) employs what he called the "symphony" form, where each section of the poem functions like a musical movement.

Agha Shahid Ali (1949–2001), pp. 1958–60
Agha Shahid Ali was born in New Delhi, India, and raised in Kashmir. He was educated at the University of Kashmir, Srinagar; the University of Delhi; Pennsylvania State University; and the University of Arizona, Tucson. He held teaching posts at various institutions, including Princeton and the University of Massachusetts, Amherst. In addition to his own poetry, Ali wrote on T. S. Eliot and translated the work of Faiz Ahmed Faiz from Urdu. One of the few Indians from an Islamic background to write poetry in English, he identified a "triple heritage" of Hindu, Muslim, and Western culture that informs his poems.

A. R. Ammons (1926–2001), pp. 1695–1701
A(rchie) R(andolph) Ammons was born and grew up on a small tobacco farm near Whiteville, North Carolina, and started writing poetry while on a U.S. Navy destroyer escort in the South Pacific. After World War II, he earned a B.A. from Wake Forest University and worked variously as an elementary school teacher, a real estate salesman, an editor, and a sales executive at his father's glassmaking firm. Although he published his first volume, Ommateum (1955), at his own expense, he became over a career that included some thirty volumes of poetry one of the most influential and respected American poets, and one of the few to embark on book-length poems, such as Glare and Garbage. He was long associated with Cornell University.

Simon Armitage (b. 1963), pp. 2021–23
Simon Armitage was born in Huddersfield, England. He studied geography at Portsmouth Polytechnic and took a postgraduate degree in social work at Manchester University. He worked as a probation officer before becoming a full-time writer. His first volume of poems, Zoom!, was published in 1989, and his popularity has grown steadily ever since. A prolific writer and presenter for television, radio, and film, he has also written two novels, Little Green Men and The White Stuff; published a collection of essays about the north of England, All Points North; and coedited The Penguin Anthology of Poetry from Britain and Ireland since 1945. He published Selected Poems in 2001 and The Universal Home Doctor, a new collection, in 2002. He has taught at the Universities of Leeds and Iowa and currently teaches at Manchester Metropolitan University.

Matthew Arnold (1822–1888), pp. 1087–1101
Matthew Arnold was born in Laleham-on-Thames, England, the son of Dr. Thomas Arnold, headmaster of Rugby School, and was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, where he became a close friend of the poet Arthur Clough, whom he later eulogized in "Thyrsis" (1866). In 1851, Arnold became an inspector of schools, a position he held for thirty-five years. His writing on education advocated the study of the Bible and the humanities as the remedy for what he saw as the philistinism and insularity of the times, and he worked indefatigably to improve standards and introduce rigor into the school curriculum. After writing most of his memorable poetry between 1845 and 1867, he turned away from poetry, believing himself unable to convey "Joy." Although he was elected professor of poetry at Oxford University in 1858, other than New Poems (1867) he subsequently published only prose, including Essays in Criticism (1865, 1888) and Culture and Anarchy (1869).

John Ashbery (b. 1927), pp. 1736–40
John Ashbery was born in Rochester, New York, and raised on a farm near Lake Ontario. He was educated at Harvard University, where he wrote his thesis on W. H. Auden, who selected his first book, Some Trees (1956), for the Yale Series of Younger Poets. He received his M.A. from Columbia University and attended New York University before working as a copywriter in New York City. Beginning in 1955, he worked for a decade as an art reviewer in Paris. He has since served as poetry editor of the Partisan Review and art critic for New York and Newsweek magazines. He joined the faculty of Brooklyn College in 1974. In addition to poetry, Ashbery has written three plays and (with James Schuyler) a collaborative novel. Loosely connected to what has been called the New York school—along with Schuyler and fellow poets Frank O'Hara and Kenneth Koch—he frequently adopts and adapts the techniques of musicians as well as Abstract Expressionist and Surrealist painters. Like the work of Gertrude Stein, about whom he has written, his poems are characterized by radical disjunctions. He is one of the most prolific and influential poets of the last half-century.

Anne Askew (1521–1546), pp. 140–41
Anne Askew (or Ascue) was born into an old Lincolnshire, England, family that educated her well. As a young woman, she devoted herself to Bible study and engaged the local clergy in disputes about the interpretation of scripture. Forced into marriage and eventually turned out of doors by her husband, Askew went to London, where she became a friend of Joan Bocher, a Protestant of known heterodoxy. Examined in 1545 for heretical views about the sacraments, she was not found guilty but, in June 1546, was condemned by a special commission that called no jury and no witnesses. The next day, she was tortured; after four weeks, she was burned at the stake. The Protestant bishop John Bale (1495–1563) published two accounts of her examination and death, in 1546 and 1547. John Foxe's Acts and Monuments (1563) contains a description of her sufferings as a Protestant martyr, and ballads about her were written in the seventeenth century.

Margaret Atwood (b. 1939), pp. 1894–99
Margaret Atwood was born in Ottawa, Canada, and raised there and in Toronto. As a child, she spent much time in the woods of northern Quebec, where her father conducted entomological research. Educated at the University of Toronto, Radcliffe College, and Harvard University, Atwood has taught at a number of Canadian universities and has worked as an editor for the Anansi publishing house. Though known primarily as one of Canada's premier novelists, she has also published poetry, short stories, children's books, critical essays, and a study of Canadian literature, and she has edited several collections of verse. She is an active supporter of Amnesty International and other human rights organizations. The subjects of her sometimes futuristic work include the social roles of women, the power dynamics between men and women, and the conflicts between nation and nation.

W. H. Auden (1907–1973), pp. 1465–81
W(ystan) H(ugh) Auden was born in York, England, and educated at Christ Church College, Oxford, where he became a friend of the "Pylon" poets Stephen Spender and Cecil Day Lewis. In the 1930s, Auden embarked on a series of formative travels: to Germany, where he was introduced to Sigmund Freud's work; Iceland, which he visited with the poet Louis MacNeice; Spain, as a Republican sympathizer during the Spanish Civil War; China, with Christopher Isherwood during the Sino-Japanese War; and the United States, to which he emigrated in 1939, taking American citizenship in 1946. He was awarded the Pulitzer Prize in 1948. With the move to America, Auden threw off the conflict between his privileged background and youthful left-wing sympathies that characterized his early poetry, and gradually returned to the Anglican faith of his mother, a change that left a strong imprint on his later work. He also published prose, drama, and (in collaboration with Chester Kallman) libretti. He taught at a number of institutions, including Oxford, where he was professor of poetry from 1956 until 1961. For the next ten years, he divided his time between New York and Europe, but in 1972 he returned to Oxford to live at Christ Church. He diagnosed his century's banalities and horrors with relentless honesty and incisive wit, but also with compassion.

Joanna Baillie (1762–1851), pp. 760–63
Joanna Baillie was born in Lanarkshire, Scotland, the daughter of Dorothea Hunter and James Baillie, a Prebyterian clergyman, later professor of divinity at Glasgow University. At age ten, she was sent to a boarding school in Glasgow. Her father died in 1778. Baillie, her mother, and her sister lived in Lanarkshire until 1784, when they moved to London to keep house for her brother, who had inherited a small medical museum from his uncle, Dr. William Hunter. Baillie was introduced to London literary circles by her aunt, a minor poet, and was friends with the poet Anna Laetitia Barbauld. After her mother's death in 1806, Baillie lived with her sister (when not traveling in England and on the Continent) for the rest of her life. Her Poems appeared in 1790, but during her lifetime she was best-known for her verse dramas, which were published in three volumes (1798–1812) under the title Series of Plays, in which It Is Attempted to Delineate the Stranger Passions of the Mind. One, De Montfort, was staged at Drury Lane in 1800 and featured Sarah Siddons. Edmund Kean took the title role in an 1821 revival. A philanthropic woman, Baillie gave much of her earnings to charity and published A Collection of Poems, Chiefly Manuscript, and from Living Authors (1823) to raise funds for needy acquaintances. Her last book of poems was published only weeks before her death.

Amiri Baraka (LeRoi Jones) (b. 1934), pp. 1856–58
Amiri Baraka was born LeRoi Jones in Newark, New Jersey. He earned a B.A. from Howard University and an M.A. from Columbia University. From 1954 until 1956, he served in the United States Air Force. Since then he has taught at, among other schools, the New School for Social Research and Columbia University and has devoted himself to various experimental artistic ventures and radical political causes. He was instrumental in the founding of several small magazines; the Black Arts Repertory Theatre, in Harlem; and Spirit House, in Newark. In the 1970s, when he became a Black Muslim and took the name Imamu Amiri Baraka (although he later dropped Imamu), he began to write polemic poetry espousing black nationalism, which he later denounced. In addition to poetry, he has written a novel, a collection of short stories, an autobiography, several plays, and numerous tracts on social issues. From 1979 to 1999, he taught at the State University of New York at Stony Brook.

Anna Laetitia Barbauld (1743–1825), pp. 705–07
Anna Laetitia Barbauld (née Aikin) was born at Kibworth Harcourt, Leicestershire, England, and taught at home by her father, a schoolmaster who became a classical tutor at the new Warrington Academy for Dissenters, an intellectual center where Barbauld spent fifteen years. She married in 1774 and followed her husband to Palgrave, where they managed a school for which she taught and wrote textbooks, one of which, Hymns in Prose to Children (1781), went through thirty editions and was translated into five languages. The Barbaulds left Palgrave in 1785 and settled in London, where Anna devoted herself to writing tracts in support of causes such as dissenting politics, democratic government, public education, and the French Revolution; and to literary work, such as editing the poetry of William Collins, collecting six volumes of the correspondence of Samuel Richardson, and writing prefaces to the entries in all fifty volumes of The British Novelists. In 1773, she published a volume of poems containing works in a variety of genres: the ode, the hymn, the fable, and the satire. In 1808, her husband drowned, having become mentally ill and violent. Barbauld published an anthology for girls, The Female Speaker, in 1811, and a poem, Eighteen Hundred and Eleven, in 1812. The latter was so badly reviewed that she published very little during the final thirteen years of her life.

James K. Baxter (1926–1972), pp. 1701–03
James K. Baxter was born in Dunedin, New Zealand, and educated at Quaker schools in New Zealand and England, the University of Otago, and the University of Victoria at Wellington. He worked as a laborer, journalist, and teacher, and from 1954 until 1960 edited the Wellington magazine Numbers. Following a long battle against alcoholism, he became a Roman Catholic in 1958, and subsequently founded a religious commune and became active in social welfare programs. An extraordinarily prolific writer, Baxter published more than thirty collections of poetry as well as plays and literary criticism. His work shows a deep understanding of complex political and social issues and often attacks exploitation and materialism. Later poems express his appreciation of indigenous Maori culture and disdain for those who threatened it. His final work, based on his experiences in a Maori village called Jerusalem, articulates a fervent religious faith.

Aphra Behn (1640?–1689), pp. 540–49
Different accounts and opinions exist about Aphra Behn's date of birth, parentage, religion, given name, and marital status. Most historians agree, however, that she visited Surinam with her family in her youth, returned to England when the colony was handed over to the Dutch, and was briefly married to a merchant of Dutch extraction. While spying for King Charles II in Antwerp in 1666, she seems to have uncovered a Dutch plot to sail up the river Thames and burn the British fleet; letters survive in which she complains of the king's failure to pay her for her work, and she may have been briefly imprisoned for debt in the late 1660s. Writing plays became her main means of support, and she was one of the most prolific playwrights of the Restoration era. Her first play, The Forced Marriage, was produced in 1670; she subsequently wrote seventeen plays, including many comedies that satirize the consequences of ill-suited marriages. Her one tragedy, Abdelazar (1676), draws on previous dramatic portraits, including Shakespeare's in Othello and Titus Andronicus, of black men who love white women. Her prose romance, Oroonoko, or the Royal Slave (1688), was based on her experiences in Surinam and criticized the enslavement and subsequent torture and execution of a princely black hero whom the white female narrator greatly admires. Behn also wrote occasional poems, elegies, prologues and epilogues for other dramatists, including John Dryden, and erotic pastoral poems such as "The Disappointment." Her tragicomedy set in colonial Virginia, The Widow Ranter, was performed and published the year after Behn died.

Charles Bernstein (b. 1950), pp. 1967–68
Charles Bernstein was born in New York City and educated at Harvard University, where he studied philosophy and was an activist against the Vietnam War. He worked as a commercial writer and editor in health care for twenty years. With Bruce Andrews, he cofounded L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E magazine in 1978, and since then has been a principal figure in the L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E poetry movement and a prominent theorist of radical poetics. He has taught at the State University of New York at Buffalo since 1990.

John Berryman (1914–1972), pp. 1546–52
John Berryman was born John Smith in McAlester, Oklahoma. When he was ten, his family moved to Tampa, Florida, where his father committed suicide, shooting himself outside his son's window. The family moved to Massachusetts, then resettled in New York, where Mrs. Smith married a banker named John Berryman, who adopted her sons. The younger John Berryman was educated at Columbia University and Clare College, Cambridge University, where he studied Shakespeare. A scholar, particularly of Shakespeare, and celebrated teacher, whose students included the poets Donald Justice, Philip Levine, and W. D. Snodgrass, Berryman taught at, among other schools, Harvard University, Princeton University, and the University of Minnesota. He also wrote a biography of Stephen Crane. Dogged by alcoholism and a nervous temperament, he committed suicide in 1972. His major contribution was a series of hundreds of poems in an inventive, eighteen-line form he called "dream songs."

John Betjeman (1906–1984), pp. 1460–63
John Betjeman was born in London and attended Madgalen College, Oxford, which he left without taking a degree. During World War II, he held several posts in the Ministry of Information. He later served as United Kingdom press attaché in Dublin. Betjeman had a lifelong avidity for architecture and devoted considerable energy to the preservation of historic landmarks and scenic views. After 1945, he worked as a freelance writer and journalist and became a celebrated television personality. His many honors included the Queen's Gold Medal for Poetry (1960) and a knighthood (1969). In 1972, he was a popular choice as poet laureate, a post he held until his death.

Earle Birney (1904–1991), pp. 1447–48
Earle Birney was born in Calgary, Alberta, and raised on a farm in Erickson, British Columbia. He worked as a bank clerk, a farm laborer, and a park ranger before attending the University of British Columbia, the University of Toronto, and the University of California at Berkeley, from which he earned a Ph.D. in Old and Middle English. He then taught at the Universities of Utah, Toronto, and British Columbia. During World War II, Birney served with the Canadian Army as a personnel-selection officer and as supervisor of the International Service of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. In addition to poetry, he published novels, radio plays, and literary essays.

Elizabeth Bishop (1911–1979), pp. 1515–28
Elizabeth Bishop was born in Worcester, Massachusetts. After her father's death in 1911 and her mother's permanent hospitalization for mental illness in 1917, Bishop lived with relatives in Nova Scotia and Massachusetts. She was educated at Vassar College, and while still a student met the poet Marianne Moore, who recognized her promise and became her mentor. Her literary friendship with Robert Lowell was also a sustenance for both. Bishop traveled extensively and often addressed questions of travel in her work. In 1952, she settled in Rio de Janeiro with Lota de Macedo Soares, a Brazilian architect and landscape designer; the relationship ended tragically with Soares's suicide, in 1967. Bishop returned to the United States to teach, first at the University of Washington in Seattle, then at Harvard University. In addition to poetry, she wrote short stories and essays; translated from the French, Spanish, and Portuguese; and was a fine amateur painter. During her lifetime, she won the respect of her peers, and since her death she has come to be regarded as among the major poets of the century.

William Blake (1757–1827), pp. 732–47
William Blake was born in London. He attended art schools, including the Royal Academy school, and at age fourteen was apprenticed to an engraver. In 1800, he secured a patron at Felpham, in Sussex, but found the arrangement stultifying. Determined to follow his "Divine Visions," he returned to London. He published numerous collections of poetry, including Songs of Innocence (1789) and Songs of Experience (1794), which were illustrated with his own fantastic etchings. From the 1820s, he devoted himself exclusively to pictorial art. His early work reveals his dissatisfaction with the prevailing literary styles of his day; he took as his models the Elizabethan and early seventeenth-century poets, the Ossianic poems, and the work of William Collins, Thomas Chatterton, and others working outside the prevailing contemporary literary conventions. Between 1795 and 1820, Blake developed a complex mythology to explain human history and suffering and came to see himself as a visionary, prophetic figure, or Bard. His writings in this vein center around the biblical stories of the Fall, the Redemption, and the reestablishment of Eden, but Blake gave these materials his own spin. In his mythos, the Fall is seen as a psychic disintegration that results from the "original sin" of Selfhood, and the Redemption and return to Eden as a restitution of psychic wholeness, a "Resurrection to Unity." His schema centers around a "Universal Man" who incorporates God rather than around a transcendent Being distinct from humanity.

Edmund Blunden (1896–1974), pp. 1404–06
Edmund Blunden was born in London, raised in Yalding, Kent, and educated at Christ's Hospital School, in Sussex. In 1915, he joined the army and was sent to the front in France. Upon his return to England, he briefly attended The Queen's College, Oxford; then moved to London to work as an assistant to J. Middleton Murry at the Athenaeum magazine. For the next thirty years, he led a peripatetic existence, teaching at the Imperial University of Tokyo, the University of Hong Kong, and Merton College, Oxford. Blunden edited collections of poetry by John Clare, Wilfred Owen, and Ivor Gurney that brought about revivals of their flagging reputations. Unlike many poets of World War I, he did not engage in antiwar invective. In his poetry and in his prose memoir, Undertones of War (1928), he focused instead on the experience of the men in the trenches, recording the "agony" etched into "each grey face" but also acknowledging the moments of happiness amid the slaughter. He was one of the only poets to mourn the devastation of the European landscape, and his poems about the English countryside are considered among his finest. He settled finally in Suffolk in 1964 and was elected professor of poetry at Oxford in 1966.

Robert Bly (b. 1926), pp. 1704–05
Robert Bly was born in the town of Madison, in rural Minnesota, where he has lived nearly all his life. He studied as an undergraduate at St. Olaf's College and Harvard University and as a graduate student at the University of Iowa Writers' Workshop. From 1944 until 1946, he served in the navy. Bly founded and edited an influential journal named for each decade—The Fifties, The Sixties, The Seventies, The Eighties, and The Nineties. He has translated into English the work of many important poets, including Rilke, Goethe, Neruda, and Vallejo. He is associated with the mystical Deep Image school and, in recent years, has figured prominently in the men's movement.

Louise Bogan (1897–1970), pp. 1406–09
Louise Bogan was born in Livermore Falls, Maine. She attended Boston University for one year, then left school to marry. In 1919, newly single, Bogan moved to New York City to pursue writing. She became the poetry critic for The New Yorker in 1931 and held the post until she retired, in 1969. Bogan taught at several universities, including the University of Washington, the University of Chicago, the University of Arkansas, and Brandeis University. She also translated Jünger, Goethe, and Jules Renard and wrote two influential critical works. Despite her professional success, her standards for her formal, polished poems were so exacting that she published only 105 in her lifetime. Her reputation as a poet has grown posthumously, to match that in her lifetime as a critic.

Eavan Boland (b. 1944), pp. 1938–42
Eavan Boland, the daughter of the Irish diplomat F. H. Boland and the Postexpressionist painter Frances Kelley, was born in Dublin, but educated in London, where her father was Irish ambassador, and New York, where he was a representative to the United Nations. After graduating from Trinity College, Dublin, she lectured in English there but found herself "completely unsuited to being an academic," and subsequently taught on a short-term basis at institutions in Ireland and the United States in order to devote her energies to writing. She has written essays on contemporary Irish literature, translated Irish poetry and work by Horace, Mayakovsky, and Nelly Sachs, and is a well-regarded reviewer and broadcaster. Her Collected Poems (1995) brought together seven collections published over twenty years. She is professor of English at Stanford University.

Anne Bradstreet (ca. 1612–1672), pp. 458–67
Anne Bradstreet (née Dudley) was born in Northampton, England, daughter of a gentlewoman named Dorothy Yorke and of Thomas Dudley, a nonconformist minister who managed the business interests of the earl of Lincoln. Educated by private tutors in the earl's households, she married Simon Bradstreet, a future governor of the Massachusetts Bay Colony, in 1628; in 1630, Bradstreet emigrated to America with her husband and parents. When she first came to the colonies, she "found a new world and new manners," as she later remembered. "But after I was convinced it was the way of God I submitted to it and joined to the church of Boston." While caring for her growing family (she had eight children), she continued to write. A volume of poems was published in London in 1650. Entitled The Tenth Muse Lately Sprung Up in America, the book was published by Bradstreet's brother-in-law without her knowledge (or so he claimed). It sold very well; a second edition, containing numerous corrections and additions, appeared six years after her death. She compiled but did not publish a collection of prose meditations on life and death for her son Simon when he was about to become minister in 1664.

Edward Kamau Brathwaite (b. 1930), pp. 1803–07
Edward Kamau Brathwaite was born in Bridgetown, Barbados, and educated at Harrison College; Pembroke College, Cambridge; and Sussex University. After working for the Ministry of Education in Ghana (Africa) from 1955 until 1962, he returned to his homeland to become a professor of social and cultural history at the University of the West Indies. Since the 1970s, he has taught at a variety of institutions in the United States, publishing scholarly works on West Indian history and culture and on dialect, and is now professor of comparative literature at New York University.

Emily Brontë (1818–1848), pp. 1046–50
Emily Brontë, sister of novelists Charlotte and Anne, was raised in the parsonage at Haworth, on the North Yorkshire moors of England. She was educated largely at home, leaving in 1838 to work as a teacher at a girls' school in Halifax. She remained there only six months. In 1842, she went to Brussels with Charlotte to study language and music, and on her return began to write feverishly. For her first published work, the joint collection Poems (1846) by Currer, Ellis and Acton Bell, she assumed a pseudonym to avoid being stereotyped as a "lady poet." The book was largely ignored, selling only two copies, and she is best remembered for the novel Wuthering Heights (1847). Many of her poems (including "The Prisoner" and "Remembrance") were originally written (with Anne) as part of the "Gondal" saga, a series of intricate and elaborate tales set in an imaginary kingdom. The meter and form of Emily Brontë's poems often derive from the Wesleyan hymns she sang as a child. Much of her imagery is Gothic, and her concern with the transience of human life and beauty, as well as her reliance on a personal inner vision, links her to the Romantics. She died at Haworth, of tuberculosis.

Rupert Brooke (1887–1915), pp. 1324–27
Rupert Brooke was born in Rugby, England, where his father was a housemaster of the famous public school, and educated there and at King's College, Cambridge. After graduation, he established himself in the house immortalized in "The Old Vicarage, Grantchester." Following a series of unhappy love affairs, he traveled in Europe, the United States, Canada, and the South Seas. When war broke out, he returned to England and was commissioned into the Royal Naval Division. He was at the siege of Antwerp in October 1914 and spent the following winter training in Dorset, where he composed his "war sonnets." The following year, while on a troopship bound for Gallipoli, he died after contracting dysentery and blood poisoning. Much of his early work was published in Edward Marsh's anthologies of Georgian verse and was praised for its conversational diction, vivid descriptions, and delight in the commonplace. His war sonnets, published posthumously as 1914 and Other Poems (1915), celebrate patriotism, peace, friendship, love, and the values that galvanized the British public in the early days of the conflict—values Brooke had once derided as "Nineteenth Century grandiose thoughts, about the Destiny of Man, the Irresistibility of Fate, the Doom of Nations, the fact that Death awaits us All."

Gwendolyn Brooks (1917–2000), pp. 1586–89
Gwendolyn Brooks was born in Topeka, Kansas, and raised in Chicago, Illinois. She published her first poem at age thirteen and was giving poetry readings until just days before her death. A graduate of Wilson Junior College, she was active in the civil rights movement of the 1960s and after, and often wrote on political themes. Her first book, Bronzeville (1945), takes its title from the phrase journalists used for Chicago's black ghetto. Brooks ran poetry workshops for underprivileged youths and taught at various institutions, including City College of New York. She published more than twenty volumes of poetry and received more than fifty honorary doctorates.

George Mackay Brown (1921–1996), pp. 1627–28
George Mackay Brown was born in Stromness, a small fishing and shipbuilding seaport in the Orkney Islands of Scotland. Apart from the time he spent at Newbattle Abbey College and the University of Edinburgh, he remained in the Orkneys all his life. A sufferer from tuberculosis, he underwent several periods of extended treatment and convalescence in local sanatoriums. He became a Roman Catholic in 1961. Whether in poetry or in his lyrical short stories and plays, Brown wrote almost invariably on themes connected with his remote northern homeland. His work was inspired by Norse saga, Catholic liturgy and ceremony, elemental rituals, ballad, myth, legend, island folklore, and local history, recorded and imagined. In addition to publishing thirty-one books of poetry, twelve collections of short stories, and five novels, including Greenvoe (1972), he collaborated with the composer Peter Maxwell Davies on an opera, The Martyrdom of St. Magnus.

Sterling A. Brown (1901–1989), pp. 1426–29
Sterling A. Brown was born in Washington, D.C., and educated at Williams College and at Harvard University. Upon graduation from Harvard, he embarked on a long and distinguished academic career, during which he taught at Virginia Seminary College and Lincoln, Fisk, and (for nearly fifty years) Howard Universities. From 1936 until 1939, Brown worked with the Federal Writers' Project of the Works Progress Administration (WPA). For a time, he edited Negro Affairs magazine, and he later worked at Opportunity. In addition to poetry, he published several seminal works on African American literature. Brown cited the regionalists and realists E. A. Robinson and Robert Frost as important influences. Like Jean Toomer, he set his work primarily in rural surroundings, and like Langston Hughes, to whom Brown is often compared, he derived many of his forms from the ballad, the work song, jazz, and the blues.

Elizabeth Barrett Browning (1806–1861), pp. 947–51
Elizabeth Barrett was raised in Herefordshire, England. She received no formal education, but studied the classics at home and was extremely well educated for a woman of her day. Her two-volume Poems (1844) attracted the attention of Robert Browning, and in 1846 they were secretly married and eloped to Italy. In England, she had lived the life of an invalid, but in Italy her strength and spirits revived. She developed a passion for Italian politics, supporting unification and writing energetically on behalf of the cause. Her poetry was well received, and at the time of her death, her reputation outstripped her husband's. She is best known for Sonnets from the Portuguese (1850), a sequence of forty-four Petrarchan sonnets that document her burgeoning love for Browning, but she is most admired for Aurora Leigh (1857), a nine-book verse novel. That work shocked many of its readers, who took offense at her criticism of the stultifying social forms imposed on women, but deeply impressed contemporary writers, including John Ruskin, who called it "the greatest poem written in English."

Robert Browning (1812–1889), pp. 1009–41
Robert Browning was born in a suburb of London. He attended London University, but received most of his education by reading voraciously in his father's eclectic library. In 1846, he eloped with the poet Elizabeth Barrett, and he lived with her in Italy until her death, in 1861. His early work, which included drama and poetry, was poorly received by the public, but brought him the respect of influential literary figures such as John Forster, Thomas Carlyle, Charles Dickens, and Alfred, Lord Tennyson. With the publication of Dramatis Personae in 1864, followed by the popular The Ring and the Book, which appeared in monthly installments between November 1868 and February 1869, Browning's reputation grew prodigious. His collected poems were published in sixteen volumes between April 1888 and July 1889. After his death, in Italy, his body was brought back to London for a funeral in Westminster Abbey and buried in its Poets' Corner.

Alan Brownjohn (b. 1931), pp. 1829–30
Alan Brownjohn was born in London and educated at Merton College, Oxford. A schoolteacher from 1957 to 1965, he was also a lecturer at Battersea College of Education and South Bank Polytechnic before becoming a full-time writer in 1979. The first of his eleven collections of poems, The Railings, was published in 1961; his most recent, The Cat without E-mail, in 2001; and he was the chairman of the Poetry Society from 1982 to 1988. He has been poetry critic for the New Statesman, Encounter, and, since 1990, the Sunday Times. He has also written three novels, two books for children, and a critical study of Philip Larkin. His Collected Poems 1952–1983 was reissued in 1988.

William Cullen Bryant (1794–1878), pp. 902–05
William Cullen Bryant was born in Cummington, Massachusetts, a descendant of early Puritan immigrants. He spent a year at Williams College and, at his father's urging, three years reading law at Worthington and Bridgewater Colleges. Bryant's reputation as a poet was established in 1817 with the publication of "Thanatopsis" (Greek for "a view of death"), the first version of which he wrote at age sixteen. In 1825, he abandoned law for literature. He served on the editorial board of several journals, including the New York Review, and in 1829 he assumed the editorship of New York's Evening Post, a position he held for nearly fifty years. In his later years, he devoted much energy to translating the Iliad (1870) and the Odyssey (1871–72) into blank verse. He wrote essays and travel journals, and also published his speeches and orations.

Basil Bunting (1900–1985), pp. 1421–25
Basil Bunting was born in Newcastle, Northumberland. He attended the London School of Economics. After being imprisoned for six months as a conscientious objector during World War I, he lived a bohemian existence that took him to France (where he met the poet Ezra Pound), Greece, Italy, Germany, and the Canary Islands. He enlisted in the Royal Air Force on the outbreak of World War II, served in a number of posts across the globe, and after the war was appointed to the British Embassy in Tehran. He returned to Northumberland in 1953 and went to work for a small newspaper. After the publication of Briggflatts (1966), the collection upon which his reputation largely rests, he was much in demand on the university circuit and taught at several institutions in England and the United States. Like Pound, Bunting exploited the deep connection between poetry and music, and his major poems are written in forms he identified as the "ode" and the "sonata." His Collected Poems was published in 1968, and Uncollected Poems appeared posthumously in 1991.

Robert Burns (1759–1796), pp. 747–60
Robert Burns was born into a farming family in Ayrshire, Scotland. He received a modest education at the "adventure" school established by his father and his neighbors, but was largely self-taught. He spent a year and a half in Edinburgh following the publication of his immensely popular first book, Poems, Chiefly in the Scottish Dialect (1786), but returned home the following year when he was awarded a sinecure in the Excise Office. Burns farmed and performed his official duties until 1791, when he gave up his land and moved to Dumfries. He devoted his last years to collecting Scottish folk songs as part of a project to preserve Scottish culture and the Scottish national identity. He most often wrote in Scots, a form of English spoken by the Scottish peasantry that incorporates many dialect words, and his subject matter was frequently drawn from Scottish folk tales and legends, Scottish landscapes, and local events. He has been compared to figures such as Robert Henryson, William Dunbar, and Gavin Douglas, who wrote in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, the golden age of Scottish literature, and spawned a revival of interest in Scottish culture.

Witter Bynner (1881–1968), pp. 1269–70
Witter Bynner was born in Brooklyn, New York, and raised in Norwalk, Connecticut, and Brookline, Massachusetts. He was educated at Harvard University. Until 1906, he worked as an editor, then quit to devote himself to writing. Bynner traveled extensively in the United States and in China. In addition to poetry, he published several verse dramas and numerous essays. With the assistance of Kiang Kang-hu, he undertook the twentieth century's first significant translation of Chinese poetry into English. Bynner gained fame, or infamy, for perpetuating the "Spectricism" hoax, in which he and Arthur Davidson Fincke published a well-received volume of poems intended as a spoof on Imagism.

George Gordon, Lord Byron (1788–1824), pp. 833–63
George Gordon, Lord Byron was born near Aberdeen, Scotland, to dissolute aristocratic parents who had fallen on hard times. Their difficulties were alleviated when Byron inherited his title at age ten. Upon graduation from Trinity College, Cambridge, he embarked on a two-year tour of Portugal, Spain, Malta, Greece, and Asia Minor, during which he gathered much of the material for his most important poems. He became a celebrity overnight in 1812 with the publication of the first two cantos of Childe Harolde's Pilgrimage, but notoriety supplanted fame when his affair with his half-sister, whom he had met as an adult, became public knowledge. His marriage collapsed, and he was forced to leave England in 1816. He followed the poet Percy Bysshe Shelley to Geneva and Italy, then went on to Greece, where he organized a contingent of soldiers to fight for independence from the Turks. After he fell sick in the woods during a training exercise and died, he was mourned as a national hero throughout Greece. His work was widely known in Europe and was immensely influential on the major European writers of his day. Perhaps his most significant contribution to literature was the development of the Byronic hero, a doomed but impassioned wanderer, often driven by guilt and alienated from his society, but superior to it. In Don Juan, his masterpiece, he uses the narrator to attack institutions such as the government, the Church, and marriage; criticize vices such as hypocrisy, greed, and lust; and subtly extol virtues such as courage, loyalty, and candor. Although many critics considered the poem a wanton celebration of the misadventures of a profligate, Byron called it "the most moral of poems."

Roy Campbell (1902–1957), pp. 1436–37
Roy Campbell was born in Natal, South Africa. After living briefly in England in his early twenties, he returned to South Africa and founded the literary magazine Voorslag ("Whiplash"), which satirized the values of the Afrikaners. Among the volumes of poetry he produced during the 1920s and 1930s were The Georgiad, an attack on the Bloomsbury group; Flowering Reeds, a return to his earlier lyricism; and Flowering Rifle, in which he eulogized the Spanish dictator Francisco Franco. In 1935, Campbell became a Roman Catholic, and during World War II he served in the British army. He died in a car crash in Portugal. In addition to poetry, he wrote two autobiographical works. His translations of Spanish and Portuguese fiction, and particularly of Federico García Lorca's poetry and Charles Baudelaire's Les Fleurs du Mal, are highly regarded.

Thomas Campion (1567–1620), pp. 278–82
Thomas Campion was born in London and educated at Peterhouse, Cambridge, which he left without taking a degree but with a taste for classical literature, and at Gray's Inn, though he was never called to the bar. After receiving an M.D. from the University of Caen in 1605, he was practicing medicine in London by 1606. He considered himself to be first and foremost a classicist and a composer, however, his chief aim being to "couple my words and notes lovingly together." He fulfilled this ambition in a number of lyrics in four Books of Airs for lute and voice, and in his composition of court masques including The Lord Hay's Masque, performed in 1607, and the Somerset Masque and the Lord's Masque, both performed in 1613. Five poems by Campion were published, anonymously, in 1591, and his Poemata, consisting of Latin panegyrics, elegies, and epigrams, appeared in 1595. In his treatise Observations in the Art of English Poesy (1602), he advocated the classical or "quantitative" system of meter, prompting Samuel Daniel's Defense of Rhyme (1602). Though Campion dismissed his own early, mainly rhymed, verse as "superfluous blossoms of my deeper studies," his unrhymed, experimental poems have a musical quality no less impressive than that of his rhyming poems.

Thomas Carew (ca. 1595–1640), pp. 385–90
Thomas Carew (pronounced Carey) was born in West Wickham, Kent, England. Son of Sir Matthew Carew, who worked in the court of law known as the Chancery, Carew was educated at Merton College, Oxford, and the law school of the Middle Temple. He was secretary to Sir Dudley Carleton, the ambassador to Venice and later to The Hague, from 1613 to 1616, when he returned to England. He was next employed by Sir Edward Herbert, the ambassador to France, during which time he established his reputation as a poet and found favor with King Charles I, who made him a gentleman of the privy chamber in 1628. Carew is the earliest of those authors who, like his friends Sir John Suckling and Richard Lovelace, are today known as "Cavalier" poets. They were Royalist in politics, looked to the classical poets (through Ben Jonson) for their models, and composed graceful, witty, elegantly crafted verse. Carew saw his own work as "a mine of rich and pregnant fancy," and brought lucidity, directness, a frank sexuality, and urbane cynicism to amatory verse, but also wrote on other themes, most notably in his "An Elegy upon the Death of the Dean of Paul's, Dr. John Donne." Carew's masque, Coelum Britannicum, was performed before Charles I in 1634, and a collection, Poems, was published in 1640.

Lewis Carroll (Charles Lutwidge Dodgson) (1832–1898), pp. 1135–39
Charles Lutwidge Dodgson was born in Daresbury, Cheshire, England, and educated at Rugby and at Christ Church, Oxford, on whose grounds he was to live for the rest of his life. In 1855, he became a lecturer in mathematics, and thereafter he published several books on the subject, including a defense of Euclid. He was an inventor and a skilled photographer; although he became a clergyman in 1861, his habitual shyness caused a bad stammer that kept him from preaching often. In addition to poems, puns, pastiche, conundrums, problems of logic, and some adventurous linguistics, he wrote children's books (under the pseudonym Lewis Carroll, a Latinized form of Lutwidge Charles). Alice's Adventures under Ground (1865), now usually known as Alice's Adventures in Wonderland, like its sequel, Through the Looking-glass and What Alice Found There (1871), began in tales told during boating trips on the river Thames to the three daughters (one of whom was Alice) of Henry Liddell, dean of Christ Church. The stories were an instant and enduring success, perhaps because of the absence of the "improving" matter found in most children's literature of the time.

Anne Carson (b. 1950), pp. 1969–71
Anne Carson was born and raised in Toronto, Canada. She did both her undergraduate and graduate work at the University of Toronto. Her Ph.D. is in classical studies, and she has a distinguished reputation not only as a poet but also as a classical scholar, translator, and essayist. Her poetry collections also tend to transgress the boundaries of genre, as can be seen in titles such as The Beauty of the Husband: A Fictional Essay in 29 Tangos. She is a professor of classics at McGill University, in Montreal.

Charles Causley (1917–2003), pp. 1590–92
Charles Causley was born in Launceston, Cornwall, and lived there all his life. His father, a private soldier, returned from France after World War I a hopeless invalid, and died seven years later from the residual effects of nerve gas. Causley was educated at a local grammar school, then worked in a builder's office and later for a small electrical supply company. His service in the Royal Navy from 1940 until 1946 proved decisive to his literary career, drawing him from prose to poetry and providing him with a subject. After the war, he became a teacher, and his first book of poetry, Hands to Dance, was published in 1951. After retiring in 1965 to become a full-time writer, he accepted offers to teach in various colleges and universities in Australia, Canada, and the United States. He also published plays, short stories, and children's verse, and edited numerous collections of poetry. He won the Queen's Gold Medal for Poetry and was made CBE in 1986.

Margaret Cavendish (1623–1673), pp. 499–500
Margaret Cavendish was born in England to an aristocratic family and became a maid of honor to Queen Henrietta Maria. At twenty-two, she married the Royalist William Cavendish, then marquis of Newcastle, later first duke. She met him in Paris, where they both lived in exile during the Commonwealth. In 1651, having returned to England to try to recover part of her husband's estate, she wrote Fancies (1653) and Philosophical Fancies (1653; revised as part of Philosophical and Physical Opinions, 1655). Her wide-ranging intellectual interests, among them chemistry and natural philosophy, inform these and subsequent writings in a variety of genres, including the deliberately hybrid Worlds of Olio of 1655 (the term Olio refers to a Portuguese stew with many ingredients). She explores the question of women's "secondary" status from many and sometimes contradictory perspectives in volumes of plays (1662 and 1668), in Natures Pictures (with autobiography; 1656), in her Sociable Letters (1664), and in her utopian narrative, The New Blazing World (1668). She visited the Royal Society, a newly instituted scientific institution, in 1667 and was viewed as an "eccentric" both in her own time and later.

Geoffrey Chaucer (ca. 1343–1400), pp. 19–70
Geoffrey Chaucer was born into a middle-class merchant family and at about age fifteen became a page to the countess of Ulster. While serving her husband, Lionel (the second son of King Edward III), during the Hundred Years War, Chaucer was captured at the siege of Reims and eventually ransomed. In 1365, he married Philippa Roet, sister-in-law of the powerful peer John of Gaunt, who was the uncle and advisor of King Richard II. In 1367, Chaucer was granted an annuity in the royal household and soon began traveling on diplomatic missions: to Spain (1366), to France (1368), and to Italy (1372 and 1378). During his travels, he encountered works by French and Italian authors such as Jean Froissart, Guillaume Machaut, Dante, Petrarch, and Boccaccio. These authors influenced Chaucer in a variety of ways; his first important original work, The Book of the Duchess, shows the influence of French courtly poetry; and his later House of Fame parodies Dante's Divine Comedy by depicting a poet's journey—in the talons of an eagle—to the celestial palace of the goddess of Fame. And his Troilus and Criseide (1385) was deeply indebted to Boccaccio's Filostrato. Chaucer's work also shows the influence of two texts that he translated into English from French and Latin, respectively: a thirteenth-century drama vision entitled The Romance of the Rose and a fourth-century philosophical dialogue by Boethius, The Consolation of Philosophy. At a time when many of his contemporaries were writing in French and Latin, Chaucer's use of English helped to establish the vernacular as a viable medium for serious poetry. He was an innovator in both technique and language; a great number of words and phrases, many of French origin, appear for the first time in his writings. His Canterbury Tales, begun in 1386, is an unfinished group of tales told by members of a company of pilgrims. The tales draw on Chaucer's knowledge of many different social roles and events. He lived through several plagues and the Peasant's Revolt of 1381; he served as controller of the export tax on wool, sheepskins, and leather for the port of London; he was justice of the peace and a member of Parliament for the county of Kent; and he was also a deputy forester. Although he never completed his plan of writing one hundred and ten Canterbury Tales (two for each pilgrim to tell on the way to Canterbury, two for the way back), the twenty-two tales and two fragments that he did complete contain, as John Dryden said, "God's plenty."

Nicholas Christopher (b. 1951), pp. 1973–75
Nicholas Christopher was born and raised in New York City and has lived there most of his life. He was educated at Harvard University, where he studied with the poets Robert Lowell and Anthony Hecht, and has taught at New York and Columbia Universities. A prolific writer, he has published poetry and novels—as well as an amalgam of the two in his "novella in verse," Desperate Characters (1989)—and he has edited several collections of contemporary American poetry. He is also the author of a prose work on film noir.

Amy Clampitt (1920–1994), pp. 1609–15
Amy Clampitt was born and raised in New Providence, Iowa. She was educated at Grinnell College and, briefly, at Columbia University. After working as an editor at Oxford University Press and E. P. Dutton and as a reference librarian at the National Audubon Society, she became a freelance writer in 1982. Clampitt published her first collection of poetry at age sixty-three; The Kingfisher established her immediately as one of the nation's most acclaimed poets. Like John Keats, about whom she wrote a series of poems, she reveled in the sensuousness of the natural world and of language. A New Yorker most of her life, she died in Lenox, Massachusetts.

John Clare (1793–1864), pp. 983–96
John Clare was born in the small rural village of Helpstone, in Northamptonshire, England. After leaving school at age twelve, he worked on the land, as gardener, hedge-settler, lime-burner, and field hand, and published his first collection, Poems Descriptive of Rural Life and Scenery, in 1820. The book was a success, but as literary tastes changed, and the vogue for "ploughman poets" declined, subsequent volumes were not. Clare had a strong sense of place and was deeply attached to his native countryside. A move to a village four miles distant from his birthplace seems to have been the catalyst for chronic mental insecurity and, along with his parting from his first love, Mary Joyce, provided the theme of loss so prevalent in his writing. After manifesting signs of mental illness for many years, he was sent to an asylum in 1837 and, having been declared insane, transferred to Northampton General Lunatic Asylum, where he remained until his death. Written in his own combination of dialect and idiosyncratic grammar, his descriptions of rural landscape and elegies for a dying pastoral England are highly evocative. Clare's poetry remained in semi-obscurity until the mid-twentieth century, when his evident authenticity of feeling and complex sensibility were made available through new editions of his poems, autobiographical prose, and letters. A memorial to him in the Poets' Corner of Westminster Abbey was dedicated in 1989.

Arthur Hugh Clough (1819–1861), pp. 1051–53
Arthur Hugh Clough (rhymes with rough) was born in Liverpool, England, to a cotton merchant and the daughter of a banker. His family moved to South Carolina in 1822, but Clough returned to England in 1828 to attend first Rugby School, then Balliol College, Oxford. In 1842, he earned a fellowship at Oriel College, Oxford, where he became friends with the poet Matthew Arnold. Like Arnold, he struggled with his religious beliefs, and in 1848 he resigned from his fellowship because he would not take clerical orders without sincerely believing the doctrines of the Church of England. That same year, he published his first work, The Bothie of Tober-na-Vuolich, a verse novel about the romance between a student and a Scottish peasant. After traveling to Rome and writing more poetry, including Amours de Voyage, he took an administrative position at the University of London; in 1851, however, uncertainties about his religious faith again led him to resign. During the next year, Clough returned to America with the thought of emigrating; he settled in Boston, where he tutored, wrote for magazines, and established a lasting friendship with Ralph Waldo Emerson. He returned to England in 1853, took an appointment in the Education Office, and married a cousin of Florence Nightingale. He died in Florence, Italy, while touring the Continent in the hope of improving his health, and Matthew Arnold wrote "Thyrsis" in memory of his friend. Most of Clough's work was published posthumously.

Samuel Taylor Coleridge (1772–1834), pp. 805–31
Samuel Taylor Coleridge was born in Ottery St. Mary, a rural village in Devon. He was educated at Christ's Hospital School, London, and Jesus College, Cambridge, where he studied Classics, but fell into a dissolute lifestyle. He fled to London and served in the 15th Light Dragoons until his brothers secured his release some months later. In 1794, he met Robert Southey, then an undergraduate at Balliol College, Oxford. Together they conceived the utopian philosophy of Pantisocracy and planned to start a commune in New England. This never came to fruition, but Coleridge and Southey continued to lecture in Bristol on political issues. Coleridge married Sara Fricker in 1794. The following year, he met William Wordsworth and Wordsworth's sister, Dorothy, in Somerset. It was one of the most creative periods of his life, inspiring the composition of poems such as "Kubla Khan," "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner," and "Christabel." With Wordsworth, he published Lyrical Ballads (1798), one of the most revolutionary collections of poetry in the history of English literature. From age thirty, Coleridge largely gave up poetry for philosophy and criticism. He is credited with introducing the works of the philosophers Immanuel Kant, Friedrich von Schlegel, and Friedrich von Schelling to England. At the height of his powers, he became addicted to opium, which had been prescribed to relieve physical pains that Wordsworth said were so unbearable they drove Coleridge to "throw himself down and writhe like a worm upon the ground." He had also fallen in love with Sara Hutchinson, Wordsworth's future sister-in-law, but although his relationship with Sara Fricker was deteriorating, he would not end the marriage. His despair was later channeled into "Dejection: An Ode," published in 1802. He spent his last years in the care of a London clergyman, writing and attempting to be reconciled with estranged family and friends alienated by his addiction, depression, and extreme behavior. The younger Romantics held him in great esteem, and his reputation was further enhanced by Christabel and Other Poems, published in 1814, and editions of his Collected Poems, which appeared in 1817, 1828, and 1834. In an age dominated by skepticism and empiricism, Coleridge held fast to his belief in the powers of the imagination, which he saw as capable of leading humanity to Truth—through appeals not to reason but to the senses. If Wordsworth determined the content of a century or more of English poetry, Coleridge determined its shape. His theories on "organic form" provided a basis for the development of a freer poetic and may have been the progenitor of many twentieth-century experiments in free verse.

Billy Collins (b. 1941), pp. 1917–18
Billy Collins was born in New York City. He attended parochial schools, graduated from Holy Cross College, and earned his Ph.D. in Romantic poetry from the University of California at Riverside. Although he published his first book, Pokerface, in 1977, it was not until the 1990s that he became one of the most popular poets and poetry readers in American literary history, prized for his accessibility and humor. A professor at Lehman College, City University of New York, since the 1970s, he was the poet laureate of the United States in 2001–02. He lives in Somers, New York.

William Collins (1721–1759), pp. 673–77
William Collins was born in Chichester, England, where his father was twice mayor. Educated at Winchester School and Magdalen College, Oxford, he published Persian Eclogues as an undergraduate. Allegedly "too indolent even for the army," he went to London to earn a living from writing. His finances were always insecure, and ruin was averted only by the action of friends such as Samuel Johnson. His Odes on Several Descriptive and Allegoric Subjects (1747) was not esteemed at the time of publication, but a small inheritance enabled Collins to return to Chichester, where he could study and write. In 1750, he gave the Scottish playwright John Home an unfinished draft of "Ode on the Superstitions of the Highlands," in which (as the poet Robert Lowell put it) "the whole Romantic School is foreshadowed." Soon after, Collins's melancholia worsened, and after unsuccessfully seeking a cure in France he was confined to a Chelsea asylum. Released to the care of his sister, he remained with her, experiencing spells of lucidity, until his death. Though he left fewer than fifteen hundred lines of verse, he was one of the most influential poets of his time.

Wendy Cope (b. 1945), pp. 1947–49
Wendy Cope was born in Erith, Kent, and educated at St. Hilda's College, Oxford, and the Westminster College of Education, Oxford. She has been a primary school teacher, a music teacher, the arts and reviews editor of the Inner London Education Authority's Contact magazine, and television columnist for the Spectator. She began writing while undergoing psychoanalysis for severe depression following her father's death. In addition to her verse for adults and children, she has edited a collection of poetry by women. Cope's acerbic, witty, epigrammatic poems invite comparison with the work of Dorothy Parker and Stevie Smith. Like them, she has serious aims and proves, as she says, "a humorous poem can also be . . . deeply felt and saying something that matters."

Alfred Corn (b. 1943), pp. 1929–30
Alfred Corn was born and brought up in Georgia. He was educated at Emory and Columbia Universities; his graduate studies were in French literature. A reviewer, an essayist, and an art critic, he has also edited an anthology of writings on the Christian Scriptures. His narrative impulse has demonstrated itself not only in a novel, Part of His Story, but also in nearly book-length poems such as Notes from a Child of Paradise. The author of a much-used prosody manual, The Poem's Heartbeat, Corn shows an attention to formal concerns in his many volumes of verse. Having taught at Columbia, Yale, and elsewhere, he now lives in Lenox, Massachusetts.

Gregory Corso (1930–2001), pp. 1807–10
Gregory Corso was born in New York City to Italian immigrants. During his childhood, his mother died and his father returned for a time to Italy. Corso lived in an orphanage and, eventually, four foster homes; when he was twelve, his father returned, remarried, and took custody of him. He first went to prison for stealing a radio from a boys' home. During a later prison sentence, he discovered literature through books given to him by an elderly inmate. When in 1950 he left prison, he met Allen Ginsberg, who further guided his reading and education as a poet. In 1954, he spent time in Cambridge, Massachusetts, at the invitation of Harvard and Radcliffe students, who gathered the money to publish his first book, The Vestal Lady on Brattle (1955). His travels with Ginsberg to San Francisco and Mexico inspired the poems in Gasoline (1958).

Abraham Cowley (1618–1667), pp. 470–72
Abraham Cowley (pronounced Cooley) was born after the death of his father, a wealthy London stationer, and was educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge. At age fifteen, he published his first book of poems, containing among other works a verse romance he had written at ten. In 1638, he published a pastoral drama, Love's Riddle, and a Latin comedy, Naufragium Joculare. Given a fellowship at his college in 1640, he lost it when the civil war began, for he was a Royalist and went to France as secretary of the queen. He was imprisoned when he returned to England ten years later, because he was working as a spy and partly because he had published the satire The Puritan and the Papist (1643). A political epic, The Civil War, was not published until 1679, but he celebrated the king's return to power with an "Ode, Upon the Blessed Restoration" (1660). In his "Pindarique Odes," included in Poems (1656), he introduced the irregular ode form that would influence John Dryden, among others.

William Cowper (1731–1800), pp. 695–705
William Cowper (pronounced Cooper) was born in Great Berkhamstead, Herfordshire, England, and was educated at a private school and Westminster; his experience of bullying at the former lead to the attack on private schools in his "Tirocinium" (1785). He studied law at the Inner Temple and was called up to the bar, but never practiced. From his early years, he suffered from depression, which was accelerated into mental instability both by his father's forbidding his marriage to his cousin, Theodora, and by an uncle's attempt to get him a sinecure in the House of Lords, the prospect of examination for which brought on a suicide attempt. Treated at St. Albans asylum, Cowper turned to the consolations of evangelical Christianity, and on his release became "a sort of adopted son" in the household of the Reverend Morley Unwin. After Unwin's death, Cowper, Mary Unwin, and her children set up house together in Olney, Buckinghamshire. Cowper's mental health again declined and eventually collapsed, but nursed by Mary he began to write again. They lived together until her death, in 1794, after which Cowper never fully recovered his physical and mental health.

George Crabbe (1754–1832), pp. 723–31
George Crabbe was born into poverty in Aldeburgh, Suffolk, England. Although he attended grammar schools between ages ten and fourteen, he was educated largely at home by his father. He was parish doctor of Aldeburgh before leaving for London and a literary career in 1780. With the help of his friend and admirer Edmund Burke, he published The Library (1781), was introduced to contemporary literary circles, and was encouraged to join the clergy to relieve his financial distress. In 1781, he became curate of Aldeburgh, and from 1782 until 1785 was chaplain to the duke of Rutland. Burke and Samuel Johnson helped him revise The Village (1783), a grimly realist portrait of rural poverty. After a period when he published little, in 1807 he produced a collection of earlier and new works including "The Parish Register," which established him as a narrative poet. He published several more collections during his lifetime and left a quantity of unpublished work on his death. Known for his use of the heroic couplet characteristic of the departing Augustan Age, he was, according to Lord Byron, "Nature's sternest painter yet the best."

Hart Crane (1899–1932), pp. 1410–16
Hart (Harold) Crane was born in Garrettsville, Ohio, and raised in Cleveland. He left high school in 1916 and moved to New York. From 1918 to 1923, he shuttled between New York and Cleveland and worked for advertising agencies (where he wrote copy), a munitions plant, a local newspaper, and his father's candy company. In 1923, Crane settled in New York, but in 1931 he sailed to Mexico, where he planned to write an epic about the Spanish Conquest. On a return trip to the United States, he committed suicide by leaping into shark-infested waters. Crane's long poem, The Bridge, which brought him fame, is his "mythical synthesis of America," following in the tradition of Walt Whitman. Its fifteen sections of varying length move westward, from New York to California; feature historical figures, including Pocahontas and Rip Van Winkle; and celebrate natural as well as technological wonders, including the Brooklyn Bridge.

Stephen Crane (1871–1900), pp. 1220–22
Stephen Crane was born in Newark, New Jersey, and was raised in upstate New York. He attended Lafayette College and Syracuse University before moving to New York City, where he worked as a reporter and began to write fiction. His first novel, a naturalistic account of urban poverty called Maggie: A Girl of the Streets (1893), was poorly received, but his next book, The Red Badge of Courage (1894–95), earned him international fame. Although Crane had written this Civil War narrative without seeing combat, he received commissions to report on conflicts across the globe, including the Cuban Insurrection, the Turkish War, and the Spanish-American War. He died in Germany, where he had gone in search of a cure for his tuberculosis. Although he became famous for his prose, Crane preferred his poems, which are now considered pioneering examples of free verse. The poet John Berryman, his biographer, revived Crane's flagging posthumous reputation.

Richard Crashaw (1613–1649), pp. 468–70
Richard Crashaw's mother and stepmother both died before he was nine years old, and he spent most of his life rebelling against the austere religion of his father, a Puritan preacher. Crashaw was educated at Charterhouse and Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, where he was influenced by the Anglican Nicholas Ferrar, founder of the religious community at Little Gidding. After losing his fellowship at Peterhouse with the Royalists' defeat, Crashaw spent two years in exile, converting to Catholicism in 1645 and fleeing to Paris, where another friend, the writer Abraham Cowley, persuaded Queen Henrietta Maria to get Crashaw a position as an attendant to an Italian cardinal and, subsequently, as a subcanon at the Cathedral of Loretto. In 1634, Crashaw published a book of Latin poems, Epigrammatum Sacrorum Liber. His Steps to the Temple, Sacred Poems with Other Delights of the Muses (1646, revised and enlarged 1648) contains both religious and secular poems and indicates its debt to George Herbert in its title. A passionate admirer of the Spanish mystic Saint Teresa, Crashaw sought to represent the experience of religious ecstasy in words and, perhaps, in visual media. The manuscript as well as the printed volumes of his poetry contain elaborate titles in different-sized letters; and the emblematic engravings in his final (posthumously published) volume, the Carmen Deo Nostro (1652), may be by his own hand.

Robert Creeley (b. 1926), pp. 1705–08
Robert Creeley was born in Arlington, Massachusetts, and educated at Harvard University.

From 1944 to 1945, he interrupted his studies to drive an ambulance for the American Field Service in the India-Burma theater, then later left Harvard during his last semester to take up subsistence farming. He traveled to France and Mallorca, Spain (where he established the Divers Press), and returned to the United States in 1956. As a member of the faculty at the experimental Black Mountain College, Creeley founded its Review. In 1966, he began teaching at the State University of New York at Buffalo. Deeply influenced by Charles Olson, William Carlos Williams, and the Beats, all of whom composed their poems (as Allen Ginsberg put it) directly from feeling, he writes a spare and compressed verse.

Countee Cullen (1903–1946), pp. 1443–46
Countee Cullen was born in Louisville, Kentucky. At age fifteen, he was adopted by an Episcopal minister from New York City. Educated at New York University and Harvard University, he worked as an assistant editor at Opportunity magazine, a prominent periodical of the Harlem Renaissance, from 1926 until 1928, when a fellowship enabled him to spend a year in Paris. From 1934 onward, he taught English and French in New York City public schools. In addition to writing five collections of poetry, Cullen translated Euripides, published a novel about life in Harlem, edited an influential anthology of African American poetry, and wrote two children's books. Wanting to be known foremost "as a poet and not as a Negro poet," he employed traditional forms while often exploring themes of African American life.

E. E. Cummings (1894–1962), pp. 1392–97
E(dward) E(stlin) Cummings was born in Cambridge, Massachusetts, and educated at Harvard University. In the early 1920s, he lived in both New York City (where he was affiliated with the Dial magazine group, which included the poet Marianne Moore) and Paris (where he met the poets Ezra Pound, Hart Crane, and Archibald MacLeish). In his later years, he lived primarily in New York. At the time of his death, he was one of the best-known and best-loved American poets. Like his paintings, Cummings's poems reflect the influence of the Impressionist and Cubist movements in the visual arts and Imagism, Vorticism, and Futurism in literature. Through his radical experiments with syntax, typography, and line, he defamiliarized common subjects, often with humor, whether lighthearted or satirical.

Allen Curnow (1911–2001), pp. 1528–30
Allen Curnow was born in Timaru, New Zealand, the son of an Anglican clergyman and author of light verse. He worked as a journalist before attending the Universities of Canterbury and Auckland and beginning studies for the ministry (which he later abandoned) at St. John's College. He taught English at Auckland University from 1950 until 1976. In addition to serious poetry, Curnow published satirical verse under the pseudonym Whim-Wham, as well as plays and literary criticism. He edited two landmark anthologies, A Book of New Zealand Verse and The Penguin Book of New Zealand Verse. In the 1930s, Curnow was involved with poets associated with the left-wing magazine Phoenix, and his early work reflects their shared belief in the importance of establishing a national literature for New Zealand. These poems characteristically make detailed observation of the natural world. In 1972, after a fifteen-year silence, he began writing in a new mode, exploring the relationship between self and place, the mystery of nature, and death.

Samuel Daniel (1563–1619), pp. 230–35
Samuel Daniel was born near Taunton, England; educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford; and traveled widely throughout Europe, learning several languages. He enjoyed the patronage of Mary Sidney, countess of Pembroke, to whose son he was tutor; and his neoclassical tragedy Cleopatra (1594, revised 1607), was influenced by Mary Sidney's translation of a French play about Cleopatra and Antony (Antonie, 1592). Daniel wrote works in a variety of genres, from a history of the War of the Roses to tragic and pastoral dramas, to court masques. His Defense of Rhyme (1602?), a response to Thomas Campion's treatise alleging the superiority of classical prosody, occupies an important place in the debate on the status of the vernacular as a literary language. In 1592, Daniel published his sonnet cycle to "Delia"; a romance, The Complaint of Rosamond, appeared in the same volume. Another collection, Certain Small Poems (1605), caused Daniel to lose the favor of King James I because it contained a tragedy whose protagonist, Philotas, was identified with Queen Elizabeth I's rebellious courtier, the earl of Essex. Daniel was nonetheless patronized by James's queen, Anne, and he continued to write masques for the court, including Tethys' Festival (1610) and Hymen's Triumph (1615). Ben Jonson, with whom Daniel was "at jealousies," criticized his poetry, but others, including Samuel Taylor Coleridge, have praised his poetic language.

Donald Davie (1922–1995), pp. 1641–44
Donald Davie was born in Barnsley, Yorkshire, England, to Baptist parents, and brought up in "the industrially ravaged landscape" of the West Riding. He was educated at Barnsley Hogate Grammar School and at St. Catherine's College, Cambridge, where he was greatly influenced by the critic F. R. Leavis. His studies were interrupted by service in the Royal Navy, but he then returned to Cambridge and took his B.A., M.A., and Ph.D. He taught at Trinity College, Dublin; the University of California at Santa Barbara; and Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge. He joined the newly founded University of Essex, serving on its faculty from 1964 until 1968, when he moved to Stanford University. In 1978, he moved to Vanderbilt University, from which he retired in 1988 to live in Devon. Davie's first collection of poetry, Brides of Reason, appeared in 1955, to be followed by many others, including his Collected Poems in 1990. He also published a number of influential studies of English poetry, diction, and syntax, as well as criticism of the work of Hardy, Pound, and Pasternak; translations of the work of Polish, Hungarian, and Russian writers; and a study of English hymnology. His editorial work included several collections of poetry, including the New Oxford Book of Christian Verse (1981). Davie's Purity of Diction in English Verse (1952) was virtually a manifesto for The Movement, a group of writers who eschewed the symbolism and syntactical disjunctions of Imagism and Symbolism in favor of paraphrasable logic, plain diction, straightforward syntax, and traditional forms.

Peter Davison (b. 1928), pp. 1751–52
Peter Davison was born in New York City and raised in Colorado. He was educated at Harvard University and St. John's College, Cambridge, and spent two years in the United States Army. Davison has had a distinguished editorial career at Harcourt, Brace; Harvard University Press; Atlantic Monthly Press; and Houghton Mifflin. As the poetry editor of The Atlantic Monthly since 1972, he has notably influenced poets and poetry readers. His work shows an affinity with that of his father, the English poet Edward Davison, and family friend and mentor Robert Frost. He lives in Boston and in Gloucester, Massachusetts.

Walter de la Mare (1873–1956), pp. 1225–27
Walter de la Mare was born in Charlton, Kent, England. In 1890, he took a job as a bookkeeper at the London offices of the Standard Oil Company, a position he held for eighteen years, until a government pension enabled him to devote himself full-time to writing. In 1902, he published his first collection of poetry, Songs of Childhood, under the pseudonym Walter Ramal. Over the next forty-five years, he published voluminously, producing novels, short stories, and poetry, as well as editing several influential anthologies of literature, including Come Hither (1923) and Behold the Dreamer (1939). He was made a Companion of Honour in 1948 and awarded the Order of Merit in 1953.

James Dickey (1923–1997), pp. 1661–64
James Dickey was born in Atlanta, Georgia. In 1942, he attended Clemson College, in South Carolina, then left to join the air force. After serving as a fighter-bomber pilot during World War II, he attended Vanderbilt University, where he began writing poetry. He received B.A. and M.A. degrees from Vanderbilt and did further graduate work there and at Rice University, in Texas. Following another two years in the air force (this time as a training officer during the Korean War), he spent six years as a writer of advertising copy, then later taught at a number of universities. In 1960, he published his first book of poetry, and from 1966 to 1968 he served as poetry consultant to the Library of Congress. In addition to poetry, he published fiction, including the best-selling novel Deliverance (1970)—which he adapted into a Hollywood film—and nonfiction, including reviews and autobiographical works.

Emily Dickinson (1830–1886), pp. 1110–27
Emily Dickinson was born in Amherst, Massachusetts, to a prominent family. For one year, she attended Mount Holyoke Female Seminary (now College), in nearby South Hadley, then withdrew and returned to Amherst. Dickinson lived at her family home in Amherst from 1848 on, rarely received visitors, and in her mature years never went out. Suffering from agoraphobia (the fear of public places) and perhaps from an eye disorder, she became known as "the Myth" and "the character of Amherst." Fewer than a dozen of her poems were published in her lifetime. Such a solitary life hardly dulled her sensibilities, however, for Dickinson's works include nearly two thousand poems, plus voluminous correspondence. The poems reveal her intimate knowledge of the Bible, classical myth, and the works of Shakespeare; in addition, she admired the work of Transcendentalists Thoreau and Emerson. In an era marked by its evangelical fervor, Dickinson adopted skepticism, irony, ambiguity, paradox, and sardonic wit. She often wrote in the meters of hymns and made masterful use of the ballad stanza and of slant rhyme. Although her innovations initially baffled critics, the public's fascination with her life soon extended to her verse. She is, along with Walt Whitman, the most revered and influential of nineteenth-century American poets.

John Donne (1572–1631), pp. 293–322
John Donne was born in London, his father an ironmonger and his mother, a devout Catholic, the daughter of the dramatist John Heywood as well as a descendent of Sir Thomas More. Donne studied at Oxford without taking a degree, because to do so would have required him to swear an oath affirming that the English monarch was head of the Church. After travel in Europe, he entered the legal institution of Lincoln's Inn in 1592. In 1595, Donne participated in a naval expedition against Spain, and in 1596 he joined an expedition to the Azores. On his return, he became private secretary to Sir Thomas Egerton, lord keeper of the Great Seal, but was dismissed when his secret marriage to Lady Egerton's seventeen-year-old niece, Ann More, was discovered. The marriage effectively blocked Donne's career as a courtier; and after many years of seeking offices and patrons, he took orders in the Church of England in 1615—as King James I had been urging him to do since 1607. Two years later, his wife died. He became dean of St. Paul's Cathedral in 1621, and his sermons were very well attended. His private devotions (in prose) were published in 1624, but very few of the poems he had been writing since the 1590s were printed during his lifetime; instead, they circulated widely in manuscript, creating many textual variants and many questions about dating for future editors and readers. His poems were divided into nine generic groups in the second edition of his poetry (1635), including the Elegies, modeled on Ovid's erotic verse; the Songs and Sonnets, containing a variety of secular love poems; and the Holy Sonnets.

H. D. (Hilda Doolittle) (1886–1961), pp. 1311–16
Hilda Doolittle was born in Bethlehem, Pennsylvania. In 1901, she met the poet Ezra Pound, who encouraged her writing. Doolittle attended Bryn Mawr College, then moved to Greenwich Village, where she established her reputation as a writer. She traveled to London in 1911, intending to visit Pound, but stayed in Europe for the rest of her life. In 1912, Pound submitted three of Doolittle's poems to Harriet Monroe, editor of Poetry magazine, signing them "H. D. Imagiste." Although H. D. moved beyond Imagism—and Vorticism, its quick successor—fairly early, her reputation has remained closely tied to that short-lived but momentous movement. In 1933, H. D. entered psychoanalysis with Sigmund Freud. In her work, she set her own experience against the great storehouses of literature, myth, history, religion, and the occult, and her Trilogy included three long poems concerning World War II, most notably The Walls Do Not Fall (1944). In addition to poetry, she published numerous volumes of prose, worked as a translator, and wrote verse dramas.

Charles d'Orléans (1391–1465), pp. 77–78
Charles, duke of Orléans (brother of King Charles VI of France), married his cousin Isabella (widow of Richard II of England) in 1406. Commander of the French forces at the Battle of Agincourt, in 1415, he was captured after their defeat by the English army under Henry V. He spent the next twenty-five years in prison, and during this time composed his poems in English as well as French. He produced chansons, complaintes, and translations, as well as poems in intricate forms such as the ballade and rondel, usually on the theme of courtly love. After payment of a huge ransom, he was released from prison and returned to France in 1440. He spent his last years at Blois, where his court became a center of music and literature.

Keith Douglas (1920–1944), pp. 1620–23
Keith Douglas was born in Tunbridge Wells, Kent, England, and brought up near Cranleigh. His childhood was difficult, as his father became a drifter and his mother was stricken with "sleepy sickness." At Merton College, Oxford, his tutor was Edmund Blunden, the soldier-poet of World War I. In 1940, Douglas enlisted, and a year later he was posted to Egypt; though ordered to remain in reserve, he commandeered a truck and joined his regiment at the front. He was badly injured when he stepped on a land mine, but after convalescence in Palestine was sent to the European front, and was killed during the invasion of Normandy. Before his death, Douglas had prepared a collection for publication, but it did not reach print until 1966. He also wrote a memoir, Alamein to Zem Zem, based on his experiences in the Middle East. In this, as in his poems, he presents himself in dual roles: victim and killer, satirist and eulogist, disinterested spectator and committed participant. His Collected Poems appeared, posthumously, in 1951, and an edition of his letters was published in 2001.

Rita Dove (b. 1952), pp. 1985–90
Rita Dove was born in Akron, Ohio. She was educated at Miami University (Ohio), the University of Tübingen (Germany), and the University of Iowa, and has taught at Arizona State University and the University of Virginia. Dove has traveled widely and has lived abroad, notably in Berlin and Jerusalem. In 1993, she became poet laureate of the United States. In addition to poetry, she has written fiction and drama. Her own mixed European and African American heritage has been a source of inspiration, as have mythology and history.

Ernest Dowson (1876–1900), pp. 1211–12
Ernest Dowson was born in Kent, England. He went to The Queen's College, Oxford, but left without obtaining a degree. He studied Latin poetry, and through extended stays on the Continent became familiar with French literature. With the writers Lionel Johnson, Ernest Rhys, Arthur Symons, William Butler Yeats, and others, Dowson formed the Rhymers' Club, an informal writers' group based in London, and contributed to two of the club's anthologies as well as to The Yellow Book and the Savoy. In 1891, he met Adelaide Foltinowicz, "Missie," for whom he harbored a lifelong but unrequited passion, and who became a symbol of love and innocence in his poetry. He was received into the Roman Catholic Church about 1891. From 1895 onward, Dowson lived an increasingly dissolute life, traveling between England, Ireland, and France, and supporting himself through translation. His last years were marred by poverty, ill health, and depression. He died, of tuberculosis, at the London home of a friend, R. H. Sherard, who had looked after him in the final six months of his life.

Michael Drayton (1563–1631), pp. 235–38
Michael Drayton was a year older than Shakespeare and born in the same county, Warwickshire, England. Drayton was brought up as a page in the house of Sir Henry Goodyere, whose daughter Anne (later Lady Rainsford) Drayton loved, perforce platonically, for many years. At age ten, he dedicated himself to a poetic career, and without benefit of a university education he became a learned and accomplished practitioner of most of the Renaissance poetic genres. He settled in London in 1590 and the next year published his first work, The Harmony of the Church. For reasons that remain obscure, this series of verse paraphrases of the Bible was suppressed by public order, except for forty copies (of which only one has survived) retained by the bishop of Canterbury. In 1593, he published Idea: The Shepherd's Garland (1593), which shows the influence of Spenser's pastoral poetry. A collection of sonnets, Idea's Mirror, appeared the next year (it was frequently revised and expanded); in both works Drayton honored Anne Goodyere under the name "Idea." He considered Poly-Olbion his greatest poem, but this thirty-thousand-line celebration of the topography of Britain (1612–22) proved less popular than most of Drayton's other works, among them England's Heroical Epistles (1597), modeled on Ovid's Heroides. Although Drayton wrote a poem of fulsome praise when King James I took the crown, he never found favor at the court after Elizabeth I's death; and his vision of the English nation as well as his most popular poetry suggest that he belonged to the Elizabethan Age even though he long outlived it.

John Dryden (1631–1700), pp. 500–26
John Dryden, the son of a country gentleman and his wife, was educated at Westminster School and Trinity College, Cambridge. Although he wrote his first poem, Heroic Stanzas (1659), to commemorate Oliver Cromwell's death, he celebrated the return of King Charles II in Astraea Redux (1660). A loyal Royalist for the rest of his life, he was made poet laureate in 1668. He wrote twenty-four plays for the newly reopened London theaters and numerous important songs, poems, and elegies. Many of these were written for specific occasions such as a coronation, a military victory, or a death. These poems, together with his long works of political and literary satire, such as Absalom and Achitophel (1681) and the mock-heroic Mac Flecknoe (1682), affirmed the public role of the poet and established the basic forms of verse, most notably the heroic couplet, that dominated the neoclassical period and persisted into the early nineteenth century. His introductions and essays, at once learned and commonsensical, earned him the title of "the father of English criticism" from his successor Samuel Johnson and helped shape English prose style for centuries. In his later years, after writing a poem defending the Anglican Church, Dryden converted to Catholicism. This decision, which led his enemies to charge him with opportunism (James II, a Catholic, had recently succeeded to the throne), eventually resulted in Dryden's losing his public offices and stipends, when the Protestant rulers William and Mary replaced James in 1688. Nearing sixty, Dryden supported himself by writing plays and translating classical writers, Chaucer, and Boccaccio.

Peter Kane Dufault (b. 1923), pp. 1665–67
Peter Kane Dufault was born in Newark, New Jersey, and attended Harvard University. During World War II, he served in the United States Army Air Force. Since then, he has worked as a news editor, a house painter, a tree surgeon, a folk singer, a fiddler, a country-dance caller, an actor, and a teacher of writing at Williams College and Berkshire Community College (Massachusetts). His work typically observes the natural world closely and carefully, sometimes imbuing its subjects with mystical qualities. He lives in Hillsdale, New York.

Carol Ann Duffy (b. 1955), pp. 2007–09
Carol Ann Duffy was born in Glasgow, Scotland, brought up in Staffordshire, England, and studied philosophy at the University of Liverpool. She has been a visiting professor and a writer-in-residence at a number of institutions. A regular reviewer and broadcaster, she now lectures in poetry at Manchester Metropolitan University. Her book Mean Time (1993) won both the Whitbread Prize for Poetry and the Forward Prize. The hallmarks of her poetry—her ability to invent plausible characters, to explore a range of points of view, and to pace her poetry so as to surprise readers—derive in large part from her experience of writing for the stage. Like Robert Browning, she favors the dramatic monologue, and like him she creates personae with complex emotions, questionable ethics, and rich fantasy lives.

Paul Laurence Dunbar (1872–1906), pp. 1222–24
Paul Laurence Dunbar was born in Dayton, Ohio, the son of former slaves. His father had escaped to Canada via the Underground Railroad, but returned to the United States to enlist in the second black regiment of the Union Army. Dunbar attended a white high school, where he showed an early talent for writing. He was unable to fund further education, however, and went to work as an elevator operator. When his reputation as a writer grew, the abolitionist Frederick Douglass secured a job for him at the Columbian Exposition, in Chicago. From 1897 to 1898, he worked as an assistant in the reading room of the Library of Congress, and he later supported himself by writing and lecturing in the United States and England. In addition to poetry, Dunbar published four novels and four volumes of short stories.

William Dunbar (ca. 1460–ca. 1525), pp. 86–90
William Dunbar was born to a noble Scottish family and apparently took an M.A. from St. Andrews University (near Edinburgh) in 1479. He became a Franciscan friar and traveled in England and France before leaving the order. Employed in various civil and diplomatic capacities abroad by James IV of Scotland, he went to England with the ambassadorial mission to arrange the king's marriage to Margaret Tudor, for which occasion (in 1503) he wrote The Thrissil and the Rois, a political allegory in which James is the thistle, Margaret the rose. This was followed by poems allegorical, satirical, visionary, and narrative, on both religious and secular themes. Influenced by Chaucer and the French poet François Villon, Dunbar wrote in a Scottish form of English, describing, in The Flyting (i.e., quarrel) of Dunbar and Kennedie, the antipathy between "Inglis"-speaking southern borderlanders and the Scots/Gaelic-speakers of the highlands and west. He received a royal pension in 1500, and some of his poems—"The Queenis Progress at Aberdeen," for instance, and perhaps his "In Prais of Women"—suggest that Queen Margaret was his real or desired patron.

Douglas Dunn (b. 1942), pp. 1927–29
Douglas Dunn was born in Inchinnan, Renfrewshire, Scotland, and was educated at the Scottish School of Librarianship and the University of Hull. He worked as a librarian in a number of places, including Akron, Ohio, and at the University of Hull, where he worked under Philip Larkin, whose influence can be seen in his early poems. Those contained in his first collection, Terry Street (1969), graphically describe the squalid living conditions and impoverished intellectual life of the underprivileged of Hull. From 1981 until 1982, he was a creative writing fellow at the University of Dundee. In 1984, he settled in Tayport, Fife; in 1985, he won the Whitbread Book of the Year Award for his Elegies, poems written for his wife, an artist and a curator, who died, of cancer, at thirty-seven. Dunn has also published short stories, written plays for radio and television, and translated Racine's Andromache. He has edited a selection of Delmore Schwartz's poems, a collection of work by Hull poets, and The Faber Book of Twentieth-Century Scottish Poetry. He is a professor in the School of English at the University of St. Andrews.

Richard Eberhart (b. 1904), p. 1450
Richard Eberhart was born in Austin, Minnesota. He received his undergraduate education at the University of Minnesota and Dartmouth College. As a crew member on a tramp steamer, he made his way to England, where he undertook studies in English at St. John's College, Cambridge. Upon his return to the United States, Eberhart did graduate study at Harvard University, then taught at St. Mark's School (near Boston), where the poet Robert Lowell was one of his pupils. During World War II, Eberhart served as an aerial gunnery instructor. In the mid-1940s, he joined his father-in-law's floor-wax company, but in the 1950s he began an academic career and taught at, among other schools, the University of Washington, Princeton University, and Dartmouth College. In addition, he helped found the Poets' Theatre, in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

T. S. Eliot (1888–1965), pp. 1340–66
T(homas) S(tearns) Eliot was born to a distinguished New England family, raised in St. Louis, Missouri, and educated at Harvard University, the Sorbonne, and Oxford University, where he wrote his Ph.D. dissertation on the English logician and metaphysician F. H. Bradley. The critic Arthur Symons's work on the French Symbolists was a seminal influence on Eliot, as was the poet Ezra Pound, who encouraged him to stay in Europe and would eventually edit his masterpiece The Waste Land (1922). From 1917 until 1925, he worked in the International Department at Lloyd's Bank, after which he joined the publishing house of Faber and Faber, where he published the work of W. H. Auden, Stephen Spender, Louis MacNeice, and other young poets. He also edited the Egoist magazine and founded the influential Criterion. In 1927, Eliot took British citizenship and joined the Church of England. In his later years, he wrote compelling critical studies on literature, culture, society, and religion, and he is generally considered the most important critic of the century. In addition, he wrote several successful verse dramas. He was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1948. Although he dismissed The Waste Land, which he wrote largely while hospitalized for a breakdown in 1921, as "the relief of a personal and wholly insignificant grouse against life," his generation considered it a definitive explication of its distress. Eliot's later work documents his conversion to Christianity and culminates in Four Quartets (1935–43), which he considered his greatest work.

Queen Elizabeth I (1533–1603), pp. 142–43
The daughter of Henry VIII and his second wife, Anne Boleyn, Elizabeth was declared a bastard by her father, who executed her mother in 1534 on probably spurious grounds of adultery. Questions about the legitimacy of Elizabeth's birth (at a time when Henry's first wife, Katharine of Aragon, was still living) fueled many later attacks on her, especially those by Catholics who supported the claims to the throne of Mary Tudor, Elizabeth's elder half-sister, or later, those of Mary Queen of Scots, Elizabeth's cousin. Elizabeth replaced Mary Tudor on the throne of England in 1558, supported by many of the Protestants who had welcomed her half-brother Edward VI's brief reign (1547–53). Elizabeth was, however, more adroit at religious compromise than Edward or Mary had been; the years of Elizabeth's long reign were relatively peaceful, despite the plots on her life and the criticisms made by many of her male subjects of a woman's right to rule England. Well-educated in languages and rhetoric, the youthful Elizabeth translated works by Boethius, Petrarch, and Marguerite of Navarre, among others; as a queen, Elizabeth gave eloquent speeches that were recorded by others, sometimes in several quite different versions. She wrote many letters and some lyric poems. In her speeches and writings, Elizabeth often sought to control, and sometimes to counter, the many images of her produced by her subjects. If some of the most famous Elizabethans portrayed her as a "fairy queen" (Spenser did so in his epic of that name, as did Shakespeare in his play A Midsummer Night's Dream), she preferred to portray herself as a woman who had the "heart and stomach of a king."

Jean Elliot (1727–1805), p. 677
Jean (or Jane) Elliot was born in Teviotdale, Scotland, to a judge and his wife. On her father's death, she, her mother, and her sister moved to Edinburgh, where Elliot remained until returning to Teviotdale shortly before her death. She was the author of probably the most popular version of the old ballad "The Flowers of the Forest," a haunting lament for the dead of the Battle of Flodden (Field), fought in September 1513 and a crushing defeat for Scotland. Published anonymously in 1756, Elliot's poem was greatly admired by the poets Robert Burns and Walter Scott, among others. "The manner of the ancient minstrels is so happily imitated," wrote Scott, "that it required the most positive evidence to convince me that the song was of modern date." Indeed, many readers assumed the poem was a genuine relic of the sixteenth century.

Ralph Waldo Emerson (1803–1882), pp. 941–46
Ralph Waldo Emerson was born and raised in Boston, the son of a Unitarian minister and his wife. He was educated at Harvard University and Harvard Divinity School. Ordained as junior pastor of Boston's Second Church, he left the church in 1832 because of deep doubts concerning organized religion. That same year, he traveled to Europe, where he met the poets William Wordsworth and Samuel Taylor Coleridge and the essayist and historian Thomas Carlyle, who became a close friend and great influence. He also was introduced to German idealism, and this philosophy, along with the writings of Plato and Swedenborg and the sacred texts of Hinduism, largely determined Emerson's interpretation of Transcendentalism. Although he never developed his beliefs into a full-fledged system, Emerson preached self-reliance and optimism and promoted instinct over reason. The Transcendental circle that formed around him included the writers Henry David Thoreau, Jones Very, Margaret Fuller, and Nathaniel Hawthorne. Although he used conventional meters and forms for his early poems, Emerson came to believe that "a thought so passionate and alive . . . has an architecture of its own," and this "organic" theory of composition informed his later works.

William Empson (1906–1984), pp. 1463–64
William Empson was born at Yokefleet Hall, near Howden, Yorkshire, and educated at Magdalene College, Cambridge. He took degrees in mathematics and, under the tutelage of critic I. A. Richards, English. After spending the 1930s abroad, teaching at the Tokyo University of Literature and Science and for the Southwest Associated Universities in China, Empson returned to England when World War II broke out and worked for the BBC, where he edited scripts for foreign broadcast. In 1947, he returned to China to teach at Peking National University, and there he witnessed the Chinese civil war and the subsequent rise of Communism. He returned to England in 1952 and was appointed professor of literature at Sheffield University, a position he held until his retirement (in 1971). In addition to poetry, he published several scholarly studies, including Seven Types of Ambiguity (1930) and Some Versions of Pastoral (1935). Milton's God (1961) was one of a series of writings that caused controversy during his tenure at Sheffield. Philip Larkin was among the poets who took Empson's work as a model for confronting the despair inherent in the modern condition with grace and stoicism.

Louise Erdrich (b. 1954), pp. 2005–06
Louise Erdrich was born in Little Falls, Minnesota, and raised in Wahpeton, North Dakota,

a small town near the Turtle Mountain Reservation and the Minnesota border. She was educated at Dartmouth College—where she studied with the late Michael Dorris, who would become her husband and collaborator—and at Johns Hopkins University. She has worked at a variety of jobs, including teaching poetry in prisons and editing a newspaper dedicated to Native American affairs (her mother was of French Chippewa descent). Known primarily as a novelist and short-story writer, Erdrich is a storyteller in her poetry as well. Many of her poems are dramatic monologues spoken by the inhabitants of a mythical small town in the early twentieth century.

James Fenton (b. 1949), pp. 1961–67
James Fenton was born in Lincoln, England, and educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, where he studied politics, philosophy, and psychology. He has worked as a literary and political journalist, and as a foreign correspondent in Germany, Cambodia, and Vietnam. His publications include collections of poetry, theater reviews, and accounts of his travels and experiences as a war reporter. He has translated Verdi's Rigoletto for the English National Opera and contributed to the musical version of Hugo's Les Miserables. He was professor of poetry at Oxford University from 1994 to 1999.

Lawrence Ferlinghetti (b. 1919), pp. 1606–07
Lawrence Ferlinghetti was born in Yonkers, New York. Upon graduation from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, he joined the navy and served during World War II. He worked for Time magazine and later resumed his education at Columbia University and the Sorbonne. After moving to San Francisco, he started the City Lights Bookstore and the City Lights Press, which launched the careers of a generation of American poets. He was associated with the San Francisco Group, started by the poet Kenneth Rexroth, and with the Beats, whose prominent members included Jack Kerouac, William Burroughs, Gregory Corso, and Allen Ginsberg, whose popular but controversial Howl and Other Poems he published and defended when it was charged in court as indecent. His own A Coney Island of the Mind (1958), hip and satirical, was a huge success.

Anne Finch, Countess of Winchilsea (1661–1720), pp. 556–66
Anne Finch was born in Sydmonton, Berkshire, England. After the deaths of her parents, Sir William Kingsmill and Anne Haslewood, she was raised and educated by an uncle. In 1683, with the poet Anne Killigrew, Finch became a maid of honor to Mary Modena, the duchess of York and future wife of King James II, and at court met Colonel Heneage Finch, future earl of Winchilsea, who became her husband. Colonel Finch was arrested while attempting to follow James to France after the king was deposed in 1688; following his release, he and his wife retired to their estate in Eastwell, Kent. Encouraged by her husband, Anne Finch began to write in the 1680s, and her long poem "The Spleen" was anthologized in 1701. In 1709, Jonathan Swift addressed a poem, "Apollo Outwitted," to her, and she exchanged poems with Alexander Pope about the representation of "female wits" in his The Rape of the Lock (1714). In 1713, she published her Miscellany Poems on Several Occasions, which included a tragedy, Aristomenes, but many of her poems remained in manuscript at her death. William Wordsworth praised her nature poems, especially "A Nocturnal Reverie," and included seventeen of her poems in an anthology he compiled for Lady Mary Lowther in 1819. Only recently, however, have Finch's satiric poems and meditations on the problems of women writers achieved their due recognition.

Edward FitzGerald (1809–1883), pp. 961–73
Edward FitzGerald was born in Bredfield, Suffolk, England, and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he met the writers William Thackeray and Alfred, Lord Tennyson. He never adopted a trade, but lived a retired and abstemious life occupied with study and translation. In the 1850s, he took up oriental studies, a prevalent interest of mid-nineteenth-century intellectuals, and in 1856 he produced his first translation. The work for which he is best known is his free translation of The Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám of Naishápúr, which he published anonymously in 1859, expanded in 1868, and revised further in 1872 and 1879. FitzGerald maintained the structure of Omar Khayyám's epigrammatic ruba'i, or quatrains, including their aaba rhyme scheme and mounting tension, but deviated significantly from the twelfth-century Persian manuscript. Imposing unity on the work by introducing a time frame and dramatic situation, he stripped it to its essential themes, including the evanescence of life and the consequent necessity to "seize the day" (carpe diem). Initially ignored, the work rapidly gained in popularity when it was discovered by the painter and poet Dante Gabriel Rossetti and his Victorian coterie, the Pre-Raphaelites, who found its themes and tone strikingly contemporary.

Robert Fitzgerald (1910–1985), pp. 1507–08
Robert Fitzgerald was born in Geneva, New York, and grew up in Springfield, Illinois. He was educated at Harvard University and also did informal studies at Trinity College, Cambridge. After working as a reporter for the New York Herald Tribune and later for Time magazine, he served in the navy during World War II. Beginning in 1949, Fitzgerald divided his time between the United States and Italy. He served as poetry editor of The New Republic and taught at, among other schools, Sarah Lawrence College and Princeton, Harvard, and Yale Universities. Renowned primarily for his translations of Homer and Virgil, he (with Dudley Fitts) also translated Euripides and Sophocles.

John Fletcher (1579–1625), p. 345
John Fletcher was born in Rye, Sussex, England, and was educated at Benet College, Cambridge. After the death of his father, bishop of London, Fletcher was left to make his own way. In London, he befriended Francis Beaumont, with whom he cowrote a number of plays for the fashionable boys' companies. Along with Shakespeare, Fletcher and Beaumont became leading playwrights of the King's Men, the most prominent theatrical company of the day. Their joint works include Philaster (ca. 1609), The Maid's Tragedy (ca. 1610), and A King and No King (1611). Following Beaumont's early retirement and death, Fletcher collaborated with other playwrights, most notably Philip Massinger, with whom he wrote Sir John van Olden Barnavelt (ca. 1619) and The Beggar's Bush (ca. 1622), among other plays, and Shakespeare, with whom he probably wrote Henry VIII (1613) and The Two Noble Kinsmen (1613). Fletcher is credited with sole authorship of a number of plays, including The Faithful Shepherdess (ca. 1609), The Chances (ca. 1617), The Wild-Goose Chase (ca. 1621), and Rule a Wife and Have a Wife (1624). His success reflected his alertness to changing tastes as well as his deft handling of tragicomedy and the comedy of manners. Like many dramatists of his day, he included lyrics and songs in his plays.

Philip Freneau (1752–1832), pp. 716–18
Philip Freneau was born and raised in New York City. He was educated at the College of New Jersey (now Princeton University). From 1776 until nearly 1779, he worked as a secretary to a plantation owner in the West Indies. Upon a second trip to the West Indies, in 1780, he was captured by the British and held as a prisoner of war. In 1790, he became a clerk of foreign languages for the State Department, and he later worked for a number of journals. He spent his last years on his family's plantation in New Jersey, fell into poverty and obscurity, and died of exposure when he lost his way home during a snowstorm. Best known for his satires (many of which were anti-British), his polemics, and his lyrics, Freneau was called "the poet of the American Revolution," and many consider him the first major American poet.

Robert Frost (1874–1963), pp. 1227–45
Robert Frost was born and raised (until age eleven) in San Francisco. He attended Dartmouth and Harvard Colleges. For a decade, around the turn of the century, he worked as a farmer in New Hampshire. From 1912 until 1915, he, his wife, and their four children lived in England, where he published his first book, A Boy's Will (1913), and met the poets Ezra Pound and Edward Thomas, both of whose shrewd reviews helped establish his reputation. Upon his return to America, Frost held a number of teaching appointments, his most enduring association being with Amherst College. From the publication of his second book, North of Boston (1914), onward, Frost became one of the best-known and most celebrated American poets. In 1961, he read his poem "The Gift Outright" at President John F. Kennedy's inauguration, an honor indicating his unique status for the American people. His poems, often rooted in New England and phrased in common language, also showed a classical influence. Not only the poems but also his theories about prosody continue to mark the work of living poets.

George Gascoigne (ca. 1534–1577), pp. 144–46
George Gascoigne was probably educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and entered Gray's Inn in 1555. Seeking a career as a courtier, he sold his patrimony to cover his debts. In 1561, he wed the already married Elizabeth Boyes; nine years later, he was imprisoned for debt. Having served twice in Parliament in the late 1550s, he was refused his seat in 1572 on the grounds of his bad reputation. From 1572 until 1573, he served as a soldier in the Netherlands, during which time an unauthorized edition of his play and poems, A Hundred Sundry Flowers Bound Up in One Small Posy, appeared, which he corrected and extended as The Posies of George Gascoigne. Acknowledging Chaucer as his poetic master, Gascoigne translated from the Italian Ariosto's The Supposes and wrote the first original poem in English, The Steel Glass, a satire. His The Adventures of Master F. J. is a pioneering work of novelistic prose. He divided his poems into three categories: "flowers," or "pleasant" poems written on "light occasions"; "herbs," or "profitable" poems on moral subjects; and "weeds," or poems "neither delightful nor yet profitable" on his own follies. His Certain Notes of Instruction Concerning the Making of Verse or Rhyme in English, the first important work on English prosody, is a pithy and practical handbook showing a wide knowledge of poetic forms.

David Gascoyne (1916–2001), pp. 1580–83
David Gascoyne was born in Harrow, Middlesex, England, and educated at Regent Street Polytechnic, London. He published his first collection of poems at age sixteen. In 1933, he traveled to Paris to investigate the Surrealist movement (and wrote the first English study of it when he was nineteen), and he lived in France from 1937 to 1939 and 1954 to 1965. He joined the Communist Party in 1936 and made a brief sojourn in Spain, but his support for the Party proved ephemeral, though his interest in social and political issues endured. In the late years of World War II, he became an actor. Psychological problems following his war experiences culminated in several nervous breakdowns. In addition to his poems, he published a semi-autobiographical novel and translated the work of several European poets, including Jean Jouve. He was made Chevalier dans l'Ordre des Arts et Lettres by the French Ministry of Culture in 1996.

John Gay (1685–1732), pp. 594–96
John Gay was born in Barnstaple, Devon, England. Educated at a Devon school, he was apprenticed to a London silk dealer, but was released from service due to poor health and began to haunt London literary society. He soon gained the attention of Alexander Pope, Jonathan Swift, and John Arbuthnot, with whom he founded the "Scriblerus Club." With their help, he obtained posts with influential figures, including the duchess of Monmouth, widow of the duke figured in Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel; Lord Clarendon, whom he followed to the court of Hanover; and the duke and duchess of Queensberry, who housed him at their estate and managed his financial affairs. He was eventually awarded a modest sinecure as lottery commissioner. Gay achieved fame with The Beggar's Opera (1728), a satire on Italian opera and English politics. This work's evocative lyrics and pleasing tunes established Gay's reputation as the premiere lyricist of his day.

W. S. Gilbert (1836–1911), pp. 1144–46
W(illiam) S(chwenck) Gilbert was born in London. Educated at King's College, University of London, he studied law at the Inner Temple, though his career as a barrister was unsatisfying and, therefore, brief. In 1857, he joined the militia, in which he served for twenty years. He began writing comic verse and operatic burlesques during the 1860s, and in 1869 met the eminent composer Arthur Sullivan, with whom he wrote a series of exceptionally popular operettas, including Trial by Jury, which satirizes the English legal system; H.M.S. Pinafore, which parodies the Royal Navy; Patience, a wry satire on aesthetes such as Oscar Wilde, Dante Gabriel Rossetti, and James McNeill Whistler; The Pirates of Penzance; and The Mikado. Gilbert and Sullivan's collaboration ended in 1896 due to differences in temperament. The public adored Gilbert's poems and libretti, but he referred to himself disparagingly as "a doggerel bard." Satiric verse was his forte. His wit was so biting and incisive that some thought he exhibited bad taste and others that he bordered on the seditious. Queen Victoria, for instance, snubbed Gilbert by leaving his name off the program at a public performance of his work and by knighting him only in 1907, twenty-five years after Sullivan was knighted.

Allen Ginsberg (1926–1997), pp. 1708–15
Allen Ginsberg was born in Newark, New Jersey, and was educated at Columbia University. After spending much time in New York City with William Burroughs, Jack Kerouac, and other Beat writers, he moved to San Francisco, where Lawrence Ferlinghetti's City Lights Press published Howl and Other Poems (1956). The title poem—a condemnation of bourgeois culture, a celebration of sexuality, and a manifesto for the Beat movement—has been published in many languages and remains the source of Ginsberg's worldwide reputation. Before dropping out of the workaday world, Ginsberg had held a variety of jobs. He subsequently traveled across England, the Far East, and the United States; was active in radical politics; and taught at a variety of schools. He closely studied Tibetan Buddhism and Western mystics such as William Blake. Long before his death, in New York, his countercultural poetry had been widely embraced by the literary establishment.

Dana Gioia (b. 1950), pp. 1972–73
(Michael) Dana Gioia was born in Los Angeles. After receiving a B.A. at Stanford University, he studied at Harvard University and at the Stanford University Business School. From 1977 until 1992, he worked as an executive at General Foods, in New York City. He subsequently left the business world to devote himself to writing, and settled in Santa Rosa, California. Author of controversial essays such as "Notes on the New Formalism" and "Can Poetry Matter?," he is also known as a translator, a librettist, and an anthologist. In 2004, he became chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts.

Louise Glück (b. 1943), pp. 1931–33
Louise Glück was born in New York City, raised on Long Island, and educated at Sarah Lawrence College and Columbia University, where she studied with the poet Stanley Kunitz. She lives in Vermont and has taught at Williams College since 1984. Her poems combine autobiography and myth, strong feeling and cool abstraction, in spare language. In addition to poetry, she has written one volume of criticism. She was poet laureate of the United States in 2003–04.

Oliver Goldsmith (ca. 1730–1774), pp. 686–95
Oliver Goldsmith was born at Pallas, County Longford, Ireland, the son of an Anglo-Irish clergyman and his wife. He was brought up in rural parishes including Lissoy, which may be one source for his poem "The Deserted Village" (1770). After graduation from Trinity College, Dublin, his worldly career began with a series of misstarts: rejected for the ministry, he considered reading law, decided on medicine, and enrolled at the University of Edinburgh, withdrew to study in Leyden, wandered the Continent, and on his return failed the surgeon's exam. Through a series of essays, poems, plays, histories, and biographies, he attracted the attention of Samuel Johnson and Sir Joshua Reynolds. The former saved him from prosecution for debt by arranging the sale (for £60) of The Vicar of Wakefield (1766), the novel for which Goldsmith is chiefly remembered. His great comedy, She Stoops to Conquer (1773), was an immediate success.

Jorie Graham (b. 1951), pp. 1975–79
Jorie Graham was born in Italy, to religious historian Curtis B. Pepper and sculptor Beverly Pepper, and raised in Italy and France. She attended both the Sorbonne and New York University before earning her M.F.A. at the University of Iowa. She was associated with Iowa and several other universities before being appointed Boylston Professor of Rhetoric and Oratory at Harvard University. Greatly influential on a generation of poets, she writes allusive, far-ranging poems that often explore the nature of consciousness.

Robert Graves (1895–1985), pp. 1400–1404
Robert Graves was born in Wimbledon, England. The end of his school days coincided with the start of World War I, and in the summer of 1914 he took a commission with the Royal Welch Fusiliers. Sent to the front in France, where he met the poet Siegfried Sassoon, he was gravely injured at the Battle of the Somme (1916) and sent home. After demobilization in 1919, he attended St. John's College, Oxford, and in 1926 he taught English at the University of Cairo, Egypt. That same year, he began a relationship with the American poet Laura Riding, with whom he founded the Seizin Press (London). From 1929, he lived mainly in Majorca, Spain. He wrote prolifically in a number of genres, including poetry, fiction, biography, autobiography, criticism, and translation, and his career can be divided into several distinct phases. When a young man, he was published in Edward Marsh's anthologies of Georgian poetry. As a result of the pressures of war, however, which shattered his faith in the values with which he had been raised, he began writing bald transcriptions of life on the battlefield, though he later suppressed this work, believing it inferior to the war poetry of Sassoon and Wilfred Owen. His memoir, Goodbye to All That (1929), remains Graves's best-known contribution to the literature of World War I. Under Riding's influence, he experimented with modernism. While doing research for a novel, he constructed the mythological system that lay behind his late work, centering around a figure he called the White Goddess. His novels I, Claudius and Claudius the God (both 1934) were adapted for television in 1976. His reputation as a poet reached its zenith in the 1950s and '60s as he embarked on lecture tours, published his Collected Poems (1959), and was accorded honors such as the Queen's Gold Medal for Poetry (1968). He was professor of poetry at Oxford from 1961 to 1966.

Thomas Gray (1716–1771), pp. 666–73
Thomas Gray was born in Cornhill, London, the son of a scrivener and his wife, and the only child of twelve to survive infancy. Educated at Eton and Peterhouse College, Cambridge, he divided his time between London and Stoke Poges before settling into a fellowship at Cambridge, where he pursued his studies in Classics, early English poetry, and ancient Welsh and Norse literatures. Other than brief stays in London and tours of the Lake District and Scotland in search of the picturesque, Gray rarely left the university. He embarked on a tour of France and Italy with the writer Horace Walpole in 1739, but after a quarrel returned alone. He began to write English poetry in about 1741. Little of his work was published in his lifetime, but his poems circulated in manuscript among friends. In Gray's "Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard," Samuel Johnson found "sentiments to which every bosom returns an echo" and "images which find a mirror in every mind."

Matthew Green (1696–1737), pp. 645–48
Little is known about Matthew Green's life, except that he was born into a Quaker family and employed at the London Customs House. He published nothing during his lifetime, but left his manuscripts to his friend Richard Glover, who brought some of the poems to press after Green's death. Green's reputation rests solely on "The Spleen"; indeed, its author came to be known as "Spleen-Green."

Lavinia Greenlaw (b. 1962), pp. 2015–16
Lavinia Greenlaw was born in London and educated at Kingston Polytechnic, the London College of Printing, and the Courtauld Institute. She worked as a book editor and an arts administrator before becoming a freelance writer and broadcaster. Night Photograph, her first collection, was published in 1993. A recipient of numerous awards, including the Forward Prize for best poem of the year (1997), she has written dramas and adaptations for BBC radio, and her first novel, Mary George of Allnorthover, was published in 2001. She reviews regularly for both U.K. and U.S. journals and teaches in the Creative Writing M.A. Programme at Goldsmith's College, University of London.

Fulke Greville, Lord Brooke (1554–1628), pp. 206–07
Fulke Greville was born into a family of Warwickshire, England, landowners and was sent to Shrewsbury School in the same year as Sir

Philip Sidney, who became his close friend. After attending Jesus College, Cambridge, Greville went to court, where he was introduced to the "Areopagus" club, an association of courtiers and poets named after the meeting place of the Athenian aristocratic council. Knighted in 1597, he served as treasurer to the navy from 1589 to 1604. Although he fell from favor in the early years of James I's reign, he served as chancellor of the exchequer from 1614 to 1622 and was made first baron Brooke in 1621. Warwick Castle, granted to him on his elevation to the peerage, was the scene of his murder by a servant, who stabbed first Greville and then himself. Greville is perhaps best known for The Life of the Renowned Sir Philip Sidney (1652), which expresses Greville's political disillusionment after Queen Elizabeth's death, and which helped to establish Sidney's reputation as the greatest of the Renaissance chivalric courtier-poets. Greville also wrote Caelica, a sequence of songs and sonnets; the neo-Stoic Letter to an Honorable Lady; a verse Treatise of Monarchy; and two tragedies, Alaham and Mustapha, which deal with political and religious themes.

Barbara Guest (b. 1920), pp. 1616–17
Barbara Guest was born in Wilmington, North Carolina, and raised in California and Florida. She was educated at the University of North Carolina, the University of California at Los Angeles, and the University of California at Berkeley. From 1951 to 1954, Guest served as an associate editor at ARTnews. In addition to poetry, she has written plays, fiction, and a biography of H. D. Often associated with the poets of the so-called New York school and the L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E poets who descended from them, Guest has identified her concerns as "what happens every day, . . . memory, . . . conscience, . . . the brevity of ideas, . . . time, disorder, flux, etc."

Thom Gunn (1929–2004), pp. 1768–74
Thom Gunn was born in Gravesend, Kent, England, but moved frequently as a child in the wake of his father, a journalist. After school, Gunn served in the army for two years, then went to Paris, where he worked on the Métro by day and attempted to write a novel by night, and to Rome. He then went up to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he attended lectures by the critic F. R. Leavis and published his first collection of poems, Fighting Terms (1954). He did graduate work at Stanford University under the poet Yvor Winters. Except for a year in San Antonio, Texas, Gunn lived in San Francisco for the rest of his life. He taught at the University of California at Berkeley from 1958 until 1966, but gave up full-time teaching to devote himself to writing. His collection The Man with Night Sweats won the 1992 Forward Prize, and his Collected Poems was published in 1993. In addition to writing poetry and essays, he edited collections of verse by Ben Jonson and Fulke Greville.

Ivor Gurney (1890–1937), pp. 1371–73
Ivor Gurney was born in Gloucester, England. He attended the Royal College of Music, London, until 1915, when he enlisted in the army. (He was initially rejected in 1914 because of poor eyesight.) Sent to the front in France, he was gassed at Ypres in 1917 and sent home; he suffered a breakdown the following year. He returned briefly to his studies at the Royal College, where the composer Ralph Vaughan Williams became his tutor. From 1919 to 1922, he lived restlessly, continuing to compose music and to write but also working at a number of odd jobs, ranging from organist to cinema pianist to tax clerk. In 1922, suffering from schizophrenia, he was committed to the City of London Mental Hospital, where he died fifteen years later. Two volumes of poems appeared in his lifetime, Severn and Somme (1917) and War's Embers (1919), and his songs were regularly published during the 1920s. Critical appreciation of Gurney's artistry continued after his death with editions of his songs, letters, and poetry.

Daniel Hall (b. 1952), pp. 1990–92
Daniel Hall was born in Pittsfield, Massachusetts. He has traveled extensively throughout the British Isles and Asia. His first book, Hermit with Landscape (1990), was selected for the Yale Series of Younger Poets by James Merrill. He is writer-in-residence and director of the Creative Writing Center at Amherst College.

Donald Hall (b. 1928), pp. 1753–57
Donald Hall was born in New Haven, Connecticut. Educated at Harvard and Oxford Universities, he has served as poetry editor at The Paris Review, as a member of the editorial board for poetry at Wesleyan University Press, and as a poetry consultant for Harper & Row. After teaching at Stanford University, Harvard, and the University of Michigan, he retired in 1975 and moved back to his family home in Danbury, New Hampshire, to work full-time as a writer. In addition to poetry, Hall has published literary criticism, personal reminiscences, and children's books, and has edited a number of widely used anthologies and textbooks. Among his most praised works are his poems addressing the final illness and death of his wife, the poet Jane Kenyon (1947–1995).

Thomas Hardy (1840–1928), pp. 1152–62
Thomas Hardy was born in Dorset, England, the area he made famous as "Wessex" in his novels. He left school at age sixteen to work as an apprentice to an architect in Dorchester who specialized in church restoration. He went to London in 1861 to continue work as an architect, but after several years returned to Dorset, where he lived for the rest of his life. Though he seriously considered taking holy orders, he lost his faith, in part because of the writings of prominent agnostics of the day, such as Charles Darwin. He published his first novel, Desperate Remedies, in 1871, but made his reputation as a novelist with Far from the Madding Crowd, in 1874. He published no poetry until 1897, after the publication of his final novel, The Well-Beloved, but then dedicated the last thirty years of his life to poetry, which he claimed to love more than prose. Hardy was a versatile poet, writing lyrics, ballads, sonnets, dramatic monologues, and a series of moving love poems composed upon the death of his wife, Emma. Wessex Poems (1898) brought together his poetry from over thirty years. It was followed in 1901 by Poems of the Past and Present, and in 1909 by Time's Laughingstocks. His verse epic about the Napoleonic Wars, The Dynasts, was published in three parts between 1904 and 1908, and his Satires of Circumstance in 1914. His reputation as a poet has grown steadily ever since Philip Larkin included more of Hardy's poems than those of Yeats and Eliot in his 1973 Oxford Book of Twentieth-Century English Verse.

Tony Harrison (b. 1937), pp. 1872–79
Tony Harrison was born in Leeds, England, and was educated at Leeds University, where he read Classics and linguistics and published his first poems. He lectured in Nigeria from 1962 until 1966, and in Prague from 1966 until 1967. Upon his return to England, he became the first Northern Arts Fellow at the Universities of Newcastle-upon-Tyne and Durham. In addition to a number of original verse plays, many of which he also directed, he has written films and adaptations of works by Molière, Racine, and others, including acclaimed versions of the Oresteia and the medieval Mystery plays. His volume The Gaze of the Gorgon won the 1992 Whitbread Prize for Poetry, and in 1995 he was commissioned by The Guardian newspaper to write poems on the war in Bosnia.

Robert Hass (b. 1941), pp. 1919–20
Robert Hass was born in San Francisco, California. He was educated at St. Mary's College and at Stanford University, where he studied under the poet Yvor Winters. He has taught at the State University of New York at Buffalo, St. Mary's College, and the University of California at Berkeley. In addition to poetry, he has written essays and criticism and translated much European poetry, most notably that of Czeslaw Milosz. He was poet laureate of the United States in 1995–96.

Robert Hayden (1913–1980), pp. 1533–37
Robert Hayden was born Asa Bundy Sheffey in a poor neighborhood of Detroit, Michigan, and raised by foster parents. He was educated at Detroit City College (now Wayne State University) and the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, where he studied with W. H. Auden. In 1936, Hayden joined the Writers' Project of the Works Progress Administration, and the research he did on local folklore and the history of Michigan's Underground Railroad later made its way into many of his poems. Hayden taught at Fisk University, in Nashville, Tennessee, from 1946 until 1969, and at the University of Michigan from then until his death. He professed the Baha'i faith and, beginning in 1967, served a long tenure as editor of its World Order journal. In addition, he wrote a play on Malcolm X, published a collection of prose, and edited several anthologies.

Seamus Heaney (b. 1939), pp. 1899–1910
Seamus Heaney was born in Mossbawn, County Derry, Northern Ireland, to a Catholic farmer and his wife. He was educated at Queen's University, Belfast, where he later lectured in English. His first volume of poetry, Digging, established his reputation as the most gifted poet of his generation, a reputation confirmed by the ten major collections that have followed. Robert Lowell dubbed him "the best Irish poet since W. B. Yeats." Not wanting to be constrained as a "political poet" in the north of Ireland, Heaney moved to the Irish Republic. He now lives in Dublin, having taught at the University of California at Berkeley, Harvard University, and, from 1989 to 1994, as professor of poetry at Oxford University. A distinguished critic and accomplished translator, he won the Whitbread Book of the Year Award for his version of Beowulf. In 1995, he was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature. "Crediting Poetry," his acceptance speech, was published in Open Ground, which collected thirty years of his poems.

Anthony Hecht (1923–2004), pp. 1667–74
Anthony Hecht was born in New York City. After graduation from Bard College, he joined the army and was stationed in Europe and Japan. He later taught at Kenyon College, where he studied informally with fellow faculty member John Crowe Ransom, then returned to New York and did graduate work at Columbia University. In the years following, he taught at, among other schools, Smith College, the University of Rochester, and Georgetown University. He published books of criticism—including a study of W. H. Auden (a key influence)—and undertook translation, most notably of Aeschylus and Joseph Brodsky. He also collaborated with artist Leonard Baskin on several sequences of poems. A gifted writer of light verse, he co-invented (with John Hollander) the comic "double dactyl," and even his graver poems often register a dark humor. He lived in Washington, D.C., where in 1982–84 he served as consultant in poetry to the Library of Congress.

Felicia Dorothea Hemans (1793–1835), pp. 897–901
Felicia Dorothea Hemans was born in Liverpool, England, and raised in Wales. She was educated at home by her mother, who recognized her writing talent. Hemans was exceptionally prolific, publishing her first two volumes of poetry at age fifteen, and publishing a volume almost every year during the last two decades of her life. She was immensely popular in her day and is thought to be England's first professional female poet. In 1812, she married Captain Alfred Hemans; the couple produced five sons, but separated in 1818. From 1827 until 1831, she lived in the Liverpool suburb of Wavertree, where she had gone to secure an education for her boys, and from 1831 until her death she lived in Dublin. She carried on an active correspondence with many eminent writers of her day, and published poems and articles in periodicals such as the Edinburgh Annual Register, Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine, and the New Monthly Magazine. Her most successful book was Records of Woman: With Other Poems (1828). She was included in Oxford University Press's Standard Authors series until 1914 but neglected in the wake of modernism. The upsurge of Women's Studies in the 1980s rekindled an appreciation of her writing.

Edward Herbert (1582–1648), p. 346
Edward Herbert was born at Eyton, in Shropshire, England. He was the eldest son of Richard Herbert and the elder brother of the poet George Herbert. Educated at University College, Oxford, he lived in Oxford until moving to London with his wife in 1600. He was knighted soon after the accession of King James I. From 1608 to 1618, he traveled widely on the Continent as a soldier of fortune; in 1619, he became ambassador to France. After his recall in 1624, James awarded him an Irish peerage and made him Lord Herbert of Cherbury. In that same year, he published his most important work, De Veritate, a Latin philosophical treatise on knowledge, psychology, truth, and religion. His poems and his autobiography were published posthumously.

George Herbert (1593–1633), pp. 367–85
George Herbert was the fifth son of Richard Herbert, who died when the poet was three, and the younger brother of Edward, Lord Herbert of Cherbury, also a writer. He was educated at Westminster School and King's Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge. At age sixteen, he sent his mother, Magdalen, two accomplished and devout sonnets with a letter announcing his dedication of his poetic powers to God, though this did not preclude his harboring worldly ambition. His fellowship at Trinity required him to join the clergy within seven years, but after being elected public orator (a springboard into higher positions at court), he left his university duties to proxies while he pursued a secular career. Two terms as a member of Parliament evidently disillusioned him. He was ordained deacon, installed as canon of Lincoln Cathedral, and, in 1630, having been ordained priest, received a living as rector of Bemerton, near Salisbury. In 1629, he married his stepfather's cousin, Jane Danvers, and they adopted his two orphaned nieces. In addition to a prose treatise, A Priest to the Temple: Or the Country Parson, his Character and Rule of Life (1652), he wrote many poems in both English and Latin. Shortly before his death, he sent his English poems to his friend the Anglican clergyman Nicholas Ferrar, asking him to publish them if he believed that they could "turn to the advantage of any dejected soul"; otherwise, Ferrar was to burn them. The poems collected in The Temple (1633) represented, Herbert wrote, "a picture of the many spiritual conflicts that have passed betwixt God and my soul, before I could subject mine to the will of Jesus my master."

Robert Herrick (1591–1674), pp. 354–63
Robert Herrick was born into a family of wealthy London goldsmiths. Apprenticed to his uncle at age sixteen, he did not go up to Cambridge until 1613. After taking his M.A. in 1620, Herrick returned to London, where he became an admirer and friend of Ben Jonson. He joined the clergy in 1623, acted as a chaplain on the duke of Buckingham's disastrous expedition to the Isle of Rhé, and as a reward was given the living of dean priory, in Devon, a position he took up in 1630. The rural tranquility of the parish, though at first alien to the urbane and social Herrick, made possible his prolific writing career; he produced over twenty-five hundred compositions, many written to imaginary mistresses, others about his maid, his dog, his cat, and rural customs and pleasures. He also wrote on religious themes. Dispossessed of his living by the Puritans, he returned to London and published in 1648 a volume containing his secular poems, the Hesperides, and his religious poems, the Noble Numbers. Among the former were his imitations of the classical poets Catullus and Horace. After the restoration of the monarchy in 1660, Herrick returned to Devon and spent his last years quietly, apparently without composing further poems.

Geoffrey Hill (b. 1932), pp. 1831–36
Geoffrey Hill was born in Bromsgrove, Worcestershire, England. He was educated at Keble College, Oxford, and has since taught at the University of Leeds; Emmanuel and Trinity Colleges, Cambridge; and, since 1988, Boston University; as well as being a visiting lecturer at several institutions in England, Nigeria, and the United States. His first collection of poems, For the Unfallen, appeared in 1959. Distinctively resonant as is the voice of those early poems, they remain consistently impersonal. Even when the poet's boyhood self is conflated with that of Offa in Mercian Hymns (1971), subjectivity dissolves in the objective projection of a historical imagination of great range and power. Where that book had been concerned on one level with "the matter of Britain," a later collection, Canaan (1996), attempts to diagnose the matter with Britain (identifying the U.K. with "Canaan, the land of the Philistines," excoriated in the Bible). That and his more recent books, The Triumph of Love (1998) and Speech! Speech! (2001), examine more searchingly and more savagely the themes that have long preoccupied him, but these works have a new and powerful personal dimension. Hill's critical writings include The Lords of Limit: Essays on Literature and Ideas and The Enemy's Country: Words, Conjecture and Other Circumstances of Language. He has also produced a verse translation of Ibsen's Brand for the London stage. A winner of the Whitbread and Hawthornden Prizes, he is a fellow of the American Academy of the Arts and Sciences.

Daryl Hine (b. 1936), pp. 1868–69
Daryl Hine was born in Vancouver, British Columbia, and was educated at McGill University and the University of Chicago. He taught at Chicago until 1968, when he became editor of Poetry magazine. After serving in this post for a decade, he returned to teaching, mostly in the Chicago area. In addition to poetry, he has published a novel, a travel book, and several plays. He also has coedited an anthology of verse and has translated Homer and Theocritus.

John Hollander (b. 1929), pp. 1775–77
John Hollander was born in New York City. He was educated at Columbia University and Indiana University at Bloomington, from which he received a Ph.D. Upon graduation, he embarked on an academic career, during which he has taught at Harvard University, Connecticut College, Hunter College, and Yale University. In addition to poetry, Hollander has written plays, children's verse, and several works on prosody. Respected as much for his scholarship as for his poetry, he has edited numerous anthologies of essays and poems, including a comprehensive edition of nineteenth-century American verse. He is also coinventor (with Anthony Hecht) of the "double dactyl" verse form.

Oliver Wendell Holmes (1809–1894), p. 974
Oliver Wendell Holmes was born in Cambridge, Massachusetts. He studied law at Harvard University, underwent two years of medical training in Europe, and returned to Harvard to complete his M.D. A dedicated Unitarian, he served as professor of anatomy at Dartmouth College and at Harvard, and later as dean of Harvard Medical School. He established his reputation in medicine by discovering that puerperal fever, commonly associated with childbirth and often fatal, was contagious; his work helped to stem its spread. He began writing in earnest shortly after earning his medical degree, and he was a popular lecturer on the New England lyceum circuit. The Autocrat of the Breakfast-Table (1858), a series of witty essays first published in The Atlantic Monthly, is generally considered his best work. Although his best-known poem is perhaps "Old Ironsides" (a stirring vers d'occasion that rescued the U.S.S. Constitution from the salvage yard), "The Chambered Nautilus" was his favorite.

A. D. Hope (1907–2000), pp. 1481–85
A(lec) D(erwent) Hope was born in Cooma, New South Wales, Australia. He was educated at Sydney University and University College, Oxford. Upon graduation, he taught English in the New South Wales school system, and in 1937 became a lecturer in education at Sydney Teachers' College. He taught English at the University of Melbourne from 1945 to 1965 and at Canberra University College from 1965 to 1968, when he retired to devote himself to writing. Although his work is rich in literary, biblical, and mythological allusions, he recrafted traditional myths to fit the times in which he lived. Locating himself in the tradition of poets from Chaucer to Browning—earlier masters of narrative, argument, and exposition—he valued general statement over local or particular detail and individual expression. In a voice ferociously witty and authoritative, often sardonic and satiric, he typically approached modern life with disdain, although he softened this stance in his later work.

Gerard Manley Hopkins (1844–1889), pp. 1166–72
Gerard Manley Hopkins was born in Stratford, Essex, England, and was educated at Balliol College, Oxford. Under the influence of Cardinal John Henry Newman, he converted to Catholicism in 1866, became a novitiate of the Society of Jesuits two years later, and was ordained in 1877. Hopkins served as a parish priest and teacher of Classics, his lengthiest appointment being with University College, Dublin. He stopped writing poetry in 1868, believing it interfered with his priestly vocation. Encouraged by Church authorities, he resumed writing in 1875, with "The Wreck of the Deutschland," a poem commemorating the death of several Franciscan nuns, exiled from Germany by the Falck Laws, in a shipwreck at the mouth of the river Thames. In his subsequent poems, Hopkins explored his relationship to God. Central to his complex theories on prosody are the terms inscape, instress, and, most important to future poets, sprung rhythm. Little of his poetry was published during his lifetime, but the poet Robert Bridges, Hopkins's friend since Oxford, brought out an edition in 1918.

A. E. Housman (1859–1936), pp. 1173–80
A. E. Housman was born in Fockbury, Worcestershire, England, and was educated at St. John's College, Oxford. For a decade, he worked for the Patent Office in London, while continuing his studies and publishing scholarly essays in literary journals. He held appointments at University College, London, and Trinity College, Cambridge. While he published extensively on the classics (in particular Propertius, Juvenal, Lucan, and Manilius), he came to poetry relatively late and had to publish his first collection, A Shropshire Lad (1896), at his own expense. It gradually gained wide public recognition and made Housman famous. His Shropshire is less a geographic locale than an emotional one and depicts an English pastoral world that was rapidly disappearing. He eventually responded to demands for a sequel by publishing Last Poems in 1922, but resolutely declined honorary degrees and an Order of Merit. In 1996, a plaque was dedicated to him in Westminster Abbey's Poets' Corner.

Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey
(ca. 1517–1547), pp. 137–40
Henry Howard, also known as "Surrey," was the eldest son of an old aristocratic family. His father, who became third duke of Norfolk, had royal ancestors, as did his mother. Two of his nieces, Anne Boleyn and Catherine Howard, were wives of Henry VIII, and the king's illegitimate son, Henry Fitzroy, was a childhood friend. Surrey fought ably in campaigns against the French and was imprisoned in 1537 on suspicion of sympathizing with the "Pilgrimage of Grace" rebellion against the dissolution of the monasteries. During his brief life (he was executed on a frivolous charge of treason), Surrey wrote courtly poems and circulated them in manuscript. He followed Wyatt in translating sonnets from Petrarch's Italian and wrote his first English poem in blank verse, a translation of books 2 and 4 of Virgil's Aeneid. His work in this "strange meter," as the publisher called it, appeared in print in 1554 (book 4) and 1557 (book 2). Many of his lyrics were included, along with Wyatt's, in Tottel's Songs and Sonnets (1557). His (probably fictional) love for "Geraldine" is dramatized in Thomas Nashe's The Unfortunate Traveller, where Surrey appears as the traveler's "master."

Richard Howard (b. 1929), pp. 1778–83
Richard Howard was born in Cleveland, Ohio, and educated at Columbia University and the Sorbonne. In Cleveland and New York City, he worked as a lexicographer for the World Publishing Company, then turned to translation and has since brought into English more than 150 French texts, including works by Baudelaire, Barthes, de Beauvoir, Breton, Camus, and Gide. In addition, he has worked as a poetry editor for journals such as The New Republic, The Paris Review, and Shenandoah, and has taught at, among other schools, Columbia University, Johns Hopkins University, and the universities of Houston and Cincinnati. He lives in New York City. A prolific writer in several modes, he is known especially for his mastery of the dramatic monologue.

Julia Ward Howe (1819–1910), p. 1054
Julia Ward was born in New York City, to a prominent family, and was educated at home. In 1843, she married Samuel Gridley Howe, the social activist and reformer who founded the Perkins Institute for the Blind. The couple settled in Boston, where the poet gave birth to six children. She devoted herself not only to motherhood and writing but also to the abolition and women's suffrage movements. In addition to poetry, Howe published two plays and much prose, including a well-received biography of Margaret Fuller. She is best remembered for the apocalyptic "Battle-Hymn of the Republic" (1862).

Langston Hughes (1902–1967), pp. 1429–35
Langston Hughes was born in Joplin, Missouri, and raised in Missouri, Kansas, Illinois, and Ohio. He attended Columbia University from 1921 until 1922, then traveled extensively in South America and Europe before moving to Washington, D.C., in 1925. The next year, Hughes published his first collection of poems, The Weary Blues, to great acclaim. In 1929, he received a B.A. from Lincoln University, in Pennsylvania, but from 1928 until 1930 he lived in New York City and was an important figure in the Harlem Renaissance. In addition to poetry, he wrote fiction, drama, screenplays, essays, and autobiography. Because of his journalistic work in support of the Republican side during the Spanish Civil War and his sympathies for the American Communists, in 1953 he was called to testify before Senator Joseph McCarthy's committee on subversive activities, and for many years following he worked to restore his reputation. Always concerned "largely . . . with the depicting of Negro life in America," Hughes documented it in poems that drew meters and moods from street language, jazz, and the blues.

Ted Hughes (1930–1998), pp. 1810–16
Ted Hughes was born in Mytholmroyd, South Yorkshire, England, and was raised in Mexborough, a coal-mining town in South Yorkshire. He won a scholarship to Pembroke College, Cambridge, but served two years in the Royal Air Force before matriculating. He studied English, archaeology, and anthropology, specializing in mythological systems (an interest that informed much of his poetry). He later worked as a gardener, night watchman, zookeeper, scriptwriter, and teacher. In 1956, he married the American poet Sylvia Plath, and the couple spent a year in the United States before moving to England in 1959. Plath committed suicide in 1963. In 1970, Hughes settled on a farm in Devon. In addition to poetry, he wrote plays, short stories, and books for children. He also edited numerous collections of verse and prose, and was a founding editor of Modern Poetry in Translation magazine. He was poet laureate of England from 1984 until his death. His poems vividly describe the beauty of the natural world, but celebrate its raw, elemental energies. He often embodies the primal forces of nature as mythic animals such as the pike, the hawk, and "Crow," a central character in a long cycle of poems. His translation and recasting of Tales from Ovid was published to critical acclaim in 1997, and less than a year later he broke his silence on his relationship with Plath with the publication of Birthday Letters. He received the Order of Merit from Queen Elizabeth II only twelve days before his death, from cancer.

Richard Hugo (1923–1982), pp. 1674–76
Richard Hugo was born in Seattle and educated at the University of Washington, where he studied with the poet Theodore Roethke. A bombardier in the United States Army Air Corps during World War II, he subsequently worked for the Boeing Corporation, then began an academic career, during which he taught at the University of Washington, the University of Iowa Writers' Workshop, and (from 1964 until 1982) the University of Montana at Missoula. From 1977 until 1982, he served as editor of the Yale Series of Younger Poets, and he helped to launch the careers of many poets. His poems typically are set in desolate landscapes of the American West.

Laura (Riding) Jackson (1901–1991), pp. 1425–26
Laura Riding was born in New York City and attended Cornell University. For a short time, she was affiliated with the Fugitives, a prominent group of southern writers. In the 1930s, Riding was associated with the poet and critic Robert Graves, with whom she wrote A Survey of Modernist Poetry (1927), an influential study that advocated close textual reading. Riding and Graves also founded the Seizin Press, in London. In 1939, she stopped writing verse, returned to the United States, and with Schuyler Jackson, her second husband, embarked on a series of lexicographic and linguistic studies. In conformity with the late author's wish, her Board of Literary Management asks us to record that, in 1940, Laura (Riding) Jackson renounced, on grounds of linguistic principle, the writing of poetry: she had come to hold that "poetry obstructs general attainment of something better in our linguistic way-of-life than we have."

Josephine Jacobsen (1908–2003), pp. 1491–93
Josephine Jacobsen was born in Cobourg, Ontario, to American parents. She was educated by private tutors at Roland Park Country School, in Baltimore, where she resided for much of her life, although she was an extensive traveler. Active in the public service of poetry, and the author of numerous collections, she served as poetry consultant to the Library of Congress and in other capacities for the Poetry Society of America, the Folger Library, and the National Endowment for the Arts. She published her first poem at age eleven and began writing short stories at age sixty. She also published literary and dramatic criticism.

Randall Jarrell (1914–1965), pp. 1552–58
Randall Jarrell was born in Nashville, Tennessee, but spent some of his early years in California. He was educated at Vanderbilt University, where he studied psychology and English (with the poet John Crowe Ransom) and wrote his M.A. thesis on A. E. Housman. He taught at several schools, including Kenyon College, where he roomed with the novelist Peter Taylor and the poet Robert Lowell; the University of Texas at Austin; and Women's College, University of North Carolina at Greensboro. In World War II, he was stationed stateside, working with B-29 crews, and, based partly on their reports, wrote some of the most prized poems to come out of the war. He also earned a reputation as an astute, acerbic, and influential critic of poetry. Williams, Frost, Bishop, and Lowell were among those he favored. In addition to poetry, he wrote a novel and children's stories, as well as translations of Goethe, Chekhov, and several of Grimm's fairy tales. After being hospitalized for depression early in 1965, he died some months later when struck by a car.

Robinson Jeffers (1887–1962), pp. 1320–24
(John) Robinson Jeffers was born in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, to a Classics professor in a theological seminary and his wife. He was educated at Occidental College. Before turning to writing, he studied medicine and forestry at the graduate level. In 1914, he moved to Carmel, California, where he lived in relative isolation—in a home overlooking the dramatic Pacific coastline that figures prominently in his work. He also built with his own hands a structure he called Hawk Tower. Jeffers dubbed his philosophical stance "inhumanism" and defined it as "a shifting emphasis and significance from man to notman." He challenged humanity's overreliance on the flawed social structures of its own making and urged its return to a more primal relation with the natural world. He achieved his greatest fame with his 1946 translation of Euripides' Medea, which was performed on Broadway.

Elizabeth Jennings (1926–2001), pp. 1735–36
Elizabeth Jennings was born in Boston, Lincolnshire, England, and educated at St. Anne's College, Oxford. Her poems were first published in the 1948 edition of Oxford Poetry, edited by Kingsley Amis and James Michie. She worked at various professions—including advertising, librarianship, and publishing—before devoting herself exclusively to writing. In the 1960s, she suffered recurrent mental breakdowns, which resulted in hospitalization. Her later work documents her illness and subsequent recovery. She also published critical essays, children's verse, and a translation of Michelangelo's sonnets. Her last volume of poems, Timely Issues, appeared shortly before her death.

Samuel Johnson (1709–1784), pp. 655–65
Samuel Johnson was born in Lichfield, England, to a bookseller and his wife. As a child, he contracted scrofula (tuberculosis of the lymphatic system) and smallpox, a combination that left him badly scarred, with impaired sight and hearing, and prone to involuntary gesticulation. He went to Pembroke College, Oxford, but financial difficulties forced him to leave after fourteen months. After a period spent teaching in Birmingham, in 1737 he settled in London, where he worked on The Gentleman's Magazine, and the next year published "London," an imitation of Juvenal's satires that was an immediate success, as was his second satire, "The Vanity of Human Wishes" (1749). Johnson's contribution to literary scholarship, criticism, and lexicography is incalculable. In addition to his many reviews and essays, he published the ambitious Lives of the Poets (1779–81), founded and edited The Rambler magazine, collected the works of Shakespeare, and produced his monumental, if idiosyncratic, A Dictionary of the English Language (1755).

Ben Jonson (1572–1637), pp. 323–45
Ben(jamin) Jonson was born in London after the death of his father, a clergyman. Educated at Westminster School, he was working for his stepfather as a bricklayer by the early 1590s. He volunteered for military service in the Low Countries and after returning to England began a career in the theater, first as an actor, then as a playwright. In 1598, he killed a fellow actor in a duel but escaped hanging by claiming "benefit of clergy," that is, by demonstrating his ability to read a verse from the Bible. His conversion to Catholicism in that same year no doubt contributed to the charges of "popery" and treason leveled against him after he published his neoclassical tragedy Sejanus (1606), which dramatized conspiracy and assassination. Jonson had also incurred the wrath of authorities by coauthoring The Isle of Dogs (1597) and Eastward Ho (1605); the former, considered a "lewd play, containing very seditious and slanderous matter," caused its authors to be briefly imprisoned and was so effectively censored that no copies now exist; the latter, which also led to Jonson's imprisonment, contained a passage about the Scots that offended the court and the Scottish king, James I. Jonson soon gained the king's favor, however, with the series of court masques he began to create—with the designer Inigo Jones—in 1605; in 1616, after he had published his Works and had returned (in 1610) to the Church of England, he received a substantial pension from the king and effectively occupied the position of poet laureate. Learned in the classics and skilled in a variety of poetic and dramatic forms, Jonson first acquired fame as the author of "comedies of humors" satirizing the eccentricities and "ruling passions" of his characters. In addition to his many successful plays—Volpone (1605), The Alchemist (1610), and Bartholomew Fair (1614), for instance—Jonson wrote poetry in a variety of forms, including witty epigrams, epitaphs, songs (both freestanding and designed for plays and masques), and "occasional" poems celebrating events and people. In contrast to his contemporary Shakespeare, whose plays were collected only posthumously, Jonson was concerned with constructing an imposing authorial persona. Modeling himself in part on classical writers such as Martial and Horace, he was the first English poet to inspire a "school": the Sons, or Tribes, of Ben, which included poets such as Robert Herrick and Thomas Carew.

Donald Justice (1925–2004), pp. 1684–87
Donald Justice was born and raised in Miami, Florida. He earned a B.A. from the University of Miami, an M.A. from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, and a Ph.D. from the University of Iowa, where his teachers included the poets John Berryman, Robert Lowell, and Karl Shapiro. He also studied with the poet Yvor Winters at Stanford University. He taught at, among other schools, the University of Iowa Writers' Workshop and the University of Florida at Gainesville and counted among his students Mark Strand, Charles Wright, and Jorie Graham. An accomplished painter as well, he became known for understated, sometimes darkly humorous poems.

Patrick Kavanagh (1904–1967), pp. 1450–54
Patrick Kavanagh was born in Inniskeen, County Monaghan, Ireland. He left school at age thirteen to go to work. During the 1930s, he became active on the Dublin literary scene, writing reviews for local publications while supporting himself by farming. His first collection, "Ploughman" and Other Poems, was published in 1936. In 1949, he sold his land and devoted himself entirely to literature. He made a precarious living over the next two decades; despite the critical success of The Great Hunger (1942), sales were sluggish and he had difficulty finding a publisher for subsequent work. His difficulties brought him close to despair, but his autobiographical novel, Tarry Flynn, was issued in 1948, and in 1955 he experienced a powerful spiritual rebirth and his work enjoyed a brief revival. Kavanagh has been credited with maintaining public interest in Irish peasant culture in the period following the Celtic Twilight.

John Keats (1795–1821), pp. 905–41
John Keats was born in London, the son of a livery stableman and his wife. At age fifteen, he was apprenticed to an apothecary-surgeon, and on completion of his apprenticeship did further training at Guy's Hospital, London. Having qualified, Keats abandoned medicine for poetry. In 1818, he fell in love with Fanny Brawne, but was prevented from marrying her by financial difficulties. In 1819, his annus mirabilis, he produced all of his great odes, a number of fine sonnets, and several other masterpieces. The following year, he developed tuberculosis, the disease that had killed his mother and younger brother, Tom. Hoping to prolong his life, he traveled to Italy, but died in Rome—in lodgings in the Piazza di Spagna (now a museum)—the following spring. At the time of his death, he had published only fifty-four poems, and it was not until the publication of Richard Monkton Milne's Life, Letters and Literary Remains of John Keats in 1848 that his reputation as a great poet was established. In his poetry, he struggled to make sense of a world riddled with "misery, heartache and pain, sickness and oppression." Rather than take solace in religious or philosophical creeds, as did Wordsworth and Coleridge, he looked to sensation, passion, and imagination to guide him. "I am certain of nothing," he wrote to a friend, "but of the holiness of the Heart's affections and the truth of Imagination—What the imagination seizes as Beauty must be truth."

Weldon Kees (1914–1955), pp. 1559–60
Weldon Kees was born in Beatrice, Nebraska, and educated at Doane College and the University of Missouri before graduating from the University of Nebraska. Initially a fiction writer, Kees moved to New York City, where he painted, wrote art criticism, and published his first book of poems, The Last Man (1943). In 1950, he moved to the West Coast and worked as a photographer, film producer, radio broadcaster, and jazz pianist. When his car was found parked near the Golden Gate Bridge in July 1955, he was presumed a suicide. His best-known work is a series of wistful, ironic poems about an urban everyman he called Robinson.

Richard Kenney (b. 1948), pp. 1954–56
Richard Kenney was born in Glens Falls, New York. He attended Dartmouth College and studied Celtic lore in Ireland and Scotland. He teaches English at the University of Washington in Seattle and for some years has led its summer seminars in creative writing, in Rome. The first of his three volumes of poetry, The Evolution of the Flightless Bird (1984), was selected by James Merrill for the Yale Series of Younger Poets. He lives in Port Townsend, Washington.

Sidney Keyes (1922–1943), pp. 1644–47
Sidney Keyes was born in Dartford, England. He was educated at Tonbridge School, where he began to write poetry, and at The Queen's College, Oxford, where he became friends with John Heath-Stubbs and Michael Meyer, coeditors of Eight Oxford Poets, which includes some of Keyes's work. His first collection, The Iron Laurel, appeared in 1942, shortly before he was commissioned into his father's regiment, the Queen's Own Royal West Kent. After only two weeks of active service in Tunisia, he was killed near Sidi Abdullab. A second volume of poems, The Cruel Solstice, was posthumously published in 1943, and a collected poems appeared in 1945. In his war poems, he portrays death as a real presence to which the good soldier must submit courageously and with a measure of detachment. Confronted with the reality of death, he changed his stance, advocating active resistance against the forces of extinction.

Anne Killigrew (1660–1685), pp. 554–56
Anne Killigrew was born in London; she died of smallpox. Her father, an amateur dramatist and chaplain to the duke of York, encouraged Anne's literary talents and oversaw the posthumous publication (in 1685–86) of her poems. In an ode composed for this memorial volume, John Dryden praises her accomplishments in the "sister arts" of poetry and painting (two of her poems describe her own paintings), but also presents her as an entirely "artless" poet whose gifts were from "nature." Killigrew worked at her craft, however, by writing in a variety of poetic genres—among her poems is a heroic tribute to Alexander the Great. Recognizing that a female writer's desire to create "deathless numbers"

might be viewed as overly ambitious by some readers, Killigrew drew inspiration from her near-contemporary Katherine Philips: "Nor did sex at all obstruct her fame," Killigrew wrote about Philips, in a poem addressed to those who impugned Killigrew's status as an author by saying that her verses "Were Made by Another."

Henry King (1592–1669), pp. 363–66
Henry King was the son of a bishop of London and his wife. Educated at Westminster and Christ Church, Oxford, he entered the Church of England and rose steadily through its ranks, becoming the bishop of Chichester in 1642. A staunch opponent of Puritanism, he was ejected from his position by Parliamentarians in 1643. After seventeen years in retirement with friends, he was reinstated as bishop in 1660, following the return of the monarchy. He published a verse translation of the Psalms in 1651 and composed both sacred and secular poems—including elegies on his friend John Donne, Ben Jonson, and Sir Walter Ralegh—that were published anonymously in an unauthorized edition called Poems, Elegies, Paradoxes and Sonnets (1657). He was known as an impressive preacher, and a number of his sermons have been published. His best-known work, however, is "An Exequy to His Matchless, Never-to-Be-Forgotten Friend," a moving lament for his wife, Anne Berkeley, who died in 1624, at age twenty-four.

Galway Kinnell (b. 1927), pp. 1740–42
Galway Kinnell was born in Providence, Rhode Island. He was educated at Princeton University and the University of Rochester. From 1945 until 1946, he served in the navy, and he then did field work for the Congress on Racial Equality. He has traveled widely in the Middle East and Europe and has taught at more than twenty institutions, including the University of California at Irvine, the University of Pittsburgh, Sarah Lawrence College, and New York University. He has edited several other poets and feels a particular affinity for Whitman. He lives in Vermont.

Thomas Kinsella (b. 1928), pp. 1757–60
Thomas Kinsella was born in Dublin, Ireland. He studied science at University College, Dublin, but left to work for the Irish Civil Service. After retiring from the Department of Finance in 1965, he taught in the United States. In 1972, in Dublin, he founded the Peppercanister Press, which published much of his own work. He has translated Gaelic poetry, notably The Tain (1969), and has edited the New Oxford Book of Irish Verse. His Collected Poems was published in 1996.

Rudyard Kipling (1865–1936), pp. 1181–88
Rudyard Kipling was born in Bombay, India, to British parents. He was educated in England, but in 1882 returned to India to work as a journalist. When he moved back to England, in 1889, he enjoyed celebrity status for books such as Plain Tales from the Hills (1888), The Jungle Book (1894), and Kim (1901). He was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1907, but by the time of his death his reputation had declined, due largely to the jingoism that pervaded his writings during the Boer War and World War I. Following the death of his only son at the Battle of Loos, Kipling became a prominent member of the Imperial War Graves Commission and wrote a history of the Irish Guards (1923). The rousing rhythms that propel many of his poems are derived from music-hall songs and Protestant hymns, leading T. S. Eliot to call his work "the poetry of oratory." Although, as child of empire, Kipling held in high regard what he considered the glories of civilization, in a moving series of monologues from the mouths of common soldiers he explores and acknowledges the cost of attaining values such as justice, patriotism, and sacrifice of self to a larger ideal.

Carolyn Kizer (b. 1925), pp. 1688–91
Carolyn Kizer was born in Spokane, Washington, and was educated at Sarah Lawrence College, Columbia University, and the University of Washington. From 1959 to 1965, she was an editor of Poetry Northwest. She taught at a woman's college in Pakistan for the U.S. State Department before resigning in protest against the Vietnam War; later, she served as director of literary programs for the National Endowment for the Arts. An essayist as well as poet, she lives in Paris and in Sonoma, California. Her best-known work is a career-spanning, five-part poem, Pro Femina.

Kenneth Koch (1925–2002), pp. 1691–95
Kenneth Koch was born in Cincinnati, Ohio. He served as a rifleman in the Pacific during World War II, before attending Harvard University and earning his Ph.D. from Columbia University. With the exception of brief periods abroad, especially in France and Italy, Koch lived in New York City from 1950 on, and was a key figure, with his friends John Ashbery, Frank O'Hara, James Schuyler, and others, in what became known as the New York school of poetry. Writing poems closely linked with Abstract Expressionists and Surrealists, he sometimes exhibited his poems alongside these artists' works. Gifted with an offbeat sense of humor, Koch was known also for his fiction, his plays, and his work in teaching children to write poetry. He was a professor at Columbia University until his death.

Yusef Komunyakaa (b. 1947), pp. 1949–52
Yusef Komunyakaa was born in Bogalusa, Louisiana. He served in Vietnam as a war correspondent and for a time edited the Southern Cross. Decorated with a Bronze Star, he later wrote poems deriving from his Vietnam experience, first collected in Dien Cai Dau (1988). Following his years in the military, Komunyakaa studied at the University of Colorado, Colorado State, and the University of California at Irvine. He has also lived in Australia, Saint Thomas, Puerto Rico, and Japan. He teaches at Princeton University. Many of his poems harken back to his childhood in a poor, rural, and largely black Southern community. They grapple with hard realities, including race and social class, and take some of their rhythms and melodic effects from jazz and the blues.

Stanley Kunitz (b. 1905), pp. 1454–56
Stanley Kunitz was born and raised in Worcester, Massachusetts. After graduation from Harvard University, he worked as an editor in New York City. During World War II, he served in the army, and during the academic career that followed he taught at, among other schools, Columbia University. He has been an influential teacher to many poets, including Louise Glück and Robert Hass. In addition to writing poetry, he has assembled (in collaboration with Howard Haycraft) biographical dictionaries of literary figures; edited a collection of William Blake's work; and translated the work of Anna Akhmatova and Andrei Voznesenksy from the Russian. He cofounded the Fine Arts Work Center, in Provincetown, Massachusetts, and Poet's House, in New York City. In 2000–01, he served as poet laureate of the United States.

Walter Savage Landor (1775–1864), pp. 831–33
Walter Savage Landor was born in Warwick, England, and educated at Rugby School and at Trinity College, Oxford. A short-lived marriage, with its interludes of domestic tranquility, provided the basis for several of his most interesting poems. He lived in Italy from 1815 until 1835 and from 1857 until his death. Fluent in French, Italian, and Greek and possessing a prodigious knowledge of history, Landor was steeped in classicism. His most enduring works, in particular his Imaginary Conversations (1824), based on his studies, made him an important figure to poets such as Robert Browning and Ezra Pound. He died in Florence and was buried in the Protestant cemetery there.

William Langland (ca. 1330–ca. 1400), pp. 71–74
A note found in the margins of an early manuscript of Piers Plowman in a fifteenth-century hand is the single piece of evidence that ascribes this poem to a man named William Langland. The note, which many scholars accept as reliable, states that William Langland was the son of Stacy de Rokayle, a man of gentle birth who lived in Shipton-under-Wychwood and was tenant of Lord Spenser in the county of Oxfordshire. The note concludes: "this aforesaid William made the book that is called Piers Plowman." Texts of the poem both support and elaborate on the note's information. In line 52 of Passus 15 of the B-text, the narrator seems to offer a cryptogram of the name Langland: " 'I have lyved in londe,' quod I, 'my name is Longe Wille.' " At the beginning of the poem, the narrator depicts himself awakening from his dream in the "Malvern Hills," in the West Midland region of England; elsewhere, he presents himself as a man who has moved from the country to the city and is at the time of the poem's composition living in Cornhill, in London, making a living as a cleric who chants prayers for the souls of the dead. The poem further presents the narrator as elderly, as learned in the Bible and in Latin, and as the husband of Kit and the father of Calotte; from these details, we may infer that the author had received a clerical education, but had never been ordained a priest. Passus 5 of the C-text states that the narrator comes from "franklins," or free men, and from married parents. This latter detail may serve to counter suspicions about the legitimacy of the poet's birth.

Sidney Lanier (1842–1881), pp. 1162–65
Sidney Lanier was born in Macon, Georgia, and educated at Oglethorpe College. In 1861, he enlisted in the Confederate Army, and in 1864 he was captured by Union forces and imprisoned for four months at Point Lookout, Maryland, where he probably contracted the tuberculosis from which he later died. After the war, Lanier played in the Peabody Symphony as a flutist and, in 1879, became lecturer in literature at Johns Hopkins University. In addition to poetry, he wrote novels—including Tiger-Lilies (1867), which documents his war experience—and critical studies, including The Science of English Verse (1880), in which he argues that the same laws govern music and poetry.

Aemilia Lanyer (1569–1645), pp. 284–92
Aemilia Lanyer was the daughter of Baptist Bassano, an Italian court musician, and his wife, Margaret Johnson. She was probably educated in the noble household of Susan Wingfield, countess of Kent. As the mistress of Henry Cary, Lord Hunsdun, a wealthy courtier forty-five years her senior, she enjoyed a luxurious and privileged life until she became pregnant; she then married Captain Alfonso Lanyer, another court musician, in 1592. In 1617, she set up a school in the fashionable St. Giles in the Fields for the children of the nobility and gentlemen, but it failed in 1619. Lanyer was the first Englishwoman to publish a substantial collection of original poems in her own name, as well as actively to seek patronage from a host of noble ladies addressed in the prefatory poems affixed to her collection, Salve Deus Rex Judaeorum (1611).

Philip Larkin (1922–1985), pp. 1648–59
Philip Larkin was born in Coventry, England, and educated at King Henry VIII School and St. John's College, Oxford. He worked as a librarian for the rest of his life, starting in the small town of Wellington and moving through the university libraries of Leicester and Belfast before settling at Hull. Although he tried to achieve recognition as a novelist, with Jill in 1946 and A Girl in Winter in 1947, he made his reputation in poetry. Along with Donald Davie, Thom Gunn, and his college friend Kingsley Amis, Larkin came to be known as a writer of The Movement, a group of postwar poets anthologized in Robert Conquest's New Lines (1956). Although he produced only four volumes of poetry in his lifetime—The North Ship (1945), The Less Deceived (1955), The Whitsun Weddings (1965), and High Windows (1974)—Larkin was a highly influential presence in the second half of the twentieth century, editing the Oxford Book of Twentieth-Century English Verse (1973) and serving on various arts councils and library committees. He turned down the poet laureateship, which was offered to him on the death of John Betjeman. His Collected Poems was published in 1988, followed by Selected Letters, 1940–1985 in 1992, the latter collection arousing controversy and even outrage at some of his racist and xenophobic opinions.

D. H. Lawrence (1885–1930), pp. 1284–95
D(avid) H(erbert) Lawrence was born in Eastwood, Nottinghamshire, England, and attended University College, Nottingham. His first published work, a group of poems, appeared in 1909; his first short story and his first novel, The White Peacock, the following year. From 1908 to 1912, he taught in a London school, but he gave this up after falling in love with the German wife of a professor at Nottingham. They went to Germany together and married in 1914, after she had been divorced by her first husband. Living abroad, Lawrence finished Sons and Lovers, the autobiographical novel at which he had been working off and on for years. The war brought the couple back to England, where his wife's German origins and Lawrence's fierce objection to the war gave him trouble with the authorities. More and more—especially after the banning of his next novel, The Rainbow, in 1915—he came to feel that the forces of modern civilization were arrayed against him. As soon as he could leave England after the war, he sought refuge in Italy, Australia, Mexico, then again Italy, and finally in the south of France, often desperately ill, restlessly searching for an ideal, or at least a tolerable, community. He died in France, of tuberculosis.

Irving Layton (b. 1912), pp. 1530–33
Irving Layton was born in Romania to Jewish parents who emigrated to Montreal, Canada, the year after his birth. He was educated at Macdonald College, served briefly in the Canadian Army, then attended McGill University. Layton taught English in secondary schools and colleges until 1970, when he joined the faculty of York University (Toronto). He retired from teaching in 1978. One of the most prolific poets of the twentieth century, he has published some fifty volumes of poetry. He also has written political essays and a memoir and has edited numerous collections of verse.

Emma Lazarus (1849–1887), pp. 1172–73
Emma Lazarus was born in New York City, to a prominent Sephardic (Spanish Jewish) family. She was educated at home. In 1868, she met the writer Ralph Waldo Emerson, who became her literary mentor. Lazarus developed a passionate interest in Semitism. She translated medieval Hebrew poets from the German and wrote impassioned essays on behalf of the wave of Jewish immigrants seeking refuge from persecution in Europe after the assassination of Russian Czar Alexander II, in 1881. Lazarus was appalled by the squalid conditions in which many of these refugees were forced to live and sympathetic to their difficulty in finding employment. The last five lines of "The New Colossus," the poem for which she is best-remembered, are engraved on the pedestal of the Statue of Liberty, which was dedicated in 1886.

Edward Lear (1812–1888), pp. 1041–44
Edward Lear was born in Holloway, London. Educated mainly at home by his elder sisters, he began to work as an illustrator at age fifteen. In 1846, he published A Book of Nonsense, which he had written and illustrated to amuse the grandchildren of his patron, the earl of Derby. It went through twenty-four editions in Lear's lifetime. In the 1830s, he became a wanderer, supporting himself by painting landscapes across Europe—he became known for his watercolors—and writing travel journals. He popularized the limerick (see "Versification," p. 2046), and, following his example, poets as diverse as Dante Gabriel Rossetti, Algernon Swinburne, Rudyard Kipling, and Alfred, Lord Tennyson, in the nineteenth century, and Ogden Nash, in the twentieth, employed the form.

Li-Young Lee (b. 1957), pp. 2011–13
Li-Young Lee was born in Jakarta, Indonesia, to Chinese parents; his father had been a personal physician to Mao Zedong before becoming a political prisoner. Upon fleeing Indonesia, the family lived in Hong Kong, Macau, and Japan before settling in the United States. Some of the family's story is recounted in Lee's memoir, The Winged Seed: A Remembrance, as well as in his three volumes of poems. An American citizen with degrees from several U.S. universities, he has taught at Northwestern University and the State University of New York at Brockport. He lives in Chicago.

Brad Leithauser (b. 1953), pp. 1998–2000
Brad Leithauser was born and grew up in Detroit, Michigan. He was educated at Harvard College and Harvard Law School. The author of four volumes of poetry and five novels, he also edited The Norton Book of Ghost Stories and is a frequent reviewer and essayist. Among his recent books are collaborations with his brother, the artist Mark Leithauser, who illustrated his verse novel, Darlington's Fall, and an alphabet verse book, Lettered Creatures. He teaches at Mount Holyoke College and lives in Amherst, Massachusetts.

Denise Levertov (1923–1997), pp. 1677–81
Denise Levertov was born in Ilford, Essex, England, and educated at home. After working as a nurse in London during World War II, she immigrated to the United States in 1948. She became a U.S. citizen in 1955, but from 1956 to 1959 she lived in Mexico. She then taught at a number of schools, including Stanford University from 1981 on. In addition to poetry, she published two collections of prose. Her early work was written in a predominantly English vein, but as a result of her associations with the Imagists William Carlos Williams, Ezra Pound, and H. D., and the Black Mountain poets Robert Creeley, Cid Corman, and Robert Duncan, she remade herself into a notably American poet. Her poetry often took on difficult social issues, such as the effects of the Vietnam War.

Philip Levine (b. 1928), pp. 1761–63
Philip Levine was born in Detroit, Michigan, to Russian Jewish immigrant parents. After graduation from Wayne State University, he worked at, as he put it, "a succession of stupid jobs," then left Detroit "for good." In 1957, he earned an M.F.A. from the University of Iowa, where his teachers included John Berryman. From 1958 until his retirement, he taught at California State University in Fresno. In addition to poetry, he has written criticism and autobiography, and he has translated from the Spanish. Spanish and Latin American poets figure largely in his imagination. Levine also identifies strongly with the working class and its struggles, setting many of his poems in the decimated industrial landscape of Detroit.

Alun Lewis (1915–1944), pp. 1573–76
Alun Lewis was born in Cwmaman, a depressed mining town in South Wales. His parents were both schoolteachers, and he excelled in his years at Aberystwyth College, coming first in history and writing for the college magazine. He earned his M.A. at Manchester University and returned to Aberystwyth for a teacher's training course. Although he wavered at the thought of participating in World War II, he enlisted in the army in 1940. In 1941, he married Gweno Ellis. Both his collection of short stories, The Last Inspection, and his first collection of poetry, Raider's Dawn, were published in 1942 and focused on the experiences of English soldiers. Lewis traveled with his battalion to India and finally to Burma to face the Japanese, but under the influences of the war, a love affair, Eastern religions, and culture shock, he began to feel he was losing his grasp on his own fate. He committed suicide by shooting himself. A collection of the poems he had written while overseas, Ha! Ha! Among the Trumpets, was published posthumously in 1945, followed by In the Green Tree, a collection of short stories and letters, in 1948.

C. Day Lewis (1904–1972), pp. 1448–50
C(ecil) Day Lewis was born in Ballintubber, Ireland, and raised in England. He was educated at Wadham College, Oxford, where he came to know the poets W. H. Auden, Louis MacNeice, and Stephen Spender. In the 1930s, Day Lewis became active in left-wing politics and was a member of the Communist Party for three years, but grew disillusioned when the movement fell short of its ideals. His Collected Poems was published in 1954, and he also wrote a series of successful detective stories under the pseudonym Nicholas Blake, and several novels under his own name. He translated Virgil, whose influence can be detected in his later poems. Like his fellow "Pylon" poets, as the Oxford group was sometimes called, Day Lewis introduced modern diction into his poems and made broad reference to the issues of the day. He was poet laureate from 1968 until his death.

Thomas Lodge (1558–1625), p. 222
Thomas Lodge, the son of a lord mayor of London and his wife, was educated at Merchant Taylors' School and Trinity College, Oxford. He entered Lincoln's Inn to study law in 1578, but soon turned to writing; in 1580, he wrote a "Defence" of plays in response to Stephen Gosson's attack on the theater in The School of Abuse (1579). Gosson answered Lodge in another pamphlet, and in 1584 Lodge retorted with a lively attack on the usurers; in this work, he depicted the dangers that moneylenders presented for young spendthrifts. Short of funds, he joined several voyages to the New World. During one, he wrote Rosalynde, Euphues Golden Legacy (1590), a prose romance with verse interludes that is the source for Shakespeare's As You Like It. Lodge returned from a later voyage with another prose romance interspersed with many lyrics, A Margarite of America. He translated many French love lyrics (for instance, from Pierre Ronsard's Amours), and after his conversion to Catholicism in 1600 translated prose works by ancient authors such as Seneca and the Jewish historian Josephus. Having turned away from secular poetry after his conversion, Lodge became a noted physician in London.

Henry Wadsworth Longfellow (1807–1882), pp. 951–57
Henry Wadsworth Longfellow was born in Portland, Maine (then part of Massachusetts). He was educated at Bowdoin College, where Nathaniel Hawthorne was a classmate and where he delivered a commencement speech calling for a national literature. He spent three years in Europe studying foreign languages and, upon his return, was appointed professor of modern languages at his alma mater. In 1835, he accepted a similar position at Harvard University, where he remained until 1854. He had already attained fame before the publication of his first book (1839), and later works such as Evangeline (1847) and The Song of Hiawatha (1855) were hugely popular. In 1843, he became partially blind, and in 1861 he was badly injured as he tried to extinguish the flames that, when her dress caught fire, burned his second wife to death. Longfellow translated Dante, as well as many poets he collected in his anthology The Poets and Poetry of Europe (1845). He also wrote fiction and verse drama. Greatly beloved in his day, though his reputation later declined, Longfellow has been credited with popularizing American themes abroad and bringing European themes home.

Michael Longley (b. 1939), pp. 1910–13
Michael Longley was born in Belfast, Northern Ireland, and educated at Trinity College, Dublin, where he read Classics. He worked as a schoolteacher until 1970, when he joined the Arts Council of Northern Ireland as combined arts director, a post he held until 1991. He has written scripts for BBC radio and is a frequent commentator on the arts in Northern Ireland. A fellow of the Royal Society of Literature, he was awarded the Queen's Gold Medal for Poetry in 2001.

Audre Lorde (1934–1992), pp. 1858–60
Audre Lorde was born in New York City to West Indian parents. She was educated at Hunter College and Columbia University, where she earned a master's degree in library science. In addition to working as a librarian, she taught at Tougaloo College and throughout the City University of New York system. She published numerous collections of poetry and two prose memoirs, one about her struggle with cancer and the other about her emergent lesbian identity. Although she once described herself as a "black lesbian feminist warrior poet," her contemporary Adrienne Rich added the appellations "mother," "daughter," and "visionary."

Richard Lovelace (1618–1658), pp. 472–75
Richard Lovelace was born in Kent, England, to a wealthy family and was educated at the Charterhouse School and Gloucester Hall, Oxford. He lived the life of a cultured courtier before taking arms for the king in the Scottish expeditions of 1639–40. He was imprisoned by Parliament in 1642 for presenting a Royalist petition, and he was jailed again in 1648 after returning to England from battles where he had fought with the French against the Spanish. Although he was released from prison after the king's execution in 1649, Lovelace spent his final years in poverty. One of the group of Royalist writers now known as "Cavalier" poets, he was strongly influenced by Ben Jonson. Lovelace is best-known for occasional poems and lyrics that were written mostly during his periods of imprisonment; his "To Althea, from Prison" regained popularity after its inclusion in Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry (1765), as did his "To Lucasta, Going to the Wars." The name Lucasta (from Lux casta, Latin for "pure light") probably refers to Lucy Sacheverell, Lovelace's fiancée, who married another man after receiving a false report of Lovelace's death. She is honored in the title of Lovelace's one volume of poems published during his lifetime (Lucasta, 1649) and again in the posthumous collection published by Lovelace's brother (Lucasta Poems Posthume, 1659).

Amy Lowell (1874–1925), pp. 1245–48
Amy Lowell was born in Brookline, Massachusetts, into one of Boston's most prominent families; the poet James Russell Lowell was a distant uncle, and the poet Robert Lowell a distant nephew. She was educated at home and mainly self-taught. From 1914 on, she lived with the actress Ada Dwyer Russell, who inspired many of her poems. In addition to poetry, Lowell wrote a biography of John Keats and much influential criticism. Flamboyant and eccentric, a celebrity on the lecture circuit, she generously supported many struggling artists. Lowell is best-remembered for her association with Imagism, of which she edited three collections.

Robert Lowell (1917–1977), pp. 1592–1606
Robert Lowell was born in Boston, Massachusetts, to a distinguished family; his ancestors include the poets James Russell Lowell and Amy Lowell. Following his family's expectations, he attended Harvard University, but under the advice of the psychiatrist who treated him for the first of many breakdowns and manic episodes, transferred to Kenyon College. There he studied with the poets John Crowe Ransom and Allen Tate, and met lifelong friends and literary mentors Peter Taylor and Randall Jarrell, in addition to his first wife, the fiction writer Jean Stafford. After graduation from Kenyon, Lowell moved to Louisiana State University, where he worked with the New Critics Robert Penn Warren and Cleanth Brooks. He was imprisoned as a conscientious objector during World War II, and his fiercely held Catholicism was central in his early, densely patterned poetry. In the late 1950s, he began writing in an autobiographical strain. The publication of Life Studies (1959) heralded what would be called the Confessional school of poetry. Later, Lowell wrote loose sonnet sequences in which he explored the events of his first fifty years. Lowell also was a controversially freehanded translator of poetry, a critical essayist, and the adaptor of several classic works for the stage. He held teaching appointments at a number of universities, including Harvard, Oxford, and Essex. He is often considered the most important American poet of the mid-twentieth century. At the time of his sudden death, he was returning to his second wife, the writer Elizabeth Hardwick, after breaking with his third, Lady Caroline Blackwood.

Malcolm Lowry (1909–1957), pp. 1503–05
Malcolm Lowry was born in Birkenhead, Cheshire, just outside of Liverpool, England. Before attending St. Catherine's College, Cambridge (from which he received a B.A.), he worked as a crew member on a freighter bound for China and on a ship sailing to Oslo. He lived in London and then Paris until 1935, when he moved to Hollywood, and then to Cuernevaca, Mexico, which became the setting of his most famous novel, Under the Volcano (1947). From 1940 until 1954, he lived in a primitive cabin in Dollarton, British Columbia, and from 1954 until his death he lived in Italy and then England. Best-known as a novelist, he wrote plays, film scripts, and hundreds of poems, only a handful of which were published during his lifetime.

John Lyly (1554–1606), pp. 207–08
John Lyly was born in Kent, England, the grandson of William Lyly, the humanist author of a famous Latin grammar book. Educated at Magdalen College, Oxford, and later at Cambridge, Lyly was employed for a time by Queen Elizabeth I's treasurer, Lord Burghley, and was appointed vice-master of the St. Paul's choristers. He served several terms as a Member of Parliament and possibly hoped to obtain a place at court. He had gained fame as the author of a romance in two parts, Euphues, or the Anatomie of Wit (1578) and Euphues and His England (1580). Lyly also wrote several plays that combined classical and traditional English dramatic forms. The striking style of these works, which has given us the term euphuism, entails an elaborate sentence structure marked by balance, antithesis, and alliteration, among other rhetorical effects, as well as fulsome use of imagery drawn mainly from the works of the ancient naturalist Pliny.

Norman MacCaig (1910–1996), pp. 1508–10
Norman MacCaig was born in Edinburgh, Scotland. He was educated at the University of Edinburgh, where he took a degree in Classics. During World War II, he served time in prison as a conscientious objector. MacCaig was a primary school teacher until 1970, when he was appointed a lecturer in poetry at the University of Stirling. His early work was heavily influenced by the New Apocalypse movement, in which he was a central figure, and which concerned itself with the relationship between art and the unconscious. He later repudiated his work in this mode and began what he called "the long haul back to lucidity." He was awarded the Queen's Gold Medal for Poetry in 1986 and published his Collected Poems in 1990.

Hugh MacDiarmid (Christopher Murray Grieve) (1892–1978), pp. 1376–80
Hugh MacDiarmid was born in Langholm, Dumfriesshire, in the Scottish Borders. He worked on several local newspapers before joining the Royal Army Medical Corps in 1915. After serving in the Balkans and France, he resumed his career in journalism and became active in Communist and Scottish nationalist politics, involvement in each movement bringing him difficulty with the other. MacDiarmid was a central figure of the Scottish Renaissance, a loose collection of artists, writers, and musicians dedicated to reinvigorating Scottish culture and countering the sentimentality and insipidity that had crept into the arts since the time of Robert Burns. His magazine Scottish Chapbook and his collections Sangschaw (1925) and Penny Wheep (1926) were highly influential contributions to the movement. A Drunk Man Looks at the Thistle (1926), an extended dramatic monologue in Scots, though not enthusiastically received at the time, is now considered MacDiarmid's masterpiece. He wrote many of his early poems in "Lallans," a synthesized language culled from the dialects of several regions of Scotland. His linguistic experiments influenced those of, among others, James Joyce. In the 1930s, he wrote politically committed poetry; from the 1940s on, he increasingly drew on philosophy, linguistics, and science. Hugh MacDiarmid: Complete Poems 1920–1976 was published in 1978 and revised in 1993.

Archibald MacLeish (1892–1982), pp. 1381–82
Archibald MacLeish was born and raised in Illinois. He was educated at Yale University and Harvard Law School. During World War I, he volunteered to serve at the front. In the early 1920s, he lived in Paris, and throughout the 1930s he served on the editorial board of Fortune magazine. MacLeish was influential in the upper echelons of American government under Franklin Delano Roosevelt and held the posts of librarian of Congress and assistant secretary of state, among others. After leaving government, he taught at Harvard University. In addition to poetry, he wrote prose; verse plays, most famously J.B. (1957); radio plays; and the Oscar-winning screenplay for The Eleanor Roosevelt Story (1965). In his later work, MacLeish attempted to reconcile the conflict between his famous dictum "A poem should not mean / but be" and his political commitment.

Louis MacNeice (1907–1963), pp. 1485–91
(Frederick) Louis MacNeice was born in Belfast, Ireland, and raised in Carrickfergus. Educated at Marlborough College and Merton College, Oxford, he became a lecturer in Classics at Birmingham University and, later, at Bedford College, London. Following the breakup of his first marriage, he traveled to Iceland with his friend W. H. Auden, then to Spain on the eve of—and again during—the Spanish Civil War, and to the United States at the beginning of World War II. After returning to England in 1940, he joined the BBC as a feature writer and producer, and, except for a year and a half spent in Athens as director of the British Institute, he remained with the BBC for the rest of his life. He was a pioneer of radio drama, a notable playwright, a translator (of Aeschylus's Agamemnon and Goethe's Faust), and a literary critic. Best-known as a poet, however, he was early and somewhat carelessly identified with the other Oxford poets—Auden, Stephen Spender, and C. Day Lewis; but just as he never, as they did, sympathized with Communism, he never moved, as they did, to the political right. The consistency and integrity of the man characterizes his work. He delights in the surface of the world his senses apprehend and celebrates "the drunkenness of things being various," often with wit and a wild gaiety. An "unfinished autobiography" called The Strings Are False and his Collected Poems were published in 1965 and 1966.

Jay MacPherson (b. 1931), pp. 1830–31
Jay (Jean) MacPherson was born in London. When she was nine, her family emigrated to Canada and settled in Newfoundland. MacPherson was educated at Carleton College, McGill University, University College (London), and the University of Toronto, where she studied with the literary critic Northrop Frye. She taught at Toronto from 1957 until 1996. MacPherson's first collection of poems, issued when she was twenty-one, was published by Robert Graves's Seizen Press; her next collection bore the imprint of her own press, Emblem Books. The Boatman (1957) won her national acclaim and established her reputation as a poet. She has also published literary criticism and a textbook on mythology.

Derek Mahon (b. 1941), pp. 1921–25
Derek Mahon was born in Belfast, Northern Ireland, and read French at Trinity College, Dublin. After graduation, he traveled in France, Canada, and the United States, supporting himself through teaching and odd jobs. He has worked as a scriptwriter for the BBC, a freelance writer and reviewer, drama critic of the Listener, features editor of Vogue, and poetry and fiction editor of the New Statesman. His first collection, Twelve Poems, was published in 1965, while a collected edition spanning 1962 to 1975 appeared in 1979. A new edition of Selected Poems was published in 2000. Mahon has also published translations of French writers including Molière and Philippe Jaccottet.

Christopher Marlowe (1564–1593), pp. 238–56
Christopher Marlowe was born in Canterbury, England, to an artisan family (his father was a successful shoemaker) and attended Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, on a fellowship designated for students preparing to become ministers. Marlowe, however, spent his university years writing plays (his tragedy, Dido Queen of Carthage, perhaps written with Thomas Nashe, apparently dates from the 1580s) and working as a spy abroad; when university officials wanted to deny Marlowe his M.A. in 1587, the Privy Council intervened, citing his service to the queen in "matters touching the benefit of his country." His contacts at court also seem to have intervened on his behalf in 1589, when he was involved in a murderous brawl but only briefly imprisoned; in 1592, when he was arrested for counterfeiting coins in the Netherlands but spared imprisonment; and again in 1593, when he was arrested on suspicion of dangerous religious views, having been denounced by his one-time friend Thomas Kyd for atheism and treason. In the same year that he received his Cambridge M.A., his enormously popular play Tamburlaine was produced on the London stage; a sequel soon followed. His other plays include The Jew of Malta, Doctor Faustus, and the chronicle history Edward II. In addition, Marlowe translated from the Latin Ovid's Amores and Lucan's Pharsalia (about the Roman civil wars) and wrote the erotic mythological poem Hero and Leander, which was entered in the Stationers' Register in September 1593, just a few months after the poet's mysterious death, from a knife wound in a barroom brawl.

Dionisio D. Martinez (b. 1956), pp. 2009–10
Dionisio D. Martinez was born in Cuba. Following his family's exile from their homeland in 1965, he lived in northern Spain and southern California. He settled in Tampa, Florida, in 1972 and has worked as a poet in the schools, an affiliate writer at the University of Tampa, and a collaborating artist with the YMCA National Writer's Voice Project. Author of three volumes of poetry, he is also a reviewer and an essayist.

Andrew Marvell (1621–1678), pp. 475–89
Andrew Marvell was born in Yorkshire, England, the son of a Calvinist minister and his wife; moved to Hull on his father's appointment as lecturer at Holy Trinity Church; and was educated at Hull Grammar School and Trinity College, Cambridge. He spent the civil war years touring Europe, finding "the Cause too good to have been fought for," and on his return moved in London literary circles, befriending, among others, John Milton and Richard Lovelace. From 1650 until 1652, he tutored the daughter of the Parliamentarian general Fairfax; at Fairfax's house, Nun Appleton, in Yorkshire, Marvell wrote a number of poems about gardens and rural life, including the famous "country house" poem "Upon Appleton." He became Oliver Cromwell's unofficial laureate, and in 1657 replaced Milton as secretary to the Council of State. In 1659, he became a member of Parliament for Hull and adroitly managed to retain that seat after the Restoration. He fought for toleration of religious dissenters in verse and prose satires, many published anonymously, and some attacking the king's corrupt ministers and even the king. Most of Marvell's poems were not published until after his death, the lyrics in 1681, the satires in 1689.

The Massachusetts Bay Psalm Book (1640), pp. 391–93
The Bay Psalm Book, also known as The Whole Book of Psalms Faithfully Translated into English Metre, was the authoritative hymnal of the Massachusetts Bay Colony and the first book published in America. Translated by Richard Mather, John Eliot, and Thomas Weld, this work replaced a version produced in England that the Bay Puritans felt to be corrupted by the translators' willingness to employ poetic license in their renderings. The Puritan translators, by contrast, took scrupulous pains to render the poems as they appeared in the original, devoid of added ornamentation. "God's Altar needs not our Polishings," John Cotton declared in his preface to the work. The book enjoyed a wide circulation for nearly a century and was reprinted numerous times.

Glyn Maxwell (b. 1962), pp. 2016–20
Glyn Maxwell was born in Welwyn Garden City, England, and educated at Worcester College, Oxford, and Boston University. Tale of the Mayor's Son, his first volume of poems, was published in 1990 and was followed by other well-received collections. He has also written plays for radio and the stage, a novel, and, with Simon Armitage, Moon Country (1996), a travel book that traces the journey to Iceland taken by W. H. Auden and Louis MacNeice. Since 1996, he has lived in the U.S. and has taught at Amherst College, Massachusetts; Columbia University; and New School University, New York City. He is poetry editor of The New Republic and a Fellow of the Royal Society of Literature.

John McCrae (1872–1918), p. 1225
John McCrae was born in Guelph, Ontario, and educated at the University of Toronto. An accomplished physician and researcher, he practiced medicine at several hospitals in the United States and Canada. McCrae served as a medical officer in the Canadian Army during the Boer War and World War I. In the latter, he was initially stationed at the front in France, then transferred to a military hospital in Boulogne, where he contracted a fatal case of double pneumonia. He published only a handful of poems in his lifetime and is best remembered for "In Flanders Field," which he composed during the Second Battle of Ypres.

Herman Melville (1819–1891), pp. 1054–57
Herman Melvill (the e was added in the 1830s) was born and raised in New York City. The son of a well-connected merchant who lost his fortune, he was taken out of school at age twelve when his father died. In 1839, he sailed to Liverpool, England, as a cabin boy, and this voyage inculcated in him an enduring love for the sea. In 1841, he sailed on a whaler, but jumped ship in the Marquesas Islands. Captured by cannibalistic natives, he escaped and went to Tahiti, where he worked as a field laborer, and to Honolulu, where he enlisted as a seaman. In 1843, he returned home and began writing romantic novels based on his exotic adventures. His early work sold well and won him a wide following, but he thought little of it. His masterpieces, including the novel Moby-Dick (1851), were critical and commercial failures, and his poems were largely ignored. His 1866 volume of poems, Battle-Pieces, is now considered some of the greatest verse inspired by the Civil War. An epic poem, Clarel, followed in 1876. Melville worked from 1866 on as a customs inspector in New York City, and he died in near obscurity and dire poverty. At his death, the novella Billy Budd, Sailor was left not quite finished.

George Meredith (1828–1909), pp. 1107–10
George Meredith was born in Portsmouth, England. He received little education except for two years at a Moravian academy at Neuweid, in Germany. In 1845, he was apprenticed to a lawyer, but found the work uncongenial. He published his first poem in 1849 and was the model for Henry Wallis's painting The Death of Thomas Chatterton (1851). Needing money, he turned to journalism, then to publishing; he was a reader for Chapman and Hall from 1860 until 1895. In 1864, Meredith settled in Flint Cottage at Box Hill, Surrey. Like his admirer Thomas Hardy, he was better-known for his novels—such as The Egoist (1879) and Diana of the Crossways (1885)—than for his poetry, but preferred the latter to the former. His most enduring work of verse is Modern Love (1862), a cycle of fifty sonnets about the breakup of a marriage. Its inception was autobiographical—Meredith's marriage to the widowed daughter of Thomas Love Peacock collapsed in 1857 when she left him for Wallis—but he significantly changed real events and drafted protagonists distinct from himself and his wife for the work. In his later years, he was a much-respected man of letters, and he was awarded the Order of Merit in 1905.

William Meredith (b. 1919), pp. 1608–09
William Meredith was born in New York City and was educated at Princeton University. After working as a reporter for The New York Times in the early 1940s, he spent five years in the armed forces, mainly as a naval aviator in the Pacific theater of World War II. He reenlisted to fly missions in the Korean War. His academic career included teaching posts at, among other schools, Princeton, the University of Hawaii, and Connecticut College. He has been an opera critic for the Hudson Review, poetry consultant to the Library of Congress, and a chancellor of the Academy of American Poets. In addition to poetry, he has published criticism and a libretto; he has edited several collections of poetry; and he has translated the poetry of Guillaume Apollinaire.

James Merrill (1926–1995), pp. 1716–28
James Merrill was born and raised in New York City, a son of Charles Merrill, founding partner of the Merrill Lynch investment firm, and his wife. He was educated at Amherst College. Near the end of World War II, he interrupted his studies to serve a year with the United States Army. In 1954, he settled in Stonington, Connecticut, and eventually divided his time between Connecticut and Florida, although he spent long periods in Greece. In addition to poetry, he published novels, plays, a collection of criticism, and a memoir. Widely admired from the outset of his career, Merrill developed a poetic that was autobiographical without being "confessional." His elegant, witty, highly wrought style reflected the influence of Marcel Proust and Henry James. His epic, The Changing Light at Sandover (1977–1982), a seventeen-thousand-line trilogy that draws from communications he received on a Ouija board with his partner, David Jackson, is considered one of the major achievements of twentieth-century poetry.

W. S. Merwin (b. 1927), pp. 1743–45
W(illiam) S(tanley) Merwin was born in New York City and raised in Union City, New Jersey, and Scranton, Pennsylvania. He was educated at Princeton University, where he studied with the poets John Berryman and R. P. Blackmur. He later traveled through Europe, and in Mallorca, Spain, was a tutor to the poet Robert Graves's son. For several years, he worked as a translator at the BBC in London, and from 1951 until 1953 he was poetry editor at The Nation. He has since lived in, among other places, Mexico and France, and currently resides in Hawaii. In addition to lyric poetry, Merwin has written book-length poems and several plays, and has translated Latin, Greek, French, Spanish, Italian, Chinese, and Japanese poetry into English. In addition to a version of Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, he has published essays and memoirs. He continues to be one of America's most prolific poets.

Charlotte Mew (1869–1928), pp. 1216–19
Charlotte Mew was born in London and attended Gower Street School. In her thirties, she wrote short stories; in her forties, she turned to poetry. Her first collection, The Farmer's Bride, was published in 1916. Her work was much admired by poets such as John Masefield, Walter de la Mare, and Thomas Hardy, who became a close friend and once called her "far and away the best living woman poet." Her life was punctuated by difficulty and sadness. She watched two siblings succumb to insanity; looked after her demanding, widowed mother; nursed her sister, who had developed inoperable cancer; and suffered unrequited love for Ella D'Arcy, assistant editor of the Yellow Book, and for the novelist May Sinclair. She entered a nursing home in 1927, but committed suicide a short time later.

Edna St. Vincent Millay (1892–1950),
pp. 1382–86
Edna St. Vincent Millay was born in Rockland, Maine. In 1912, she gained national attention when her precocious poem "Renascence" was published in The Lyric Year, an anthology of contemporary poetry. After her graduation from Vassar College, Millay moved to Greenwich Village, where her literary reputation quickly flourished. She associated with many of the prominent artists, writers, and political radicals of her day, including the poets Hart Crane and Wallace Stevens, the playwright Eugene O'Neill, the editor Max Eastman, and the critic Edmund Wilson. In 1925, she settled with her husband in Austerlitz, New York, where she lived for the rest of her life. Witty, sometimes cynical, always polished, she is unusual in having produced some of the most traditional as well as most modern verse of her day.

John Milton (1608–1674), pp. 394–451
John Milton was born in London, the son of Sara and John Milton. The latter earned his living by composing music and working as a "scrivener," that is, drawing up contracts and performing other business tasks requiring writing. The young Milton was educated at St. Paul's School and Christ's College, Cambridge, where he received his B.A. in 1629 and his M.A. in 1632, and where his "niceness of nature" and "honest haughtiness" (and, perhaps, his flowing locks), earned him the nickname "the lady of Christ's." According to his own testimony in the volume of the early poems he published (and carefully arranged) in 1645, his earliest poetic endeavors were two paraphrases of Psalms done when he was fifteen. During his university years, Milton wrote various poems in both English and Latin, and his 1645 book opens with "On the Morning of Christ's Nativity," written in 1629, while he was still at Cambridge. From 1632 until 1638, he lived at his parents' house, studying and writing, supported by his father. During this period, he wrote his masque, Comus, in collaboration with the musician Henry Lawes; performed in 1634, it was not published under Milton's name until 1645. His first published poem was "On Shakespeare," an epitaph printed in the Second Folio (1632) of Shakespeare's plays. In November of 1637, the year his mother died, Milton published his pastoral elegy "Lycidas" in a volume memorializing Edward King, a Cambridge student who had drowned. In 1638, Milton traveled to France and then to Italy, where he met, among others, the astronomer and physicist Galileo. Upon returning to an England entering the era of political and religious conflict known as the civil wars, he began the career as political writer that led him to advocate freedom of divorce (in pamphlets published soon after Milton's own hasty marriage, to Mary Powell, had failed in 1642); freedom from censorship of the press (Areopagitica, 1644); and freedom from what he and others considered tyranny. An ardent supporter of Oliver Cromwell's republican regime, Milton supported the execution of King Charles in 1649 and became Cromwell's "secretary for foreign tongues" that same year. As an official defender of the new regime, Milton wrote many prose tracts during the 1650s, despite having become completely blind by 1652, the same year that Mary (who had returned to him in 1645, and with whom he had three daughters) died. He remarried in 1655, to Katherine Woodstock, but she died in childbirth in 1658. With the restoration of the monarchy in 1660, Milton was in danger of execution; friends, including the writer Andrew Marvell, intervened, and Milton was able to return to writing poetry during his final years. In 1663, he married a third time, in 1667 he published Paradise Lost, and in 1671 he published a volume containing his "brief epic," Paradise Regained, and his closet drama, Samson Agonistes.

N. Scott Momaday (b. 1934), pp. 1861–62
N. Scott Momaday was born in Lawton, Oklahoma, a member of the Kiowa Native American tribe. He was educated at the University of New Mexico and Stanford University. Since then, he has taught at Stanford, the University of California at Santa Barbara, the University of California at Berkeley, and the University of Arizona at Tucson. Known primarily as a novelist, he is also a landscape artist. Although his work is rooted in the Native American literary tradition, it reveals broader influences.

Lady Mary Wortley Montagu (1689–1762), pp. 639–45
Lady Mary Wortley Montagu was born Lady Mary Pierrepont, daughter of a wealthy Whig peer who became duke of Kingston in 1715 and of Lady Mary Fielding, who died when her daughter was thirteen. Educated at home, Lady Mary taught herself Latin. In 1712, she eloped with Edward Wortley Montagu, whom she followed to Turkey when he was appointed ambassador to Constantinople in 1716. Her letters from her travels were witty and immensely popular. On her return to England in 1718, she popularized the practice of inoculation against smallpox. She left England again in 1739, largely to escape her by then loveless marriage, and lived in Europe, mostly Italy, for the rest of her life, returning home only to die. She was connected to most of contemporary literary London: the novelist Henry Fielding was her second cousin; the poet Alexander Pope was initially a friend, but after she spurned a declaration of love, he bitterly mocked her in The Dunciad and "Epistle to a Lady." Joseph Addison and Sir Richard Steele, founders of the Spectator, were her first publishers, and the writers William Congreve and John Gay were acquaintances. In "Epistle from Mrs. Yonge to Her Husband," she critiques sexual inequality and advises women trapped in loveless marriages to take lovers, as she had in her later years.

John Montague (b. 1929), pp. 1783–86
John Montague was born in Brooklyn, New York, where his Irish parents had fled in 1920 to avoid prosecution for Republican activities (his father had reputedly burned the homes of absentee landlords), and was brought up by his aunts on a farm in Garvaghey, County Tyrone, Northern Ireland. He was educated at University College, Dublin; Yale University; and the Universities of Iowa and California at Berkeley. He worked as a journalist before becoming a lecturer in poetry at University College, Cork, and he has been a visiting lecturer at several institutions in the United States, Europe, and Britain. While literary director of Claddagh Records (from 1962 until 1975), he organized recordings of poets such as Robert Graves, Seamus Heaney, Thomas Kavanagh, Thomas Kinsella, and Hugh MacDiarmid. His own poetry is to be found in collections such as Forms of Exile (1958), A Chosen Light (1967), and New Selected Poems (1990). He has also published short stories, a play, and a novella, and has translated Gaelic writing and edited collections of Irish verse.

Marianne Moore (1887–1972), pp. 1328–36
Marianne Moore was born in Kirkwood, Missouri, and was raised in Carlisle, Pennsylvania. After receiving a degree in biology from Bryn Mawr College, she took business courses at Carlisle Commercial College; taught business skills and commercial law at the U.S. Industrial Indian School, in Carlisle; and traveled to Europe. Moore lived all her adult life with her mother, first in New Jersey, then in Greenwich Village, then in Brooklyn. Her first collection of poetry, Poems (1921), was brought out by the writers H. D., whom she had befriended at Bryn Mawr, and Bryher (Winifred Ellerman). Although she devoted most of her energies to writing poetry and criticism, Moore worked variously as a teacher, a secretary, and a librarian, and she edited the influential magazine Dial from 1925 until 1929, when it ceased publication. In her poetry, sometimes written in syllabics, she united precise observation, and deliberately prosaic speech that was nonetheless highly inventive, with ornate diction and elaborate patterns. Her friend Elizabeth Bishop was among the many poets on whom she had a profound influence. She is considered one of the major modernists.

Dom Moraes (b. 1938), pp. 1883–85
Dom(inic) Moraes was born in Bombay, India. He moved to England in 1954 and matriculated at Jesus College, Oxford, then published his first collection of poetry at nineteen. With that book, A Beginning (1957), he became the youngest poet to win the Hawthornden Prize. He has since been a journalist, a scriptwriter, and an editor; has worked for the United Nations Fund for Populations; and has served as an honorary colonel with the United States Army, in Vietnam. He eventually returned to India, where he married the actress Leela Naidu. In addition to poetry, Moraes has published an acclaimed prose autobiography called My Father's Son (1968) and collections of essays on writing and on life in India and Pakistan.

Hannah More (1745–1833), pp. 707–11
Hannah More was born in Stapleton, Gloucestershire, England, the daughter of Jacob More, a master of a Free School, and his wife, Mary Grace, a farmer's child. Sent to the boarding school opened in Bristol by her two older sisters, she there learned French, Italian, Spanish, and Latin, and eventually joined the staff. She wrote her first play, The Search after Happiness, a drama for schoolgirls, at age eighteen. Originally published in Bristol in 1762, it was republished in London in 1773 and became hugely popular. Her tragedy The Inflexible Captive was printed with a postscript by the famous actor David Garrick, who staged the play at Bath in 1775. Another play, Percy, was performed at Covent Garden in 1777 to great acclaim. In addition to Garrick, More met Samuel Johnson; Johnson's biographer, James Boswell; Sir Joshua Reynolds; and other distinguished London men of letters. She was also introduced to the "Bluestockings," a circle of women centered on Elizabeth Montagu. Although More became a popular and respected dramatist, she gradually moved from secular to religious and didactic writing, advocating social reform and poverty relief. With her sisters, she promoted Sunday schools to instruct poor children in reading the Bible, but she was against "overeducating" the lower classes. She wrote forty-nine pamphlets for the Cheap Repository Tracts series and published her important work Strictures on the Modern System of Female Education in 1799. At her death, she left £30,000 to more than seventy charities.

Edwin Morgan (b. 1920), pp. 1618–20
Edwin Morgan was born in Glasgow, Scotland, and educated at the University of Glasgow, interrupting his studies to serve in the Royal Army Medical Corps, but returning in 1947 as a lecturer. His first collection, A Vision of Cathkin Braes (1952), was followed by many others, including Sonnets from Scotland (1985) and From the Video Box (1986). He is best-known for his ingenious experimental and "concrete" poems. He was a visiting professor at Strathclyde University from 1987 until 1990. He has translated Beowulf as well as the work of numerous poets, including several Latin Americans whose magical-realist mode has influenced his own work. He has also published many essays and reviews and has edited several collections of poetry, prose, and drama.

William Morris (1834–1896), pp. 1139–44
William Morris was born in Walthamstow, England, and educated at Exeter College, Oxford, where he became lifelong friends with the painter and designer Edward Burne-Jones. Their circle was strongly influenced by the Pre-Raphaelite school, which they encountered in about 1854. After graduation from Oxford, Morris joined an architectural firm, but left to paint and to design the furnishings sold by his company Morris, Marshall, Faulkner and Co. (later Morris and Co.). Producing his own furniture out of frustration at not being able to find anything suitable for the striking Red House designed for him by Philip Webb, Morris started a revival of the decorative arts and a revolution in Victorian taste. He founded the Society for the Preservation of Ancient Buildings, joined the Social Democratic Federation, on its dissolution assumed the leadership of the Socialist League, and wrote and lectured for the cause of Socialism with unflagging enthusiasm. As a poet (and a translator), he drew on the traditions of Icelandic, Anglo-Saxon, and classical literature. He combined the two strands of his talent in 1891, when he founded the Kelmscott Press, producing books designed for beauty rather than for economy.

Howard Moss (1922–1987), pp. 1659–61
Howard Moss was born in New York City. He received his undergraduate education at the University of Michigan and Wisconsin University and did postgraduate work at Harvard and Columbia Universities. During World War II, he served in the War Information Office, and between 1945 and 1948 he was an editor at Time magazine and the Junior Bazaar. In 1948, he joined the staff of The New Yorker, where he served as poetry editor for nearly forty years and helped establish the reputations of a wide range of poets, from Theodore Roethke to Mark Strand. He published poetry, light verse, plays, and criticism, and he edited several anthologies of poetry. He also taught at, among other schools, Barnard College and Columbia University.

Edwin Muir (1887–1959), pp. 1336–40
Edwin Muir was born in the Orkney Islands. In 1901, his family moved to Glasgow in search of work, but within five years both of his parents and two of his brothers had died due to the harsh conditions in the city's slums and sweatshops. Muir left school at age eleven and worked in a beer-bottling factory, several law offices, and a factory that burned bones to charcoal. In 1919, he moved to London and began a literary career. He was assistant to A. R. Orage on the New Age and reviewed for the Athenaeum and The Scotsman. From 1921 until 1956, he and his wife, Willa, moved between Europe, England, and Scotland, eventually settling in Cambridgeshire, England. Muir's First Poems was published in 1925. He was a prolific reviewer and critic, and collections of his writings include Latitudes (1924) and Essays on Literature and Society (1949). He worked for the British Council from 1942 to 1950 in Edinburgh, Prague, and Rome, and he was Charles Eliot Norton Professor at Harvard University from 1955 to 1956. The Complete Poems of Edwin Muir was published in 1991.

Paul Muldoon (b. 1951), pp. 1979–85
Paul Muldoon was born in Portadown, County Armagh, Northern Ireland, and was raised in The Moy, a small village featured prominently in many of his poems. He was educated at Queen's University, Belfast, where he met Seamus Heaney, Michael Longley, and other poets of the Belfast "Group." Muldoon worked for the BBC in Belfast until the mid-1980s, when he became a freelance writer and moved to the United States, where he has taught at a number of institutions. He was professor of poetry at Oxford from 1999 to 2004, and is now professor of humanities and creative writing at Princeton. He has written a children's book, translated Gaelic verse, and collaborated on the opera Shining Brow.

Les Murray (b. 1938), pp. 1885–90
Les Murray was born in the Nabiac, New South Wales, Australia, and raised on a dairy farm in nearby Bunyah. After studying arts and modern languages at the University of Sydney, he worked as a translator of foreign scholarly and technical materials at the Australian National University before embarking on a career as a freelance writer. He has been writer-in-residence at various institutions. In 1975, he repurchased part of the family farm in Bunyah, and in 1985 he returned there to live. An exceptionally prolific writer, he has published, in addition to poetry, several collections of critical essays and an acclaimed verse novel. He has been coeditor of Poetry Australia; poetry editor at Angus & Robertson; and, since 1991, literary editor of Quadrant. He compiled The New Oxford Book of Australian Verse and The Anthology of Australian Religious Verse. His Collected Poems was published in 1999.

Ogden Nash (1902–1971), pp. 1437–38
Ogden Nash was born in Rye, New York. He attended Harvard University for one year, then taught French, sold bonds, and wrote copy for streetcar advertisements, before embarking on a literary career. In 1929, he joined the staff of the fledgling New Yorker magazine. In addition to writing poetry, Nash wrote children's books, collaborated on several musicals, the most successful of which was the Broadway hit One Touch of Venus (1943), and lectured across the country. He was one of America's funniest and most popular poets.

Thomas Nashe (1567–1601), pp. 282–84
Thomas Nashe, the son of a poor curate and his wife, became a fellowship student at St. John's College, Cambridge, and was graduated in 1586. After touring France and Italy, he joined the circle of London writers that included Robert Greene. His first published work, a preface to Greene's Menaphon (1589), was an indictment of contemporary drama and poetry; his second, The Anatomy of Absurdity (1589), attacked the artificiality of recent romances. When Richard Harvey accused Nashe of presumption in writing the preface to Menaphon, Nashe replied with a tract called Pierce Penniless, His Supplication to the Devil (1592). When Gabriel Harvey wrote a contentious description of the end of Robert Greene's life in Four Letters (1592), Nashe replied in Four Letters Confuted (1593). The exchange was finally ended, in 1599, by Episcopal decree and confiscation of the adversaries' publications. Nashe's other works include The Unfortunate Traveler (1594), which has been called the first "picaresque" novel in English, and the plays Summer's Last Will (1592) and (with Ben Jonson) The Isle of Dogs (1597), which was suppressed for its allegedly lewd and seditious content. Though his reputation was based on his stinging wit and his rhetorical skills (he coined many new words in his prose works), Nashe also wrote fine lyrics.

Howard Nemerov (1920–1991), pp. 1623–27
Howard Nemerov was born and raised in New York City. He was the brother of the photographer Diane Arbus. Upon graduation from Harvard University, he entered the Canadian Air Force to fight in World War II and later transferred to the United States Air Force. After the war, he returned to New York and worked as an editor at Furioso magazine for one year. During the academic career that followed, he taught at, among other schools, Hamilton College, Bennington College, Brandeis University, and (from 1969 on) Washington University. From 1963 until 1964, he served as consultant in poetry to the Library of Congress. Influenced by Yeats, Eliot, and Auden, Nemerov was known for his wit, his use of irony and paradox, and his mastery of form. Both his serious and his more humorous poems asked thorny questions. In addition to poetry, he wrote fiction. He was named poet laureate of the United States in 1988.

Norman Nicholson (1914–1987), pp. 1561–63
Norman Nicholson was born in Millom, Cumberland, in the Lake District of England. Except for the years 1930–32, which he spent in a Hampshire sanitorium undergoing treatment for tuberculosis, he lived in Millom all his life, in a small apartment above the tailor shop where his father had worked. His Collected Poems—incorporating seven volumes published between 1944 and 1984 and some unpublished work—appeared in 1994. He also wrote an autobiography and several prose works about the Lake District. Nicholson identified his main theme as the "sense of community, of organic relationship between man and his environment"; continuity and change are other important themes in his work, the imagery of which is drawn predominantly from the Bible—at age twenty-three he "reconverted" to Christianity—and the natural world.

Sean O'Brien (b. 1952), pp. 1992–94
Sean O'Brien was born in London and raised in Hull. Educated at Selwyn College, Cambridge, and the Universities of Birmingham, Hull, and Leeds, he has taught at Sussex University and Sheffield Hallam University. He was Northern Arts Literary Fellow from 1992 to 1994 and was a visiting writer at the University of Odense, Denmark, and at Hokudai University, Sapporo, Japan. His collection Ghost Train won the Forward Prize for Poetry. He was cofounder and editor of the literary magazine The Printer's Devil and reviews regularly for The Times Literary Supplement and other periodicals. He has been commissioned by the BBC to produce a radio dramatization of Yevgeny Zamayatin's novel We, and his verse version of Aristophanes' The Birds was staged at the National Theatre in 2002. His critical work, The Deregulated Muse, brings together his essays on contemporary British and Irish poetry.

Frank O'Hara (1926–1966), pp. 1728–31
Frank O'Hara was born in Baltimore, Maryland, and raised in Grafton, Massachusetts. From 1944 until 1946, he served in the navy in the South Pacific. He was educated at Harvard University and the University of Michigan, and in 1951 he settled in New York. A fringe member of the Beats and a central figure in the so-called New York school of poets, whose practitioners included John Ashbery, Kenneth Koch, and James Schuyler, he enjoyed a long association with the Museum of Modern Art (where he served for a time as associate curator) and was friends with Abstract Expressionist artists such as Willem De Kooning, Jackson Pollock, and Franz Kline. He also edited Art News from 1953 until 1955. Like the painters he admired, O'Hara stressed the process of composition. His poems are filled with the bric-a-brac of contemporary life and pay tribute to popular figures such as Billie Holiday. His exuberant tone continues to make his work very popular.

Charles Olson (1910–1970), pp. 1511–15
Charles Olson was born in Worcester, Massachusetts, and educated at Wesleyan, Harvard, and Yale Universities. In 1948, he began his association with the experimental Black Mountain College, which he directed from 1951 until it closed, in 1956. During Olson's tenure, the composer John Cage, the choreographer Merce Cunningham, and the artist Franz Kline taught at the school; poets Robert Creeley, Robert Duncan, and Denise Levertov studied there; and writers Allen Ginsberg, Jack Kerouac, and Louis Zukofsky published early work in its influential magazine, The Black Mountain Review. In 1957, Olson settled in Gloucester, Massachusetts, and began work on the "Maximus" poems, which occupied him for the rest of his life. In a 1950 essay, Olson dubbed his poetry "Projective Verse." Believing that art "does not seek to describe but to enact," he attempted to convey in his work a sense of immediacy and energy.

Michael Ondaatje (b. 1943), pp. 1933–36
Michael Ondaatje was born in Colombo, Ceylon (now Sri Lanka), to parents of Sinhalese, Tamil, and Dutch origin, and was raised in England from age nine. In 1962, he moved to Canada, where he studied at Bishop's University, the University of Toronto, and Queen's University. Ondaatje has taught at the University of Western Ontario and York University, has worked as an editor at Coach House Press, and has directed several films. In addition to poetry, he has written memoirs, plays, literary criticism, and highly acclaimed fiction, including the novel The English Patient. He also has edited a collection of long poems and several volumes of short stories. Much of his recent poetry is set in his native Sri Lanka.

John Ormond (1923–1990), pp. 1681–82
John Ormond (Thomas) was born at Dunvant near Swansea, Glamorgan, Wales. He was educated at the University College, Swansea, and studied drawing at the Swansea School of Art. After graduation, he worked as a journalist from 1945 until 1955, then joined the BBC as a television news assistant. He worked as a documentary filmmaker from 1957 until his retirement, and is best-remembered for the series of films he produced on Welsh poets and writers. Ormond was first published in 1943, but grew increasingly dissatisfied with his poems and largely stopped writing until the 1960s, when new work showed that he had found a new voice. He subsequently established himself as one of the foremost Welsh poets of his generation.

Eric Ormsby (b. 1941), pp. 1925–26
Eric Ormsby was born in Atlanta, Georgia, raised in Florida, and later moved to Canada. Educated at Columbia, Rutgers, and Princeton Universities, as well as the University of Pennsylvania, he is a specialist in Islamic theology and classical Arabic language and literature. The author of scholarly works and five volumes of poetry, among them Daybreak at the Straits (2004), he lives in Montreal, where he is a professor at McGill University's Institute of Islamic Studies.

Wilfred Owen (1893–1918), pp. 1386–91
Wilfred Owen was born in Oswestry, Shropshire, England. He left school in 1911, served as assistant to a vicar in Oxfordshire, and taught English in Bordeaux. In 1915, he returned to England to enlist in the army and was sent to the front in France. Two years later, having been invalided to the Craiglockhart War Hospital with shellshock, he met Siegfried Sassoon, who encouraged his work. After returning to combat in 1918 and winning the Military Cross, he was killed in action one week before the signing of the armistice. Only five of his poems were published in his lifetime, but his posthumous reputation as a "poet's poet" grew with successive editions of his work by four poets—Sassoon (1920), Edmund Blunden (1931), Cecil Day Lewis (1963), and Jon Stallworthy (1983)—culminating with Benjamin Britten's setting of some of his poems in the composer's War Requiem (1962).

P. K. Page (b. 1916), pp. 1583–85
P. K. Page was born in Swanage, Dorset, England. Her family emigrated to Canada when she was three years old and settled in Red Deer, Alberta. After high school, Page worked as a shop assistant, a radio actress, a filing clerk, a researcher, and a scriptwriter. She then taught poetry at the Writers' Workshop in Toronto and at the University of Victoria. From 1942 until 1945, she worked on the editorial board of Preview magazine. From 1953 until 1964, she accompanied her husband, an ambassador, to Australia, Brazil, and Mexico, and while living abroad she resumed her earlier studies in painting. In addition to poetry, Page has written essays, short stories, a romance, and a memoir of her days in Brazil.

Michael Palmer (b. 1943), pp. 1936–38
Michael Palmer was born and raised in New York City and educated at Harvard University. He has taught at several schools, such as the New College of California, and has lived most of his life in the San Francisco area. In addition to writing poetry, Palmer has translated French literature and literary theory and has collaborated on books with painters and dancers. Like the artists and theorists he admires—including Gertrude Stein, Louis Zukofsky, Robert Creeley, and the Surrealists—Palmer in his work frequently examines the ways in which words signify meaning. As a L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E poet, he regards the reader as a cocreator of the text.

Dorothy Parker (1893–1967), pp. 1391–92
Dorothy Parker was born and raised in New York City. Early in her career, she worked for a number of prominent magazines, including Vogue and Vanity Fair, where she developed her reputation as an acerbic wit, and The New Yorker, for which she wrote the popular "Constant Reader" column and many short stories. In the 1930s, she and her second husband, Alan Campbell, moved to Hollywood and wrote screenplays; with Lillian Hellman and Dashiell Hammett, Parker helped found the Screen Writers' Guild. In the 1920s and 1930s, she became active in leftist politics, and she was blacklisted during the McCarthy era. Considered one of the foremost wits of her day, she belonged to a famous literary lunch group that called itself the Algonquin Club. Parker was as celebrated for her short stories as for her poetry, but she spent her later years in isolation in New York.

George Peele (1557–1596), p. 221
George Peele was the son of James Peele, a clerk of Christ's Hospital who wrote pageants as well as a book on accounting, and his wife. After taking a B.A. and an M.A. from Oxford, Peele moved to London and made a bare living from writing pageants, plays, and poems. He is portrayed as a dissolute man-about-town in the anonymous book Merry Conceited Jests of George Peele (1607), but the portrait seems to bear little relation to Peele's actual life. While still at university, he translated Euripides' Iphigenia, and he later may have worked as an actor in London. His first play, The Arraignment of Paris (ca. 1584), was performed before Queen Elizabeth I and combines pastoral and debate, with songs interspersed. In this and other plays (including a historical one on Edward II that may predate Christopher Marlowe's play on the same tragic king), Peele uses blank-verse lines and lyric interludes in ways that anticipate Shakespeare. Peele also used blank verse effectively in nondramatic poems, many of them published in Polyhymnia (1590) and The Honor of the Garter (1593).

Katherine Philips (1632–1664), pp. 526–30
Katherine Philips, the daughter of a London merchant and his wife, first attended school in Hackney, England, then moved to Pembrokeshire when her widowed mother remarried, in 1646. Katherine was married to James Philips, thirty-eight years her senior, when she was sixteen, and spent twelve quiet years in Wales—the culture of which she celebrated in her poems on the Welsh language—while her husband served as a member of Oliver Cromwell's Parliament. Philips claimed that she "never writ a line in my life with intention to have it printed," but her poetry was being circulated before 1651, when Henry Vaughan eulogized her in his Olor Iscanus (1651). In 1655, her son Hector was born; when he died two weeks later, she lamented his death in an epitaph. Known as "the matchless Orinda" in her circle of friends and in the wider literary world, she named her schoolmate Mary Aubrey "Rosania" in several poems and addressed her friend Anne Owen as "Lucasia" in others. Despite being born, and having married, a Puritan, Philips had Royalist sympathies and contributed panegyrics to the returning monarchy, although her husband's fortunes declined after the Restoration. On a visit to Ireland in 1662, Philips translated Pierre Corneille's La Morte de Pompée, which was staged and printed in Dublin the next year. Though only her initials appeared on the title page, Philips gained fame, eventually becoming the best-known female poet of her age. An unauthorized edition of her poems (By the Incomparable Mrs. K. P.) appeared in 1664; suppressed four days later, it closely resembles the authorized edition, published in 1667.

Robert Pinsky (b. 1940), pp. 1913–16
Robert Pinsky was born in Long Branch, New Jersey. He was educated at Rutgers University and Stanford University, where he studied under the poet Yvor Winters. He has taught at Wellesley College, the University of California at Berkeley, and Boston University, and served as poetry editor of The New Republic and Slate. In addition to his own poetry, Pinsky has published volumes of criticism, a translation of Dante's Inferno, and translations (with Robert Hass) of the writings of Polish poet Czeslaw Milosz. Poet laureate of the United States from 1997 to 2000, he had during his tenure an especially important role in popularizing the genre through his "Favorite Poems" project and other programs.

Sylvia Plath (1932–1963), pp. 1836–45
Sylvia Plath was born in Boston, Massachusetts. She was educated at Smith College and Newnham College, Cambridge, where she met her husband, the poet Ted Hughes. In 1953, Plath suffered a bout of depression, attempted suicide, and was hospitalized for six months; these events form the gist of her novel, The Bell Jar (1963). In 1958, she attended Robert Lowell's verse-writing seminar at Boston University, where the poet Anne Sexton was a fellow student. In 1963, following the dissolution of her marriage, she suffered another bout of depression and committed suicide. Like Lowell and Sexton, Plath is generally considered a "Confessional" poet. As Robert Lowell writes in his preface to Ariel, the posthumously published collection that established her reputation, in her poems "Sylvia Plath becomes . . . one of those super-real, hypnotic, great classical heroines."

Edgar Allan Poe (1809–1849), pp. 975–81
Edgar Poe was born in Boston to itinerant actors, orphaned in 1811, and then raised by John Allan, a Richmond merchant. He attended the University of Virginia for one year. When he ran up gambling debts, his adoptive father withdrew support, and Poe enlisted in the army. Although he received an appointment to West Point, he failed at military life. He then embarked on a literary career, which took him to Baltimore, Richmond, Philadelphia, and New York. A brilliant storyteller whose 1839 collection Tales of the Grotesque and Arabesque, a publishing failure, gave way to internationally successful poems, especially "The Raven," in the 1840s, he won numerous prizes and published in respected journals, but earned too little money to survive. He and his young wife nearly starved, and she died of tuberculosis in 1845. Poe, who had struggled long with mental instability, tried in 1849 to stop drinking, but his death was probably of alcohol poisoning. He considered poems "written solely for the poem's sake" superior to those written to convey, for instance, "the precepts of Duty." His poems were greatly appreciated by the French Symbolists and other adherents of "pure poetry," such as Dante Gabriel Rossetti, Algernon Swinburne, and Ernest Dowson.

Alexander Pope (1688–1744), pp. 596–638
Alexander Pope was born in London, to a Catholic linen-draper and his wife. Debarred from university by his religion, he learned Greek, Latin, Italian, and French with the help of a local priest. At age twelve, he contracted a form of tuberculosis, probably Pott's Disease, which left his spine weakened, his growth stunted, and his health permanently damaged. His family moved to Binfield, in Windsor Forest, where at age sixteen Pope composed his "Pastorals" (published 1709). His friend the playwright William Wycherley introduced him to London literary society, and his Essay on Criticism (1711) attracted the attention of Joseph Addison, though Pope was to leave Addison's circle for the "Scriblerus Club," which included John Gay, Jonathan Swift, and other writers. The Rape of the Lock appeared in 1712, and the first volume of his translation of the Iliad into heroic couplets followed in 1715. This, together with his translation of the Odyssey (1725–26), brought him financial security, and he moved to Twickenham, the Jacobite rebellion having made Catholics no longer welcome in the city center. There he wrote The Dunciad (1728–42, revised 1743), a satire on the alleged dullness of contemporary culture; the wittily and wickedly satirical "Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot" (1735); and the Essay on Man, the first volume of a projected work in four books, reflecting Pope's interest in philosophical and intellectual speculation.

Peter Porter (b. 1929), pp. 1786–90
Peter Porter was born in Brisbane, Australia, and educated at local grammar schools. He worked as a journalist and in the clothing industry before, in 1951, moving to London, where he worked as a clerk, a bookseller, and an advertising copywriter; he later served as a visiting lecturer at several English and Australian universities. During the 1950s, he was associated with the Group, a circle of poets who critiqued one another's work with the aim of achieving accessible verse. A prolific reviewer and broadcaster, he has published many volumes of poetry, including The Last of England (1970), The Cost of Seriousness (1978), and The Automatic Oracle (1987), and a collection of translations, After Martial (1972). A two-volume Collected Poems was published in 1999.

Ezra Pound (1885–1972), pp. 1295–1310
Ezra Pound was born in Hailey, Idaho, and raised in a suburb of Philadelphia. He was educated at Hamilton College and at the University of Pennsylvania, where he studied languages and became lifelong friends with the poet William Carlos Williams. In 1908, Pound moved to London, where he met prominent artists and writers, including W. B. Yeats, for whom he worked as secretary. He also championed the careers of promising writers such as Robert Frost, T. S. Eliot, and James Joyce. Pound moved to Paris in 1920, and to Rapallo, Italy, in 1924. During World War II, he made a series of pro-Fascist and anti-Semitic radio broadcasts that culminated in an indictment for treason. He was adjudged mentally unfit and sentenced to St. Elizabeth's Hospital for the Criminally Insane, in Washington, D.C., where he remained until 1958. Upon his release, he returned to Italy. In 1912, Pound, H. D., and Richard Aldington had launched Imagism, and later, influenced by visual artists such as Wyndham Lewis, Pound moved on to Vorticism, whose practitioners strove to depict dynamic energies rather than represent static images. In 1920, Pound's attempts to modernize his work, to "make it new," while preserving the best history had to offer, resulted in Hugh Selwyn Mauberley, a work that anticipated Eliot's The Waste Land (1922), which Pound edited masterfully. The crowning achievement of his career is his epic, The Cantos, which he began to write in earnest in 1924 but never finished to his satisfaction. It is one of the principal texts of modernism.

E. J. Pratt (1883–1964), pp. 1270–72
E(dwin) J(ohn) Pratt was born in Western Bay, Newfoundland, Canada. An ordained Methodist minister, he taught and preached in several remote communities. Pratt held degrees in philosophy and theology from Victoria College, University of Toronto. He was a staff psychologist at the college until 1919, when he joined the English Department, where he taught until his retirement, in 1953. In 1936, he helped found, and until 1942 was an editor of, the Canadian Poetry Magazine, which launched the careers of many important Canadian poets.

Matthew Prior (1664–1721), pp. 566–68
Matthew Prior was born in Wimborne, Dorset, England, the son of a joiner and his wife. Through the patronage of Lord Dorset he was educated at Westminster School, and with a scholarship from the duchess of Somerset went to St. John's College, Cambridge. He was secretary to the ambassador at The Hague, but turned Tory in Queen Anne's reign, acted as a secret agent, and was instrumental in bringing about the Treaty of Utrecht (1713), for which he was imprisoned for two years after the queen's death. He never held public office again, but Tory friends prevented his ruin by subscribing to a deluxe folio edition of Prior's work (1719). A gift of £4,000 from Lord Harley enabled him to buy Down Hall, in Essex. Prior wrote in a variety of forms, including "Public Panegyrics, Amorous Odes, Serious Reflections, [and] Idle Tales," and defended his enjoyment of a range of verse forms thus: "He that writes in Rhimes, dances in Fetters: And as his Chain is more extended, he may certainly take larger steps."

Craig Raine (b. 1944), pp. 1942–45
Craig Raine was born in Bishop Aukland, Durham, England, and was educated at Exeter College, Oxford, where he became a lecturer. He has worked for a number of journals and for ten years was poetry editor at Faber and Faber. A fellow of New College, Oxford, Raine has written the libretto for the opera The Electrification of the Soviet Union, which was adapted from Boris Pasternak's novella The Last Summer, and has adapted Racine's Andromaque for the stage. His work is characterized by arresting, inventive metaphors that defamiliarize the commonplace, and the poet James Fenton has dubbed him and his followers "The Martian School," because poems such as "A Martian Sends a Postcard Home" have "taught us to become strangers in our familiar world, to release the faculty of perception."

Sir Walter Ralegh (ca. 1552–1618), pp. 151–58
Sir Walter Ralegh was born in Devonshire, England, to a "gentle" but not wealthy family, and was educated at Oriel College, Oxford. He became a favorite of Queen Elizabeth I, whom he praised in many poems. He was renowned for his courage as a sailor, soldier, and explorer as well as for his eloquence and courtly wit. Though he lost the queen's favor when he seduced and married one of her maids of honor in 1592, she nonetheless gave him a royal patent to pursue an ill-fated search for gold in Guiana in 1595. Earlier, he had directed the colonization of Virginia, which he had named after his queen; he introduced tobacco from the colony to England. After Elizabeth died, the new king, James, had Ralegh imprisoned in the Tower of London on a questionable charge of treason. There he began his history of the world—which was to have been dedicated to his supporter, Henry, the prince of Wales. But Henry died in 1612 and Ralegh never finished the History. Although he was briefly released to pursue a second (and equally unsuccessful) search for gold in Guiana, he spent most of his later years in prison until he was executed on the old charge of treason.

A. K. Ramanujan (1929–1993), pp. 1801–03
A(ttipat) K(rishnaswami) Ramanujan was born in Mysore, Karnataka, India, and educated at Mysore University, Deccan College, and Indiana University. From 1950 until 1958, he taught English at various colleges and universities in India, and from 1962 until his death he taught at the University of Chicago. He was a respected scholar of Dravidian languages, linguistics, culture, and folklore; a gifted translator of works in classical Tamil and medieval and modern Kannada; and an engaging poet in both English and Kannada. In addition to poetry, he published plays, a novel, short stories, and an autobiography (this last in Kannada).

John Crowe Ransom (1888–1974), pp. 1367–69
John Crowe Ransom was born in Pulaski, Tennessee. He was educated at Vanderbilt University and Christ Church College, Oxford. After enlisting in the army during World War I, he served on the front in France. A member of the Vanderbilt faculty from 1914 until 1937, he spearheaded the Agrarian movement, whose members included the poet and novelist Robert Penn Warren and the poets Allen Tate and Donald Davidson. The group championed a vision of an agrarian economy based on old Southern values—which they saw as a corrective for an urban, Northern economy. Ransom later joined the faculty of Kenyon College, where he founded the influential Kenyon Review and helped spur the New Criticism, a critical school that emphasized close textual scrutiny and would dominate the American literary scene for several decades.

Henry Reed (1914–1986), pp. 1563–66
Henry Reed was born in Birmingham, England, and educated at Birmingham University. From 1937 to 1941, he worked as a teacher and as a journalist. During World War II, he served one year in the Royal Army Ordnance Corps and three as a cryptographer in the department of Naval Intelligence. In 1945, he went to work as a broadcaster, journalist, and playwright for the BBC, where his coworkers included the poets W. H. Auden, Louis MacNeice, and Dylan Thomas. He later taught at the University of Washington in Seattle. His reputation as a poet rests almost exclusively on the five-part "Lessons of the War," which may be the most anthologized poem of World War II. He also wrote some famously funny radio plays.

Adrienne Rich (b. 1929), pp. 1791–1801
Adrienne Rich was born in Baltimore, Maryland, and educated at Radcliffe College. Her first book of poems, A Change of World (1951), was selected by W. H. Auden for the Yale Series of Younger Poets. She has taught at, among other schools, Rutgers University and Stanford University, and now lives in California. A prolific writer, Rich has published numerous collections of poetry (including Collected Early Poems 1950–1970, The Fact of a Doorframe: Selected Poems 1950–2001, and The School among the Ruins: Poems 2000–2004), in which her work has evolved from closed forms to a poetics of change, rooted in a radical imagination and politics. In prose works such as What Is Found There: Notebooks on Poetry and Politics (1993, new edition 2003) and Arts of the Possible: Essays and Conversations (2001), she combines autobiography, history, and politics. In 2004, she edited Muriel Rukeyser's Selected Poems for the Library of America.

Edwin Arlington Robinson (1869–1935), pp. 1212–16
Edwin Arlington Robinson was born in Head Tide, Maine, and raised in Gardiner, Maine, the model for "Tilbury Town," the setting of many of his poems. He attended Harvard University, but was able to afford only two years. In 1896, Robinson moved to New York City, where he worked as a subway-construction inspector and in the Customs House. In 1910, despite financial difficulties, he devoted himself full-time to writing poetry. Robinson's early work received little recognition; fame came to him late, with the publication of The Town Down the River (1910) and The Man against the Sky (1916). By the time of his death, he was one of the most acclaimed poets in America, having won the Pulitzer Prize three times. Although he wrote lyric poems, dramatic monologues, and, later, long blank-verse narratives (such as his trilogy of verse novels based on Arthurian legend), he is best-remembered for his wry poems on fictional New England characters.

Theodore Roethke (1908–1963), pp. 1493–1502
Theodore Roethke was born and raised in Saginaw, Michigan, where his German grandfather, his uncle, and his father operated greenhouses, which would figure prominently in Roethke's work. Roethke was educated at the University of Michigan and, briefly, Harvard University. In 1935, he was hospitalized for the first of several mental breakdowns. From 1947 until his death, he taught at the University of Washington, where his students included the poets Richard Hugo and James Wright. His early work was typically comprised of short, tightly structured lyrics; a shift to more open form occurred with The Lost Son and Other Poems (1948). According to Roethke, these poems trace the spiritual and personal history "of a protagonist (not 'I' personally but of all haunted and harried men)." Although he is considered a precursor of the "Confessional" poets, his work is also visionary and imbued with nature.

Isaac Rosenberg (1890–1918), pp. 1373–76
Isaac Rosenberg was born in Bristol, England, and raised in the East End of London. He attended elementary schools until age fourteen, when he became apprenticed as an engraver in a firm of art publishers and attended evening classes in the Art School of Birkbeck College. His first ambition was to be a painter, and in 1911, when his apprenticeship ended, a group of three Jewish women provided the means for him to study at the Slade School of Art. His interest in writing poetry developed steadily, and with the encouragement of his married sister he circulated copies of his poems among members of London's literary set and gained a certain reputation, though neither his poetry nor his painting won him material success. In 1914, Rosenberg went to South Africa for his health and lived there with another of his sisters. He returned to England in 1915, enlisted in the army, and was killed in action on April 1, 1918. Initially buried in an unmarked grave, his remains were discovered in 1926 and reinterred in a Flanders cemetery.

Christina Rossetti (1830–1894), pp. 1128–34
Christina Rossetti, sister of the poet and Pre-Raphaelite painter Dante Gabriel Rossetti, was born in London. Except for two brief trips abroad, she lived with her mother (who educated her) all her life. A committed High Anglican, she was deeply influenced by the Tractarian, or Oxford, movement. Her first poems were published pseudonymously in the first issue of The Germ, in 1850, and her first major collection, Goblin Market and Other Poems, was published in 1866. The last collection published during her lifetime was the devout The Face of the Deep: A Devotional Commentary on the Apocalypse (1892).

Dante Gabriel Rossetti (1828–1882), pp. 1102–07
Dante Gabriel Rossetti, brother of the poet Christina Rossetti, was born in London. As a promising painter, he attended various art schools, including the Royal Academy School. In 1848, along with several painters, poets, and critics, among them J. E. Millais and W. Holman Hunt, he formed the short-lived but influential Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood. During the 1850s, Rossetti moved away from the naturalism of the Pre-Raphaelites toward aestheticism. He joined a coterie of unconventional thinkers—including the designer and poet William Morris, the painter and designer Edward Burne-Jones, and the poet Algernon Swinburne—whose work set a new standard of taste and thinking and influenced the Aesthetes and Decadents of the next generation, including the writers Walter Pater and Oscar Wilde.

Muriel Rukeyser (1913–1980), pp. 1537–39
Muriel Rukeyser was born in New York City. She attended Vassar College—where she, the poet Elizabeth Bishop, and the novelist Mary McCarthy founded the Student Review—and Columbia University. Her first book of poems, Theory of Flight (1935), used imagery from her studies at Roosevelt Aviation School. She taught writing at the California Labor School in Berkeley, California, and later at Sarah Lawrence College. In addition to poetry, Rukeyser published biographies of the mathematicians Willard Gibbs and Thomas Hariot and Republican presidential candidate Wendell Willkie, collections of literary criticism, and children's books. She also translated the work of Gunnar Ekelof, Bertolt Brecht, and Octavio Paz. Social and political issues were her primary concern, and her phrase "no more masks!" became a rallying cry for feminists, including the poets Adrienne Rich and Anne Sexton.

Carl Sandburg (1878–1967), pp. 1252–53
Carl Sandburg was born in Galesburg, Illinois. He left school after the eighth grade, but later attended Lombard College. His first collection of poetry, Chicago Poems, was published in 1914 and was followed by several highly acclaimed and immensely popular volumes, including Cornhuskers (1918), which documents Sandburg's war experience, Smoke and Steel (1920), and the book-length poem The People, Yes (1936). Sandburg was a leading figure in the Chicago Renaissance, along with the architect Frank Lloyd Wright, the novelist Theodore Dreiser, and the poets Vachel Lindsay and Edgar Lee Masters. In the 1930s, Sandburg became active in the Socialist movement. He devoted thirty years to the study of Abraham Lincoln and traveled the country in search of folk songs and ballads, which he collected as The American Songbag (1927). He also wrote novels and children's stories.

Robyn Sarah (b. 1949), pp. 1956–58
Robyn Sarah was born in New York City, to Canadian parents, and grew up in Montreal. She has a degree in music from the Conservatoire de Musique et d'Art Dramatique du Québec and in philosophy from McGill University. Cofounder, with Fred Louder, of the literary press Villeneuve Publications, she has taught English at Champlain Regional College for over twenty years. An essayist and reviewer, she has published several collections of short stories as well as of poetry. She lives in Montreal.

Siegfried Sassoon (1886–1967), pp. 1317–20
Siegfried Sassoon was born in Kent, England, and attended Clare College, Cambridge. For several years, he divided his time between London, where he moved in fashionable literary circles, and his family's country estate, where he lived as a leisured Edwardian gentleman. At the outbreak of World War I, he enlisted and went to the front with the Royal Welch Fusiliers. Known as "Mad Jack" for his acts of reckless courage, he was awarded the Military Cross, but in 1917 he publicly protested that the war was being "deliberately prolonged by those who have the power to end it." His actions landed him in the Craiglockhart War Hospital (authorities claimed he was suffering from "shell shock"), where he befriended the poet Wilfred Owen. Although Edward Marsh included some of Sassoon's early work in his anthologies of Georgian poetry, these poems bear little resemblance to the fierce war poems of The Old Huntsman (1917) and Counter Attack (1918). A prolific diarist, he wrote seven volumes of (sometimes fictionalized) autobiography. He was received into the Roman Catholic Church in 1957 and regarded himself at the end of his life as above all a religious poet.

Gjertrud Schnackenberg (b. 1953), pp. 2000–2005
Gjertrud Schnackenberg was born in Tacoma, Washington. She attended Mount Holyoke College and earned early admiration for her writing. She has traveled extensively, has lived in Rome, and currently resides in Boston. A highly allusive poet, Schnackenberg fuses her personal history with that of Dante in her book A Gilded Lapse of Time (1992) and revisits the myth of Oedipus in her book-length poem The Throne of Labdacus (2000).

James Schuyler (1923–1991), pp. 1683–84
James Schuyler was born in Chicago and raised in Washington, D.C., and western New York State. He was educated at Bethany College. After living in Italy during the 1950s, he settled in New York City. Like the poet Frank O'Hara, Schuyler worked at the Museum of Modern Art, served on the editorial board of Art News, and was deeply influenced by the practices of avant-garde artists. In addition to poetry, he wrote three novels, all of them comedies of manners.

Vikram Seth (b. 1952), pp. 1994–96
Vikram Seth was born in Calcutta, India, and educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford; Stanford University; and Nanjing University. His first volume of poems, Mappings, appeared in 1980, and his 1985 collection, The Humble Administrator's Garden, won the Commonwealth Poetry Prize (Asia). He published his first novel, The Golden Gate, in 1986, but it was his epic, award-winning A Suitable Boy (1993) that brought him international fame. That was followed by An Equal Music in 1999. A prolific reviewer, he has also written a travel book, From Heaven Lake: Travels through Sinkiang and Tibet; a series of animal stories in verse for children, Beastly Tales from Here and There; and an opera libretto, Arion and the Dolphin, which was performed at the English National Opera in 1994.

Anne Sexton (1928–1974), pp. 1764–65
Anne Sexton was born in Newton, Massachusetts, and attended Garland Junior College. Following the birth of her first child, in 1951, she suffered the first in a series of mental breakdowns, which culminated in her suicide, in 1974. Sexton began writing poetry in earnest in 1957. She studied under Robert Lowell and W. D. Snodgrass, whose Heart's Needle (1959) influenced her profoundly, and developed important friendships with Sylvia Plath and Maxine Kumin. Along with teaching poetry in high schools, at mental institutions, and at colleges and universities (including Harvard, Oberlin, and Boston), she coauthored three children's books with Kumin. Sexton is often considered a prime example of what came to be called the Confessional school of poetry, although she also wrote nonautobiographical poems, based on legend and fairy tale.

William Shakespeare (1564–1616), pp. 257–77
We know less about Shakespeare's life than we know about that of almost any other major English writer. He was born the third of eight children in Stratford-on-Avon. His father, John, was a maker of gloves who became an alderman and a bailiff before suffering financial troubles. Shakespeare's mother, Mary Arden, was the daughter of a rich farmer and brought land to the marriage. Shakespeare probably attended the Stratford grammar school, but received no university education and was referred to as an "upstart crow" by one of the better-educated "university wits" when he arrived in London, in the early 1590s. The first record of him after his christening dates from 1582, when he married Anne Hathaway; they had a daughter in 1583 and twins, Judith and Hamnet, in 1585. For most of his career, he was an actor and shareholder in, and principal playwright of, the most successful theatrical company of his time. He quickly gained a reputation as "the most excellent" English dramatist in both comedy and tragedy and was well known for his history plays, narrative poems, and the "sugared Sonnets" that were circulated "among his private friends." After the turn of the century, he composed in rapid succession his tragic masterpieces Hamlet, Othello, King Lear, Macbeth, and Antony and Cleopatra. He apparently retired to Stratford around 1610, and during his later years he worked mainly in the genres of romance and tragicomedy. When he died, no collected edition of his works had been published; the First Folio, a collection of his plays (but not his narrative poems or sonnets), appeared in 1623.

Percy Bysshe Shelley (1792–1822), pp. 863–93
Percy Bysshe Shelley was born near Horsham, Sussex, to a well-to-do, conservative family. In 1810, he went to University College, Oxford, but was expelled in his first year for refusing to recant an atheistic pamphlet he had published with a classmate. He married a schoolgirl the following year. In 1813, he moved to London, where he worked for a number of social causes and came under the influence of the radical social philosopher William Godwin. Shelley fell in love with Godwin's daughter, Mary Wollstonecraft Godwin (author of the novel Frankenstein), and eloped to Europe with her. Byron joined them in Switzerland in 1816 and followed them to Italy in 1818. Shelley was drowned when his small boat was caught in a squall on the Gulf of Spezia. Lord Byron eulogized him as "without exception, the best and least selfish man I ever knew." The superlative opinion of friends did not reflect public opinion at large, however. Due to his radical social, political, and philosophical ideas and his unorthodox lifestyle, Shelley had few admirers in his lifetime. An avid student of Hume and Plato, he was deeply influenced by skeptical empiricism and idealism; he distrusted all claims to certainty—he never confessed a religious or philosophical creed—but held fast to his faith in the redeeming powers of love and the imagination.

James Shirley (1596–1666), pp. 390–91
James Shirley was born in London and was educated at Merchant Taylors' School. He went on to St. John's College, Oxford, and St. Catherine's Hall, Cambridge. After joining the Anglican clergy, he served in St. Alban's and taught at the town's grammar school from 1623 until 1625, but lost his position there when he converted to Catholicism in 1624–25. Returning to London, he began a career as a dramatist with The School of Compliment (later, Love Tricks; 1625). This was the first of thirty-six plays he wrote, many for the Cockpit Theatre, until 1640, when he succeeded Phillip Massinger as principle dramatist for the King's Men. Shirley's plays were largely comedies and tragicomedies in the style of (Francis) Beaumont and (John) Fletcher, and dramatized patriotic debates such as The Contention of Ajax and Ulysses for the Armour of Achilles (1658), but Shirley also composed masques such as The Triumph of Peace, commissioned by the Inns of Court in 1634, and poetry. As a Royalist and Catholic, Shirley was fortunate in finding employment as a schoolteacher during Oliver Cromwell's Commonwealth, but his luck did not long outlast it; he died of exposure during the Great Fire of London.

Jane Shore (b. 1947), pp. 1952–54
Jane Shore was born in Newark, New Jersey, and educated at Goddard College and the University of Iowa. She was fellow in poetry at the Radcliffe Institute from 1971 until 1973. During the mid-1970s, she taught at Harvard University—where one of her colleagues was the poet Elizabeth Bishop, a clear influence on Shore—and she now teaches at George Washington University. The author of four volumes of poetry, among them Happy Family (1999), she lives in Washington, D.C., and in Vermont.

Mary Sidney (1561–1621), pp. 225–30
Mary Sidney was the third of eleven children born to Sir Henry Sidney and his wife, Mary. Well-educated at home, Mary became proficient in Latin as well as in French and Italian; between 1575 and 1577, she acquired a courtly education by serving, as her mother had before her, as a lady-in-waiting to Queen Elizabeth I. In 1577, she married Henry Herbert, the second earl of Pembroke. As a patron of letters and inspiration to poets ranging from Edmund Spenser to Isabella Whitney, Mary Sidney Herbert made her country estate, Wilton, into an intellectual center. In the early 1580s, Mary's eldest brother, Philip, probably wrote his Defense of Poesy there along with portions of his Arcadia, the second version of which was unfinished when he died, in 1586. He had dedicated the first version to his sister, and in 1590 she published a composite version of the two texts, an enormously influential work known as The Countess of Pembroke's Arcadia. Sharing with her brother a hope that England would become a defender of Protestantism in Europe, Mary worked after his death to complete a series of verse translations of the Psalms that he had begun; having revised the forty-three psalms that he had finished, she composed another 107 in a wide variety of meters and forms. Mary articulated some of her own religious beliefs not only in her versions of the Psalms but also in her translation of Du Plessis Mornay's Discourse of Life and Death and in her rendering, in terza rima, of Petrarch's Triumph of Death. In 1591, she published her Antonie, a translation of a French play by Robert Garnier. Her original verse often appears under the "handmaidenly" cloak of translation and even, perhaps, under others' names: some critics have argued for her authorship of the "Lay of Clorinda" long attributed to Spenser and published in Astrophil, the elegy for Philip Sidney that Spenser dedicated to Mary.

Sir Philip Sidney (1554–1586), pp. 208–20
Philip Sidney was born at Penshurst, in Kent, England, to an aristocratic family that included among its poets Sidney's brother Robert, his sister Mary, and his niece, Mary Wroth. His mother, also Mary, was the sister of Queen Elizabeth I's sometime favorite, Robert Dudley, earl of Leicester, and his father, Sir Henry, had served the queen as lord deputy of Ireland. After attending Shrewsbury School with his friend (and later, biographer) Fulke Greville, Sidney spent time at Oxford and Cambridge. From 1572 until 1575, he traveled in Europe, during which time he established a firm friendship with Hubert Languet, who encouraged his zealous Protestantism. When in 1580 Queen Elizabeth considered marrying a French Catholic, Sidney criticized the idea in a letter and was consequently banished from court. He spent his enforced "idleness" composing poetry; his famous work of literary criticism, the Defense of Poesy; and two versions of his pastoral romance, the Arcadia, which was dedicated to his sister Mary and which she published after his death in a widely read version that conflates his first text, the Old Arcadia, with his unfinished revision, the New Arcadia. Legendary in life and death as the quintessential Elizabethan gentleman, Sidney was in reality more marked by the "great expectation" he mentions in one of his sonnets than by political or romantic success. His Astrophil and Stella, the first great sonnet sequence in English—like his other poetic works, circulated in manuscript but not published until after his death—uses (and revises) Petrarchan conventions to record various experiences of unfulfilled desire. These include, but are not exhausted by, the erotic frustration caused by his failure to win Penelope Devereux, the historical model for Stella, as his wife. Although she was briefly engaged to Sidney, in 1581 she married Lord Robert Rich; Sidney was married to Frances, daughter of the powerful courtier Sir Francis Walsingham, in 1583, the same year he was knighted. Sidney was granted a chance to fight for Protestantism in the Low Countries after being made governor of Flushing (an English possession in the Low Countries) in 1586. He died of gangrene from a wound in the leg.

Charles Simic (b. 1938), pp. 1891–93
Charles Simic was born in the former Yugoslavia and raised there during the Nazi occupation. At age eleven, he emigrated to the United States with his family. Simic was educated at the University of Chicago and New York University. Besides serving in the United States Army, he has worked as a bookkeeper, an accountant, a house painter, and a salesman. Since then, he has taught at California State College and the University of New Hampshire. In addition to many volumes of poetry, he has published several collections of essays and has translated a number of European poets into English. His poems' mystery and sense of danger derive in large part from folklore and fairy tale as well as from the tragic events of the past century, especially World War II.

L. E. Sissman (1928–1976), pp. 1766–68
L(ouis) E(dward) Sissman was raised in Detroit, Michigan. After graduation from Harvard University, he held a series of odd jobs: shelving books in a library, editing copy in a New York publishing house, working on John F. Kennedy's first Senate campaign, and selling vacuum cleaners and Fuller brushes. In 1956, he began a successful career in advertising. In 1958, after a ten-year hiatus, he began to write poetry in earnest, and he published prolifically from that time until his death, from Hodgkins' disease. In addition, he wrote regularly for The Atlantic Monthly. He lived in Boston nearly all his adult life. Although his illness was a primary subject, Sissman treated personal material with irony, urbanity, wit, and grim cheer.

John Skelton (1460–1529), pp. 90–97
Skelton often referred to himself as "poet laureate," a title conferred on him by the universities of Oxford and Cambridge in 1490 and 1493, respectively. Trained in Latin and in rhetoric, he was ordained a priest and subsequently served as a tutor for the future king Henry VIII. After writing a satire on court life, The Bowge of Court, in 1498, he became rector of the parish church of Diss, a town in Norfolk. While at Diss (from approximately 1502 until 1511), Skelton apparently kept a mistress and fathered children; he also wrote his comic lament "Phillip Sparow" and "Ware the Hawk," which denounces the actions of a neighboring priest who pursued his quarry, a hawk, into the sanctified space of Skelton's church. Both in its (highly original) form and in some of its content, this poem anticipates Skelton's later attacks on Henry VIII's chancellor, Cardinal Wolsey; Wolsey's desecration of monastic spaces are the object of Skelton's comic invective in long poems such as Speak Parrot, Why Come Ye Not to Court, and Colin Clout, all from the early 1520s, when Skelton was living at the Abbey of Westminster, protected by the laws of sanctuary from Wolsey's (and perhaps also the king's) anger. Skelton also wrote The Turning of Eleanor Rumming, a satiric portrait of an alewife; a morality play, Magnificence; and a number of short lyrics including the ironic song "Mannerly Margery Milk and Ale." The "Skeltonic" style that he invented typically blends high and low diction in short rhymed lines containing from two to five beats.

Christopher Smart (1722–1771), pp. 678–86
Christopher Smart was born in Kent, England, and educated in Durham and at Pembroke College, Cambridge, where he became a fellow. He was a brilliant classical scholar, but began to exhibit symptoms of obsessive behavior, including a compulsion to public prayer. After moving to London in 1749, he won prizes for poetry, but his illness worsened, and he was several times committed to the lunatics' ward at St. Luke's Hospital, where he divided his time between writing, gardening, and his cat, Jeoffry. In 1758, he was transferred to a private institution at Bethnal Green. Released in 1763, he declined into poverty, and in 1770 was remanded to the King's Bench debtor's prison, where he died. William Butler Yeats regarded Smart's A Song to David as the inaugural poem of the Romantic period. Smart's other well-known work, Jubilate Agno, which he referred to as his "Magnificat," was, like A Song to David, composed during Smart's confinement, but was unpublished until 1939.

Charlotte Smith (1749–1806), pp. 711–15
Charlotte Smith (née Turner) was born in London and brought up on her family's estates: Bignor Park, Sussex, and Stoke Place, Surrey. Raised by her maternal aunt after the death of her mother in childbirth in 1753, she began writing poems at age six. Educated at schools in Sussex and London, she married, at age fifteen, Benjamin Smith, the son of a wealthy merchant in the West Indies trade. They had twelve children, one of whom died in infancy and two of whom died in childhood. Benjamin was imprisoned for debt in 1783, and Charlotte shared some of the eight-month sentence with him. On his release, the family fled to France to escape creditors. Charlotte's first collection, Elegiac Sonnets and Other Essays, was published in 1784, went through numerous editions, and was translated into French and Italian. While in France, she translated Antoine-François Prévost's Manon Lescaut, which she published in 1785 but subsequently withdrew over accusations of plagiarism. The Smiths separated when they returned to England, and Charlotte become a prolific writer, publishing three collections of poetry, six children's books, and ten novels, including The Old Manor House (1793), which was admired by Sir Walter Scott. Continual litigation over her father-in-law's estate as well as family sorrow and misfortune plagued her all her life. Benjamin Smith predeceased Charlotte by eight months, dying in a Scottish debtors' prison. A posthumous collection of her work, Beachy Head; with Other Poems, was published in 1807.

Stevie Smith (1902–1971), pp. 1439–43
Stevie Smith was born Florence Margaret Smith in Yorkshire, England. She was raised by an aunt in the north London suburb of Palmers Green and lived there for the rest of her life. A secretary in the magazine publishing house of Newnes, Pearson, Ltd for thirty years, she retired in 1953 following a severe breakdown and devoted the rest of her life to writing. Her first volume of poetry, A Good Time Was Had by All, was published in 1937 and was accompanied by her own comic illustrations. This was followed by six more collections and three novels. She was awarded the Queen's Gold Medal for Poetry in 1969.

W. D. Snodgrass (b. 1926), pp. 1731–34
W(illiam) D(eWitt) Snodgrass was born in Wilkinsburg, Pennsylvania, and raised in Beaver Falls, Pennsylvania, where he began undergraduate studies at Geneva College before entering the navy. He served in the Pacific during the last months of World War II. He later studied at the University of Iowa, where he attended Robert Lowell's poetry workshops. Snodgrass has held teaching appointments at a number of universities, including Cornell, Rochester, Wayne State, Syracuse, Old Dominion, and Delaware. In 1959, he published Heart's Needle, a revolutionary work credited, along with Robert Lowell's Life Studies (published the same year), with spawning the so-called Confessional school of poetry. Snodgrass often takes up complex moral issues; in The Führer Bunker (1977), he presents a series of dramatic monologues spoken by prominent figures in the Third Reich during the final days of the Nazi regime.

Gary Snyder (b. 1930), pp. 1816–19
Gary Snyder was born in San Francisco and raised on a farm near Seattle. He was educated at Reed College. In the early 1950s, he worked as a logger, forest-fire lookout, trail-crew worker, carpenter, proofreader, seaman, and teacher. He subsequently studied Asian languages at the University of California at Berkeley, where he was a member of the Beat movement, and spent a dozen years in Japan, where he studied Zen Buddhism. Upon his return to the United States, he settled in a remote community in the Sierra Nevadas. He taught at the University of California at Davis from 1986 until his retirement, in 2002. Influenced by "five-and-seven-character line Chinese poems . . . which work like sharp blows on the mind," he arranges "tough, simple, short words" into abbreviated lines. He has translated from ancient and modern Japanese and wrote a memoir in the Japanese form of a poetry-and-prose travel journal.

Gary Soto (b. 1952), pp. 1996–97
Gary Soto was born in Fresno, California. He has worked as a field hand and in a tire factory, and he often writes about working-class Mexican Americans. Educated at California State University, Fresno (where he studied with Philip Levine), and the University of California at Irvine (from which he earned an M.F.A.), he taught at San Diego State University and the University of Cincinnati before settling at the University of California at Berkeley from 1979 to 1996. In addition to poetry, he has published a memoir, books for children, and a collection of essays on poetry, and he has edited a book of recollections and stories about California.

Robert Southwell (ca. 1561–1595), pp. 223–24
Robert Southwell was born in Harsham, Norwich, England, to a Roman Catholic family, and was educated at the Jesuit School in Douai, France, accepted for the Jesuit novitiate in Rome, and ordained in 1585. Despite the law of 1584 forbidding English-born subjects who had taken Catholic orders since the queen's accession to remain in England longer than forty days, on pain of death, Southwell returned to England to minister to Catholics in 1586. In 1589, he became chaplain to Ann Howard, countess of Arundel, whose husband had been imprisoned, and to whom Southwell addressed his Epistle of Comfort. In 1592, Southwell was arrested while saying Mass, tortured, imprisoned in the Tower, and finally executed. He was beatified as a martyr in 1929 and canonized in 1970. He wrote religious prose and verse in both Latin and English. His narrative poem, "St. Peter's Complaint," and his best-known lyric, "The Burning Babe," were both published in 1595. The latter is an unusually fine example of a poem in "fourteeners," or fourteen-syllable lines, a form that Sir Philip Sidney had parodied in "What Length of Verse?" Southwell's work became popular soon after his death, and Ben Jonson told a friend that he would willingly have destroyed many of his own poems if he could have written "The Burning Babe."

Wole Soyinka (b. 1934), pp. 1862–63
Wole Soyinka was born in Ijebut Isara, Nigeria, and spent his early years in Abeokuta. Educated at University College, Ibadan, and Leeds University, he has taught at the Universities of Lagos, Ibadan, and Ife, and lectured all over the world. In the late 1950s, he worked as a reporter for the BBC. From August 1967 to October 1969, he was imprisoned as a political prisoner by the Federal Military Government of Nigeria. An exceptionally prolific writer, Soyinka has published poetry, novels, autobiography, critical essays, an anthology of African poetry, and numerous plays for radio, television, and the stage. He was founding director of Masks Theatre, the Orison Theatre, and the Guerrilla Theatre Unit of the University of Ife. He was awarded the 1986 Nobel Prize for Literature.

Stephen Spender (1909–1995), pp. 1505–07
Stephen Spender was born in London and attended University College, Oxford, where he became friends with the writers W. H. Auden, Christopher Isherwood, and Louis MacNeice, with whom he shared an interest in left-wing politics. In 1937, he joined the British Communist Party and traveled to Spain to write propaganda for the Spanish Republicans' fight against Fascism, but soon grew to feel that Communism was intolerant of individual vision and freedom of expression. In the 1930s, he, Auden, MacNeice, and Cecil Day Lewis were dubbed by critics the "Pylon" school, after Spender's poem "The Pylons," for their conspicuous use of industrial imagery. During World War II, he served with the Fire Service and in the Foreign Office. From 1945 to 1947, he was literary counselor to UNESCO, and for the next twenty-five years he traveled and lectured in the United States. He was coeditor of the journals Horizon and Encounter. In addition to writing his own poetry, he translated from Spanish, German, and Greek. He was knighted in 1983.

Edmund Spenser (1552–1599), pp. 159–205
Edmund Spenser was born in London, to a family of modest circumstances, and educated at the Merchant Taylors' School. After studying as a "poor scholar" at Cambridge, Spenser served as secretary to several prominent men, including the powerful earl of Leicester, uncle of Spenser's friend Sir Philip Sidney. In 1580, he was appointed secretary to the lord governor of Ireland, whose job it was to defend the English settlement there against the Irish "rebels" who objected to English rule of their land. Spenser remained in Ireland, as civil servant, settler, and landholder, for the rest of his life, and in 1596 wrote A View of the Present State of Ireland, a political treatise detailing his views on the "Irish problem." He wanted nothing less than to be the national poet of England, and he consciously modeled his career on that of Virgil, the great poet of imperial Rome. Like Virgil, Spenser initially wrote in the mode of pastoral, publishing in 1591 his Shepheardes Calender. Chaucer was another of Spenser's main sources of inspiration, as were Italian writers such as Ludovico Ariosto and Torquato Tasso. Ariosto's Orlando Furioso (1516) provided, in its blending of epic and romance narrative structures, a particularly important model for Spenser's The Faerie Queene. That poem's first three books, published in 1590, were well received, and in 1596 Spenser republished the poem with three additional completed books and a portion of a seventh. He thus completed only a little over half of the poem he described, in a prefatory letter to Walter Ralegh, as designed to fashion a gentleman by illustrating twelve moral virtues in twelve books. He received a modest royal pension after the first three books of The Faerie Queene were published, but he never received a post at court nor the royal recognition he had hoped for. His disappointed expectations and his belief that the queen was mismanaging affairs in Ireland may have contributed to the sometimes critical ways in which he represented her in The Faerie Queene. Elizabeth was the name not only of the queen whom he "shadowed," but also of his wife; she is figured in his sonnet sequence Amoretti and also in his two marriage poems, Epithalamion and Prothalamion.

Gertrude Stein (1874–1946), pp. 1248–50
Gertrude Stein was born in Allegheny, Pennsylvania, and raised in Oakland, California. She was educated at Radcliffe College, where she studied with the psychologist and philosopher William James (whose theories about consciousness influenced her deeply) and at Johns Hopkins University, where she studied medicine. In 1902, she and her brother, Leo, moved to Paris and established a salon that attracted the most prominent avant-garde artists of the day, including Pablo Picasso, Georges Braque, and Henri Matisse. In 1907, she began a relationship with Alice B. Toklas (which led to Stein's wryly titled and popular Autobiography of Alice B. Toklas), and, apart from Stein's very successful lecture tour of the United States in 1934, they resided permanently in France. Stein's work—in prose, poetry, drama, and autobiography—was highly experimental (she was called "the Mama of Dada"). Her reputation as a stylist and arbiter of taste, great in her day, has continued to grow.

Wallace Stevens (1879–1955), pp. 1256–69
Wallace Stevens was born and raised in Reading, Pennsylvania. After attending Harvard University for three years, Stevens moved to New York City, where he went to law school, worked in a number of law firms, and associated with prominent artists, including the poets William Carlos Williams and Marianne Moore. In 1916, he went to work for the Hartford Accident and Indemnity Company, and he stayed with the firm for the rest of his life, having become a vice president in 1934. His quiet life, in an upper-class neighborhood in Hartford, Connecticut, seemed in sharp contrast with the cosmopolitanism and vitality of his poems. Both sensuous and philosophical, Stevens's work continues to be hugely influential. His first book, Harmonium (1923), is considered one of the major debuts in American poetry. His work of the 1930s and after, plainer in diction and more abstract, included the long poem "Notes toward a Supreme Fiction." Poetry was the supreme fiction, as he also wrote in his important prose work The Necessary Angel (1951).

Anne Stevenson (b. 1933), pp. 1847–49
Anne Stevenson was born in Cambridge, England, to American parents, and raised in the United States, primarily in Cambridge, Massachusetts, and New Haven, Connecticut. She was educated at the University of Michigan, where she studied with the poet Donald Hall. In the early 1950s, she worked as a schoolteacher, and in 1956 settled in England, where she taught at a number of institutions and held several fellowships. She was the founder of the Poetry Bookshop at Hay-on-Wye, Wales. Her publications include a study of Elizabeth Bishop, a biography of Sylvia Plath, and several radio plays. Her best-known collection, Correspondences, is a sequence of epistolary poems interspersed with journal entries recounting her family history.

Trumbull Stickney (1874–1904), pp. 1250–52
Trumbull Stickney was born in Geneva, Switzerland, and spent his early years abroad. He was educated by his father, a Classics scholar, until he entered Harvard University, and he later became the first American to earn a Ph.D. at the Sorbonne. He taught Greek at Harvard University for one year, then died suddenly, of a brain tumor. Although during his lifetime he published only one book, Dramatic Verses (1902), he left much work in manuscript, and the poet William Vaughn Moody, a friend of Stickney from Harvard, helped assemble a posthumous collection.

Mark Strand (b. 1934), pp. 1863–65
Mark Strand was born on Prince Edward Island, Canada, and raised in various cities across the United States. He was educated at Antioch College, Yale University, the University of Florence, and the University of Iowa, where he studied with the poet Donald Justice. Strand has taught at the University of Utah, Johns Hopkins University, and the University of Chicago, and has served as the poetry editor of The New Republic. A noted anthologist, a translator of several European and Latin American poets, he also has written short stories, books for children, and art criticism, including a study of Edward Hopper. He is also a painter. Among many notable collections is his book-length poem Dark Harbor (1993), which obliquely recounts a journey of the mind through memory and into the afterlife. In 1990–91, he was poet laureate of the United States.

Sir John Suckling (1609–1642), pp. 452–58
John Suckling was born into an old Norfolk, England, family, through which he inherited great estates. Educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, he traveled in Holland and was knighted on his return in 1630. He was part of the 1631 embassy to Germany, returning the next year to court and a life of dissipation. In 1639, he fought on the (losing) Royalist side against the Scots, and in 1641 levied a force to free the imprisoned earl of Strafford. The conspiracy, named the "Army Plot," was uncovered, and Suckling fled to France, where he might have committed suicide by drinking poison. Like other "Cavalier" poets who supported the cause of Charles Stuart, Suckling embodied the courtly quality of sprezzatura, in which the most highly refined and polished style is disguised as effortless effusion. His literary reputation was established by 1637, when his satirical mock-ballad The Wits (or Sessions of the Poets) was sung before King Charles I. The next year, his tragedy Aglaura proved a theatrical success. Poems such as "Song" ("Why so pale and wan, fond lover?") and "A Ballad upon a Wedding" are collected in Fragmenta Aurea (1646).

May Swenson (1913–1989), pp. 1540–43
May Swenson was born in Logan, Utah, to a Mormon family. After graduation from Utah State University, she moved to New York and worked with the Writers' Project of the Works Progress Administration. From 1956 until 1966, she was an editor at New Directions Press. In addition, she was a visiting professor at many colleges and universities. She translated from the Swedish, most notably the poems of Tomas Tranströmer. Her high-spirited poetry, like that of her friend Elizabeth Bishop, is marked by a keen interest in the natural world.

Jonathan Swift (1667–1745), pp. 568–89
Jonathan Swift was born in Dublin, Ireland, to English parents, but after his mother's return to England he lived in the care of his uncle. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin. From 1689 until 1699, he was secretary to his kinsman Sir William Temple and tutor to "Stella," Ester Johnson (daughter of the companion to Temple's sister), to whom "Stella's Birthday" is addressed, and for whom Swift developed a lasting passion. Swift frequented London, where he became active in Tory politics and met the leading literary figures of the day. In 1694, he returned to Ireland to join the clergy, and he later served in several parishes and was appointed dean of St. Patrick's Cathedral in 1713. Despite his staunch conservatism, he became an ardent champion of Irish resistance to English oppression. Best-known for Gulliver's Travels (1726), the only piece of writing for which he was paid, he was a prolific author of poetry, prose, pamphlets, letters, dialogues, and satires.

Algernon Charles Swinburne (1837–1909), pp. 1146–52
Algernon Charles Swinburne was born in London and attended Balliol College, Oxford, where he became a friend of the poet and Pre-Raphaelite painter Dante Gabriel Rossetti, the painter and designer Edward Burne-Jones, and the designer and poet William Morris. Swinburne introduced the phrase art for art's sake into the English aesthetic lexicon in an 1862 review of the French poet Charles Baudelaire's

Les Fleurs du Mal. He became an adherent of Baudelaire's aesthetic, until, in 1867, he met Giuseppe Mazzini, whose fervor for Italian independence from Austrian rule caused Swinburne to repudiate art for art's sake and turn to politically motivated poetry. He wrote prolifically, and his work, which characteristically explores the relationship between pleasure and pain, love and death, shows the influence of sources as diverse as the Marquis de Sade, the Bible, Greek drama, and the Border Ballads.

Allen Tate (1899–1979), pp. 1417–21
Allen Tate was born in Winchester, Kentucky. He was educated at Vanderbilt University, where he roomed with the poet Robert Penn Warren and was affiliated with the Fugitive movement. Along with Warren, and Vanderbilt professors John Crowe Ransom and Donald Davidson, Tate later joined the Agrarians, who called for an agriculturally based Southern economy and championed traditional Southern values. In 1924, he moved to New York to embark on a literary career; the poet Hart Crane lived in his household for a time. In 1928–29, Tate lived in England and France, and spent time with fiction writers Ford Madox Ford, Ernest Hemingway, and F. Scott Fitzgerald. He later taught at, among other schools, Princeton University, New York University, and the University of Minnesota. In addition to poetry, he published biographies, a novel, and several collections of criticism.

Edward Taylor (ca. 1642–1729), pp. 536–40
Edward Taylor was born in Leicestershire, England, but migrated to Massachusetts in 1668. After graduation from Harvard University in 1671, he served as the minister of Westfield, Massachusetts, then a frontier town. Taylor published some poems in his lifetime, but most of his writings remained in manuscript when he died; the poems were preserved by Ezra Stiles, Taylor's grandson and the president of Yale. Only in 1937 was a selection of Taylor's poems published, with a more complete edition following in 1960. A Puritan who believed in salvation by grace alone, Taylor adhered to tradition (specifically, the Old New England Way) in matters of church practice. In addition to occasional pieces, he composed Preparatory Meditations, whose starting points are images from biblical texts, and the series God's Determinations Touching His Elect; and the Elect's Combat in Their Conversion, and Coming up to God in Christ: Together with the Comfortable Effects Thereof.

Alfred, Lord Tennyson (1809–1892), pp. 982–1009
Alfred, Lord Tennyson was born in Somersby, England. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he met Arthur Henry Hallam, whom he later immortalized in In Memoriam (1850). Tennyson began to write when a child, largely to escape the oppressiveness of his home life, made miserable by his father's drinking and violence. He published some of his best-known poems, such as "Mariana" and "The Kraken," when he was only twenty; in "Mariana," he displays his early, and enduring, gift for using objects and landscapes to convey states of mind and particular emotions. Between 1833, the date of Hallam's death, and 1843, when Tennyson received an annual government pension to support his writing, he was especially hard-hit by the melancholia that would plague him all his life and so dominate his poetry. In the wake of Hallam's death, his work assumed a decidedly darker note. He expressed his grief abstrusely in poems such as "Ulysses" and "Break, Break, Break" and directly in In Memoriam, a series of 131 quatrain stanzas, which Tennyson began within days of Hallam's death and continued to write over a period of seventeen years. With the publication of this great elegy, he finally attained the public recognition long denied him and earned sufficient money to marry Emily Sellwood after a ten-year on-again, off-again courtship. In 1850, he succeeded William Wordsworth as poet laureate, and nine years later published the first four (of an eventual twelve) parts of Idylls of the King, a project that had occupied him for nearly fifty years.

Dylan Thomas (1914–1953), pp. 1566–73
Dylan Thomas was born in the Welsh seaport of Swansea. Ignoring his father's advice to attend university, he left school in 1931 to embark on a literary career. After working at the local newspaper, he headed for London in 1934. His first volume, 18 Poems, appeared that year. He worked as a broadcaster, prose writer, poet, and lecturer, and this varied career necessitated his traveling through the United Kingdom, Europe, and the United States. He died in New York City during a reading tour, his excessive drinking and generally riotous lifestyle hastening his early death but also responsible, in part, for the burning intensity of his poems, whose exuberant rhetoric sometimes masks his careful crafting. His most famous work, Under Milk Wood, was recorded in New York before his death and rerecorded a year later in Britain by Richard Burton. Greatly admired and imitated, Thomas's work was also greatly despised. The New Apocalypse writers took him as a model; the Movement writers, including Philip Larkin, were said to have formed in reaction to the excesses, personal and poetic, of Dylan Thomas and his admirers.

Edward Thomas (1878–1917), pp. 1253–56
Edward Thomas was born in the London suburb of Lambeth and educated at Lincoln College, Oxford. His arduous biographical, critical, and review work often left him drained and depressed, but he was forced to be prolific in order to support a growing family. He began to write poetry in 1914 with the encouragement of the poet Robert Frost, whom he greatly admired. After joining the army in 1915, he was killed in battle at Arras on Easter Monday 1917. Thomas's Poems (1917) was published under his pseudonym, Edward Eastaway. It was followed by Last Poems (1918) and Collected Poems (1920), which appeared in his own name. His wife, Helen, published two evocative memoirs of their life together.

R. S. Thomas (1913–2000), pp. 1544–46
R(obert) S(tuart) Thomas was born in Cardiff, Wales, and raised in Anglesey. He studied Classics at the University College of North Wales, Bangor, and theology at St. Michael's Theological College, in Llandaff. Ordained in the Anglican Church, he served at Chirk, Denbighshire, and a number of rural parishes before retiring from the Church in 1978. He learned to speak Welsh in college to communicate with his parishioners and to gain a deeper understanding of Welsh culture. Throughout a long life, he published a new volume of poetry every two or three years and edited anthologies such as The Penguin Book of Religious Verse. He was awarded the Queen's Gold Medal for Poetry in 1964.

James Thomson (1700–1748), pp. 649–51
James Thomson was born in Ednam Manse, Kelso, Scotland, and educated at Jedburgh School and Edinburgh University, preparing for the ministry. After abandoning his studies, he tried to make a living as a writer in London, where he became friendly with the leading writers of the day, including John Arbuthnot, Thomas Gay, and Alexander Pope. "Winter," a short, blank-verse poem, appeared in 1726, and "Summer" and "Spring" in 1727 and 1728, respectively. The Seasons, which collected all three with "Autumn," was published in 1730. In 1731, Thomson accompanied Charles Talbot, son of the solicitor-general, on the Grand Tour, which provided the inspiration for his patriotic poem Liberty (1735–36), dedicated to the prince of Wales, who awarded him a pension. Further patronage came through the poem Britannia (1729), together with sinecures such as the surveyor-generalship of the Leeward Islands. Thomson's Alfred, a Masque (1740) includes the famous song "Rule Britannia," also attributed to his friend David Mallet. His Seasons was one of the most popular and influential poems of the century, heralding the shift of poetic attention from humanity (the center of the Augustan universe) to nature, and ushering in the period of topographical poetry and the "cult of the picturesque."

Henry David Thoreau (1817–1862), pp. 1045–46
Henry David Thoreau was born and lived nearly all his life in Concord, Massachusetts. He was educated at Harvard University, where the poet Jones Very was his tutor. After graduation, he worked briefly as a schoolteacher. He lived in the household of Ralph Waldo Emerson, his chief literary champion, for a time and became active in Emerson's Transcendentalist club. From 1845 until 1847, Thoreau lived in a wooden hut at Walden Pond, an experience he documented in the celebrated prose work Walden (1854). A rugged individualist and observer of nature, he regarded moral law more highly than civil law, as demonstrated in his refusal to pay poll and church taxes and in his early support for the as yet unpopular abolition movement. His most famous essay, "Resistance to Civil Government" (known posthumously as "Civil Disobedience"), was like several other works published anonymously, and his full-length book Cape Cod was not published in its entirety until after his death. Most of his poetry was written before 1840, but it achieved prominence in The Atlantic Monthly and elsewhere in the years immediately following his death. He is especially prized today for his environmentalist approach to nature.

Chidiock Tichborne (d. 1586), p. 151
The Tichbornes were an old, probably pre-Conquest family of Hampshire, England, and were pious Catholics. Chidiock Tichborne was interrogated on several occasions on suspicion of "popish practices" (i.e., attending Mass) and in 1586 was involved in a plot led by Anthony Babington against the life of Queen Elizabeth I. Tichborne was arrested and sentenced to be hanged and disemboweled. Imprisoned in the Tower of London, he is said to have written his "Elegy" on the eve of his execution. Tichborne's speech from the scaffold and his poem of farewell became widely known in the Elizabethan and Jacobean periods.

Charles Tomlinson (b. 1927), pp. 1746–49
Charles Tomlinson was born in Stoke-on-Trent, England, and educated at Queens' College, Cambridge, where he studied with the poet Donald Davie, and the University of London. He taught at a London school for a number of years and worked as a private secretary in Italy before joining the faculty of the University of Bristol in 1957. He has also taught at various institutions in the United States. From the start, Tomlinson identified more strongly with the American poetic and artistic tradition (he is also an accomplished artist) than with the British. Some Americans (1981) offers a vivid personal record of his debt to American modernism and of his efforts to unite its discoveries with English traditions. The translator (with the late Henry Gifford) of Versions from Fyodor Tyutchev (1960) and Castilian Ilexes: Versions from Antonio Machado (1963), Tomlinson has edited The Oxford Book of Verse in English Translation.

Jean Toomer (1894–1967), pp. 1398–1400
Jean Toomer was born in Washington, D.C. He was raised by his mother and maternal grandfather, P. B. S. Pinchback, who had served as acting governor of Louisiana during Reconstruction. Toomer attended several colleges, but never received a degree. He spent much of his early adulthood in New York City; his work was both influenced by and influential on the Harlem Renaissance. In 1921, he taught in Sparta, Georgia, where he gathered material for Cane (1923), a mosaic of poetry, prose, and drama on black themes, and the work on which his reputation stands. In his later years, Toomer wrote extensively on religion and philosophy—he had studied the work of the Russian mystic Gurdjieff and had become a Quaker—but was unable to find a publisher for his work. He also left unpublished fiction, plays, and an autobiography.

Thomas Traherne (1637–1674), pp. 531–36
Thomas Traherne was the son of a Hereford, England, shoemaker and his wife—who, it is thought, died when Thomas and his brother were young, leaving them to be brought up by Philip Traherne, a wealthy innkeeper who was twice mayor of the city. Thomas was educated at Brasenose College, Oxford, and became rector of Credenhill, Herefordshire, in 1657. He was ordained in 1660, the year before taking his M.A. In 1669, he was made B.D., probably in recognition of his Roman Forgeries (which exposed ecclesiastical forgery of documents), and appointed chaplain to Sir Orlando Bridgeman, lord keeper of the Great Seal, after which he lived in London. His Christian Ethics appeared a year after his death, but his poems and prose meditations remained unknown until the early twentieth century, when manuscript volumes began to be discovered and published. His Centuries of Meditation was probably written during his time at Credenhill, when he was part of a religious circle led by Susanna Hopton, a High Anglican who converted for a time to Catholicism and to whom Traherne dedicated the Centuries.

Frederick Goddard Tuckerman (1821–1873), pp. 1086–87
Frederick Goddard Tuckerman was born in Boston, Massachusetts, to a distinguished New England family. He was educated at Harvard University (where the poet Jones Very was one of his tutors) and Harvard Law School. In the late 1840s, Tuckerman gave up the law to study his first loves: astronomy, botany, and poetry. He lived a retired and scholarly life at his family home in Greenfield, Massachusetts. Tuckerman's one published volume of poems was well received by the best poets of his day, including Emerson, Longfellow, and Tennyson, yet his name fell into obscurity until the twentieth century, when his work was rediscovered by the poet Witter Bynner. Among the poems not published during Tuckerman's lifetime are three sonnet sequences.

John Updike (b. 1932), pp. 1846–47
John Updike was born in Reading, Pennsylvania, and raised in nearby Shillington. He was educated at Harvard University and studied drawing at the Ruskin School of Drawing and Fine Arts, in Oxford, England. Upon his return to the United States, he joined the staff of The New Yorker, where he continues to publish fiction and reviews. In 1957, he and his family moved from New York City to Ipswich, Massachusetts, where he concentrated wholly on writing. One of the most versatile, prolific, and highly acclaimed contemporary American writers, Updike has published many novels (most notably his series about the character Harry "Rabbit" Angstrom), short stories, plays, poems, essays, and reviews of both literature and art.

Mona Van Duyn (b. 1921), pp. 1629–32
Mona Van Duyn was born in Waterloo, Iowa. She was educated at the University of Northern Iowa and the University of Iowa at Iowa City. She has taught at, among other schools, the University of Iowa, the University of Louisville, and Washington University. From 1974 to 1978, Van Duyn and her husband, Jarvis Thurston, edited Perspective: A Quarterly of Literature. Generally writing about ordinary people and the realities of their lives, she also finds inspiration in current events, literature, and philosophy. She was poet laureate of the United States in 1992–93.

Henry Vaughan (1621–1695), pp. 490–98
Henry Vaughan was born in Newton-upon-Usk, Breconshire, the son of a Welsh gentleman and his wife, and the twin of Thomas, who became a natural physician, or alchemist. Henry attended Jesus College, Oxford, and went on to London to study law, but was deflected by the civil war. He may have fought for the Royalists before returning to Breconshire, where he seems to have taken up medicine, perhaps in the 1640s. A poem in his first collection (1646), "Upon the Priory Grove," records his courtship of Catherine Wise, whom he was to marry and whose younger sister, Elizabeth, became his second wife. The collection is almost entirely secular, as was his second, Olor Iscanus (1651), but his third, Silex Scintillans (1655), and his subsequent work, is of religious and devotional nature. An interest in Hermeticism appears in several poems, which allude to theories found in his brother's treatises on the subject. Vaughan acknowledged George Herbert as a significant influence, writing that Herbert's "holy life and verse gained many pious Converts (of whom I am the least)."

Jones Very (1813–1880), pp. 1044–45
Jones Very was born in Salem, Massachusetts. He was educated at Harvard College, then became a tutor in Greek while he pursued a degree at the Divinity School. In 1838, after a conversion experience, Very repudiated Unitarianism for a rigorous mysticism and felt compelled to surrender himself completely to the will of God. Remanded to an asylum for evaluation at the request of his colleagues, he was declared sane and released, after which he retired to his parental home, in Salem, where he lived a scholarly and reclusive life. In the eighteen months following his release, Very wrote some three hundred poems, including a mystical sonnet sequence. His one published collection, Essays and Poems (1839), was edited by Ralph Waldo Emerson. Very's work fell into obscurity until the twentieth century, when it was rediscovered by the poet and critic Yvor Winters.

Derek Walcott (b. 1930), pp. 1820–29
Derek Walcott was born on the island of St. Lucia, in the British West Indies, and educated there at St. Mary's College and at the University of the West Indies, in Jamaica. He then moved to Trinidad, where he has worked as a book reviewer, an art critic, a playwright, and the artistic director of a theater workshop. He has also been poet-in-residence at a number of American colleges and universities and has received a MacArthur Award. At once flamboyant and disciplined, poems such as his wittily titled A Far Cry from Africa proclaim his divided roots, as a black poet writing from within both the English literary tradition and the history of a subject people. He has since proved the truth of Yeats's statement that "out of the quarrel with ourselves we make poetry." Isolation is Walcott's theme; and as with Yeats, the writing and producing of plays has increased the emotional and dramatic range of his poetry. The movement of Another Life (1973) and Midsummer (1984) is freer, more flexible than that of earlier work, but Walcott's language still has the accuracy and energy that proclaim him—more than any of his American contemporaries—the natural heir of his friend Robert Lowell. In 1992, following the publication of his verse epic Omeros, which transposes elements of Homeric epic from the Aegean to the Caribbean, Walcott was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature.

Margaret Walker (1915–1998), pp. 1576–77
Margaret Walker was born in Birmingham, Alabama. She received her B.A. from Northwestern University and M.A. and Ph.D. from the University of Iowa. From 1936 until 1939, she was employed by the Writer's Project of the Works Progress Administration in Iowa, where she struck up a mutually beneficial association with her coworker the novelist and, later, poet Richard Wright. She subsequently worked as a social worker, reporter, and magazine editor and taught at Livingston College, West Virginia State College, and Jackson State College (now University). In addition to poetry, she published a biography of Wright and a collection of autobiographical essays. Her poems, set in a Southern landscape, sometimes call upon African Americans to take action against oppressive social conditions.

Edmund Waller (1606–1687), pp. 393–94
Edmund Waller was the eldest son of a wealthy landowner in Hertfordshire, England, and his wife. Educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, he became a Member of Parliament at age sixteen and swiftly gained a reputation as a brilliant orator. In his thirties, he courted Dorothy Sidney, granddaughter of Robert Sidney and grandniece of Philip and Mary Sidney; he addressed her under the poetic name "Saccharissa" (Sweetness). After participating in the philosophical circle around Lucius Cary at Great Tew, Oxfordshire, he changed his political stance from Parliamentarian to Royalist. His part in a plot to secure London for the king was discovered in 1643, but he avoided execution by a confession and an eloquent plea for clemency. Exiled, he traveled in France, Italy, and Switzerland with his friend John Evelyn until 1651, when he was allowed to return to England; although he wrote in praise of Oliver Cromwell, he regained a place in Parliament after the Restoration and advocated religious toleration. Waller's first known poem, commemorating Prince Charles's escape from shipwreck (ca. 1625), is an early example of the use of heroic couplets in English. His Instructions to a Painter appeared in 1666. John Dryden was among his admirers, praising the "sweetness" of Waller's style.

Robert Penn Warren (1905–1989), pp. 1456–60
Robert Penn Warren was born in Guthrie, Kentucky. He was educated at Vanderbilt University, the University of California at Berkeley, Yale University, and Oxford University. At Vanderbilt, Warren associated with the Fugitives, a literary group whose members included professors John Crowe Ransom and Donald Davidson and fellow student Allen Tate. He later became a member of the Agrarian movement. Warren taught at, among other schools, Vanderbilt; Louisiana State University, where with Cleanth Brooks he cofounded the influential Southern Review; the University of Minnesota; and Yale.

In addition to poetry, he wrote Brother to Dragons (1953), a verse drama; fiction (his novel All the King's Men won the Pulitzer Prize in 1946); and criticism. A textbook he cowrote with Cleanth Brooks, Understanding Poetry, influenced generations of students. In 1986, he was named the first poet laureate of the United States.

Isaac Watts (1674–1748), pp. 589–94
Isaac Watts was born in Southampton, England, and educated in the city's grammar school and the Nonconformist academy at Stoke Newington. His father was a clothier who later became a Nonconformist schoolmaster. Watts became minister of Mark Lane Chapel, London, in 1702; when overwork led to illness in 1712, he moved into the household of Sir Thomas and Lady Abney, where he remained the rest of his life. Although he wrote theological and educational works, Pindaric odes, blank verse, and experimental poems such as "The Day of Judgment," which is in English Sapphics, he is chiefly remembered for his Divine Songs for Children (1715) and four collections of hymns. The volume The Psalms of David Imitated in the Language of the New Testament (1719) contains some of the most famous hymns in English. Watts wanted his poems to "elevate" readers "to the most delightful and divine Sensations" and to provide models of appropriate Christian responses to trial and difficulty.

Charles Wesley (1707–1788), pp. 652–55
Charles Wesley was born at Epworth Rectory, Lincolnshire, England. Like his older brother John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, he was educated at Christ Church, Oxford. Ordained in the Anglican Church, he accompanied John to Georgia in 1735 to act as secretary to James Edward Oglethorpe, governor of the colony, but returned to England the following year. When the established Church charged him with "irregularity," he became an itinerant minister. For seventeen years, he traveled the countryside, preaching and helping groups of believers to found churches. He retired in 1756 due to poor health and lived out his last years in Bath and London. An accomplished poet who wrote on a variety of subjects—including love, marriage, and family life—he is best-known as an extraordinarily prolific hymn writer, publishing some sixty-five hundred hymns in his lifetime, many of which remain popular today.

Phillis Wheatley (ca. 1753–1784), pp. 719–23
Phillis Wheatley was born in Africa, sold into slavery, and in 1761 shipped to the slave market in Boston. She was bought by John Wheatley, a prosperous tailor, for his wife, Susannah. The family gave Wheatley a good education and encouraged her writing talent, and she published a poem in a Boston newspaper in 1767. In 1773, they sent her to London with their son, in the hope of strengthening her frail constitution. She published a collection of poems during her stay, but returned after a few months when her mistress fell ill. Freed on her return, she married John Peters, a free black man, in 1778; after bearing and burying three children, she died in poverty and obscurity. Influenced by John Milton and Alexander Pope, she characteristically wrote in rhymed iambic-pentameter couplets or the ballad form, often using highly artificial diction. Like other Puritan colonial writers, however, she employed an emotionally restrained, highly accessible, "plain" style for poems on religious subjects.

Walt Whitman (1819–1892), pp. 1060–86
Walt Whitman was born on Long Island, New York, and raised in Brooklyn. He left school at age eleven and worked as an office boy, a printer's apprentice, and a teacher before establishing himself as a journalist affiliated with several prominent New York newspapers. In 1862, moved by the scenes he witnessed while staying with his brother (a wounded Union soldier) in Washington, D.C., he spent several months visiting and nursing Civil War veterans. This work found its way into his 1865 poetry volume, Drum-Taps. After the war, Whitman worked briefly at the Department of the Interior—he was fired for being the author of the "scandalous" Leaves of Grass (1855)—and for several years at the office of the attorney general. After suffering a debilitating stroke in 1873, he moved to his brother's home in Camden, New Jersey, where he remained until his death. In Leaves of Grass, the masterpiece that he revised for several decades, Whitman assumed the mantle of the public poet; his preface to the 1855 edition calls "the United States themselves" his subject. Poetry that celebrated the body and sexuality, however, opened him up to charges of obscenity. His prosody proved as controversial and ultimately as influential as his subject matter. He is usually considered, along with Emily Dickinson, the most important of nineteenth-century American poets.

Isabella Whitney (fl. 1567–1573), pp. 146–50
Isabella Whitney was born into a middle-class, Reformist family and apparently had two brothers (one of whom published a collection of poetry) and several sisters. Almost nothing is known of her personal life, although it is thought that by 1600 she had married and begun raising two children. Of the three books of poetry published by English women during the sixteenth century, two are hers. Copy of a Letter Lately Written in Meter, by a Young Gentlewoman: to Her Unconstant Lover. With an Admonition to All Young Gentlewomen, and to

All Other Maids in General to Beware of Men's Flattery (1567) contains both the letter described and the gentleman's reply; A Sweet Nosegay or Pleasant Posy, Containing a Hundred and Ten Philosophical Flowers (1573) was the first book of poems ever published by an Englishwoman. The "flowers," which render folk and Christian wisdom in ballad-stanza form, have not yet been republished in their entirety.

John Greenleaf Whittier (1807–1892), pp. 957–60
John Greenleaf Whittier was born into a Quaker family on a farm near Haverhill, Massachusetts. Except for a year's study at Haverhill Academy, he received little formal education. With the help of literary-minded friends, Whittier found a number of jobs with small newspapers. In the 1830s, he became an early, ardent abolitionist; in the late 1860s, following the Civil War, he turned his full attention to writing, often on behalf of the causes he espoused. Fame came in 1866 with the publication of Snow-Bound, a recollective idyll on his childhood. Several of his religious poems were set to music and became popular hymns, but his reputation rests on the poems that capture the essence of preindustrial life in the villages of New England.

Richard Wilbur (b. 1921), pp. 1632–41
Richard Wilbur was born in New York City and educated at Amherst College and Harvard University. He enlisted in the army in 1942 and served as a cryptographer. His first volume of poems, The Beautiful Changes, was published in 1947; since that early success, he has become known as one of America's major formalist poets. An acclaimed writer for children and literary essayist, he is also a translator, and his rhymed versions of Molière, in particular, have won him international esteem. He was poet laureate of the United States in 1987–88 and has taught at many institutions, including Harvard, Wellesley College, Wesleyan University, and Smith College. He lives in western Massachusetts and in Key West, Florida.

C. K. Williams (b. 1936), pp. 1869–72
C(harles) K(enneth) Williams was born in Newark, New Jersey. He was educated at Bucknell College and the University of Pennsylvania. He established a poetry-therapy program for emotionally disturbed adolescents, served as a contributing editor to American Poetry Review, and ghostwrote articles on psychiatry and architecture, before beginning an academic career. Having taught at a number of colleges and universities, he now teaches at Princeton University and lives part of each year in Paris. In addition to poetry, he has published translations, including Sophocles' Women of Trachis and Euripides' The Bacchae. Williams writes almost exclusively in long and discursive lines and has a particular facility for depicting dramatic situations.

William Carlos Williams (1883–1963), pp. 1272–83
William Carlos Williams was born in Rutherford, New Jersey. In 1906, he earned an M.D. from the University of Pennsylvania, where he met the poets Ezra Pound and H. D. In 1910, he opened a pediatrics practice in Rutherford, where, except for a year's "sabbatical" in Europe, he lived and practiced medicine for the rest of his life. Although strongly established in Rutherford, Williams was hardly provincial. He moved in New York's avant-garde circles—along with the poets Marianne Moore and Wallace Stevens—and was affiliated with several short-lived but influential journals. In addition to poetry, he wrote fiction, drama, and essays. Williams was an early proponent of Imagism, a movement he valued for its stripping away of conventions. Later, he declared himself an Objectivist. Williams called on his contemporaries to create a distinctly American art, firmly rooted in particulars: "No ideas but in things," he insisted. His epic, Paterson (1946–58), is a five-volume poem that recounts the history of Rutherford and nearby Paterson and transforms it into the locus of modern humanity.

Greg Williamson (b. 1964), pp. 2023–25
Greg Williamson was born in Columbia, Ohio, and raised in Nashville, Tennessee. He holds degrees from Vanderbilt University and the University of Wisconsin at Madison, as well as from Johns Hopkins University, where he now teaches in the Writing Seminars. The author of two volumes of poetry, he is an ingenious inventor of forms, most notably of the "double exposure."

John Wilmot, Earl of Rochester (1647–1680), pp. 549–53
John Wilmot was born at Ditchley, Oxfordshire, England, to a Cavalier hero and a devout Puritanical mother. After attending Wadham College, Oxford, he toured Europe, returning in 1664. He quickly became a favorite of King Charles II and a leading member of the court "wits." At age eighteen, he abducted the heiress Elizabeth Malet and was consequently imprisoned in the Tower of London. He married her eighteen months later, having regained his position by serving courageously in the second Dutch War (1665). His time was then divided between family life in the country and life in London with a number of mistresses, including Elizabeth Barry, a popular actress. According to Samuel Johnson, Rochester "blazed out his youth and health in lavish voluptuousness" (he claimed that he went five years without being sober); and by his early thirties, drink and venereal disease were exacting a price. He consulted a number of theologians, including the royal chaplain, Gilbert Burnet, who wrote a highly popular pamphlet describing Rochester's renunciation of skepticism and conversion to Christianity. A friend of many poets including John Dryden and Aphra Behn, Rochester was renowned both as a satirist and as the author of erotic, sometimes pornographic, poetry, much of which was meant to be circulated in manuscript. He also wrote dramatic prologues and epilogues, imitations and adaptations of classical authors, and dramatic poems of self-analysis both comic and grim.

Eleanor Wilner (b. 1937), pp. 1879–82
Eleanor Wilner was born in Cleveland, Ohio. She was educated at Goucher College and Johns Hopkins University, from which she received a Ph.D. A lifelong civil rights and peace activist, she worked as a newspaper reporter, as a feature writer at a radio station, and as a consultant to the Maryland State Commission on the Aging before beginning an academic career. She has taught at many institutions, including the University of Chicago, Northwestern University, and Smith College. She currently teaches at Warren Wilson College and lives in Philadelphia.

William Wordsworth (1770–1850), pp. 763–805
William Wordsworth was born in Cockermouth, Cumberland, in the north of England's Lake District, and was educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. A walking tour of Europe in his early twenties brought him into contact with the first throes of the French Revolution, whose ideals he supported until the onset of the Terror. Upon his return to England, he settled with his sister, Dorothy, in the Lake District, where, apart from some few brief travels, he remained for the rest of his life. In 1795, he met the poet Samuel Taylor Coleridge, with whom he published Lyrical Ballads (1798), one of the most important and innovative works in the history of English literature. In his later years, he grew increasingly conservative, and many former devotees accused him of apostasy, but his poetry remained both popular and influential—so influential and so formative of modern ideas about poetry that the scope of his achievement is easily overlooked. In his preface to the second edition (1800) of the Lyrical Ballads, Wordsworth attacks the poetic diction and elaborate figures of speech characteristic of eighteenth-century poetry, asserting that he had "taken as much pains to avoid it as others take to produce it," and advocating the "language really used by men." He succeeded Robert Southey as poet laureate in 1843 and completed a fully revised, six-volume edition of his work before his death.

Charles Wright (b. 1935), pp. 1865–68
Charles Wright was born in Pickwick Dam, Tennessee. After his graduation from Davidson College, he served in the Intelligence Corps of the U.S. Army, in Italy. Having further studied at the University of Iowa (under Donald Justice) and in Rome, he published his first book, Six Poems, in 1965. He has taught widely, at several institutions in Italy and at the University of California at Irvine. He now lives in Charlottesville, Virginia, where he has been on the faculty of the University of Virginia since 1983. He is known both for his erudition (Italian and East Asian literature are among the influences in his poems) and for his attachment to rural life and landscape, especially that of Appalachia.

James Wright (1927–1980), pp. 1749–51
James Wright was born and raised in Martin's Ferry, Ohio. Upon graduation from high school, he joined the army and was stationed in occupied Japan. After his military service, he attended Kenyon College, where he studied with the poet John Crowe Ransom, and the University of Washington, where he studied with the poet Theodore Roethke. He later taught at the University of Minnesota and Hunter College. Influenced by the psychologist Carl Jung, the Expressionist poet Georg Trakl, and South American Surrealists Pablo Neruda and Caesar Vallejo, he developed a style of juxtaposing disparate images and relying on the subconscious mind to intuit connections between them. He was also a poet of social concerns, often writing of the working class.

Judith Wright (1915–2000), pp. 1577–80
Judith Wright was born in Armidale, New South Wales, Australia, and was educated at the Universities of Sydney and Queensland. Active in the antiwar movement of the 1960s, she later became a conservationist, and she ascribed her interest in the environment to working the land at her family's estate at Willamumbi during World War II. Wright made her home at Mount Tambourine, Queensland, for many years, but moved to an animal preserve near Braidwood, New South Wales. She wrote prolifically in a number of genres, including poetry, criticism, fiction, and children's fiction. She was awarded the Queen's Gold Medal for Poetry in 1992, and her Collected Poems, 1942–1985 was published in 1994.

Kit Wright (b. 1944), pp. 1946–47
Kit Wright was born in Kent, England, and educated at New College, Oxford. He was a lecturer in Canada before becoming, in 1970, education officer at the Poetry Society in London, a post he held for five years. From 1977 to 1979, he was Fellow Commoner in Creative Art at Trinity College, Cambridge. His first volume of poems, The Bear Looked over the Mountain (1977) won the Geoffrey Faber Memorial Prize. His collection Hoping It Might Be So (2000) brings together poems spanning nearly thirty years. He is also a prolific writer for children and a broadcaster.

Richard Wright (1908–1960), pp. 1502–03
Richard Wright was born in Rucker's Plantation, Mississippi, the child of a sharecropper and the grandchild of slaves. He was raised by various relatives across the South before moving to Chicago, where he wrote for the Federal Writers' Project. He became a member of the Communist Party and an editor of The Daily Worker. Fame came to him on the publication of his best-selling novel, Native Son (1940). In 1942, he left the Communist Party and moved with his family to Paris, where he became active in African nationalism. Widely regarded for his novels but living in illness and poverty, he turned, in his final year, to an early love, poetry, and wrote thousands of haiku.

Mary Wroth (1587–1651?), pp. 347–53
Lady Mary Wroth was born into an aristocratic family. Her mother, Barbara Gamage, a first cousin of Sir Walter Ralegh, was praised by Ben Jonson for ensuring that her children were "well taught." Wroth's father, Robert Sidney, her uncle, Philip Sidney, and her aunt, Mary Sidney, were all poets. Her arranged marriage to Sir Robert Wroth was unhappy; after his death in 1614, she had two children by her lover and cousin, William Herbert, third earl of Pembroke and Montgomery. In 1621, she boldly published The Countess of Montgomery's Urania, addressed to her lover's wife. Like Philip Sidney's Arcadia, on which it is modeled, this long prose romance is interspersed with poems in a variety of forms and meters. Appended to the romance is a sonnet sequence, Pamphilia to Amphilanthus, similarly modeled on Sidney's sonnet sequence, Astrophil and Stella, but with a male love-object and narrated from the perspective of a woman. The Urania caused a scandal because it contained thinly veiled satire of well-known court figures, and Wroth's continuation of the work, like her pastoral verse play, Love's Victory, was not published. Ben Jonson dedicated The Alchemist to Wroth and, in a sonnet addressed to her, praised her poems for making him a "better lover, and much better poet."

Thomas Wyatt (1503–1542), pp. 126–36
Thomas Wyatt was born at Allingham Castle, Kent, England, and educated at St. John's College, Cambridge. He held various positions at court and served on diplomatic missions to France, Spain, and Italy. Although he was knighted in 1535, his position as a courtier was never secure. Imprisoned in 1534 for brawling and perhaps for sexual misconduct (he had separated from his wife), he was again imprisoned, after a quarrel with the duke of Suffolk, in 1536. Some have linked this imprisonment also with the fall of Henry VIII's second wife, Anne Boleyn. Said to have been Wyatt's mistress, Boleyn is almost certainly an allegorical referent of Wyatt's poem "Whoso List to Hunt" and perhaps of other poems. Released soon after her execution—which he witnessed through a grate from his own cell in Bell Tower of the Tower of London—Wyatt fell from royal favor again in 1541, when he was accused of treason; and in 1554, during the reign of Queen Mary, his son, Thomas Wyatt "the younger," was hanged for treason. It was probably to avoid any associations to Wyatt's son that Richard Tottel left Wyatt "the elder's" name off the title page of the famous anthology of "songs and sonnets" that he published in 1557, the last year of Mary's reign. Although Tottel praises the "weightiness of the deepwitted Sir Thomas Wyatt the Elder's verse" in the preface and includes ninety-seven of Wyatt's poems in the first edition of the anthology, the title page mentions only Wyatt's younger poetic imitator, Henry Howard, "late earl of Surrey." Tottel regularized the meter of many of Wyatt's poems and added titles to them, but most also survive in manuscript versions, some written and corrected in Wyatt's hand; they exhibit a great variety of tones, forms, and rhythms. As a translator of Petrarch, Wyatt introduced the sonnet form to English; he also enriched English literature with satiric verse epistles modeled on classical and Italian poems.

Elinor Wylie (1885–1928), pp. 1310–11
Elinor Wylie (née Hoyt) was born in Somerville, New Jersey, to a prominent family. Apart from a college preparatory course, she was educated at home, learning French, German, and drawing. A socialite who courted scandal when she left her husband and child, she lived at various times in England, New York City, and Washington, D.C., and counted the writers Dorothy Parker, Ernest Hemingway, Edmund Wilson, and Edna St. Vincent Millay among her friends. In addition, her work brought her the respect of prominent writers such as W. B. Yeats, who admired her poems, and William Faulkner, Max Beerbohm, and Aldous Huxley, who praised her fiction.

William Butler Yeats (1865–1939), pp. 1188–1211
W. B. Yeats was born in Sandymount, Dublin, to a lawyer turned portrait-painter and his wife, both of English Protestant stock, though both families had lived in Ireland for several generations. He studied painting at the Dublin Metropolitan School of Art before turning his full attention to literature. Yeats's childhood and early manhood were spent in Sligo, London, and Dublin, and each contributed something to his development. In Sligo, he acquired a knowledge of the peasantry's life and vigorous folklore. In London in the 1890s, he met the important poets of the day. In Dublin, he was influenced by the currents of Irish nationalism and, although often disagreeing with those who wished to use literature for crude political ends, nevertheless learned to see his poetry as contributing to a rejuvenated Irish culture. His work falls into three main periods. In the first, he wrote dreamy poems and plays, laden with poetic diction, many of them expressing his love for Maud Gonne, a beautiful actress and violent nationalist, who persistently refused to marry him. His reading of the German philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche in 1902 prompted him to abandon the subservient posture of the courtly lover, as his work in the theater was making his writing less ornate and more colloquial. The second period saw him involved—with Lady Gregory and J. M. Synge—in the 1904 founding of the Abbey Theatre and its subsequent rise and decline. He was becoming a national figure. Three public controversies moved him to anger and to poetry: the first was over the hounding of "the uncrowned king of Ireland," Charles Stewart Parnell; the second, over Synge's play The Playboy of the Western World, in 1907; the third, over the Lane pictures, a collection of modern French paintings not housed in Dublin due to lack of funding, in 1913. In each, the cause for which he fought was defeated by representatives of the Roman Catholic middle class; at last, bitterly turning his back on Ireland, Yeats moved to England. Then came the 1916 Easter Rising, mounted by members of the class and religion that had so long opposed him. Persuaded by Gonne (whose estranged husband had been executed as a leader of the Rising) that "tragic dignity had returned to Ireland," Yeats returned. To mark his new commitment, he refurbished and occupied the Norman tower, on Lady Gregory's land, that was to become one of the central symbols of his later poetry. In 1917, he married a woman who, over the next twenty years, would prove so sympathetic to his imaginative needs that the automatic writing she produced for several years (believed by Yeats to have been dictated by spirits) gave him the elements of a symbolic system that he later worked out in his book A Vision (1925, 1937). This system prompted the later and greater poems of his third period, those of The Tower (1928) and The Winding Stair (1933). In 1922, Yeats was appointed a senator of the recently established Irish Free State, and the following year he was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature.

Cynthia Zarin (b. 1959), pp. 2013–15
Cynthia Zarin was born in New York City and raised on Long Island. She was educated at Harvard College and Columbia University. Artist-in-residence at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, in New York City, she is a versatile writer of nonfiction and has published several children's books as well as three volumes of poetry. She has taught at the Columbia School of Journalism and Princeton University, and is a staff writer for The New Yorker.

PERMISSIONS ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Adcock, Fleur: "The Ex-Queen Among the Astronomers," "Poem Ended by a Death," and "The Soho Hospital for Women" from POEMS 1960–2000. Copyright © 2000 by Fleur Adcock. Reprinted by permission of the publisher, Bloodaxe Books Ltd.

Ali, Agha Shahid: "The Dacca Gauzes" from THE HALF-INCH HIMALAYAS. Copyright © 1987 by Agha Shahid Ali. Reprinted with permission of Wesleyan University Press. "Lenox Hill" from ROOMS ARE NEVER FINISHED by Agha Shahid Ali. Copyright © 2002 by Agha Shahid Ali. Used by permission of W. W. Norton & Co., Inc.

Ammons, A. R.: "The Arc Inside and Out," copyright © 1971 by A. R. Ammons. "The City Limits," copyright © 1971 by A. R. Ammons. "Corsons Inlet," copyright © 1963 by A. R. Ammons. From THE SELECTED POEMS: EXPANDED EDITION by A. R. Ammons. "Pet Panther," copyright © 1983 by A. R. Ammons. From LAKE EFFECT COUNTRY by A. R. Ammons. "All's All," copyright © 1996 by A. R. Ammons. From BRINK ROAD by A. R. Ammons. Used by permission of W. W. Norton & Co., Inc.

Armitage, Simon: "The Shout" from THE UNIVERSAL HOME DOCTOR. "The Two of Us" and excerpt from "Killing Time" from SELECTED POEMS. Reprinted by permission of David Godwin Associates for the author and Faber & Faber Ltd.

Ashbery, John: "Brute Image" from HOTEL LAUTREAMONT. Copyright © 1992 by John Ashbery. "Soonest Mended" from A DOUBLE DREAM OF SPRING. Copyright © 1970, 1969, 1968, 1967, 1966 by John Ashbery. "The Painter" from SOME TREES. Copyright © 1956 by John Ashbery. "Paradoxes and Oxymorons" from SHADOW TRAIN. Copyright © 1980, 1981 by John Ashbery. Reprinted by permission of Georges Borchardt, Inc. for the author. "Ode to Bill" from SELF-PORTRAIT IN A CONVEX MIRROR by John Ashbery, copyright © 1974 by John Ashbery. Used by permission of Viking Penguin, a division of Penguin Group (USA), Inc. All poems published in Great Britain by Carcanet Press, Ltd. and reprinted by the publisher's permission.

Atwood, Margaret: "At the Tourist Center in Boston" from SELECTED POEMS 1966–1984 by Margaret Atwood. Copyright © 1990 by Margaret Atwood. Reprinted by permission of Oxford University Press Canada. "You Begin" from SELECTED POEMS II: POEMS SELECTED AND NEW, 1976–1986 by Margaret Atwood, copyright © 1987 by Margaret Atwood. Also published in SELECTED POEMS 1966–1984, copyright © 1990 by Margaret Atwood. Reprinted by permission of Houghton Mifflin Co., Oxford University Press Canada, and Time Warner Books UK. All rights reserved. "Up" and "Flowers" from MORNING IN THE BURNED HOUSE by Margaret Atwood. Copyright © 1995 by Margaret Atwood. Reprinted by permission of Houghton Mifflin Co., McClelland & Stewart Ltd. The Canadian Publishers, and Curtis Brown Group Ltd., London on behalf of the author. All rights reserved. "This Is a Photograph of Me" from THE CIRCLE GAME by Margaret Atwood, copyright © 1968, 1998 by Margaret Atwood. Reprinted with the permission of House of Anansi Press, Toronto.

Auden, W. H.: "As I Walked Out One Evening," copyright © 1940 and renewed 1968 by W. H. Auden. "Twelve Songs, IX, Funeral Blues," copyright © 1940 and renewed 1968 by W. H. Auden. "Twelve Songs XII, O Tell Me the Truth about Love," copyright © 1940 and renewed 1968 by W. H. Auden. "Lullaby (Lay Your Sleeping Head, My Love)," copyright © 1972 by W. H. Auden. "Spain 1937," copyright © 1940 and renewed 1968 by W. H. Auden. "Musée des Beaux Arts," copyright © 1940 and renewed 1968 by W. H. Auden. "In Memory of W. B. Yeats," copyright © 1940 and renewed 1968 by W. H. Auden. "In Praise of Limestone," copyright © 1951 by W. H. Auden. "The Shield of Achilles," copyright © 1952 by W. H. Auden. "September 1, 1939," copyright © 1940 and renewed 1968 by W. H. Auden. "Their Lonely Betters," copyright © 1951 by W. H. Auden. From COLLECTED POEMS by W. H. Auden. Used by permission of Random House, Inc. and Faber & Faber Ltd.

Baraka, Amiri: "An Agony, As Now" from THE DEAD LECTURER by Amiri Baraka. Copyright © by Amiri Baraka. "In Memory of Radio" from THE AMIRI BARAKA READER. Copyright © by Amiri Baraka. Reprinted by permission of SLL/Sterling Lord Literistic, Inc.

Baxter, James K.: "Wild Bees," "East Coast Journey," and "New Zealand" published in COLLECTED POEMS OF JAMES K. BAXTER, ed. J. R. Weir, Oxford University Press, Australia and New Zealand, 1979. Reproduced by permission of J. C. Baxter.

Bernstein, Charles: "frequently unasked questions," "why we ask you not to touch," and "this poem intentionally left blank" from WITH STRINGS (Chicago: Univ. of Chicago Press, 2001). Used by permission of the author. "Of Time and the Line" from ROUGH TRADES (Los Angeles: Green Integer Books, 1991), pp. 42–43. Copyright © 1991 by Charles Bernstein. Reprinted with the permission of the publisher.

Berryman, John: From "Homage to Mistress Bradstreet" and "A Sympathy, A Welcome" from COLLECTED POEMS 1937–1971 by John Berryman. Copyright © 1989 by Kate Donahue Berryman. Dream Songs #1, #4, #14, #29, #40, #145, #324, #382 from THE DREAM SONGS by John Berryman. Copyright © 1969 by John Berryman. Copyright renewed 1997 by Kate Donahue Berryman. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus, & Giroux, LLC and Faber & Faber Ltd.

Betjeman, John: "Death in Leamington," "The Arrest of Oscar Wilde at the Cadogan Hotel," "East Anglian Bathe," and "False Security" from COLLECTED POEMS by John Betjeman. Copyright © 1958, 1962, 1970, 1979 by John Betjeman. Reproduced by permission of John Murray Publishers.

Birney, Earle: "Bushed" and "The Bear on the Delhi Road" from THE COLLECTED POEMS OF EARLE BIRNEY. Used by permission, McClelland & Stewart Ltd. The Canadian Publishers.

Bishop, Elizabeth: "The Armadillo," "Casabianca," "Filling Station," "The Fish," "In the Waiting Room," "The Moose," "One Art," "Sandpiper," and "Sestina" from THE COMPLETE POEMS 1927–1979 by Elizabeth Bishop. Copyright © 1979, 1983 by Alice Helen Methfessel. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus and Giroux, LLC.

Blunden, Edmund: "Forefathers" and "1916 seen from 1921" from SELECTED POEMS, ed. by Robyn Marsack (1982). Reprinted by permission of Carcanet Press Ltd.

Bly, Robert: "Waking from Sleep" from SILENCE IN THE SNOWY FIELDS by Robert Bly, Wesleyan University Press, 1962. Copyright © 1962 by Robert Bly. Reprinted with his permission. "Johnson's Cabinet Watched by Ants" from THE LIGHT AROUND THE BODY by Robert Bly. Copyright © 1967 by Robert Bly. Copyright renewed 1995 by Robert Bly. Reprinted by permission of HarperCollins Publishers Inc.

Bogan, Louise: "Juan's Song," "Man Alone," "Medusa," "Night," "Roman Fountain," and "Song for the Last Act" from THE BLUE ESTUARIES by Louise Bogan. Copyright © 1968 by Louise Bogan. Copyright renewed 1996 by Ruth Limmer. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC.

Boland, Eavan: "That the Science of Cartography Is Limited," "The Dolls Museum in Dublin," and "The Pomegranate" from IN A TIME OF VIOLENCE, copyright © 1994 by Eavan Boland. Reprinted by permission of W. W. Norton & Co., Inc. and Carcanet Press Ltd.

Brathwaite, Edward Kamau: "New World A-Comin', 1, 2" and "Ancestors 1, 2, 3" from ARRIVANTS: A NEW WORLD TRILOGY (1973) by Edward Kamau Brathwaite. Reprinted by permission of Oxford University Press (UK).

Brooks, Gwendolyn: "kitchenette building," "my dreams, my works, must wait till after hell," "the birth in a narrow room," "the rites for Cousin Vit," "The Bean Eaters," "We Real Cool," "Medgar Evers," and "Boy Breaking Glass" from BLACKS (Chicago: Third World Press, 1987). Reprinted with permission of the author.

Brown, George MacKay: "The Old Women," "Haddock Fisherman," and "Shroud" from SELECTED POEMS 1954–1983 by George MacKay Brown. Copyright © 1959, 1965, 1971 by George MacKay Brown. Reproduced by permission of John Murray Publishers.

Brown, Sterling A.: "Slim in Atlanta," copyright © 1932 by Harcourt Brace & Co. Copyright renewed 1960 by Sterling A. Brown. "Chillen Get Shoes," "Conjured," and "Bitter Fruit of the Tree," copyright © 1980 by Sterling A. Brown. From THE COLLECTED POEMS OF STERLING A. BROWN, ed. by Michael S. Harper. Reprinted by permission of HarperCollins Publishers, Inc.

Brownjohn, Alan: "Common Sense" from COLLECTED POEMS 1952–83 by Alan Brownjohn. Copyright © 1983 by Alan Brownjohn. Reprinted by permission of Rosica Colin Ltd.

Bunting, Basil: Excerpt from "Briggflatts: An Autobiography" from COMPLETE POEMS of Basil Bunting (2000). Reprinted by permission of Bloodaxe Books Ltd.

Bynner, Witter: "Chinese Drawings: A Philosopher," "Haskell," "More Lovely than Antiquity," and "The Wintry Mind" from SELECTED POEMS by Witter Bynner. Copyright © 1978 by The Witter Bynner Foundation. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC.

Campbell, Roy: "The Zulu Girl" and "The Sisters" from THE COLLECTED POEMS OF ROY CAMPBELL. Reprinted by permission of Francisco Campbell Custodio and Jonathan Ball Publishers/A. D. Donker Publishers.

Carson, Anne: "IV" from THE BEAUTY OF THE HUSBAND by Anne Carson, copyright © 2001 by Anne Carson. "New Rule" and "Sumptuous Destitution" from MEN IN THE OFF HOURS by Anne Carson, copyright © 2000 by Anne Carson. Used by permission of the publishers, Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc. and Jonathan Cape, a division of The Random House Group Limited.

Causley, Charles: "Armistice Day," "At the British War Cemetery, Bayeux," and "Eden Rock" from COLLECTED POEMS 1951–1975 (Macmillan). Reprinted by permission of David Higham Associates.

Christopher, Nicholas: "The Palm Reader" and "Far from Home" from 5° AND OTHER POEMS by Nicholas Christopher. Reprinted by permission of the author.

Clampitt, Amy: "Beach Glass," "Beethoven, Opus 111," "The Sun Underfoot among the Sundews," and "The Cormorant in Its Element" from THE KINGFISHER by Amy Clampitt, copyright © 1983 by Amy Clampitt. "Syrinx" from THE COLLECTED POEMS OF AMY CLAMPITT by Amy Clampitt, copyright © 1997 by the Estate of Amy Clampitt. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc. and Faber & Faber Ltd.

Collins, Billy: "Litany," copyright © 2002 by Billy Collins, from NINE HORSES by Billy Collins. Used by permission of Random House, Inc. and SLL/Sterling Lord Literistic, Inc. "Japan" from PICNIC, LIGHTNING by Billy Collins, copyright © 1998. Reprinted by permission of the University of Pittsburgh Press.

Cope, Wendy: "Bloody Men," "Flowers," "Valentine," and "Serious Concerns" from SERIOUS CONCERNS. Copyright © 1992 by Wendy Cope. Reprinted by permission of Faber & Faber Ltd.

Corn, Alfred: "Navidad, St. Nicholas Ave." from THE WEST DOOR by Alfred Corn. Copyright © 1988 by Alfred Corn. Reprinted by permission of the author. "A Conch from Sicily" from PRESENT by Alfred Corn. Copyright © 1997 by Alfred Corn. Reprinted by permission of Counterpoint Press, a member of Perseus Books, LLC.

Corso, Gregory: "Marriage" from THE HAPPY BIRTHDAY OF DEATH, copyright © 1960 by New Directions Publishing Corp. Reprinted by permission of New Directions Publishing Corp.

Crane, Hart: "At Melville's Tomb," "My Grandmother's Love Letters," "Proem: To Brooklyn Bridge," "To Emily Dickinson," "Voyages I, II, III, IV, V, VI" from COMPLETE POEMS OF HART CRANE by Hart Crane, ed. by Marc Simon. Copyright © 1933, 1958, 1966 by Liveright Publishing Corp. Copyright © 1986 by Marc Simon. Used by permission of Liveright Publishing Corp.

Creeley, Robert: "Bresson's Movies" from MIRRORS, copyright © 1983 by Robert Creeley. Reprinted by permission of New Directions Publishing Corp. and Marion Boyars Publishers. "I Know a Man," "Heroes," and "The World" from THE COLLECTED POEMS OF ROBERT CREELEY, 1945–1975. Copyright © 1983 by The Regents of the University of California. Reprinted with the permission of the University of California Press.

Cullen, Countee: "Heritage," "Incident," and "Yet Do I Marvel" are from the Countee Cullen Collection, Amistad Research Center at Tulane University. Reprinted by permission.

Cummings, E. E.: "All in green went my love riding," "the Cambridge ladies who live in furnished souls," "Spring is like a perhaps hand," 'next to of course god america i," "since feeling is first," "somewhere i have never travelled,gladly beyond," "anyone lived in a pretty how town," "may i feel said he," "who are you,little i" from COMPLETE POEMS: 1904–1962 by E. E. Cummings, ed. by George J. Firmage. Copyright © 1923, 1925, 1926, 1931, 1935, 1938, 1939, 1940, 1944, 1945, 1946, 1947, 1948, 1949, 1950, 1951, 1952, 1953, 1954, © 1955, 1956, 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963, 1966, 1967, 1968, 1972, 1973, 1974, 1975, 1976, 1977, 1978, 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990, 1991 by the Trustees for the E. E. Cummings Trust. Copyright © 1973, 1976, 1978, 1979, 1981, 1983, 1985, 1991 by George James Firmage. Used by permission of Liveright Publishing Corp.

Curnow, Allen: "Landfall in Unknown Seas" from COLLECTED POEMS 1933–1973. Copyright © 1973 by Allen Curnow. Reprinted by permission of Penguin Books (NZ) Ltd.

Davie, Donald: "Remembering the Thirties," "The Fountain," and "Time Passing, Beloved" from COLLECTED POEMS (1983). Reprinted by permission of Carcanet Press Ltd.

Davison, Peter: "Equinox" and "Peaches" from THE POEMS OF PETER DAVISON by Peter Davison, copyright © 1995 by Peter Davison. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc.

De la Mare, Walter: From THE COMPLETE POEMS OF WALTER DE LA MARE (1969, 1970) by permission of The Literary Trustees of Walter de la Mare and the Society of Authors as their representatives.

Dickey, James: "The Lifeguard" from DROWNING WITH OTHERS. Copyright © 1961 by James Dickey. "Buckdancer's Choice" and "Sled Burial, Dream Ceremony" from BUCKDANCER'S CHOICE. Copyright © 1965 by James Dickey. Reprinted with permission of Wesleyan University Press.

Dickinson, Emily: Dickinson poems are reprinted by permission of the publishers and the Trustees of Amherst College from the following volumes: THE POEMS OF EMILY DICKINSON, Thomas H. Johnson, ed., Cambridge, Mass.: The Belknap Press of Harvard University Press, copyright © 1951, 1955, 1979, 1983 by The President and Fellows of Harvard College; THE POEMS OF EMILY DICKINSON: VARIORUM EDITION, Ralph W. Franklin, ed., Cambridge, Mass.: The Belknap Press of Harvard University Press, copyright © 1998 by The President and Fellows of Harvard College; THE POEMS OF EMILY DICKINSON: READING EDITION, Ralph W. Franklin, ed., Cambridge, Mass.: The Belknap Press of Harvard University Press, copyright © 1998, 1999 by The President and Fellows of Harvard College.

H. D. (Hilda Doolittle): "Helen," "Sea Rose," "Sea Violet," "The Walls Do Not Fall, 1" and "Wine Bowl" from COLLECTED POEMS, 1912–1944, copyright © 1982 by The Estate of Hilda Doolittle. Reprinted by permission of New Directions Publishing Corp. and Carcanet Press Ltd.

Douglas, Keith: "Aristocrats," "Gallantry," "On a Return from Egypt," and "Vergissmeinnicht," from THE COMPLETE POEMS: THIRD EDITION by Keith Douglas. Copyright © 1998 by The Estate of Keith Douglas. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC and Faber & Faber Ltd.

Dove, Rita: "Parsley" and "Dusting" from SELECTED POEMS, Pantheon, © 1993 by Rita Dove. Reprinted by permission of the author. "The Bistro Styx" from MOTHER LOVE by Rita Dove. Copyright © 1995 by Rita Dove. Used by permission of the author and W. W. Norton & Co., Inc.

Dufault, Peter Kane: "A Letter for All-Hallows (1949)," "A First Night," and "Burden" were first published in THE NEW YORKER. Reprinted with the permission of the author.

Duffy, Carol Ann: "Warming Her Pearls" from SELLING MANHATTAN. Copyright © 1987 by Carol Ann Duffy. "Prayer" from MEAN TIME. Copyright © 1993 by Carol Ann Duffy. Reprinted by permission of Anvil Press Poetry. "Little Red Cap" and "Anne Hathaway" from THE WORLD'S WIFE. Copyright © 1999 by Carol Ann Duffy. Reprinted by permission of the publishers Faher & Faber, Inc., an affiliate of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC and Pan Macmillan, London, UK.

Dunn, Douglas: "Thirteen Steps and the Thirteenth of March" from ELEGIES. Copyright © 1985 by Douglas Dunn. "A Removal from Terry Street" from TERRY STREET. Copyright © 1969 by Douglas Dunn. "In the Grounds" from BARBARIANS. Copyright © 1979 by Douglas Dunn. Reprinted with the permission of Faber & Faber Ltd.

Dylan, Bob: Lyrics to "Boots of Spanish Leather" by Bob Dylan. Copyright © 1963 by Warner Bros., Inc. Copyright renewed 1991 by Special Rider Music. All rights reserved. International copyright secured. Reprinted by permission.

Eberhart, Richard: "The Fury of Aerial Bombardment" from COLLECTED POEMS 1930–1986 by Richard Eberhart. Copyright © 1960, 1976, 1987 by Richard Eberhart. Used by permission of Oxford University Press, Inc. and the author.

Eliot, T. S.: "Little Gidding" from FOUR QUARTETS, copyright © 1942 by T. S. Eliot and renewed 1970 by Esme Valerie Eliot, reprinted by permission of Harcourt, Inc. "Journey of the Magi" and "The Hollow Men" from COLLECTED POEMS 1909–1962 by T. S. Eliot, copyright © 1936 by Harcourt, Inc., copyright © 1964, 1963 by T. S. Eliot, reprinted by permission of Harcourt, Inc. and Faber & Faber Ltd. "The Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock" and "The Waste Land" from THE COMPLETE POEMS AND PLAYS 1909–1950. Reprinted by permission of Faber & Faber Ltd.

Elizabeth I: "Ah Silly Pug, Wert Thou So Sore Afraid" from "A Lost Poem by Queen Elizabeth I" by L. G. Black, TIMES LITERARY SUPPLEMENT, May 23, 1968. Reprinted by permission of The Masters of the Bench of the Inner Temple. "The Doubt of Future Foes" from POEMS OF QUEEN ELIZABETH I (Providence, Rhode Island: Brown University Press, 1964), edited by Leicester Bradner. Copyright © 1964 by Brown University/University Press of New England. Reprinted with the permission of the University Press of New England.

Empson, William: "Legal Fiction" and "Missing Dates" from COLLECTED POEMS OF WILLIAM EMPSON, copyright © 1949 and renewed 1977 by William Empson, reprinted by permission of Harcourt, Inc. and Chatto & Windus c/o The Random House Group Ltd.

Erdrich, Louise: "Birth" from BAPTISM OF DESIRE by Louise Erdrich. Copyright © 1990 by Louise Erdrich. Reprinted by permission of HarperCollins Publishers, Inc. "The Butcher's Wife" and "I Was Sleeping Where the Black Oaks Move" from JACKLIGHT by Louise Erdrich. Copyright © 1984 by Louise Erdrich, reprinted with the permission of The Wylie Agency, Inc.

Fenton, James: "A German Requiem," "Dead Soldiers," and "God, a Poem" from CHILDREN IN EXILE by James Fenton. Copyright © 1985 by James Fenton. Also published in THE MEMORY OF WAR AND CHILDREN IN EXILE: POEMS 1968–1983. Copyright © 1983 by James Fenton. "In Paris With You" from OUT OF DANGER. Copyright © 1993, 1994 by James Fenton. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC and Peters Fraser Dunlop on behalf of James Fenton.

Ferlinghetti, Lawrence: "Sometime During Eternity . . ." from A CONEY ISLAND OF THE MIND, copyright © 1958 by Lawrence Ferlinghetti. Reprinted by permission of New Directions Publishing Corp.

Fitzgerald, Robert: "Figlio Maggiore" from SPRING SHADE: POEMS 1931–1970, copyright © 1961 by Robert Fitzgerald. Reprinted by permission of New Directions Publishing Corp.

Frost, Robert: From THE POETRY OF ROBERT FROST, ed. by Edward Connery Lathem. Copyright © 1936, 1942, 1944, 1951, 1956, 1958 by Robert Frost, copyright © 1964, 1967, 1970, 1975 by Lesley Frost Ballantine, copyright © 1916, 1923, 1928, 1947, 1969 by Henry Holt and Co. Published in Great Britain by Jonathan Cape. Used by permission of Henry Holt and Co., LLC and the Estate of Robert Frost and The Random House Group Ltd.

Gascoyne, David: "Yves Tanguy" and "Ecce Homo" from COLLECTED POEMS (1970) by David Gascoyne. Used by permission of Oxford University Press (UK).

Ginsberg, Allen: Part 1 from "Howl," copyright © 1955 by Allen Ginsberg, "To Aunt Rose," copyright © 1958 by Allen Ginsberg, "A Supermarket in California," copyright © 1955 by Allen Ginsberg. From COLLECTED POEMS 1947–1980 by Allen Ginsberg. Copyright © 1984 by Allen Ginsberg. Reprinted by permission of HarperCollins Publishers, Inc. and Penguin Books Ltd.

Gioia, Dana: "Prayer" and "The Next Poem" from THE GODS OF WINTER by Dana Gioia. Copyright © 1991 by Dana Gioia. Reprinted with the permission of Graywolf Press, St. Paul, MN 55114.

Glück, Louise: "Gretel in Darkness" from THE HOUSE ON THE MARSHLAND from THE FIRST FOUR BOOKS OF POEMS by Louise Glück. Copyright © 1968, 1971, 1973, 1974, 1975, 1976, 1977, 1978, 1979, 1980, 1985, 1995 by Louise Glück. "Vita Nova" from VITA NOVA by Louise Glück. Copyright © 1999 by Louise Glück. "The Garden," p. 16 from THE WILD IRIS by Louise Glück. Copyright © 1993 by Louise Glück. Reprinted by permission of HarperCollins Publishers, Inc. and Carcanet Press Ltd.

Graham, Jorie: "The Geese," "At Luca Signorelli's Resurrection of the Body," and "The Surface" from THE DREAM OF THE UNIFIED FIELD: POEMS 1974–1994 by Jorie Graham. Copyright © 1995 by Jorie Graham. Reprinted by permission of HarperCollins Publishers, Inc. and Carcanet Press Ltd.

Graves, Robert: "Love Without Hope," "In Broken Images," "Warning to Children," "The Persian Version," "To Juan at the Winter Solstice," and "The White Goddess" from COMPLETE POEMS (2000), by Robert Graves. Reprinted with the permission of Carcanet Press Ltd.

Greenlaw, Lavinia: "Skin Full," "What's Going On," and "A World Where News Travelled Slowly" from A WORLD WHERE NEWS TRAVELLED SLOWLY. Reprinted by permission of Faber & Faber Ltd.

Guest, Barbara: "Twilight Polka Dots" from FAIR REALISM (Los Angeles: Green Integer Books, 1989), pp. 55–56. Copyright © 1989 by Barbara Guest. Reprinted with the permission of the author and publisher. "Roses" from SELECTED POEMS. Copyright © 1995, 1993, 1989, 1976, 1973, 1968, 1962 by Barbara Guest. Reprinted with the permission of the author.

Gunn, Thom: " 'All Do Not All Things Well,' " "Black Jackets," "From the Wave," "A Map of the City," "The Missing," "My Sad Captains," and "On the Move" from COLLECTED POEMS by Thom Gunn. Copyright © 1994 by Thom Gunn. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus and Giroux, LLC and Faber & Faber Ltd.

Gurney, Ivor: "To His Love," "The Silent One," and "First Time" from COLLECTED POEMS OF IVOR GURNEY (1982), ed. by P. J. Kavanagh. Reprinted with the permission of Carcanet Press Ltd.

Hall, Daniel: "Mangosteens" by Daniel Hall first appeared in THE NEW REPUBLIC, Dec. 6, 1993. Copyright © 1993 by Daniel Hall. Reprinted by permission of the author. "Love-Letter-Burning" from HERMIT WITH LANDSCAPE, copyright © 1990 by Daniel Hall. Reprinted by permission of Yale University Press.

Hall, Donald: "Exile" from THE ALLIGATOR BRIDE: POEMS NEW AND SELECTED by Donald Hall. Copyright © 1983 by Donald Hall. Reprinted by permission of the author. "Independence Day Letter" from WITHOUT: POEMS by Donald Hall. Copyright © 1998 by Donald Hall. "Prophecy" from THE ONE DAY by Donald Hall. Copyright © 1988 by Donald Hall. Reprinted by permission of Houghton Mifflin Co. All rights reserved.

Hamer, Richard, tr.: "Riddles 1, 2, 3," "The Wife's Lament," and excerpt from "The Seafarer" from A CHOICE OF ANGLO-SAXON VERSE. Copyright © 1970 by Richard Hamer. Reprinted with the permission of Faber & Faber Ltd.

Harrison, Tony: "On Not Being Milton," "Classics Society," "Them & [uz] I & II," "A Kumquat for John Keats," and "The Heartless Art" from SELECTED POEMS, 2nd ed. Copyright © 1984, 1987 by Tony Harrison. Reprinted with the permission of Gordon Dickerson.

Hass, Robert: "Tahoe in August" from HUMAN WISHES by Robert Hass. Copyright © 1989 by Robert Hass. Reprinted by permission of HarperCollins Publishers, Inc. "Meditation at Lagunitas" from PRAISE by Robert Hass. Copyright © 1974, 1975, 1976, 1977, 1978, 1979 by Robert Hass. First published by The Ecco Press in 1979. Reprinted by permission.

Hayden, Robert: " 'Mystery Boy' Looks for Kin in Nashville," "Night, Death, Mississippi," copyright © 1962, 1966 by Robert Hayden. "Mourning Poem for the Queen of Sunday," copyright © 1966 by Robert Hayden. "Paul Laurence Dunbar," copyright © 1978 by Robert Hayden. "Those Winter Sundays," copyright © 1966 by Robert Hayden. From COLLECTED POEMS OF ROBERT HAYDEN by Robert Hayden, ed. by Frederick Glaysher. Copyright © 1985 by Emma Hayden. Used by permission of Liveright Publishing Corp.

Heaney, Seamus: From BEOWULF, tr. by Seamus Heaney. Copyright © 2000 by Seamus Heaney. Used by permission of W. W. Norton & Co., Inc. and Faber & Faber Ltd. Excerpt from "Clearances," "Digging," "A Dream of Jealousy," "The Forge," "Fosterling," "Punishment," "The Settle Bed," "The Skunk," "The Skylight," excerpt from "Squarings," excerpt from "Station Island," and "Two Lorries" from OPENED GROUND: SELECTED POEMS 1966–1996 by Seamus Heaney. Copyright © 1998 by Seamus Heaney. "Casting and Gathering" from SEEING THINGS by Seamus Heaney. Copyright © 1991 by Seamus Heaney. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC and Faber & Faber Ltd.

Hecht, Anthony: "Death the Painter," copyright © 1995 by Anthony Hecht. Reprinted by permission of the author. "A Hill," "The Ghost in the Martini," "Still Life," and "The Dover Bitch" from COLLECTED EARLIER POEMS by Anthony Hecht, copyright © 1990 by Anthony E. Hecht. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc. and the author. "The Book of Yolek" from THE TRANSPARENT MAN by Anthony Hecht, copyright © 1990 by Anthony E. Hecht. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc.

Hill, Geoffrey: "The Laurel Axe" and "Lachrimae Verae" first published in TENEBRAE (1978), copyright © 1978, 1985 by Geoffrey Hill. "Veni Coronaberis," "The Distant Fury of Battle," and "The Guardians" first published in FOR THE UNFALLEN (1959), copyright © 1959, 1985 by Geoffrey Hill. "September Song" first published in KING LOG (1968), copyright © 1968, 1985 by Geoffrey Hill. VI, VII, VIII first published in MERCIAN HYMNS (1971), copyright © 1971, 1985 by Geoffrey Hill. From NEW AND COLLECTED POEMS, 1952–1992 by Geoffrey Hill. Copyright © 1994 by Geoffrey Hill. Published in Great Britain in COLLECTED POEMS by Geoffrey Hill. Reprinted by permission of Houghton Mifflin Co. and Penguin Books Ltd. All rights reserved.

Hine, Daryl: "Letting Go" and "Riddle" from POSTSCRIPTS by Daryl Hine, copyright © 1990 by Daryl Hine. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc.

Hollander, John: "Swan and Shadow" from TYPES OF SHAPE (New Haven: Yale Univ. Press, 1991). Reprinted by permission of the author. "Adam's Task" from SELECTED POETRY by John Hollander, copyright © 1993 by John Hollander. "An Old-Fashioned Song" and "Variations on a Fragment by Trumbull Stickney" from TESSARAE AND OTHER POEMS by John Hollander, copyright © 1993 by John Hollander. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc.

Hope, A. D.: "Imperial Adam," "Australia," "Advice to Young Ladies," and "Inscription for War" by A. D. Hope from COLLECTED POEMS 1930–1970. Reprinted by permission of Curtis Brown Pty Ltd.

Housman, A. E.: "Crossing Alone the Nighted Ferry" and "Here Dead Lie We Because We Did Not Choose" from THE COLLECTED POEMS OF A. E. HOUSMAN. Copyright © 1936 by Barclays Bank Ltd., © 1964 by Robert E. Symons, © 1965 by Henry Holt and Co. Reprinted by permission of Henry Holt and Co., LLC and The Society of Authors as the Literary Representative of the Estate of A. E. Housman. "Loveliest of Trees, the Cherry Now," "Reveille," "When I Watch the Living Meet," "To an Athlete Dying Young," "Is My Team Ploughing," "On Wenlock Edge the Wood's in Trouble," "From Far, from Eve and Morning," "With Rue My Heart Is Laden," " 'Terence, This Is Stupid Stuff . . . ,' " "Astronomy," "Epitaph on an Army of Mercenaries," "Crossing Alone the Nighted Ferry," and "Here Dead Lie We Because We Did Not Choose." Reprinted by permission of The Society of Authors as the Literary Representative of the Estate of A. E. Housman.

Howard, Richard: "Nikolaus Mardruz to his Master Ferdinand, Count of Tyrol, 1565" first appeared in THE YALE REVIEW, 83, #3 (July 1995). Copyright © 1995 by Richard Howard. Reprinted by permission of the author.

Hughes, Langston: From THE COLLECTED POEMS OF LANGSTON HUGHES by Langston Hughes, copyright © 1994 by The Estate of Langston Hughes. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc. and Harold Ober Associates, Inc.

Hughes, Ted: "The Thought-Fox," "Wind," "Pike," "Theology," Examination at the Womb Door," "Daffodils," and "Platform One" from COLLECTED POEMS by Ted Hughes. Copyright © 2003 by The Estate of Ted Hughes. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus, & Giroux, LLC and Faber & Faber Ltd.

Hugo, Richard: "The Lady in Kicking Horse Reservoir," copyright © 1973 by Richard Hugo. "The Way a Ghost Dissolves," from MAKING CERTAIN IT GOES ON: COLLECTED POEMS OF RICHARD HUGO by Richard Hugo. Copyright © 1984 by The Estate of Richard Hugo. Used by permission of W. W. Norton & Co., Inc.

Jackson, Laura Riding: From THE POEMS OF LAURA RIDING. Copyright © 2001 by the Board of Literary Management of the late Laura (Riding) Jackson. Reprinted by permission of Persea Books, Inc. (New York).

Jacobsen, Josephine: "Bus," "The Primer," and "Hourglass" from NEW AND SELECTED POEMS by Josephine Jacobsen. Copyright © 1974 by Josephine Jacobsen. Reprinted with the permission of the author.

Jarrell, Randall: "The Death of the Ball Turret Gunner," "Eighth Air Force," "A Field Hospital," "A Front," "A Man Meets a Woman in the Street," "Next Day," and "90 North" from THE COMPLETE POEMS by Randall Jarrell. Copyright © 1969, renewed 1997 by Mary von S. Jarrell. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC and Faber & Faber Ltd.

Jeffers, Robinson: "Hurt Hawks" from SELECTED POEMS, copyright © 1927 by R. Jeffers, renewed © 1955 by Robinson Jeffers. "Shine, Perishing Republic," "Boats in a Fog," "The Purse-Seine," and "Birds and Fishes" from THE SELECTED POETRY OF ROBINSON JEFFERS. Copyright © 1924, 1925, 1928, 1937, 1954 and renewed 1949, 1953, 1956 by Robinson Jeffers. Copyright © 1963 by Steuben Glass. Reprinted with the permission of Jeffers Literary Properties.

Jennings, Elizabeth: "One Flesh" and "My Grandmother" from COLLECTED POEMS 1953–1985 (Carcanet Press Ltd.). Reprinted by permission of David Higham Associates.

Justice, Donald: From NEW AND SELECTED POEMS by Donald Justice, copyright © 1995 by Donald Justice. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc.

Kavanagh, Patrick: "Sanctity," excerpt from "The Great Hunger," "Epic," and "Canal Bank Walk" from COLLECTED POEMS (N.Y.: W. W. Norton & Co, Inc., 1964). Copyright © 1964 by Patrick Kavanagh. Reprinted with the permission of Devin-Adair Publishers, Inc., Old Greenwich, CT 06830.

Kees, Weldon: "What the Spider Heard," "Robinson," "When the Lease Is Up," and "For H. V." reprinted from THE COLLECTED POEMS OF WELDON KEES, ed. by Donald Justice, by permission of the University of Nebraska Press. Copyright © 1975 by the University of Nebraska Press. Copyright © renewed by the University of Nebraska Press.

Kenney, Richard: "Aubade," "Apples on Champlain," and "Sawmill" from ORRERY. Copyright © 1985 by Richard Kenney. Reprinted by permission of the author.

Keyes, Sidney: "War Poet," "Elegy," and excerpt from "The Foreign Gate" from COLLECTED POEMS OF SIDNEY KEYES, ed. by Michael Meyer (Routledge, 1988). Reprinted by permission of David Higham Associates.

Kinnell, Galway: "First Song" from WHAT A KINGDOM IT WAS by Galway Kinnell. Copyright © 1960, renewed 1988 by Galway Kinnell. "The Correspondence School Instructor Says Goodbye to His Poetry Students" and "After Making Love, We Hear Footsteps" from THREE BOOKS by Galway Kinnell. Copyright © 1993 by Galway Kinnell. Reprinted by permission of Houghton Mifflin Co. All rights reserved.

Kinsella, Thomas: "Ancestor," "Tear," and "Another September" from POEMS 1956–1973. Copyright © 1956, 1968, 1979 by Thomas Kinsella. Reprinted with the permission of Wake Forest University Press.

Kipling, Rudyard: "Tommy," "Recessional," and "Epitaphs of the War" from RUDYARD KIPLING'S VERSE: DEFINITIVE EDITION. Reprinted with the permission of A. P. Watt Ltd. on behalf of the National Trust for Places of Historic Interest of Natural Beauty.

Kizer, Carolyn: "The Erotic Philosophers" from COOL, CALM & COLLECTED: POEMS 1960–2000. Copyright © 2001 by Carolyn Kizer. Reprinted with the permission of Copper Canyon Press, P.O. Box 271, Port Townsend, WA 98368–0271.

Koch, Kenneth: "To My Twenties" from NEW ADDRESSES by Kenneth Koch. Reprinted by permission of the Kenneth Koch Literary Estate. "Energy in Sweden" from ONE TRAIN by Kenneth Koch (N.Y.: Alfred A. Knopf, 1994). Copyright © 1994 by Kenneth Koch. "Permanently," "You Were Wearing," and "Variations on a Theme by William Carlos Williams" from THANK YOU AND OTHER POEMS (N.Y.: Grove Press, 1962). Copyright © 1962 and renewed 1990 by Kenneth Koch. Reprinted by permission of the author.

Komunyakaa, Yusef: "Banking Potatoes," "The Smokehouse," and "Sunday Afternoons" from MAGIC CITY. Copyright © 1992 by Yusef Komunyakaa. "Facing It" from PLEASURE DOME. Copyright © 2001 by Yusef Komunyakaa. Reprinted with the permission of Wesleyan University Press.

Kunitz, Stanley: "He," "Robin Redbreast," and "Touch Me" from THE COLLECTED POEMS by Stanley Kunitz. Copyright © 2000 by Stanley Kunitz. Used by permission of W. W. Norton & Co., Inc.

Larkin, Philip: "Church Going" and "Born Yesterday" from THE LESS DECEIVED by Philip Larkin by permission of The Marvell Press, England and Australia. "Ambulances," "Aubade," "An Arundel Tomb," "The Explosion," "For Sidney Bechet," "MCMXIV," "Sad Steps," "Talking in Bed," "This Be The Verse," "The Trees," and "The Whitsun Weddings" from COLLECTED POEMS by Philip Larkin. Copyright © 1988, 1989 by the Estate of Philip Larkin. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC and Faber & Faber Ltd.

Lawrence, D. H.: "Snake," "Elemental," "Self-Protection," "Trees in the Garden," "The English Are So Nice!" "Andraitx—Pomegranate Flowers," "Bavarian Gentians," and "The Ship of Death" from THE COMPLETE POEMS OF D. H. LAWRENCE by D. H. Lawrence, ed. by V. de Sola Pinto and F. W. Roberts, copyright © 1964, 1971 by Angelo Ravagli and C. M. Weekley, Executors of the Estate of Frieda Lawrence Ravagli. Used by permission of Viking Penguin, a division of Penguin Group (USA), Inc.

Layton, Irving: "The Birth of Tragedy," "Berry Picking," and "The Cold Green Element" from THE COLLECTED POEMS OF IRVING LAYTON. Used by permission of McClelland & Stewart Ltd. The Canadian Publishers.

Lee, Li-Young: "Persimmons" from ROSE. Copyright © 1986 by Li-Young Lee. "Out of Hiding" from BOOK OF MY NIGHTS. Copyright © 2001 by Li-Young Lee. Reprinted with the permission of BOA Editions Ltd.

Leithauser, Brad: "Old Bachelor Brother" from THE MAIL FROM ANYWHERE by Brad Leithauser, copyright © 1990 by Brad Leithauser. "The Buried Graves" and "In Minako Wada's House" from CATS OF THE TEMPLE by Brad Leithauser, copyright © 1986 by Brad Leithauser. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc.

Levertov, Denise: "Caedmon" from BREATHING THE WATER, copyright © 1987 by Denise Levertov. "Scenes from the Life of the Peppertrees" and "Triple Feature" from COLLECTED EARLIER POEMS 1940–1960, copyright © 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961, 1979 by Denise Levertov. "O Taste and See" from POEMS 1960–1967, copyright © 1964 by Denise Levertov. "Tenebrae" from POEMS 1968–1972, copyright © 1968 by Denise Levertov. Reprinted by permission of New Directions Publishing Corp. and Pollinger Ltd.

Levine, Philip: "They Feed They Lion" and "You Can Have It" from NEW SELECTED POEMS by Philip Levine, copyright © 1991 by Philip Levine. "The Simple Truth" from THE SIMPLE TRUTH by Philip Levine, copyright © 1994 by Philip Levine. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc.

Lewis, Alun: "All Day It Has Rained" from RAIDER'S DAWN by Alun Lewis. Copyright © 1941 by Alun Lewis. "Song" and "Goodbye" from HA! HA! AMONG THE TRUMPETS by Alun Lewis. Copyright © 1945 by Alun Lewis. Reprinted by permission of HarperCollins Publishers Ltd.

Lewis, C. Day: "Two Songs" and "Where are the War Poets" from THE COMPLETE POEMS OF C. DAY LEWIS, published by Sinclair-Stevenson (1992), copyright © 1992 in this edition, and the Estate of C. Day Lewis. Reprinted by permission of Random House Group Ltd.

Longley, Michael: "Gorse Fires" and "Ghetto" from GORSE FIRES. Copyright © 1991 by Michael Longley. "The Linen Industry" from POEMS 1963–1983. Copyright © 1983 by Michael Longley. Reprinted with the permission of the author and Wake Forest University Press.

Lorde, Audre: "Coal" from UNDERSONG: CHOSEN POEMS OLD AND NEW by Audre Lorde. Copyright © 1973, 1970, 1968 by Audre Lorde. Used by permission of W. W. Norton & Co., Inc. and Abner Stein Ltd. "Echoes" from THE MARVELOUS ARITHMETICS OF DISTANCE: POEMS 1987–1992 by Audre Lorde. Copyright © 1993 by Audre Lorde. Used by permission of W. W. Norton & Co., Inc. and Abner Stein Ltd. "From the House of Yemanjá" from THE BLACK UNICORN by Audre Lorde. Copyright © 1978 by Audre Lorde. Used by permission of W. W. Norton & Co., Inc.

Lowell, Robert: "The Quaker Graveyard in Nantucket" and "Mr. Edwards and the Spider" from LORD WEARY'S CASTLE, copyright © 1946 and renewed 1974 by Robert Lowell, reprinted by permission of Harcourt, Inc. and Faber & Faber Ltd. "Epilogue," "For the Union Dead," "Harriet" (p. 607), "My Last Afternoon with Uncle Devereux Winslow," "Skunk Hour," and "Water" from COLLECTED POEMS by Robert Lowell. Copyright © 2003 by Harriet Lowell and Sheridan Lowell. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC and Faber & Faber Ltd.

Lowry, Malcolm: "Delirium in Vera Cruz" and "Strange Type" from SELECTED POEMS OF MALCOLM LOWRY, ed. by Earle Birney with the assistance of Margerie Lowry. Copyright © 1962 by Margerie Lowry. Reprinted by permission of City Lights Books. "The Wild Cherry" and "Eye-Opener" from THE COLLECTED POETRY OF MALCOLM LOWRY, ed. by Kathleen Scherf. Copyright by The Estate of Malcolm Lowry. Reprinted by permission of SLL/Sterling Lord Literistic, Inc.

MacCaig, Norman: "Kingfisher," "Summer Farm," and "Return to Scalpay" from COLLECTED POEMS by Norman MacCaig, published by Chatto & Windus. Used by permission of The Random House Group Ltd.

MacDiarmid, Hugh: "Another Epitaph on an Army of Mercenaries," from SELECTED POETRY, ed. by Alan Riach and Michael Grieve. Copyright © 1992 by Michael Grieve. Reprinted by permission of New Directions Publishing Corp. and Carcanet Press Ltd. Excerpt from "Lament for the Great Music" and excerpt from "In Memoriam James Joyce" from COMPLETE POEMS, ed. by Michael Grieve and W. R. Aitken (1993). Copyright © 1993 by Michael Grieve. Reprinted by permission of Carcanet Press Ltd.

MacLeish, Archibald: "Ars Poetica" and "The Snowflake Which Is Now and Hence Forever" from COLLECTED POEMS 1917–1982 by Archibald MacLeish. Copyright © 1985 by The Estate of Archibald MacLeish. Reprinted by permission of Houghton Mifflin Co. All rights reserved.

MacNeice, Louis: Excerpt from "Autumn Journal," "The Sunlight on the Garden," "Bagpipe Music," "London Rain," and "Star-Gazer" from THE COLLECTED POEMS OF LOUIS MACNEICE, ed. by E. R. Dodds. Published by Faber & Faber Ltd. Reprinted with the permission of David Higham Associates Ltd.

MacPherson, Jay: "The Swan" and "A Lost Soul" from POEMS TWICE TOLD: THE BOATMAN AND WELCOMING DISASTER. Copyright © 1981 Oxford University Press. Reprinted by permission of Oxford University Press Canada.

Mahon, Derek: "A Disused Shed in Co. Wexford," "In Carrowdore Churchyard," and "Girls on the Bridge" from COLLECTED POEMS by Derek Mahon (1999) and "The Window" are reprinted by kind permission of the author c/o The Gallery Press, Loughcrew, Oldcastle, County Meath, Ireland.

Martinez, Dionisio D.: "In a Duplex Near the San Andreas Fault" and "What the Men Talk About When the Women Leave the Room: Steiglitz" from BAD ALCHEMY by Dionisio D. Martinez. Copyright © 1995 by Dionisio D. Martinez. Used by permission of W. W. Norton & Co., Inc.

Maxwell, Glyn: Excerpt from "Letters to Edward Thomas" from THE BREAKAGE by Glyn Maxwell (Faber & Faber, 1988). Copyright © 1988 by Glyn Maxwell. Reprinted by permission of Zachary Shuster Harmsworth on behalf of the author.

Meredith, William: "The Illiterate" and "Rhode Island" from EFFORT AT SPEECH: NEW AND SELECTED POEMS by William Meredith, published by TriQuarterly Books/Northwestern University Press in 1997. Copyright © 1997 by William Meredith. All rights reserved. Used by permission of Northwestern University Press and the author.

Merrill, James: "Arabian Night" from COLLECTED POEMS by James Merrill, ed. by J. D. McClatchy and Stephen Yenser, copyright © 2001 by the Literary Estate of James Merrill at Washington University. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc. "The Broken Home," "The Victor Dog," "Lost in Translation" from FROM THE FIRST NINE: POEMS 1946–1976 by James Merrill. Copyright © 1981, 1982 by James Merrill. Reprinted by permission of the Estate of James Merrill. "The Book of Ephraim: C" from THE CHANGING LIGHT AT SANDOVER by James Merrill. Copyright © 1976 by James Merrill. Reprinted by permission of the Estate of James Merrill.

Merwin, W. S.: "Losing a Language" from THE RAIN IN THE TREES by W. S. Merwin, copyright © 1988 by W. S. Merwin. "Whoever You Are" from THE RIVER SOUND by W. S. Merwin, copyright © 1999 by W. S. Merwin. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc. "The Drunk in the Furnace," "Odysseus," and "Separation," copyright © 2003 by W. S. Merwin. Reprinted with permission from The Wylie Agency.

Millay, Edna St. Vincent: "First Fig," "Second Fig," "Euclid Alone Has Looked on Beauty Bare," "Spring," "I, Being Born a Woman and Distressed," "The Buck in the Snow," "I Dreamed I Moved among the Elysian Fields," "Ragged Island," and "Armenonville" by Edna St. Vincent Millay. From COLLECTED POEMS, HarperCollins. Copyright © 1922, 1923, 1931, 1950, 1951, 1954, 1958, 1982 by Edna St. Vincent Millay and Norma Millay Ellis. All rights reserved. Reprinted by permission of Elizabeth Barnett, literary executor.

Momaday, N. Scott: "Headwaters," "The Eagle-Feather Fan," "The Gift," and "Two Figures" from THE GOURD DANCER by N. Scott Momaday. Copyright © 1976 by N. Scott Momaday. Reprinted by permission of the author.

Montague, John: "Like Dolmens Round My Childhood, the Old People," "Old Mythology," "The Trout," and "All Legendary Obstacles" from COLLECTED POEMS by John Montague (1995). Reprinted by kind permission of Wake Forest University Press and The Gallery Press, Loughcrew, Oldcastle, County Meath, Ireland, on behalf of the author.

Moore, Marianne: "Poetry," "No Swan So Fine," "The Fish," "A Grave," "To a Steamroller," copyright © 1935 by Marianne Moore, copyright renewed 1963 by Marianne Moore and T. S. Eliot. "What Are Years?" copyright © 1941 by Marianne Moore, copyright renewed 1972 by Marianne Moore. "Nevertheless," "The Mind Is an Enchanting Thing," copyright © 1944 by Marianne Moore, copyright renewed 1972 by Marianne Moore. Reprinted with the permission of Scribner, an imprint of Simon & Schuster Adult Publishing Group, and Faber & Faber Ltd. from THE COLLECTED POEMS OF MARIANNE MOORE. "To a Chameleon" from THE COMPLETE POEMS OF MARIANNE MOORE, copyright © 1954 by Marianne Moore, renewed. "The Steeple-Jack" from THE COMPLETE POEMS OF MARIANNE MOORE, copyright © 1951, 1970 by Marianne Moore, renewed 1979 by Lawrence E. Brinn and Louise Crane, Executors of the Estate of Marianne Moore. Used by permission of Viking Penguin, a division of Penguin Group (USA), Inc. and Faber & Faber Ltd.

Moraes, Dom: "Kanheri Caves" and "Rendevous" from "Two from Israel" from IN CINNAMON SHADE: NEW AND SELECTED POEMS (2001) by Dom Moraes. "Snow on a Mountain" from COLLECTED POEMS 1957–1987 by Dom Moraes. Reprinted by permission of Carcanet Press Ltd.

Morgan, Edwin: "Strawberries," "King Billy," and "The Dowser" from COLLECTED POEMS. Copyright © 1982 by Edwin Morgan. Reprinted with the permission of Carcanet Press Ltd.

Moss, Howard: "Tourists" from NEW SELECTED POEMS by Howard Moss (1985). First published in A SWIM OFF THE ROCKS by Howard Moss. Copyright © 1976 by Howard Moss. "The Persistence of Song" from SELECTED POEMS of Howard Moss. Copyright © 1971 by Howard Moss.

Muir, Edwin: "Adams's Dream," "Childhood," and "The Return of the Greeks" from COLLECTED POEMS by Edwin Muir, copyright © 1960 by Willa Muir. Used by permission of Oxford University Press, Inc. and Faber & Faber Ltd.

Muldoon, Paul: "Why Brownlee Left" from WHY BROWNLEE LEFT. Copyright © 1980 by Paul Muldoon. "Meeting the British" from MEETING THE BRITISH. Copyright © 1987 by Paul Muldoon. Reprinted with the permission of Wake Forest University Press and Faber & Faber Ltd. "Milkweed and Monarch" and "Third Epistle to Timothy" from POEMS 1968–1998 by Paul Muldoon. Copyright © 2001 by Paul Muldoon. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC and Faber & Faber Ltd.

Murray, Les: "Noonday Axeman" and "The Quality of Sprawl" from THE VERNACULAR REPUBLIC by Les A. Murray. Copyright © 1983, 1987, 1988 by Les A. Murray. Reprinted by permission of Persea Books, Inc. and Carcanet Press Ltd. "Once in a Lifetime, Snow" and "Morse" from RABBITER'S BOUNTY by Les Murray. Copyright © 1992 by Les Murray. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC and Carcanet Press Ltd. Published in Great Britain in COLLECTED POEMS by Les Murray (1998).

Nash, Ogden: "The Cow," "Reflections on Ice-Breaking," "Requiem," "Columbus," and "The Turtle," copyright © 1930, 1931, 1938 by Ogden Nash, renewed. Reprinted by permission of Curtis Brown, Ltd. from VERSES FROM 1929 ON and Andre Detusch Ltd., c/o Carlton Books from CANDY IS DANDY: THE BEST OF OGDEN NASH.

Nemerov, Howard: "The Goose Fish," "A Primer of the Daily Round," "The Blue Swallows," "Boy with Book of Knowledge," "A Cabinet of Seeds Displayed," and "Strange Metamorphosis of Poets" from THE COLLECTED POEMS OF HOWARD NEMEROV, copyright © 1977 by Howard Nemerov. Reprinted by permission of Margaret Nemerov.

Nicholson, Norman: "Halley's Comet" from COLLECTED POEMS by Norman Nicholson. Reprinted by permission of Davis Higham Associates Ltd. "To the River Duddon" is reprinted by permission of Faber & Faber Ltd.

O'Brien, Sean: "Cousin Coat" from COUSIN COAT: SELECTED POEMS, 1976–2001 by Sean O'Brien and "Welcome, Major Poet!" from DOWNRIVER by Sean O'Brien. Reprinted by permission of the publisher Pan Macmillan, London, UK.

O'Hara, Frank: "Why I Am Not a Painter," from COLLECTED POEMS by Frank O'Hara, copyright © 1971 by Maureen Granville-Smith, Administratrix of the Estate of Frank O'Hara. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc. "The Day Lady Died," "How to Get There," and "Ave Maria" from LUNCH POEMS by Frank O'Hara. Copyright © 1964 by Frank O'Hara. Reprinted by permission of City Lights Books.

Olson, Charles: "Merce of Egypt" and "Variations Done for Gerald Van de Wiele" from COLLECTED POETRY OF CHARLES OLSON, tr. and ed. by George Butterick. Copyright © 1987 Estate of Charles Olson (previously published poetry), © 1987 University of Connecticut (previously unpublished poetry). Reprinted with the permission of the University of California Press.

Ondaatje, Michael: "Driving with Dominic in the Southern Province We See Hints of the Circus" and "House on a Red Cliff" from HANDWRITING by Michael Ondaatje, copyright © 1987 by Michael Ondaatje. Used by permission of Ellen Levine Literary Agency/Trident Media Group and Bloomsbury Publishing PLC. "Letters and Other Worlds" from THE CINNAMON PEELER, copyright © 1979, 1989 by Michael Ondaatje. Reprinted by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc. and Ellen Levine Literary Agency/Trident Media Group.

Ormond, John: "Cathedral Builders" and "Lament for a Leg" from CATHEDRAL BUILDERS AND OTHER POEMS by John Ormond (1991). Reprinted by permission of Glenys Ormond Thomas.

Ormsby, Eric: "Starfish" and "Skunk Cabbage" from COASTLINES by Eric Ormsby. Copyright © 1992 by Eric Ormsby. Reprinted by permission of ECW Press, Toronto, Canada. "Origins" from FOR A MODEST GOD by Eric Ormsby. Copyright © 1997 by Eric Ormsby. Used by permission of Grove/Atlantic, Inc.

Page, P. K.: "Stories of Snow" and "Deaf-Mute in the Pear Tree" from THE HIDDEN ROOM (in 2 vols.) by P. K. Page (Erin, Ontario: The Porcupine's Quill, 1997). Reprinted by permission of the publisher.

Palmer, Michael: "I Do Not" from THE PROMISES OF GLASS, copyright © 1999 by Michael Palmer. Reprinted by permission of New Directions Publishing Corp. "Of this cloth doll which" from FIRST FIGURE, copyright © 1984 by Michael Palmer. Reprinted by permission of the author.

Parker, Dorothy: "Unfortunate Coincidence," "Résumé," and "One Perfect Rose" from DOROTHY PARKER: COMPLETE POEMS, published in Great Britain in THE COLLECTED DOROTHY PARKER. Copyright © 1999 by The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Reprinted by permission of Penguin, a division of Penguin Group (USA), Inc. and Gerald Duckworth & Co. Ltd.

"Pearl": Excerpt from PEARL, by anonymous, ed. and tr. by Sara de Ford and others. Copyright © 1967 by Harlan Davidson, Inc. Reprinted by permission.

Pinsky, Robert: "Essay on Psychiatrists, IV and V" from SADNESS AND HAPPINESS, copyright © 1975 by Princeton University Press. Reprinted with the permission of the author and the publisher. "ABC" from JERSEY RAIN by Robert Pinsky. Copyright © 2000 by Robert Pinsky. "A Long Branch Song" and "The Street" from THE FIGURED WHEEL: NEW AND COLLECTED POEMS 1966–1996 by Robert Pinsky. Copyright © 1996 by Robert Pinsky. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC.

Plath, Sylvia: "Ariel," "Elm," "Tulips," "Morning Song," "Lady Lazarus," and "Daddy" from ARIEL by Sylvia Plath. Copyright © 1961, 1962, 1963, 1965 by Ted Hughes. Copyright renewed. From ARIEL by Sylvia Plath. Reprinted by permission of HarperCollins Publishers, Inc. and Faber & Faber Ltd. "Colossus" from THE COLOSSUS AND OTHER POEMS by Sylvia Plath, copyright © 1962 by Sylvia Plath. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc. and Faber & Faber Ltd.

Porter, Peter: "A Consumer's Report," "An Angel in Blythburgh Church," and "An Exequy" from COLLECTED POEMS. Copyright © 1983 by Peter Porter. Reprinted with permission of the author.

Pound, Ezra: "Portrait d'une Femme," "The Garden," "A Pact," "Ts'ai Chi'h," "In a Station of the Metro," "The River-Merchant's Wife: a Letter," "Hugh Selwyn Mauberley: Life and Contacts," "Medallion," and "The Seafarer" from PERSONAE, copyright © 1926 by Ezra Pound. Canto I and Canto XLV from THE CANTOS OF EZRA POUND, copyright © 1934, 1937, 1940, 1948, 1956, 1959, 1962, 1963, 1966, and 1968 by Ezra Pound. Reprinted by permission of New Directions Publishing Corp. and Faber & Faber Ltd.

Pratt, E. J.: "Come Not the Seasons Here" and "From Stone to Steel" from E. J. Pratt, COMPLETE POEMS, ed. by Sandra Djwa and R. G. Mayles. Copyright © 1989 by University of Toronto Press. Reprinted with permission of the publisher.

Raine, Craig: "The Onion Memory," "A Martian Sends a Postcard Home," and "For Hans Keller" from COLLECTED POEMS, 1978–1999 by Craig Raine. Reprinted by permission of David Godwin Associates on behalf of the author.

Ralegh, Sir Walter: "Fortune Hath Taken Thee Away, My Love" from "A Lost Poem by Queen Elizabeth I" by L. G. Black, TIMES LITERARY SUPPLEMENT, May 23, 1968, 535. Reprinted by permission.

Ramanujan, A. K.: "Snakes," "Breaded Fish," and "Self-Portrait" from THE STRIDERS by A. K. Ramanujan (1966). Reprinted with the permission of the Estate of A. K. Ramanujan.

Randall, Dudley: "Ballad of Birmingham" from POEM COUNTERPOEM by Margaret Danner and Dudley Randall (Detroit: Broadside Press, 1969). Copyright © 1966 by Margaret Danner and Dudley Randall. Reprinted with the permission of Dudley Randall.

Ransom, John Crowe: From SELECTED POEMS, 3rd ed., revised and enlarged by John Crowe Ransom, copyright © 1924, 1927 by Alfred A. Knopf, Inc. and renewed 1952, 1955 by John Crowe Ransom. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc. and Carcanet Press Ltd.

Reed, Henry: "Chard Whitlow" and "Lessons of War 1, 2" from COLLECTED POEMS of Henry Reed (1991), ed. by Jon Stallworthy. Reprinted by permission of Oxford University Press (UK).

Rich, Adrienne: Parts 1 and 8 of "Eastern War Time" from AN ATLAS OF THE DIFFICULT WORLD: POEMS 1988–1991 by Adrienne Rich. Copyright © 1991 by Adrienne Rich. "Modotti" from MIDNIGHT SALVAGE: POEMS 1995–1998 by Adrienne Rich. Copyright © 1999 by Adrienne Rich. "Aunt Jennifer's Tigers," copyright © 2002, 1951 by Adrienne Rich. "Snapshots of a Daughter-in-Law," copyright © 2002, 1967, 1963 by Adrienne Rich. "Orion," copyright © 2002 by Adrienne Rich. Copyright © 1969 by W. W. Norton & Co., Inc. "A Valediction Forbidding Mourning," copyright © 2002

by Adrienne Rich. Copyright © 1971 by W. W. Norton & Co., Inc. "Diving into the Wreck," copyright © 2002 by Adrienne Rich. Copyright © 1973 by W. W. Norton & Co., Inc. from THE FACT OF A DOORFRAME: SELECTED POEMS 1950–2001 by Adrienne Rich. Used by permission of the author and W. W. Norton & Co., Inc.

Robinson, Edward Arlington: "Richard Cory," "George Crabbe," "Reuben Bright," "Miniver Cheevy," "The Mill," "Mr. Flood's Party" are reprinted with the permission of Scribner, an imprint of Simon & Schuster, Adult Publishing Group, from THE COLLECTED POEMS OF EDWIN ARLINGTON ROBINSON by Edwin Arlington Robinson (N.Y.: Macmillan, 1961).

Roethke, Theodore: "Root Cellar," copyright © 1943 by Modern Poetry Association, Inc. "Child on Top of a Greenhouse," copyright © 1946 by Editorial Publications, Inc. "My Papa's Waltz," copyright © 1942 by Hearst Magazines, Inc. "The Lost Son," copyright © 1947 by Theodore Roethke. "Elegy for Jane," copyright © 1950 by Theodore Roethke. "The Waking," copyright © 1953 by Theodore Roethke. "I Knew a Woman," copyright © 1954 by Theodore Roethke. "Wish for a Young Wife," copyright © 1963 by Beatrice Roethke, Administratrix of the Estate of Theodore Roethke. "In a Dark Time," copyright © 1960 by Beatrice Roethke, Administratrix of the Estate of Theodore Roethke. From THE COMPLETE POEMS OF THEODORE ROETHKE. Used by permission of Doubleday, a division of Random House, Inc. and Faber & Faber Ltd.

Rukeyser, Muriel: "Ballad of Orange and Grape" by Muriel Rukeyser. Copyright © 1973 by Muriel Rukeyser. "Night Feeding" by Muriel Rukeyser. Copyright © 1951 and renewed 1979 by Muriel Rukeyser. "Rondel" by Muriel Rukeyser. Copyright © 1973 by Muriel Rukeyser. From A MURIEL RUKEYSER READER, ed. by Jan Heller Levi. Used by permission of W. W. Norton & Co., Inc. "Boy with His Hair Cut Short" by Muriel Rukeyser. Copyright © by William Rukeyser. Reprinted by permission of International Creative Management, Inc.

Sandburg, Carl: "Chicago" from CHICAGO POEMS, copyright © 1916 by Holt, Rinehart and Winston, Inc. and renewed 1944 by Carl Sandburg, reprinted by permission of Harcourt, Inc. "Grass" from CORNHUSKERS by Carl Sandburg, copyright © 1918 by Holt, Rinehart and Winston and renewed 1946 by Carl Sandburg, reprinted by permission of Harcourt, Inc.

Sarah, Robyn: "Courtney, Mentioned in Passing, Years After" and "Relics" from QUESTIONS ABOUT THE STARS (Brick Books, 1998). Reprinted with permission of the author.

Sassoon, Siegfried: "They," "The General," "Glory of Women," "Everyone Sang," "On Passing the New Menin Gate" from COLLECTED POEMS OF SIEGFRIED SASSOON by Siegfried Sassoon, copyright © 1918, 1920 by E. P. Dutton. Copyright © 1936, 1946, 1947, 1948 by Siegfried Sassoon. Used by permission of Viking Penguin, a division of Penguin Group (USA), Inc. and by kind permission of George Sassoon. "Christ and the Soldier" (1973) is used by kind permission of George Sassoon. Copyright © Siegfried Sassoon.

Schnackenberg, Gjertrud: "Darwin in 1881" and "Supernatural Love" from SUPERNATURAL LOVE: POEMS 1976–1992 by Gjertrud Schnackenberg. Copyright © 2000 by Gjertrud Schnackenberg. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC and Bloodaxe Books Ltd.

Schuyler, James: "Freely Espousing" and "Shimmer" from COLLECTED POEMS by James Schuyler. Copyright © 1993 by the Estate of James Schuyler. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC.

Seeger, Pete: "Where Have All the Flowers Gone?" Copyright © 1961 (Renewed) by Sanga Music, Inc. Reprinted with the permission of Sanga Music, Inc. Used by permission. All rights reserved.

Seth, Vikram: From THE GOLDEN GATE by Vikram Seth, copyright © 1986 by Vikram Seth. Used by permission of Random House, Inc.

Sexton, Anne: "The Truth the Dead Know" from ALL MY PRETTY ONES by Anne Sexton. Copyright © 1982 by Anne Sexton, renewed 1990 by Linda G. Sexton. "And One for My Dame" from LIVE OR DIE by Anne Sexton. Copyright © 1966 by Anne Sexton, renewed 1994 by Linda G. Sexton. Reprinted by permission of Houghton Mifflin Co. and Sterling Lord Literistic, Inc. All rights reserved.

Shore, Jane: "High Holy Days" from THE MINUTE HAND (Amherst: University of Massachusetts Press, 1987). Copyright © 1987 by Jane Shore. Reprinted by permission of the publisher.

Simic, Charles: "Prodigy" and "Watch Repair" from CHARLES SIMIC: SELECTED EARLY POEMS. Copyright © 1999 by Charles Simic. Reprinted by permission of George Braziller, Inc. "A Book Full of Pictures" from HOTEL INSOMNIA by Charles Simic, copyright © 1992 by Charles Simic, reprinted by permission of Harcourt, Inc. "Cameo Appearance" from WALKING THE BLACK CAT, copyright © 1996 by Charles Simic, reprinted by permission of Harcourt, Inc.

Sissman, L. E.: "Dying: An Introduction, IV and V" and "A Deathplace" from NIGHT MUSIC: POEMS by L. E. Sissman, ed. by Peter Davison. Copyright © 1999 by The President and Fellows of Harvard College. Reprinted by permission of Houghton Mifflin Co. All rights reserved.

Smith, Stevie: From COLLECTED POEMS OF STEVIE SMITH, copyright © 1972 by Stevie Smith. Reprinted by permission of New Directions Publishing Corp. and the estate of James MacGibbon.

Snodgrass, W. D.: From HEART'S NEEDLE by W. D. Snodgrass, copyright © 1959 by William Snodgrass. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc. and The Marvell Press. "Mementos, 1" from AFTER EXPERIENCE: POEMS AND TRANSLATIONS, copyright © 1967 by W. D. Snodgrass. Reprinted with permission of the author.

Snyder, Gary: "Four Poems for Robin" from THE BACK COUNTRY, copyright © 1968 by Gary Snyder. Reprinted by permission of New Directions Publishing Corp. "Instructions" from MOUNTAINS AND RIVERS WITHOUT END by Gary Snyder. Copyright © 1996 by Gary Snyder. Reprinted by permission of Counterpoint Press, a member of Perseus Books, LLC. "Above Pate Valley" from RIPRAP AND COLD MOUNTAIN POEMS, copyright © 1959 by Gary Snyder, is reprinted by permission of Avalon Publishing Group and the author.

Soto, Gary: "The Soup" and "Not Knowing" from NEW AND SELECTED POEMS by Gary Soto. Copyright © 1995 by Gary Soto. Used with permission of Chronicle Books LLC, San Francisco. Visit ChronicleBooks.com.

Soyinka, Wole: "Telephone Conversation," copyright © by Wole Soyinka. Reprinted by permission of the author.

Spender, Stephen: "I Think Continually of Those Who Were Truly Great" by Stephen Spender, copyright © 1964 by Stephen Spender, "Ultima Ratio Regum," copyright © 1942 and renewed 1970 by Stephen Spender, from SELECTED POEMS

by Stephen Spender. "Seascape," copyright © 1947 by Stephen Spender, from POEMS OF DEDICATION by Stephen Spender. Used by permission of Random House, Inc. and Ed Victor Ltd.

Stein, Gertrude: From "Stanzas in Meditation" from STANZAS IN MEDITATION AND OTHER POEMS. Used by permission of the Estate of Gertrude Stein, through its Literary Executor, Mr. Stanford Gann, Jr. of Levin & Gann, P.A.

Stevens, Wallace: From THE COLLECTED POEMS OF WALLACE STEVENS by Wallace Stevens, copyright © 1954 by Wallace Stevens and renewed 1982 by Holly Stevens. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc. and Faber & Faber Ltd.

Stevenson, Anne: "Temporarily in Oxford" from THE COLLECTED POEMS 1955–1995 (Bloodaxe Books, 2000) and "Arioso Dolente" from GRANNY SCARECROW (Bloodaxe Books, 2000). Reprinted by permission of the publisher.

Strand, Mark: "Always" from THE CONTINUOUS LIFE by Mark Strand, copyright © 1990 by Mark Strand. Part XVI and XX from THE DARK HARBOR by Mark Strand, copyright © 1993 by Mark Strand. "The Prediction" from SELECTED POEMS by Mark Strand, copyright © 1979, 1980 by Mark Strand. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc.

Swenson, May: "Motherhood" from NATURE by May Swenson. Copyright © 1994 by The Literary Estate of May Swenson. Reprinted by permission of Houghton Mifflin Co. All rights reserved. "Cardinal Ideograms" from THE COMPLETE POEMS TO SOLVE by May Swenson. "Waterbird" and "Goodbye, Goldeneye" from IN OTHER WORDS by May Swenson. Used with permission of The Literary Estate of May Swenson.

Tate, Allen: "Ode to the Confederate Dead" and "The Swimmers" from COLLECTED POEMS 1919–1976 by Allen Tate. Copyright © 1977 by Allen Tate. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC.

Thomas, Dylan: "The Force That Through the Green Fuse Drives the Flower," "The Hand That Signed the Paper," copyright © 1939 by New Directions Publishing Corp., "After the Funeral," copyright © 1938 by New Directions Publishing Corp., "The Hunchback in the Park," copyright © 1943 by New Directions Publishing Corp., "A Refusal to Mourn the Death, by Fire, of a Child in London," "Fern Hill," copyright © 1945 by The Trustees for the Copyrights of Dylan Thomas, "In My Craft or Sullen Art," copyright © 1946 by New Directions Publishing Corp., "Do Not Go Gentle into That Good Night," copyright © 1952 by Dylan Thomas, and "The Conversation of Prayer," copyright © 1967 by The Trustees for the Copyrights of Dylan Thomas, from THE POEMS OF DYLAN THOMAS. Reprinted by permission of New Directions Publishing Corp. and David Higham Associates.

Thomas, R. S.: "Welsh Language," "The View from the Window," "On the Farm," and "Lore" from COLLECTED POEMS, reprinted by permission of J. M. Dent, a division of The Orion Publishing Group, as the publisher.

Tomlinson, Charles: "Farewell to Van Gogh," "The Picture of J.T. in a Prospect of Stone," "Mr. Brodsky" from COLLECTED POEMS (1987) and "Ararat" from THE RETURN (1987). Reprinted by permission of Carcanet Press Ltd.

Toomer, Jean: "Face," "Georgia Dusk," "Harvest Song," "Portrait in Georgia," "Reapers" from CANE by Jean Toomer. Copyright © 1923 by Boni & Liveright, renewed 1951 by Jean Toomer. Used by permission of Liveright Publishing Corp.

Updike, John: "V.B. Nimble, V.B. Quick" from COLLECTED POEMS 1953–1993 by John Updike, copyright © 1993 by John Updike. Published in Great Britain in HOPING FOR A HOOPOE by John Updike. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc. and Victor Gollancz, a division of The Orion Publishing Group, as the publishers. "I Missed His Book, But I Read His Name" from COLLECTED POEMS 1953–1993 by John Updike, copyright © 1993 by John Updike. First published in TELEPHONE POLES AND OTHER POEMS by Deutsch 1963, Hamish Hamilton 1993, copyright © 1961, 1993 by John Updike. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc. and Penguin Books Ltd.

Van Duyn, Mona: "Letters from a Father" and "Falling in Love at Sixty-Five" from IF IT NOT BE I by Mona Van Duyn, copyright © 1959 by Mona Van Duyn. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc.

Walcott, Derek: "The Gulf" from THE GULF AND OTHER POEMS by Derek Walcott. Copyright © 1970, renewed 1998 by Derek Walcott. Used by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC and Jonathan Cape c/o The Random House Group Ltd. "XXVII" from Midsummer, "A Far Cry from Africa," "The Glory Trumpeter," "Nights in the Gardens of Port of Spain," and "Adios, Carenage" from "The Schooner Flight" from COLLECTED POEMS 1948–1984 by Derek Walcott. Copyright © 1986 by Derek Walcott. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC and Faber and Faber Ltd. Excerpt from OMEROS by Derek Walcott. Copyright © 1990 by Derek Walcott. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC and Faber & Faber Ltd.

Walker, Margaret: "Since 1619" and "Childhood" from THIS IS MY CENTURY: NEW AND COLLECTED POEMS by Margaret Walker. Copyright © 1987 by Margaret Walker. Reprinted by permission of The University of Georgia Press.

Warren, Robert Penn: "Bearded Oaks," "Masts at Dawn," "Evening Hawk," and "There's a Grandfather Clock in the Hall" from THE COLLECTED POEMS OF ROBERT PENN WARREN. Copyright © 1998 by Estate of Robert Penn Warren. Reprinted by permission of William Morris Agency, Inc. on behalf of the Estate of Robert Penn Warren.

Wilbur, Richard: "Piazza di Spagna, Early Morning," "A Baroque Wall-Fountain in the Villa Sciarra," "Love Calls Us to the Things of This World," and "A Plain Song for Comadre" from THINGS OF THIS WORLD, copyright © 1956 and renewed 1984 by Richard Wilbur, reprinted by permission of Harcourt, Inc. "Advice to a Prophet," copyright © 1959 and renewed 1987 by Richard Wilbur, and "Junk," copyright © 1961 and renewed 1989 by Richard Wilbur, from ADVICE TO A PROPHET AND OTHER POEMS, reprinted by permission of Harcourt, Inc. "First Snow in Alsace" from THE BEAUTIFUL CHANGES AND OTHER POEMS, copyright © 1947 and renewed 1975 by Richard Wilbur, reprinted by permission of Harcourt, Inc. "Cottage Street, 1953" from THE MIND-READER, copyright © 1972 by Richard Wilbur, reprinted by permission of Harcourt, Inc. and Faber & Faber Ltd. "Zea" from MAYFLIES: NEW POEMS AND TRANSLATIONS, copyright © 2000 by Richard Wilbur, reprinted by permission of Harcourt, Inc.

Williams, C. K.: "Repression" and Snow: II" from FLESH AND BLOOD. Copyright © 1987 by C. K. Williams. "The Question" from DREAM OF MIND. Copyright © 1992 by C. K. Williams. These poems were published in SELECTED POEMS by C. K. Williams. Copyright © 1994 by C. K. Williams. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC and Bloodaxe Books Ltd.

Williams, William Carlos: "Danse Russe," "Portrait of a Lady," "The Red Wheelbarrow," "Queen-Anne's-Lace," "This Is Just to Say," "Poem," "The Yachts" from COLLECTED POEMS: 1909–1939, vol. 1, copyright © 1938 by New Directions

Publishing Corp. "A Sort of a Song," and "Asphodel, That Greeny Flower, Book I" from COLLECTED POEMS 1939–1962, vol. 2, copyright © 1944 by William Carlos Williams, "Landscape with the Fall of Icarus" from COLLECTED POEMS 1939–1962, vol. 2, copyright © 1953 by William Carlos Williams. Reprinted by permission of New Directions Publishing Corp. and Carcanet Press Ltd.

Williamson, Greg: "Double Exposures, III and XXV" and "New Year's: A Short Pantoum" from ERRORS IN THE SCRIPT, copyright © 2001 by Greg Williamson. Reprinted with the permission of The Overlook Press. "Outbound" from THE SILENT PARTNER by Greg Williamson. Reprinted with permission of the author and Story Line Press (www.storylinepress.com).

Wilner, Eleanor: "Reading the Bible Backwards" and "High Noon at Los Alamos" from SARAH'S CHOICE (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1989). Reprinted by permission of the author.

Wright, Charles: "Quotations" from APPALACHIA by Charles Wright. Copyright © 1998 by Charles Wright. "As Our Bodies Rise, Our Names Turn into Light" from CHICKAMAUGA by Charles Wright. Copyright © 1995 by Charles Wright. "Chinese Journal" and "Homage to Claude Lorrain" from THE WORLD OF TEN THOUSAND THINGS: POEMS 1980–1990 by Charles Wright. Copyright © 1990 by Charles Wright. Reprinted by permission of Farrar, Straus & Giroux, LLC.

Wright, James: "A Note Left in Jimmy Leonard's Shack," "A Blessing," and "Speak" from ST. JUDAS. Copyright © 1959 by James Wright. Reprinted by permission of Wesleyan University Press.

Wright, Judith: "Woman to Man," "Train Journey," "Eve to Her Daughters," and "Request to a Year" from A HUMAN PATTERN: SELECTED POEMS (ETT Imprint, Sydney, 1996). Reprinted by permission of the publisher.

Wright, Kit: "A Love Song of Tooting," "Mantles," "My Version" from HOPING IT MIGHT BE SO by Kit Wright (Leviathan, 2000). Reprinted by permission of the author.

Wright, Richard: Reprinted from HAIKU: THIS OTHER WORLD by Richard Wright, published by Arcade Publishing, New York, N.Y. Copyright © 1998 by Ellen Wright. Reprinted by permission of the publisher and John Hawkins & Associates, Inc.

Yeats, W. B.: "Sailing to Byzantium," "Leda and the Swan," "Among School Children," copyright © 1928 by The Macmillan Company; copyright renewed 1956 by Georgie Yeats. "Byzantium," "Crazy Jane Talks with the Bishop," copyright © 1933 by The Macmillan Company, copyright renewed 1961 by Bertha Georgie Yeats. "Lapis Lazuli," "Long-Legged Fly," "The Circus Animals' Desertion," "Under Ben Bulben," copyright © 1940 by Georgie Yeats, copyright renewed 1968 by Bertha Georgie Yeats, Michael Butler Yeats, and Anne Yeats. Reprinted with the permission of Scribner, an imprint of Simon & Schuster Adult Publishing Group, from THE COLLECTED WORKS OF W. B. YEATS, VOLUME 1: THE POEMS, Revised, edited by Richard J. Finneran. Rights in the British Commonwealth excluding Canada were granted by A. P. Watt Ltd. on behalf of Michael B. Yeats.

Zarin, Cynthia: "The Ant Hill" and "Song" from FIRE LYRIC by Cynthia Zarin, copyright © 1993 by Cynthia Zarin. Used by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, a division of Random House, Inc.

Every effort has been made to contact the copyright holders of each selection. Rights holders of any selection not credited should contact W. W. Norton & Co., Inc., 500 Fifth Avenue, New York, NY 10110, for a correction to be made in the next reprinting of our work.

Index

ABC, 1916
A Bird, came down the Walk -, 1116
A born salesman, 1764
About suffering they were never wrong, 1471
About the Shark, phlegmatical one, 1055
About twilight we came to the whitewashed pub, 1702
Above Pate Valley, 1816
Above the fresh ruffles of the surf, 1411
A boy who played and talked and read with me, 1753
A brackish reach of shoal off Madaket, 1592
A breath leaves the sentences and does not come back, 1744
A broken ALTAR, Lord, thy servant rears, 367
A broken-down hotel on an inhospitable sea, 1974
Absalom and Achitophel: A Poem, 501
A card table in the library stands ready, 1720
accentual meter,* 2029
accentual-syllabic meter,* 2030
Accept, thou shrine of my dead saint, 363
According to Brueghel, 1283
A Clock stopped -, 1113
"A cold coming we had of it, 1359
a commingling sky, 1683
A construed entity too, 1701
Acquainted with the Night, 1237
Across the millstream below the bridge, 1625
A curious knot God made in paradise, 537
Adam Lay I-bounden, 79
Adam Posed, 562
Adam scrivain, if evere it thee bifalle, 70
Adam's Curse, 1190
Adam's Dream, 1338
Adam's Task, 1776
Adcock, Fleur, 1849
Adieu, farewell, earth's bliss, 283
Adieu, New-England's smiling meads, 719
Adlestrop, 1253
Adonais, 879
Advice to a Prophet, 1637
Advice to Young Ladies, 1483
Aeolian Harp, The, 805
Affliction (I), 369
A fox may steal your hens, sir, 595
After Apple-Picking, 1231
After great pain, a formal feeling comes -, 1117
After hot loveless nights, when cold winds stream, 1436
After Making Love We Hear Footsteps, 1742
After the dread tales and red yarns of the Line, 1372
After the Funeral, 1567
Afterwards, 1162
After you finish your work, 1538
Ah, Ben!, 360
Ah, did you once see Shelley plain, 1019
Ah, fading joy, how quickly art thou past!, 500
Ah in the thunder air, 1289
Ah silly pug, wert thou so sore afraid, 143
Ah Sun-flower, 744
Ah! think'st thou, Laura, then, that wealth, 713
Ah what avails the sceptered race, 831
Aiken, Conrad, 1370
Airy spirits, you who love, 707
Ajax, 390
Alas! for Peter, not a helping hand, 730
Alas, have I not pain enough, my friend, 213
Alexandreis, 554
alexandrine,* 2042
Ali, Agha Shahid, 1958
A line in long array where they wind betwixt green islands, 1073
Alison, 18
A little East of Jordan, 1112
All around the altar, huge lianas, 1879
All Day It Has Rained, 1573
"All Do Not All Things Well," 1772
All Greece hates, 1312
All human things are subject to decay, 517
All I know is a door into the dark, 1900
All in green went my love riding, 1392
alliteration,* 2029
All kings, and all their favorites, 299
All Legendary Obstacles, 1785
All others talked as if, 1680
All saints revile her, and all sober men, 1404
All's All, 1701
All the new thinking is about loss, 1919
All things within this fading world hath end, 464
Also I love him: me he's done no wrong, 1550
Altar, The, 367
Altermann, sipping wine, reads with a look, 1884
Although, great Queen, thou now in silence lie, 458
Although it is not yet evening, 1659
Always, 1863
Always so late in the day, 1863
Always the setting forth was the same, 1743
A man adrift on a slim spar, 1221
Amarantha sweet and fair, 473

Ambulances, 1655
Ammons, A. R., 1695
Among School Children, 1200
Among twenty snowy mountains, 1260
Amoretti, 190
Amor Mundi, 1134
A moth ate words; a marvellous event, 11
Amours de Voyage, 1051
A mouth. Can blow or breathe, 1541
A mouthful of language to swallow, 1752
A movie of Robert, 1707
An Agony. As Now., 1857
An agricultural labourer, who has, 1829
anapestic meter,* 2030
A narrow Fellow in the Grass, 1125
A nasty surprise in a sandwich, 1965
A Nation of trees, drab green and desolate grey, 1481
An axe angles, 1638
Ancestor (Kinsella), 1757
Ancestors (Brathwaite), 1806
Ancient person, for whom I, 553
And call ye this to utter what is just, 225
And Did Those Feet, 746
And If I Did What Then?, 144
And me happiest when I compose poems, 1530
—and not simply by the fact that this shading of, 1938
And now, at last, all proud deeds done, 1784
And One for My Dame, 1764
Andraitx—Pomegranate Flowers, 1290
Andrea del Sarto, 1034
And, the last day being come, Man stood alone, 1250
And then went down to the ship, 1306
Anecdote for Fathers, 780
Anecdote of the Jar, 1260
A New Year's white morning of hard new ice, 1969
Angel in Blythburgh Church, An, 1787
An incident here and there, 1315
An infant quirk of a pine, 1929
An ingenuity too astonishing, 1613
Annabel Lee, 981
Anne Hathaway, 2008
Anniversary, The, 299
Announced by all the trumpets of the sky, 942
A Noiseless Patient Spider, 1085
An old, mad, blind, despised, and dying king—, 871
Another Epitaph on an Army of Mercenaries, 1379
Another September, 1757
Another Sonnet to Black Itself, 346
Answer, The, 565
Anthem for Doomed Youth, 1386
Ant Hill, The, 2013
Any body can die, evidently. Few, 1916
anyone lived in a pretty how town, 1396
A peels an apple, while B kneels to God, 1624
A poem should be palpable and mute, 1381
Apology for the Revival of Christian Architecture in England, An, 1835
Apology for Writing So Much upon This Book, An, 499
apostrophe,* 2070
Apparition, The, 295
Apples on Champlain, 1955
April again, and it is a year again, 1644
April is the cruellest month, breeding, 1344
A quavering cry. Screech-owl?, 1534
Arabian Night, 1727
Ararat, 1748
Arc Inside and Out, The, 1699
A repeating fly, blueback, thumbthick—so gross, 1605
Are They Shadows, 235
Argument of His Book, The, 354
Ariel, 1842
Arioso Dolente, 1848
Aristocrats, 1621
Armadillo, The, 1519
Armenonville, 1385
Armistice Day, 1590
Armitage, Simon, 2021
Arnold, Matthew, 1087
A Route of Evanescence, 1126
Arrest of Oscar Wilde at the Cadogan Hotel, The, 1461
Arrivants, The: A New World Trilogy, 1803
Ars Poetica, 1381
Artillery, 378
Arundel Tomb, An, 1650
Ashbery, John, 1736
As he knelt by the grave of his mother and father, 1980
A short service, to be sure, 1681
As I came to the edge of the woods, 1242
As I in hoary winter's night stood shivering in the snow, 223
As I listened from a beach-chair in the shade, 1479
As imperceptibly as Grief, 1125
A single flow'r he sent me, since we met, 1391
As I one evening sat before my cell, 378
As I sd to my, 1705
As it fell out on a holy day, 112
As I Walked Out One Evening, 1468
As I was walking all alane, 102
Askew, Anne, 140
As kingfishers catch fire, dragonflies draw flame, 1167
Ask me no more where Jove bestows, 385
A slumber did my spirit seal, 790
A small wheel, 1891
A snake came to my water-trough, 1286
As once, if not with light regard, 674
A Sonnet is a moment's monument,—, 1106
As Our Bodies Rise, Our Names Turn into Light, 1867
Asphodel, That Greeny Flower, 1276
As Rochefoucauld his maxims drew, 577
As some brave admiral, in former war, 549
As some fond virgin, whom her mother's care, 621
assonance,* 2037
As the cat, 1275

As the team's head brass, 1255
A strife is grown between Virtue and Love, 216
Astronomy, 1179
Astrophil and Stella, 213
A sudden blow: the great wings beating still, 1200
As virtuous men pass mildly away, 306
A sweet disorder in the dress, 355
As we get older we do not get any younger, 1563
Atalanta in Calydon, 1146
At childhood's end, the houses petered out, 2008
At dinner, she is hostess, I am host, 1108
Athenian Garden, An, 1251
At Henry's bier let some thing fall out well, 1551
At home, in my flannel gown, like a bear to its floe, 1552
A thousand martyrs I have made, 549
At length, by so much importunity pressed, 641
At Luca Signorelli's Resurrection of the Body, 1976
At Melville's Tomb, 1410
At school I loved one picture's heavy greenness—, 1908
At the British War Cemetery, Bayeux, 1590
At the end of the garden walk, 1531
At the round earth's imagined corners, blow, 319
At the Tourist Center in Boston, 1894
At what time Jacob's race did leave of Egypt take, 226
At Woodlawn I heard the dead cry, 1495
Atwood, Margaret, 1894
Aubade (Kenney), 1954
Aubade (Larkin), 1658
A.U.C. 334: about this date, 1483
Auden, W. H., 1465
Audible trout, 1924
Auld Lang Syne, 753
Aunt Jennifer's Tigers, 1791
Aunt Rose—now—might I see you, 1714
Aurora Leigh, 948
Australia, 1481
Author to Her Book, The, 465
Autumn Journal, 1487
Autumn resumes the land, ruffles the woods, 1835
Ave Maria, 1730
Avenge, O Lord, thy slaughtered saints, whose bones, 418
Awake, my St. John! leave all meaner things, 623
A ward, and still in bonds, one day, 490
A week ago, when I had finished, 1994
A wind is ruffling the tawny pelt, 1820
A woman's face, with nature's own hand painted, 260
A woman wired in memories, 1799
Axe-fall, echo and silence. Noonday silence, 1885
ay, ay! . . . stutterer Demosthenes, 1873
Ay, beshrew you! by my fay, 90

Back out of all this now too much for us, 1244
Badger, 893
Bad Luck Card, 1432
Bagpipe Music, 1486
Baillie, Joanna, 760
Bald heads forgetful of their sins, 1193
Ballad of Birmingham, 1855
Ballad of Orange and Grape, 1538
ballad stanza,* 2041
Ballad upon a Wedding, A, 454
Ballad Which Anne Askewe Made and Sang When She Was in Newgate, The, 140
Banking Potatoes, 1950
Banks o' Doon, The, 759
Baraka, Amiri, 1856
Barbarians in a garden, softness does, 1927
Barbauld, Anna Laetitia, 705
Barely tolerated, living on the margin, 1737
Baroque Wall-Fountain in the Villa Sciarra, A, 1635 base rhythm,* 2032
basic forms,* 2039
Batter my heart, three-personed God; for You, 320
Battle-Hymn of the Republic, 1054
Bavarian Gentians, 1291
Baxter, James K., 1701
Beach Glass, 1609
Beachy Head, 715
Bean Eaters, The, 1587
Bearded Oaks, 1456
Bear on the Delhi Road, The, 1447
Beautiful Young Nymph Going to Bed, A, 575
Beauty of the Husband, The, 1970
Beat! Beat! Drums!, 1072
Because he was a butcher and thereby, 1213
Because I could not stop for Death -, 1119
Because you will suffer soon and die, your choices, 1911
Beethoven, Opus 111, 1610
Before the Birth of One of her Children, 464
Beggar's Opera, The, 594
Behn, Aphra, 540
Behold her, single in the field, 803
Bells for John Whiteside's Daughter, 1367
Below the thunders of the upper deep, 984
Bent double, like old beggars under sacks, 1387
Beowulf, 2
Berg, The, 1056
Bermudas, 476
Bernstein, Charles, 1967
Berryman, John, 1546
Berry Picking, 1532
Betjeman, John, 1460
Between my finger and my thumb, 1899
Birches, 1223
Birds and Fishes, 1323
Birney, Earle, 1447
Birth, 2006
birth in a narrow room, the, 1586
Birth of Tragedy, The, 1530
Bishop, Elizabeth, 1515
Bishop Orders His Tomb at Saint Praxed's Church, The, 1014
Bistro Styx, The, 1988
Bitter Fruit of the Tree, 1428
Bitter Withy, The, 112
Bix to Buxtehude to Boulez, 1719
Black beauty, which above that common light, 346

Black Jackets, 1770
Black maid, complain not that I fly, 366
Black reapers with the sound of steel on stones, 1398
Black Riders and Other Lines, The, 1220
Blake, William, 732
Blame Not My Lute, 131
blank verse,* 2039
Blessed Damozel, The, 1102
Blessing, A, 1750
Bloody Men, 1947
Blow, Blow, Thou Winter Wind, 273
Blue Girls, 1368
Blue Swallows, The, 1625
Blunden, Edmund, 1404
Bly, Robert, 1704
Boats in a Fog, 1321
Bogan, Louise, 1406
Boland, Eavan, 1938
Bonny Barbara Allan, 107
Book Full of Pictures, A, 1892
Book of Ephraim, The, 1725
Book of Thel, The, 737
Book of Yolek, The, 1672
Boots of Spanish Leather, 1854
Born Yesterday, 1648
Borough, The, 730
Boy Breaking Glass, 1589
Boy's Answer to the Blackmoor, The, 366
Boy with Book of Knowledge, 1626
Boy with His Hair Cut Short, 1537
Bradstreet, Anne, 458
Brag, sweet tenor bull, 1421
Brahma, 945
Brathwaite, Edward Kamau, 1803
Brave infant of Saguntum, clear, 337
Breaded Fish, 1802
Break, Break, Break, 994
Break of Day in the Trenches, 1373
Bresson's Movies, 1707
Bridge, The, 1415
Briggflatts, 1421
Bright Star, 940
Broken Appointment, A, 1154
Broken Home, The, 1716
Brontë, Emily, 1046
Brooke, Rupert, 1324
Brooks, Gwendolyn, 1586
Brown, George Mackay, 1627
Brown, Sterling A., 1426
Browning, Elizabeth Barrett, 947
Browning, Robert, 1009
Brownjohn, Alan, 1829
Bruisingly cradled in a Harvard chair, 1766
Brute Image, 1740
Bryant, William Cullen, 902
Buckdancer's Choice, 1663
Buck in the Snow, The, 1384
Bunting, Basil, 1421
Burden, 1666
Buried Graves, The, 1998
Burning Babe, The, 222
Burns, Robert, 747
Bush, 1492
Bushed, 1447
Busy old fool, unruly sun, 295
But anxious cares the pensive nymph oppressed, 614
Butcher's Wife, The, 2005
But do not let us quarrel any more, 1034
But love whilst that thou mayst be loved again, 231
But peace, I must not quarrel with the will, 450
But where they may return with honor's grace, 352
Bynner, Witter, 1269
By now when you say I stop somewhere waiting for you, 1745
Byron, Lord (George Gordon), 833
By the lake at Armenonville in the Bois de Boulogne, 1385
By the rude bridge that arched the flood, 941
By the shores of Gitche Gumee, 954
By this he knew she wept with waking eyes, 1107
Bytwene Mersh and Averil, 18
Byzantium, 1202

Cabinet of Seeds Displayed, A, 1627
Caedmon, 1680
Cædmon's Hymn, 1
Caelica, 206
caesura,* 2028
Call the roller of big cigars, 1256
Cameo Appearance, 1893
Campbell, Roy, 1436
Campion, Thomas, 278
Canal Bank Walk, 1453
Candy, 1437
Can I not sin, but thou wilt be, 361
Can life be a blessing, 501
Canonization, The, 296
Canterbury Tales, The, 17
Cantos, The, 1306
Can we not force from widowed poetry, 388
canzone,* 2046
Cardinal Ideograms, 1541
Care-charmer Sleep, son of the sable Night, 232
Careful observers may foretell the hour, 569
Carew, Thomas, 385
Carol of Agincourt, A, 84
Carried her unprotesting out the door, 1587
Carrion Comfort, 1169
Carroll, Lewis, 1135
Carson, Anne, 1969
Casabianca (Bishop), 1515
Casabianca (Hemans), 899
Castaway, The, 702
Casting and Gathering, 1906
catalectic,* 2030
Cathedral Builders, 1681
Cattle out of their byres are dungy still, lambs, 1911
Cause you don't love me, 1432
Causley, Charles, 1590
Cavalry Crossing a Ford, 1073

Cavendish, Margaret, 499
Caxtons are mechanical birds with many wings, 1943
Celts, The, 1441
Certain things here are quietly American—, 1827
Chambered Nautilus, The, 974
Channel Firing, 1157
Chard Whitlow, 1563
Charge of the Light Brigade, The, 1005
Chaucer, Geoffrey, 19
Chicago, 1252
"Childe Roland to the Dark Tower Came," 1020
Childhood (Muir), 1336
Childhood (Walker), 1577
Child of Distress, who meet'st the bitter scorn, 706
Child on Top of a Greenhouse, 1494
Children, if you dare to think, 1401
Chillen Get Shoes, 1428
Chinese Drawings, 1270
Chinese Journal, 1866
Christ and the Soldier, 1317
Christmas is my name, far have I gone, have I gone, have I gone, 122
Christopher, Nicholas, 1973
Church Going, 1649
Circus Animals' Desertion, The, 1207
Cities burn behind us; the lake glitters, 1686
City in the Sea, The, 976
City Limits, The, 1698
Clampitt, Amy, 1609
Clare, John, 893
Classics Society, 1873
clause,* 2056
Clay is the word and clay is the flesh, 1451
Clearances, 1905
Clear water in a brilliant bowl, 1266
clerihew,* 2046
Clod & the Pebble, The, 742
Close by those meads, forever crowned with flowers, 610 closed couplet,* 2040
closed forms, 2048
Closed like confessionals, they thread, 1655
Cloud, The, 874
Cloud-puffball, torn tufts, tossed pillows | flaunt forth, then chevy on an air-, 1071
Clough, Arthur Hugh, 1051
Coal, 1858
Cold as No Plea, 1440
Cold Green Element, The, 1531
Cold in the earth—and the deep snow piled above thee, 1047
Cold snap. Five o'clock, 1954
Coleridge, Samuel Taylor, 805
Coleridge received the Person from Porlock, 1441
Colin Clout, 92
Collar, The, 379
Collins, Billy, 1917
Collins, William, 613
Colossus, The, 1836
Columbus, 1438
Come Away, Come Away, Death, 275
Come away! come, sweet love!, 119
Come In, 1242
Come live with me and be my love, 256
Come, madam, come, all rest my powers defy, 312
Come, my Celia, let us prove, 331
Come Not the Seasons Here, 1270
Come on, my partners in distress, 653
Come sleep, Oh sleep, the certain knot of peace, 215
Comes not the springtime here, 1270
Come to me in the silence of the night, 1128
Come to your heaven, you heavenly choirs, 223
Come, worthy Greek, Ulysses, come, 233
common meter,* 2041
Common Sense, 1829
Communication Which the Author Had to London, Before She Made Her Will, A, 146
Complacencies of the peignoir, and late, 1257
Complaint to His Purse, 69
complement,* 2055
Composed upon Westminster Bridge, September 3, 1802, 795 composite forms,* 2046
Comus, 415
Conch from Sicily, A, 1930
Concord Hymn, 941
concrete poetry,* 2051
Condemned to Hope's delusive mine, 664
Condemn me not, I make so much ado, 499
Conjured, 1429
Consumer's Report, A, 1786
contend in a sea which the land partly encloses, 1275
Convent Threshold, The, 1130
Convergence of the Twain, The, 1156
Conversation of Prayer, The, 1570 coordinate,* 2057
coordinating conjunction,* 2057
Cope, Wendy, 1947
Corinna, pride of Drury-Lane, 575
Corinna's Going A-Maying, 356
Cormorant in Its Element, The, 1614
Corn, Alfred, 1929
Coronet, The, 475
Corpus Christi Carol, The, 83
Correct but cautious, that first night, we asked, 1725
Correspondence School Instructor Says Goodbye to His Poetry Students, The, 1741
Corso, Gregory, 1807
Corsons Inlet, 1695
Cottage Street, 1953, 1640
Could our first father, at his toilsome plow, 562
Counting the Mad, 1684
couplet,* 2040
"Courage!" he said, and pointed toward the land, 988
Courtney, Mentioned in Passing, Years After, 1956
Cousin Coat, 1992
Cow, The, 1437
Cowley, Abraham, 470
Cowper, William, 695

Crabbe, George, 723
Cramped like sardines on the Queens, and sedated, 1660
Crane, Hart, 1410
Crane, Stephen, 1220
Crashaw, Richard, 468
Crazy Jane Talks with the Bishop, 1204
Creeley, Robert, 1705
Cromwell, our chief of men, who through a cloud, 417
Cross, 1431
Crossing Alone the Nighted Ferry, 1180
Crossing Brooklyn Ferry, 1066
Crossing the Bar, 1008
Crossing the street, 1716
Cross of Snow, The, 956
Crown of Sonnets Dedicated to Love, A, 351
Crucified Lord, you swim upon your cross, 1834
Cruelty has a Human heart, 741
Crying and crying, 1502
Cuckoo Song, The, 15
Cullen, Countee, 1443
Cummings, E. E., 1392
Cupid and My Campaspe, 207
Curnow, Allen, 1528
curtal sonnet,* 2044
Cyriack, Whose Grandsire, 419

Dacca Gauzes, The, 1958
dactylic meter,* 2030
Daddy, 1840
Daddy would drop purple-veined vines, 1950
Daffodils, 1814
Dalliance of the Eagles, The, 1078
Daniel, Samuel, 230
Danse Russe, 1272
Dark Harbor, 1864
Darkling Thrush, The, 1155
Darwin in 1881, 2000
Daughters of Time, the hypocritic Days, 946
Davie, Donald, 1641
Davison, Peter, 1751
Day Lady Died, The, 1728
Day of Judgment, The, 589
Days, 946
Dead, The, 1044
Dead Man's Dump, 1374
Dead Soldiers, 1961
Deaf-Mute in the Pear Tree, 1584
Dear Eustatio, I write that you may write me an answer, 1051
Death, 384
Death, be not proud, though some have called thee, 320
Death in Leamington, 1460
Death is in your house, but I'm out here, 1877
Death of the Ball Turret Gunner, The, 1553
Deathplace, A, 1767
Death Sentence, The, 1440
Death the Painter, 1673
Death, thou wast once an uncouth hideous thing, 384
Deeper than sleep but not so deep as death, 1537
Definition of Love, The, 480
Dejection: An Ode, 828
De la Mare, Walter, 1225
Delia, 230
Delight in Disorder, 355
Delirium in Vera Cruz, 1503
Denial, 374
Deo gracias, Anglia, 84
Description of a City Shower, A, 569
Description of Cooke-ham, The, 288
Description of the Morning, A, 568
Deserted Village, The, 686
Design, 1240
Desire, though thou my old companion art, 218
Destruction of Sennacherib, The, 834
Dialogue between the Soul and Body, A, 477
Dickey, James, 1661
Dickinson, Emily, 1110
Did I, my lines intend for public view, 556
Didst thou not find the place inspired, 453
Digging, 1899
Digging a new, 1957
dimeter,* 2032
Ding-Donging, 1426
Dinner Guest: Me, 1435
Dirce, 832
Directive, 1244
direct object,* 2055
Dirge, 390
Disabled Debauchee, The, 549
Disappointment, The, 541
Disarmed with so genteel an air, 565
Discipline, 382
Display thy breasts, my Julia, there let me, 358
Distant Fury of Battle, The, 1831
Disused Shed in Co. Wexford, A, 1921
Divine Image, A (Songs of Experience), 741
Divine Image, The (Songs of Innocence), 735
Diving into the Wreck, 1797
Divorced, but friends again at last, 1942
Dodgson, Charles Lutwidge, 1135
Does the Eagle know what is in the pit?, 737
Does the road wind up-hill all the way?, 1129
dogwood flakes, 1512
Dolls Museum in Dublin, The, 1939
Done Is a Battle, 89
Don Juan, 837
Donne, John, 293
Do Not Go Gentle into That Good Night, 1572
Do not weep, maiden, for war is kind, 1221
Don't talk to me of love. I've had an earful, 1966
Doomsday, 1311
D'Orléans, Charles, 77
Double Exposures, 2024
double syntax,* 2061
Doubt of Future Foes Exiles My Present Joy, The, 142
Douglas, Keith, 1620
Douglas Tragedy, The, 97
Dover Beach, 1101

Dover Bitch, The, 1668
Dove, Rita, 1985
Down a broad river of the western wilds, 901
Downhill I came, hungry, and yet not starved, 1254
Down in Atlanta, 1426
Dowser, The, 1619
Dowson, Ernest, 1211
Do ye, o congregation, 391
dramatic monologues,* 2040
dramatic poetry,* 2027
Drayton, Michael, 235
Dream of Jealousy, A, 1902
Dreams fled away, this country bedroom, raw, 1757
Dream Songs, The, 1548
Dream Variations, 1431
Drink to me only with thine eyes, 331
Driving with Dominic in the Southern Province We See Hints of the Circus, 1935
Droning a drowsy syncopated tune, 1429
Droning autumn rain, 1503
Drummer Hodge, 1154
Drunk in the Furnace, The, 1743
Dryden, John, 500
Dufault, Peter Kane, 1665
Duffy, Carol Ann, 2007
Dulce Et Decorum Est, 1387
Dunbar, Paul Laurence, 1222
Dunbar, William, 86
Dunciad, The, 638
Dunn, Douglas, 1927
Dürer would have seen a reason for living, 1331
During Wind and Rain, 1160
Dusk, 1775
Dusting, 1987
Dying: An Introduction, 1766
Dying Speech of an Old Philosopher, 833
Dylan, Bob, 1854

Eagle, The, 1004
Eagle-Feather Fan, The, 1861
Earth has not anything to show more fair, 795
Earthly Paradise, The, 1143
East Anglian Bathe, 1462
East Coast Journey, 1702
Easter 1916, 1194
Eastern War Time, 1799
Easter Wings, 368
Eberhart, Richard, 1450
Ecce Homo, 1581
Echo (C. Rossetti), 1128
Echoes (Lorde), 1860
Echo of the clocktower, footstep, 1972
Ecstasy, The, 307
Eden Rock, 1591
Eighth Air Force, 1553
Eldorado, 980
Elegies (Dunn), 1928
elegy,* 2048
Elegy (Keyes), 1644
Elegy, An (Jonson), 335
Elegy for Jane, 1499
Elegy XIX. To His Mistress Going to Bed, 312
Elegy VII, 311
Elegy upon the Death of the Dean of Paul's, Dr. John Donne, An, 388
Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard, 669
Elemental, 1288
Eliot, T. S., 1340
elision,* 2030
Elixir, The, 383
Elizabeth I, Queen, 142
Elliot, Jean, 677
Elm, 1839
Emerson, Ralph Waldo, 941
Emperor of Ice-Cream, The, 1256
Empson, William, 1463
end rhymes,* 2037
end-stopped lines,* 2034
Energy in Sweden, 1693
England! Awake! Awake! Awake!, 747
England in 1819, 871
England's Dead, 897
English Are So Nice!, The, 1290
English sonnet,* 2043
enjambment,* 2034
envoy,* 2045
Epic, 1453
epic poetry,* 2027
Epilogue, 1605
Epistle from Mrs. Yonge to Her Husband, 643
Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot, 626
Epistle to Miss Blount, 621
Epitaph, 526
Epitaph on a Hare, 696
Epitaph on an Army of Mercenaries, 1180
Epitaph on Elizabeth, L. H., 328
Epitaphs of the War, 1182
Epithalamion, 195
Equinox 1980, 1751
Erdrich, Louise, 2005
Erotic Philosophers, The, 1688
Essay on Criticism, An, 596
Essay on Man, in Four Epistles, An, 623
Essay on Psychiatrists, 1913
Eternity, 746
Euclid Alone Has Looked on Beauty Bare, 1383
Evangeline, 951
Evening Hawk, 1459
Even now that care, which on thy crown attends, 226
Even now there are places where a thought might grow—, 1921
Eve of St. Agnes, The, 907
Every day a wilderness—no, 1987
Every Friday morning my grandfather, 1806
Every October millions of little fish come along the shore, 1323
Everyone Sang, 1319
Everyone suddenly burst out singing, 1319
Eve to Her Daughters, 1579
Examination at the Womb-Door, 1813
Exequy, An, 1788

Exequy to His Matchless, Never-to-Be-Forgotten Friend, An, 363
Exile, 1753
Experience, though noon auctoritee, 39
Explosion, The, 1657
Expostulation and Reply, 763
Ex-Queen Among the Astronomers, The, 1849
Eye-Opener, 1504
eye rhymes,* 2038
Ezekiel Saw the Wheel, 1059

Fable, A, 566
Face, 1398
Facing It, 1949
Faerie Queene, The, 165
Fair is my love, and cruel as she's fair, 231
Fair lovely maid, or if that title be, 548
Fair seedtime had my soul, and I grew up, 781
Fair Singer, The, 480
"Faith" is a fine invention, 1113
Falling in Love at Sixty-Five, 1631
falling meter,* 2031
False Security, 1463
Fame is a bee, 1127
Fame's pillar here at last we set, 361
Far back when I went zig-zagging, 1795
Far Cry from Africa, A, 1820
Farewell (Clare), 896
Fare Well (De la Mare), 1226
Farewell (sweet Cooke-ham) where I first obtained, 288
Farewell, thou art too dear for my possessing, 264
Farewell, thou child of my right hand, and joy, 323
Farewell to America, A. To Mrs. S. W., 719
Farewell, too little, and too lately known, 523
Farewell to the bushy clump close to the river, 896
Farewell to Van Gogh, 1746
Far from Home, 1974
Farmer's Bride, The, 1216
Fate, 946
"Father, father, where are you going?, 736
Father of all! in every age, 635
Father studied theology through the mail, 1892
Fayre is my love, when her fayre golden heares, 194
Fear No More the Heat o' the Sun, 276
Feathers up fast, and steeples; then in clods, 1643
Features unseen embers and tongs once worried, 1727
Feel for your bad fall how could I fail, 1547
Felix Randal, 1168
feminine rhymes,* 2037
Fenton, James, 1961
Ferlinghetti, Lawrence, 1606
Fern Hill, 1571
Field Hospital, A, 1554
Figlio Maggiore, 1507
Filling her compact & delicious body, 1548
Filling Station, 1517
Finch, Anne, Countess of Winchilsea, 556
Fine Knacks for Ladies, 119
First Fig, 1382
First having read the book of myths, 1797
First Love, 895
First Night, A, 1666
first paeon,* 2035
First Snow in Alsace, 1632
First Song, 1740
First Time In, 1372
Fish, The (Bishop), 1516
Fish, The (Moore), 1328
Fit of Rhyme against Rhyme, A, 332
FitzGerald, Edward, 961
Fitzgerald, Robert, 1507
Five A.M., the Fourth of July, 1756
Five hours, (and who can do it less in?), 572
Five years have passed; five summers, with the length, 765
Flat on the bank I parted, 1785
"Flawless" is the word, no doubt, for this third of May, 1492
Flea, The, 309
Flee fro the prees and dwelle with soothfastnesse, 69
Fletcher, John, 345
Flood-tide below me! I see you face to face!, 1066
Flower, The, 380
Flowers (Atwood), 1896
Flowers (Cope), 1948
Flowers of the Forest, The, 677
Fog over the base: the beams ranging, 1554
Follow Thy Fair Sun, 279
foot,* 2030
For a good decade, 1743
Force That Through the Green Fuse Drives the Flower, The, 1566
Forefathers, 1404
Foreign Gate, The, 1645
Forerunners, The, 381
Forge, The, 1900
Forget Not Yet, 131
For God's sake hold your tongue, and let me love, 296
For Hans Keller, 1944
For H. V. (1901–1927), 1559
For I can snore like a bullhorn, 1742
For I will consider my Cat Jeoffry, 625
Forsaken Garden, A, 1150
For Sidney Bechet, 1648
For That He Looked Not upon Her, 144
For the Union Dead, 1603
For three years, out of key with his time, 1298
Fortune hath taken thee away, my love, 158
Forty-two years ago (to me if to no one else, 1490
Fosterling, 1908
found poetry,* 2050
Fountain, The, 1643
Four Poems for Robin, 1817
Four Quartets, 1360
fourteener,* 2033
Fowls in the Frith, 19
Fragments, 1252
Fra Lippo Lippi, 1026

Framed in her phoenix fire-screen, Edna Ward, 1640
"Frater Ave atque Vale," 1008
"Fred, where is north?," 1238
Freely Espousing, 1683
free verse,* 2048
Freneau, Philip, 716
frequently unasked questions, 1968
Fresh spring the herald of loves mighty king, 193
Friend of the wretched! wherefore should the eye, 714
Friendship between Ephelia and Ardelia, 563
From epigram to epic is the course, 1626
From fairest creatures we desire increase, 257
From Far, from Eve and Morning, 1177
From harmony, from heavenly harmony, 524
From low to high doth dissolution climb, 804
From my mother's sleep I fell into the State, 1553
From narrow provinces, 1523
From plane of light to plane, wings dipping through, 1459
From Stone to Steel, 1271
From the Flats, 1162
From the hagg and hungry goblin, 124
From the House of Yemanjá, 1859
From the pier, at dusk, the dim, 1998
From the Wave, 1771
Front, A, 1554
Frost at Midnight, 810
Frost, Robert, 1227
Fuel filler cap, 1819
Full Fathom Five, 277
Full many a glorious morning have I seen, 261
Full Moon, 1310
Funeral, The, 309
Further in Summer than the Birds -, 1124
Fury of Aerial Bombardment, The, 1450
Futility, 1390

Gaily bedight, 980
Gallantry, 1622
Garden, The (Glück), 1931
Garden, The (Marvell), 484
Garden, The (Pound), 1296
Garden of Love, The, 744
Garden of Proserpine, The, 1148
Gascoigne, George, 144
Gascoigne's Lullaby, 145
Gascoyne, David, 1580
Gasholders, russet among fields. Milldams, marlpools, 1833
Gather ye rosebuds while ye may, 357
Gay, John, 594
Geese, The, 1975
General, The, 1318
General Prologue, The (to The Canterbury Tales), 19
George Burns likes to insist that he always, 1967
George Crabbe, 1212
Georgia Dusk, 1398
German Requiem, A, 1963
Get up and Bar the Door, 110
Get up! get up for shame! the blooming morn, 356
Ghetto, 1911
Ghost in the Martini, The, 1669
Gift, The, 1861
Gift Outright, The, 1243
Gilbert, W. S., 1144
Ginsberg, Allen, 1708
Gioia, Dana, 1972
Girls on the Bridge, 1924
Give him the darkest inch your shelf allows, 1212
Give me more love, or more disdain, 387
Give me my scallop-shell of quiet, 153
Glanmore Revisited, 1908
Glassed with cold sleep and dazzled by the moon, 1578
Glooms of the live-oaks, beautiful-braided and woven, 1163
Glory be to God for dappled things—, 1167
Glory of Women, 1319
Glory Trumpeter, The, 1821
Glück, Louise, 1931
Go and catch a falling star, 294
God, A Poem, 1965
God moves in a mysterious way, 695
God of our fathers, known of old, 1181
Go Down, Moses, 1057
God's Grandeur, 1166
God will have all or none; serve Him, or fall, 361
Go, for they call you, shepherd, from the hill, 1089
Golden Gate, The, 1994
Goldsmith, Oliver, 686
Go, lovely rose!, 393
Gone, I say and walk from church, 1764
Goodbye, 1575
Goodbye, Goldeneye, 1543
Goodbye, lady in Bangor, who sent me, 1741
Good Friday, 1613. Riding Westward, 317
Good Heav'n, I thank thee, since it was designed, 566
"Good-morning, good-morning!" the General said, 1318
Good-Morrow, The, 293
Goose Fish, The, 1623
Gorse Fires, 1911
Go sad or sweet or riotous with beer, 1627
Go, smiling souls, your new-built cages break, 468
Go, soul, the body's guest, 154
Go wailing verse, the infants of my love, 230
Graham, Jorie, 1975
Granted, we die for good, 1267
Grass, 1253
Grasshopper, The, 474
Grass resurrects to mask, to strangle, 1831
Grave, A, 1330
Graves, Robert, 1400
Gray, Thomas, 666
Great Hunger, The, 1451
Green Grow the Rashes, 747
Greenlaw, Lavinia, 2015
Green, Matthew, 645
Gretel in Darkness, 1931
Greville, Fulke, Lord Brooke, 206

Grey over Riddrie the clouds piled up, 1618
Grieve, Christopher Murray, 1376
Groping back to bed after a piss, 1656
Gr-r-r—there go, my heart's abhorrence!, 1010
Guardians, The, 1832
Guest, Barbara, 1616
Gulf, The, 1822
Gunn, Thom, 1768
Gurney, Ivor, 1371
Gut eats all day and lechers all the night, 328
Gypsies, 894

Haddock Fishermen, 1628
Had we but world enough, and time, 478
haiku,* 2035
Haiku: This Other World, 1502
Hail to thee, blithe Spirit!, 876
Hair—, 1398
Hair—braided chestnut, 1399
Half a league, half a league, 1005
Hall, Daniel, 1990
Hall, Donald, 1753
Halley's Comet, 1562
Hand That Signed the Paper, The, 1567
Hanging from the beam, 1054
Hap, 1152
Happy are men who yet before they are killed, 1387
Happy those early days! when I, 492
Happy ye leaves when as those lilly hands, 190
Hardy, Thomas, 1152
Harlem, 1433
Harlem Sweeties, 1432
Harriet, 1605
Harrison, Tony, 1872
Harry, whose tuneful and well-measured song, 416
Harvest Song, 1399
Haskell, 1269
Hass, Robert, 1919
Hatred and vengeance, my eternal portion, 704
Have you dug the spill, 1432
Having been tenant long to a rich lord, 367
Hayden, Robert, 1533
Haystack in the Floods, The, 1139
H. D. (Hilda Doolittle), 1311
He, 1545
Headwaters, 1861
Heaney, Seamus, 1899
Hearing one saga, we enact the next, 1641
Hear me, O God!, 333
Hear the voice of the Bard!, 740
Heartless Art, The, 1877
Heart's Needle, 1731
Heavy, heavy, heavy, hand and heart, 1679
Hecht, Anthony, 1667
He clasps the crag with crooked hands, 1004
He disappeared in the dead of winter, 1472
He found her by the ocean's moaning verge, 1109
He holds a volume open in his hands, 1626
He invented a rainbow but lightning struck it, 1447
He is quick, thinking in clear images, 1400
Helen, 1312
Helen, thy beauty is to me, 975
Hellas, 892
Helpless like this, 1803
Hemans, Felicia Dorothea, 897
He may our prophet, and our tutor prove, 352
Hence loathèd Melancholy, 402
Hence vain deluding Joys, 405
Henry in Ireland to Bill underground, 1551
heptameter,* 2033
Herbert, Edward, 346
Herbert, George, 367
Her body is not so white as, 1273
Here at the seashore they use the clouds over & over, 1608
Here Dead Lie We Because We Did Not Choose, 1180
Here Follows Some Verses upon the Burning of Our House July 10th, 1666, 466
Here from his prominent but thankfully, 1999
Here in Kansas is a school, 1269
Here in the scuffled dust, 1733
Here is the place; right over the hill, 957
Here lies Jonson with the rest, 360
Here lies, to each her parents' ruth, 323
Here lies, whom hound did ne'er pursue, 696
Here she lies, a pretty bud, 358
Here they went with smock and crook, 1404
Here, where the world is quiet, 1148
Her eyes the glowworm lend thee, 359
Heritage, 1443
Hero and Leander, 238
Heroes, 1705
heroic couplet,* 2040
heroic quatrain,* 2041
Her planted eye to-day controls, 946
Herrick, Robert, 354
Her Triumph, 334
He runs before the wise men: he, 1454
He saw her from the bottom of the stairs, 1228
He's gone, and all our plans, 1371
He sipped at a weak hock and seltzer, 1461
He stirs, beginning to awake, 1554
He thought he kept the universe alone, 1243
He who binds to himself a joy, 746
He would declare and could himself believe, 1242
hexameter,* 2032
Hid by the august foliage and fruit of the grape-vine, 1328
High Holy Days, 1952
High Noon at Los Alamos, 1881
Hill, A, 1667
Hill, Geoffrey, 1831
Hill Summit, The, 1107
Hill Wife, The, 1235
Hine, Daryl, 1868
His clumsy body is a golden fruit, 1584
His Golden Locks Time Hath to Silver Turned, 221
His Prayer to Ben Jonson, 358
Hog Butcher for the World, 1252
Holiday squeals, as if all were scrambling for their lives, 1815
Hollander, John, 1775

Hollow Men, The, 1356
Holmes, Oliver Wendell, 974
Holy Sonnets, 318
Holy Thursday [I.], 734
Holy Thursday [II.], 741
Holy Willie's Prayer, 750
Homage to Claude Lorraine, 1865
Homage to Mistress Bradstreet, 1546
Home Burial, 1228
Home-Thoughts, from Abroad, 1017
Hope, 1046
Hope, A. D., 1481
"Hope" is the thing with feathers -, 1114
Hopkins, Gerard Manley, 1166
Horatian ode,* 2048
Horatian Ode, An, 486
Hot Sun, Cool Fire, 221
Hourglass, 1492
House of Life, The, 1106
House on a Red Cliff, 1935
House Was Quiet and the World Was Calm, The, 1267
Housewifery, 540
Housman, A. E., 1173
Howard, Henry, Earl of Surrey, 137
Howard, Richard, 1778
How changed is here each spot man makes or fills!, 1095
How do I justify this stanza?, 1995
How do I love thee? Let me count the ways, 947
Howe, Julia Ward, 1054
How fresh, oh Lord, how sweet and clean, 380
Howl, 1708
How like a man, is Man, who rises late, 1504
How like an angel came I down!, 532
How like a winter hath my absence been, 265
How lucky that I ran into you, 1694
How many dawns, chill from his rippling rest, 1415
How many paltry, foolish, painted things, 237
How many years since 1619 have I been singing Spirituals?, 1576
How much better it seems now, 1972
How Pleasant to Know Mr. Lear, 1043
How should I praise thee, Lord! how should my rhymes, 372
How sleep the brave who sink to rest, 673
How Soon Hath Time, 410
How strange it seems! These Hebrews in their graves, 952
How strongly does my passion flow, 545
How sweet I roam'd from field to field, 732
How to Get There, 1729
How vainly men themselves amaze, 484
How well do I recall that walk in state, 1087
Huffy Henry hid the day, 1548
Huge vapors brood above the clifted shore, 712
Hughes, Langston, 1429
Hughes, Ted, 1810
Hugh Selwyn Mauberley, 1298
Hugo, Richard, 1674
Human emotions and cognition, 1968
Humpty Dumpty's Explication of Jabberwocky, 1136
Hunchback in the Park, The, 1568
Hurt Hawks, 1321
Hush little Lily, 1428
Hymn to God My God, in My Sickness, 322
Hymn to God the Father, A (Donne), 321
Hymn to God the Father, A (Jonson), 333
Hymn to Intellectual Beauty, 864

I, 1858
I Am, 896
—I am a gentleman in a dustcoat trying, 1367
I am a little world made cunningly, 318
I am a lonely being, scarred by swords, 10
I Am a Parcel of Vain Strivings Tied, 1045
I am a reaper whose muscles set at sundown. All my oats are cradled, 1399
iambic meter,* 2030
I am inside someone, 1857
I am not a painter, I am a poet, 1730
I Am of Ireland, 19
I am poor brother Lippo, by your leave!, 1026
I am still hurt, Plin, 1665
I am the man who looked for peace and found, 1647
I Am the Very Model of a Modern Major-General, 1144
I am: yet what I am none cares or knows, 895
I Askéd a Thief, 745
I, being born a woman and distressed, 1383
I bought a dollar and a half's worth of small red potatoes, 1763
I bring fresh showers for the thirsting flowers, 874
I called you because I could not stand alone, 1666
I can feel the tug, 1900
I cannot find it, 1503
I can't forget, 1634
I Care Not for These Ladies, 278
I caught a tremendous fish, 1516
I caught this morning morning's minion, king-, 1166
I celebrate myself, and sing myself, 1060
Ich am of Irlonde, 19
I chopped down the house that you had been saving to live in next summer, 1693
I couldn't do it again, 1931
I cry I cry, 1439
Idea, 236
Idea of Order at Key West, The, 1264
I Did but Prompt the Age, 417
I did not live until this time, 530
I Do Not, 1937
I doubt not God is good, well-meaning, kind, 1446
I Dreamed I Moved among the Elysian Fields, 1384
I dreamed this mortal part of mine, 354
If all the world and love were young, 152
If aught of oaten stop, or pastoral song, 615
If but some vengeful god would call to me, 1152
If by dull rhymes our English must be chained, 916
If Cynthia Be a Queen, a Princess, and Supreme, 157

I felt a Funeral, in my Brain, 1115
If ever two were one, then surely we, 465
If he from heaven that filched that living fire, 237
If honor to an ancient name be due, 528
If, in an odd angle of the hutment, 1553
If, in the month of dark December, 833
If I should die, think only this of me, 1327
If it form the one landscape that we, the inconstant ones, 1477
If I were giv'n to mirth, 'twould be more cross, 350
"If no love is, O God, what feele I so?, 67
I found a dimpled spider, fat and white, 1240
If poisonous minerals, and if that tree, 319
If the red slayer think he slays, 945
If there exists a hell—the case is clear—, 717
If the year is meditating a suitable gift, 1578
If thou dislik'st the piece thou light'st on first, 355
If when my wife is sleeping, 1272
If, whittler and dumper, gross carver, 1699
I grew up bent over, 1892
I had a picture by him—a print, I think—on my bedroom wall, 1865
I had a small, nonspeaking part, 1893
I had come to the house, in a cave of trees, 1406
I had heard, 1747
I have a boy of five years old, 780
I Have a Gentle Cock, 82
I Have a Young Sister, 81
I have been here before, 1105
I have been one acquainted with the night, 1237
I have done it again, 1843
I have eaten, 1274
I have heard that hysterical women say, 1024
I have lived in important places, times, 1453
I have met them at close of day, 1194
I hear a river thro' the valley wander (Hollander), 1777
I hear a river thro' the valley wander (Stickney), 1252
I heard a Fly buzz - when I died -, 1121
I hear that since you left me, 1947
I held it truth, with him who sings, 996
I hold my honey and I store my bread, 1586
I imagine this midnight moment's forest, 1810
I joy to see how in your drawen work, 193
I kenning through astronomy divine, 536
I Knew a Woman, 1500
I Know a Man, 1705
I know I am, 1435
I know that I shall meet my fate, 1193
I know the bottom, she says. I know it with my great tap root, 1839
I know what the caged bird feels, alas!, 1224
I laugh till my jaw unhinges, 2015
I leant upon a coppice gate, 1155
I like a look of Agony, 1115
I like a ship in storms was tossed, 594
I like the fox shall grieve, 596
I like to see it lap the Miles -, 1117
Illiterate, The, 1608
I'll tell thee everything I can, 1137
I'll tell thee now (dear Love) what thou shalt do, 301
I looked across the rollers of the deep, 1087
I Look into My Glass, 1153
I loved you first the time I saw you last, 1868
Il Penseroso, 405
I made a posy, while the day ran by, 377
I make a pact with you, Walt Whitman—, 1296
I met a traveler from an antique land, 870
I met the Bishop on the road, 1204
I'm going to try and overcome my limitation—, 1949
I Missed His Book, but I Read His Name, 1846
I'm Nobody! Who are you?, 1113
Imperfect Enjoyment, The, 551
imperfect rhyme,* 2038
Imperial Adam, 1482
Implies that some therefore, 1772
Impromptu, 637
I'm scared a lonely. Never see my son, 1550
In a coign of the cliff between lowland and highland, 1150
In a Dark Time, 1501
In a Duplex Near the San Andreas Fault, 2009
In Æsop's tales an honest wretch we find, 566
In all those stories the hero, 1705
In an Artist's Studio, 1129
In a solitude of the sea, 1156
In a somer seson, whan softe was the sonne, 71
In a stable of boats I lie still, 1661
In a Station of the Metro, 1297
In Broken Images, 1400
In Carrowdore Churchyard, 1921
Incident (Cullen), 1446
Indeed I must confess, 471
Independence Day Letter, 1756
independent clause,* 2057
Indian Burying Ground, The, 716
Indian Emperor, The, 500
Indian Woman's Death-Song, 901
I ne'er was struck before that hour, 895
I never lost as much but twice -, 1110
In Flanders Fields, 1225
In her storefront living room—, 1973
In Honor of that High and Mighty Princess, Queen Elizabeth, of Most Happy Memory, 458
In idle August, while the sea soft, 1825
In Italy, where this sort of thing can occur, 1667
In May, when sea-winds pierced our solitudes, 941
In Memoriam A.H.H., 996
In Memoriam [Easter 1915], 1254
In Memoriam James Joyce, 1380
In Memory of Radio, 1856
In Memory of W. B. Yeats, 1472
In Minako Wada's House, 1998
In My Craft or Sullen Art, 1572
In 1935, the year I was born, 1866
Innocent decision: to enjoy, 1678
In Nunhead Cemetery, 1218
In old Minako Wada's house, 1998
In Paris with You, 1966

In pious times, ere priestcraft did begin, 501
In Praise of Limestone, 1477
Inscription for a War, 1485
Inscription in a Beautiful Retreat Called Fairy Bower, 707
Insensibility, 1387
Inside the veins there are navies setting forth, 1704
In silent night when rest I took, 466
In sixth grade Mrs. Walker, 2011
In spite of all the learned have said, 716
Instructions, 1819
In such a night, when every louder wind, 563
Intellect, 945
internal rhyme*, 2037
In the dungeon-crypts, idly did I stray, 1048
In the falling snow, 1502
In the Grounds, 1927
In the hickory scent, 1950
In the last minutes he said more to her, 1905
In the long, sleepless watches of the night, 956
In the silence that prolongs the span, 1770
In the stillness after dawn we two, 1751
In the Waiting Room, 1521
In this little urn is laid, 360
In this strange labyrinth how shall I turn, 351
In this world, the isle of dreams, 361
In Time of "The Breaking of Nations," 1161
In Tooting, the tomato, 1946
Into these loves who but for passion looks, 236
intransitive*, 2055
Introduction ("Hear the voice of the Bard!"—Blake), 740
Introduction ("Piping down the valleys wild"—Blake), 733
Introduction, The (Finch), 556
In unexperienced infancy, 534
In vain, in vain,—the all-composing hour, 638
In vain to me the smiling mornings shine, 673
In vain you boast poetic names of yore, 637
inversion*, 2062
Invisible, chimerical, 1869
Inviting a Friend to Supper, 326
In wet May, in the months of change, 1788
In what estate so ever I be, 82
In Worcester, Massachusetts, 1521
In Xanadu did Kubla Khan, 809
I on my horse, and Love on me, doth try, 216
I placed a jar in Tennessee, 1260
I put your leaves aside, 1248
I reckon - When I count at all - , 1120
I remember the clumsy surgery: the face, 1559
I remember the dread with which I at a quarter past four, 1463
I remember the neckcurls, limp and damp as tendrils, 1499
I resemble everyone, 1803
Irish Airman Foresees His Death, An, 1193
irregular forms*, 2048
I said in my youth, 1491
is an enchanted thing, 1335
I saw a Ship of martial build, 1056
I saw eternity the other night, 493
I saw the best minds of my generation destroyed by madness, starving hysterical naked, 1708
I saw the spiders marching through the air, 1596
I scarce believe my love to be so pure, 300
I see them crowd on crowd they walk the earth, 1044
I shall never get you put together entirely, 1836
I Sing of a Maiden, 79
I sing of brooks, of blossoms, birds, and bowers, 354
I Sing the man that never equal knew, 554
I sing the tree is a heron, 1511
I sing this song about myself, full sad, 11
I sit in one of the dives, 1474
Is It Possible, 130
Is it you standing among the olive trees, 1865
I slept under rhododendron, 1817
Is My Team Ploughing, 1175
I sought a theme and sought for it in vain, 1207
I stand upon a hill and see, 1769
"Is there anybody there?" said the Traveller, 1225
Is this a holy thing to see, 741
Is to leave all and take the thread of Love, 351
I stood with three comrades in Parliament Square, 1590
I strove with none, for none was worth my strife, 833
I struck the board and cried, "No more, 379
I swive as well as other do, 552
Italian sonnet*, 2043
It could take from Monday to Thursday, 2016
I tell thee, Dick, where I have been, 454
It has a hole in it. Not only where I, 1979
I that have been a lover, and could show it, 344
I that in heill was and gladness, 86
I, the poet William Yeats, 1198
I Think Continually of Those Who Were Truly Great, 1505
I think of the Celts as rather a whining lady, 1441
I think very well of Susan but I do not know her name, 1249
I thought of walking round and round a space, 1906
I thought once how Theocritus had sung, 947
It Is a Beauteous Evening, 794
It is a clearing deep in a forest: overhanging boughs, 1704
It is a God-damned lie to say that these, 1379
It is an ancient Mariner, 812
It is June, it is June, 1290
It is like the first and last time I tried a Coleman, 1631
It is morning, Senlin says, and in the morning, 1370
It is not a range of a mountain, 1249
It is not what they built. It is what they knocked down, 1963
It is the clay that makes the earth stick to his spade, 1218
It is the sound of lions lapping, 1492
It is true, as someone has said, that in, 1864
It is 12:20 in New York a Friday, 1728

It is yourself you seek, 1407
It little profits that an idle king, 992
It mounts at sea, a concave wall, 1771
I, too, dislike it: there are things that are important beyond all this fiddle, 1329
It's a question of altitude, or latitude, 1740
It's a spring morning; sun pours in the window, 1688
It seemed that out of battle I escaped, 1389
It semes white and is red, 85
It's no go the merrygoround, it's no go the rickshaw, 1486
It's raining on black coal and warm wet ashes, 1909
It's the first night, I suppose, 1666
It's very cold, Catherine is bundled in a coat, a poncho on top of that, high boots, gloves, 1870
It Was a Lover and His Lass, 274
It was a Maine lobster town—, 1602
It was hot. A size too large, 1952
It was in and about the Martinmas time, 107
It was many and many a year ago, 981
It was not I who began it, 1579
It was taken some time ago, 1894
It was the dingiest bird, 1454
I've a pile of memories on my other, 1968
I've heard the lilting at our yowe-milking, 677
I've heard them lilting at loom and belting, 1448
I've known rivers, 1430
I wake and feel the fell of dark, not day, 1170
I wake to sleep, and take my waking slow, 1500
I walk down the garden paths, 1245
I walked where in their talking graves, 1590
I walk through the long schoolroom questioning, 1200
I Wandered Lonely as a Cloud, 801
I wander thro' each charter'd street, 744
I want a hero: an uncommon want, 837
I wanted so ably, 1706
I wanted to go down to where the roots begin, 1926
I was angry with my friend, 743
I was going up to say something, 1757
I was sent in to see her, 1758
I Was Sleeping Where the Black Oaks Move, 2006
I weep for Adonais—he is dead!, 879
I went for a walk over the dunes again this morning, 1695
I went into a public-'ouse to get a pint o'beer, 1181
I went to the Garden of Love, 744
I whole in body, and in mind, 147
I will arise and go now, and go to Innisfree, 1190
I will rise, 1313
I will strike down wooden houses; I will burn aluminum, 1753
I wish that I had spoken only of it all, 1250
I wonder, by my troth, what thou and I, 293
I wonder do you feel today, 1040
I wonder, Duddon, if you still remember, 1561
"I won't go with you. I want to stay with Grandpa!," 1597
I work all day, and get half-drunk at night, 1658
I would not paint - a picture -, 1116
I would to Heaven that I were so much clay, 837
I wrote: in the dark cavern of our birth, 1504

Jabberwocky, 1135
Jackson, Laura (Riding), 1425
Jacobsen, Josephine, 1491
Japan, 1917
Jarrell, Randall, 1552
Jeffers, Robinson, 1320
Jennings, Elizabeth, 1735
Jerusalem, 747
Jewish Cemetery at Newport, The, 952
Job Davies, eighty-five, 1545
John Anderson, My Jo, 754
Johnson, Samuel, 655
Johnson's Cabinet Watched by Ants, 1704
Jonson, Ben, 323
Jordan (I), 373
Journey of the Magi, 1359
Juan's Song, 1407
Jubilate Agno, 678
Judges, who rule the world by laws, 592
Judging Distances, 1565
Junk, 1638
Just as my fingers on these keys, 1262
Justice, Donald, 1684
Just like as in a nest of boxes round, 500
Just now the lilac is in bloom, 1325
Just off the highway to Rochester, Minnesota, 1750
Just when our drawing-rooms begin to blaze, 697

Kanheri Caves, 1883
Kavanagh, Patrick, 1450
Keats, John, 905
Kees, Weldon, 1559
Kenney, Richard, 1954
Kentucky water, clear springs: a boy fleeing, 1419
Keyes, Sidney, 1644
Killigrew, Anne, 554
Killing Time, 2021
Kind pity chokes my spleen, brave scorn forbids, 314
King Billy, 1618
Kingfisher, 1510
King, Henry, 363
Kinnell, Galway, 1740
Kinsella, Thomas, 1757
Kipling, Rudyard, 1181
kitchenette building, 1586
Kizer, Carolyn, 1688
Knight and Shepherd's Daughter, The, 113
Koch, Kenneth, 1691
Komunyakaa, Yusef, 1949
Kraken, The, 984
Kubla Khan, 809
Kumquat for John Keats, A, 1875
Kunitz, Stanley, 1454

La Belle Dame sans Merci, 917
Lachrimae, 1834
Lady in Kicking Horse Reservoir, The, 1675

Lady Lazarus, 1843
Lady Lost, 1369
Lady of Shalott, The, 984
Lady's Dressing Room, The, 572
Lake Isle of Innisfree, The, 1190
L'Allegro, 402
Lamb, The, 734
Lament for a Leg, 1681
Lament for the Great Music, 1376
Lament for the Makaris, 86
Lamia, 918
Landfall in Unknown Seas, 1528
Landing of the Pilgrim Fathers in New England, The, 898
Landor, Walter Savage, 831
Langland, William, 71
Lanier, Sidney, 1162
Lanyer, Aemilia, 284
Lapis Lazuli, 1204
Larkin, Philip, 1648
Last night, ah, yesternight, betwixt her lips and mine, 1211
Late April and you are three; today, 1732
Latest Decalogue, The, 1052
Law makes long spokes of the short stakes of men, 1463
Lawrence, D. H., 1284
Layton, Irving, 1530
Lay your sleeping head, my love, 1465
Lazarus, Emma, 1172
Leafy-with-love banks and the green waters of the canal, 1453
Lear, Edward, 1041
Leda and the Swan, 1200
Lee, Li-Young, 2011
Legal Fiction, 1463
Leithauser, Brad, 1998
Lenox Hill, 1959
Lessons of the War, 1564
Let it no longer be a forlorn hope, 468
Let man's soul be a sphere, and then, in this, 317
Let me not to the marriage of true minds, 266
Let me pour forth, 300
Let Observation, with extensive view, 656
Let others sing of knights and paladins, 232
Letter for All-Hallows (1949), A, 1665
Letters & Other Worlds, 1933
Letters from a Father, 1629
Letters to Edward Thomas, 2016
Letter to Her Husband, Absent upon Public Employment, A, 466
Let the bird of loudest lay, 270
Let the snake wait under, 1276
Letting Go, 1868
Let us go then, you and I, 1340
Levertov, Denise, 1677
Levine, Philip, 1761
Lewis, Alun, 1573
Lewis, C. Day, 1448
Lie, The, 154
Life (Barbauld), 706
Life (Herbert), 377
Life, friends, is boring. We must not say so, 1549
Lifeguard, The, 1661
Life! I know not what thou art, 706
Light-winged Smoke, Icarian bird, 1046
Like a convalescent, I took the hand, 1903
Like a painting it is set before one, 1544
Like a skein of loose silk blown against a wall, 1296
Like as the armèd knight, 140
Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore, 262
Like Dolmens Round My Childhood, the Old People, 1783
Like the foghorn that's all lung, 1614
Like to the Indians, scorchèd with the sun, 248
limerick,* 2046
Linen Industry, The, 1910
Lines (Composed a Few Miles above Tintern Abbey), 765
Lines Written during a Period of Insanity, 704
Linger not, stranger; shed no tear, 1485
Listeners, The, 1225
Litany, 1918
Little Black Boy, The, 735
Little Boy Found, The, 737
Little Boy Lost, The, 736
Little Brown Baby, 1223
Little Gidding, 1360
Little Lamb, who made thee?, 734
Little Red-Cap, 2008
Lo! Death has reared himself a throne, 976
Lodge, Thomas, 222
Lo I the man, whose Muse whilome did maske, 165
London, 744
London, 1802, 795
London Rain, 1489
Long Branch Song, A, 1914
Longfellow, Henry Wadsworth, 951
Long-Legged Fly, 1206
Longley, Michael, 1910
Long Love, That in My Thought Doth Harbor, The, 126
long meter,* 2041
Long neglect has worn away, 1046
Long time he lay upon the sunny hill, 1336
Look in thy 1glass and tell the face thou viewest, 258
Lorde, Audre, 1858
Lord, how can man preach thy eternal word?, 373
Lord Randal, 100
Lord's lost Him His mockingbird, 1533
Lord, who createdst man in wealth and store, 368,
Lord, with what care hast thou begirt us round!, 369
Lore, 1545
Losing a Language, 1744
Lost, The, 1044
Lost in Translation, 1720
Lost Son, The, 1495
Lost Soul, A, 1831
Lotos-Eaters, The, 988
Louse Hunting, 1374

Love bade me welcome: yet my soul drew back, 385
Love Calls Us to the Things of This World, 1633
Love in fantastic triumph sat, 540
Love in my bosom like a bee, 222
Lovelace, Richard, 472
Love-Letter-Burning, 1990
Loveliest of Trees, the Cherry Now, 1173
Love lives beyond, 894
Love Me Little, Love Me Long, 117
Love on the Farm, 1284
Lover, The: A Ballad, 641
Love's Alchemy, 303
"Love seeketh not Itself to please, 742
Love set you going like a fat gold watch, 1837
Love's Growth, 300
Love Song of J. Alfred Prufrock, The, 1340
Love Song of Tooting, A, 1946
Love, That Doth Reign and Live Within My Thought, 137
Love's the boy stood on the burning deck, 1515
Love (III), 385
Love Without Hope, 1400
Loving in truth, and fain in verse my love to show, 213
Lowell, Amy, 1245
Lowell, Robert, 1592
Lowry, Malcolm, 1503
Lucifer in Starlight, 1110
Lucks, My Fair Falcon, 133
Luini in porcelain!, 1306
Lullaby, 1465
Lully, lullay, lully, lullay, 83
Luxurious man, to bring his vice in use, 482
Lycidas, 410
Lying apart now, each in a separate bed, 1735
Lyke as a huntsman after weary chace, 192
Lyke as the Culver on the barèd bough, 195
Lyly, John, 207
lyric poetry,* 2028

MacCaig, Norman, 1508
MacDiarmid, Hugh, 1376
Mac Flecknoe, 517
MacLeish, Archibald, 1381
MacNeice, Louis, 1485
MacPherson, Jay, 1830
Madame, ye been of alle beautee shrine, 68
Mahon, Derek, 1921
main clause,* 2057
Make me, O Lord, thy spinning wheel complete, 540
Maldive Shark, The, 1055
Man, 376
Man Alone, 1407
Mangosteens, 1991
Man looking into the sea, 1330
Man Meets a Woman in the Street, A, 1556
Mannerly Margery Milk and Ale, 90
Manner of Her Will, & What She Left to London, and to All Those in It, at Her Departing, The, 147
Mantles, 1946
Map of the City, A, 1769
Márgarét, áre you gríeving, 1068
Mariana, 982
Mark but this flea, and mark in this, 309
Marlowe, Christopher, 238
Marriage, 1807
Marshes of Glynn, The, 1163
Martian Sends a Postcard Home, A, 1943
Martinez, Dionisio D., 2009
Marvell, Andrew, 475
Mary Hamilton, 108
masculine rhymes,* 2037
Massachusetts Bay Psalm Book, The, 391
Masts at Dawn, 1457
Maxwell, Glyn, 2016
may i feel said he, 1395
May I for my own self song's truth reckon, 12
McCrae, John, 1225
Meanwhile, somewhere in the state of Colorado, armed to the teeth, 2021
Medallion, 1306
Medgar Evers, 1588
Mediocrity in Love Rejected, 387
Meditation at Lagunitas, 1919
Meditation 8, 536
Medusa, 1406
Meeting the British, 1980
Melville, Herman, 1054
Mementos, I, 1734
Memorabilia, 1019
Memory lifts her smoky mirror: 1943, 1799
Men at Forty, 1685
Men call you fayre, and you doe credit it, 194
Mending Wall, 1227
Merce of Egypt, 1511
Mercian Hymns, 1833
Meredith, George, 1107
Meredith, William, 1608
Merrill, James, 1716
Merry Margaret, 91
Merwin, W. S., 1743
Methought I Saw, 419
Methought I saw my late espousèd saint, 419
Methought I saw the grave where Laura lay, 151
Mew, Charlotte, 1216
Midnight. June, 1923. Not a stir except for the brough and brouhaha, 1981
Midnight. The wind yawing nor-east, 1628
Midsummer, 1827
Midwinter spring is its own season, 1360
Milkweed and Monarch, 1980
Mill, The, 1214
Millay, Edna St. Vincent, 1382
Milton, 746
Milton, John, 394
Milton! thou shouldst be living at this hour, 795
Mind Is an Enchanting Thing, The, 1335
Mine—by the Right of the White Election!, 1118
Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord, 1054
Mine Own John Poins, 134
Miniver Cheevy, 1213

Missing, The, 1774
Missing Dates, 1464
Mr. Brodsky, 1747
Mr. Edwards and the Spider, 1596
Mr. Flood's Party, 1215
Mr. Over, 1439
Mrs. Snow, 1583
Mock on, Mock on, Voltaire, Rousseau, 745
Mock Song, The, 552
Modern Love, 1107
Modotti, 1800
Momaday, N. Scott, 1861
Monody, 1057
monometer,* 2031
monorhyme,* 2041
Montague, John, 1783
Montagu, Lady Mary Wortley, 639
Mont Blanc, 866
Moore, Marianne, 1328
Moose, The, 1523
Moraes, Dom, 1883
More and more lately, as, not even minding the slippages yet, the aches and sad softenings, 1869
More, Hannah, 707
More Lovely than Antiquity, 1270
More then most faire, full of the living fire, 190
Morgan, Edwin, 1618
Morning Song, 1837
Morris, William, 1139
Morse, 1890
Moss, Howard, 1659
Most glorious Lord of lyfe that on this day, 192
Most of It, The, 1243
"Mother dear, may I go downtown, 1855
Motherhood, 1540
Mothers of America, 1730
Mother to Her Waking Infant, A, 760
Mother, who read and thought and poured herself into me, 1848
Mourning Poem for the Queen of Sunday, 1533
Mourn, mourn, ye Muses, all your loss deplore, 546
Move him into the sun—, 1390
Moving from Cheer to Joy, from Joy to All, 1555
Mower against Gardens, The, 482
Mower to the Glowworms, The, 483
Much have I traveled in the realms of gold, 905
Much Madness is divinest Sense -, 1121
Muir, Edwin, 1336
Muldoon, Paul, 1979
Murray, Les, 1885
Musée des Beaux Arts, 1471
Musical Instrument, A, 950
Mutability (Shelley), 864
Mutability (Wordsworth), 804
Mute is thy wild harp, now, O Bard sublime!, 711
My attention is a wild, 1700
My bands of silk and miniver, 1310
My black face fades, 1949
My brother comes home from work, 1761
My candle burns at both ends, 1272
my dreams, my works, must wait till after hell, 1586
My dress is silent when I tread the ground, 10
My father at the dictionary-stand, 2003
My father's body was a globe of fear, 1933
My first thought was, he lied in every word, 1020
My Galley, 127
My God, I heard this day, 376
My God! I know, I feel thee mine, 652
My Grandmother, 1735
My Grandmother's Love Letters, 1410
My head, my heart, mine eyes, my life, nay, more, 466
My heart aches, and a drowsy numbness pains, 935
My heart has made its mind up, 1948
My Heart Leaps Up, 796
My heart, my dove, my snail, my sail, my, 2014
My Last Afternoon with Uncle Devereux Winslow, 1597
My Last Duchess, 1012
My life closed twice before it's close, 1127
My Life had stood - a Loaded Gun -, 1122
My lizard, my lively writher, 1501
My long two-pointed ladder's sticking through a tree, 1231
My Lord recalls Ferrara? How walls, 1778
My Love is of a birth as rare, 480
My Lute Awake!, 129
My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun, 267
My mother bore me in the southern wild, 735
My mother had two faces and a frying pot, 1859
My old man's a white old man, 1431
My own heart let me more have pity on; let, 1170
My Papa's Waltz, 1494
My pensive Sara! thy soft cheek reclined, 805
My prime of youth is but a frost of cares, 151
My Sad Captains, 1771
" 'Mystery Boy' Looks for Kin in Nashville," 1535
My Sweetest Lesbia, 278
My swirling wants. Your frozen lips, 1796
My Version, 1947

Naked she lay, clasped in my longing arms, 551
Naming of Parts, 1564
Nashe, Thomas, 282
Nash, Ogden, 1437
Nature, That Washed Her Hands in Milk, 156
Nature's lay idiot, I taught thee to love, 311
Nature, which is the vast creation's soul, 527
Nautilus Island's hermit, 1601
Navidad, St. Nicholas Ave., 1929
Near the dry river's water-mark we found, 1749
Negro Speaks of Rivers, The, 1430
Neither Out Far Nor In Deep, 1240
Nemerov, Howard, 1623
Nepenthe, 713
Neutrality Loathsome, 361
Neutral Tones, 1153
Never Again Would Birds' Song Be the Same, 1242
Nevertheless, 1334
Never until the mankind making, 1569
New Colossus, The, 1172
New Heaven, New War, 223
New Rule, 1969

New World A-Comin', 1803
New Year's: A Short Pantoum, 2024
New Zealand, 1703
Next Day, 1555
Next Poem, The, 1972
Next to my own skin, her pearls. My mistress, 2007
"next to of course god america i, 1394
Nicholson, Norman, 1561
Night (Bogan), 1409
Night, The (Vaughan), 497
Night, Death, Mississippi, 1534
Night Feeding, 1537
Nightingale, The, 211
Night Piece, to Julia, The, 359
Nights in the Gardens of Port of Spain, 1821
Night, the black summer, simplifies her smells, 1821
Night, welcome art thou to my mind destrest, 349
Nikolaus Mardruz to his Master Ferdinand, Count of Tyrol, 1565, 1778
MCMXIV, 1653
1916 seen from 1921, 1405
90 North, 1552
Nobody heard him, the dead man, 1440
No Coward Soul Is Mine, 1050
Nocturnal Reverie, A, 563
Nocturnal upon St. Lucy's Day, Being the Shortest Day, A, 304
Noel, noel, noel, 80
No, it does not happen, 1801
No longer mourn for me when I am dead, 263
nominal syntax,* 2061
No more be grieved at that which thou hast done, 261
No more of talk where God or angel guest, 425
No more walks in the wood, 1776
No, no, go not to Lethe, neither twist, 937
Non sum qualis eram bonae sub regno Cynarae, 1211
Noonday Axeman, 1885
Noon in the intermountain plain, 1861
No Second Troy, 1191
Nostalgia on the Lakefronts, 1686
No Swan So Fine, 1333
Note Left in Jimmy Leonard's Shack, A, 1749
Not every man has gentians in his house, 1291
No, the serpent did not, 1813
Nothing would sleep in that cellar, dank as a ditch, 1493
Not, I'll not, carrion comfort, Despair, not feast on thee, 1169
Not Knowing, 1997
Not like the brazen giant of Greek fame, 1172
Not marble, nor the gilded monuments, 262
Not mine own fears, nor the prophetic soul, 266
Not my hands but green across you now, 1675
Not only how far away, but the way that you say it, 1565
Not Waving but Drowning, 1440
Not with more glories, in the ethereal plain, 607
Nou goth sonne under wode—, 15
noun phrase,* 2061
Now as I was young and easy under the apple boughs, 1571
Now as I watch the progress of the plague, 1774
"No water so still as the, 1333
Now Go'th Sun under Wood, 15
Now hardly here and there a hackney-coach, 568
Now in thy dazzling half-oped eye, 760
Now it is autumn and the falling fruit, 1291
No worst, there is none. Pitched past pitch of grief, 1169
Now sleeps the crimson petal, now the white, 995
Now that I am fifty-six, 1538
Now that I have your face by heart, I look, 1408
Now that the winter's gone, the earth hath lost, 386
Now thou hast loved me one whole day, 294
Now we must praise heaven-kingdom's Guardian, 1
Now Winter Nights Enlarge, 281
Nudes—stark and glistening, 1374
Nuns Fret Not at Their Convent's Narrow Room, 796
Nymph's Reply to the Shepherd, The, 152

O'Brien, Sean, 1992
Obscurest night involved the sky, 702
octameter,* 2033
octave,* 2042
ode,* 2048
Ode (Emerson), 943
Ode (Gray), 668
Ode (Wordsworth), 796
Ode, An (Prior), 568
Ode for Him, An, 360
Ode on a Distant Prospect of Eton College, 666
Ode on a Grecian Urn, 938
Ode on Melancholy, 937
Ode on the Poetical Character, 674
Ode to a Nightingale, 935
Ode to Bill, 1739
Ode to Death, 714
Ode to Evening, 675
Ode to Himself, An, 336
Ode to Psyche, 933
Ode to the Confederate Dead, 1417
Ode to the West Wind, 872
Ode Written in the Beginning of the Year 1746, 673
Odysseus, 1743
Of all the causes which conspire to blind, 596
Of asphodel, that greeny flower, 1276
Of A' the Airts, 752
off-rhyme,* 2038
Of heaven or hell I have no power to sing, 1043
Of man's first disobedience, and the fruit, 421
Of Many Worlds in This World, 500
Of Mere Being, 1268
O for that warning voice, which he who saw, 422
Often beneath the wave, wide from this ledge, 1410
Often in summer, on a tarred bridge plank standing, 1701

Of thee, kind boy, I ask no red and white, 452
Of the Last Verses in the Book, 393
Of this cloth doll which, 1936
Of this worlds Theatre in which we stay, 192
Of Time and the Line, 1967
Oft in My Thought, 78
O Goddess! hear these tuneless numbers, wrung, 933
O golden-tongued Romance with serene lute!, 905
O Grammar rules, ô now your virtues show, 217
Oh, but it is dirty!, 1517
Oh! Death will find me, long before I tire, 1324
Oh, For a Bowl of Fat Canary, 207
Oh! for imperial Polydamna's art, 713
Oh Galuppi, Baldassare, this is very sad to find!, 1017
O'Hara, Frank, 1728
Oh, I'm sailing away my own true love, 1854
Oh Mistress Mine, 275
Oh, to be in England, 1017
Oh Wert Thou in the Cauld Blast, 760
Oh when the early morning at the seaside, 1462
"Oh where are you going with your love-locks flowing, 1134
Oh, who shall from this dungeon raise, 477
Oil-slick, slack shocks, ancient engine, 1955
O king of terrors, whose unbounded sway, 562
Old Bachelor Brother, 1999
Old Eben Flood, climbing alone one night, 1215
Old Eddie's face, wrinkled with river lights, 1821
Older, more generous, 1861
Old-Fashioned Song, An, 1776
Old Mythologies, 1784
Old Vicarage, Grantchester, The, 1325
Old Women, The, 1627
Olney Hymns, 695
Olson, Charles, 1511
O! Mankinde, 86
"O'Melia, my dear, this does everything crown!, 1156
Omeros, 1827
O my luve's like a red, red rose, 759
On a Columnar Self -, 1121
On a Return from Egypt, 1622
On a starred night Prince Lucifer uprose, 1110
On a tree by a river a little tom-tit, 1146
On Being Brought from Africa to America, 720
Once I am sure there's nothing going on, 1649
Once in a Lifetime, Snow, 1887
Once more the storm is howling, and half hid, 1196
Once, my braids swung heavy as ropes, 2005
Once riding in old Baltimore, 1446
Once their fruit is picked, 1640
Once upon a midnight dreary, while I pondered, weak and weary, 977
Once upon a time there was an Italian, 1438
Ondaatje, Michael, 1933
One Art, 1527
One by one they appear in, 1771
One Day, The, 1753
One day I wrote her name upon the strand, 194
One day the amorous Lysander, 541
One day the Nouns were clustered in the street, 1691
One face looks out from all his canvases, 1129
One Flesh, 1735
On either side the river lie, 984
One must have a mind of winter, 1256
On English Monsieur, 325
One ought not to have to care, 1235
One Perfect Rose, 1391
On First Looking into Chapman's Homer, 905
On Gut, 328
On Hellespont, guilty of true love's blood, 238
On Imagination, 722
Onion, Memory, The, 1942
Only a man harrowing clods, 1161
Only joy, now here you are, 218
On My First Daughter, 323
On My First Son, 323
On Myself, 566
On Not Being Milton, 1872
onomatopoeia*, 2037
On Passing the New Menin Gate, 1320
On Playwright, 325
On Shakespeare, 401
On Sitting Down to Read King Lear Once Again, 905
On Spies, 324
On the Baptized Ethiopian, 468
On the day of the explosion, 1657
On the Death of Dr. Robert Levet, 664
On the Death of the Late Earl of Rochester, 546
On the Farm, 1545
On the Late Massacre in Piedmont, 418
On the long shore, lit by the moon, 1623
On the Morning of Christ's Nativity, 394
On the Move, 1768
On the Sonnet, 916
On the Welsh Language, 528
On This Day I Complete My Thirty-sixth Year, 862
On thy stupendous summit, rock sublime!, 715
On Wenlock Edge the Wood's in Trouble, 1176
On winter mornings, 1502
open forms*, 2048
—Or, conversely, hungers, 1610
Origins, 1926
Orion, 1795
Ormond, John, 1681
Ormsby, Eric, 1925
O Rose, thou art sick, 742
O stagnant east-wind, palsied mare, 1268
O Taste and See, 1678
Others abide our question. Thou art free, 1087
O thou, my lovely boy, who in thy pow'r, 267
O Thou that in the heavens does dwell, 750
O Thou, that sit'st upon a throne, 680
O thou that swing'st upon the waving hair, 474
ottava rima*, 2041
Our God, Our Help, 591
Our lives avoided tragedy, 1687
Our sardine fishermen work at night in the dark of the moon; daylight or moonlight, 1322

Outbound, 2023
Out of burlap sacks, out of bearing butter, 1761
Out of Hiding, 2013
Out of the bosom of the Air, 956
Out of the Cradle Endlessly Rocking, 1073
Out of Your Sleep Arise and Wake, 80
Outside, although November by the clock, 1766
Out walking in the frozen swamp one gray day, 1232
Oven Bird, The, 1233
Over the rim of the glass, 1669
Over these blunted, these tormented hills, 1883
Owen, Wilfred, 1386
O what can ail thee, Knight at arms, 917
O where ha' you been, Lord Randal, my son?, 100
O wild West Wind, thou breath of Autumn's being, 872
Owl, The, 1254
Owl and the Pussy-Cat, The, 1042
Ozymandias, 870

Pact, A, 1296
Page, P. K., 1583
Painter, The, 1736
Palmer, Michael, 1936
Palm Reader, The, 1973
Pamphilia to Amphilanthus, 347
pantoum,* 2046
Pantoum of the Great Depression, 1687
Paradise Lost, 420
Paradoxes and Oxymorons, 1739
pararhyme,* 2038
Parish Register, The, 723
Parker, Dorothy, 1391
Parsley, 1985
Parting, without a Sequel, 1368
Part otter, part snake, part bird the bird Anhinga, 1542
Passing Away, Saith the World, Passing Away, 1133
Passionate Man's Pilgrimage, The, 153
Passionate Shepherd to His Love, The, 256 past participle,* 2067
Past Ruined Ilion Helen Lives, 832
Past second cock-crow yacht masts in the harbor go slowly white, 1457
Patience, Though I Have Not, 128
Patterns, 1245
Paul Laurence Dunbar, 1536
Peaches, 1752
Pearl, 75
Pearl, the precious prize of a king, 75
Peele, George, 221
Penelope for her Ulisses sake, 191
pentameter,* 2032
perfect rhyme,* 2038
Permanently, 1691
Persian Version, The, 1402
Persimmons, 2011
Persistence of Song, The, 1659
Peter Quince at the Clavier, 1262
Pet Panther, 1700
Philips, Katherine, 526
Phillip Sparow, 94
Phoenix and the Turtle, The, 270
Piano, 1285
Piazza di Spagna, Early Morning, 1634
Piazza Piece, 1367
Picture of Little T.C. in a Prospect of Flowers, The, 481
Pictures from Brueghel, 1283
Pied Beauty, 1167
Piers Plowman, 71
Pike, 1812
Pile the bodies high at Austerlitz and Waterloo, 1253
Pillar of Fame, The, 361
Pindaric ode,* 2048
Pink and a bit soft-bodied, with a somewhat jazzy, 1914
Pinsky, Robert, 1913
Piping down the valleys wild, 733
Pla ce bo, 94
Plain Song for Comadre, A, 1635
Platform One, 1815
Plath, Sylvia, 1836
Platonic Love, 471
Playwright, convict of public wrongs to men, 325
Poe, Edgar Allan, 975
Poem (Williams), 1275
Poem Ended by a Death, 1850
Poems of Our Climate, The, 1266
Poem to Mr Thomas and Mr Frost, 2016
Poetical Sketches, 732
poetic license,* 2038
poetic syntax,* 2053
Poet of Nature, thou hast wept to know, 863
Poetry, 1329
Poison Tree, A, 743
Pomegranate, The, 1941
Poor eyes be blind, the light behold no more, 349
Poor soul, the center of my sinful earth, 269
Porphyria's Lover, 1009
Pope, Alexander, 596
Portent, The, 1054
Porter, Peter, 1786
Portrait d'une Femme, 1295
Portrait in Georgia, 1399
Portrait of a Lady, 1273
Pound, Ezra, 1295
Pratt, E. J., 1270
Prayer (Duffy), 2007
Prayer (Gioia), 1972
Prayer (I), 371
Prayer for My Daughter, A, 1196
Prayer, the church's banquet, angels' age, 371
Pray thee, take care, that tak'st my book in hand, 323
predicate,* 2055
Prediction, The, 1863
Prelude, The (Wordsworth), 781
Pressed by the moon, mute arbitress of tides, 711
Primer, The, 1491
Primer of the Daily Round, A, 1624
Princess, The, 994

Prior, Matthew, 566
Prisoner, The, 1048
Prodigy, 1892
Professor, publisher, and critic, 1995
Prologue, The, 462
Prologue Spoken by Mr. Garrick, 655
prose poetry,* 2050
Prospect of Heaven Makes Death Easy, A, 590
Provide, Provide, 1241
Psalm 58 (Massachusetts Bay Psalm Book), 391
Psalm 58: Si Vere Utique (M. Sidney), 225
Psalm 58 (Smart), 684
Psalm 58 (Watts), 592
Psalm 114: In Exitu Israel? (M. Sidney), 226
Psalm 114 (Massachusetts Bay Psalm Book), 392
Psalm 114 (Smart), 685
Psalm 114 (Watts), 593
Publication - is the Auction, 1123
Pulley, The, 379
Pulling up flax after the blue flowers have fallen, 1910
Punishment, 1900
Purse-Seine, The, 1322
Puzzle faces in the dying elms, 1535
pyrrhic meter,* 2031

Quaker Graveyard in Nantucket, The, 1592
Quality of Sprawl, The, 1888
quantitative meter,* 2036
quatrain,* 2041
Queen and Huntress, 345
Queen-Anne's-Lace, 1273
Question, The, 1870
Question Answered, A, 746
Quotations, 1867

Ragged Island, 1385
Rag of black plastic, shred of a kite, 1543
Rain, 1255
Raine, Craig, 1942
Ralegh, Sir Walter, 151
Ramanujan, A. K., 1801
Randall, Dudley, 1855
Ransom, John Crowe, 1367
Rape of the Lock, The, 604
Raven, The, 977
Razors pain you, 1391
Read and committed to the flames, I call, 1872
Reader, enough of this apology, 1996
Reading the Bible Backwards, 1879
Reapers, 1398
Receipt to Cure the Vapors, A, 642
Recessional, 1181
Reconciliation, 1078
Redemption, 367
Red Red Rose, A, 759
Red Wheelbarrow, The, 1274
Reed, Henry, 1563
Reflections on Ice-breaking, 1437
refrain,* 2045
Refusal to Mourn the Death, by Fire, of a Child in London, A, 1569 Regeneration, 490
relative adverb,* 2057
relative pronoun,* 2057
Relic, The, 310
Relics, 1957
Remember, 1128
Remember how we picked the daffodils?, 1814
Remembering the 'Thirties, 1641
Remember me when I am gone away, 1128
Remembrance, 1047
Remorse - is Memory - awake -, 1122
Removal from Terry Street, A, 1927
Renoir, whose paintings I don't much like, 1867
Renunciation - is a piercing Virtue -, 1123
repeton,* 2046
repeton couplet,* 2046
Repression, 1869
Request to a Year, 1578
Requiem, 1437
Resolution and Independence, 790
Résumé, 1391
Retreat, The, 492
Return of the Greeks, The, 1337
Return to Scalpay, 1509
Reuben Bright, 1213
Reveille, 1173
rhetorical question,* 2062
Rhode Island, 1608
Rhodora, The, 941
rhyme royal,* 2041
Rhyme, the rack of finest wits, 332
Rich, Adrienne, 1791
Richard Cory, 1212
Riddle (Hine), 1869
riddles, 10
Right now I am the flower girl, 1896
Rights of Woman, The, 705
Rime of the Ancient Mariner, The, 812
Ring Out Your Bells, 212
"Rise up, rise up, now, Lord Douglas," she says, 97
rising meter,* 2031
rites for Cousin Vit, the, 1587
River-Merchant's Wife, The: a Letter, 1297
Road Not Taken, The, 1232
Robin Redbreast, 1454
Robinson, 1560
Robinson, Edwin Arlington, 1212
Roethke, Theodore, 1493
Roman Fountain, 1408
Rondel, 1538
Room on a Garden, A, 1268
Root Cellar, 1493
Rosalind's Madrigal, 222
Rose Aylmer, 831
Rose-cheeked Laura, 280
Rose, harsh rose, 1311
Rosenberg, Isaac, 1373
Roses, 1616
Rossetti, Christina, 1128
Rossetti, Dante Gabriel, 1102
Rotate the husband and expose a hidden side. A letter he wrote from Rio de Janeiro, 1970

Roundelay between Two Shepherds, A, 235
Row after row with strict impunity, 1417
Row us out from Desenzano, to your Sirmione row!, 1008
Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám of Naishápúr, The, 961 Ruined Cottage, The, 768
Ruined Maid, The, 1156
Rukeyser, Muriel, 1537
Rule which by obeying grows, 945
run-on lines,* 2034

Sacrament of the Altar, The, 85
Sad Steps, 1656
Safe in their Alabaster Chambers - (first version), 1111
Safe in their Alabaster Chambers - (second version), 1112
Safe upon the solid rock the ugly houses stand, 1382
Sailing to Byzantium, 1199
St. Agnes' Eve—Ah, bitter chill it was!, 907
Salutation, The, 531
Salve Deus Rex Judaeorum, 284
Samson Agonistes, 450
Sanctity, 1450
Sandburg, Carl, 1252
Sandpiper, 1518
Sand pyramid, size of a child, each September, 2013
Sarah, Robyn, 1956
Sassoon, Siegfried, 1317
Satire III, 314
Saturday, 639
Sawmill, 1956
Say Not the Struggle Nought Availeth, 1053
scansion,* 2028
Scenes from the Life of the Peppertrees, 1677
Schnackenberg, Gjertrud, 2000
Scholar-Gypsy, The, 1089
Scholars, The, 1193
Schooner Flight, The, 1825
Schuyler, James, 1683
Science! true daughter of Old Time thou art!, 975
Scorn Not the Sonnet, 804
Seafarer, The, 12
Sea Rose, 1311
Seascape, 1506
Sea Similized to Meadows and Pastures, The: the Mariners, to Shepherds: the Mast, to a May-Pole: the Fish, to Beasts, 499
Season of mists and mellow fruitfulness, 939
Seasons, The, 649
Sea Violet, 1312
Second Coming, The, 1196
Second Fig, 1382
Seeger, Pete, 1853
See! Here, My Heart, 86
See how they hurry, 1976
See the chariot at hand here of Love, 334
See with what simplicity, 481
Self-Portrait, 1803
Self-Protection, 1288
Senlin: A Biography, 1370
sentence,* 2055
Separation, 1744
September 1, 1939, 1474
September has come and I wake, 1487
September rain falls on the house, 1520
September Song, 1832
Serious Concerns, 1949
sestet,* 2042
sestina,* 2045
Sestina (Bishop), 1520
Seth, Vikram, 1994
Settle Bed, The, 1907
Seven threads make the shroud, 1628
Sexton, Anne, 1764
Shadows in the Water, 534
Shakespeare, 1087
Shakespeare, William, 257
Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?, 259 shaped poetry,* 2050
She died in the upstairs bedroom, 1460
"She done put huh little hands, 1429
She Dwelt among the Untrodden Ways, 789
She has finished and sealed the letter, 1368
She is as in a field a silken tent, 1241
She kept an antique shop—or it kept her, 1735
Shelley, Percy Bysshe, 863
She looked over his shoulder, 1479
She may count three little daisies very well, 1248
Shepheardes Calender, The, 159
She said: the pitying audience melt in tears, 618
She sang beyond the genius of the sea, 1264
She sat on a shelf, 1540
She sat up on her pillows, receiving guests, 1928
She Walks in Beauty, 834
She Was a Phantom of Delight, 802
She was thinner, with a mannered gauntness, 1988
Shield of Achilles, The, 1479
Shiloh, 1055
Shimmer, 1684
Shine, Perishing Republic, 1320
Ship of Death, The, 1291
Shirley, James, 390
Shore, Jane, 1952
short meter,* 2041
Shot down from its enskied formation, 1787
Should auld acquaintance be forgot, 753
Should I get married? Should I be good?, 1807
Shout, The, 2022
Show me, dear Christ, thy spouse so bright and clear, 320
Shroud, 1628
Shut in from all the world without, 958
Shut, shut the door, good John! (fatigued, I said), 626
Sick Rose, The, 742
Side by side, their faces blurred, 1650
Sidney, Mary, 225
Sidney, Sir Philip, 208
Sigh No More, 274
Silently my wife walks on the still wet furze, 1532
Silent Noon, 1106

Silent One, The, 1372
Silken Tent, The, 1241
Silver Swan, The, 121
Simic, Charles, 1891
Simple Truth, The, 1783
Simply by sailing in a new direction, 1528
Since brass, nor stone, nor earth, nor boundless sea, 263
since feeling is first, 1394
Since I am coming to that holy room, 322
Since laws were made, for every degree, 596
Since 1619, 1576
Since there's no help, come let us kiss and part, 238
Sing, cuccu, nu. Sing, cuccu, 15
Sing lullaby, as women do, 145
Sin (I), 369
Sir Patrick Spens, 103
Sissman, L. E., 1766
Sisters, The, 1436
Sith Cynthia is ascended to that rest, 284
Sitting between the sea and the buildings, 1736
Skeltonic verse,* 2047
Skelton, John, 90
Skimming lightly, wheeling still, 1055
Skin Full, 2015
Skirting the river road, (my forenoon walk, my rest,), 1078
Skunk, The, 1902
Skunk Cabbage, 1926
Skunk Hour, 1601
Slave Trade, The, 709
Sled Burial, Dream Ceremony, 1664
Sleepless as Prospero back in his bedroom, 2000
Sleep-walking vapor, like a visitant ghost, 1671
Slim in Atlanta, 1426
Slowly the poison the whole blood stream fills, 1464
Slow, Slow, Fresh Fount, 344
Slumber Did My Spirit Seal, A, 790
Smart, Christopher, 678
Smiling Mouth, The, 77
Smith, Charlotte, 711
Smith, Stevie, 1439
Smoke, 1046
Smokehouse, The, 1950
Snake (Lawrence), 1286
Snakes (Ramanujan), 1801
Snapshots of a Daughter-in-Law, 1791
Snap tempered tooth chips, 1956
Snodgrass, W. D., 1731
Snowbound: A Winter Idyl, 958
Snow-Flakes, 956
Snowflake Which Is Now and Hence Forever, The, 1382
Snow Man, The, 1256
Snow on a Mountain, 1883
Snow-Storm, The, 942
Snow: II, 1870
Snub-nosed, bone-fingered, deft with engraving tools, 1673
Snyder, Gary, 1816
So Cruel Prison, 139
Softly, in the dusk, a woman is singing to me, 1285
Soho Hospital for Women, The, 1851
So I would hear out those lungs, 1663
Soldier, The, 1327
Soliloquy of the Spanish Cloister, 1010
Solitary Reaper, The, 803
Some are plain lucky—we ourselves among them, 1831
Some days, although we cannot pray, a prayer, 2007
Some days in May, little stars, 1914
Some men never think of it, 1948
Someone said my name in the garden, 2013
Some say that love's a little boy, 1470
Some that have deeper digged love's mine than I, 303
Some things that fly there be-, 1110
Some things we do take up a lot more time, 1739
Something there is that doesn't love a wall, 1227
Sometime During Eternity . . . , 1606
somewhere i have never travelled,gladly beyond, 1395
so much depends, 1274
Song, A ("Ask me no more where Jove bestows"—Carew), 385
Song Bewailing the Time of Christmas, So Much Decayed in England, A, 122
Song for a Dark Girl, 1432
Song for St. Cecilia's Day, A, 524
Song for the Last Act, 1408
Song ("Go and catch a falling star"—Donne), 294
Song ("Go, lovely rose!"—Waller), 393
Song ("How strongly does my passion flow"—Behn), 545
Song ("How sweet I roam'd from field to field"—Blake), 732
Song ("Love a child is ever crying"—Wroth), 350
Song ("Love in fantastic triumph sat"—Behn), 540
Song: Love Lives Beyond the Tomb, 894
Song ("Love what art thou? A vain thought"—Wroth), 353
Song ("My heart, my dove, my snail, my sail, my"—Zarin), 2104
Song of a Young Lady to Her Ancient Lover, A, 553
Song of Hiawatha, The, 954
Song of Myself, 1060
Songs and Ballads, 745
Songs of Experience, 740
Songs of Innocence, 733
Song ("Sweetest love, I do not go"—Donne), 298
Song ("The first month of his absence"—Lewis), 1574
Song: To Celia (I), 331
Song: To Celia (II), 331
Song to David, A, 680
Song. To My Inconstant Mistress, 387
Song ("When I am dead, my dearest"—C. Rossetti), 1128
Song ("Why so pale and wan, fond lover?"—Suckling), 452
Song: Woo'd and Married and A', 762

sonnet*, 2042
Sonnet (Brooke), 1324
Sonnet (Gray), 673
Sonnet, A (D. G. Rossetti), 1106
Sonnet of Black Beauty, 346
sonnet sequence*, 2044
Sonnets from the Portuguese, 947
Sonnets (Shakespeare), 257
Sonnets, Third Series (Tuckerman), 1086
Sonnet—To Science, 975
Sonnet to the Noble Lady, the Lady Mary Wroth, A, 344
Sonnet II (Suckling), 452
Son of the Ocean isle!, 897
Soonest Mended, 1737
Soote Season, The, 137
So there stood Matthew Arnold and this girl, 1668
Sorting out letters and piles of my old, 1734
Sort of a Song, A, 1276
So. The Spear-Danes in days gone by, 2
Soto, Gary, 1996
Soul's joy, bend not those morning stars from me, 216
sound poetry*, 2051
Soup, The, 1996
Southwell, Robert, 223
So We'll Go No More A-Roving, 836
So we must say Goodbye, my darling, 1575
Soyinka, Wole, 1862
Spain 1937, 1466
Spare, gen'rous victor, spare the slave, 567
Speak, 1750
Specially for me, she had some breaded, 1802
Spender, Stephen, 1505
Spenser, Edmund, 159
Spenserian sonnet*, 2043
Spenserian stanza*, 2042
Spies, you are lights in state, but of base stuff, 324
spirituals, 1057
Spleen, The (Finch), 558
Spleen, The (Green), 645
Split the Lark—and you'll find the Music—, 1124
spondaic meter*, 2031
Sports and gallantries, the stage, the arts, the antics of dancers, 1321
Sprawl is the quality, 1888
Spring, The (Carew), 386
Spring (Millay), 1383
Spring and Fall, 1168
Spring is like a perhaps hand, 1393
Spring, the sweet spring, is the year's pleasant king, 282
sprung rhythm*, 2034
Squarings, 1909
Stand close around, ye Stygian set, 832
Standing aloof in giant ignorance, 906
Stand Whoso List, 134
stanza*, 2040
Stanzas (Byron), 862
Stanzas (Smith), 713
Stanzas in Meditation, 1248
Stanzas Written in Dejection, Near Naples, 870
Starfish, 1925
Star-gazer, 1490
Stasis in darkness, 1842
Station Island, 1903
Steal Away to Jesus, 1058
Steeple-Jack, The, 1331
Stein, Gertrude, 1248
Stella's Birthday, 570
Stella, since thou so right a princess art, 220
Stella, think not that I by verse seek fame, 220
Stevenson, Anne, 1847
Stevens, Wallace, 1256
Stickney, Trumbull, 1250
Still Life, 1671
Still to Be Neat, 341
Stolen Child, The, 1188
Stop all the clocks, cut off the telephone, 1470
Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening, 1237
Stories of Snow, 1583
Strand, Mark, 1863
Strange Meeting, 1389
Strange Metamorphosis of Poets, 1626
Strange power of song! the strain that warms the heart, 709
Strange room, from this angle, 1851
Strange Type, 1504
Strawberries (Morgan), 1618
Straws like tame lightenings lie about the grass, 1508
Streaked and fretted with effort, the thick, 1914
Street, The, 1914
subject*, 2055
subordinate clause*, 2057
Success is counted sweetest, 1111
Suckling, Sir John, 452
Sudden Light, 1105
suffixes*, 2054
Summer Farm, 1508
Summer is late, my heart, 1455
Summer's Last Will, 282
Summer's Night, A, 1222
Sumptuous Destitution, 1969
Sunday Afternoons, 1951
Sunday Morning, 1257
Sunday shuts down on this twentieth-century evening, 1537
Sundays too my father got up early, 1533
Sunlight on the Garden, The, 1485
Sun Rising, The, 295
Sunset and evening star, 1008
Sun Underfoot Among the Sundews, The, 1613
Supermarket in California, A, 1713
Supernatural Love, 2003
Surface, The, 1979
Surprised by Joy, 804
Swan, The, 1830
Swan and Shadow, 1775
Swear by what the sages spoke, 1208
Sweet Auburn! loveliest village of the plain, 686
Sweet day, so cool, so calm, so bright, 375
Sweet Echo, sweetest nymph, that liv'st unseen, 415

Sweet Nosegay, A, 146
Swenson, May, 1540
Swift, Jonathan, 568
Swimmers, The, 1419
Swinburne, Algernon Charles, 1146
syllabic meter,* 2035
syllabics,* 2035
syllables,* 2028
Sympathy, 1224
Sympathy, A Welcome, A, 1547
Syrinx, 1614

Tables Turned, The, 764
Table Talk, 1267
Tahoe in August, 1919
Take, Oh, Take Those Lips Away, 345
Talking in Bed, 1654
Tam O'Shanter, 754
Task, The, 697
Tate, Allen, 1417
Taylor, Edward, 536
Teach me, my God and King, 383
Tear, The (Crashaw), 468
Tear (Kinsella), 1758
Tears, idle tears, I know not what they mean, 995
Telephone Conversation, 1862
Tell all the truth but tell it slant-, 1126
Telling the Bees, 957
Tell me not, sweet, I am unkind, 473
Tell me, thou gentle shepherd swain, 235
Temper, The (I), 372
Temple, The: Sacred Poems and Private Ejaculations, 367
Temporarily in Oxford, 1847
Tenebrae, 1679
Tennyson, Alfred Lord, 982
tercet,* 2040
"Terence, This Is Stupid Stuff . . . ," 1177
terza rima,* 2040
tetrameter,* 2032
Thanatopsis, 903
That bony potbellied arrow, wing-pumping along, 1614
That civilisation may not sink, 1206
That dream, her eyes like rocks studded the high, 1883
That is no country for old men. The young, 1199
That kingfisher jewelling upstream, 1510
That Nature is a Heraclitean Fire and of the comfort of the Resurrection, 1171
That neither fame nor love might wanting be, 324
That night your great guns, unawares, 1157
That note you hold, narrowing and rising, shakes, 1648
That poets are far rarer births than kings, 325
That's my last duchess painted on the wall, 1012
That there should never be air, 1616
That the Science of Cartography Is Limited, 1938
That time of year thou mayst in me behold, 263
That Whitsun, I was late getting away, 1652
That would be waving and that would be crying, 1265
The, 1930
The airport coffee tastes less of America, 1822
The annals say: when the monks of Clonmacnoise, 1909
The apparition of these faces in the crowd, 1297
The archivist in us shudders at such cold-, 1990
The art of losing isn't hard to master, 1527
The Assyrian came down like the wolf on the fold, 834
The awful shadow of some unseen Power, 864
The bed we loved in was a spinning world, 2008
The Bible is an antique Volume-, 1127
The Bishop tells us: "When the boys come back, 1318
The blasts of Autumn as they scatter round, 712
The blessed damozel leaned out, 1102
The blue jay scuffling in the bushes follows, 1768
The boy stood on the burning deck, 899
The breaking waves dashed high, 898
The bride she is winsome and bonny, 762
The broken pillar of the wing jags from the clotted shoulder, 1321
The burned and dusty garden said, 1251
The Bustle in a House, 1126
the Cambridge ladies who live in furnished souls, 1393
The child between them on the street, 1732
The cold remote islands, 1409
The Colonel in a casual voice, 1622
The conversation of prayers about to be said, 1570
The cow is of the bovine ilk, 1437
The critics say that epics have died out, 948
The crocus armies from the dead, 1836
The curfew tolls the knell of parting day, 669
The darkness crumbles away, 1373
The demolition crew are petulant, 2015
The dog stops barking after Robinson has gone, 1560
The doubt of future foes exiles my present joy, 142
The dowsed coals fume and hiss after your meal, 1672
The eagle is my power, 1861
Thee for my recitative, 1085
The end of everything approaches, 1311
The English are so nice, 1290
The everlasting universe of things, 866
The eyeless labourer in the night, 1577
The eyes open to a cry of pulleys, 1633
The fairest day that ever yet has shone, 1044
The ferry wades across the kyle. I drive, 1509
The first month of his absence, 1574
The fleet astronomer can bore, 374
The flowers left thick at nightfall in the wood, 1254
The flower that smiles today, 864
The force that through the green fuse drives the flower, 1566
The forward youth that would appear, 486
The Frost performs its secret ministry, 810
The glories of our blood and state, 390
The grace of Tullies eloquence doth excell, 1873
The guns spell money's ultimate reason, 1505

The hand that signed the paper felled a city, 1567
The harbingers are come. See, see their mark, 381
The Heart asks Pleasure - first -, 1120
The house was quiet and the world was calm, 1267
The hunchback in the park, 1568
The Hun so loved the cry, one falling elephant's, 1959
The illustration, 1328
The instructor said, 1434
Their Lonely Betters, 1479
Their sense is with their senses all mixed in, 1108
The keener tempests come: and, fuming dun, 649
The king sits in Dumferling town, 103
The lake was filled with distinguished fish purchased, 1617
The land was ours before we were the land's, 1243
The lights off, the clock glowing 2:10, 1996
The little boy lost in the lonely fen, 737
The mad are predators. Too often lately they harbour, 1834
Them & [uz], 1873
The man whose height his fear improved he, 1588
Theme for English B, 1434
The merchant, to secure his treasure, 568
The middle of the night, she's wide awake, carefully lying as far away as she can from him, 1870
The miller's wife had waited long, 1214
The moon is a poor woman, 1645
"The most beautiful girl in the college," 1956
The name of the product I tested is Life, 1786
The nightingale, as soon as April bringeth, 211
The night is dewy as a maiden's mouth, 1222
Then it was dusk in Illinois, the small boy, 1740
The noble horse with courage in his eye, 1621
The nurse-life wheat within his green husk growing, 206
The oaks, how subtle and marine, 1456
The old South Boston Aquarium stands, 1603
Theology, 1813
The only legend I have ever loved is, 1941
The Owl and the Pussy-cat went to sea, 1042
The palm at the end of the mind, 1268
The pear tree that last year, 1684
The people along the sand, 1240
The peppertrees, the peppertrees!, 1677
The petals fall in the fountain, 1296
The plunging limbers over the shattered track, 1374
The price seemed reasonable, location, 1862
The princes of Mercia were badger and raven. Thrall, 1833
The rain of London pimples, 1489
The rain set early in tonight, 1009
There are no stars to-night, 1410
There are some days the happy ocean lies, 1506
There comes a moment in her veins, 1270
There Is a Garden in Her Face, 282
There Is a Lady Sweet and Kind, 121
There is a land of pure delight, 590
There is a parrot imitating spring, 1985
There is a singer everyone has heard, 1233
There is a timbre of voice, 1860
There is delight in singing, though none hear, 832
There is my country under glass, 1894
There is no mirror in Mirissa, 1935
There is one story and one story only, 1402
There lived a wife at Usher's Well, 105
There's a certain Slant of light, 1114
There's a Grandfather's Clock in the Hall, 1458
There sat down, once, a thing on Henry's heart, 1549
There's blood between us, love, my love, 1130
There, there where those black spruces crowd, 1385
There Was an Old Man in a Tree, 1042
There Was an Old Man Who Supposed, 1042
There Was an Old Man with a Beard, 1041
There was a roaring in the wind all night, 790
There was a shepherd's dochter, 113
There was a time when meadow, grove, and stream, 796
There was a young belle of old Natchez, 1437
There was Dai Puw. He was no good, 1545
There was such speed in her little body, 1367
There were never strawberries, 1618
There were three ravens sat on a tree, 101
There will be more of this, 1944
The roaring alongside he takes for granted, 1518
The room itself. The women. The absence of women, 2010
The sea is calm tonight, 1101
These are the absolute top of the line, 1991
These are the original monies of the earth, 1627
These, in the day when heaven was falling, 1180
These little limbs, 531
These unshaped islands, on the sawyer's bench, 1703
These were my neighbors. It's a big group pose:, 2024
The silver swan, who living had no note, 121
The skunk cabbage with its smug and opulent smell, 1926
The sky, lazily disdaining to pursue, 1398
The sky unrolls like a rug, 1867
The smiling mouth and laughing eyen gray, 77
The snow came down last night like moths, 1632
The snow falls deep; the forest lies alone, 894
The soote season, that bud and bloom forth brings, 137
The Soul selects her own Society -, 1118
The splendor falls on castle walls, 994
The stellar sea crawler, maw, 1925
The straggled soldier halted—stared at Him—, 1317
The sun is warm, the sky is clear, 870
The sunlight on the garden, 1485
The sunlight was falling. A part, 2024
The tattered Hungarian tent, 1935
The time is come, I must depart, 146
The time you won your town the race, 1174
The trees are coming into leaf, 1656
The trees are in their autumn beauty, 1192
The tulips are too excitable, it is winter here, 1838
The turtle lives 'twixt plated decks, 1438

The unpurged images of day recede, 1202
The veteran Greeks came home, 1337
The vicious winter finally yields, 1733
The Wain upon the northern steep, 1179
The waves, like ridges of plow'd land, are high, 499
The whiskey on your breath, 1494
The white violet, 1312
The whole place airier. Big summer trees, 1908
The wind billowing out the seat of my britches, 1494
The wind doth blow today, my love, 104
The wind flapped loose, the wind was still, 1105
The wind suffers of blowing, 1425
The winters close, Springs open, no child stirs, 1546
The wisest scholar of the wight most wise, 214
The witch that came (the withered hag), 1241
The woods decay, the woods decay and fall, 1006
The world is, 1678
The world is charged with the grandeur of God, 1166
The World Is Too Much with Us, 802
The worlds are breaking in my head, 1580
The world's great age begins anew, 892
The wounds are terrible. The paint is old, 1939
The wretched Flavia, on her couch reclined, 639
Th' expense of spirit in a waste of shame, 267
"They," 1318
They Are All Gone into the World of Light!, 494
They are not long, the weeping and the laughter, 1211
They are waiting for me somewhere beyond Eden Rock, 1591
They climbed on sketchy ladders towards God, 1681
They'd latch the screendoors, 1951
The year revolves, and I again explore, 724
They eat beans mostly, this old yellow pair, 1587
They Feed They Lion, 1761
They Flee from Me, 127
They flee from me, that sometime did me seek, 127
They fuck you up, your mum and dad, 1657
The young, having risen early, had gone, 1832
They said to my grandmother: "Please do not be bitter," 1428
They say the first dream Adam our father had, 1338
They serve revolving saucer eyes, 1849
They shut me up in Prose -, 1119
They sing their dearest songs—, 1160
They that have power to hurt and will do none, 265
They throw in Drummer Hodge, to rest, 1154
They who in folly or mere greed, 1449
They will wash all my kisses and fingerprints off you, 1850
Think not this paper comes with vain pretense, 643
Thin little leaves of wood fern, ribbed and toothed, 1086
Third Epistle to Timothy, 1981
Thirteen Ways of Looking at a Blackbird, 1260
This Be The Verse, 1657
This day, whate'er the fates decree, 570
This feast-day of the sun, his altar there, 1107
This house has been far out at sea all night, 1811
This Is a Photograph of Me, 1894
This Is Just to Say, 1274
This is the forest primeval. The murmuring pines and the hemlocks, 951
This is the month, and this the happy morn, 394
This is the ship of pearl, which, poets feign, 974
This is the time of year, 1519
This is the world we wanted, 1931
This Living Hand, 940
This Lime-Tree Bower My Prison, 807
This morning, flew up the lane, 1369
This motley piece to you I send, 645
This one was put in a jacket, 1684
this poem intentionally left blank, 1968
This poem is concerned with language on a very plain level, 1739
Thomas, Dylan, 1566
Thomas, Edward, 1253
Thomas, R. S., 1544
Thomson, James, 649
Thoreau, Henry David, 1045
Those blessèd structures, plot and rhyme—, 1605
Those in the vegetable rain retain, 1583
Those long uneven lines, 1653
Those transparent Dacca gauzes, 1958
Those were the days, 1693
Those Winter Sundays, 1533
Thou art indeed just, Lord, if I contend, 1172
Thou art not, Penshurst, built to envious show, 328
Thou Black, wherein all colors are compos'd, 346
Thou fair-hair'd angel of the evening, 733
Though authors are a dreadful clan, 1846
Though beauty be the mark of praise, 335
Though I am Young and Cannot Tell, 341
Though loath to grieve, 943
Thought-Fox, The, 1810
Though the unseen may vanish, though insight fails, 1635
Thoughts about the Person from Porlock, 1441
Thou hast made me, and shall thy work decay?, 318
Thou ill-formed offspring of my feeble brain, 465
Thou, paw-paw-paw; thou, glurd; thou, spotted, 1776
Thousand Martyrs, A, 549
Thou shalt have one God only; who, 1052
Thou sorrow, venom elf, 538
Thou still unravished bride of quietness, 938
Three Ravens, The, 101
Three Summers since I chose a maid, 1216
Three weeks gone and the combatants gone, 1620
Three Years She Grew, 789
Through that pure virgin shrine, 497
Throw away thy rod, 382
Thus piteously Love closed what he begat, 1109
Thy praise or dispraise is to me alike, 324
Thyrsis, 1095
Thy various works, imperial queen, we see, 722

Tichborne, Chidiock, 151
Tightly-folded bud, 1648
Time Passing, Beloved, 1643
Timor Mortis, 82
'Tis the year's midnight, and it is the day's, 304
'Tis time this heart should be unmoved, 862
Tithonus, 1006
Titwillow, 1146
To a Chameleon, 1328
To a Lady: She Refusing to Continue a Dispute with Me, and Leaving Me in the Argument, 567
To a Locomotive in Winter, 1085
To Althea, from Prison, 472
To Amarantha, That She Would Dishevel Her Hair, 473
To a Mouse, 748
To an Athlete Dying Young, 1174
To a Skylark, 876
To a Steam Roller, 1328
To Aunt Rose, 1714
To Autumn, 939
To a Waterfowl, 902
To be a poet and not know the trade, 1450
To Be Carved on a Stone at Thoor Ballylee, 1198
Toccata of Galuppi's, A, 1017
Today as I hang out the wash I see them again, a code, 1975
Today I found the right fruit for my prime, 1875
Today I pass the time reading, 1917
Today we have naming of parts. Yesterday, 1564
To Death, 562
To draw no envy, Shakespeare, on thy name, 342
To Elizabeth, Countess of Rutland, 325
To Emily Dickinson, 1416
To Find God, 362
To fling my arms wide, 1431
To Fool or Knave, 324
To have known him, to have loved him, 1057
To Helen, 975
To him who in the love of Nature holds, 903
To His Conscience, 361
To His Coy Mistress, 478
To His Love (anonymous), 119
To His Love (Gurney), 1371
To His Scribe Adam, 70
To Homer, 906
To John Donne, 326
To Juan at the Winter Solstice, 1402
To live in Wales is to be conscious, 1544
To Lucasta, Going to the Wars, 473
To make a final conquest of all me, 480
To Marguerite, 1088
To Mercy, Pity, Peace, and Love, 735
To Mr. Henry Lawes, 527
To Mr. H. Lawes, On His Airs, 416
To Mistress Margaret Hussey, 91
Tomlinson, Charles, 1746
Tommy, 1181
Tom o' Bedlam's Song, 124
To My Dear and Loving Husband, 465
To My Excellent Lucasia, on Our Friendship, 530
To My Twenties, 1694
Tonight, grave sir, both my poor house, and I, 326
Toomer, Jean, 1398
To Penshurst, 328
To Robert Browning, 832
To Rosamond, 68
To see both blended in one flood, 468
To show the lab'ring bosom's deep intent, 721
To sing of wars, of captains, and of kings, 462
To Sir Henry Cary, 324
To Sir Toby, 717
To S. M., a Young African Painter, on Seeing His Works, 721
To speak in a flat voice, 1750
To stand here in the wings of Europe, 1622
To the Evening Star, 733
To the Fair Clarinda, Who Made Love to Me, Imagined More Than Woman, 548
To the Immortal Memory and Friendship of That Noble Pair, Sir Lucius Cary and Sir Henry Morison, 337
To the Infant Martyrs, 468
To the Lord General Cromwell, 417
To the Memory of Mr. Oldham, 523
To the Memory of My Beloved, the Author Mr. William Shakespeare, 342
To the Muses, 732
To the Poor, 706
To the Reader, 323
To the River Duddon, 1561
To the Same Purpose, 533
To the shade of Burns, 711
To the Sour Reader, 355
To the Thrice-Sacred Queen Elizabeth, 226
To the Virgins, to Make Much of Time, 357
To turn a stone, 1881
Touching your goodness, I am like a man, 1608
Touch Me, 1455
Tourists, 1660
To what purpose, April, do you return again?, 1383
To Wordsworth, 863
To you, my purs, and to noon other wight, 69
Traherne, Thomas, 531
Train Journey, 1578
transitive*, 2055
Trees, The, 1656
Trees in the Garden, 1289
trimeter*, 2032
Triple Feature, 1678
trochaic meter*, 2030
Troilus and Cressida (Dryden), 501
Troilus and Criseide (Chaucer), 67
Trout, The, 1785
Truth, 69
Truth-loving Persians do not dwell upon, 1402
Truth the Dead Know, The, 1764
Ts'ai Chi'h, 1296
Tuckerman, Frederick Goddard, 1086
Tuckett. Bill Tuckett. Telegraph operator, Hall's Creek, 1890
Tulips, 1838
turn*, 2042

Turning and turning in the widening gyre, 1196
Turtle, The, 1438
Twa Corbies?, The, 102
'Twas brillig, and the slithy toves, 1135
'Twas mercy brought me from my pagan land, 720
'Twas on a Holy Thursday, their innocent faces clean, 734
'Twas on a lofty vase's side, 668
'Twas Summer and the sun was mounted high, 768
Twelve Songs, 1470
Twilight Polka Dots, 1617
Twirling your blue skirts, travelling the sward, 1368
Twitched in her belly, or he raised a fist, 1507
Two Figures, 1862
Two from Israel, 1884
Two in the Campagna, 1040
Two Lorries, 1909
Two loves I have of comfort and despair, 269
Two roads diverged in a yellow wood, 1232
Two Songs, 1448
Tyger, The, 743
Tyger! Tyger! burning bright, 743

Ubi Sunt Qui ante Nos Fuerunt?, 16
Ulcerated tooth keeps me awake, there is, 1629
Ultima Ratio Regum, 1505
Ulysses, 992
Ulysses and the Siren, 233
Under Ben Bulben, 1208
Under the bronze crown, 1635
Under the Greenwood Tree, 273
Under the separated leaves of shade, 1556
Under the Waterfall, 1159
Undesirable you may have been, untouchable, 1832
Unfortunate Coincidence, 1391
Unhappy pen and ill accepted papers, 233
Universal Prayer, The, 635
Unjustly I've imposed upon my friends, 2024
Unquiet Grave, The, 104
Unreal tall as a myth, 1447
Unto the boundless Ocean of thy beauty, 230
Up, 1898
Up, black, striped and damasked like the chasuble, 1902
Updike, John, 1846
Up from the bronze, I saw, 1408
Up-Hill, 1129
Upon a Child That Died, 358
Upon a Spider Catching a Fly, 538
Upon a time, before the faery broods, 918
Upon Ben Jonson, 360
Upon Julia's Breasts, 358
Upon Julia's Clothes, 359
Upon My Lady Carlisle's Walking in Hampton Court Garden, 453
Upon Prue, His Maid, 360
Upon the Infant Martyrs, 468
Upon Wedlock, and Death of Children, 537
Up! Up! My Friend, and quit your books, 764
Urania, 353

Valediction Forbidding Mourning, A (Donne), 306
Valediction Forbidding Mourning, A (Rich), 1796
Valediction of the Book, A, 301
Valediction of Weeping, A, 300
Valentine, 1948
Van Duyn, Mona, 1629
Vanity of Human Wishes, The, 656
Vanity (I), 374
Vanity, saith the preacher, vanity!, 1014
Variations Done for Gerald Van De Wiele, 1512
Variations on a Fragment by Trumbull Stickney, 1777
Variations on a Theme by William Carlos Williams, 1693
Vaughan, Henry, 490
V. B. Nimble, V. B. Quick, 1846
Veni Coronaberis, 1836
Vergissmeinnicht, 1620
verse paragraphs,* 2040
Verses on the Death of Dr. Swift, D.S.P.D., 577
Very, Jones, 1044
Very few people know where they will die, 1767
Victor Dog, The, 1719
View from the Window, The, 1544
Vigil Strange I Kept on the Field One Night, 1071
villanelle,* 2045
Vine, The, 354
Virtue, 375
Vision upon the Fairy Queen, A, 151
Vitae summa brevis spem nos vetat incohare longam, 1211
Vita Nova, 1932
Voice, The, 1160
vowel rhyme,* 2038
Voyages, 1411

wade, 1328
Wake! For the Sun, who scattered into flight, 961
Wake: the silver dusk returning, 1173
Waking, The, 1500
Waking from a nap, 1502
Waking from Sleep, 1704
Walcott, Derek, 1820
Walker, Margaret, 1576
Walking with you and another lady, 1902
Walk the horses down the hill, 1560
Waller, Edmund, 393
Walls Do Not Fall, The, 1315
War is Kind, 1221
Warming Her Pearls, 2007
Warning to Children, 1401
War Poet, 1647
Warren, Robert Penn, 1456
Waste Land, The, 1344
Watch Repair, 1891
Water, 1602
Waterbird, 1542
Waterfall, The, 496
Watts, Isaac, 589
Waving Adieu, Adieu, Adieu, 1265
Way a Ghost Dissolves, The, 1674
Way Down South in Dixie, 1432

We are the hollow men, 1356
We are things of dry hours and the involuntary plan, 1586
Weary Blues, The, 1429
Weather-Cock Points South, The, 1248
Weeps out of western country something new, 1586
Weep You No More, Sad Fountains, 120
Wee, sleeket, cow'rin, tim'rous beastie, 748
We finished clearing the last, 1816
We have sat here in too many poetry readings, 1993
Weigh me the fire; or canst thou find, 362
We lay red roses on his grave, 1536
Welcome, Major Poet!, 1993
Well! If the bard was weather-wise, who made, 828
Well then; I now do plainly see, 470
Well, they are gone, and here must I remain, 807
Welsh Landscape, 1544
We met the British in the dead of winter, 1980
We must look at the harebell as if, 1380
We passengers ride backward on the train, 2023
We put a prop beneath the sagging bough, 1504
We Real Cool, 1588
Were beth they biforen us weren, 16
Were I laid on Greenland's coast, 595
We sat together at one summer's end, 1190
We shall sleep-out together through the dark, 1748
Wesley, Charles, 652
Western Wind, 84
We stood by a pond that winter day, 1153
West-Running Brook, 1238
We watched from the house, 2006
We Wear the Mask, 1223
We went out, 2022
Whan that April with his showres soote, 19
What are we first? First, animals; and next, 1108
What Are Years?, 1334
What art thou, Spleen, which ev'ry thing dost ape?, 558
What bright soft thing is this?, 468
What can it avail, 92
What dire offense from amorous causes springs, 604
What Friendship is, Ardelia show, 563
What happens to a dream deferred?, 1433
What, have I thus betrayed my liberty?, 215
What heartache—ne'er a hill!, 1162
What is Africa to me, 1443
What is it men in women do require?, 746
What is our innocence, 1334
What large, dark hands are those at the window, 1284
What Length of Verse?, 210
What needs my Shakespeare for his honored bones, 401
What on Earth deserves our trust?, 526
What passing-bells for these who die as cattle?, 1386
What's Going On, 2015
What Should I Say, 132
What should one, 1746
What summer proposes is simply happiness, 1919
What the Men Talk About When the Women Leave the Room, 2010
What the Spider Heard, 1559
What though they conquer us?, 1270
What thoughts I have of you tonight, Walt Whitman, for I walked down the sidestreets under the trees with a headache self-conscious looking at the full moon, 1713
What was he doing, the great god Pan, 950
Wheatley, Phillis, 719
When all the others were away at Mass, 1905
When a man hath no freedom to fight for at home, 862
Whenas in silks my Julia goes, 359
When beauty breaks and falls asunder, 1407
When by thy scorn, O murd'ress, I am dead, 295
When chapman billies leave the street, 754
When Daisies Pied, 272
"Whenever I plunge my arm, like this, 1159
Whenever Richard Cory went down town, 1212
When first thou didst entice to thee my heart, 369
When for the thorns with which I long, too long, 475
When forty winters shall besiege thy brow, 258
When God at first made man, 379
When His Excellency Prince Norodom Chantaraingsey, 1961
When I a verse shall make, 358
When I consider everything that grows, 259
When I Consider How My Light Is Spent, 418
When I do count the clock that tells the time, 258
When I Have Fears, 906
When I Heard the Learn'd Astronomer, 1071
When I lie where shades of darkness, 1226
When, in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes, 260
When in the chronicle of wasted time, 265
When in the sun the hot red acres smoulder, 1436
When I see birches bend to left and right, 1233
When Israel came from Egypt's coast, 685
When Israel did depart th'Egyptians from among, 392
When Isr'el, freed from Pharaoh's hand, 593
When I was a child I new red miners, 1577
When I Was Fair and Young, 142
When I Watch the Living Meet, 1174
When Learning's triumph o'er her barbarous foes, 655
When Lilacs Last in the Dooryard Bloom'd, 1078
When Lovely Woman Stoops to Folly, 686
When Love with unconfinéd wings, 472
When men shall find thy flower, thy glory pass, 231
When midnight comes a host of dogs and men, 893
When my devotions could not pierce, 374
When my grave is broke up again, 310
When my love swears that she is made of truth, 268
When night's black mantle could most darkness prove, 347
When science starts to be interpretive, 1288
When she tells him about the lump in her breast, 2009

When That I Was and a Little Tiny Boy, 276
When the fierce north wind with his airy forces, 589
When the hounds of spring are on winter's traces, 1146
When the Lease Is Up, 1560
When the Present has latched its postern behind my tremulous stay, 1162
When they were wild, 2006
When Thou Must Home, 280
When thou, poor excommunicate, 387
When to Her Lute Corinna Sings, 280
When to the sessions of sweet silent thought, 261
When we for age could neither read nor write, 393
When We Two Parted, 835
When You Are Old, 1190
When you come, as you soon must, to the streets of our city, 1637
When you consider the radiance, that it does not withhold, 1698
Where are the War Poets?, 1449
Where dips the rocky highland, 1188
Where dost thou careless lie, 336
Where has tenderness gone, he asked the mirror, 1503
Where Have All the Flowers Gone?, 1853
Where, like a pillow on a bed, 307
Where she lived the close remained the best, 1674
Where the Bee Sucks, There Suck I, 277
Where the remote Bermudas ride, 476
Where they will bury me, 1847
Whether on Ida's shady brow, 732
Which I wish to say is this, 1249
While my hair was still cut straight across my forehead, 1297
While the south rains, the north, 1664
While this America settles in the mold of its vulgarity, heavily thickening to empire, 1320
While you walk the water's edge, 1609
White as the sacrament, in my grandmother's house the mantles, 1946
White Goddess, The, 1404
White-habited, the mystic Swan, 1830
White Island, or Place of the Blest, The, 361
White Knight's Song, The, 1137
White sky, over the hemlocks bowed with snow, 1384
White the October air, no snow, easy to breathe, 1729
Whither, 'midst falling dew, 902
Whitman, Walt, 1060
Whitney, Isabella, 146
Whitsun Weddings, The, 1652
Whittier, John Greenleaf, 957
who are you, little i, 1397
Who decrees a great epoch? The meridian of Greenwich, 1827
Who died on the wires, and hung there, one of two—, 1372
Whoever comes to shroud me, do not harm, 309
Whoever hath her wish, thou hast thy Will, 268
Whoever You Are, 1745
Who has ever stopped to think of the divinity of Lamont Cranston?, 1856
Who owns these scrawny little feet? Death, 1813
Who says that fictions only and false hair, 373
Whose broken window is a cry of art, 1589
Whose is this horrifying face, 1581
Whose senses in so evil consort, their stepdame Nature lays, 219
Whose woods these are I think I know, 1237
Who shall doubt, Donne, where I a poet be, 326
Whoso List to Hunt, 126
Who will in fairest book of Nature know, 217
Who will remember, passing through this Gate, 1320
Why, asks a friend, attempt tetrameter?, 1995
Why Brownlee Left, 1979
Why don't people leave off being lovable, 1288
Why I Am Not a Painter, 1730
Why is my verse so barren of new pride, 264
Why should I blame her that she filled my days, 1191
Why so pale and wan, fond lover?, 452
why we ask you not to touch, 1968
"Why, William, on that old gray stone, 763
Wife of Bath's Prologue and Tale, The, 39
Wife of Usher's Well, The, 105
Wife's Lament, The, 11
Wilbur, Richard, 1632
Wild Bees, 1701
Wild Cherry, The, 1504
Wild nights - Wild nights!, 1114
Wild Swans at Coole, The, 1192
Willed down, waited for, in place at last and for good, 1907
Williams, C. K., 1869
Williams, William Carlos, 1272
Williamson, Greg, 2023
Will it last? he says, 1382
Will there be time for eggnogs and eclogues, 1559
Wilmot, John, Earl of Rochester, 549
Wilner, Eleanor, 1879
Wilt thou forgive that sin where I begun, 321
Wind, 1811
Windhover, The, 1166
Window, The (Mahon), 1923
Windows, The (G. Herbert), 373
Wind Suffers, The, 1425
Wine Bowl, 1313
Winters at home brought wind, 1887
Winter uncovers distances, I find, 1270
Wintry Mind, The, 1270
Wish, The, 470
Wish for a Young Wife, 1501
With blackest moss the flower-plots, 982
With how sad steps, Oh Moon, thou climb'st the skies, 214
With my forked branch of Lebanese cedar, 1619
With old hours all belfry heads, 1426
With Rue My Heart Is Laden, 1177
With what deep murmurs through time's silent stealth, 496

Woman much missed, how you call to me, call to me, 1160
Woman's Constancy, 294
Woman to Man, 1577
Wonder, 532
Wood-Pile, The, 1232
Woodspurge, The, 1105
Word over all, beautiful as the sky, 1078
Word's gane to the kitchen, 108
Wordsworth, William, 763
World, The (Creeley), 1706
World, The (Vaughan), 493
World Where News Travelled Slowly, A, 2016
Wouldst thou hear what man can say, 328
Would you believe, when you this mónsieur see, 325
Wright, Charles, 1865
Wright, James, 1749
Wright, Judith, 1577
Wright, Kit, 1946
Wright, Richard, 1502
Written after Swimming from Sestos to Abydos, 833
Written in October, 712
Written in the Church Yard at Middleton in Sussex, 711
Written Near a Port on a Dark Evening, 712
Wyatt, Thomas, 126
Wyatt Resteth Here, 138
Wroth, Mary, 347
Wylie, Elinor, 1310

Yachts, The, 1275
Years and years ago, these sounds took sides, 1906
Yeats, William Butler, 1188
Ye congregation of the tribes, 684
Ye distant spires, ye antique towers, 666
Ye flowery banks o' bonie Doon, 759
Ye Goatherd Gods, 208
Ye learnèd sisters which have oftentimes, 195
Ye living lamps, by whose dear light, 483
Yes, crazy to suppose one could describe them—, 1913
Yes, injured Woman! rise, assert thy right!, 705
Yes! in the sea of life enisled, 1088
Yes, I remember Adlestrop—, 1253
Yesterday all the past. The language of size, 1466
Yet Do I Marvel, 1446
Yet is there hope: then Love but play thy part, 347
Yet once more, O ye laurels and once more, 410
Ye tradefull Merchants that with weary toyle, 191
Yet there is no great problem in the world to-day, 1376
You are my secret coat. You're never dry, 1992
You are the bread and the knife, 1918
You Begin, 1896
You Can Have It, 1761
You did not come, 1154
You do not do, you do not do, 1840
You little stars that live in skies, 206
You love us when we're heroes, home on leave, 1319
You must not wonder, though you think it strange, 144
You, once a belle in Shreveport, 1791
Your absence has gone through me, 1744
Your ashes will not stir, even on this high ground, 1921
Your endless torments that my rest oppress, 348
Your footprints of light on sensitive paper, 1800
Your hands lie open in the long fresh grass—, 1106
Your mind and you are our Sargasso Sea, 1295
Your thighs are appletrees, 1273
Your words my friend (right healthful caustics) blame, 214
You saved me, you should remember me, 1932
Youth's the season made for joys, 595
you've seen a strawberry, 1334
You wake up filled with dread, 1898
You were the one for skylights. I opposed, 1908
You Were Wearing, 1692
You who desired so much—in vain to ask—, 1416
You would think the fury of aerial bombardment, 1450
Yves Tanguy, 1580

Zarin, Cynthia, 2013
Zea, 1640
zeugma,* 2053
Zulu Girl, The, 1436