Methods of Research in Law

by Dr Charles Chatterjee

When conducting research in law, a thorough knowledge of the subject area is not enough. The research must also follow a method and apply techniques for analysing facts and data.

Methods of Research in Law is a guide to the techniques of carrying out research and developing ideas. The work deals with:

Ethics in Research
Certain Important Terms and Concepts
Tools of Research
Research Planning and Research Design
Sources of Information
Techniques of Interpretation of Documents
Layout of Thesis, Footnoting and Bibliography

It is an essential handbook for those students whose degrees demand an element of legal research, or those who are carrying out research for a postgraduate degree. Within the broad area of social sciences, there are a number of common elements of research which will also make this book of interest to those studying economics, business studies and international relations.

Professor Chatterjee has many years of experience in supervising postgraduate students in law, and as well as having completed a number of pieces of original research.

Using the Net for Research in Business, Law and Related Subjects

by Kevin McGuinness, Steele Raymond, Professor of Business Law and Tom Short, Principal Lecturer and Researcher, both at Bournemouth University

Using the Net is an essential guide for all lawyers and business people using the Internet worldwide. Starting with a general introduction to gaining access to the Internet, the book goes on to provide analysis of sites of interest under a series of subject headings. These include:

Advertising Law	Finance
Banking	Insurance
Bankruptcy and Insolvency	International Law and Relations
Civil Procedure	Law Practice Management
Contract, Consumer and Commercial Law	Negotiation and ADR
Corporate Law and Securities	Newspapers
Expert Witnesses	Patents and IP

For ease of use, a disk is included with the book giving direct access to 2,000 primary sites linking to 100,000s of specific sources of information.

This book assimilates a vast body of invaluable information for lawyers, business people, accountants and financiers and particularly for those conducting research in any of these fields.
